

A propos de ce livre

Ceci est une copie numérique d'un ouvrage conservé depuis des générations dans les rayonnages d'une bibliothèque avant d'être numérisé avec précaution par Google dans le cadre d'un projet visant à permettre aux internautes de découvrir l'ensemble du patrimoine littéraire mondial en ligne.

Ce livre étant relativement ancien, il n'est plus protégé par la loi sur les droits d'auteur et appartient à présent au domaine public. L'expression "appartenir au domaine public" signifie que le livre en question n'a jamais été soumis aux droits d'auteur ou que ses droits légaux sont arrivés à expiration. Les conditions requises pour qu'un livre tombe dans le domaine public peuvent varier d'un pays à l'autre. Les livres libres de droit sont autant de liens avec le passé. Ils sont les témoins de la richesse de notre histoire, de notre patrimoine culturel et de la connaissance humaine et sont trop souvent difficilement accessibles au public.

Les notes de bas de page et autres annotations en marge du texte présentes dans le volume original sont reprises dans ce fichier, comme un souvenir du long chemin parcouru par l'ouvrage depuis la maison d'édition en passant par la bibliothèque pour finalement se retrouver entre vos mains.

Consignes d'utilisation

Google est fier de travailler en partenariat avec des bibliothèques à la numérisation des ouvrages appartenant au domaine public et de les rendre ainsi accessibles à tous. Ces livres sont en effet la propriété de tous et de toutes et nous sommes tout simplement les gardiens de ce patrimoine. Il s'agit toutefois d'un projet coûteux. Par conséquent et en vue de poursuivre la diffusion de ces ressources inépuisables, nous avons pris les dispositions nécessaires afin de prévenir les éventuels abus auxquels pourraient se livrer des sites marchands tiers, notamment en instaurant des contraintes techniques relatives aux requêtes automatisées.

Nous vous demandons également de:

- + Ne pas utiliser les fichiers à des fins commerciales Nous avons conçu le programme Google Recherche de Livres à l'usage des particuliers. Nous vous demandons donc d'utiliser uniquement ces fichiers à des fins personnelles. Ils ne sauraient en effet être employés dans un quelconque but commercial.
- + Ne pas procéder à des requêtes automatisées N'envoyez aucune requête automatisée quelle qu'elle soit au système Google. Si vous effectuez des recherches concernant les logiciels de traduction, la reconnaissance optique de caractères ou tout autre domaine nécessitant de disposer d'importantes quantités de texte, n'hésitez pas à nous contacter. Nous encourageons pour la réalisation de ce type de travaux l'utilisation des ouvrages et documents appartenant au domaine public et serions heureux de vous être utile.
- + Ne pas supprimer l'attribution Le filigrane Google contenu dans chaque fichier est indispensable pour informer les internautes de notre projet et leur permettre d'accéder à davantage de documents par l'intermédiaire du Programme Google Recherche de Livres. Ne le supprimez en aucun cas.
- + Rester dans la légalité Quelle que soit l'utilisation que vous comptez faire des fichiers, n'oubliez pas qu'il est de votre responsabilité de veiller à respecter la loi. Si un ouvrage appartient au domaine public américain, n'en déduisez pas pour autant qu'il en va de même dans les autres pays. La durée légale des droits d'auteur d'un livre varie d'un pays à l'autre. Nous ne sommes donc pas en mesure de répertorier les ouvrages dont l'utilisation est autorisée et ceux dont elle ne l'est pas. Ne croyez pas que le simple fait d'afficher un livre sur Google Recherche de Livres signifie que celui-ci peut être utilisé de quelque façon que ce soit dans le monde entier. La condamnation à laquelle vous vous exposeriez en cas de violation des droits d'auteur peut être sévère.

À propos du service Google Recherche de Livres

En favorisant la recherche et l'accès à un nombre croissant de livres disponibles dans de nombreuses langues, dont le français, Google souhaite contribuer à promouvoir la diversité culturelle grâce à Google Recherche de Livres. En effet, le Programme Google Recherche de Livres permet aux internautes de découvrir le patrimoine littéraire mondial, tout en aidant les auteurs et les éditeurs à élargir leur public. Vous pouvez effectuer des recherches en ligne dans le texte intégral de cet ouvrage à l'adresse <http://books.google.com>

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. NOTE.

It was intended that this volume should contain a Memoir of Dr. JAMIESON, and an Essay on the Scottish Language; but the additions to the Text have been so numerous and extensive as to render this impossible. The Publisher therefore proposes to issue, by and bye, a Supplementary Volume containing the above named matter, and such additional words as may be gleaned by the kindly aid of those into whose hands the work may come.

The re-arrangement and grouping of the words, and nearly all the additions and corrections from the middle of the first volume, have been made by Mr. DONALDSON.

SCOTTISH LANGUAGE.

REF

REFRANE, [REFRENZE, REFREYNE, v. a.
1. To curb, refrain.

He may rycht weill refreyne his will,
Othir throw, nurtur or throw skill.

Barbour, iv. 731, MS.

Skeat's Ed. has refrenze.]

2. To retain, to hold in.

"Item, twa doubill planttis to refrane heit watter in maner of schoufer." Inventories, A. 1542, p. 72.
[Fr. refréner, to bridle, Lat. refrenare.]

[REFRESCHIE, v. a. To refresh, Barbour, xiii. 614; part. pa., refreschit.]

[REFT, pret. Reft, took away, Barbour, xvi.
418; him reft, deprived him of, Ibid., ii.
36; part. pa., reft up, snatched up, carried away.]

"And utheris contrarie rejoises to be callit Gospellaris, and cunning in scripture; quha reft up in hie curiositie of questionis,—makis of the gospell ane takin craft, but ferder practise of Godis law in deid." Winyet's First Tractat. Keith's Hist. App., p. 207.

Lifted up, Marg. But I find no parallel, or cognate use of the term. Perhaps rather "snatched up;"
from A.-S. reaf-ian, Su.-G. raff-a, riß-a, rapere.

[To REFUSS, REFUSE, v. a. To shrink from, refuse, Barbour, xii. 628; part. pa., refusit, shrunk from. Fr. refuser, Lat.
refutiere, from refutare, to push back.]

REFUISS, s. Refusal; Fr. refus.

"And that thai sall nocht tak his refuiss in evill part, being preissit be thame in ony thing aganis the effect of his said ayth and promeis." Acts Ja. VI., 1571, Ed. 1814, p. 68. Also, ibid., p. 138.

REFUSION, s. The act of refunding.

"What could be more contrary to sense and reason than for a woman to brook and life-rent her husband's whole estate, and yet his executors to be liable in refusion of the tocher?" Fount. Suppl. Dec., i. 667.

L. B. refusio, restitutio, from refund-ere, reparare, restituere; Du Cange.

REFUT, s. Shift, expedient, means of deliverance.

Sum feblit fast that had feill hurtis thar,
Wallace tharfor sichit with hart full sar.

VOL. IV.

REG

A hat he hynt, to get wattr is gayn,
Othir refut as than he wist off nayn.

Wallace, ix. 971, MS.

In Ed. 1648, changed to refuge, which, indeed, expresses the idea, as it is from the same stock. But it is refut in MS. Fr. refuite, evasion, avoidance, from refuir, to fly, to shun.

REGALIS, s. pl. Districts enjoying the privileges of regalities.

—"At the Justice—sett thare Justice airis & hald thaim twiss in the yere :—Ande richt sua lordis of regaliteis within thare regalis; Ande alsua the Kingis balyeis of his regalis." Parl. Ja. II., A. 1453, Acts Ed.
1814, p. 32, 33.

Fr. fief en regale, a noble fief, held immediately, and in capite, of the king; Cotgr.

REGALITY, REGALITE', s. 1. A territorial jurisdiction granted by the king, with lands given in liberam regalitatem;
and conferring on the persons receiving it, although commoners, the title of Lords of Regality.

"That nothir lord of regalite, schiref, na barouné, sell ony thefe; or fyne with him of theft donne na to be donne, vndir the payn to the lordis of regalite, doing in the contrary, of tynsall of regaliteis, and barounis, justicis, & schireffis, of lyfe & gudis." Parl.
Ja. I., A. 1436, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 23.

"Regalities proceeded upon signatures presented in exchequer which passed by the great seal.—The civil jurisdiction of a lord of regality was in all respects equal to that of a sheriff; but his criminal was truly royal; for he might have judg'd in the four pleas of the crown, whereas the sheriff was competent to none of them but murder. It was even as ample as that of the judiciary as to every crime except treason;—and in this one respect it prevailed over it, that where a criminal was amenable to a regality, the lord might have repledged or reclaimed him to his own court, not only from the sheriff, but from the justices themselves." Ersk. Inst. B. i. T. 4. § 7, 8.

As this right was so powerful a prop of the feudal system, and rendered its possessors sovereigns within their own domains, it was wisely abolished after the rebellion, A. 1745-6. V. JUSTIFY, sense 4.

2. The territory or district over which this right extended.

"And geyff the offisaris of the regalityes fulfillis nogt this act, it sall be leyful to the kyngis schirraye to fulfill it." Parl. Ja. II., A. 1438, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 32.

REGENT, s. 1. A professor in an university, S.

"At first there were three regents in the arts, Alexander Geddes, a Cistercian monk, Duncan Bunch, and William Arthurlie.—Besides teaching and presiding in disputations omni die legibili, they lived within the college, eat at a common table with the students of arts, visited the rooms of the students before nine at night, when the gates were shut, and at five in the morning; and assisted in all examinations for degrees in arts.—There was no salary for this office for many years; and the fees, paid by the hearers, were very small." University of Glasgow, Statist. Acc. xxi. App., p. 10.

2. It has been supposed that this term was occasionally used in a lower sense than the designation of Professor; as denoting one who taught a class in a college without a formal appointment to a chair.

"All the scholars who entered at one time into a college, formed a class, which was put under the government or tuition of a regent. The regents were different from the professors, who had permanent situations in the college." Dr. M'Crie's Life of Melville, i. 229-30.

"It was objected against his legibility, that he was not in priest's orders, and that he was a regent, that is, (as I suppose) that he was not a professor or permanent teacher—primum quod non fuit sacerdos, secundum quod fuit regens, ut loquuntur, actu." Ibid., i. 108.

I hesitate, however, whether this ought to be sustained as a sufficient proof. The passage refers to the university of Glasgow: and perhaps all that we can infer from it is, that it was viewed as improper that one should be chosen Dean of the Faculty of Arts, who was actually discharging the functions of a professor. For, if it be not one of the standing laws of the university, that no professor should have this office, this exclusion, if my recollection does not fail me, is at least sanctioned by custom.

In some of our acts of Parliament, this term is used in the same sense with Professor; as in Acts Ja. VI., Ed. 1814, iii. 180. In others it follows the latter, as if it marked an inferior office.—"And to the saids principal, professoris, regentis, and remanent maisteris & members of the said college," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 564.

It would appear that strictly the term Professor was applied to a teacher of philosophy or theology, and that Regent denoted a teacher of Greek or Latin. This was the distinction made in the university of Paris, and other foreign universities, after the model of which ours were constituted. On dit un Régent de Rhetorique & des basses classes: ceux de Philosophie s'appellent plutôt Professeurs. Dict. de Trev. vo. Regent.

Craufurd, in his Hist. Univ. Edin., uses the terms promiscuously. At times, however, he observes the original distinction.

"At Michaelmas 1608, the new entering class was to be destitute of an Regent, there being only three Professors of Philosophie ever since the departure of Mr. John Adamson, May 1604." P. 67.

This term was common in France, in the time of Rabelais, who gives the following account of the duties of Gargantua at Orleans.

"As for breaking his head with over-much study, he had an especial cure not to do it in any case, for fear of spoiling his eyes; which he the rather observed, for that it was told him by one of his teachers, (there called Regents) that the paine of the eyes was the most hurtful thing of any to the sight." Urquhart's Transl., B. ii., p. 29.

The same name is used with respect to the Professors in the University of Paris.

"And first of all, in the Fodderstreet he held dispute against all the Regents or Fellows of Colledges, Artists or Masters of Arts, and Orateurs, and did so gallantly, that he overthrew them, and set them all upon their tailes." Ibid., p. 67.

Regens is the only term used by Rabelais. Regens, Artiens, Orateurs. Urquhart improperly uses Fellows of Colledges as if it were synonymous.

L. B. Regens, Professor, qui docet in Academiis, Gall. Regent, Professeur. Occurrit in Litteris ann. 1330, pro Univers. Oxoniense, apud Rymer. Du Cange.

To REGENT, v. n. To discharge the duty of a Professor in an university.

—"The town-council, remembering Mr. Rollock's recommendation immediately before his death, of Mr. Henry Charteris, (who now had regented almost 10 years), as most fit to succeed to him, elected him to be Principal of the Colledge." Craufurd's Hist. Univ. Ed., p. 52.

"Mr. William King, (after he had regented in the colledge 23 years), was called to the ministry at Crammond." Ibid., p. 119.

Fr. regent-er, "to teach, read, or moderate in schooles;" Cotgr.

REGENCY, s. A professorship in an university.

"Mr. Alexander Innes,—his goodson, who was deposed frae his kirk also, and Mr. Alexander Scroggie his son deposed frae his regency,—ilk ane of them got a pension from the king." Spalding, i. 328.

REGENCY, s. A regency in a kingdom.

"And thairefter to desyre our souerane ladie, withe consent of the daulphin hir spous, to mak ane commission of regentrie in the maist ample forme vnto hir derrest moder the queenis grace now regent of this realme," &c. Acts Mary, 1558, Ed. 1814, p. 504.

"The said—Lord James Murray, &c. ressavit and acceptit upoun him the office of regentrie of our soverane lord his realme and liegis," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1567, Keith's Hist., p. 453.

[REGIBUS, RIGIBUS, s. A game among boys, Aberd. In Banffs. called Raniebus. V. Rigs.]

To REGISTRATE, v. a. To register, S. Registrar, part. pa.

"In testimony whereof, He subscribes thir presents, and is content the same be registrate in the books of Holy Scripture, to be kept on record to future generations." Walker's Peden, p. 59.

[REGNYT, pret. Reigned, Barbour, xiii. 698.]

[REGRAITAND, REGRAITANDLY. V. under REGRATOR.]

[To REGRATE, v. a. To regret, pret. regratit, regretted, Barbour, xv. 233; part. regratand, lamenting. Fr. regretter, O. Fr. regreter; Goth. gretan, to greet.]

 REGRET, s. A complaint, a grievance.

"There were divers other regrets, concerning both church and police, set down in this paper." Spalding, i. 213.

[REGRATAND, REGRAITAND, part. pr. Retailing; but was generally applied to the buying up of an article, in order to make profit by selling it in small quantities. During times of dearth, regrating was a common but grievous charge against provision-dealers: it led to many a meal-mob.]

[REGRATANDLY, REGRAITANDLY, adv. By retailing, by retail.

Ane scroppit coffe, quhen he begynnis,
Bernand all and slindry airtis,
For to by hennis reidwot he rynniss;
He lokis thame up in to his innis
Unto aue derth, and sellis thair eggis,
Regraitandly on thame he wynniss,
And secondly his meit he beggis.

Fr. regreter, "to tricke up an old thing for sale," Cotgr.; regrateur, "an huckster; mender, dresser, scowrer, trimmer up of old things for sale," ibid.]

REGRESS, s. Legal recourse upon.

—"Because the said Henry allegeth he had writtinge of James of Foulartone quharthrou he vnderstode he my' sauffy intromet w^t the said gudis, that he haf regress to him insafer as law will." Act. Audit., A. 1479, p. 94.

L. B. regressus, idem quod Practicis nostris Recours. Du Cange.

[*REGRET, s. A complaint. V. under REGRATE.]

To REHABIL, REHABLE, REHABILITAT, REABILL, v. a. To restore, to reinstate; a forensic term.

Thus he who has a sentence of attainder taken off is said to be rehabled. The term is also applied to one born in bastardy, who is legitimated.

"Gif ane bastard, legitimat and rehabled in his lifetime, makis ane testament lauchfullie: the King thereby is excluded fra all richt and intromission with his moveable gudes." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Bastardus.

"His Majestie—rehabilitate the said Francis [sumtyme erle of Bothwell] againes all actes of dishabilitation," &c. Acta Cha. I., Ed. 1814, vol. V. 56.

"King Robert incontinent maryit Elizabeth Mure lemman afore rehersit for the affection that he had to hir barnis, that thay mycht be lawchful and reabillit be virtue of the matrimony subsequent." Bellend. Croa., B. xvi. c. 1. Ut legitimos redderet; Boeth.

Fr. rehabilit-er, L. B. rehabilit-are, in integrum restituer.

REHABILITATION, s. The act of restoring to former honours or privileges, a forensic term, S.

—"And be the said rehabilitation rehabilitate the said Francis," &c. Ibid.

REHATOUR, REHATOR, s.

New lat that ilk rehatoure wend in hy,
The blak hellis biggingis to vasy,
Vnder the drery depe flude Acheron.

Improbis, Maffei. Doug. Virgil, 467, 53.

Rudd. conjectures that it signifies, "mortal enemy," from Fr. rehair, to hate extremely. Dunbar uses the phrase basil rehair, Evergreen, ii. 60, and Kennely, in his reply, ranegald rehair, ibid., p. 68.

Conjecture might supply various sources of derivation; as Ital. rihaunta, revenge, regattare, to contend, to put every thing in disorder, reatura, guilt. But both the determinate sense and etymology are uncertain.

[To REHEIRS, REHERS, REHERSS, v. a. To rehearse, tell, Lyndsay, Squyer Meldrum, l. 879, Barbour, x. 346, viii. 518.]

REHERSS, s. Rehearsal; synon. with Re-porte.

"And quhatsumeir thay deponit aganis the saidis persewaris—the samin was be reheras and reports of vtheris." Acta Ja. VI., 1507, Ed. 1814, p. 128.

To REHETE, v. a. To revive, to cheer.

With kynde contenance the renk couth thame rehete.
Gawan and Gol., iv. 13.

Chaucer, id. Fr. rehaite.

REIBIE, adj. Thinly formed, spare, slender, Ettr. For. V. RIBIE.

REID, REDE, s. A calf's reid, the fourth stomach of a calf, used for runnet or earning, S. Fr. caillette.

"When the stomach, intestines, or other abdominal viscera are most affected, it [the inflammation] is said to be in the read or bowels, and when the muscular parts, to be in the flesh or blood." Prize Ess. Highl. Soc. Scot., iii. 363.

An' there was ginger-faced Moll,
Wi' sweeties frae Kirk^{} bree,—
A' ca'f'-reed carrier Samuel Noll,
Nae better than he should be.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 72.

"Caille signifies curdled; and hence the French have given that as a name to the fourth stomach, because any milk that is taken down by young calves is there curdled." Monro's Compar. Anatomy, iii. 388.

It seems to be the same word that occurs in Sir Tristrem, p. 31.

To the stifles he gede,
And even ato hem schare;
He right al the rede;
The wombe away he bare.

This is rendered small-guts. GL.

Teut. roode, stomachi appendix; et echinus, bovis ventriculus, a rubedine dictus; omasum; Kilian. V. BODDIGIN.

To REID, v. a. and n. To discourse, read. V. REDE, v.

[REID, s. 1. Counsel, advice, Barbour, ii. 122. V. REDE.]

2. Necessary preparation, fitting out, getting ready.

"Thar behufyt a gret sowme to be furnest to the reid of the said schip & personagis." Aberl. Reg., V. 16.

Teut. reed, paratus, pronaptus. V. REDSCHIP.

REID, adj. Red, S. B.; reed, Cumb. A.-S. read.

The greys wou with the blud all reid.
Barbour, xii. 582, MS.

This word is used as denoting the colour of salmon when in a healthy state.

"Salmond full reid & suet [fresh], sufficient marchantguid, and of the rycheous bind of Abirdene." Aberd. Reg., V. 24.

Perhaps in this sense opposed to Black fish. V. BLACK-FISHING.

This, it would appear, was also the O. E. pronunciation. "What betokeneth it whan the sonne gothe downe reed?" Palagr. B. iii. F. 164, b.

REID ETIN. The name of a Giant, or monster, used by nurses to frighten children. V. EYTTYN.

REID FISCH. Fish in a spawning state, S.

"It is—forbiddin be the King, that only Salmound be slaine fra the Feist of the Assumptioun of our Lady, quhil the Feist of Sanctandrow in winter, nouthur with nettis na cruvis, na nane vther wayis vnder the pane put vpon ealayaris of Reid fische." Acts Ja. I., 1524, c. 38. Edit. 1568. Reid fish, Edit. Skene. Reid fische, Ja. VI., 1581, c. 111. Ed. Murray.

"At the time of spawning, the sides of the fish become of a very red colour, and when the spawning is over, the white colour entirely disappears, the belly becomes livid, and the sides are all streaked over with a sooty or black colour. The salmon in these states are termed in our acts of Parliament, Red and Black Fish; and a chief design of these acts is to prevent the destruction of the fish when they are of these colours, which never happens but in the spawning season." Dr. Walker, Prize Essays, Highl. Soc. S., ii. 364.

REID HAND. A phrase used in our laws, denoting the marks of blood found on a murderer.

—"He could not be latten frie, albeit he offer pledges for him;—gif he is takin with reid or hait hand of slauchter." Quon. Att. c. 39, a. 2.

— Cum rubro vel recenti manu. Lat.

It is ordained that the manslayer be punished with death, if taken with reid hand, on the very day on which he is arrested. Acts Ja. I., c. 100. Ed. 1566.

The term seems used improperly, with respect to "ane man taken with reid hand, with ane sheip, or muton, or with ane calfe." Skene Cap. Crimes, c. 13, a. 9, i.e., when he is seized in the act of carrying off any beast that he has stolen.

[REID, REED, adj. Furious, raging, mad, S.]

REID-HUNGER, s. A term used to denote the rage of hunger, S.

A.-S. reth, to which this term has been traced, is used with great latitude; as, retha ren, saeva pluvia; rethe stormas, saevae procellae; haele rethre, calor saevior, &c. It seems exactly to correspond with the Lat. phrase, saeva fames, Claudian; and rabida fames, Virgil.

REID-HUNGERED, adj. In a ravening state from hunger, S.

REID-WOD, RED-WOD, adj. 1. In a violent rage, maddened with anger, S.

*Will ran reid-wod for haist,
With wringing and flinging,
For madness lyke to nang.*

Cherrie and Slae, st. 67.

2. Furious, distracted; in a general sense.

My muse see bonny ye describe her;—

Gin ony higher up ye drive her,

She'll rin red-wood.

Hamilton, Ramsay's Poems, li. 336.

Sibb. derives it from A.-S. reth, Isl. reide, ferox, asper, and wod, q. v. The Isl. word (reid-ur, Verel. iratus, Su.-G. wred, Isl. reide, ira,) is the most natural etymon. For our term seems originally to signify, furious with rage.

REID DAY. 1. A day in September, before which the wheat is generally sown. On Reid-eeen, or the eve of this day, i.e., the evening preceding it, the hart and the hind are believed to meet for copulation. This, it is pretended, is the only night in the year on which they meet. If the evening is cold, the hart is said to cry all the ensuing day; Selkirks., Upp. Clydes.

This is perhaps the same with Rule-day, the exaltation of the cross, which falls on September 14th; in the Fasti Danici marked as on the 15th. But it is a singular coincidence, that, as we learn from Wormius, the 16th day, or that of St. Lambert, is characterized by a hart; and he assigns a reason for this, very nearly allied to the vulgar belief of our own country: Persuasum namque sibi habent Rustici cervum hoc die, per membrum genitale, sevim quoddam emittere, quod in torrentibus quandoque colligi assolet. Fides, he adda, sit penes autores. Fast. Lib. ii. p. 116.

"Hinda," according to Pliny, "begin to goe to rut after the rising of the starre Arcturus, which is much about the fifth of September." Nat. Hist. B. viii. c. 32.

Lady Juliana Berners says;

At Saynt Jamys daye where soo he goo;

Thenne shall the roobucke gendre wyth the roo.

She subjoins, in language that seems figuratively to convey the same idea:

Also the roobucke as it is well kyde:

At holy Rode daye he gooth to ryde.

And vryth the byt: whan he maye gete it.

Book of Hawking, &c. d. ij.

2. The third day of May, Aberd.

Some waefu quine 'll ride the stool

For you afore the Reeday.

Tarras's Poems, Fastren's Een, st. 20.

This is merely the northern pron. of Rule-Day, q. v.

3. Also applied to the 7th of December.

"1597 Dec. 7.—The said Andro wes releisit out of prison upon the reid-day at evin." Birrel's Diary, p. 45. Dalyell's Fragm.

Sibbald, on the word Rood-day, vo. Rode, has remarked, that "days which bear this name are to be found in different times of the year." The reason of this application of the term, I have not been able to discover.

REID-EEN, s. The evening preceding the third day of May, Aberd.; rule-eeen, synon.

For some of the superstitious rites observed on this eve, V. RUDE-DAY. The Mountain-ash is not only placed above the doors of cow-houses, but in Aberdeenshire above the doors of dwelling-houses, to which woodbine is added. A cross is also impressed, with tar, on the doors of stables and byres.

REIDSETT, adj. Placed in order.

Thus Schir Gawyn, the gay, Gynour he leides,
In a gleteland gilde, that glemed full gay,
With riche ribaynes reidsett, ho so right roles,
Rayled with ryboes of rial aray.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., l. 2.

Mr. Pinkerton gives this as not understood. But it is an A.-S. phrase. Ge-rad sett-en, in ordine ponere; Teut. ge-reyd, Su.-G. rad, ordo. V. Ihre, vo. Rad, p. 373. Sacella i rad, to set in a row.

[REID-WOD, RED-WOD. V. under REID, adj.]

REIF, REFE, s. 1. An eruption on the skin, S. A. Bor. reefy, scabby; Gl. Grose.

2. In some places the itch is, by way of eminence, called the reif, S.

'Tis but as night,
We'll e'en stay, (may-be get the reif.)
Till 'tis day-light.

The Har'st Rig, st. 112.

Thoresby gives reefe as a synonym. provincial E. word; Lett., p. 335.

A.-S. Areof, scabies, scabiosus, leprosus; Alem. ruf riob, the leprosy; Su.-G. rustica, the scurf of a wound; Belg. roof, a scab or scurf; A.-S. heofod hrieftho, capitis scabies, q. the head-reif. The leprosy is sometimes called hwite-hrieftho, the white reif. This term may be radically allied to Su.-G. rifu-a, Germ. reib-en, to scratch; Su.-G. klada, scabies, being formed from kla, to scratch, and Germ. kratza, scabies, from kratz-en, synonym. with reib-en, and kla.

As A.-S. Areof also signifies callosus, whence E. rough; an ill-natured Scot, in return for the many compliments paid to his country on this subject, might feel disposed to say, that the ancient E. had borrowed the very term which denotes roughness from the prevalence of this cutaneous disease among them.

To REIF, REIFE, REYFF, v. a. To rob, to take with violence.

Crystyne that ar, yone is thar heretage,
To reyff that croune that is a gret owt rage.
Wallace, vi. 291, MS.

"Gif anie man—enters within any mans land without his licence; and—reifes meat fra his men & tenants: he sall for that wrang pay aucht kye to the Lord of the ground." Stat. Dav. II., c. 11, s. 4.

A.-S. reaf-ian; Isl. hreif-a, Su.-G. rifu-a, Moes.-G. raub-jan, id.

REIF, REIFF, REFF, s. 1. Robbery, rapine.

"The thieves and broken men, inhabitants of the saidis Schirefdomes, and utheris boundis of the marches of this realme, foirnentis the partis of England, not onlie committis daylie theiftis, reiffis, heirschippes, martheris, and fyre-raisingis, upon the peaceable subjects of the countrie: bot als takis sindrie of them, deteinis them in captivity as prisoners, ransoumis them, or lettis them to borrowis for their entrie againe." Acts Ja. VI., 1567, c. 21. Murray.

2. Spoil, plunder, whatever can be reft.

The King gert be depertyt then
All hale the reff among the men.
Barbour, v. 118, MS.

Sprauk, Edit. 1620.

3. Foulys of Reif, ravenous fowls, such as are carnivorous.

"Item, anentis rukis, crawys and vther foulys of reif, as ernys, bussardis, gieldis, and myttalis,—it is sene speidfull that thai that sik treis pertenyis to let thame to big, and distroy thame with all thair power," &c. Acts Ja. II., 1457, c. 32. Ed. 1814, vol. II., p. 51.

A.-S. reaf, Germ. raub, Sw. roof, praeda, spoliun; Isl. rið, riða, rapina.

REIFFAR, REYFFAR, REFFAYR, REAVER, REUER, s. A robber; used to denote one who lives by depredation, whether by land or sea.

Thow reyffar king chargis me throw cass,
That I suld cum, and put me in thi grace.
Wallace, vi. 378, MS.

To REIK, v. a. To reach, stretch, extend, S. A. Bor.

Reik Deianire his mais and lioun skyn.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 94, 4.

Reik to the man the price promyst all cryis.
Ibid., 140, 29.

Belg. reyck-en, Teut. reck-en, A.-S. recc-an, Su.-G. raeck-a, id. Our v. is also used like E. reach, in a neuter sense. V. RAK, v. 1.

To REIK out, v. a. 1. To prepare for an expedition; to fit out, S.

Reek forth occurs in this sense.

"Notwithstanding of al his great armie, quhilke was so lang in recking forth,—hee findeth the wind more nor partie, as the carcages of men and shippes, in al coastes, dois testifie." Bruce's Eleven Sermon. Q. 8. b.

"Ane merchand frauchtis ane ship with hir charge till the recept, and the ship is reikit to the sea, and passis furth to ane uther haven," &c. Ship Lawis, Balfour's Pract., p. 621.

2. To dress, to accoutre.

It is radically the same with E. rig, which Johnson fantastically derives from rig or riðge. The common origin seems to be Sw. rikt-a, Moes.-G. riht-an, Germ. richt-en, ordinare, instruere; if not A.-S. irig-an, velare, to cover.

To REIK, v. n. To smoke, S.

A.-S. rec-an, Sw. riuk-a, rock-a, id. Some have traced this word to Heb. פֶּרֶק, reek, emptiness. V. RAK, s. 2.

REIK, REEK, REK, s. 1. Smoke, S. A. Bor. reek.

"The reik, smeuk, and the stink of the gun puldir, fylit al the ayr maist lyk as Plutois paleis had been birnan: in ane bald fyir." Compl. S., p. 63.

The fyr owt syne in blees brast,
And the reik raiss rycht wondre fast.
Barbour, iv. 130, MS.

Reik is used by Shakespeare in the same sense. But he seems to have borrowed it from the North of E.

2. Metaph., a disturbance, a tumult.

Thair was few lordis in all thir landis,
Bot till new regentis maid thair bandis.
Than rais ane reik or euer I wist,
The quhilk gart all thair bandis brist.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 271.

A reik in the house, is a phrase still used in the same sense, S.

"It is a soure reik, where the good wife dings the good man;" S. Prov. "A man in my country coming out of his house with tears on his cheeks, was ask'd the occasion; he said, There was a soure reik in the house; but, upon farther inquiry, it was found that his wife had beaten him." Kelly, p. 186.

A.-S. rec, Isl. reikr, Dan. reuke, Su.-G. roek.

3. Metaph., a house or habitation, Orkn.

"That whatever persone shall slay the earn or eagle shall have of the Baillie of the parochine where it shall happen him to slay the eagle 8d. from every reik within the parochine, except from cottars that have no sheep." Act. A. 1626, Barry's Orkney, p. 469.

Isl. reikia, signifies lectus, stratum. It might therefore seem to denote every one who has a bed. But this is a Gothic phraseology. Reik, says Ihre, notat domicilium, focum, unde Betala foer hvarje reik, pro quavis domo vel familia vectigal pendere; roekpenningar, focarium, fumagium; Germ. rauchgelt.

TO GAR CLAISE GAE THROUGH THE REIK.

To pass the clothes of a new-born child through the smoke of a fire; a superstitious rite, which has been used in Fife in the memory of some yet alive, meant to ward off from the infant the fatal influence of witchcraft.

This may undoubtedly be viewed as a relique of the sun-worship of our ancestors, and as allied to the idolatrous rite of consecrating to Molech, by carrying children between two fires.

REIK-HEN, REEK-HEN, REIK-FOWL. 1. A hen bred in the house, Aberd., Banffs.

In former times, those whose possessions were so small that they were not bound to pay kain, were severally obliged to raise one reik hen; and in some instances this, it is said, was the whole rent. Fowls of this description were reared within the house, where there was but one apartment, the roost being erected immediately opposite to the door in the inside. The fowl that sits nearest the reik, or smoke, is said to be always the best.

Some view the term, perhaps, with more propriety, as denoting the exaction of a hen for every chimney.

"In ancient times the Crown of Scotland had an extensive forest in the north-eastern extremity of this county; and the hereditary office of forester of the forest of Coldingham still exists, and derives some trifling dues from all inhabited houses within its boundaries and parishes. The principal of these is called reik hen, being a yearly exaction of a hen for each chimney." Agr. Surv. Berw., p. 348.

It has been supposed that reik hen was the name of a duty originally paid, especially by the tenants on church lands, for the liberty of taking fuel from a moss, a hen being due for each chimney or reik; and thus that it was equivalent to the term Hearth-money, or as it was also denominated, Peter-pence.

2. In Shetland it simply denotes the exaction of a single hen from each house. V. REIK, s., sense 3.

"There is an exaction of a hen from every house or reik, under the denomination of harkhen, which was at one time a regular payment in kind to the king's falconer, and afterwards given in lease to different individuals." Edmonston's Zetl. Isl., i. 165.

This phrase occurs very frequently in a Charter granted to James Earl of Murray, afterwards Regent. Unam martam, quatuor mutones, duodecim lie reik hennis, duas bollas auenarum, &c. Acts Mary, 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 556.

All the cane fowls, due according to the charter, are thus denominated:—

"Decem capones decem pultreas ac unam pultream ad festum nativitatis Domini et aliam in festo carnis privii cum lie reik pultreis solitis et consuetis saxiandi [?] bollam solitam et consuetam, octo plaustratus focalium seu glebarum et tres cariagias ultra limites Angusie si requisiti fuerint," &c. Chart. 1585.

We meet with the same term in a grant of some of the property formerly belonging to the abbey of Dunfermline, made by Johnne Gib and James his son, as "keparis of the place and yards of Dunferling."

"Togeddir with the hail teynd victuall, teynd stray [straw], extending to fourtie thraiffis, canys, reik-fowls, custumes, and vtheris dewties quhatsumewer." &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 607.

This custom was not confined to our country, or its vicinity: in a very early period it prevailed in Germany, and the very same term was used. The learned Heineccius particularly describes this payment, viewing it as an acknowledgement of the territorial jurisdiction and superiority of the person to whom this fowl was given, and of the servile state of the giver. Porro inde discimus, he says, cur signum jurisdictionis patrimonialis, et maxime superioris censeatur praestatio annua gallinae, quam sumosam vocant, das Rauch-huhn. A certain number of fowls was required by the Alemannic law, Tit. 22. We learn from the Chronicle of the monastery of Gemblours, in Brabant, A. 943, that it had a right to exact from all the villages belonging to it, a hen for each house. V. Heinecc. Antiq. German., ii. 281, 282.

REIKIE, adj. 1. Smoky, S.

"He saw ane gritt mistie and reikie cloud ryse and move forwardis till it cam abone Dunpenderlaw," &c. Fittscoatie's Cron., p. 479.

2. Vain, empty; metaph. used.

"All the joys which are heere, are but reekie pleasures, purchased with teares, wherewith the eyes of men are made bleared." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 511.

REIKINESS, s. The state of being smoky, S.

REIK, s. "A blow; variation of Rak," Gl. Sibb.

REIKIM, s. A smart stroke. V. REEKIM.

TO REILE, RELE, v. n. To roll. "To gar one's ene reil, to make his eyes reel, rowl, or roll," Rudd.

To pik thaym vp perchaunce your ene wil reile.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 66, 44.

Bot with the preis we war reit of that stele.

Ibid., 53, 33.

"Ye never saw green cheese, but your een reit'd;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 84; addressed to those who are supposed to be of a greedy or covetous disposition, still wishing to have a part of what they see.

Rudd. views reel, roll, and rowl, as all originally the same.

REILIEBOGIE, s. A confusion, a state of tumult or disorder, S.B.

It may be conjectured that the term has some affinity to the old tune called Reel o' Bogie, as perhaps referring to some irregular kind of dance.

REILING, s. 1. Confusion, bustle.

All the wenchis of the west
War up or the cok crew;
For reiling thair micht na man rest,
For garray, and for glew.

Pellic to the Play, st. 2.

[2. State of intoxication, confusion of ideas, Clydes.]

3. A loud clattering noise, S. synon. reissil.
V. REEL-RALL.

[REILIN, REILING, adj. 1. Confused, in a state of confusion, Clydes.

2. Intoxicated, confused in thought and speech, ibid.

3. Full of noisy and uproarious persons; as, "The change-house was jist reilin wi' the kintfa servants," ibid.; synon. ringin.]

REILL, s. A turmoil. V. REEL.

REIME, s. Realm, kingdom.

That wes ane semely syght,
In ony riche reime.

Gawan and Gol, iv. 20.

REIMIS, REEMISH, s. 1. Rumble.

"She tumbled down upo' me wi' aik a reemis, that she gart my head cry knoit upo' the coach door." Journal from London, p. 3.

As she's behading ilka thing that past,
With a loud crack the house fell down at last;
The reemish put a knell unto her heart.

Ross's Helenore, p. 64.

2. The sound caused by a body that falls with a rumbling or clattering noise, Banffs., Aberd. V. DUNT, s., sense 2.

3. A weighty stroke or blow, Aberd.

This seems merely the S. B. pron. of Rummyss, q. v. Isl. rym-ia, however, signifies to bellow or roar, A.-S. hrem-an, hrym-an, id. A. Bor. reem, to cry aloud.

To REIMIS, v. n. To make a loud rumbling noise, Aberd., Mearns. Reimish, Reishil, Reissil, synon.

REIM-KENNAR, s. A skald or poet, or more properly, one who knows how to quell the power of evil spirits.

"Norna—extended her staff of black oak towards that part of the heavens from which the blast came hardest, and in the midst of its fury chaunted a Norwegian invocation still preserved in the island of Unst, under the name of the song of the Reim-Kennar, though some call it the Song of the Tempest." The Pirate, i. 130.

It appears from another passage, that Norna, who sustains the character of possessing magical powers, takes this name to herself.

"They who speak to the Reim-Kennar must lower their voice to her before whom winds and waves hush both blast and billow." Ibid., iii. 8.

This may either be equivalent to skald or poet, from Su.-G. rim, metrum, Isl. rijma, ode, hreyr-r, resonantia canora, and kennar, one who knows, q. a person conversant with poetry; or allied to Isl. reimt, spectris obnoxius, q. one who knew how to quell the power of evil spirits.

REIND, s. [A set, bundle, packet, or case.]

"He hase geffyne furth for the reind of spwnis xvj sh." Aberd. Reg., A. 1543, V. 18.

Shall we view this as allied to Tent. renne, promptuarium, penarium; q. a case of spoons?

[In the West of S. a set of horn-spoons was called a reen or reend o' spoones, and prob. because the spoons when exposed for sale were tied up with a reen or reind, i.e., a strip of flannel or woollen cloth.]

REINYEIT, adj. Striped, corded; [also, bordered, Ayrts.]

"Item, ane litle pece of blak reinyeit taffatie containing twa ellis." Inventories, A. 1561, p. 123.

"Item, ane tyke of a bed reinyeit with blew." Ibid., p. 150. V. LAICH.

Perhaps from Fr. raisonnée, furrowed; q. ribbed taffety; or rather from rangé, rengé, in ranks, in rows; rang, reng, a rank, a file, a row, a string; applied to the strings of an instrument. Fr. rengé, according to the idiom of words introduced into the ancient language of S., would have the liquid sound with which reinyeit has evidently been pronounced.

To REIOSE, v. a. [1. To rejoice, make glad; part. pr. reiosil, rejoiced, joyful, Barbour, xi. 269.]

2. To possess, to enjoy.

"They wer profoundly resolutit to haue alliance with the Pichtis, and to gif thair dochteris in mariage, vndir thair condiciounis, ylk ane of thaim sall reiose in tyme cumyng al thay landis quibilkis thay reiosit afore the mariage." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 4. b.

Fr. rejouir, to re-enjoy.

[REIOSYNG, s. Rejoicing, Barbour, xi. 415.]

[REIOSYT, pret. Rejoiced, made glad, Ibid., ii. 551.]

To REIOURNE, v. a. To delay, to put off; [liter., to put the day back or farther off.]

"Others reiourne this to a future time, when as Antichrist arising, forsooth, shall possibly expell the Pope out of Rome, and sit there: so, forgetting the long boasted priuiledge of Peter his chaire; and while they seeke to escape, snaring themselves more, by granting that to be possible, vpon the alleaged impossibility whereof they long agoe builde all defence." Forbes on the Revelation, p. 176.

[A similar use of the prefix re, in an oblique sense, is seen in the v. re-found, re-jack, q. v. Jamieson must have overlooked this resemblance when he framed his note on this word. It has therefore been deleted.]

REIOURING, s. Used apparently in the sense of delay.

"The answer hath in it a two-fold consolation against the relourning of the sought vengeance. First, by word, & next by signe. The first hath two arguments of comfort, one, that the delayed punishment of their persecutors should bee but a space." Forbes on the Revelation, p. 36.

REIRBRASSERIS, s. pl. Armour for defending the back of the arms.

"Uthers simpillar—haue—a pesane with wam-brasseiris and reirbrasseiris." Acta. Ja. I., 1429, c. 134. Edit. 1566.

From rear or Fr. arriere, behind, and brassart, a defence for the arm, from bras, brachium. V. WAM-BRASSERIS.

To REIRD, RERDE, v. n. 1. To roar, to make a loud noise, to resound.

—Vp thay rasis ane cry
That reirdis to the sternes in the sky.

Doug. Virgil, 324, 25.

The wod resoundis schil, and eury schaw
Schoutis agane of thare clamour and dyn,
The hillis reirdis, quhill dynlis roke and quhyn.

Ibid., 252, 18.

2. To break wind, S.

3. As a v. a., to cause to make a crashing noise.

The feirs wyndes ye se,
Zepherus, Notus, and Eurus, all thre
Contrarius blaw, thar bustuous bubblis with bir
The woddis reirdis, baith elme, aik and fir
Ouerturnis to ground.

Doug. Virgil, 53, 1.

This use is improper. For the language of Virg. is stridunt silvae.

Rudd. deduces this and the s. from A.-S. reord, lingua, "as it seems originally to have denoted the clamour of tongues." It is far more natural to derive it from A.-S. rar-ian, Teut. reer-en, fremere, rugire, mugire, vociferare.

REIRD, REIRDE, RERDE, REIRDIN, s. 1. Clamour, noise, shouting, an outcry.

Syne the reird followit of the younkis of Troy.

Doug. Virgil, 37, 12.

—The Troianis rasis ane skry in the are,
With rerde and clamour of blythues, man and boy.
Ibid., 300, 29.

2. The act of breaking wind, in whatever way; from the sound emitted, S.

And first she shook her lugs,
And then she ga'e a snore,
And then she ga'e a reird,
Made a' the smiths to glowr.

Jacobite Relics, i. 71.

I hesitate whether this is the same with Rair, Rare, a loud report, perhaps ex ano; or a spring, from the E. v. to rear.

3. A falsehood, a mere fabrication, especially when it proceeds from a principle of ostentation, S. B.

This may be borrowed from the idea of emitting wind, as a lie sometimes receives the latter designation. Or, it may be an oblique use of A.-S. reord, sermo, loquela; reord-ian, sermocinari, q. to amplify in narration.

REIRDIT, part. pa. Reared.

Syne war thair war of ane wane, wrocht with ane wal,
Reirdit on ane riche roche, beside ane river.

Gowan and Goh, i. 19.

[REIRWARD, s. Rear-guard, Barbour, viii. 71.]

REISES. Brushwood, S., plur. of Rise.

"It was that deevil's buckie Callum Beg," said Aleck,
'I saw him whisk away among the reises.'" Waverley,
iii. 133. V. Rise.

REISHILLIN', part. adj. 1. Noisy, rattling, Fife.

2. Forward, prompt, ibid. V. REISSIL, v.

To REISK, v. a. and n. To scratch so as to occasion a noise, Aberd.

This seems merely a variety of Risk, v., q. v.

REISS, adj. Of or belonging to Russia.

"Sex berrellis of Reiss ter of the grit bind." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

"Threty Reiss merkis." Ibid.

"To pay xiv sh. for ilk berrell of ter of the gret Reissbind." Ibid.; i.e., the great bind or largest size of barrels imported from Russia.

The name of Russia seems to be given according to the pron. of Aberdeen. Our sailors elsewhere give it as if Rooss or Roosh.

To REISSIL, REISHLE, v. a. and n. 1. To make a loud clattering noise, as if one were breaking what is handled, S.

Teut. ryssel-en, A.-S. krist-an, crepere, strepere; Su.-G. rast-a, crepitare. Seren. derives the A.-S. v. from Su.-G. krist-a, rist-a, to shake, especially used to denote the sound made by the concussion of arms. This is evidently from the same source with Moes.-G. kris-jan, quaterere, concutere. E. rustle is nearly allied; but it does not convey the idea of so loud a noise.

2. To beat soundly.

"S. He rist'd their rigging with rungs, i.e., cud-gell'd or bang'd them soundly," Rudd. Addit. to Gl. vo. Hirail.

It seems doubtful, however, whether this be not rather a dimin. from Su.-G. ris-a, virgis caedere, from ris, a rod or twig.

REISSIL, REISLE, REISHLE, s. 1. A loud clattering noise, S.

2. A blow, a smart stroke, S. V. REMYLLIS.

"Staun' aff your wa's, staun aff, or I'll tak ye a riesle o'er the aul' bou't riggin' o' ye, that ye'll no green to get the marrow o' atween this an' Beltan." Saint Patrick, ii. 313.

[REISSILIN, REISHLIN, s. 1. A continuous, loud, clattering noise, Clydes.

"The said Stewart receives thir dewties in miell and reistit mutton, wyld foullis reistit, and selchia." Moore's West. Isles, p. 36.

My best beloved brother of the band !
I grein to sie thy sillie smiddy ameik.
This is no lye that I leid up-a-land
On raw rid herring reistit in the reik.

Montgomery, Chron. S. P., iii. 500.

Dan. rist-er, to broil or toast; ristet, broiled or toasted.

"Let us cut up bushes and briers, pile them before the door and set fire to them, and smoke that auld d—I's dam as if she were to be reested for bacon." Tales of my Landlord, i. 176.

REISTER, s. A term apparently equivalent to Kipper, as applied to salted and dried salmon, Roxb.

—Fisher lads gang out wi' lights
And horrid lesters,
To gust the gabs of gentler wights,
Wi' tasty reisters.

A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 5.

To REIST, REEST, v. n. 1. To wait for another; with the prep. on added.

And on Volsens alanerly he reistis,
Thocht round about with inemys he preist ia.

Doug. Virgil, 292, 12. Moror, Virg.

Lat. rest-are, id.

2. To become restive. Thus a horse is said to reist on the road, S. Reasted, tired, A. Bor. Gl. Grose.

In cart or car thou never reestit;
The steyst brae thou wad hae fac't it.

Burns, iii. 144.

"To be plain wi' you, our poney reests a bit and it's dooms sweer to the road, and naeboly can manage him but our Jock." Antiquary, i. 326, 7.

3. To become dry; applied to the drying up of a well.

And there will be plenty o' broo,
Sae lang as our well is na reested.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 313.

4. As a v. a., to arrest, to seize for debt. He reistit his furniture, he laid an arrest on it, S.

This abbrev. occurs in O. E. "I reste, as a sergente dothe a prisoner or his goodes. Je areste.—He hath reested me for a mater that is nat worthe a grote." Palagr. B. iii., F. 34, 339, b.

To TAK THE REIST. 1. To become restive, to refuse to go forward; applied to a horse, Roxb.

2. Applied also to a person, who, after proceeding so far in any business, suddenly stops short, and from obstinacy or any other cause refuses to go through with it, ibid.

REIST, REYST, s. 1. Rest, [the act of resting, a stand still, Clydes.]

To Orides the hard reist dois oppres
The cold and irny slepe of deithis stres.

Doug. Virgil, 346, 17.

Quies, Virg.

2. The iron socket in which the bolt of a door rests.

VOL. IV.

Doug. Virgil, 211, 33.

3. Sibb. renders reistis, door hinges.

4. That on which a warlike instrument is supported.

Ane Inglissman saw thair chiftayne wes slayn,
A sper in reyst he kest with all his mayne,
On Wallace draiff, fra the horsis him to ber.

Wallace, v. 280, MS.

As muskets, when first used, were supported by what was called a rest, the custom seems to have been borrowed from what was formerly practised in the use of the lance or spear.

"Long spears and lances were used by the Saxons and Normans, both horse and foot, but particularly by the cavalry of the latter, who in charging rested the butt end of the lance against the arçon or bow of their saddle; the mail-armour not admitting the fixture of lance rests, as was afterwards practised on the cuirass. —A lance rest was a kind of moveable iron bracket, fixed to the right side of the cuirass, for the purpose of supporting the lance." Grose's Military Antiq. ii. 275.

5. The instep of the foot, Clydes.

Isl. rist, planta pedis, G. Andr.; convexum seu dorsum plantae pedis, Haldorson; Dan. rist, the instep of the foot, Wolff; Su.-G. rist, id. A.-S. vyrst, also rist, properly the wrist. Usurpatur, says Ihre, de commissura pedis et tibiae, manus et brachii, genu et femoria. He derives it from wrist-a, torque, because it is the hinge on which the limb is turned.

REISTER CLOK. A cloak such as that worn by brigands or freebooters.

"Item, ane ryding clok of broun stemyng. Item, ane uther ryding clok of gray Frenche stemyng. Item, ane reister clok of serge of Florence, eordnit with gold and silver." Inventories, A. 1579, p. 280. V. ROYSTER.

REITHE, adj. Keen, ardent, Ettr. For.

"'Is your master a very religious man?' 'He's weel enough that way—No that very reithe on't.'" Brownie of Bodsbeck, l. 143. [V. RAITH.] A.-S. rethe, asper, ferus; "fierce, outrageous," Somner; Teut. urced, id.

[REITHNES, s. Eagerness, ardour, West of S.]

REIVE, s. A name given to what is considered as an ancient Caledonian fort.

"These mounds are perfectly circular, with regular fosses; the one is styled the Meikle Reive, in the language of the country, and is about a hundred yards in diameter." P. Campsie, Stat. Acc., xv. 377. Perhaps q. "the large inclosure." V. RAE, and REVE.

REJAG, s. A repartee, Loth.

To REJAG, v. n. To give a smart answer, especially as reflecting on the person to whom it is addressed, ibid.

This is evidently the same with the O.E. v. "Repreuyn or reiaaggyn. Redarguo. Deprehendo." Prompt. Parv.

Fr. rejaug-er, to measure a cask again. Shall we suppose that this v. had been anciently used by the French in a metaph. sense; in the same manner in which the E. phrase, He took his measure, is still used in the colloquial language of S., as signifying, "He gave him a complete answer?"

To REJECK, REJECT, v. a. 1. To refer for decision. Lat. rejie-ere, id.

"Eftir this mater was lang dispute afore the senat, it was rejekit to the bishoppis [pontifices] that thay nicht decerne thereupon." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 434. Delegata, Lat.

2. To impute, to ascribe.

"Therefore ane man sould not reiekt the caus of his auin euil and vickednes to the prescience of God, bot to himself and his auin inobedience." Nicol Burne's Disputation, fol. 9, a.

REK, s. Smoke. V. REIK.

[RELEIF, RELEFF, s. A sum of money paid to a lord on entrance to an inheritance, Ibid. xii. 320.]

To RELEISCH, RELESCH, v. n. To take a wide course, to go at large, to set at liberty.

The larkis loude releischand in the skyis
Louis thare lege with tony's curious.

Doug. Virgil, 403, 31.

Fr. relasch-er, to let go, to enlarge. Perhaps it is descriptive of their music, as we say S., to let go, or gac, i.e., to raise a tune.

[To RELENT, v. a. To assuage, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, 391.]

RELEVANT, adj. Sufficient to warrant the conclusion, whether in reference to a libel or to a defence; a forensic term, S.

"A libel, or a defence, is said to be relevant, when the facts upon which it founds are sufficient to infer the conclusion.—The court found the first charge relevant to infer the pains of death." Maclaurin's Crim. Cases, Intr. xxii. xxiii.

"The court, if they find the facts libelled not relevant to infer the crime, dismiss the pannel from the bar; if they judge them relevant, they remit the pannel to the knowledge of an inquest." Ersk. Inst. B. iv. T. 4, §91.

L. B. relevantes articuli, legitimi, validi, probantes. —Quasdam positiones et articulos admissibiles et relevantes pro parte Prioris et Conventus—admittere recusavit, illosque per suam interlocutoriam rejecit. Lit. Sixti IV. Papae A. 1431, ap. Du Cange.

Maclaurin conjectures that "this term was probably first applied to defence, Probatum non relevat, as the primary signification of relevare is levare, solari." Ibid.

But I am inclined to view it as applied to the defence in a way somewhat different. It was most probably used in the courts of chancery, as denoting that the defender obtained relief by a sentence in his favour, in consequence of the proof brought by him, this being judged relevant to free him from the aggression of his opponent. This Du Cange defines Relevantum appelli, Gall. relief d'appel, Diploma experiundae in jure restitutionis. In like manner, Cotgrave renders Fr. relief, "a relieving; the raising of a person, or a thing, fallen; and particularly, the remedy granted by the letters patent of a sovereign prince unto a subject incommolated, or fallen into an inconvenience, by the sentence of a judge or ill dealing of others; and hence, Relief d'Appel."

RELEVANCY, s. The legal sufficiency of the facts stated, in a libel or in a defence, to infer punishment or exculpation; also a forensic term, S.

"The practice of the court is, and for many years has been, not to find a special relevancy as to the libel and defences, but to pronounce a general interlocutor, finding the libel relevant." Maclaurin, ut sup.

"The two things to be chiefly regarded in a criminal libel are the relevancy of the facts libelled, i.e., their sufficiency to infer the conclusion; and 2dly, their truth. The consideration of the first belongs to the judges of the court, that of the other, to the inquest, otherwise called the jury or assize." Erskine, ubi sup.

To RELEVE, v. a. 1. To raise, to exalt, to promote.

Flawndrys in hys dayis wes
Relevyd till ane Eridwme
Wyth custymabil honour and fredwme.

Wyntown, vi. 10. 25.

Fr. relev-er, to raise, to lift up.

2. To reassemble, to form anew into one body.

His men relewi, that douchty was in deid,
Him to reskew out off that felloun dreid.

Wallace, v. 829, MS.

• Relewit and releifit are used in the same sense.

The Scottis men than relewit to giddir fast.
Ibid., ver. 972, MS.

In Edit. 1648, the passage runs:

The Scottish men they ran together fast.
The fleand folk, that off the feild fyrst past,
In to thair king agayne releifit fast.

Ibid., vi. 605, MS.

—Thay that dreuin war abak and chaist

Relewis agane to the bargane in haist.

Doug. Virgil, 391, 10.

Fr. relev-er, is mentioned in Dict. Trev., as synon. with ramasser, colligere, and with assembler, colligere in cumulum, coacervare.

To RELY, v. a. To rally, call back.

Tharfor comfort yow, and rely
Your men about yow rycht starkly.
Barbour, xiii. 371, MS.
He relyt to him mony a knycht
Ibid., ii. 401, MS.

[O. Fr. ralier, to rally; from lier, to bind.]

[REMANAND, s. Remnant, rest, Ibid. iv. 408.]

REMANENT, adj. Other, S.

"We told you before, that we did no more allow violences of that kind, nor we did allow the foul aspersions of rebellion, heresy, schism, and perjury put upon the noblemen and remanent covenanters," &c. Spalding, i. 71.

"And we ordain these presents to be printed, and published at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and remanent head burghs of this our kingdom." Proclamation, A. 1680. Wodrow, ii. App. p. 51.

This phrase is still used in petitions addressed to ecclesiastical courts. "To the Moderator and remanent members of the Presbytery of ———."

REMANER, s. Remainder.

"—With consideratione alwayes of—lord Torphichen in that meane remaner of the said baronie." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 164.

[To REMB, v. n. To rave in speaking, to tell lies, Shetl.]

[REMBER, s. One who tells improbable stories, ibid.]

[REMBIN, part. and s. Raving, telling lies, ibid.]

To REME, v. n. To foam, to froth. V. REAM.

To REMEID, v. a. To remedy.

"All makes for the ruin of this isle; and I see yet no mean to remeid it." Baillie's Lett., i. 51.

REMEID, REMEED, REMEAD, s. 1. Remedy, amelioration.

"The town's people were passing sorry for be-reaving them of their arms by such an uncouth alight, —but no remead." Spalding, i. 230.

"When—Charles I. came to sit upon the throne, they resolved upon application to his majesty for remeid," &c. Guthrie's Mem., p. 8.

2. Remeid of Law, a phrase equivalent to Remedy of Law, formerly applicable to the obtaining of justice, particularly by appeal from an inferior to a superior court, when the sentence of the former was reckoned erroneous.

Before the union of the kingdoms, appeals to Parliament against the judgments of the Court of Session were termed "Protestations for Remeid of Law."

"The authority of the most solemn sentences of Session being thus cleared, it comes next to be considered how far protestations for remeid of law from the Session to the Parliament ought to be extended." Stair's Instit. B. iv. Tit. i. sec. 52.

It is well known that, in Charles the Second's reign, the King and court of Session violently opposed the competency of such appeals or protestations; and that the advocates, who refused to disclaim the right of protestation, were banished from Edinburgh. Hence, in "The Declaration of the Estates of the Kingdom of Scotland, containing the Claim of Right, and the offer of the crown to their Majesties King William and Queen Mary," the following language was used:

"That it is the right and privilege of the subjects to protest for Remeid of Law to the King and Parliament against sentences pronounced by the Lords of Session, providing the same do not stop execution of those sentences." Acts and Ordinances of the Estates of S. 1689, c. 13.

Soon after the Union, the phrase "protestation for remeid of law," seems to have fallen into disuse in relation to appeals. It occurs, however, in the case Lyon against Kinnaird, 19th July, 1710, in which it is said by one of the parties: "We appealed and protested, for remeid of law, to the British Parliament." Morrison's Dict., i. 530.

3. Alloy of a peculiar description.

"That thair be cunyeit ane penny of silver callit the Mary Ryall, the fynes of elevin deniers fyne, and of weicht ane unce Troce [i.e., Troy] weicht, with twa granes of remeid, [i.e., alloy] alsweill of weicht, as fynes.—We charge David Forest, &c. and all utheris officiaris of our cunye-hous, ilk ane in thair awin office, to forge, prent, and caus be forgeit and prent sic pieces of weicht and fynes within thair remeid, as is above specifiet." Act. Dom. Conc., 22d Dec. 1567, Keith's Hist. App. p. 118.

Fr. remede, "a remedy, redresse—also that alloy which goldsmiths, jewellers, and money-makers, are permitted to adde unto the allowed embasement of gold, or silver; as where with a silver piece of eleven pence value, there is a twelfth part of copper allowed to be mingled, the remede is about two grains over and besides that twelfth. This advantage they have gotten upon allegation, that they cannot precisely hit, or justly keep, the scantling required of them by the law;" Cotgr.

Both Keith and De Cardonnel (Numismata, Pref. p. 18.) expl. remeid as simply denoting "alloy." But from Cotgr. it is evident that, although the thing referred to by this might be called alloy, as being base metal, it did not denote alloy in general, or that portion which the law allowed, but a determinate quantity in addition to the legal ratio, for the purpose of securing the moneyers from loss in weighing out a bar of silver into so many small quantities; or rather, for securing them against liability to prosecution in the event of there being found a little more alloy in the coin than the law allowed. Hence it received the name of remeid, i.e., remedy or reparation. But while this privilege of mixing two grains in the ounce, in addition to the legal allowance, was granted, they are required to keep within their remeid, i.e., in no instance, in the slightest degree, to exceed these two grains.

This ordinance had been borrowed from the customs of France. L. B. remed-ium, monetariis nostris remede, Defectus in marcis auri vel argenti, unde nummi cuduntur, statutis regis permissus. Duplex est, unum ligae, ponderis alterum: Remedium ligae est commixtio certae quantitatis metalli adulterini cum auro vel argento; Remedium vero ponderis est illius diminutio. Utrumque legitimum habetur, si legibus principis consentiat; secus si dissentiat; Du Cange. He quotes a proof of this custom as ancient as A. 1139. Liga is what, in our old laws, is denominated Lays, q.v. (also LAY, v.) denoting alloy. Du Cange, however, does not limit the term in the same manner as Cotgrave, making no distinction between the fixed and the additional quantity of base metal.

The term recours was used in Fr. in a sense nearly allied; L.B. recursus. But we learn from Du Cange, that it differs from remede, as the former regarded only the indemnity granted to the moneyers for the deficiency found in particular pieces, if the whole number struck corresponded in weight with the quantity of metal furnished. Under the term Recursus, he shows that A. 1343, two grains of remeul were allowed in the penny, denominated Denariale. This, according to the language of Q. Mary's Act, might perhaps be of the weight of an ounce.

To REMEIF, v. a. or n. To remove. "Flyt & remeif;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1535, V. 15.

REMEMBRIE, s. Remembrance, recollection.

Burel, Watson's Coll., ii. 48.

Fr. ramentevoir, id. ramentu, remembered.

REMIGESTER, s. A smart stroke, Buchan; perhaps originally the same with Rebegeastor, q. v.

[* To REMIND, v. a. To remember, Shirrefs. V. REMENT.]

[REMMACKS, s. pl. The oars of a boat, Shetl. Lat. remus, an oar.]

To REMORD, v. a. 1. To have remorse for, to remember with remorse; Fr. remord-re. Lat. re and mordere.

In sum part than he remordyt his thoct,
The Kingis command because he keypt nocht.
Wallace, x. 9, MS.

2. To disburden the conscience of any thing that may be the cause of remorse.

Wallace to God his conscience fyrst remord,
Syne comfort thaim with manly contenance.
Wallace, iv. 590.

Edit. 1648—His confidence counth remord.

REMYLLIS, s. pl. Blows.

Quhen thai had remyllis raucht,
Thai forthocht that thai faucht.

Houlate, iii. 16.

Tent. rammel-en, Su.-G. raml-a, tumultuari. This word seems formed from the v., in the same manner as reissil, a blow, from the v. Reissil, which is synon. with rammelen. Reissil, primarily signifies noise; and, secondarily, a blow, because of the sound emitted by it.

To RENCHEL, RENSHEL, v. a. To beat, to thwack with a stick; as, "To renshel beasts wi' a rung," when not taking the right road, Tev. [Synon., reissil.]

[Fr. rincean, foliage, formerly raincean, used in the sense of a bough, in mediæval documents, from Lat. ramiculus, dim. of ramus, a bough. V. Bracket's Dict.]

RENCHEL, RENSHEL, s. A term used to denote what is tall and thin; as, "He's naething but a lang renchel," Roxb.

RENDAL, RENNAL, RENNET, RUN-DALE, s. A term used with respect to the division of land, equivalent to run-rig, S.

"Another great improvement on the state of this country would be a better division of the small farms, which are parcelled out in discontinuous plots and run-rig, termed here rigg and rendal." P. Dunrossness, Shetl. Statist. Acc., vii. 398.

"A pernicious custom still too much prevails in this and other places, of possessing land in what is called rig and rennal, or run-rig; that is to say, each tenant in a particular farm or district, has a ridge alternately with his neighbours." P. Wick, Caithn. Statist. Acc., x. 26.

"There is an old practice, which still prevails in some places, and which is very detrimental to husbandry. It is commonly termed rig and rennet.—Instead of every one having his land in one place, it is scattered here and there, several tenants having different shares in one field, or a rig a piece alternately." P. Latheron, Caithn. Statist. Acc., xvii. 32.

"The tenants originally possessed their lands in run-ridge or run-dale." P. Dudingston, Loth. Statist. Acc., xviii. 363.

The same custom prevails in the North of Ireland, and, according to Arthur Young, in Wexford.

"There is a custom here called rundol's, which is a division of their farms into spaces by balks without fences, which they take here and there, exactly like the common fields of England." Tour, i. 173.

Dan. veca, "a balk or ridge between two furrows."

This phrase is undoubtedly of Northern origin. Perhaps from Isl. Su.-G. ren, palus limitaneus, a stake used for distinguishing the property of neighbours, and del, a division, or deld, portio agri; or from renn-a, to run, and del, deld, q. to have the portions of ground running parallel to each other. Thus run-rig, would be merely the translation of ren-del, or rendal. Rennet is evidently the corr. of rendeld. A.-S. Su.-G. raa, denotes a land mark, being nearly synon. with ren. In the Laws of Up-land, deldra raa signifies the limits between the portions belonging to neighbours.

[RENDER, s. Rate, degree, Banffs.]

* To RENDER, v. a. 1. To melt or beat butter, [tallow, or lard,] Ayrs.; "to separate the skinny from the fat parts of suet, &c." Gl. Lancash. V. RIND.

RENSS GULDING. The denomination of a foreign gold coin.

—"The hery Inglis noble of paiss to be cryit to xxii s.—The Renss guldung to viii s." Acts Ja. II., A. 1556, Ed. 1814, p. 46.

In Ed. 1566, gudling is used for guldung, c. 64, fol. 38, b.

This is called the Rhenish Guldung, Skene's Ed.; the same in Glendook's.

Teut. gulden, aureus nummus xx. stuferorum; Kilian. Belg. id. "a gilder, a coin of xx stivers;" Sewel. Renss or Rhenish refers to the country bordering on the Rhine. V. GUDLINE.

RENTAL, s. 1. A kind of lease, S.

"A rental is a particular species of tack, now seldom used, granted by the landlord, for a low or favourable tack-duty, to those who are either presumed to be the lineal successors to the ancient possessors of the land, or whom the proprietors design to gratify as such; and the lessees are usually styled rentallers or kindly tenants." Erskine's Instit. B. ii. Tit. 6, § 37. V. KINDLY.

The term is now used simply in the sense of leaseholding, S.

2. The annual value or rent, Dumfr., Clydes.

3. Also used, as in E., to denote the amount of the rents of an estate, S.

To RENTALE, v. a. To let in lease.

"Incaiss the saidis landislordis at ony tyme heir-after rentale or sett takkis to ony of the saidis disobedient hielandmen or bordourmen in ony thair landis, and omittis to tak sufficient caution for thame,

Ed. 1814, p. 463.

RENTALLER, s. One who possesses land by lease or rental, S.

To RENYE, RENGYE, v. a. To rein.

"Than the master cryit and bald renye ane bonet, vire the trossis, nou heise." Compl. S., p. 63.

RENYE, RENZE, s. The rein of a bridle; Fr. resne.

—The samyn four fountit beistis eik

Bene oft vait full towartye and meik

To draw the cart, to thole bridill and renya.

Doug. Virgil, 86, 37.

Leg. towartlie, as in Elphinstoun's MS.

RENYIT, part. pa. Forsworn, abjured, Barbour. Fr. reni-er, to deny, to abjure.

[To RENZIE, v. n. To writhe in pain, Orkn.]

To REPAIR, REPARE, REPAYRE, v. n. 1.

To return, [resort, haunt, Barbour, iv. 477];

O. Fr. reparier, L. B. repar-are.

Qwhen that the Romanys passyt ware,

The alienis, that war chasyd are,

Repayryd, and nere all the land

Dystroyit wyth fyre and fellown hand.

Wynloun, v. 10. 539.

[2. To abide, reside, dwell, Barbour, xv. 404.]

REPAIR, REPARE, s. [1. Dwelling, resort, haunt, Ibid. iv. 479; place of meeting, Ibid. vi. 548.]

2. Company, frequency, concourse, S.

Thrie Priests went into collatioun,

Into ane privie place of the said toun—

Thay lufit not na rangald nor repair.

Priests of Peblis, S. P. R., i. 3.

We still say of a street, which is retired from the bustle of a town, that there is not much repair in it, S.

Fr. repaire, a haunt; L. B. ripar-ium, receptaculum, domus munita; Ital. riparo.

[REPARYNG, s. Repair, haunt, Barbour, iv. 495.]

To REPARELL, REPERALE, v. a. To repair, to refit; Fr. repareill-er.

His many loist reparellit I but fale

And his feris fred from the deith alhale.

Doug. Virgil, 112, 51.

This v. is also used to denote the reparation, or the rebuilding of houses.

"The awnar of the brintland, quha hes biggit and reparellit the samyn, sall not be haldin to pay mair of the saidis annuellis respettine than cumis to the residew thair of," &c. Acts Mary, 1555, Ed. 1814, p. 490.

"That tharfore the said Robert sall content & pay—the profit that the said Alex. mycht have had of expens as wil big & reperale the said hous again, alas gude as it was before it was castin downe," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1480, p. 72.

To REPATER, v. n. To feed, to take refreshment.

In the mene quibyle,—al the beistis war
Repererit wele eftir thare nychtis lare.
Doug. Virgil, 248, 29.

Fr. repaître, Lat. repasci.

• To REPEAT, REPETE, v. a. To recover, S.; a sense in which the v. is not used in E.

"The manner how gudes taken away, may be repeated." Acts. Ja. VI., Parl. xi. c. 100, Title, Skene.

"Stollen gudes may be repeted fra the thief." Index. ibid. vo. Thieves.

Fr. repet-er, "to redemand, aske, or call back; also, to return, recover, take, or fetch, back again;" Cotgr. Lat. repet-ere, id.

REPETITION, s. Repayment, restoration.

"Every burgh shall have repetition of the two part of the proportion of excise, furnished by them." Spalding, ii. 142.

"It was provided and agreed that the tocher should return,—and therefore concludes repayment and repetition of the tocher." Fount. Suppl. Dec. ii. 667.

To REPELL, v. a. To recall; like obsolete E. repeal. Fr. rapell-er, id.

—"Nochtwithstanding quhairfo diners pairteis intendis—to move question againis the saidis tenentis and vtheris, and to caus thame be repellit to repay the saides mailles and deweteis," &c. Acts. Ja. VI., 1535, Ed. 1814, p. 379, 380.

REPENDE, part. adj. Scattered, dispersed; or broken loose from the ranks.

Reth hors repende rouschede frekis wndir feit;
The Scottis on fute gart mony loiss the suets.

Wallace, iii. 193, MS.

Fr. repand-re, to scatter or cast abroad; repand-u, dispersed. In Edit. 1648, it is ramping.

To REPLAIT, REPLATE, RESPLATE, v. a. To try a second time.

"Gif ony persone or personis happynis to be convict at the said Justice-court for quhatsumevir crime, gif the said Lord James thinkis thame to be replaitit, and the executioun thairfo to be continewit, [delayed] for the better executioun of justice, that he continew the samyn, and transport, and caus the personis foirsaidis to be transportit to the burgh of Edinburgh, or sik uthir place he pleissis, quhile our Soveranis mynd be knawin thairintill." Q. Mary's Instructions to L. James, 1561, Keith's Hist., p. 200.

"The quhilk day the saids lord and bailyies askit at Alex. Senyr Serjand and Mayr principall of the schir of Rane, gif he hade put the summonds till executioun that was dyrekkyt to hym apoun Andrew Elphinstone of the Seliness, allegit free tenand of the landis of Arillar, and gif the said serjand hade maid summonds apoun the said Andrew to this court peremptour as to the last court of his process resplaitit and continewit fra the ferd court, lik as the actys, summondis, and continuationis maid therapone portis." Chart. Aberdeen, Fol. 153.

This seems to be q. "pleaded anew and delayed;" as formed from Lat. re, and L. B. plait-are, placitum, seu pactum, inire; Du Cange. Fr. replaid-er (or as it must have been written in O. Fr. resplaid-er) Plaider une seconde fois, rentrer en procès. Iterum litigare, litem renovare; Dict. Trev.

To REPLEDGE, REPLEGE, v. a. To recall a person from the jurisdiction of one court to that of another; a forensic term.

"He [Makduff] sall have fre regality to mak officeris within hym, & to replege his men (gif neid beis) fra the kingis lawis to his regality." Bellend. Cron., B. xii. c. 9. "Potestatem quoque habet—ad suos revocandi judices; Boeth.

He, who as superior, repledged one, whom he claimed as his vassal, from another court to his own, left a pledge or surety with that court, that he should do justice to the complainer on the person thus recalled, within year and day. The pledge was called Cutreach, q. v. Quon. Attach., c. 8, s. 4.

L. B. repleg-iare, to redeem any person or thing, upon pledge; from re and pleg-ium. V. Du Cange. E. replevin.

[REPLEDGEAND, part. pr. Repledging, redeeming with a pledge, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 5.]

To REPLEID, v. a. To resist.

This officer but dout is callit Deid;
Is nane his power agane may repleid;
Is nane sa wicht, sa wyse, na of sik wit,
Agane his summond suithly that may sit.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R., l. 45.

L. B. repland-are, repulsare, Du Cange; unless the idea rather be that of pleading again, or legally replying.

[REPLEIT, adj. Full, Lyndsay, The Dreme, l. 580.]

REPLOCH GRAY. V. RAPPLACK.

To REPONE, v. a. 1. To replace, to restore to a situation formerly held; properly, a forensic term. Lat. repon-o.

"It was required, that the ministers of Edinburgh might be reponed to their places." Baillie's Lett., i. 24.

"And reponis, reintegratis, & restoris the said Johne till his honour, heretags, landis, rentis," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1525, Ed. 1814, p. 299.

"Our said vmquhile souerane lord a lytill afor his deceis—relaxit the said Schir Walter furth of ward, and ordanit to repon and restoir him to the samin estate that he was in before the said accusatioun," &c. Acts Mary, 1542, Ed. 1814, p. 414.

2. To reply, Ayrs.; a forensic term, S.

—"To make any answer if it were but to maintain an endles iangling with men who would never be ashamed to repon vnto vs one and the same, a hundredre times, recocted crambe." Forbes's Defence, Ded. A. 3, a.

REPONABILL, adj. Adapted to restore things to a proper bearing.

"Quhen they had socht on all sidis how this mater might be dressit, ane reponabill way was found." Bellenden's T. Liv., [Books i. ch. ix. p. 40.]

REPONE, s. To mak a repon; to give a reply, Ayrs.

To REPORT, v. a. To obtain, to carry off; in the sense of Fr. remport-er or rapport-er, from which it is probably formed.

"Of late the labourers attempted to manure farther within the cuntry than their predecessors were accustomed to do; but they reported small advantage for their pains." Descr. of the Kingdome of Scotlande.

To REPOSE, v. a. The same with Repone.

"Mr. Andrew Logie, who lately had been reposed to his ministry, being cited to answer many slanderous speeches in pulpit, not compearing,—was deposed." Baillie's Lett., i. 333.

To REPOUSS, v. a. To repel, Ayrs.

Fr. repousse-er, id., anciently repouls-er, from Lat. re and puls-are, to beat, to drive back.

To REPREIF, v. a. 1. To disallow, to set aside, to reject; a forensic term.

—"That the saidis provost, chanonis, & chapelains, sall brooke & joyse the said landis & malis tharof, ay & quhil the said lettre be repreift & declarit of na vale. And as for the witnes contenit in the lettre that is summond for the falsing & repreifing of it," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1480, p. 52.

[2. To reprove, to blame, Barbour, v. 84; part. pa. repreuit, reprowyt, xvi. 605.]

[REPREIF, s. Reproof, blame, Ibid. iv. 581.]

This seems altered from Fr. reprouv-er, or Lat. reprob-are, like preis for prove.

To REPreme, v. a. To repress; Lat. reprim-ere.

"Thir vordis of Salomon beand veil considerit, is ane souerane remeid ande salutair medycyn to repreme and distroye the arrogant consait of them that glorifeis & pridis them to be discendit of nobilis and gentil men." Compl. S., p. 242.

REPRISE, s. The indentation of stones in building.

Gilt burneist torris—like to Phebus schone, Skarsment, reprise, corbell and battellings.

Police of Honour, iii. 17.

Fr. reprise de pierres, denting pieces of stone; Cotgr.

[REPROWYT, part. pa. Reproved, blamed, Barbour, ii. 116.

To REPUNG, REPUGNE, v. n. To oppose, to be repugnant; Lat. repugn-are, Fr. repugn-er.

—"Ordaining na pairt of the temporall landis to be disponit, bot in augmentatioun of the rentall, and of all utheris actis of annexatioun and ratificatioun maid repunging thairto." Acts Ja. VI., 1594, Ed. 1814, p. 92.

—"Bot ye repugne to S. Paul, and to the practeise of the vniversal kirk." Nicol Burne, F. 76, b.

[To REQUEIR, v. a. To require, charge, Barbour, xii. 263.]

REQUESED, REQUESIT, adj. Requisite.

"Thay baith being requesed according to your doctrine, the ane being the tane way, the kirk in nawaye can consist." Nicol Burne, F. 115, b.

"The vil thairfore is frie, becaus quhen al thingis request to the operation thairof ar present, it may ceis from vorking gif it pleis him quha sould performe the vark." Ibid., F. 7, b.

RERIT, pret. v. 1. Fell back.

The Sotherou ost bak rerit off that place,
At thai fyrst tuk, v akyr breid and mar.

Wallace, vii. 1191, MS.

Edit. 1648, retired. Fr. arriere, cast or fallen behind, from arriere, backward; or immediately from riere, id. corr. from Lat. retro. Bak rerit is an obvious tautology.

[2. Reared, as horses do, Barbour, xiv. 69. Skeat's Ed.]

[RERWARD, s. Rearguard, Ibid. xi. 340.]

[To RESAIFF, v. a. To receive, Ibid. xiii. 530: pret. and part. pa., resauit, resauyt.]

[RESAUOUR, RESSAUOUR, s. The Receiver-general of the king's rents, an officer of Exchequer, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 46, 57, Dickson.]

RESCHIT, part. pa. A term frequently occurring in the Collect. of Inventories. V. RUSCHIT.

RESCITATIOUN, s. Restoration.

"Neuirtheles being forfaitit, at Strewiling at the last parliament haldin tharein I haue satisfitt our soverane lord, and obtenit his hienes pardone, with rescitatioun to my landis, guidis and houssis." Buik Gen. Kirk, Aug. 11, 1574.

This word might seem to have been formed from re and scire, scit-um; q. to ken again; as somewhat analogous to that used concerning a widow, of kenning her to her terce.

To RESCOURS, v. a. To rescue.

"This man that rescoureit the Kyng wes callit Turnbull, and wes rewardit with riche landis be the kyng." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 10.

O. Fr. rescour-er, L. B. rescuere, to assist.

RESCOURS, s. Rescue, relief in a siege; [O. Fr. rescousse, succour.]

—Gylmyne the Willeris, that than Held the towre, and wes worthy man,
Sawe his wictalis war nere gane,
And hope of the rescours had he nane.

Wyntown, viii. 34, 30. V. the v.

"The gouernour laid ane sege to the castell of Lochindorb, quhare erle David Cumynis wife was for the tyme. This woman knowing her hous mony dayis afore abyll to be segit, send to Kyng Edward, and desirit rescours." Bellend. Cron., B. xv. c. 9.

To RESEAW, RESSAUE, v. a. To receive, Aberd. Reg.

* RESERVE, s. The designation given to a tree reserved in a hag, or cutting of an allotted portion of wood, Clydes. V. WITTER, s. 2.

[RESERWYT, pret. Reserved, kept back or secret, Barbour, i. 132.]

To RESETT, v. a. 1. To receive, harbour, or entertain, S.

"Lykas alsua diuers utheris thair Majesties legeis, in contrare thair duetie, ceissit nocht to resett, harbrye and supply the saids rebellis with meat, ludging, and uthir necessaris, and to intercommoun with thame in treasonabill manner, in manifest wilspending of their Hienesse authoritie and lawis of the realme." Sed^t. Counc., A. 1566. Keith's Hist. App., p. 132.

—"Certifying likewise—all heritors who shall keep any of the said rebels upon their ground, or all others who shall harbour or reset them, that they shall be proceeded against with all the severity that law can allow." Proclamation, A. 1679, Wodrow's Hist., ii. App., p. 34.

2. To receive stolen goods.

"Quha resets theft stollen fra anie man; he salbe esteemed as ane common thief, and salbe punisshed with the like paine." Stat. Alex. ii. c. 21. V. the s.

RESET, RESETT, s. 1. Place of residence, abode.

Bot qwbethir thair caws had or nase,
Ilk man til his reset is gane.

Wynlown, viii. 26. 260.

2. The act of harbouring one who is considered as a public enemy, or exposed to danger.

Than thair gert tak that woman brycht and acheyne,
Accusyt hir sar of reset in that cass:
Fell syne scho snour, that scho knew nocht Wallase.

Wallace, iv. 715, MS.

3. One who affords harbour to another, when exposed to danger from enemies.

Thar duelt a Wallas welcummyt him fall weil;
Thocht Inglist men thar of had littill feile.
Bathe meite and drynk at his will he had thar.
In Laglyne wode, quhen that he made repayr,
This gentill man was full oft his reset;
With staff of houshold strestely he thaim bett.

Wallace, ii. 17, MS.

"That circuit courts of justiciarie be established—yeirlie for tryell and punisching of all theifis, sorneris, robberis, and resets thereof." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, p. 501.

4. "A place of entertainment for money, an inn." For the term is synon. with hostillaris, with which it is conjoined; and hostillaris here undoubtedly signifies, not the innkeepers, but the inns.

"It is ordanit that in all borrow townis of the realme and thoroughfairs quhair commoun passages ar, thair be ordanit hostillaris and resetis, hauand stablis and chalmers." Acts Ja. I., 1424, c. 26, Edit. 1566.

5. The act of receiving goods which one knows to be stolen; a common law-term, S.

"The crime of reset of theft consists either in harbouring the person of the thief after the goods are stolen, or in receiving or disposing of the goods." Erskine's Instit. B. iv. Tit. 4. s. 63.

6. The receiver of stolen goods; improperly used in the vulgar adage, "The reset is as ill as the thief," S. Rudd.

A similar proverb occurs in Su.-G. Haelaren aer ej baette aen staelaren, "the concealer is no better than the thief."

The forensic term is Resetter, q. v.

Mr. Macpherson derives the word, sense 1, from A.-S. seta, inhabitant, saetung, occupation, possession. But it seems merely Fr. recepte, recette, receiving, O.Fr. recept, retraite, demeure; Gl. Rom. de Rose. L.B.

recept-us denoted the obligation of a vassal to receive his lord into his castle, if this was necessary either in warfare or for business; receptum, the right of going to a particular place for food; jus pastus, droit de pste; recipere, pastum praebere; Du Cange. Hence Belg. receptes, the feasts which are given to a newly married pair by their relations.

The forensic sense seems merely secondary; as being a restricted application of a term which is otherwise used with greater latitude.

Resetted occurs in O.E. as equivalent to harboured.

—Gyf eny wolde

Come as to defense, that ner wounded were,
Other wery, as in a castel resetted were thereo.

R. Glouc., p. 214.

[RESETT. Errat. for RESETTIT, part. pa. received, harboured, Barbour, ix. 282.]

RESETER, s. 1. "He who entertains," Rudd.

2. A receiver of stolen goods; a forensic term.

Such as sell goods belonging either to thieves, or to other lawless persons who dare not themselves appear at a public market, may be justly considered, not only as resetters of the goods, if they were stolen, but as concealers of the thieves or other offenders from justice." Erskine's Instit. B. iv. T. 4, s. 63.

RESH, s. A rush.

Mine harness helped me not a resh;
It stinted never but in my flesh.

Sir Egeir, p. 7.

RESIDENTER, s. A dweller, a residentiary, S.

[RESIGNACIOUNE, RESIGNACIONE, s. Resignation, the surrender by a vassal of his lands into the hands of his superior, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 2, 5. Dickson.]

To RESILE, v. n. 1. To draw back, to flinch, S.

"It has been said of me, that I have, in word at least, resiled from my wonted zeal for the Presbyterian Government." Wodrow's Hist., i. 208.

2. To resist the force of, to start back from; applied to argumentation.

Read Duram and Calvin well;
If from their reasons you resile,
I'll count you sots, or that your knaverie
Will lead us back to Roman slavery.

Cleland's Poems, p. 79.

3. As a v. a., to beguile, to deceive, Aysr.

[Fr. resilier, to cancel], Lat. resilire.

RESING, adj. [Racy, capital, great: synon. rousin, rousing, as used by Burns in, "a rousing whid."]

Schir, I complaine of injure;
A resing storie of rakyng Mure
Hes mangillit my making, throw his malise,
And present it into your palise

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 107.

"Raisen? raised?" Pinkerton. - Perhaps a story that makes a great noise, q. has much currency; A.-S. reas-an, Su.-G. res-a, to run.

To RESING, v. a. To resign, -Aberd. Reg.

"The said James—causit the forsaidis pretendit—assignais to renunce the said pretendit, fenyeit & simulate assignatiounes, & resing the samin in his hienes handis," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1539, Ed. 1814, p. 254.

[RESISTERIS, s. pl. Resisters, foes. Barbour, xviii. 214.]

RESITIT, part. pa. Cited a second time, q. re-cited.

"Nocht expremand—gif thai war segit be him or his army, & resitit be the saidis personis, and thai inobedient tharintill." Acts Mary, 1542, Ed. 1814, p. 417.

[To RESKEW, v. a. To rescue, Barbour, iii. 81; part. pa. reskewyt, Ibid. x. 728.]

[RESKEWING, RESKOWISS, s. Rescue, succour, Ibid. v. 419, xvii. 901.]

* To RESOLVE, v. n. To terminate.

"The king in his great wisdom—prevented the same, by affording them a treaty, which, upon the fifth of November, 1595, resolved in peace." Guthry's Mem., p. 5.

RESP, RISp, s. A kind of coarse grass, S. GL Sibb.

To RESP, RISp, v. n. To make a noise resembling that of a file, S.

Swannis souchis threw out the respend redis,
Ouer all the lochis and the fluidis gray.

Doug. Virgil, 401, 47.

Or than the bustous swyne fed wele, that bredis
Among the buskis rank of risp and redis,
Beside the laik of Laurent mony yeris.

Ibid., 344, 42.

Rudd. views both these as the part. pr. Sibb. says, that he "mistakes the meaning entirely;" as he thinks that resp, risp is the s. But, in none of the passages, is the pl. used; which would certainly have been the case, as corresponding to redis. The evidence of the MSS. is rather against this being the v. Ruthven MS., in the first passage, has rispy; Elphinstoun MS. resp and; in passage second, Ruthv. MS. risp and, in Elph. MS. rysp and.

This, at any rate, can only be a secondary use of the v. as signifying to rasp. V. RISp.

* RESPECT, RESPETE, RESPUTT, s. A respite, or prorogation of punishment, or of prosecution for crimes committed or imputed.

—"Orlanis respectis to be maid & gevin to the erlis of Anguss, Ergile and Levinax, Glencarne, lord Maxwell, thar kyne, frendis men, tenentis, & seruandis, and vtheris thar part takaris—for all manere of crynnis, tresounes in our souerane lordis persounes alanerly except.—The said respectis to haue na place fra thinfurth bot for actionnis committit before the dait tharof." Acts Ja. V., 1526, Ed. 1814, p. 307.

—"Bath the partijs beand personally present, the said Adam allegand to be vnder resputt be a lertre vnder the priue sele of our souerane lordis gevin to the bishop of Abberdene—the lordis auditoris—differis the mater concernyng the said Adam to the said resputt." Act. Audit., A. 1474, p. 41.

L. B. respect-us, respect-um, mora, dies dilatus, prorogatio dici, Gallis respit—Respeyt-us, eadem notione. —Respect-are, differre, respectum seu moram dare. Du Cange. It occurs in this sense in the Capitularia, A. 819. Deinde detur ei spatium ad respectum ad septem noctes.

VOL. IV.

[RESPIT, s. Respite, delay, Barbour, viii. 344. O. Fr. respit.]

* RESPECTS, s. Interest, emolument, advantage.

"He now begins to turr the slates off, and carries them down to the college for his own respects." Spalding, ii. 282.

RESPOND, s. The return that is made by a precept from Chancery, on an application for a seisin.

"Hope—seems to insinuate the reason why they are so abridged, because the sheriff must be answerable for the respond contained in these precepts." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iii. 109.

RESPONDIE, s. The duplicate of an accompt. Perhaps the modern term check is synon.

"To call for payment and compt of all respondies and debts addebted—to the publike:—to call for inspection of the registers—of all other committees, to the effect that all respondies may be exactly extracted forth thereof," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, VI. 180. Fr. respond-re, to match, agree with.

RESPONDIE-BOOK, s. A check-book.

"That the clerk—appointed by the Clerk-Register—shall have the keeping of the respondie-books, and of all the accompts," &c. Ibid., 181.

RESPONSALL, adj. Responsible, Acts Parl. pass.

"They fill up their letters with sic responsal mens names as they tried out;—both burgh and land who was responsal were charged." Spalding, ii. 222.

RESPONSIOUNE, s. Suretyship.

"That Vmfra Culquhounne of that ilk—sall freith & releif Trestrame of Gorty of that ilk, of the soume of vj^l a pund, of the responsiounne of the said Trestramys landis, aucht to our souerain lorde, the tyme the said landis war in our souerain lordis handis in default of entre of the are," Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1480, p. 50.

Fr. responsion, id. L. B. responsio, sponsio, fidejussio; Gall. caution. Du Cange.

"It is incumbent to these quho ar called to the lowest places of judicatorie to resent the weight of that charge and fitt themselves accordingly for it." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 366.

Fr. se ressant-ir, to feel thoroughly.

To RESSOURSS, RESURSE, v. n. To rise again; Resourss, rose again.

*Zepherus began his morow couras,
The swete wapour thus fra the ground resourss;
The humyll breyth down fra the hewyn awall,
In every meide, bathe fyrrth, forrest and daill.*
Wallace, viii. 1185, MS.

—Resurayng vp hie in the are.

Doug. Virgil, 297, 26.

Fr. ressour-re; whence resource, rising again; from Lat. resurg-ere. In O.Fr. indeed, resurrexi occurs as an adj. synon. with resuscité; Dict. Trev.

RESSUM, s. A small fragment, There's no a ressum to the fore, S.B.

A.-S. reasan, a beam, or Su.-G. ris, a twig? The phrase may have been borrowed from a ruined house, of which there was not a beam or wattle left standing.

To REST, v. a. 1. To be indebted to one. What am I restand you? How much do I owe you? S.

It is to be observed, however, that our term is properly elliptical; the full phrase being, to rest awing, i.e., to remain owing.

—“We charge yow—to raise, uplift and inbring—the tent penny of all the saidis casualiteis restand awing to thaim of termis bygane,” &c. Chartul. Aberd., Fol. 140.

Properly, the prep. to is subjoined.

“Our said sovereign Lord—ordainis that the said John, now Erie of Gowrie, sall nawayis be callit, persew-it, chargit, or burdenit with the payment of quhat-samever his said umquhill father's dettis, quhair of he took allowance in ony of his compts of thesaurarie, for the space of ane yir next to cum after the dait hereof, that in the meintyme his Hienes may see the said Erie satisfieit of the saidis super-expenses, restane be his Majestie to his said umquhill father.” Act Sederunt, 20th June 1600.

Fr. être en reste, to be in arrears; a financial phrase. Hence,

[2. To arrest, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 302, Dickson.]

REST, s. 1. Remainder, remnant, balance due.

“Item, a rest of blak satine contening xxvii ellis and a half.—Item, twa restis of gray damis contening xvii ellis and three quarters.” Inventories, A. 1561, p. 127.

Fr. reste, residue, remnant, &c.

2. An arrest; Aberd. Reg. V. REIST.

I know not if it be in this sense that we should understand the phrase, “Brakin the rest of the knob,” ibid.

RESTES, RESTIS, RESTS, s. pl. 1. Remains, relics.

“It's a town of Roman antiquity, of which there are yet some rests to be seen, as aqueducts, &c.” Sir A. Balfour's Letters, p. 54. “Here are some rests of Roman antiquity, as of an amphitheatre, &c.” Ibid., p. 72.

2. Arrears.

The Fr. term is used in pl. in a similar senses Profitez du temps, tandis vous avez encore quelque.

restes de jeunesse & de beauté. St. Evrem. Dict. Trev.

“The three Estaites of Parliament decernis and ordainis letters to be direct, to require the Ordinaries to give their letters upon all Prelates, to cause payment be maid of all restes, awin be them to the seate of the Session, of all termes by-gane.” Acts Mar. 1543, c. 2, Murray.

REST. Auld rest, probably old sprain.

—The painful Poplesie, and Pest,
The Rot, the Roup, and the auld Rest—

Watson's Coll., iii. 14.

V. FEYK.

A sprain is often called a wrest, wrist, or rest, S. A.-S. wraest-an, to distort.

RESTING CHAIR. A long chair shaped like a sofa, used in farm-houses, Ang. Perth.

RESTORANS, RESTORANCE, s. Restoration.

—“That lettrez be writtin to distrenye thaim, thair landis & gudis, for the restorans of the samyn.” Act. Audit., A. 1471, p. 18.

“My said lord Governour deliuerit to thaim the sceptour & batoun in parliament in signe & takin of thair restorance.” Acts Mary, 1542, Ed. 1814, p. 417.

[RESTRINGITYVE, adj. Astringent, Lyndsay, Papyngo, l. 737.]

To RESTYN, v. a. To refresh.

There is na land mare likand to myne entent,
Nor quhare me list so weil, and profitabil
Our wery folkis to restyn and estabill.

Doug. Virgil, 123, 13.

Rudd. views this as a s. But it is evidently the v., used in that form which seems to have been borrowed from the A.-S. Thus sayne occurs from say, sene for see, &c.

To RETEIR, v. n. To retire.

—“Quhome the estaitis of parliament ordanit to reteir to thair lugeingis, thare to remane quhill the morne at aucht houris, and than to compeir befor the kingis maiestie and lordis of articlis, to ansuer to the said summondis.” Acts. Ja. VI., 1584, Ed. 1814, p. 333.

[RETENEW, s. Retinue, Barbour. xv. 429.]

To RETENT, v. a. To cause to resound.

Their Pagans fell, with clamor huge to hear,
Made such a dinne as made the heaven resound,
Retented hell, and tore the fixed ground.

Hudson's Judith, p. 33.

Fr. retent-ir, to resound, to ring again.

RETH, adj. Fierce, unruly.

The Ingliss men thocht thar chyftayn was slayne;
Bauldly thair baid, as men mekill off mayn,
Reth horsis repende rouschede frekif wndir feit;
The Scottis on fute gert mony loiss the suete.

Wallace, iii. 193, MS.

A.-S. rethe, fierce, savage. Some early Editor, not understanding the language, has rendered it, as in Edit. 1643,

Rich horse ramping rushed frekes under feet.
In Edit. Perth, by mistake rech. V. REPENDE.

RETHNAS, s. Ferocity, cruelty.

Thir ar no foulis of ref, nor of rethnas,
Bot mansuete, but malice, mandrit and meke.
Houlate, l. 19, MS.

Mr. Pinkerton renders this prey. But although this idea is necessarily implied, it is previously expressed in ref. A-S. rethnes, rethnesse, ferocitas, saevitia.

To RETOUR, RETOWRE, v. a. 1. To make a return in writing; a forensic term, used with respect to the service of an heir, S.

"It is the maist necessar, common & profitable brieue or inquisition that is vsed be the lieges of this realme, quhairby ane desiris to be served and retoured, as narrest & lauchful air to his father or vther predicessour." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Breve de morte antecessoris.

2. To make a legal return as to the value of lands, S.

"Thair lands are so high retoured, that a fortymerk-land with us will not pay so much rent as a two-merk land elsewhere." Baillie's Lett., i. 370.

3. To return.

—And swa he
Wyth honowre and wyth honeste
Retowryd syne in his land hame.
Wytoun, ix. 11. 99.

RETOUR, RETOURE, s. 1. Return, in a general sense.

—Nor yit ane victour with prosperité
Vnto thy faderis ciété hane retoure.
Doug. Virgil, 361, 7.

2. The legal return that was made to a brief, emitted from chancery.

"There is twa kindis of retoures or answers, maid be the persons of inquest, to this brieue, and retoured to the Chancellarie: the ane is generall, and the vther speciall." Skene, Verb. Sign. ut sup.

3. The legal return made as to the value of lands, S.

"—The common burdenns were laid on, not according to the retour or merk-land, but the valuation of the rents." Baillie's Lett., i. 370.

The word is not only retained in courts of law, but in vulgar language. A retour-chaise, is one returning from the stage to which it has been hired, S.

The term is used in the laws of France, with respect to inheritance, although in a different sense. On apelle, retour de partage, ce qu'on ajouté au lot d'un des coheritiers, pour suppléer ce qui lui appartient de droit. Dict. Trev.

[4. A great amount, Banff.]

To RETREAT, RETRAIT, v. a. To recall, to retract.

"And als thair wes mony of the byschoppis quhilkis wer conuenit in this wickit conuentioun, quha retraitit thair awin deliberatioun, quhilk wes neur done be the generale consailis dewlie conuenit." Kennedy of Croseraguell, Compend. Tractiue, p. 78.

Fr. retract-er, Lat. retract-are.

RETRETT, part. pa. Retracted, repealed, reversed; [retraitit, Lyndsay, Exper. and Courteour, l. 5771.]

"The lordis abone writtun—tuk the mater one thaim, nochtwithstanding that the said James wes nocht callit to hear the said act retrett." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1490, p. 194.

RETROTRACTION, s. The act of drawing back.

"A retrotraction of the real right to the inhibition and fiction, supposing them both of one date, is a motion that surely no lawyer can be guilty of." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iii. 79.

[RETTICK, s. Same as REBBICK, q. v.]

REUAR, REVAR, s. River.

"That quhamsumever schuit—Dow, Herron, or foule of the reuer within this realme, sall foirfault and tyne thair hail mouabill gudis," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 26; i.e., water-fowl. Riuer, Ed. 1566.

[To REUE, REVE, v. a. 1. To rend, to tear; to rob: part. pa. reuin, torn, rent, Lyndsay, The Dreime, l. 209.]

REUER, REVER, RYVIR, s. A robber, a pirate. V. REYFFAR.

REUERÉ, REVERIE, REURY, s. Robbery.

Wallace was ner; quhen he sic reueré saw,
He spak to thaim with manly contenance,
In fayr afformie, he said, but wariance;
"Ye do ws wrang, and it in tyme of peas Off sic rubry war suffisance to cesa."
Wallace, iv. 40.

Reury, Ed. Perth.

REUERY, REVERIE, s. 1. Noise, uproar.

The women routtis baldly to assay,
Wyth felloun brute, grete reury, and dera, y
Furth haldis samyn on the feildis sone.
Doug. Virgil, 388, 13.

2. It is used to denote the crackling noise made by flames.

Than he that set the kendlyng glaid and gay,
Behaldis how that the low dois make dera, y
Blesand and crakand with ane nyse reury.
Ibid., 330, 52.

[3. An idle report, a fama, Banffs.]

"From Fr. reuerie, idle talking, raving, vain fancy;" Rudd.

To REUEST, REWESS, RAWESS, v. a. 1. To clothe.

Tisiphone that furious monstoure wilde,
In bludy cape reuestit and ouer sylle,
Sittis kepanl but slepe bayth nycht and day
That sory entré and this porche alway.
Doug. Virgil, 183, 40.

2. To clothe anew; metaph.

—The cornis croppis, and the bere new berde
Wyth gladesum garment reuesting the erl.
Ibid., 400, 28.

Fr. revest-ir, id. literally, to clothe again, to resume one's clothes. It seems especially to have denoted throwing off one's ordinary garments, when one was about to appear in the distinctive badges of office, or of ceremony; thus applied to the putting on of the royal, pontifical, or sacerdotal dress. Our good Bishop, in the first passage, seems to have borrowed his phraseology from the ecclesiastical customs in his own time. A cette procession tout le Clergé étoit revêtu de chappes. Dict. Trev.

In this very sense the term, a little disguised, is used by Blind Harry—

In to the kyrk he gert a preyst revest;
With humyll mynd, rycht mekly, harl a mess.
Wallace, vi. 870, MS.

Maister Jhon Blar was redy to raue,
In gude entent syne bownyt to the mess.
Ibid., viii. 1194, MS.

[REUIN, part. pa. Rent, torn, Lyndsay,
The Dreame, l. 209.]

[REULIT, part. pa. Ruled, arranged,
Lyndsay, Squyer Meldrum, l. 1742.]

To REUNDE, ROOND, v. n. "To grind; to produce a disagreeable noise as by grinding," GL Sibb.; Roxb.

This must be the same word that is pron. Ruint,
Berwick, q. v.

As far as I can learn, Reunde does not properly signify to grind, but is used to express the monotonous sound produced by grinding, or any noise of a similar kind.

REUOLE, v. a. To examine, to inspect.

"To reoull & seik the buikis gif it be contentit tharin."
Aberd. Reg., V. 21.

REURY, s. Robbery. V. REUER.

With relaving and revay, all the oulk hale.
Gawan and Goll., iv. 27.

O. Fr. reviaux, fetes, divertisements; Roquefort.

REVE, s. [A greyish colour.]

His gloves, his gamesons, glowd as a glede;
With graynes of reve that graied ben gay.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., ii. 5.

Reve seems to denote that middle colour between yellow and grey, which the Latins called rao-us; Su.-G.
rapp, id. Graynes of reve, are dye-stuffs of this colour.
Graied may signify, made grey.

[To REVE, v. a. To rend, tear, rob. V.
REUE.]

[REVERIE, s. Robbery. V. REUER.]

REVEL, s. A severe blow; often applied to a back stroke, Ang. Loth.

Fr. revell-er, to rouse, to awake; q. a stroke that rouses one from lethargy?

[REVELING, REWELING, s. Revelation,
Barbour, x. 738.]

REVERENCE, s. Power, S.

"—Sin hath put you in the courtesy and reverence of justice." Rutherford's Lett., P. ii. ep. 34.

"By the law of England, the king can do no wrong.
—But to put wrong out of his reverence, they do not allow him a power either to judge alone, or to execute the law alone," &c. Fount. Dec. Suppl., iii. 128.

In this sense it is commonly said of one whom another cannot trust, "I wadna put my sell sae muckle in his reverence," S.

[To REVERIE, v. n. To spread idle reports,

REVERS, s. pl. [Rovers, distant objects in motion; a term in archery.]

—Synne marrowis mix
Do schute at buttis, bankis and brais,
Sum at the revers, sum at the prikkis.

Scott, Evergreen, ii. 189, MS.

"The rovers at which the archers shott;" Ramsay.
But at rovers, E. is expl. by Dr. Johns. "without any particular aim." According to this interpretation, the phrase would mean, at random, as opposed to shooting at a mark. But to shoot at rovers, does not signify, to shoot without taking aim, but to shoot at a distant object, in which case allowance is made for the elliptical motion of the arrow; as opposed to butt- shooting, in which, from the shortness of the distance, the arrow flies horizontally.

To REVERSE, REUERSE, v. a. [To reverse, to turn over. Fr. renverser.]

The Rychmound borne down thar was:
On him arestyt the Douglas,
And him reversyt, and with a knyff
Rycht in that place reft him the lyff.

Barbour, xvi. 417.

And him reversit with a knife. Edit. 1620.

REVERSER, s. A forensic term, denoting a proprietor, who has given his lands in wadset, but retains a right to redeem them,

REVERSION, s. The right of redeeming property under wadset, S.

"The debtor who receives the money, and grants the wadset, is called the reverser, because he is entitled

[To REVEST, v. a. To clothe, to change
vestments. V. REUEST.]

REVESTRE', REVESTRIE, REUESTRIE, s. 1.
The vestry of a church.

"The kirk of Borthnik being ruinous, and that part thair of callit the Revestrie being decayit,—the Ministers of the Exercise of Dalkeith—fand the best mane for reparing of the said kirk and vphalding of the said
Revestrie, to be the dispositioun of the same Revestrie

[To REWELE, REWELL, v. a. To reveal, discover, pret. rewellyt.]

Gud Wallace than that stoutly couth thaim ster,
Befor thaim raid in till his armour cler,
Rewellyt speris all in a nowmyr round.
Wallace, x. 279, MS.

This is the word in MS., instead of rewellyt, Perth Ed., and seems to signify, "they discovered, shewed, or revealed, their spears at all points, in a circular form."

REWELL, s. A piece of armour for defence of the arm-hole.

The Schipman seys, "Rycht weill ye may him ken,
Throu graith takynys, full clerly by his men.
His cot armour is seyn in mony steid,
Ay battaill boun, and rewell ay off reid.

Wallace, ix. 106, MS.

Fr. rouelle, "a round plate of armour, for defence of the arme-hole, when the arme is lifted up;" Cotgr. Early editors have stupidly rendered this rayment.

[REWELLYT, pret. V. REWELE.]

REWELYNYS, ROWLYNGIS, RILLINGS, RULYIONS, RULLIONS, s. pl. Shoes made of undressed hides, with the hair on them; S. rullions.

Rulyons, Edit. 1648.

Thure left fute and al thare leg was bare,
Ane rouch rilling of raw hyde and of hare
The tothir fute conerit wele and knyt.

Doug. Virgil, 233, 2.

This is the word used for translating crudus pero, Virg., vii. 790. From the passage it appears that the inhabitants of ancient Latium, or at least of the district now called Campania, wore shoes of untanned leather, or what we call rullions. Servius observes, that this is a rustic shoe, which they borrowed from the Greeks, from whom they sprung.

"After the Scots were dislodged [from Stanhope-park, A. 1327, or 1328], some of the English went to view their camp, partly to see their customes and manner of living, and what provisions they had, partly to seek some spoil. When they were come there, they found only five hundreth carcasses of red and fallow deare, a thousand paire of Highland shoues called rullions, made of raw and untanned leather, three hundreth hides of beasts set on stakes, which served for caldrons to seethe their meat." Hume's Hist., Douglas, p. 45.

The term, because of the meanness of the dress, is used as a reproachful designation for a Scottish man, in Minot's Banocburn.

Rughfute ririling, now kindels thi care,
Bere-bag, with thi boste, thi biging is bare;
Fals wretche and forsworn, whider wiltou fare?

Poems, p. 7.

This is very near the S. phrase, rouch rullion, applied to this kind of shoe. Warton renders biging, clothing. But it certainly means dwelling-house. Minot, that his satire might be more severe, seems to have made himself acquainted with some S. terms. The designation bere-bag, refers to a bag for carrying barley meal, commonly called bere-meal, which constitutes a considerable part of the food of many of our country-men to this day. The idea seems to be, that the Scots had left both their houses and their girnels empty, in order to supply themselves with meal, while they were on the field. Every man, according to our ancient statutes, when summoned to attend the King, was bound to bring forty days provision with him.

It is certainly the same word, which occurs in a very coarse passage, applied to the Scots during the usurpation of Edw. I., although by Hearne, without any respect to the sense, expl. "turning in and out, wriggling."

Thou scabbed Scotts, thi nek thi hotte, the denelle it breke,
It salle be hard to here Edward, ageyn the speke.
He salle the ken, our lond to bren, & werre
bigynne,
Thou getes no thing, bot thi rivellyng, to hang ther inne.

R. Brunne, p. 232.

It seems doubtful if R. Brunne himself understood the term. For he uses it, as if it signified a rope, or something by which one might be hung.

In Dunbar's time, the use of the rilling seems to have been confined to those who were viewed as Highlanders. Hence he thus addresses Kennedy—

Erack Katherine with thy polk, breik and rilling.
Evergreen, ii. 55.

He applies it as a term of reproach, nearly in the same manner as Minot had done before him. For he calls Kennedy, Ruck-rilling, Ibid., p. 60. This is certainly equivalent to rack rilling, and perhaps should have been thus printed.

Mr. Macpherson gives no conjecture as to the origin. Rudd. views it as perhaps derived from raw, q. rawlings; Sibb., q. rollings, as "originally they might be only broad thongs or stripes of raw hide rolled about the feet; or as possibly a corr. of Fr. poulaines, i.e., souliers a poulaine, a kind of rude sandals made of horse leather, from poulaine, a colt."

Mr. Tooke, having quoted the passage in Douglas, derives rilling, from A.-S. wrig-an, as being "that with which the feet are covered." Divers. Purley, ii. 232.

But the term is A.-S. rifling, obstrigillus; rifelings, obstrigilli; Aelfric. Gl. Isidore thus defines obstrigilli; Qui per plantas consuti sunt, et ex superiore parte corrigia trahitur, ut constringantur; p. 1310.

In the passage quoted, the various changes of the term may be traced. Minot writes riveling, which is most nearly allied to the A.-S.; and a shoe of this kind is to this day called a rivelin in Orkney. Rewellyng is only a different mode of pronunciation; hence revellyng, rullion. Rilling is rifling softened by the substitution of l for f.

But whence, may it be said, is the A.-S. word? This is not so easy to determine. But probably it has been formed from Moes.-G. A.-S. rih, hirsutus, and fel, pellis, q. rough, or hairy, skin or hide. The Gael. name, according to Shaw, is cuaroga.

The Rivilings, worn in Orkney, are made not only of cow-hides, but of seal-skins, untanned and undressed.

It is a singular fact, that the ancient Goths wore shoes of this kind. Apollinaris Sidonius, describing their dress, expresses himself thus: "They are shod with high shoes made of hair, and reaching up to their ancles." V. Anc. Univ. Hist., xix. 268. He undoubtedly means, that their shoes were made of leather with the hair on it; unless we shall suppose that he had only seen the shoes on their feet, and concluded from their appearance that they were actually made of hair.

To REWL, REWLL, v. a. 1. To rule, reign, govern, Barbour, viii. 127, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 414.

2. To rule, to line, to set square or true, S.]

[REWLIS, s. pl. Rules, Lyndsay, Syde Taillis, l. 59.]

REWLL RYCHT, adv. Exactly square; q. according to rule.

The pepill beryt lik wyld bestis in that tyd,
Within the wallis rampand on athir sid,
Reumyd in reuth with mony grysly grayne.

Wallace, vii. 459, MS.

This is radically the same with Rame; and evidently the origin of Rummys, q. v. Reumyd, indeed, has been changed to rumisht, Edit. 1648 and 1673. V. RAME. O. Fr. ruim-er, rugit.

REWMOUR, s. Tumult, clamour.

Rewmour rais with cairfull cry and keyne.

The bryme fyr brynt rycht braithly apon loft :
Till slepand men that walkand was not soft.

Wallace, vii. 438, MS.

This is evidently quite different from E. rumour; as being the same with Germ. rumor, tumult, and nearly allied to Isl. romur, applause, as denoting the noise made in expressing it.

REWME, s. Realm; O. Fr. reaume.

He wes never worth, na all hys kyn,
The fredwine fra that reume to wyn.

Wyntown, viii., 3. 140.

It is used by Wiclif.

"And if a reume be departid agens it self : thilke reume may not stonde." Mark iii.

[REYCH, s. Stretch, inclosure; also, the bar or boundary of a river or harbour, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 290, Dickson. Allied to raik, reyke, to range, q. v.

This term was applied generally "to a part of a river or of the sea enclosed to form a harbour or landing-place for small vessels. In the text it appears to refer to the harbour of Leith, to which the word is known to have been applied. The form ree is in use in the west of Scotland." Gloss. Dickson.]

REYD, s. A road for ships. "Port, hevin, or reyg;" Aberd. Reg., V. 24. Teut. reede, statio navium. V. RADE.

REYFFAR, REFFAYR, s. A robber, one who lives by plundering on land or sea. Wallace, vi. 378, ix. 87.

REYFLAKE, RIUELAK, REYFLAKE, s. Rapine; a term which occurs in the Assisa Willelmi, cap. 29, Act. Parl., Vol. I.

A.-S. reafiac, "praeda, rapina, raptus, furtum; a prey, a booty, rapine, robbery. Belgis rooveriis; forrenai nostratium latinitate, roberia;" Somner.

Reaf signifies rapax. But perhaps reafiac is rather from reaf, rapina, and lac, munus, oblatio; q. a gift or offering, or perhaps a share of what has been seized by violence. Or, might we suppose that the term had been originally applied to that raiment which had been made a booty, from lach, chlamys?

[REYK, s. Smoke, vapour, Barbour, iv. 124. V. REIK.]

[To REYKE, v. n. To range. V. RAIK.]

RHAIM, RHAME, s. 1. A common-place speech, Ettr. For.

This may be the same with Rame, s., as allied to Isl. reim-r, sonorus, Areim-a, resonare, A.-S. hrein-an, clamare. It may, however, be merely a corr. of E. rhyme, as proverbs were anciently expressed in a sort of rhythm. V. Mr. Todd's valuable note, vo. Rhyme, E. Dict.

2. A rhapsody, S. A.

"The poet can bring out naething but rhames o' high-flown nonsense." Perils of Man, i. 244.

RHIND MART. A whole carcass from the herd, a mart of cow or ox beef.

"I was long puzzled to find the meaning of a word often made use of in the reddendo of charters in the North country, a Rhind Mart. The word Mart I understand to be something payable at Martinmas; but the meaning of rhind I could not find, until it was explained to me by a person conversant in the German language, from whom I learned that this word was made use of in Germany for horned cattle, such as cows or oxen." Russell's Conveyancing, Pref. viii.

It is undoubtedly the same term, which occurs in our Chartularies, contracted.

—Una cum Rynmart Wedyr et Caponibus, aliisque oneribus et omnibus et singulis husbandorum de tanta terra debitis, &c. Chartul. Aberbroth. Fol. 89; Macfarl. p. 297; also twice in p. 299; in one instance with the variation of Wethyr. Here the n is marked above. In some places it is written Rynmart as in Fol. 131.

It may be observed, that the distinction, apparent in the Germ. phrase is evidently retained here. Rynmart, a mart from the herd; wedyr, a wedder, or mart from the flock.

Alem. rindrinca, in the genitive, is rendered carnis bubulcae; in the genit. pl. rindiro; Zureya jochi rindiro, bigam boum, a yoke of oxen; Schilter.

But Germ. rind, which must be the word referred to, has no relation to horns. It simply signifies an ox or cow: rinder, pl. "neat cattle, great cattle." Hence the distinction rinder und schafe, great and small cattle, or neat and sheep. Kilian says, that Teut. rind properly means, bos in masculino genere; and rind-bleesch, caro bubula. Wachter derives the term from renn-en, coire, as applicable both to male and female. Thus a rind mart seems properly to signify, a mart from the herd, as opposed to one from the flock, beef as distinguished from mutton, &c. Hence most probably E. runt, although now restricted in its signification; being applied to "an animal below the natural growth of the kind;" Johns.

Isl. rind is used in the same sense as the Germ. word; bos, vitula, G. Andr. This author indeed says that it is of Germ. origin; adding, that it is an ancient name of a woman in the Edda, being that of the daughter of a king of Livonia, the concubine of Odin.

* RHYME, s. A proverb, hence authority, i.e., the authority of experience; as, "Ye've neither rhyme nor reason for that." "It was done without rhyme or reason," West of S. V. RHAIM.]

[RHYMELESS, adj. Unreasonable, Banffs.]

RHYNE, s. "Hoar-frost;" Gall. Encycl. Commonly rhyme.

All the other dialects, as far as I can observe, have m as the antepenult. The term appears in its most original form in C. B. rheo, Arm. rev, id. Gael. reo, frost; as formed from, or giving birth to, C. B. rheo-i, Armor. rheo-a, Gael. reoth-am, to freeze.

RIACH, adj. Dun, ill-coloured, S. B.

"I had nae mair claise but a spraing'd faikie, or a riach plaidie." Journal from London, p. 8. V. RAUCHAN.

RIAL, RYALL, REAL, s. 1. The name given to a gold coin current in S.

"The ryall of France sall haue cours for vi s. viii d." Acts Ja. I., A. 1551, c. 34, Ed. 1566.

"Item, in rialis of France fyfty & four." Inventories, p. 1.

This word is also written real.

"Reals and Sovereigns were so called from the picture of the king, or from other symbols of sovereignty." Ruddiman's Introd., p. 132.

The term rial, corresponds with L. B. regalis. This, however, appears as an ellipsis. For Du Cange informs us, that, under Philip VI. of France, the Florini Regales Aurei (Florins Royaux d'or) were ordered to have currency for 26 sols of Paris. These Floreni Regales, he says, are "the same that were afterwards denominated merely Regules" or Rials. Vo. Monet., col. 914. Under Philip IV., A. 1293, they had been designed Grossi Regales auri, or "Royal Groats of gold." Ibid., col. 991. They had rials of different descriptions; Regales parri puri et examinati, or "small royals of fine gold," A. 1305; Regales duri, double the weight of the small rials, but containing more alloy, A. 1310; Regales duplices auri puri, A. 1325, which were also denominated Denarii auri puri, or "Pennies of fine gold."

2. The term Ryall was also applied to some silver coins of S., in conjunction with the name of the prince. V. Mary Ryall, James Ryall.

RIAL, RIALL, RIALLE, adj. Royal. V. RYBEES.

It is used sometimes substantively.

There come in a soteler, with a symballe,
A lady, lufsom of lete, leiland a knight;
He raykes up in a res bifor the rialle.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., li. 1.

RIALTE, RYALTIE, REALTEY, ROYALTY, s. 1.
Territory immediately under the jurisdiction of the king; as distinguished from that to which the privileges of a regality were annexed.

Ande gif he happynis to fle in the regalite oute of the rialte, the schiref sal certify the lord of the regalite, or his steward or balye, the quhilk sal persew the trespassour in lik maner as the schiref sal as is beforesaid." Parl. Ja. I., A. 1432, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 21. Ryaltie, Ed. 1566, fol. 13, b. c. 100.

In this act the term rialte, is used as equivalent to schirrefdom, the latter denoting that territory in which the king was viewed as presiding by his deputy.

"And this act to be executte and fulfillt be the offisaris of the lordis of regalyteys vyth in the realme, vyth help and supple of the lordis of the realteys geyff neyd be." Ibid., A. 1438, p. 32, c. 2.

"Royal palaces, though locally situated in boroughs of regality, were adjudged to be no part of the regality, but of the royalty, because they belonged not to the lord of the regality, but to the king.—Lands subject to the sheriff's jurisdiction are said to be of the royalty, because sheriff-courts are in the most proper king's courts, established by him for the regular and ordinary administration of justice in every county; in opposition to lands subject to the special and extraordinary jurisdiction of regality." Ersk. Inst., B. i. t. 4, § 7.

RIBBING, s. A slight ploughing.

"The dung is then spread, and the ground gets a kind of ribbing, and directly after that the seed furrow." P. Lealy, Fife Statist. Acc., viii. 513.

RIB-PLOUGHING, s. A kind of half ploughing performed by throwing the earth turned over by the plough upon an equal quantity of surface which remains undisturbed, S. B.

"They [faughs] are broke [r. broken] up from grass, by what is called a rib-ploughing, about mid-summer, one part of the sward being turned by the plough upon the surface of an equal portion of that which is not raised, so as to be covered with the furrow." Agr. Surv. Aberd., p. 233.

Barbour, l. 336. 341, MS.

From the connexion, it might seem synon. with folly. But I suspect that the sense is still stronger; that it signifies debauchery, profligacy of the lowest kind; corresponding to O. Fr. ribaudie, used by J. de Meun in this sense.

Apres garde que tu ne dies
Ces laismes et ces ribaudies.

Rom. de Rose.

RIBBAND. St. Johnston's ribband, a halter, a rope for hanging one as a criminal, S.

Hence of St. Johnston's ribband came the word,
In such a frequent use, when with a cord
They threaten rogues; though now all in contempt
They speak, yet brave and resolute attempt.

Muse's Threnodie, p. 119.

This phrase, according to Adamson, had an honourable origin. The inhabitants of Perth, also called St. John's Town, at the beginning of the reformation, finding that the Queen Regent and the Popish Clergy were determined to keep no faith with them, three hundred, whom he compares to the Spartans under Leonidas, devoted themselves for the preservation of their religion and liberty. He thus describes their engagement—

Such were these men who for religion's sake,
A cord of hemp about their necks did take,
Solemnly sworn, to yield their lives thereby,
Or they the gospel's verities deny:
Quitting their houses, goods and pleasures all,
Resolv'd for any hazard might befall,
Did passe forth of the towne in armes to fight,
And die, or they their libertie and light
Should lose, and whosoever should presume
To turn away, that cord should be his doome.

The phrase, St. Johnston's Tippet is used in the same sense, S.

"I doubt I'll hae to tak the hills wi' the wild whigs, as they ca' them, and then it will be my lot to be shot down like a makin at some dyke-side, or to be sent to heaven wi' a Saint Johnston's Tippet about my hause." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 158.

2. Lank, or tall and thin; applied to animals, Peebles; Reibie, Ettr. For., like Gr. n.

As used in this sense, it might apparently claim affinity with Isl. ribba, a meagre sheep: Ovis macilentus, eminentibus costis. This might seem to be from the ribe appearing. But rif is the Isl. word for a rib.

It may, however, be allied to C. B. rhib, what is thinly laid in a row or streak, rhib-iaw, to place in a scanty row.

This seems corr. from ribibe or rebeke, both of which denoted a sort of violin. Fr. reber, Arm. rebet, id. rebet-er, to play on the violin. Both these words came also to be used, although for what reason is unknown, as contemptuous terms for an old woman. In this sense is ribibe used by Chaucer.

V. GUD, adj. sense 3.

4. True, real, not nominal. "Of the rychtous tynd of Abirdyne;" Reg. Aberd. XV. 619.

A.-S. rihtwis, Isl. rettvis, Sw. raetwis. Thre views the termination wis as formed from Moes.-G. wis-an, esse, and therefore as merely indicating the existence of a quality. Perhaps it is rather from wis, modus forma, as denoting the quality itself.

RICHTWISNESS, RYCHTWYSSNESS, s. Righteousness.

Hys lyf wes fowrme of all mekness,
Merowr he wes of rychtwysness.

Wynlow, vii. 6, 20.

RICK, s. A relic.

—I haif fund a gret horse bane.—
Schr, ye may gar the wyffis trow,
It is ane bane of Sanct Brydis cow,
Gude for the fevir tartane.
Schr, will ye rewill this rick weill,
All hail the wyffis will kiss and kneill,
Betwix this and Dumbartane.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 74.

Perhaps from A.-S. recc, cura, as we use to concern for business; or race, story, narration. [Pinkerton rendered this word "matter."]

[To RICK, v. a. To pierce with a hook by means of a sudden jerk or pull, Shetl. Dan. rykke, to pull suddenly.]

RICKAM, s. A smart stroke, Buchan; a variety of Reekim, q. v.

RICKETY-DICKETY, s. "A toy made for children;" Gall. Encycl.

RICKLE, RICKILL, s. 1. A heap; as, a rickle of stanes, a heap of stones; a rickle of banes, a phrase used to denote a very meagre person, S.

Ye sall have ay quhill ye cry ho,
Rickillis of gould and jewellis to.

Philotus, S. P. Repr. iii. 15.

"Mr. Abercromby, the surveyor, depones, 'That when the water is filtrating through the dike at low water, there is more water filtrates through the dam-dike, which is the next thing to a rickle of stones, from one end to the other, than the eyes of the two intakes could contain.' Petition, Thomas Gillies of Balmakewan, &c. 1806, p. 10.

2. Peats or turfs put up in heaps or small stacks, to prepare them for being winter provision, are called rickles, Roxb.

3. A low stone fence, built before a drain, Aberd.

This is a diminutive, evidently allied to A.-S. rieg, Su.-G. rock, rake, Isl. krauk, cumulus, hreik-a, cumulum extruere, Moes.-G. rik-jan, congerere. Perhaps Belg. richgel, a ridge, is from this stock; as E. rick undoubtedly is. Su.-G. ben-rangel, which properly denotes a skeleton, is also metaph. used in the same sense with our rickle of banes. But most probably the resemblance is merely accidental.

To RICKLE, v. a. 1. To put into a heap; applied to corn, S.

"There is a method of preserving corn, peculiar to this part of the country, called Rickling, thus performed. After the corn has stood some days in uncovered half stooks, from forty to sixty sheaves are gathered together, and put up into a small stack,—and covered with a large sheaf, as a hood, tied down with two small straw ropes." P. Kirkmichael, Ayr. Statist. Acc., vi. 104, N. V. the a.

2. To put into the form of a stack; as, "When are ye gaun to rickle your peats?" Roxb.

3. To pile up in a loose manner, S.

RICKLE-DIKE, s. A wall built firmly at the bottom, but having the top only the thickness of the single stones, loosely piled the one above the other, S. B.

"The double stone walls, without lime, are not near so effectual a fence against sheep as the single stone walls, provincially called Galloway or snap or rickle dykes. The larger stones are laid in the foundation; and in every opening between the top of these, the next stones in respect of size are laid longitudinally across the wall, and so carefully, that they neither lean to one side nor another; and so on, till the fence be of that height which is required." Agr. Surv. Inverna., p. 114.

—"Which way went he?"

—"By the slap o' the rickle dyke, by the broken yate, Then by the lang broom bush."

Donald and Flora, p. 96.

RICKLER, s. One who piles up loosely, S. "A bad stone-builder is called a rickler;" Gall. Encycl.

[RICKLIE, RICKLY, adj. Shaky, loose, disjointed, delapidated; as, "That wa' 's gae rickly," West of S.]

RICKMASTER, s. A corr. of Rit-master, q. v.

"Now the committee of estatis had given order to furnish out through all Scotland a number of regiments of rickmasters, consisting of 100 horse to ilk regiment, and he who could spend 50 chalders of victual or free rent of money, to furnish out one rickmaster with sword, pistol, carbine, or lance, and an horse worth 80 pound.—Both Aberdeens were also valued and ordained to furnish out—the furniture of six rickmasters." Spalding, i. 230.

RID, s. Advice, counsel; apparently red had been originally written, as both the sense and rhyme require.

He think it resoun, be the rude, that I do thy rid,
In cais I cum to the court and knaw but the ane;
Is nane sa gude as drink and gang to our bed.—

Rauf Coityear, B. i. b.

RID, RIDE, adj. Severe, sharp; [synon., roid, E. rude.]

Thar mycht men se a hard bataill,
And sum defend, and sum assaille;
And mony a reale romble rid
Be roucht, thar upon athir sid.

Barbour, xii. 557, MS.

Yit sall I mak them unrufe, foroutin resting,
And reve thame thair rentis with routis full ride.

Gawan and Gol., ii. 15.

Perhaps from A.-S. reth, ferox, saevus. It may however, be allied to Isl. reide, ira; or hrid, Su.-G. rid, certamen, impetus; Him hardasti hrid, certamen acerrimum, Verel.

[RIDAND, part. pr. Riding, Barbour, i. 484, part. pa. ridin; Ibid. iv. 45.]

RIDDEN MEAL. A phrase which is frequently met with in old valuations and similar deeds in Ayr. It occurs in an old ballad.

Your mother's spence it pleases me;
But its moichness hurts me sairly;
Therefore I'll pay a ridden meal,
—Although I dine but sparely.

Ridden Meal is now explained, in Ayr., as denoting "the money paid to an incoming tenant for getting the liberty of the farm from Martinmas to Whitsunday." It is also said, that in that part of the country, "it was a law, that the outgoing tenant should leave a crop on the land for the benefit of the tenant who succeeded him; and that the consideration given for this was called Ridden meal." V. RIDDIN.

RIDDIN, part. pa. Cleared off, driven away, carried off.

"Ordanis that thai haue lettretz to summond thar witnes touching the avale & quantite of the said teyndis & fruitis, & how thai wer riddin, & quha intromett tharwith." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1488, p. 117.

"Ordanis thaim to haue lettretz to summond thar witnes to pref that the said persones intromett with the said teyndis as is contentit in the summoundis, and the avale & quantite tharof as thai wer riddin." Ibid.

"And als because it wes grantit be the said Prior, that he haid nocht riddin the said placis & teyndis to ony gretare avale in ony tyme bigane than thai wer assignit to the said lord Drummond; and tharfore gif it pless the said Prior & convent to rid the said teyndis in tyme to cum, that the said Johne lord Drummond sall be vertu of his office mak thaim be obeit & pairt of the superexcescence that thai salbe riddin to mare than the four chaldre of mele that is assignit to him in his fee." Ibid., A. 1492, p. 265.

E. rid signifies "to drive away; to remove by violence;" Johns. He quotes the following example from Shakspear:

Ah deathsman! you have rid this sweet young man.

A.-S. hredl-an, to rid; rapere, eripere.

Perhaps ridden meal denoted that made from the grain which had been driven away when thrown aside for tithes; or rather, meal made of tithe-corns.

As viewed in its modern use, it might seem to have been denominated from its being equivalent to the outgoing tenant for ridding the land of his plenising before Whitsunday; perhaps q. ridding-mail, or rent for ridding the farm.

RIDDLE. The Riddle (or Sieve) and the Shears, a mode of divination, or trial by ordeal, for the discovery of theft.

The riddle is set on its side, the points of a pair of large scissors being so fixed in it, (separate from each other,) that the riddle may be suspended by the hold taken of it by the scissors. One handle of the scissors is placed on the finger of one person, and the other on that of another. Some words, to the same purpose with the following, are repeated; By St. Paul and St. Peter, dul A. B. deal my yarn? or whatever is lost. If the person mentioned be innocent, the riddle remains motionless; if guilty, it immediately turns round. Fife; E. Loth.

This, among the other superstitious customs common on Halloween, is also used as a mode of divination in regard to marriage. When two persons are evened, or named in relation to the connubial tie, if the riddle turns round, it is concluded that they are to be united in this bond. Sometimes a good deal of art is practised in this ceremony.

This mode of divination has been well known in France. Hence Rabelais says; Par Consconinomie iadis tant religieusement observee entre les ceremonies des Romains. Ayons vn cribleet de forcettes, tu verra diables, Lib. iii. c. 25. "Let us have a sieve and sheers, and thou shalt see devils." Urquhart's Transl.

Cotgr. expl. consconinomie, "divination by a sieve, and a paire of sheers." But both he and his Rabelais use an erroneous orthography. The original term is κοσκυβηματα, "divination by a sieve," from κοσκυβον, cribrum.

According to Wierus, the ceremony is performed by means of a sieve placed on a pair of tongs, which are held and lifted up only by two fingers. Only six words must be used in the adjuration; but these must be very powerful, if their virtue be in proportion to their obscurity; Dies, nux, jeschet, benedixet, donuina, enitemans. The names of the suspected persons being mentioned, if the sieve trembles, or nods, or is whirled round at the mention of any name, he is pronounced guilty. The author observes, that the person who holds the sieve on the tongs has it in his power to move the sieve at his pleasure. De Magis Infamibus, c. 12, p. 131.

Delrius gives substantially the same account; Disquis. Magic. Lib. iv. c. 2, p. 172, 175.

This custom must have been very ancient. Theocritus speaks of it as quite common in his time, particularly as a mode of divination in regard to the success of love.

To Agrio too I made the same demand,
A cunning woman she, I crost her hand;
She turn'd the sieve and sheers, and told me true,
That I should love, but not be lov'd by you.
Ilyll 3, Creech's Transl.

Lucian also speaks of divining by a sieve, (κοσκυβηματα) as a common practice in his time. Pseudomantis, Op. i. 753. Pollux is referred to by Delrius, loc. cit., as giving a similar testimony.

[RIDDLUM, s.] A riddle, a puzzle: sometimes called a quirklum; but properly the quirklum is a quirk.

"Bonny Kitty Brawnie she stan's at the wa',
Gie her meikle, gie her little, she licks up a';
Gie her stanes, she'll no eat them, and water she'll dee;
Come tell now that bonny riddlum to me."

This is a favourite Scottish riddle, the answer to which is 'fre.' As a specimen of the quirklum take the following:

"At the ball yestreen there were three score and three fiddlers and each fiddler had twenty dancers: how many dancers were there?" Any one hearing such a statement rattled off quickly, would multiply the three score by three, and answer 180: which would cause a laugh. The one who gave the quirklum would then answer, Na! put a wee stop after 'three score,' an' it answers itself." V. Gall. Encycl.]

RIDE, adj. Rough, rude, Gawan and Go ii. 15. V. ROID.

To RIDE, v. a. In the diversion of curling, to drive one's stone with such force, as to carry before it that stone, belonging to the opposite party, which is nearest the mark, or blocks up the way. To ride full out, to carry it quite away from the possibility of winning. S. V. WICK, v.

RIDE, s. The act of sailing. A rough ride, a rough passage by water, S.

This seems to be a metaph. of Goth. extract. For Isl. redkap is equally applied to carriage on horseback and on shipboard. Hominis vectura equo vel cymba, Verel. Ind.; from rid-a, equitare, to travel on horseback.

To RIDE THE BEETLE. To walk while others ride, Gall.

"Those who are on foot, or shanks naijie, with a party on horseback, are said to be riding the beetle.

'War ye at the fair, saw ye mony people,
Saw ye our gude man riding on the beetle?'
Auld Sang, Gall. Encycl.

I know not if this phrase, as having been originally used at weddings, can throw any light on that of carrying the Mell. V. MELL.

[To RIDE FOR THE BROSE. An old custom at a country wedding was that the waddingfowk mounted on horseback attended the bridegroom to the bride's house, and the one who arrived first won a cog of brose or of good fat broth made for the occasion, S.

The race was always a merry and exciting one; and the boast of the winner was how far on with the brose he was before the rest of the company arrived. On one occasion, it is told, the brose was won by a moorland farmer who had great capacity of kyte and speed of spoon, and he had so well exercised his powers in the interval that the company arrived just in time to see him handing the empty cog to his collie to lick the laggin'. V. Gall. Encycl.]

[To RIDE THE HAGRIE. The heritors of a parish are said to "ride the hagrìe," when examining the scattald marches, Shetl. A.-S. haga, a fence, Isl. hagi, a hedged field.]

To RIDE THE PARLIAMENT. A phrase formerly used to denote the procession of the King on horseback to the Parliament House.

—"Whilk had leyn there since the Parliament was ridden." Spalding, l.

[To RIDE THE STANG. A punishment inflicted on adulterers, fornicators, and wife-beaters. V. under STANG.]

To RIDE TAIL-TYNT. To stake one horse against another in a race, so that the losing horse is lost to the owner. V. TAIL-TYNT.

RIDER, RIDAR, RYDAR, s. The denomination of a gold coin formerly current in S., first introduced from Flanders; and thus designed, as bearing the figure of a man on horseback.

This coin is mentioned as early as the reign of James II.

"The rydars of Flander hauand cours for vi. s. viii. d." Acts Ja. II., A. 1551, c. 34, Ed. 1566.

"Item, in ridaris nyne score & aucht ridaris. Item, lyftene Flemis ridaris." Inventories, p. i.

"Ane rydar of gold." Aberd. Reg., A. 1541.

Money of this pattern and denomination was afterwards struck by James IV., exhibiting the figure of the king on horseback with a sword in his right hand, and the inscription, Jacobus Dei Gra. Rex Scotor. On the reverse, Salvum Fac Populum Tuum Dne, around the shield containing the lion rampant.

It appears that the coin of this pattern was in France denominated the Franc of pure gold. V. Du Cange, vo. Moneta, col. 921. It had acquired the name of Rider in the Low Countries. For Kilian expl. Teut. rijder, numus aureus equitis effigie. Belg. een goude ryder, id.

RIE, Rv. A termination of many substantives, S. 1. Denoting dominion or authority, as in bishoprie, i.e., the extent of the authority of a bishop: This is obviously from A.-S. rice, dominium, ditio, territorium; and the same with E. bishopric, being merely A.-S. bisceopric softened in pronunciation.

2. Added to a s., it denotes abundance of the thing expressed by that term; as, Quenry, habitual commerce of an illicit kind, with women; Bletherie, q. an abundance of nonsense. Alem. richi, opes. The Fr. termination rie has most probably had a Goth. or Frankish origin; as, in facherie, ribaudeerie, &c., suggesting the very same idea as in S.

E. heronry, rookery, &c., may be viewed as also formed from the s. rice; unless it should be supposed that, as in many proper names, the adj. ric has been used in the composition, as signifying a place rich or abounding in herons, or in rooks, &c.

[REIB, s. A narrow strip of cloth or the like, Shetl. Dan. reeb, a cord or line.]

[RIEG, s. A strip of a different colour from the rest of the body of an animal, ibid.]

RIEP, s. "A slovenly-dressed girl;" Buchan, Gl. Tarras.

I ay was ca'd a canty riep,
Sae never had a pingle.

Tarras's Poems, p. 46.

Fris. rep-en, inquietum esse, et nimia inquiete vestes terere: Isl. krip-a, tumultuariè agere, krip, tumultuarium. It must be observed, however, that the definition given of riep does not quite correspond with the epithet canty. As the Muse is the speaker, the appellation might seem to agree better with Su.-G. rep-a, Isl. ripp-a, ordine aliquid recitare; or with krip-a, rip-a, raptim facitare, scriptitare; G. Andr., p. 123. C.B. rip-iaur, signifiés to pass over, to skip.

RIERFU, alj. "Roaring;" Gl. Aberd.

Wi' that Rob Roy gae a rair,

A rierfu' rout rais'd he,

'Twas heard, they said, three miles and mair.

Wha likes may crellit gie.

Christmas Bawling, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 123.

Qu. full of rair or noise.

[To RIF, v. n. To rive, Barbour, xx. 255, Skeat's Ed. V. RIFE.]

RIFE, s. The itch. V. REIF.

To RIFE, RIFFE, RYFFE, RIF, v. n. To rive, to be rent.

Quha can not hald thare pece ar fre to fite,
Chide quhill thare hedis rife, and hals worthe hace.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 66, 29.

Su.-G. rife-a, Isl. rief-a, id. E. rise.

[RIFT, s. A rift in a hill or rock, a long, narrow deep fissure, Shetl. Dan. rift, id.]

[RIFTED, adj. Marked with a slit from the middle to the extremity of the ear, a term applied to cattle, ibid.]

RIFF-RAFF, s. 1. The rabble, persons of a worthless character, S.; also used as a low E. word. V. Grose's Class. Dict.

[2. Worthless things; applied to the leavings of a stock of goods or things, S.]

It is, however, a very old term in E., applied to vile persons.

The Sarazins ilk man he sloth alle rif & raf.—
He sauh tham rif & raf cemand ilka taile.

R. Brunne, p. 151. 276.

It also denotes things of the basest kind.

Ne costom no seruisse of thing that he forgaif,
That noither he no hisc suld chalyng rif no raf.

Ibid., p. 111.

"The least scrap, the least bit," Gl.

Perhaps from A.-S. reaf-ian, Su.-G. rife-a, Isl. rif-a, rapere, whence ri, rapina; as having been primarily applied, as above, to the depredations of war.

Dan. ripe-raps, "the rabble, the dregs of the people, the mob," &c. Wolff. He gives the following as another sense of the term, obviously the primary one; "Frivolousness, trumpery, trifles,—paltry stuff or trash." The Dan. form of the word throws light, perhaps, on S. Rip, as denoting any worthless person or thing.

RIFT. Leg. RIST, s. A musical instrument.

—The rote, and the recordour, the ribus, the rift.
Houlste, iii. 10. MS.

A.-S. Arisc-ian, vibrare, stridere?

To RIFT, v. n. 1. To belch, to eructate, S.

Three times the carline grain'd and rifted.—
Ramsay's Poems, i. 297.

Johnson mentions the v. But it is rather a provincial word. Skinner gives it as used in Lincolns.; Dan. racv-er, Su.-G. rap-a, Alem. rof-an, eructare; Dan. racven, eructatio. Sibb. derives it from the Lat. v. "Ructare, to rift." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 19.

Fr. reupp-er, id., has obviously had a Goth. origin; reupe, a belch.

2. To magnify in narration, to talk without book, S.; synonym. Blow, Blast.

Some carle that's weel kend to rift,
Declares, when in a blasting tift,
In days of yore, how he sud lift
Twa bows o' bear.

The Har'st Rig, st. 35.

This is merely a metaph. use of the term, as applied to literal eructation; in the same manner as Wind is used. As literal eructation is caused by wind in the stomach, the other is traced to vanity, which is merely the flatulence of the mind.

RIFT, s. 1. A belch, an eructation, S.

And tho' their stamack's aft in tift
In vacance-time,
Yet seenil do they ken the rift
O' stappit weym.

Fergusson's Poems, li. 46.

2. An exaggerated account of anything, a fib, S.

[3. Appearance, look, aspect, Banffs.]

4. A hearty and free conversation, S.; synonym. Crack.

RIFTING, s. 1. The act of belching, S.

"Ructus, rifting." Wedderb. ibid.

[2. The act of bragging, exaggerating, S.]

[RIFT, RIFTED. V. under RIFE, v.]

RIG, s. 1. A tumult; also, a frolic, Loth.

[2. A trick, an imposition, West of S.]

Rig is used as a cant term in E., signifying "fun, game, diversion, or trick. To run one's rig upon any particular person, to make him a butt. I am up to your rig, I am a match for your tricks." Grose, Class. Dict.

This, I apprehend, is a corr. pron., and that it is originally the same with O. E. reak, a mad prank.

—Down they fling me; and, in that rage,
(For they are violent fellows) they play such reaks.
Beaumont & Fletcher, p. 3347.

Our outré Urquhart also uses it.—"It were enough to undo me utterly, to fill brimfull the cup of my misfortune, and make me play the mad-pate reaks of Bedlam." Rabelais, B. iii., p. 78.

Skinner derives it from Lat. rex, a king, or A.-S. rice, a kingdom. Rather from Su.-G. ryck, impetus, ryck-a, cum impetu ferri; or from A.-S. ric, a powerful man, Su.-G. recke, reke, a hero; q. to play the great man, by acting without control. Seren. however, refers to Isl. roek, magnificum quid, (G. Andr.) and also to reck-a, fugare.

Isl. rig-a, motare, citare in gyrum. I suspect, however, that rig, in this sense, is rather a cant term of modern formation.

[To RIG, v. a. To impose upon, to befool, Clydes.]

RIG, RIGG, s. 1. The back of an animal.

Anone is he to the his mont adew;—
His tale, that on his rig before tymes lay,
Vnder his wame lattis fall abasitly.

Doug. Virgil, 394, 39.

"The back, Scot. called the rigging and rygback;"
Rudd. V. REISSIL.

2. A ridge, S.

It seems to receive the name from its resemblance to the back, in relation to the depression of the sides; as the ridge is elevated above the furrow. Chaucer, rigge, id.

O. E. rigge, rygge, id. "Rigge of a londe [land]. Porca. Agger." Prompt. Parv. "Rygge of land, [Fr.] sente." Palsgr. B. iii., F. 59, b.

Of the, Serranus, quha wald nathing schaw,

Quhare thou thy riggis telis for to saw,

As thou was chosin capitane of were!

Doug. Virgil, 196, 9.

3. The fold of a web, or that part which is folded down or doubled, as distinguished from the selvedge.

"To eschew the dissate & skaith that oure somerane lordis liegis daly and at all tymes sustenis be the metting of wolen clath be the selwich, it is thoct expedient that in tyme cummyn all wolen clath be met be the rig, and nocht be the selwich." Parl. Ja. III., A. 1468, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 95. Selwich, i.e., selvedge.

4. But-Rig, three men shearing on one ridge, ibid.; apparently named from butt, a piece of ground which does not form a proper ridge. V. BUTT.

5. Ha'-Rig, the right-hand rig of a company of reapers. V. HA'.

RIG and BAUK. A ridge of corn with an intervening strip of pasture, Ang.

"You see a large field alternately varied with narrow stripes of corn and pasture; this, in the vernacular language of the country, is rig and bauk." Edin. Mag., Aug., 1818, p. 125. V. BAUK.

RIG and FUR. A phrase used to denote ribbed stockings, S.

Rig signifies back, O.E.

R. Glouc. gives the following account of the manner in which Edward the Confessor did penance for listening to the false accusation of Robert, Archbishop of Canterbury, against his mother; p. 340.

—The byssopes echon,
Ech after other, asoyled then kyng of thys trespas
Myd gerdien in hys naked rug, & that gret pyte was.
Thre strokes the moler ek, wepynde wel sore,
Gef hym to asoyly, & ne mygte vor reuthe mor.

It seems doubtful whether gerdien signifies rods, or is synon. with strokes. V. GIRD, a.

In England, when a field is ploughed rough, it is said to be in "ridge and furrow," or rather "in rig and furrow;" to which ribbed stockings bear a kind of resemblance. For this remark I am indebted to a literary friend in London.

Quhare bene the cupling of the rig bone.

Doug. Virgil, 329, 43.

Rig-bane, S. Doug. uses bone, metri causa. Riggin-bone, Chaucer.

A.-S. hriggban, Dan. rigbeen, Su.-G. ryg-ben, spina dorsi.

O. E. "Rigbone or bakbone. Spina. Spondile." Prompt. Parv. "Rigge bone, [Fr.] eschine;" Palsgr. B. iii., F. 59.

RIG-FIDGE, s. A gentle blow on the back, Strathmore.

Teut. fuyck-en, signifies to drive, to beat, pellere, pulsare; fick-en, to strike softly, ferire, leviter virgis percutere, Kilian. Perhaps the term has had its origin from the idea of the back being made to fidge by a blow.

[RIGGA-RENDAL. Run-rig, Shetl. Su.-G. rygg, a ridge, and del, a division.]

RIGGIE, s. A name given to a cow having a stripe of white along the back, S.O. and B.; obviously from Rig, the back.

RIGGIN, RIGGING, s. 1. The back, S. called also rig-back, Rudd.

Syne to me with his club he maid ane braid,
And twenty rowtis apoun my rigging laid.

Doug. Virgil, 451, 42

2. The top or ridge of a house, S. riggen, id. A. Bor.

Ross's Helenore, p. 77.

Hence, riggin-tree, the roof-tree, or beam which forms the roof of a house, S.

Sw. tak-ryggen, the ridge of a house; q. thack-riggin. A.-S. hrigg signifies fastigium, as well as dorsum.

Thaes temples hrigg, Templi fastigium, Luke, iv. 9.

O. E. "Rygginge of an howa. Porturacon."

Prompt. Parv. "Rigging of a house, [Fr.] chaulme;" Palsgr., B. iii., F. 59, b.

3. A small ridge or rising in ground.

"And fra thyne toward the west to the heid of the dene of Logy the landis of Westire Logy, with the powis, powlandis, and foirbank tharof, as thail ty toward the northe to the heid of the bank riggin callit the Ragingait." Acts Ja. V. 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 379.

RIGGIN-STANE, RIGGING-STONE, s. One of the stones which form the ridge of a house, S. riggin-stane.

"He took down the riggin stones, corner stones with the rest." Spalding, ii. 228.

RIGGIT, RIGGED, adj. Having a white stripe, or white and brown streaks, running along the back; applied to cattle, ibid.

"When a stripe of white run [r. ran] along the ridge of her back, she got the name of a rigged cow." Agr. Surv. Ayra, p. 425.

RIG-ADOWN-DAISY. The name given to the ancient custom at weddings of dancing on the grass, before the use of barns for this purpose, Gall.

"Anciently the waddin fowk danced a great deal on the grass.—This—was termed rig-adown-daisy." Gall. Encyc.

E. rigadoon, Fr. rigadon, "a kind of brisk dance, performed by one couple." I need scarcely add, that daisy refers to the simple ornaments of the floor on which this dance is performed.

RIGGIN, s. A term of reproach to a woman, Shetl.

Perhaps from Isl. hryki, longurio, a long pole; as rung, runt, &c., are used in S.; or from reiginn, obstinatus, rigidus.

* RIGHT, adj. In the exercise of reason, S. V. RIGHT.

RIGHTSUA, adv. In like manner. V. RICHTSWA.

RIGLAN, RIGLAND, RIGLING, s. An animal that is half castrated, S. Riggill, A. Bor., a ram that has one testicle.

—Ye sall hae a rigland shire
Your mornin' gift to be.
Jamieson's Popular Ball., ii. 272.

E. rig, riggie, riggil, ridgeling. V. Jun. Etym.

[RIGLY, adj. Unsteady, rickety, Shetl.; another form of rickly, q. v. Dan. ruggely, id.]

RIG-MARIE, s. 1. A name given to a base coin, Loth. Dumfr.

My banes were hard like a stane dyke,
No Rig-Marie was in my purse.

Watson's Coll., i. 14.

Supposed to have originated from one of the billon coins struck during the regency of Morton, in the reign of James VI. These, I am informed, in order to give them currency, or to avert from himself the odium of debasing the coin, he caused to be antedated, as if they had proceeded from Q. Mary's mint. Most of them accordingly bore the words Reg. Maria, as part of the legend. I have seen some of them, however, which are inscribed, Jacobus 5, and bearing, instead of M. R. in the field, I. V. V. Gilb. Stuart's Hist. of Scotland.

2. The term rigmarie is used in Galloway as synon. with E. rig, denoting a mischievous frolic, a tumult or uproar.

RIGMAROLE, s. A long-winded incoherent story or speech, a sort of rhapsody, S. It is also used as an adj.

Grose renders it "round about, nonsensical;" Class. Dict. It seems to be merely a cant word; containing some allusion, perhaps, to running a rig. Or shall we trace it to Isl. reig-ia, fastuose se gerere, and rol-a, vagari, with the connective particle ma intervening. V. Mr. Todd's remarks, E. Dict.

RIGMAROLE, adj. Long-winded and confused, S., also low, E.

RIGS, RIGIBUS, s. A game of children, Aberd.; said to be the same with Scotch and English; also called Rockety Row.

RIGWIDDIE, s. 1. The rope or chain, that crosses the back of a horse, when he is yoked in a cart, by which the shafts are supported, S.

From rig, back, and widdie, a twig, or bundle of withes; as this had been used before the use of ropes. This custom is still preserved in some parts of S. The rigwiddie, in the Highlands, is to this day made of twisted twigs of oak.

That, which fastens the harrow to the yoke is called a tridwiddie, also cutwiddie, (Fife), more commonly, a master-graith. To this are fastened two single-trees; and to these the horses are yoked by the theats or traces, S.

Isl. trod, denotes a stake or pole.

2. One of a durable frame, one that can bear a great deal of fatigue or hard usage, Fife; evidently in allusion to the toughness of the materials of which this implement is formed.

RIGWIDDIE, adj. 1. A rigwiddie body, one of a stubborn disposition, Fife; the figure being here transferred to the mind.

[2. Thrawn, ill-shaped, ugly and weasened; when applied to the body, or to the appearance, as in Burns' Tam o'Shanter.

But wither'd beldams, auld and droll,
Rigwiddie hags, wad spean a foal,
Loupin and flingin on a crummock,
I wonder didna turn thy stomach.]

3. Expl. "Deserving the widdie or gallows;" as, "a rigwiddie carlin," an old wife who deserves to be hanged, Aberd.

RIGWIDDIE-NAG, s. A horse that has one of its testicles amputated, Roxb.

Perhaps as signifying that he is thus better fitted for draught. Or shall we suppose that rigwiddie has been, by vulgar corruption, substituted for Riglan, q. v.?

RIK, RYKE, s. A kingdom.

And hawbrekis, that war quhyt as flouris,
Maid thaim gletirand, as thai war lyk
Tyll angelys hey off hewynys ryk.

Barbour, viii. 234, MS.

Bot Wallace thriss this kynrik conquest halle,
In Ingland for socht battaill on that rik.

Wallace, ii. 353.

Ryke, Perth Ed.

Moes G. reiki, imperium, principatus, dominatio;
A.-S. ryce, Franc. riki, riche, regnum.

"August 13, 1691.—The bill anent rike-penny, pole-money, and retention-money, were rejected." Law's Memorials, p. 202.

This, I think, must be meant for Reik-penny. "Smoke-Silver and Smoke-Penny," says Jacob, "are to be paid to the ministers of divers parishes, as a modus in lieu of tithe-wood: and in some manors, formerly belonging to religious houses, there is still paid, as appendant to the said manors, the ancient Peter-Pence, by the name of Smoke-money." Vo. Smoke-Silver. But the term rike-penny seems rather to refer to a tax which Charles II. had imposed on England, and wished to extend, as well as poll-money, to Scotland; concerning which the same writer gives the following account:

"Chimney-Money, otherwise called Hearth-Money, a duty to the crown on houses, by stat. 14 Car. 2, cap. 2. Every fire-hearth and stove of every dwelling and other house within England and Wales, (except such as pay not to church and poor) shall be chargeable with 2s. per annum, payable at Michaelmas and Lady-day, to the king and his heirs, and successors.—This tax being much complained of, as burthensome to the people, hath been long since taken off, and others imposed in its stead."

[RIKKER, s. A long slender spar of wood, such as is used for making the fish-spears called "sticker," also for small boat spars, Shetl.]

RILLING, s. A shoe made of rough untanned leather. V. REWELYNYS.

RIM, s. A sort of rocky bottom in the sea, where fish are caught, Orkn.

"As to rocks, we have three of what we call rims, which are generally occupied by our fishermen as their best fishing grounds;—the rim shoals deepen from twenty to forty fathom, or upwards." P. Birsay, Orkney, Statist. Acc., xiv. 351.

Perhaps allied to Isl. hraun, saxosa loca, cautibus continuis obsita, G. Andr.; if not a derivative from rif, Su.-G. ref, whence E. reef of rocks.

RIM (of the belly), s. The peritoneum, S.

"The body—swells sometimes to such a degree, that the peritoneum, or rim of the belly, as it is called by the shepherds, gives way, and strong convulsions are succeeded by death in a few hours from the first attack." Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 363.

Perhaps we find the term in its primitive sense in Isl. rini, colliculus.

RIM-BURST, s. The disease called a rupture or Hernia.

"Hernia, a rim-burst." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 19. Hence Rimbursin, q. v.

RIMBURSTENNESS, s. The state of being under a Hernia.

"Ramex. Rimbursstenness." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 47.

RIMBURSIN, s. A rupture of the abdominal muscles; in consequence of which the belly sometimes bursts, Bord. Northumb. Horses and cows are both subject to it.

—The worm, the wartit wedonypha,

Rimbursin, ripplis, and bellythra.

Roull's Cursing, Gl. Compl., p. 331.

From rim (of the belly), and burst, or the part. pa. burst.

RIMLESS, adj. Reckless, regardless, Aberd.

Supposed to allude to the phrase used as to those who say or do any thing contrary to common sense, that they speak or act "without rhyme or reason." As, however, E. rim, signifies a border, the adj. may be formed from this, as denoting those who disregard all limits in their conversation.

RIMPIN, s. 1. A lean cow, Roxb.

2. An old ugly woman, ibid.

Teut. rimpe, anc. rompe, ruga, romp-en, rimpel-en, rugare; A.-S. krympelle, ruga. Su.-G. krymp-a, contrahi, seems to acknowledge the same root, the aspirate k of the Isl. being hardened into t. This denomination has probably been conferred from the number of wrinkles that appear.

RIM-RAM, adv. In a state of disorder, W. Loth.

Isl. rym-a, diffugere; Teut. ramm-en, salire.

To RIN, v. n. 1. To run, flow, S.

3. To curdle, to become curdled, in consequence of being soured by heat; a term used as to milk, S.

Su.-G. raenn-a, raenn-a, coagulare; miolken ar runnen; the milk is run, or curdled. Hence E. rennet, coagulum, S. earnin.

[To RIN, v. a. 1. To run from, to flee; as, to rin the country, West of S.]

2. To run past, to avoid, to evade, to smuggle; as, to rin the cutter, i.e., to evade the revenue cutter, hence, to smuggle. The term is also used to express bringing drink into a workshop, or to servants, without the knowledge of the employer: the one who does so is said "to rin the cutter," S.

3. To distil whisky, West of S., Banffs.]

4. To darn, as, to rin stockings, to darn them in the heels with thread of their own quality, to render them more durable, S.

[To RIN about. To wander about, to go from place to place, S. V. RINABOUT.]

[To RIN ahin. 1. To run behind or at one's heels, to follow closely, Clydes.

2. To fall into debt, ibid.]

[To RIN at. To attack, to fall upon with intent to injure, Clydes. V. RIN on.]

To RIN in one's head. 1. To produce a slight degree of intoxication, to occasion a transient giddiness or stupor; as, "I darna tak that wine in the forenoon, it wad rin in my head," S. This is equivalent to the phrase, to fly to the head.

2. Used impers. It rins i' my head, I have an indistinct recollection of this or that, S.

Sw. Det rinner mig nu i sinnet, It comes now into my mind. Det rann mig i sinnet, It occurred to my mind; Wideg.

To RIN on. To push, to butt as a furious bull, Clydes.

To RIN our. 1. To continue, not to be interrupted; like E. run on.

"It is thought expedient,—that this present Parliament ryn still oure, but only particular continuation;" i.e., prorogation. 4 Feb., 1546. Keith's Hist., p. 49.

[2. To overflow, to boil over, West of S.]

To RIN out. Not to contain, especially used of liquids; to leak, to allow to escape, S.

A.-S. ut-rine, ut-ryne, exitus, effluxus; utrynas wætera, exitus aquarum.

RIN, s. 1. A run; also, the act of running, S.

A.-S. ryne, curvus aquae; Moes.-G. rinno, torrens.

- RIN-ABOUT, RYNNARE-ABOUT, s. A vagabond, one who runs about through the country.

"Aweel, Willie, ye canna help an ill name. Some handy rinabout had emptied the laird's hen-bawks, yestreen, as clearly as fifty founmarts, and back came the same reckless neer-do-gude to-night." Blackw. Mag., May, 1820, p. 163.

"Alsua at the said schirref, balyeis & officiariis, inquare at ilke courts, gif thar be ony that makis thaim fulis that ar nocht bardis, or sic lik vtheris rynnaris aboute." Acts Ja. II., 1449, Ed. 1814, p. 36.

- RIN-THE-COUNTRY, s. A fugitive, one who has fled the country for his misdeeds, Teviotd.

- [RINEGATE, s. A vagabond, a tramp, Clydes.

This is properly a corr. of Mid. Eng. renegat, from Span. renegado, lit. one who has denied the faith, Low Lat. renegare. E. renegade, corr. into runagate.]

- RIN-THEREOUT, s. A needy, houseless vagrant, S.

This is printed Runthereout, Waverley. But in GL. Antiquary, evidently in reference to the passage in Waverley, it is more properly given as here.

- RIN-THEREOUT, adj. Used in the same sense, S.

"Ye little rin-there-out de'il that ye are, what takes you raking through the gutters to see folk hangit?" Heart M. Loth.

"Rinthereout, gad-about; vagrant;" GL. Antiq.

- RIN-WA', RIN-WAW, s. A partition, a wall that runs or extends from one side of the house to the other, and divides it, S.

Some might prefer Su.-G. ren, a stake, as this sort of wall is often made with stakes interlaced with straw and clay.

- [RINNER, s. A clue of yarn, Shetl.]

- [RINNIN, RINNING, s. A running sore, an ulcer; also, a flowing of matter from a wound, the act of flowing, West of S.]

- RINNIN DARN. A disease in cows, in which they are severely affected with a flux, S. B. Darn may signify what is secret.

- [RINNIN-MINK, s. A slip-knot, Banffs.]

- RINNINS, RINNINGS, s. pl. The vulgar designation for scrofula, S.

"Rinnings, ulcers;" Gall. Enc.

- To RIND, RYNDE, v. a. To dissolve any fat substance by the heat of the fire; as, to rind butter, to rind tallow, i.e., to melt it, S. also, render.

"That na maner of man—tak vpon hand, to rynde, mylt, nor barrell talloun, vnder the pane of tinsall of all thair godis." Acts Ja. V., 1540, c. 105, Ed. 1566, c. 123, Murray.

It makes them clout elbows and breasts,
Keep rinded butter in charter chests.

Colvil's Mock Poem, P. I., p. 77.

I leave the creash within my wame,
With a' my heart to Finlay Graine;
It will be better than swine seam
For any wramp or minyle;
First shear it small, and rind it sine
Into a kettle clean and fine.

Watson's Coll., I. 60.

From Su.-G. Isl. rind-a, pellere, propellere, because it is beaten during the operation; as we say, to beat butter; or from Isl. raenn-a, rinde, liquefacere, to melt. S. and A. Bor. render is evidently from the same source. "To melt down. To render suet. North." Gl. Grose.

- RIND, RYND, s. Hoar-frost; frost-rynd, Loth., Berwicks.; synon. Rime. V. RHYNE.

This is undoubtedly a corruption, as the A.-S. and Isl. term is Arim, Su.-G. rim, and Belg. rym.

- RINEGATE, s. A vagabond, Upp. Clydes. [V. under RIN.]

- To RING, v. a. 1. To reign, S.

Do clois the persoun of wyndis, and thar on ring.
Doug. Virgil, 17, 28.

2. To rage, to prevail with universal influence; also rung.

"The tym it hapnis this contagius plage and pestelance to ryng, &c.—The grit pestilance now thar rungand." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

- To RING down, v. a. To overpower, to overbear, Aberd.

- [To RING in, v. n. To yield, submit, succumb, Banffs.]

- To RING owre, v. a. To hold in subjection, S.

- RING, s. 1. Kingdom.

Thair saw we mony wrangous conquerouris,
Withoutin richt reiffaris of othisis ringis.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 230.

Honour, quod scho, to this heuenlie ring,
Differs richt far frae this warldlie governing.

Palace of Honour, iii. 77.

Although this may be viewed as a corr. of the Fr. or Lat. v., yet we have some very ancient Goth. words of a similar form. Moes.-G. ragin-on, reikin-on, to govern, to preside; ragin-eis, a senator.

2. It also signifies reign, S. It seems doubtful to which of these senses the last extract belongs.

But gif thow will thine hart incline,
And keip his blissit law diuine;
—As did monie faithfull kingis
Of Israell, during thair ringis :—
Quhais riche rewardes was heuinly bliss,
Quhilk sall be thine, thou doand this.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 273.

R. Brunne uses it in this sense, p. 83.

To William the rede kyng is gyuen the coron,
At Westmynstere toke he ryng in the abbay of Londoun.

RINGIN, adj. With great energy, powerful, Clydes., Banffs.]

[RINGIN, adv. With ease, easily, ibid.]

RING, s. 1. A circular fort, S.

"There are many Pictish and Scotch encampments in this parish and the neighbourhood. All of them are of a round or oval figure, and are called rings by the common people." P. Lauder, Berw. Statist. Acc., i. 77.

"There are in the parish four encampments, all of a circular figure, called rings by the common people." P. Calter, Lanark Statist. Acc., vi. 78. V. also xiii. 390, 391.

This term seems to be used only in the South and South-West of S.; and may have originated merely from the circular form of these enclosures. Among the Northern nations, however, the same word, primarily signifying a ring for the finger, or any thing circular, has been applied to these places where thing, ting, i.e., their comitia, or public conventions, were held. Hence the phrase, in the Sw. laws, A thing oc a ring, in judicio et circulo; Ihre, in vo.

Among the Germans it was extended to encampments. The Huns gave the name of Ring, or Hring, to that place in the middle of the camp, of a circular form, in which the king, with his nobles, used to lodge, both for the sake of honour and of security. Lambeo. Bibl. Vindob. ap. Ihre. Hence the palace of their princes was denominated Rhingus. V. Du Cange.

It has, with great probability, been supposed by Verel and other learned writers, that from ring, as denoting such an assembly, the Ital. have formed ring-are, areng-are, aring-are, verba facere in comitiis, foro, senatu; whence, Fr. harang-uer, the word being merely aspirated. Fr. rang-er, to set in order, and rang, the right of precedence in a public meeting. E. rank, have been traced to the same source.

2. Used as synon. with rink, a race, if not an erratum.

"It is enough that these who run a race see the gold only at the starting place; and possibly they see little more of it, or nothing at all, till they win to the ring's end, and get the gold in the loof of their hand." Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 24. V. RENE.

3. The name for a game of marbles among boys, denominated from their drawing a ring or circle, in which the marbles are placed, S. B.

4. The meal which fills up the crevices in the circle around the millstones, Loth.

To fill these with the first grain that is ground, after the stones are picked, is called ringing the mill.

"The Ring is the meal which, in the course of grinding, falls round the mill stone, between it and the wooden case surrounding it." Abstract, Proof concerning the Mill of Inveramsy, A. 1614, p. 1.

This, according to the species of grain, is called ring-corn, ring-malt, &c., S.

"By Decree Arbitral, 1 firiot of corn and 1 firiot of malt, as ring-corn and ring-malt, out of each plough." Ibid., p. 2.

This is different from the definition of the term in Ang. V. MILL-RING. The term, as thus expl. seems merely to respect the circular form of the stones.

To RING THE MILL. To fill the crevices round the mill-stone with the first grain that is ground, after the stones are picked, S.

"The tenants ringing the mill to themselves, and carrying away the same ring with them." Abstract ut sup. p. 2.

"That when he ringed the mill, he took home the ring, paying the firiot of dried corn, and of malt, corresponding to his plough." Ibid., p. 3.

To RIDE AT THE RING. A phrase denoting an ancient amusement.

[For you alone I ride the ring,
For you I wear the blue;
For you alone I strive to sing,
Oh, tell me how to woo!]

Minst. Scot. Bord., v. iii.]

Randolph, in a letter to Cecil, dated 7th Dec. 1561, gives an account of this pastime as celebrated at the court of Scotland, in the presence of Q. Mary.

"From this purpose we fell in talk of the pastimes that were the Sunday before, where the Lord Robert, the Lord John, and others ran at the Ring, six against six, disguised and apparelled, the one half like women, the other half like strangers, in strange masking garments. The Marquis that day did very well; but the women, whose part the Lord Robert did sustain, won the Ring. The Queen herself beheld it, and as many others as listed." Keith's Hist., p. 206.

A.-S. hring-sete, signifies circus, "a roundle or circle, a place in Rome, where the people sat and saw games; Hring-seta, Circenses, games of wrestling, running, and the like exercises;" Somner. Hring seems here used in reference to the circular form of the buildings. But Alem. ring was transferred to the entertainment; lucta, certamen; ringen, certare, luctare; Dan. ring-er, id. In Su.-G. it is used to denote a ring, which, as it was anciently suspended at the tournaments, the knights attempted to carry away with their lances. Hence, rida till ringe, hastiludium exercere; Ital. ar-ringo, locus certaminis.

It is singular, that this ancient custom of riding at the ring, which was reckoned an amusement worthy of the most celebrated knights, is now observed only by the Fraternity of Chapmen, on the day of the annual election of their president or Lord.

"To prevent that intemperance to which social meetings in such situations are sometimes prone, they spend the evening in some public competition of dexterity or skill. Of these, riding at the ring, (an amusement of ancient and warlike origin), is the chief. Two perpendicular posts are erected on this occasion, with a cross beam, from which is suspended a small ring; the competitors are on horseback, each having a pointed rod in his hand; and he who, at full gallop, passing betwixt the posts, carries away the ring on his rod, gains the prize." P. Dunkeld, Perth. Statist. Acc., xx. 433.

This seems to have been an amusement used in Iceland. Hence, hringleikur, lusus genus, Verel; literally, the ring-sport, or play; Sw. ringlek.

RING DANCIS. "S. a kind of dances of many together in a ring or circle, taking one another by the hands, and quitting them again at certain turns of the tune (or Spring, as Scot. we call it), and sometimes the Piper is put in the center;" Rudd.

Like to the goddess Diane with hir rout,— Leland ring dancis, quham followis ouer all quhare
Ane thousand nymphis flokand here and thare.

Doug. Virgil, 28, 42.

"The ring means the dance à la ronde." Sir D. D. Annals, i. 259, N.

The learned judge is certainly right. For Kilian gives Teut. ringh-dans as synon. with ronden-dans, orbis saltatorius. V. HOR.

RING-FENCE, s. A fence surrounding a farm Loth.

"Every farmer should be what is called ring-fenced, that is, separated from his neighbours by a general enclosure." Agr. Surv. E. Loth., p. 272.

[To RING bottle bells. To confirm a bargain by hooking each other's little fingers: common among children, Mearns.]

To RING in, v. n. 1. Bells are said to be ringing in, when, in order to stop them, the repetition of the strokes becomes quicker than before, S.

The phrase seems to signify that this is the signal for the people, who are standing without, to go in, or enter the church, as divine service is about to begin. This in E. is called clamouring the bells. Shakespeare alludes to the original use of the phrase, when he says, "Clamour your tongues, and not a word more." Winter's Tale.

2. A person, who has made a great noise in his day, is said to be ringing in, when on the borders of death, Aberd.

"The Deputy is, in a manner, rung in," observed John. "His day's darg is ower—he has won to his lang and mirk night." Tournay, p. 448.

RINGALD, s. Crowd. V. RANGALD.

It occurs in Aberd. Reg., A. 1545. "Ringand." V. 19.

"Abe, Ringane, Cristie, Armstranges;" Acts, iii. 393.

And now she sits blyth singan,

The Loss of the Pack, a Tale.

V. REENGINE.

RINGE-HEATHER, s. Cross-leaved Heath, S. B. Erica tetralix, Linn.

It seems to receive its name from ringes, being made of it.

[RINGER, s. 1. One who ranges about, Clydes. V. REENGINE.

2. A whisk for pots, &c.: another form of ringe, q. v., ibid.]

RINGER, s. The name given to a stone which lies within the ring that surrounds the tee or mark in curling.

[RINGIN, adj. and adv. V. under RING, v.]

RINGING BLACK FROST. "A very severe frost, when the ground keeps black, and seems to ring when struck;" Gall. Enc.

RINGLE-EYED, RYNGIT, adj. Having a great proportion of white in the eye, S.

"Scot. we yet call such horses as have a great deal of white in their eye Ringle-ey'd;" Rudd.

The term seems properly to denote a ring of white as it were encroaching on the ball of the eye. This idea is conveyed by the language of Doug.

—His creist on hicht bare he,

With bawsand face, ryngit the forthir E.

Doug. Virgil, 146, 36.

A horse, that has this form of the eye, is generally reckoned apt to startle, as seeing objects from behind.

This term exactly corresponds with E. wall-eyed.

It is probably allied to Isl. ringl, confusio, alienatio mentis; ringl-a, confunder; ringull, homo mentis non compos; ringlul-r, mente captus; apparently from kring-r, circulus; as a ringl-eye always suggests the idea that a horse is unsteady. Rangeyld-ur, expl. by G. Andr. strabo, limus, may seem to approach more nearly to our term; from rang-r, iniquus, whence rangl-a, oblique vagari, rangl, gressus obliquus; radically the same with S. wrang, E. wrong. But the other etymon has apparently a better claim.

RINGO, s. Apparently the same with Mill-ring, sense 2. See above; also RING, s. and v.

"Ratification in favours of the burgh of Glasgow of their charters, infestments, and privileges, &c.," 1669.

—With the dominicall lands, mains and meadows, called Provane meadow, milne of Provand, milne lands, astrictit multers, commonlie called dry ferme multers, ringo, sequells & pertinents thereof, with services & knaveship of the samen," &c. Act. Parl. V. vii., p. 647.

[RING-SANGIS, s. pl. Songs or tunes adapted to ring-dances, q. v.]

To the sche led ring sangis in karoling.

Doug. Virgil, 220, 31.

Sum sang ring sangis, dancis, ledis and roundis,

With vocis schil, quhil all the dale resoundis.

Ibid., Prol. 402, 33.

It certainly should have been printed dancis ledis, without the comma.

RING-STRAIK, s. An instrument used for stroking down grain in a corn-measure. V. STRAIK, s. 1.

RING-TAILS, s. pl. 1. Small remnants of any thing; as, in relation to drink, it is said, "Tak aff your ring-tails, and brew again," Roxb.

2. The confused odds and ends in the winding up of a multifarious concern, ibid.

3. Sometimes used to denote arrears of rent, ibid.

From the latter sense, it might seem to claim affinity with A.-S. rinc-getael, hominum numerus, from rinc, homo, originally strenuus miles, and tale, getael, computus, as primarily denoting a muster-roll.

[RINGUM - CRAGGUM, adv. Right through and through, Banffs.

RIN-IM-O'ER, s. A game among children, in which one stands in the middle of a street, road, or lane, while others run across it, within a certain given distance from the person so placed; and whose business it is to catch one in passing, when he is relieved, and the captive takes his place, Teviotd. It nearly resembles Willie Wastle.

RINK, RYNK, s. A strong man.

Stevin come steppand in with stendis
Na rynk mycht him arrest.

Chr. Kirk, st. 6.

Often written Renk, q. v.

A.-S. rinc, strenuus miles; but also used, in a general sense, for vir, homo. Su.-G. ring, vir praeatans, eximius. Ithre inclines to derive it from reke, Isl. reck-ur, a hero, a being often inserted in the Northern languages. Reckar, indeed, in pl. is so defined by Verel., as plainly to shew that it is radically one; Viri proceri et robusti; expl. in Sw. Stora och starka karlar, i.e., S. stour and stark carles. Perhaps the Isl. term ought to be traced to Moes.-G. reika, a prince.

RINK, RYNK, RENK, s. 1. A course, a race also reik, Gl. Shirr. V. RENK.

A man is said to get out his rink, when he is sowing his wild oats, or going on in a dissipated course; Fife.

Be this thay wan nere to the renkis end,
Irkut sum dele before the mark wole kend.

Doug. Virgil, 138, 33.

"Sleepy bodies would be at rest, and a breathless horse at the rink's end."—"Howbeit the runners never get a view of it, till they come to the rink's end." Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 166, P. ii. ep. 2.

2. The act of running.

"He commandit als, gyf the havis had forrun the hundis be lang renk, to be na forthir persewit." Bellend. Cron., B. v. c. 11.

"Agill of thair bodyis;—snift of rynk, and reddo to eury kynd of jeopardie." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 27, a. Corpore agiles—ad cursum; Boeth. V. THORTOUR.

3. The course of a river.

—The schyl riuer hait Ufens,
Sekis with narrow passage and discens,
Amyd how valis his renk and isché.

Doug. Virgil, 237, b. 10.

4. The particular station allotted to each party at the commencement of a tournament.

Sone fra thai hade thair salus made,
Thai tuk thair ry.iki, and samyn rade.
And at the tothir cours of were
The Dowglas hit, and brak his sper.

Wynloun, viii. 35. 40.

5. A distinct charge or encounter in a tournament.

"In the thrid rynk Lord Wellis was doung out of the sadyll with sic violence, that he fell to the ground with gret displeasir of Inglismen." Bellend. Cron., B. xvi. c. 10.

Thus rynyng renk is used, Gawan and Gol. V. RIOLYSE.

Trumpetts and schalims, with a schout,
Playd or the rynk began;
And equal juges sat about
To see quha tint or wan
The field that day.

Justing, Adamson & Sym, Evergreen, li. 177.

6. The course in curling on the ice, S. A.

Perhaps from A.-S. hrincg, a ring; as the mark is generally a cross inclosed in a circle.

Rank occurs in Graeme's Poema, by mistake for rink or renk.

—Say, canst thou paint the blush
Impurpled deep, that veils the stripling's cheek,
When, wand'ring wide, the stone neglects the rank,
And stops midway?

Anderson's Poets, xi. 447.

Their rocks they hurled up the rink,
Ilk to bring in his hand;
An' hill an' valley, dale an' doon,
Rang wi' the ardent band.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 162.

7. It also denotes the division of two opposite sides into smaller parties, at quoit-playing, Lanarks.

"Friday, at Hamilton, the long pending match at quoits, betwixt the Leamahago and Glasgow players, took place, 24 on each side, forming 12 *rink*s, when each played 41 shots." Caled. Merc., Aug. 4, 1823.

8. Rink is still used in the South of S. as signifying a straight line. It also denotes a line or mark of division.

In this last sense it is applied to the line of division or boundary, on the Border, between Scotland and England; and the public market annually held a few miles south from Jedburgh is for this reason still called the Rink-fair.

Rudd. derives it from Teut. renck-en, flectere; "for," says he, "the word properly signifies a tour, a compass, or winding, and not going straight on." This idea he seems to found on the sense of the v. RINK, q. v. But it is not at all applicable to the noun, which is undoubtedly most ancient. This suggests an idea directly the reverse: and has been probably formed, after the example of frequentatives, from A.-S. rinn-an, or Su.-G. raenn-a, to run. Or, as the term is applied to running in the lists, sense 4, if we could suppose that it had been unknown before the use of tournaments, it might have originated from A.-S. hrinc, hrincg, Su.-G. ring; as this was the most honourable species of running. Hence Su.-G. raenn-a till rings, rula till rings, hastiludium exercere.

- [9. A number of articles set in order, Banffs. E. rank.

10. The act of setting in order, ibid.]

[To RINK, v. a. To arrange, to set in order, Banffs.]

To RINK, v. n. 1. "S. To rink up and down, discurre, circuire," Rudd. vo. Renk.

To rike and rink, to scamper about the country on horseback, S.B. V. RENK.

2. To rink about, to run from place to place, to gad about, S.B.

For kindly though she be, nae doubt,
She manna thole the marriage-tether,
But likes to rove and rink about,
Like Highland cowt amang the heather.
Lizzy Liberty, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 157.

Probably from the idea of running in a race.

- RINKER, RINKETER, s. 1. A high, thin, and long-legged horse, as opposed to one of a round squat shape, S. It is generally conjoined with the adj. auld.

The phrase, auld rinker, or rinketer seems equivalent to old, or worn-out race-horse; from rink, a race. V. RINK.

2. A tall raw-boned woman, Aberd., Mearns. V. RINKER, RINKETER.

- RINKROUME, s. "Place of tourney."

That round rinkroume wes at vterance:
Bot Talbartis hors, with ane mischance,
He outterit, and to rin was laith.
Lyndsay's Sguyr Meldrum, 1594, B. I. a.

V. RINK.

- MASTER OF THE RINKS. V. LEAD, s.

- To RINK, v. n. 1. To rattle, to make a noise Buchan.

What odds whan rinkin browsters binks
Gaed daft wi' bickers, an' wi' skinks!
Tarras's Poems, p. 12.

I write ye here some hame-made ware,—

Thinkin, yir rinkin
'Mang knabs o' kittle lear.

Ibid., p. 106.

- [2. To move with a sharp noise, Banffs.; synon. reenge.]

Su.-G. runk-a signifies motitari. Formed perhaps as a frequentative from the v. to Ring, like Teut. ring-akel-en, sonare, tinnire; from ringh-en, id.

- [RINK, s. 1. A rattling noise, Banffs.

2. Motion, or walking with much noise, ibid.]

- [RINKIN, RINKAN, s. 1. The act of moving with sharp noise, ibid.

2. Searching noisily, the act of searching, ibid.]

- RINNAND, RYNNAND, part. pr. Current.

—"Gevand—poware, expres bidding and command, to compeir for ws,—in the tolbuyth of Edinburgh, the penult day of Nouember instant, in this rynnand parliament," &c. Acts Mary, 1558, Ed. 1814, p. 507.

- RINNER, s. 1. "A little brook;" Gall. Encycl.

2. "Butter melted with tar, for sheep-smearing;" ibid. V. RIN, s.

- [3. A clue of yarn, Shetl.]

- RINNIN KNOT, RUN-KNOT. A slip-knot, S.; [rinnin mink, Banffs.]

- [RINNINS, s. pl. Running sores; also, a vulgar name for scrofula, S.]

- RINO, s. Ready money, a cant term, S.B.

—That their kindness may continue,
Wishes them fouth o' ready rino.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 244.

- RINRIGS, s. pl. Wiles, stratagems, deep-laid schemes, Ayrs.; undoubtedly from the E. phrase, to run a rig.

The only word referred to by Mr. Todd, is Fr. rigoler, to mock. Undoubtedly it has greater appearance of affinity to Su.-G. ryck-a, cum impetu ferri. But V. RIG.

- RINRUIFF, s. Apparently meant for run-roof; Aberd. Reg. But what kind of roof is meant?

- RINS, s. pl. A local term denoting two large promontories, Galloway.

Ir. rinn, a hill, Lhuyd. Gael. rinn, a point;—but used in a general sense, Bullet says, that Alem. rain signifies a mountain, and rein, a ridge, a promontory. I do not find the terms either in Schilter or Wachter. But Isl. hrann is rendered, saxosa loca, cautibus continuis obsita; G. Andr., p. 121.

- RINSCH, adj. Rhenish, of or belonging to the river Rhine.

"That George Robisoune—sall content & pay to William Cathkin, for a qw of Rinsch wyne xxxiiij li.—for a galloune, a quart, & a poynt of Rinsch wyne xxij s." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1483, p. 97. V. RENS.

- RIN-SHACKEL, s. A shackle that runs on a chain, with which a cow is bound in the byre, Fife.

- RIOLYSE, s. pl. Princely persons, nobles.

Twa rynnynk renkis raith the riolyse has tane;
Ilk freik to his feir to frestin his fa.

Gawan and Gol., iii. 21.

Formed perhaps, as Mr. Pinkerton observes, from royal, often written rial, ryal; or it may be immediately from Lat. regalis, princely, or regales, petty kings. V. FRESTIN.

- RIOT, s. Festivity, indecent mirth.

The gild and riot Tyrianis doublit for joy,
Synne the reird followit of the younkieris of Troy.

Doug. Virgil, 37, 11.

Thus, as Rudd. has observed, O. Fr. riot-er, signifies, to feast and be merry. Isl. hriot-a, subeultare.

- RIP, RIPP, REIP, s. A handful of corn not thrashed, S. Gl. Shirr.; [an ear of oats, Shetl.]

A guid New-year I wish thee, Maggie,
Hae, there's a ripp to thy auld baggie.

Burns, iii. 140.

It properly denotes that which one holds in his hand, as he cuts it down in the field; reap, Northumb. V. RAPEGYRNE.

"Ilk ane [of Montroses men] had in his cap or bonnet a rip of oats, whilk was his sign; our town's people began to wear the like in their bonnets." Spalding, ii. 239.

- RIP, s. A basket made of willows, or of willows and straw, for holding eggs, spoons, &c., Ang.

This is undoubtedly the same with Isl. hrip, distorta corbis, formio, Halderson; expl. in Dan. "a leaky basket or cassie."

RIP, s. 1. Any thing base or useless; as a counterfeit piece of money; an old horse, S.
It is used in the latter sense in cant E.

2. A regardless fellow, Ettr. For.; [a black-guard, a rake, Shetl.]

3. A cheat, S.

Rap is synonym. q. v. I have not, however, heard rap used to denote a worn-out horse. Belg. rappig signifies scabby, scurvy; Alem. kryp-an, to steal.

To RIPE, RYPE, v. a. 1. To search, to examine, S.

And eftyre this mony a day
The grafe, quhare this dede Pyppe lay,
Thai rypyd, and the body sought.

Wyntown, vi. 4. 33.

"Quho heirtofore hes hard within the bowells of Edinburgh, yettes and dures under silence of nicht breast up, houses ryped, and that with hostility, seeking a woman, as appeareth, to oppresse hir?" Knox's Hist., p. 303.

In this sense, we speak of riping for stolen goods, S.

"To rype, diligentius inquirere, investigare;" Northumb. Ray's Coll., p. 147.

2. To probe.

—All the hynns of his goist
He rypit wyth the swerd amynd his coist,
So tyl his hart stoundis the pryk of death.
Doug. Virgil, 339, 33.

3. To investigate; transferred to the act of the mind.

Bot ripe the querel, and discus it plane.
Doug. Virgil, Proh., 354, 28.

"Be instructioun of gods word examine, discus, serche, and rype weil thi conscience." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, Fol. 153, b.

4. To poke, S.

Then fling on coals, and ripe the ribs,
And beek the house baith but and ben.
Ramsay's Poems, ii., 205.

i.e., poke the grate.

Radd. deduces it, although used somewhat obliquely, from A.-S. rypt, dissutus, rypp-an, spoliare, whence E. rip; Sibb. from Teut. repp-en, movere, agitare. But the most probable origin is A.-S. kryp-an, dissuere, the proper root of E. rip. It also signifies fodere, to dig, Somner. This may, indeed, be viewed as the literal sense of the v. as used by Wyntown.

We may mention two Isl. words, which are perhaps allied.

Hrip denotes a sieve, G. Andr., p. 123, and the v. rift is metaph. used with respect to accurate investigation. Rif-ia is rendered, distinguere, explicare, Verel., a sense which has considerable affinity.

[RIPE-POUCH, RYPE-POUCH, s. A pick-pocket; a term used by school-boys when anything has been taken out of their pockets, S.]

RIPPET, RIPPAT, RIPPART, RIPPIT, s. 1. Tumult, the noise of great mirth, S.

—Thre hundreth rial templis dyng
Of riot, rippet, and of reuelling
Ryngis, and of the myrthfull sportis sere,
The stretis sounding on solacius manere.

Doug. Virgil, 269, 47.

2. Scrape, bad business, row, S.; rippart, Banffs.]

Allace! this is ane fallone rippat!
The widdifow wardannis tulk my geir
And left me nowdir hors nor meir,
Nor erdly gud that me belangit.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 186.

3. Disturbance of mind about any thing; as denoting complaint, murmuring, &c.

"Have your desires bounded as to the vast desire of bodily and earthly things and cares: seek them not, and take it well when God takes these things from you, and disappoints you of many things ye expected, —make no rippet for them, —seek them not back again by grudging at the want of them." M. Bruce's Lect., &c., p. 13.

4. Rippet, expl. "a bitter-tempered, chattering creature;" Gall. Encycl.; perhaps q. "one who by ill humour raises a rippet."

[To RIPPET, RIPPAT, RIPPART, v. n. To rampage, to make an uproar, to rage, S.; rippart, Banffs.]

[RIPPETIN, s. Rampaging, raging; also, the act of making an uproar, West of S.]

Isl. krapp-a signifies increpare, krapp-r, immitis, violentus. The term, however, as denoting a tumult, should perhaps be traced to Isl. krip-a, tumultuare agere; Haldorson. Eg kripa, raptim ago; G. Andr.

Teut. repp-en, movere, agitare, and Su.-G. rap-a, to rush headlong, seem to be cognate terms. But it is perhaps rather to be traced to Teut. ravolt-en, tumultuari, luxuriari.

RIPPIE, s. A kind of pock-net fixed to a hoop, used for catching crabs, Mearns.

Perhaps allied to Isl. krip, cribrum; or krip-a, raptim ago.

[RIPPIKINS, s. pl. Coarse stockings of single worsted, Shetl.]

To RIPPLE, v. a. To ripple lint, to separate the seed of flax from the stalks, S. A. Bor.

—Syn powing, and ripling, and steeping, and then
To gar's gae and spread it upon the cauld plain.

Ross's Helenore, p. 135.

"When set up in the field, the lint, after being rippled, is made up in small bundles, no bigger than one length of the lint can easily tie." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 328.

Mr. Todd has inserted this as a north country word, from Ray and Grose.

Teut. rep-en, stringere semen lini; repe, instrumentum ferreum, quo lini semen stringitur; Germ. riffel, id. The v. riffel-n varies a little in its signification, being rendered to hatchell or pull flax. Isl. ripell denotes an instrument wherewith any thing is scraped; rupl-a, nudare, spoliare. But Su.-G. rep-a, to pluck, seems to direct us to the original idea; repa lin, linum vellere; Moes.-G. raup-jan ahsa, to pluck the ears of corn, Mark ii., 23. Nearly allied to this, if not deduced from it, is A.-S. rip-an, metere, to reap, E.

[To RIPPLE out, v. a. To separate, to run out, to take down work; as, "To ripple out a stockin," to take down a portion of the working; also, to take down, or open out, the working, that the yarn may be worked up anew, West of S.]

RIPPLE, RIPLE, s. A toothed instrument through which flax, hemp, &c., are drawn, to separate the seed from the stalks, S.

"Let them take small handfuls at a time, and draw the flax through the riple without violence." Maxwell ut sup., p. 356.

"After hemp is pulled, and the leaves, seeds, and branches taken off with a ripple, it is made into bundles of twelve handfuls each, and steeped as flax, from six to eight days." Agr. Surv. Argyle., p. 115.

"It is drawn through the iron teeth of a kind of comb named the ripple, in small handfuls." Surv. Beauf., p. 192.

RIPPLER, s. A person employed in separating the seed of flax from the stems, S.

"This comb separates the seed from the lint, with much more ease to the rippers." Maxwell. Sel. Trans., p. 328.

RIPPLIN-CAMB, s. A flax-comb, or instrument for separating the bolles of flax from the stem, S. V. the v.

This properly denotes the coarse and wide-toothed comb that is used for separating the seed of flax from the stalks; the heckle being the flax comb.

A time's for a' thing we can name,
An' time too for the rippling name.

Piper of Peebles, p. 7.

"Every thing has its time, and so has the rippling-comb;" S. Prov. Kelly, p. 95, equivalent to, "Every dog has his day."

RIPPLING, s. The operation of separating the seed of flax from the stems, S.

"On the day of pulling the lint does the rippling begin." Maxwell, p. 328.

O. E. "Rippling of flax or other lyke. Avulsio." Prompt. Parv.

LINT-RIPPLE, s. The same with Ripple, but so named from its being chiefly used for preparing flax, S.

—Ye didna ken but syle o' kipple,
Or stock to some auld wife's lint-ripple,
Might be your fate.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 22.

To RIPPLE, v. n. 1. To drizzle; used both in the North and South of S.

2. To open up, to clear off; as, "The clouds are ripplin," they are beginning to separate, so as to indicate a cessation of rain; Fife. Rackin, S. synon. V. RACK up, v.

Perhaps a diminutive from Su.-G. rifw-a, scindere, q. "the clouds are riving."

RIPPLES, RIPPLIS, s. pl. 1. A weakness in the back and reins, said to be attended with shooting pains, S.

—Rimbarin, ripples, and bellythra—

Roull's Cursing, Gl. Compl., p. 331.

For world's wasters, like poor cripples,
Look blunt with poverty and ripples.

Ramsay's Works, l. 143.

From the cause, to which this disease is attributed, perhaps the name is corr. from Fr. ribault, a fornicator. This seems confirmed by the Teut. phrase, Vuyt rabauld, its rei venereas intentus ut enervetur; Kilian.

2. Used improperly to denote the King's evil, Bord. V. Gl. Compl., ibid.

From the vulgar song quoted, it seems uncertain whether the term be meant in this, or the common signification.

The late ingenious Dr. Leyden, in his Gl. to the Complaynt of S., p. 330, has quoted a popular song, "the entire subject of which," he says, "was the ripples, or king's evil." It thus commenced:

I rede ye beware o' the ripples, young man:
—Gin ye tak them in your heid,
They will be your deid;
Sae I rede ye beware o' the ripples, young man.
—Gin ye tak them in your wame,
Ye'll never gae hame;
Sae I rede ye beware o' the ripples young man.

RIPPLIN-GARSS, s. Rib-grass, Plantago lanceolata, Linn., Lanarks. Ripple-grass, Ettr. For.

"Ripple-girre, a broad-leaved herb, which labourers put on cuts;" Gall. Encycl.

[RIP-RAP, adv. With great violence, Banffs.]

RISE, s. A bulrush; or perhaps a coarser kind of grass.

Unto ane muddy mares in the dirk nycht,
Among the *ris*s and reds out of sycht,
Full law I lurkit, quhil vp aalis drew thay.

Doug. Virgil, 43, 9.

Rudd. is doubtful, whether the term denotes bulrushes, or shrubs. But it is most natural to understand it of some kind of grass, as conjoined with reeds. It is evidently the same with Reyss, q. v.

A.-S. riac, juncus, Isl. reis, Moes.-G. raus, arundo.

RISE, RYS, RICE, RYSS, s. 1. A small twig or branch, S.

Although generally rendered as if pl., it most frequently occurs in the sing., when it should be written rise, rys, or rice; and in pl., ryss, as horses for horsses.

Welcum our rubent rois upon the ryce.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 194.

Heich Hutchoun with ane hissill ryss

To red can throw thame rummil.

Chr. Kirk, st. 16.

i.e., a hazel rod.

The kowschot croudis and pykkis on the ryse.

Doug. Virgil, 403, 22.

In these passages it seems used in the sing. Rise signifies branch in some early specimens of E. poetry. V. Warton's Hist., E. P. i. 32.

And therupon he had a gay surplise,
As white as is the blosme upon the rise.

Chaucer Miller's T. ver. 3324.

"Hot peasecods," one began to cry,

"Strawberry ripe, and cherries in the rise."

Lydgate's London Lyckpenny.

Ellis, Spec. E. P. i. 325.

i.e., on the twig.

2. In the pl. it denotes brushwood, or small twigs, S.

Down the thruch ryss ane revir ran with stremis.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 9.

This passage, not understood by Lord Hailes, is evidently, as Mr. Pinkerton observes, "through the bushes." The words have, from inadvertency, been transposed. They are printed in Evergreen, xi. 24. Down throwch the ryes, &c.

The term is also used in Orkney. The branches of heath, juniper, &c., are called the ryes of such a plant.

3. The branches of trees after they are lopped off, S. [V. RISLES.]

STAKE AND RISE, STAIK AND RYSE. 1. Pales for enclosing ground, S.

Formed by stakes driven into the earth, and thin boughs nailed across; in some places, by twigs wattled or intertwined, which is the ancient mode.

"That na man mak heigis of dry staiikis, rise or stikis, or yit of hewin wod, bot allanerly of lyand wod." Acts Ja. II., 1457, c. 94. Edit. 1568.

"Victorine capitane of Britane commandit the Britonis by general edict to byg the wal betuix Abir-corne and Dunbritane with staiik and ryse in thair strangest maner to saif thaym fra inuasion of Scottis & Pichtia." Bellend. Cron., B. vii. 6. Palis audibusque; Boeth.

2. Partition walls on land or in houses. Perthis.

"At that time, the houses in Rannoch were huts of, what they called, Stake and Rise." P. Fortingal, Perth. Statist. Acc., ii. 453.

The same phrase is applied to the partition-walls in many cottages. These are called walls of stake and rise; "i.e., of stakes, and small twigs, ropes or such like, twisted about them, and then plastered over." Rudd. vo. Risis.

3. Metaph. a discourse which is not fully written. A minister is said to prepare his sermons in the stake and ryse way, who writes them only in the form of skeletons, without extending the illustrations, S.

In the Gloss. to Edda Saemund the affinity is remarked between Isl. hris, virgultum, and Heb. מרש, Moresk, which is used in the same sense, as strictly denoting brushwood; (Virgultum densum et implexum; Stock. Clav.) Gr. pos, frutex, L. B. rauseum. Vo. Hris.

Isl. hris, virgultum, Su.-G. ris, id. whence ris-a, to beat with rods; Isl. hris-ar, hrisk-ior, a place beset with twigs or brushwood; sometimes a marsh of this description, palus virgultis consita; Verel. Teut. rysk-en, virgulta, rami; Su.-G. raska, congeries virgultorum. This Seren. (vo. Rush) derives from rask-a, vento agitare. If this etymon be well-founded, we may view A.-S. hrisc-ian, stridere, rispare, as a cognate term. This, again, may be viewed as an oblique use of the old Moes.-G. v. hris-jan, to shake, because of the rustling noise, caused by the shaking of trees, armour, &c.

To RICE the Water. To throw plants or branches of trees into a river, to frighten the salmon, before using the lister. The effect is, that they become stupid and lie motionless, Selkirks.

[To RISHLE, v. a. and n. V. REESHLE.]

[RISHLE, RISHLIN. V. under REESHLE.]

VOL. IV.

To RISK, v. n. [1. To cut grass growing near a dyke, with a corn hook, Shetl. V. REESK.]

2. To make "a noise like the tearing of roots," GL. Burns.

—Thy suld tail thou wad hae whiskit,
An' spread abreed thy weel-fill'd brisket,—
Till spritty knowes wad rair't and risket,—

Burns, iii. 143.

It seems properly to refer to the noise made by bulrushes, and the like, when hastily passed through. V. the preceding etymon.

[RISKINS, s. pl. Coarse grass growing near a dyke, Shetl.]

RISKISH, adj. A term applied to soil, Gall.

"Riskish Lan," land of a wet and boggy nature; the plough rairs and riskis in it when ploughing;" Gall. Encycl. V. RISK, v.

May not the term refer to its abounding with Reesk? V. REESKIZ.

RISKOURS, s. Recourse.

"Thocht the river of Tiber was impediment to thaim to fle abak, yit thay war constrenit to have thare utir riskours to the samin." Bellenden's T. Liv., p. 50.

RISLES, s. pl. [Sticks, cudgels, rough branches; Isl. hris, Su.-G. ris, a rod or twig. V. REESHLE.]

"Shoe [the ship Michael] was ten foot thick within the wallis of cutted risles of oak, so that no cannon could doe at hir." Piscottie's Cron., p. 257. "Outted gests of oak;" Ed. 1728, p. 107.

[In Ayra, a pliant rod or wand is still called a risle or riskle.]

RISP, RISPIE, s. The coarse grass that grows in marshy ground, S.

And hard on burd into the blemit meids,
Amangis the grene rispis and the reids,
Arryvit scho—

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 10.

Rispe is used in this sense in Wallace, Edit. 1648, instead of Reyes, MS. V. REYSS, and RESP.

—"The hay-rope—was made of risp, a sort of long sword-grass that grows about marshes and the sides of lakes." Blackw. Mag., Aug., 1823, p. 190.

"I was among the green rispies of my native fields; and thought I was listening to a voice as sweet as the cushat's croud." Tournay, p. 281.

RISP, s. A sort of file used by carpenters, S. Rasp, E.

To RISP, v. a. 1. To rub with a file or rasp, S. Isl. risp-a, scalpere.

2. To rub any hard bodies together; as to risp the teeth, S.

[3. As a v. n., to grate, to make a grating or rasping sound, S.]

[RISPIN', s. A rasping, grating noise; also, the act of rasping, Clydes.]

RISPINS, RISPINGS, s. pl. Filings; rispins o' bread, crumbs of bread, S.

F

Su.-G. rasp-a, Germ. rasp-en, Fr. rasp-er, Hisp. rasp-ar, Ital. rasp-are, id. Wachter views these terms as formed, by metathesis, from Isl. reps-a, cum aliorum injuria corrudere; and this from Germ. reib-en, to rub.

RISPIE, s. Coarse grass. V. RISP.

RISSILLIS, RYSSILLIS, adj. Of or belonging to Lisle.

"Item, ane coit of riessillis blak freist with ane small waiting tres of blak silk, with buttonis of the samyne." Inventories, A. 1542, p. 86.

"To pay Gilbert Freasyr als mekle Flemyss money as he warit to the said Gilbert on certane blak clayth allegit Ryssillis blak." Aberd. Reg., V. 14, A. 1533.

As many of our ancient names of cloths, colours, &c., are borrowed from the places whence they were imported, and this species of black is distinguished from Paris blak, mentioned in the article immediately preceding; this might be cloth imported from Lisle, a well known city in the Low Countries, the Teut. name of which was Ryssel. V. Kilian, Nomenclat.

RISTLE, s. The name given to a plough of a particular form, formerly, if not still, used in the island of North-Uist.

The ordinary plough is drawn by four horses; and they have a little plough also called Ristle, i.e., a thing that cleaves, the coulter of which is in form of a sickle, and it is drawn sometimes by one, and sometimes by two horses, according as the ground is. The design of this little plough is to draw a deep line in the ground, to make it more easy for the big plough to follow, which otherwise would be much retarded by the strong roots of bent lying deep in the ground, that are cut out by the little plough." Martin's West Isl., p. 53, 54.

Isl. rist-a, secare, excenterare; Su.-G. rista upp iorden, sulcos terras inarare. Thre informs us, that rist denotes "the iron which is fixed before the plow-share, for directing the line of the furrow; being synon. with E. coulter." Lat. rastellum, signifies a small harrow, also a spade, from rado, rasi, to shave. For all these terms, ristle, coulter, (Lat. cultrum, a knife) and rastellum suggest the idea of cutting.

To RIT, RET, v. a. 1. To make a narrow longitudinal incision in the ground, with a spade or other sharp instrument, as a line of direction for future labour, Loth., Ettr. For.

"You had better rit the hail length of the ditch, before ye begin." "An ye will rit the fale, I'll tak them up."

2. To scratch, Loth, South of S.; as, "Dinna rit the table wi' that nail."

RIT, RITT, s. 1. A slight incision made in the ground, ibid.

"Ye scart the land with a bit thing ye ca' a plough—ye might as weel give it a ritt with the teeth of a redding-kame." The Pirate, ii. 23.

2. A scratch made on a board, &c., ibid.

For the etymon V. RAT, which is radically the same.

RITMASTER, s. A captain or master of horse.

"At present there was very little difference between the King's secret council, and Dalziel's council of war. Duke Hamilton was only Rit-master Hamilton, as the General used to call him, Rothes was Rit-master Lealy, Linlithgow was Colonel Livingstone, and so of the rest." Wodrow, i. 271.

Belg. rit-meester, id. Teut. rit-meester, rit-meester, ryd-meester, dux equitatus, magister equitum, from rit, ryd, equitatus.

RITNACRAP, s. 1. Root nor crap, or top, Ayr.

2. Metaph. used to denote a mystery, ibid. In this case probably a negative is conjoined.

RITTOCH, s. The greater Tern, Orkn.

"The Greater Tern, (Sterna hirundo, Lin. Syst.) which is here known by the name of the Rittoch, appears only in summer." Barry's Orkney, p. 303.

G. Andr. gives rit-ur as the Isl. name of the sea-pie; Avis marina, pica marina, vulgo risa, p. 200; According to Penn. in Isl. the Kittiwake is called Risa, Norw. Notterea, Zool., p. 539.

RITTOCKS, s. pl. The refuse of tallow, when it is first melted and strained, Ettr. For.; Cracklins, S. B.

This must be a dimin. from Teut. ruet, sebum, E. suet; rueten keerse, sebaea candela, a tallow candle. In Belg. it is softened into reusel. Isl. ruda signifies rejectamentum.

To RIV, v. a. and n. 1. To sew coarsely and slightly, Shetl.

[2. To enclose, shut up; as is done with pigs or poultry, Banffs.]

3. To rivet, to clinch, Aberd. V. ROOVE, synon.

This might seem allied to Su.-G. rif, ruptura, rifw-a, hiacere; q. to sew so as to leave great gaps or interstices. It appears, however, that the word had originally signified to stitch or sew; for this is the sense of Isl. rif-a—sarcire, resarcire, rif-a saman, consuere. The Isl. term seems now applied to inferior sewing. For Halderson renders it by Dan. stikker, to botch.

[Riv, s. 1. The dawn, daybreak; as, "The riv o' the dim," the first break of the darkness; "The lady hen sings to the riv," the lark sings to the dawn, Shetl.

2. An enclosure for pigs or poultry, Banffs.]

RIVA, s. A cleft in a rock, Shetl.

"He turned from the precipice,—and—proceeded towards a riva, or cleft in the rock, containing a path, called Erick's steps." The Pirate, i. 167.

Isl. ri/a, rima, fissura, from ryf-a, lacerare, rumpere; Su.-G. rif, refwa, Dan. revne, id. E. rift, S. rive.

RIVE, s. 1. A rent or tear, S. Isl. ryf, from rifwa, to rend.

2. The act of laying hold with the teeth, and eating hastily, S.

"We were obliged to ride out to a little hollow place in a wild moor,—where our horses got nothing but a rive o' heather." Perils of Man, ii. 246.

[3. Energetic accomplishment of work, Banffs., Clydes.

4. Much work done, ibid.]

- * To RIVE, v. a. 1. "To plough; spoken of ground that has either long lain in lea, or has never been ploughed before;" S.

I'll hew down the aik, the beech, and ash,
An' rise ilk bonnie green, &c.

Edin. Mag., July, 1819, p. 527.

- [2. To do any kind of work with energy, Banffs. Clydes.; liter. to tear at it.]

- [To RIVE at, v. a. To continue tearing, or working with energy, ibid.]

- To RIVE out, or up, v. a. To break up ground that is very tough, or has been long unploughed, S.

"His hienes and his hienes predecessouris, for the help and relief of his pure commonis in diuers pairtis of this realm, hes reseruit great quantitie of mureis and vtheris commoun landis nawayis disponit in propertie to ony particulare persone, nochtwithstanding quhair-of, diuersa persones hes ryvis out, parkit, teillit, sawin, and laubourit great portionis of the samin commounes without ony richt of propertie competent to thaim," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1600, Ed. 1814, p. 228.

Sw. upri/v-a, to tear up, Dan. rive seems to approach most nearly to this use of the term; At rive skrud op, to pluck or grub up weeds. Isl. rif-a jurtir ur jord, id.

- [To RIVE, up, v. n. To clear, to brighten; spoken of the weather, Banffs., Clydes.]

- [RIVER, s. One who works with energy, Banffs.]

- [RIVIN, adj. Energetic, ibid.]

- RIVE, s. [The sea-shore, reef, landing-place; E. reef; Chaucer uses rivage for sea-shore.]

Now bringeth me attie rice,
Schip and other thing;
Ye se me nevir olive,
Bot gif ich Ysonde bring.

Sir Tristrem, p. 34.

"The sea shore, from ripa, Lat." Gl. Tristr. Perhaps rather from Isl. rif, reif, brevia; q. the place where ships of small burden lie, for receiving passengers, as being shallow.

O.E. "Ryryn to lond as shippes & botya. Applico. Apello." Prompt. Parv.

[Du. rif, a reef, riff, sand; Isl. rif, a reef in the sea; Dan. rev, Sw. ref, a sand-bank: allied to Isl. rifa, to rive, to rend.]

- RIVLIN, s. Expl. "a sandal of raw hide;" Shetl., Orkn.

This is evidently the same with S. rullion. V. REWELYNYS.

- [RIVVOCH, s. Same with RIVA, q.v., Shetl.]

- [RIWELL. Roelle, a sort of buckler, Wallace, i. x. 106, S.

- To RIZAR, v. a. 1. To dry in the sun. A rizart haddock, one dried in this manner, S.

Fr. ressoré, parched, or dried, by the sun.

"A foreign set of gilt glass bottles uniformly made part of the equipage of the breakfast-table; but—the substantialities consisted of rizzart haddies, eggs, ham, wheaten bread, oat cakes, jellies," &c. The Smugglers, ii. 75.

2. Applied to clothes, which have been so long exposed to the open air, as to be half-dried, Roxb.

- RIZAR, s. A drying by means of heat, properly that of the sun, S.

- RIZARDS, RIZARS, RIZZER-BERRIES, s. pl. The name given to Red Currants; uvae Corinthiacae, S.

"There are also at Scalloway some Goose and Rizzer-berrie bushes, which use every year to be laden with fruit, which are a great rarity in this place of the world." Brand's Orkney, p. 80.

"For Rizar Tarts. Strip ripe rizars off the stalks, then lay them in your shapes, with plenty of sugar, cinnamon, and orange peel, so bake them." Receipts in Cookery, p. 19.

I can form no idea of the origin, unless the word be corr. from Fr. raisin; currants being denominated raisins de Corinthe. In C. B. rhesinwydden is a currant-bush.

- RIZZIM, s. A stalk of corn, Aberd.

A.-S. hris, frondes; Isl. hris, virga. But it seems more nearly allied to Teut. recessem, racemus, a cluster.

- To RIZZLE, v. n. To rustle, Gall.

"Rizzling. Any thing, such as straw, is said to be rizzling, when it is free of moisture, quite dry, rustling;" Gall. Enc.

A.-S. hrisel-an, crepitare; but in its form more nearly allied to Teut. ryssel-en, id. strepitu quodam levi moveri, ut virgulae, &c. submissum murmur edere, ut frondes.

- RIZZLES, s. pl. "A species of berry, sometimes—called Russles," Gall. Enc.; probably the same with Rizards, red Currants.

- [RO, s. Any poor animal is called "a poor ro," Shetl. Swed. ro, quiet, rest, repose.]

- * ROAD, s. "Large way, path."

I refer to this E. word, to take notice of some idioms, in which it occurs, that seem to be peculiar to S.

- IN one's ROAD. 1. Applied to one who is deemed a hindrance, incumbrance, or restraint to another. "Ye're like the gudeman's mother, ay in the gudewife's road," S.

In this Prov., Gait is sometimes used for road.

The sense of this adage is illustrated by another: "Happy is she who marries the son of a dead mother."

—"There is rarely a good understanding between a daughter in law and her husband's mother." Kelly, p. 162.

2. I wadna see you in my road. Addressed to one, who, under the pretence of working, is viewed as merely impeding another, S. It is generally the language of an active or impatient person to one who is slow in operation.

OUT OF one's ROAD. 1. Used in a negative form, of one who never loses sight of his own interest, who has the knack of turning every occurrence to his own advantage; as, "Happen what will, ye're never out o' your road," S.

2. Applied to a person who is not easily incommoded, who without disappointment or irritation can submit to circumstances that would be vexatious to others, S.

TO ROAD, v. a. and n. [1. To make a road through, to beat into a path, by frequent passage; as, "The hares hae roadit the corn," Clydes., Banffs.]

2. Applied to small game, which when found by the setting dogs, instead of taking wing, run along the ground before the sportsman, Roxb.

3. To follow game running in this manner, ibid.

Evidently from the E. a. denoting a way.

ROADMAN, s. [1. The person who has charge of the roads in a district, S.]

2. A labourer who works on the roads, mending and keeping them in order, S.]

3. A carter; properly one who drives stones for mending the public roads, Perth.

Had you liv'd lang t've felt the smarts
O' rugged Roadman's whips an' carts,
Sic pain an' drudg'ry you wad thol'd,
You'd cur'd the day that you were foal'd;
Through wind and weet aye draggin stanes
Wi' scarce a hyde to hap your banes.

The Roadman's Horse, Duff's Poems, p. 58.

ROAN, s. A congeries of brushwood, Dumfr.

"All at once the footpath parted with the stream, and after conducting us through a roan of stunted oak and hazel, placed us on a little swelling knoll." Blackw. Mag., Nov., 1820, p. 145. V. ROAN, and ROSIN.

• ROAN, s. [The name given to a roan-coloured horse; also a cow of the same colour, Ayr.]

The caves [calvis] and ky met in the loan,
The man ran wi' a rung to red;
Then by came an ill-willy roan,
And brodit his buttocks till he bled.

Wife of Auchtermuchty, Herd's Coll., ii. 127.

In Lord Hailes' Ed. cow is the word used, p. 217.

[O. Fr. rouën; "Cheral rouën, a roane horse," Cotgr. Mod. Fr. rouan, Span. ruano, Ital. roano, roan.]

ROB, ROBIN, ROBENE. Abbreviations of the name Robert, S.

Robene, Acts Ja. II., Fol. 32. "Robene Gray."

[ROBBIE-RIN, s. Diarrhœa, Shetl.]

ROBIN-A-REE, s. "A game of the ingle-nuit, much like the Preest-cat; only in passing the brunt-stick round the ring, the following rhyme is said:—

*Robin-a-Ree, ye'll no dee wi' me,
Tho' I birl ye roun' a three times and three.
O Robin-a-Ree, O Robin-a-Ree,
O dinna let Robin-a-Reerie dee!*"

Gall. Enceyl.

ROBIN-HOOD. A play condemned in our old Acts of Parliament.

The nature of it is partly explained in the following verses:—

In May quhen men yeil everichone,
With Robene Houd and Littill-Johne,
To bring in bowis and birkin bobbynis;
Now all sic game is fastlings gone,
But gif it be amangs clovin Robbynis.

Scott, Evergreen, ii. 187, MS.

Birkin bobbynis means, the seed-pods of birch. Robbynis may either be ruffians, or denote bankrupts, q. cloven or broken. Fr. Robin is used as a term of reproach. Robin a trouvé Marion, a notorious knave hath found a notable quean. Roben, a short-gown, is used in composition in a similar sense: La sequele au robon, mean tradesmen, the refuse, &c. Cotgr.

Arnot has thrown together the principal circumstances relating to this ancient custom.

"The celebration of games by the populace, in honour of their Deities and heroes, is of the greatest antiquity, and formed the principal part of the Pagan religion. The Floralia of Rome seems to have been continued with our forefathers, after the introduction of Christianity, under the title of May-games. The custom observed at this day in England, of dancing about May poles, and of carrying through the streets of London pyramids of plate adorned with garlands, undoubtedly originated from the same Pagan institution. As the memory of the original heroes of those games had been long lost, it was extremely natural to substitute a recent favourite, in room of an obsolete heathen deity. Robin Hood, a bold and popular outlaw of the twelfth century, by his personal courage, his dextrous management of the bow, and by displaying a species of humanity and generosity in supplying the necessities of the poor with the spoils he had robbed from the wealthy, became the darling of the populace. His achievements have been celebrated in innumerable songs and stories. As for the game which has been instituted to his honour, it is not so easy to describe what it was, as how strongly it was the object of popular attachment.

"The game of Robin Hood was celebrated in the month of May. The populace assembled previous to the celebration of this festival, and chose some respectable member of the corporation to officiate in the character of Robin Hood, and another in that of Little John, his squire. Council Register, V. i., p. 30. Upon the day appointed, which was a Sunday or holiday, the people assembled in military array, and went to some adjoining field, where, either as actors or spectators, the whole inhabitants of the respective towns were convened. In this field they probably amused themselves with a representation of Robin Hood's predatory exploits, or of his encounters with the officers of justice. A learned prelate preaching before Edward VI. observes, that he once came to a town upon a holy-day, and gave information on the evening before of his design to preach. But next day when he came to church, he found the door locked. He tarried half an hour ere the key could be found; and, instead of a willing audience, some one told him, 'This is a busy day with us; we cannot hear you. It is Robin Hood's day. The parish are gone abroad to gather for Robin Hood. I pray you let (i.e., hinder) them not. I was fain (says the bishop), to give place to Robin' Hood. I thought my rochet should have been regarded, though I were not; but it would not serve; it was fain to give place to Robin Hood's men." Latimer's Sermons, p. 73, A. D. 1550.

"As numerous meetings for disorderly mirth are apt to engender tumult, when the minds of the people came to be agitated with religious controversy, it was found necessary to repress the game of Robin Hood by public statute. Acts Mar. 1555, c. 61. The populace were by no means willing to relinquish their favourite amusement. Year after year the magistrates of Edinburgh were obliged to exert their authority in repressing this game. (Council Register, V. iv., p. 4, 30); often ineffectually. In the year 1561, the mob were so enraged at being disappointed in making a Robin Hood, that they rose in mutiny, seized on the city-gates, committed robberies upon strangers; and one of the ring-leaders being condemned by the magistrates to be hanged, the mob forced open the jail, set at liberty the criminal and all the prisoners, and broke in pieces the gibbet erected at the cross for executing the malefactor. They next assaulted the magistrates, who were sitting in the council-chamber, and who fled to the tolbooth for shelter, where the mob attacked them, battering the doors, and pouring stones thro' the windows. Application was made to the deacons of the corporations to appease the tumult. Remaining, however, unconcerned spectators, they made this answer: 'They will be magistrates alone, let them rule the multitude alone.' The magistrates were kept in confinement, till they made proclamation be published, offering indemnity to the rioters upon laying down their arms. Still, however, so late as the year 1592, we find the General Assembly complaining of the profanation of the Sabbath, by making of Robin Hood plays.—Book of Universal Kirk, p. 414." Hist. Edinburgh, pp. 77, 79.

The phrase, gathering for Robin Hood, refers to the custom of a number of people going through the country to collect money for defraying the expenses of this exhibition; as, for purchasing dresses in which the actors were to appear. Ritson has given some curious extracts, on this subject, from Lyson's Environs of London.

"1 Hen. 8. Rec^d for Robyn Hod's gaderyng 4 marks.

5 Hen. 8. Rec^d for Robin Hood's gaderyng at Croydon, 0 9 4

11 Hen. 8. Paid for three broad yerds of roset for makyng the frer's cote, 0 3 6

—Shoes for the mores daunsars, the frere and mayde Maryan at 7d. a payre, 0 5 4

16 Hen. 8. Rec^d at the church-ale and Robyn hode all things deducted, 3 10 6

&c. &c." Ritson's Robin Hood, i. civ. cv.

It might appear, from one expression used by Arnot, that the prohibition of this game was the effect of the Reformation. But the act of Parliament was made against it so early as the year 1551, several years before the general reception of Protestant principles in Scotland. It might give no offence to the court, that this game was celebrated on Sabbath and on holidays. But men of sober minds must have observed, that, however innocent at first view, it had in fact an immoral tendency; as it consisted in the honourable commemoration of the manners of a notorious robber. It has been said indeed, that "the character of Robin Hood and the outlaws of these early ages, when a proper allowance has been made for the violence of an occupation to which the impolitic severity of the laws compelled them, was not such as to awaken in us much disapprobation;"—that he "robbed the rich only," &c. V. Godwin's Life of Chaucer, i. 197, 198. The laws, with respect to the royal forests, were indeed exceedingly severe. But the individual had, on this account, no right to live in a state of rebellion. In proportion as the memory of Robin Hood was regarded by the vulgar, they must have been alienated from subjection to their rightful rulers, when a law seemed severe; and armed against the rich, at least in their inclinations.

There seems to have been sufficient reason for the exercise of civil authority in the suppression of this game. It is natural enough to suppose that villains, taking advantage of the gathering for Robin Hood, would at times carry the matter so far as to imitate this celebrated character in the very mode of gathering. This, we find, was actually done. Knox accordingly gives the following more particular account of the conduct of "the rascall multitude," who "wer steired up to mak a Robin Huid."

"Bot yet they cessat not to molest, alswell the inhabitants of Edinburgh, as divers cuntreymen, taking from thame money, and threatening sum with farther injureis: Quharewith the Magistrates of the toun hiely offendet, tuk more deligent heid to sic as resortet to the toun, and apprehendet ane of the principall of that misordour, named Kyllone, a cordinar, quhome they put to ane assayis; and being convicted, (for he could not be absolved, for he was the chief man that spoylled Johnne Moubry of ten crowns of the Sone) they thoct to have executed judgment upoun him, and erectet a gibbet benethe the croce." Hist., p. 269, 270.

Sir W. Scott has remarked on what is said, l. 13, concerning Fr. Robin; "It is used as a diminutive, denoting a lawyer, or gentleman of the long robe."

This corresponds with the explanation given of the term in Dict. Trev. Se dit pour un homme de Robe ou de Palais; mais c'est un terme un peu méprisant; C'est un Robin, les gens d'épée disent: Voyez un peu ces Robins.

The good Aberdonians had been very zealous in enforcing the Acts of Parliament against this sport.

"Nane to tak upone hand to mak ony conventiounes with taburne, plaing on pype or fedill, or haue anseingyes to convene the quenis legis in chesing of Robin Huid, Litill Johnne, Abbot of ressource (sic), Queyne of Maj, or siclyk to contraveyne the statutis of Parliament." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

ROBIN-RIN-THE-HEDGE, s. "A trailing kind of weed, which runs along hedges;" Gall. Encycl.

[This is the Galium Aperine, Goosegrass, or Cleavers, a common plant in our hedges, and well known by country children, who often amuse themselves by making it cling to one's dress or hair.]

To ROBORATE, v. n. 1. To strengthen, Aberd. Reg.

2. To confirm in whatever way.

3. To confirm in a legal manner.

"To call & roborate." Aberd. Reg., V. 17.

"Peace was roborat with the Danyis in this sort. King Charlis douchtir sailhe geuin in mariage to Roland," &c. Belleuden's Cron., B. x. c. 22.

Lat. robor-are, to make strong; L.B. robo-ratio, confirmatio.

ROCH, ROCHE, ROTCHE, s. A rock, Fr. roche.

Na bridill may him dant, nor bustuons dynt,
Nor bra, hie roche, nor brail stulis stynt.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 94, 20.

"The depe hou cauernis of cleuchis & rotche craggis ansuert vitit ane hie not." Compl. S., p. 59. Roch, Burrow Acts, c. 62. O. E. roche.

In then at the roche the ladies ryde.

Sir Orpheo, Rilson's E. M. R., II. 262.

O.E. "Rock stone. Rupa. Rupes. Saxum. Scopulus." Prompt. Parv.

ROCH, ROCHE, ROCHT, (gutt.), adj. 1. Rough, [coarse, as applied to grass; raw, as applied to hides;] as, "To by thair hyddis roche or sneycht;" Aberd. Reg. V. SNEYCHT.

2. Unshorn, applied to sheep. V. ROUCH, sense 5.

3. Rough or unpolished; "xl. layd of rocht stane acclamyt at him;" Aberd. Reg., V. 16. "Rocht waw stainis," i.e., wall stones, ibid.

ROCH AN' RICHT, adv. Entirely; indifferently well; also, boorish, Aberd. V. ROUCH.

ROCHE, s. Apparently, a cartridge for firing off artillery.

"There was in her—thre or foure last of powder, some croaletis [coralets?], and roches of small ordinance, and eam bisquet, and sic lyk." Bannatyne's Journal, p. 147.

Perhaps from Fr. roch de sue, a composition made of sulphur, saltpetre, charcoal, and gunpowder, used for charging bombs. V. Dict. Trev.

[ROCHT, adj. V. ROCH, adj.]

[ROCHT, pret. Raught, dealt (a blow), Barbour, vi. 626, Skeat's Ed.]

* ROCK, s. A sort of confection; more fully, Gibraltair rock, perhaps from its fancied resemblance in colour to the rocks of that celebrated fortress, S.

ROCKAT, s. A surplice, or loose upper garment, E. rochet; Gl. Sibb.

Sa.-G. Germ. rock, Alem. rokke, A.-S. roce, S. B. rocc-us, Arm. rocket, Fr. rochet, an outer garment, Penn. roucat, the covering of a bed made of skins.

Dan. klipsk, a large salt cod from Iceland, seems to borrow its name from the same circumstance.

ROCK-DOO, s. The wild pigeon, Columba oenas, Linn., Mearns.

It seems to have been denominated from the circumstance mentioned concerning the pigeon by Pennant, that "in the wild state it breeds in holes of rocks, and hollows of trees, for which reason some writers stile it Columba cavernalis." He adds in a note, "The Columba azatalis, a small sort that is frequent on most of our cliffs, is only a variety of the wild pigeon. Aldr. Av. ii. 227." V. Zool., p. 217.

ROCKEL, s. The porch or vestibule, Banffs. V. BUCKIE-TYAUVE.

Perhaps changed from its original application. Dan. rospul, is "a vent-hole for the smoke to go through."

ROCKETY-ROW, s. A play in which two persons stand with their backs to each other; and, the one passing his arms under the shoulders of the other, they alternately lift each other from the ground, Aberd., Tweedd.; synon. Seesaw, E.

ROCKING, s. 1. A name for a friendly visit, Ayrs.

On Fasten-een we had a rockin,
To ca' the crack and weave our stockin;
And there was muckle fun an' jokin.

Burns, III. 235.

V. Append., p. 381.

"There is another custom here, less noted indeed, but seeming of equal antiquity, commonly known in the language of the country by the name of rocking, that is, when neighbours visit one another in pairs, or three or more in company, during the moon-light of winter or spring, and spend the evening alternately in one another's houses. It is here marked, because the custom seems to have arisen when spinning on the rock or distaf was in use, which therefore was carried along with the visitant to a neighbour's house. The custom still prevails, though the rock is laid aside; and when one neighbour says to another, in the words of former days, 'I am coming over with my rock,' he means no more than to tell him that he intends soon to spend an evening with him." P. Muirkirk, Statist. Acc., vii. 612, 613.

In many places in the West of S. the term is now used for a tea-visit among country people. The entertainment is of a pretty substantial kind. Besides tea, there is a service of cheese, of bacon and beef friel, of ham and oat cakes, of wheaten bread and butter covered with carraways, of a kind of plum-pudding, &c. often in succession. These are succeeded by a dram; frequently by punch during the progress of the evening; and sometimes a dance crowns the whole.

2. The term is now generally used to denote an assignation between lovers, Lanarks.

In the upper ward of Lanarkshire, in the winter nights, during moonlight, the servants of neighbouring farm-towns pay one another friendly visits. Some of them have been known to go to the distance of 4 or 5 miles. The maid servants carry their wheels with them, and the men sometimes take a schank. The men of course convey the lasses home, after the rocking is over;—The lasses, in fact, would never go a rocking, if they had not previously trysted with their sweet-hearts to see them home.

ROCKER, s. The name given to one who attends a Rocking, West of S.

"It was the custom at rockings, to entertain each other with stories of ghosts, &c., and he was esteemed the most acceptable rockier, whose memory was most plentifully stored with such thrilling narratives." Edin. Mag., Sept. 1818, p. 153.

ROCKING-STANE, s. A stone so poised by art, as to move at the slightest touch, S.

And still, when blood-drops, clotted this,

Hang the grey moss upon,

The spirit murmurs from within,

And shakes the rocking stone.

Minstrelsy Border, II. 396.

"The rocking stone, commonly reckoned a Druidical monument, has always been held in superstitious veneration by the people. The popular opinion, which supposes them to be inhabited by a spirit, coincides with that of the ancient Icelanders, who worshipped the daemons, which they believed to inhabit great stones. It is related in the Kristnisaga, chap. 2, that the first Icelandic bishop, by chanting a hymn over one of these sacred stones, immediately after his arrival in the island, split it, expelled the spirit, and converted its worshippers to christianity." N. ibid., p. 405.

ROCKLAY, ROKELY, s. A short cloak, S. A reid rocklay, a scarlet cloak worn by women, Ang.

He coft me a rokely o' blue.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 183.

The lasses syne pat on their shoon
Their rokleys and their fine lace.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 91.

"A cloak for a woman." N.

This seems most nearly allied to Su.-G. rocklin, a surplice. V. ROCKAT.

"Luckie Macleary—having put on her clean toy, rokelay, and scarlet plaid, gravely awaited the arrival of the company, in full hope of custom and profit." Waverley, i. 147.

ROCKLE, s. A pebble, Ayrs.

Fr. rockaille, "rocks, rockiness," Cotgr.; O. Fr. rochal, cristal de roche, Roquefort.

ROCKLIE, adj. Abounding with pebbles, ibid.

ROCKMAN, s. A bird catcher, Orkn.; so named from the hazardous nature of his employment, being often suspended from the top of a perpendicular rock.

RODDEN-FLEUK, s. The turbot, also Roan-fleuk, Aberd., Mearns.; Raan-fleuk, Loth.

"By some singular chance, the halibut, a coarse dry fish, is in Scotland styled the Turbot, which in Scotland is called Rodden-fleuk; the last word being a general denomination for flounders and other flat fish." Pinkerton's Geography, i. 192.

"The fish commonly caught on the coast of the Mearns are haddocks, whittings, cod, (here called kiele), ling, halibut, scate, turbot, (called here rodden fleuk, and bannock fluke) and flounders; all of which are in great abundance." Agr. Surv. Kincard., p. 415.

This has been expl. q. red-flounder. Some think that it is designed from the colour of the spots, as resembling Roddens, i.e., the berries of the Roan-tree.

RODDIKIN, RUDDIKIN, s. The fourth stomach of a cow, sheep, or of any ruminating animal, S. the Atomason; the same with REID, q. v.

"What indeed can be more shocking than to be addressed, at a dinner table, by a pair of rosy lips in such terms as these: Pray, sir, allow me to help you, I shall send you a nice piece of ruddikin: pray permit me to add a little of the monyfly." Blackw. Mag., 1817, p. 302.

This seems a diminutive from Teut. rood, id., q. the little stomach, as being that of a calf. V. KIN termin., and MINKIN. Although echin-us, is the Lat. name, we can scarcely suppose so heterogeneous and tautological a mixture, as that this should be combined with the Teut. designation.

RODDING, RODDIE, s. A narrow path; properly that made by the treading of sheep, South of S.

"It is a deep cleuch, wi' a sma' sheep rodding through the linn not a foot wide." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 134. Evidently from E. road.

[RODDING, RODDIN, part. pr. Making roads, as through grass or growing corn, as, "The hares hae begun roddin the corn," S.]

RODDING TIME. The time of spawning.

"It is said that the raising of the Damhead of Partick mill, upon the Kelvin, is the sole cause why the fish come not up in rodding time to the Glazert." P. Campaie, Statist. Acc., xv. 321, V. RED, REDD, s.

RODEN-TREE, s. The mountain-ash, S. B. V. ROUN-TREE.

RODENS, s. pl. The berries of the roan or rowan-tree, S. B.

"You will likewise find in severall places of the country not far from the town, severall sorts of Pinastrea, as also a kind of fruit tree called Cormes, not much unlike our Raun-tree, the fruit thereof hangs in clusters like our Roddens: but of an other colour, and bigness, every one being as big as a plumb." Sir A. Balfour's Letters, p. 31.

Johnstone, Lodbroskar-Quida, p. 82, derives the term, as used in this form, from Isl. rodinn, rube-factus. Hinc, he says, Scot. Roddins, i.e., ruber fructus sorbi.

[RODGER, s. Any animal, person, or thing, that is large and ugly, is so called, Banffs.]

[To RODGER, v. a. 1. To behave like a bully, ibid.

2. To beat severely or cruelly, ibid.]

[RODGERIN, RODGERAN, s. 1. Coarse, rude behaviour, ibid.

2. A severe beating, ibid.]

ROE, s. The sail-yard; Su.-G. ro, segel-ro, id.

"With power—to apprehend their persons, seize on their vessels, and take their sails from their roes," &c. Acts Cha. I, Ed. 1814, VI. 192. V. RA, RAY.

ROEBUCK-BERRY, s. The Stone-bramble berry, S. Rubus Saxatilis, Linn.

"Wild fruits are here in great abundance, such as—bird-cherry called here hagberry, rasp-berries, Roebuck-berries, and strawberries," &c. P. Lanark, Lanarks, Statist. Acc., xv. 25.

"They [roes] feed during winter on grass, and are remarkably fond of the Rubus Saxatilis, called in the Highlands, on that account, the Roebuck Berry." Pennant's Tour in S., 1769, p. 107.

A similar name is given in Sw. to another species of the Rubus, the chamæmorus. It is called hiortron, or the hart-bramble; Linn. Flor. Suec. No. 449.

[ROG, s. A strip, Shetl. E. rag.]

[ROGIT, adj. Striped, ibid.]

ROGEROWSE (g hard), adj. Given to freedom of speech, Roxb.; synon. Out-spoken.

Allied perhaps to Isl. rog-r, calumnia, obtrectatio, roegp-na, mala imprecari, and Aros-a, Su.-G. ros-a, offere; q. to bring forth detraction.

[ROGIE, s. A kind of trow, a supernatural being, Shetl.]

ROICH, s. [A term applied to lands held under the Danish regime; meaning not clear, Orkn., Shetl.]

—"The haill landis callit Vthale Landis, Roich, Anying, samyn, toillis, anchorages, custumes, wattil, foir coipland, settertoun, anstercoip, scattis, land mailis, wrack, waith, wais, wair, and vtheris rychtis and dewteis quhatsomeuir pertening to the saidis erldome of Orknay and lordship of Zetland," &c. Acts Ja. VI, 1612, Ed. 1814, p. 481.

The Vthale Landis are those otherwise called Udal, q. v. Roich may be an errat. for roith, the t being mistaken for a c: for we find that the term Rothmen or Roythmen is used in Orkn. as synon. with Udalen, i.e., says Fea, "self-holders, or men holding in their own right." V. UDAL-MAN. Isl. Roie is expl. by G. Andr., Grandis homo. Or the term might seem allied to Su.-G. raad-a, pron. rod-a, imperare. Roda, however, signifies, Jus nauticum; Verel.

Anying may denote the right of making hay on commons; as allied to Su.-G. ann, foenisecium, from ann-a, laborare, opus rusticum facere. Isl. agn, however, signifies both fishing and hunting; Piscatura, captura ferarum; Haldorson.

Samyn gives the idea of collecting or gathering, according to the universal use of the term in the Gothic dialects. But how it is here restricted, it is impossible to determine.

Foir coipland may denote land subject to the duty denominated Forcop, q. v.

Anstercoip, which is evidently a cognate term, might signify the right of holding a regular market. Anstar loep may literally be translated from the Sw., "what is fitting for a fair" or market; anstar being the third p. sing. indic. of ansta, to fit, to become.

Settertoun may be rendered in different ways. Norw. saeter is expl. in Dan. Graesgang for quaegat pes feldene, i.e., "a pasture" or "grass for cattle in the fields;" Hallager. Isl. saetr-ur, pascua, aestiva pecuaria. Saetr and satur, mapalia. "In the ancient Shetland language, the green pasturage attached to a dwelling was named a Setter or Seater." Hibbert's Shetl. Isl., p. 427. Sw. saeteri, "an estate in the country, endowed with certain privileges, and which according to law can only be enjoyed by Swedish gentlemen;" Wideg. This corresponds with the sense of the initial phrase Uthale landis. Su.-G. sac-tari, villa nobilium, certis privilegiis ornatum; Ihre. Saete, sedes, is the origin. Setter-toun might therefore denote lands, or a village, endowed with peculiar privileges.

Perhaps vais, a term I have not met with elsewhere, is a corr. of vais, i.e., strayed animals.

ROID, ROYD, RIDE, adj. 1. Rude, severe.

The King, that stout wes and bauld,
Wes fechtand on the furd syd,
Giffand takand rowtis roid.

Barbour, vi. 238, MS. also, xv. 54.

[The Cambr. MS. has roundis ryde, great wounds.] Ride has the same meaning.

Yit sal I mak thame unrufe, foroutin resting,
And reve thame thair rentis with routis full ride.

Gawan and Gal., ii. 15.

Thus estere a royd harsk begynnnyng
Happynt a soft and gud endyng.

Wyntown, ix. l. 27.

2. Used metaph. for large; in reference to the roughness of the means employed.

Throu the gret preyas Wallace to him socht,
His awful deid he eschewit as he mocht,
Wndyr ane ayk, wyth men about him set.
Wallace mycht nocht a graith stralk on him get;
Yeit schede he thaim, a full royd slope was maid.
The Scottis went out, na langar thar abaid.

Wallace, v. 77, MS.

A.-S. reoth, rethe, rude, rough. Su.-G. rodia, indeed signifies to cultivate ground by removing trees, shrubs, &c., and metaph. to remove any obstacle. But notwithstanding the apparent connexion between this and the term as used in Wallace, from the allusion to a gap made in a hedge or wall, there seems to be no real affinity.

[ROID, s. Rood, cross, Barbour, xii. 256.]

ROIF, ROVE, RUFF, s. Rest, quietness,

Robene, thou reivis me roif and rest,
I luve bot the allone.

Robene and Makyne, Bannatyne Poems, p. 99.

This is the reading in MS., instead of roiss, as given by Lord Hailes.

This riche rywer down ran, but resting or rove,
Throw a forest on fauld, that ferlye was fair.

Houlate, i. 2, MS.

Fortoun him schawit hyr fygworit doubill face,
Feyll syss or than he had beyne set abuff:
In presouns now delyuerit now throw Grace,
Now at vnes, now into rest and ruff.

Wallace, vi. 60.

Roif and rest is undoubtedly a mere pleonasm, common with S. writers. For the terms are synon.; Alem. ruusa, O.E. row, id. "Row, or ru, also writteu ro. Rest, repose, quietness;" Verstegan, p. 255. Su.-G. ro, Isl. roi, quies.

ROIK, s. A thick mist, fog, or vapour. V. RAK, RAWK.

ROIK, s. A rock.

Na more he said, bot blent about in hy,
And dyd espie, quhare that ane grete roik lay.

Doug. Virgil, 445, 42.

[ROILER, s. A buoy, Shetl. Dan. rulle, Sw. rulla, to roll about.]

[To ROILT, v. n. To jog, to waddle, in walking, ibid. Sw. rulta, to waddle.]

[ROILT, s. A hard-paced horse, ibid.]

To ROIP, v. a. To make an outcry, to expose to sale by auction. V. ROUP.

[ROIPLOCH, s. Coarse woollen cloth, Lyndsay, Syde Tailis, l. 62. V. RAPLACH.]

ROIS, s. A rose.

—Rois, register, palme, laurere, and glory.—
Doug. Virgil, 3. 9.

ROISE, s. Prob., a rose.

The blude of thair bodeis
Throw breist plait, and birneis,
As roise ragit on rise,
Our ran thair riche wedis.

Gawan and Gol., lii. 16.

"Stream?" Gl. Pink. If this be the meaning, it must be the same with what we call a rush, as a rush of water, S. from A.-S. hreoas-an, S.-G. rus-a, to rush. It would then signify, "as a stream rages on the twigs or brushwood."

But properly the allusion is merely to a red rose, when it is ragged, so that its leaves are shed or scattered on its parent twig. Rose on rise is a common phrase. V. Rise.

ROIS NOBLE, ROSE NOBLE. A denomination of English gold coin, formerly current in S.

—"That the gold haue cours in tyme to cum in this wyse, that is to say, the Rois Nobill to xxxv s." Acts Ja. III., A. 1475, c. 83, Ed. 1566.

"Item, in rois nobilis fyfti and four." Inventories, p. 1.

"They called them nobles, because they were made up of the noblest, or the purest metal. These pieces got their names from the devices inscribed on them; so they were called—rose-nobles, from the English rose surrounded with the regalia." Ruddiman's Introd. to Diplom., p. 133, 134.

This coin is also designed "the Inglis Nobill, Henry, and Edward with the rose." Acts Ja. III., A. 1567, c. 22, Ed. 1566; and simply the rose, ibid.

ROISS. Bannatyne Poems, p. 99. V. ROIF.

ROIST, s. A roost.

Thou raw-mood rebald, fall down at the roist.
Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 48.

This metaph. phrase, signifying, "Yield to thy superior," has an obvious reference to a fowl dropping from the roost, from weakness or fear.

[ROISTIT, adj.] Rusty, crazy; roistit hoch, crazy leg. Lyndsay, Answer to Kingis Flyting, l. 54.]

ROIT, ROYT, s. 1. A babbler, Renfr.

Flandr. royt-en, garrire more avium.

2. A term of contempt for a woman. It is often conjoined with an adj. denoting a bad temper; as, an ill-natured-roit, Loth. It is also applied to a female brute, as to a cow. Runt is viewed as synon.

It may deserve to be remarked that Isl. ruta, denotes a woman of a gigantic size; Foeminae Giganteae appellatio; G. Andr., p. 201.

ROK, s. A storm.

A tounschip ay ryding in a rok:—
It may wele ryme, bot it accordis nought.

Doug. Virgil, 183, 30.

To ROLL, v. a. To enrol.

"And that thai roll thar names in ane buke with the maner of thair harnes and wapnis yerlie in euery wapin-schawingis," (sic) &c. Acts Ja. V., 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 363.

ROLMENT, s. Register, record.

—"The Lordis of counsall of before assignit to the said Marione—to bring the rolment of the court autentikly vnder a balyeis scle & the clerkis handis." Act. Audit., A. 1474, p. 36.

ROLLYD, part. pa. Enrolled.

Of archeris thare assemblid were
Twenty thousand, that rollyd war.
Wyntoun, viii. 40. 129.

[ROLLIE-POLY, ROULIE-POULIE, s.] Called also Kayles, a game of nine-pins formerly in great repute at fairs and races, West of S.

Under the name of Kayles this game is well described and illustrated by Strutt in his Sports and Pastimes, pp. 270—1, Ed. 1841. The name rollie-poly, was given to it, because it was played with a pole or cudgel, by which the pins were knocked over. Its other name, kayles, is derived from Fr. quille, a skittle. The number of pins employed in the game varied from three to nine; and the length of the club varied according to the number of pins used.

In the West of S., where this game was in great repute in olden times, it formed one of the chief sports of Fastneen, i.e., Fastern's-een, and was a favourite amusement at fairs and races. The awards for successful throwing were generally in the form of small cakes of ginger-bread, which were powerful incentives to the game, and never failed to attract players in response to the cry, "Wha'll try the lucky Kayles?"

The Roly-Poly of E., as described by Halliwell (v. Dict.), is a different game, being played with a ball instead of a pole. Another form of it is described by Arbuthnot as, "An old game, in which, when a ball rolls into a certain place, it wins." This was prob. the game which Dr. Johnson had in mind, when he derived the term Roly-Poly from "roll ball into the pool."]

[ROLLIE-POLY, s.] "A pudding made in round layers, with preserves or treacle between," S.

This pudding is known by the same name in various districts of England. V. Halliwell's Dict.]

ROLLOCHIN, (gutt.), ROLLYING, adj.] Free, frank, speaking one's mind without hesitation, Ettr. For. A rollochyn queyn, a lively young woman, who speaks freely and with sincerity, S.

Rallack, to romp, A. Bor., (Grose), is evidently from the same origin. These words are perhaps allied to Isl. rialla, vagatim feror, rugl-a, effutire, or Sw. rolig, pleasant, merry, diverting, fond of sport.

G

To ROLP, v. n. To cry, to croak. V. ROIP.

ROMANIS, ROMANY. Satene of Romanis.

"Item, ane pece of tanne satene of Romanis." Inventories, A. 1516, p. 25.

This seems to have been satin made at Rome or in the Roman territory; unless it should be transferred to Roumania. [V. ROMANY, GL. Accts. L. H. Treasurer, Vol. i., Dickson.]

Siricum [for Sericum] Romanum, id est, Siricum, vel seta Romana. Du Cange, vo. Siricus.

ROMANYS, ROMANIS, s. 1. A genuine history.

Lordings, quha likis for till her,
The Romanys now begynys her.

Barbour, l. 446, MS.

"This word Romanys does not mean what we now term a romance, or fiction; but a narration of facts in romance, or the vulgar tongue. This use of the term is the genuine one, while we abuse it. Decrees of councils, and other remains of the ninth and tenth centuries in France, shew that the Francic, or German, was the court language, while the common people spoke the lingua Romana rustica, or romance. When this last language had prevailed, as that of the greater always does, and began to be written, it was long called romance, but latterly French. Such was also the case in Spain and Italy. As tales were first written in romance, the name of the language passed to the subject. Barbour begins, ver. 8, &c., with telling us, that his narration is suthfast, or true: and the reader needs only peruse Dalrymple's Annals, to see the veracity of the most, if not all of it." Note by Mr. Pinkerton, ibid.

2. A work of fiction.

This romanis ar bot riddis, quod I to that ray,
Lede, lere me an vthir lessoun, this I ne like.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, b. 9.

Ital. romanze, Fr. roman, id.

ROMBLE, RUMBLE, s. A blow, a stroke.
V. RUMBLE.

Thar mycht men se a hard bataill,
And sum defend, and sum assaile;
And mony a reale romble rid
Be roucht, thar upon athir sid.

Barbour, xii. 557, MS.

"i.e., many a royal rude blow;" from Belg. rommel-en, to rumble, because of the noise made by the stroke. [Dan. ramme, to hit, to strike.]

[To ROMBLE, ROMMLE, v. a. 1. To stir about, to push backwards and forwards, to shake up and down; as, "Dinna romble the tatties that way," don't stir about the potatoes so, West of S. V. RUMBLE.

2. To clear or cleanse a narrow passage by driving a rod or wire backwards and forwards through it.

3. To smack, smite, or knock about, as, "If ye dinna gie owre your nonsense, I'll romble ye tightly," i.e., beat you severely, Clydes.]

[To ROMBLE, ROMMLE, v. n. To rumble, to make a rumbling sound, ibid.]

[ROMBLIN, ROMMLIN, s. Rumbling, a rumbling sound, ibid.]

ROME, s. Realm, kingdom.

"That the actis and statutis maid of befor, for the haldin of the money in the Rome, &c. and als at the kingis hienes deput—certane ce[r]sours in euerilk town quhilk is ane port, quhilk sal haue power to cerss the salaris and passaris furth of the Rome for hauffing furth of money," &c. Acts Ja. IV., 1503, Ed. 1814, p. 242.

This orthography is evidently from the sound of Fr. royaume, id. Reulme is used in the parallel place, Ed. 1568, c. 102.

ROME-BLINKED. V. BLINK, v. n. To become a little sour.

ROME-RAKARIS, s. pl. "Those who search the streets of Rome for relics," Lord Hailes; or, perhaps, who pretend to come from Rome with relics, which they sell to the superstitious.

And sanis thame with deid mennis banis,
Lyk Rome-rakaris with awsterne granis.

Bannatyne Poems.

q. raiking to Rome. V. RAIK, v.
In O. E. Rome runners.

— There I shall assigne
That no man go to Calice, but if he go for euer,
And all Rome runners, for robbers of beyond,
Beare no siluer ouer sea, that signe of kyng sheweth.
P. Ploughman, Fol. 19, a.

ROMOUR, s. Disturbance, general noise, expressive of dissatisfaction.

"The lordis—deput til avyass sponne the mone considers the grete romour that is past becaus of diuersiteis of payment with in the realme, &c. And for til eschew the romour hereof and to content the commonis," &c. Acts Ja. III., A. 1468, Ed. 1814, p. 92, c. 1. As first quoted here, murmure occurs in Ed. 1568, and afterwards rumoure.

This term has evidently been used in that age in a much stronger sense than that now attached to the E. word; corresponding with Teut. rommoer, romoer, rammoer, rumor, turba, tumultus, strepitus; whence rammoer-en, tumultuari, rammoer-maester, auctor turbarum; Kilian. The Teut. sense, indeed, seems more nearly allied in its signification to some others in Goth. than to Lat. rumor: Su.-G. rom, Isl. romur, clamor applaudentium, rom-a, applaudere; roma, pugna. Roma, says Ihre, concerning the Isl. word, denotat murmur, sonitum, qualis erat scuta percutientium aut alias admurmurantium; vo. Beroem. He views Lat. rumor as a cognate term, but used in a restricted sense, its tamen ut famam fere notet; vo. Rom. A.-S. hraem-an, hrem-an, clamare, vociferare; plorare.

[To RON (long ō), v. a. To plunder, despoil, Shetl.]

[RONIN, part. pr. Robbing, plundering; as, "ronin a bird's nest," ibid.]

[RONIN THE BEE. A rude game. A cazzie or cassie is unexpectedly thrown over the head of a person. When thus blindfolded he is pressed down, and buckets of water are thrown upon the cassie till the victim beneath is thoroughly saturated, ibid.]

RONDELLIS, s. pl. Small round targets, commonly borne by pikemen; Fr. rondelles.

"Ande ye soldartis & compangyons of veyr, mak reddy your corsbollis,—lancia, pikkis, halbardis, rondellis, tua handit sourdis and taigia." Compl. S., p. 64.

RONE, s. 1. "A scurf, a crustation, a scabby scurf.—'Without bleine, or scabbe, or roine.' Chancer." Gl. Lynds.

2. A coarse substance adhering to flax, which in hackling is scraped off with a knife, Perths.

3. Applied to a great assemblage of weeds in a field; as signifying that there is no interval, that they are as it were intertwined and run together; as, "The rig is in a perfect rone o' weeds," Roxb. Also written Roan, q.v.

4. A run of ice, a sheet of ice; properly what is found on a road, in consequence of the congelation of running water, or of melted snow, S.

Ye are the lamps that sould schaw them the licht;
Lo leid them on this sliddrie rone of yce.

Lyndsay, S. P. Repr., ii. 205.

Isl. Araun is used in a sense nearly allied.

"A stretch of lava, or a hraun, of three miles in length, and two and a half in breadth, remains to this day as a monument of it." Von. Troil's Lett., p. 225.

Isl. Aroana, sparsa congeries ex nive, aqua et pulvere, G. Andr., p. 121.

RONIE, adj. Covered with runs or sheets of ice, S.

In the account of a Raid or expedition of the Earl of Huntly against the Earl of Athol, Sir R. Gordon observes:

"This was called the Ronie Rode, because it happened in the winter season, when as the ground was full of ronns, or sheekles of yce." Gordon's Hist. Earls of Sutherl., p. 208.

The term sheekles does not seem to be here used in its proper sense; as it strictly denotes icicles, or ice in a pendant state.

RONE, s. "Sheep-skin dressed so as to appear like goat-skin;" Gl. Wynt.

A rone skyne tuk he thare-of syne,
And schayre a thwayg all at layere,
And wyth that festnyd wp his gere.

Wyntown, viii. 32. 50.

Mr. Macpherson mentions Gael. ron, seal, sea-calf, Sw. rone, boar. Perhaps it signifies roe-skin, from A.-S. ran, Belg. reyn, a roe.

RONE, RON, s. 1. A shrub or bush; pl. ronnyys.

The rone was thik that Wallace slepyt in;
About he yeid, and maid bot litill dyn.
So at the last of him he had a sycht,
How prewalye how that his bed was dycht.

Wallace, v. 357, MS.

The roses reid arrayt the rone and ryas.

Henryson, Evergreen, l. 186.

It is evidently the pl. of this s. which is used by Doug., and rendered by Rudd. "brambles, briars." He seems to have given this sense, to support his derivation from Fr. ronce, id. According to this supposition, it must be a pl. s. But in all the passages quoted from Virg., it may be understood in the more general sense given above.

Small birdis flockand throw thik ronnyys thrang.

Virgil, 201, 19.

The wod was large, and full of bushis ronk,—

Of breris full, and thik thorn ronnyys stent.

Ibid., 289, 53.

— Kiddis skippan throw ronnyys eflir rais.

Ibid., 402, 22.

Thorn ronnyys cannot mean, thorn briars or thorn brambles. It evidently denotes thorn bushes.

The weirld sisters wandring, as they were wont then,
Saw ravens rugand at that rattion by a ron ruit.

Montgomerie, Watson's Col., iii. 12.

Rudd. also refers to "Isl. runne, saltus sylvae." But the origin is runn, as used by the ancient Goths and Icelanders, to denote a bush or shrub. Brinner up runn en; If one bush be in a blaze; Leg. Suderm. ap. Ihre. That hefur Moses audaynt vid runnen; Moses shewed at the bush; Luke, xx. 37. Gloande ellle loga af einum runne; A flame of fire out of a bush; Exod. iii. 3. Slaande hofuodet med ronne; Striking his head with bushy twigs. V. Roenn, Ihre.

2. Rone would seem at times to denote brush-wood, or a collection of bushes.

The lyon fled, and throu the rone rinnand,
Fall in the net, and hankit fute and heid.

Henryson, Evergreen, l. 194.

Perhaps the passage from Wallace, quoted above, should be understood in this sense.

RONE, s. The mountain-ash, or roan-tree.

My rubie cheiks, wes reid as rone,
Ar leyn, and lauchtane as the leid.

Mailland Poems, p. 192.

V. ROUN-TREE.

RONE, s. 1. The spout affixed to the side of a house, for carrying down the rain-water from the roof, S. O.

"There being then no ronns to the houses, at every other place,—the rain came gushing in a spout, as if the windows of heaven were opened." The Provost, p. 201.

[2. An erection made of wood or metal to lead water from one place to another; it may be fixed or movable, West of S.]

Sw. raenna, a spout; takraenna, a spout for the rain on house eaves, Wiedg. from tak, the roof, (whence S. thack), and raenna, a derivative from raenn-a, to run. Germ. rinne, Mod. Sax. ronne, a canal.

[RONG, s. A cudgel, a coarse stick; as, a hazel rong, S. V. RUNG.

"Item, til a wyfe at Baythcat bog, at the king revit a rong fra, xvij. d." Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 180, Dickson.]

To RONGE, v. a. To gnaw, or file.

"That na maner of mane tak vpoune hand for to ronge the croune of wecht, or any vthir gold of wecht throw pretense of this acte vnder the pane to be accusit & punist as falsaris of the kingis grace money." Acts Ja. V., 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 373.

The act ordained that the croune of the sone, i.e., sun, should pass, although wanting a grain of the proper weight. V. RONGED.

RONGED, part. adj. Gnawed, fretted, worn away; Fr. rongé, id.

"Besydis all this, thair clipped and ronged Sollis, quhilk had na passagis thir three years bygane in the realme of France, ar comanded to have cours in this realme, to gratifie thareby hir new comed in souldiours." Knox's Hist., p. 164.

"Forget not the first essay of their good service in Parliament, to God, the Kirk, and the Common-wealth, in giving their votes and suffrages to seventeen erections of the Prelacies and livings of the Kirk in temporal lordships, to attaine thirteenth rounget and dilapidate Bishopricks." Course of Conformitie, p. 43.

RONGIN, pret. Reigned.

"The Pychtis had sum tyme the principall and maist plenteus boundis of al the landis, that ar now vnder the empire of Scottis, eftir that thay had rongin in the samyn, i. m., i. c., ii. yeira." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 6.

RONK, s. "Moisture;" Pinkerton.

For wes he never yit with schouris schot,
Nor yit our run with ronk, or ony rayne.

King Hart, Mailand Poems, p. 8.

I suspect that the word rather signifies deceit; Teut. rancke, fallacia. If moisture be meant, it is probably an erratum for Roik, q. v.

RONKIS, s. pl. Inserted by Mr. Pinkerton in his list of words not understood, seems to signify, folds or creases in a cloak or veil.

Quhen freyndis of my husbandis beholdis me on far,
I have my waltir sponge for wa, within my wide ronkis,
Than ring I it full wylleis, and weitis my cheikis.

Dunbar, Mailand Poems, p. 60.

A crease is still called a rinkle, S. Dan. rincke, Su.-G. rynka, a wrinkle, a fold; Isl. rawga, rocka, id. In Edit. 1508, clakis, however, is the term used.

RONNACHS, s. pl. Couch-grass, Aberd. Mearns; quicken, Ang.

RONNAL, s. The name given to the female salmon or trout, or fish of any kind, Dumfr. They speak of the kipper and ronnal, i.e., the male and female.

From raun, O.E. pl. roan, the roe. Isl. hrognlaegia, placis ovipara, q. the raun-layer. V. RAUNER.

RONNET, s. Rennet, Gall. "Ronnet bags, the rennets for coagulating milk;" Gall.

RONNYS. V. RONE, 2.

RONSY, s. A hackney horse.

He was the ryallest of array
On ronsy nicht ride.

Rauf Coylear, B. ilij. b.

V. RUNSY.

[RONTHURROK, s. The barnacle-goose, Orkn.]

To ROO, v. a. To pluck wool off sheep, Orkn. Shetl.

Isl. ry-a, tondere. So sem sa saudr, eth teiger fyrir theim, ed ryger han; "As a sheep that is silent before the shearer." Isl. Vers. Isa. 53. V. Ihre, vo. Ragg, villus, and Rya. V. Row, Roo, Ruk, v., where the term is exemplified and more fully illustrated.

ROO, s. A heap of any kind, Orkn.

Su.-G. roge, Isl. rok, also ruga, acervus.—As Teut. rock, cumulus, must be viewed as radically the same, it points out the origin of E. rick, S.B. ruck. For rock hoys is a rick of hay, meta fœni. Ihre traces Su.-G. rock, a heap of hay, grain, &c., to roge, as the root.

To ROO, v. a. To pile up into a heap, ibid.

Su.-G. roeg-a seems to have had the same signification. For Ihre mentions roegadt mott, mensura cumulata. Dan. roy-e, to heap up. Ihre remarks the affinity of Lat. rog-us, a funeral pile, properly a heap of wood.

[ROOG, s. A small heap, Shetl.; synonym. humplock.]

[ROO, s. Rest, stillness, ibid. Dan. ro, Sw. ro, id.]

ROO, s. An enclosure in a grass field, in which cattle are penned up during night, Mearns. V. WRO, WROO.

ROOD, s. Sometimes used for ROOD-DAY, or the day of the Invention of the Cross, in the Romish calendar, West of S.

Yet Matron mark'd in homely strain,
The dead man's actions o'er again;
How he, by lore obtained at school,
Each month could count from Rood to Yule.

Train's Mountain Muse, p. 30.

V. RUDE-DAY.

ROOD-DAY, s. The third day of May, S. B. V. RUDE-DAY.

Rood day is used by Wyntown for the 14th of September, or day of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, in the Popish Calendar.

ROOD-GOOSE, RUDE-GOOSE. Apparently the Brent Goose, the Road goose of Willoughby, Anas Bernicla, Linn., Ross.

"During the winter storms, there are shoals of sea-fowls on the coast here, such as wild ducks [ducks], and a species of geese called rood-geese, which are esteemed good eating." P. Kiltearn, Ross. Statist. Acc., i. 265.

"Rude geese and swans sometimes come here in the winter and spring, especially when the frost is intense." P. Kilmuir W., Ross., Ibid., xii. 274.

The Brent goose, in Orkney, is called Raid or Rade Goose; and, like the fowl here described, comes in winter.

Isl. hrotta, anser montanus; also falla rota; G. Andr. p. 124. Haldorson expl. hrotta, anser Scoticus, bernicla. He gives Isl. margaas as a synonym. designation, which seems equivalent to "Sea-goose."

Dan. radgaas, Norw. raat gaas; Teut. rotgans, anser minor, sterilis, Kilian.

[ROODERY, s. A covering of roother (Lepas balanus); also, a place covered with it, Shetl. Goth. hrotta, a barnacle, pl. hrotur.]

ROODOCH (gutt.), s. 1. A deluded wretch; a term of contempt, Ayrs.

2. Also expl. a savage, a monster; a villain, ibid.

[• ROOF, s. The ceiling of a room, S.]

ROOFTREE, s. 1. The beam which forms the angle of a roof, to which the couples are joined, S.

2. A toast, expressive of a wish for prosperity to one's family; because this beam covers the house, and all that is in it.

"Your roof-tree," or, "I drink your roof-tree;" i.e., I wish health to all your family, S. B.

An English writer gives the following account of the origin of this toast.

"The skeleton of the hut was form'd of small crooked timber; but the beam for the roof was large, out of all proportion. This is to render the weight of the whole more fit to resist the violent flurries of wind, that frequently rush into the plains, from the openings of the mountains.—Hence comes the Highlander's compliment, or health, in drinking to his friend. For, as we say among familiar acquaintance, "To your Fire-side," he says much to the same purpose, "To your Roof Tree," alluding to the family's safety from tempests." Burt's Letters, ii. 40, 41.

Sir J. Carr gives a similar account.

"I was told that very far north, when a highland peasant entertains his friends with a cheerful glass of whisky, it is usual as a compliment to the host to drink to his roof-tree, alluding to the principal beam, which by its weight enables the roof to resist the pressure of a mountain squall, and which forms the great protection of the family within from its fury." Caledonian Sketches, p. 405.

I have frequently heard this toast given in the county of Angus. A very intelligent and learned traveller, when speaking of the Athenian Olive in the Erechthéum, says; "The first toast after dinner in a Welsh mansion is, generally, The chief beam of the house." Clarke's Travels, Part II., Sec. ii., p. 501, N.

[ROOG, s. V. under Roo, s.]

ROOK, s. Thick mist, S. V. RAK, s. 3.

Mair scounthry like it still does look;

At length comes on in mochy rook.

The Har'st Rig, st. 81.

ROOKY, adj. Misty, S. A. Bor.

Thare Wallace stay'd, no wise alarm'd or fear'd,

Until the twinkling morning star appeared:

A rocky mist fell down at break of day,

Then thought he fit to make the best o's way.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 330.

The author has undoubtedly written rocky.

To ROOK, v. n. To cry as a crow. The term, however, is more commonly applied in the South of S. to the sound emitted by the raven. Probably from the E. s. or A.-S. hroc, id.

ROOK, s. 1. A disturbance, a sort of uproar. To raise a rook, to cause disturbance, Loth.

- [2. A noisy company, a set of boisterous companions, West of S.

3. Applied to a land, i.e., a house, that is swarming with inhabitants, where there is perhaps a family in each room; as may be found in those districts of a large town where the lowest Irish families congregate, ibid. See next word.]

ROOKERY, s. 1. A disturbance with great noise; as, "He'll gangand kick up a rookery," Loth.

- [2. A lot of old rickety houses huddled together, like a lot of crow-nests; also, a land, i.e., a house swarming with inhabitants of the lowest class, West of S. V. Rook.

3. A house of ill-fame; also, the inhabitants of such a house, ibid.

Those meanings of Rook and Rookery, have no doubt been suggested by the crowing and noise of a large rookery.]

[ROOKY, ROOKIT, adj. Hoarse, Clydes.]

- *To ROOK, v. a. 1. In E. this term signifies to cheat. In S. it signifies to deprive of, by whatever means.

"One mishap befel him after another.—In the course of the third year after his election he was rookit of every plack he had in the world, and was obligated to take the benefit of the divor's bill." The Provost, p. 40.

In this general sense, it might seem to be allied to Teut. ruck-en, detrahere, vellere, avellere; Sn.-G. ryck-a, id.

- [2. As a v. n., to moult, Clydes.]

[ROOK, s. 1. Mould, moulting, ibid.

2. A clearing out, loss of one's stock, as in a game of marbles, ibid.]

[ROOKIT, adj. 1. Cleared out, having lost all; as, "He began to play, and was soon a puir rookit body," West of S.

2. Applied to a bird when moulting; also, to an article of dress that is very bare or too small, ibid.]

[ROOK, s. A thin lean animal, Shetl.]

ROOKLY, s. Used for Rocklay, a short cloak.

Now—tent the beauties of the shade,

The thicket gaudily array'd

In rookly green.

G. Turnbull's Poetical Essays, p. 196.

To ROOKETTY-COO, v. n. To bill and coo, Ayrs.

"So just gang hame—Bell, and bring your laddie, and we'll a' live thegither, and rookettycoo wi' ane another like doos in a doocot." The Entail, ii. 129.

The combination seems unnatural, as the first part of the word respects the noise made by rooks, and the last tones of affection proceeding from doves.

ROOKETTY-COONG, s. Fondling, Ayrs.

"As they say ye're ta'en up wi' Charlie's bairns, I jealousy ye hae some end of your ain for rooketty-coong wi' my wee Betty Bolle." The Entail, ii. 89.

[ROOL, s. A young horse, a year-old horse, Shetl. Dan. rolling, a youngster, stripling.]

[ROOLIE, adj. Peaceful, still, Shetl. Dan. roelig, id.]

• ROOM, s. A possession. V. ROWME, s.

ROOM, adj. Roomy, spacious. V. ROWME, adj.

ROOMILY, adj. With abundance of room, Clydes.

We roomily dwell in the heather-bell,
An' buss wi' the rainbow's hue.

Ballad, Edin. Mag. Oct. 1818, p. 329.

Isl. rumleg-r, Dan. rummelig, amplus; Isl. rumlega, Dan. rummelig, ample, copious.

ROON, ROOND, s. 1. A shred, a remnant, Gl. Shirr. V. RUND.

2. A list, edging, or border of cloth, S.

"A stock of lists or roonds are necessary for the nailing of wall-trees." Neill's Horticulture, Edin. Encycl., N. 562. V. RUND, which is the orthography most expressive of the sound.

ROON-SHOON, ROOND-SHOON, s. pl. Shoes made of lists plaited across each other, Lanarks.; Carpet-shoon, S.B.

[ROON, s. Roe of fish. V. ROUN.]

[To ROON, v. n. To whisper; also, to talk much or often about the same thing. V. ROUN, v.]

[ROON, ROONAR. V. under ROUN, s.]

To ROOND, RUND, v. n. To make a loud hoarse noise in coughing, as when one has a severe cold, Roxb.

Ir. riechnas-ach, to be hoarse. But V. REUNDE.

To ROOSE, v. a. Fish, which are to be cured, are first thrown together in a large quantity, with salt among them, and allowed to lie in this state for some time. This, by the curers, is called roosing them, S. V. ROUSE, v.

To ROOSE, v. a. To extol. V. RUSE.

ROOSER, s. A watering-pan, S.B.

This might seem a figurative term, from the use of water for rousing the principle of vegetation, when it has become languid from drought. But it is undoubtedly from O. Fr. arrouser, arrousoir, Mod. Fr. arrosoir, a watering-pot, from arrouser, "to bedew, besprinkle, wet gently;" Cotgr. Nicol traces the term to Lat. ros, dew.

[To ROOSER, v. a. To water with a watering-pan, Banffs.]

ROOSHOCH, adj. 1. Coarse, robust, Ayrs.

2. Expl. as also signifying "half-mad," ibid.

A.-S. Arusa, rupes, mons praeceptus; Isl. rusk-a, turbare, conturbare.

[ROOSHTER, s. A severe blow, Banffs.]

[To ROOSK, v. a. To frizzle, as the hair, Shetl.]

[ROOSKIT, adj. Frizzled, ibid.]

To ROOSSIL, v. n. To beat, to cudgel, Anandale; the same with Reissil, v. a. q. v.

ROOST, s. 1. This word signifies not only a hen-roost, as in E., but also the inner roof of a cottage, composed of spars of wood reaching from the one wall to the other, S.

2. It is also vulgarly used to denote a garret, S. B.

Isl. raust, Edda Saemund. is rendered an ascent; Su.-G. roste, the highest part of a building, which sustains the roof.

[ROOST. V. ROUST.]

[To ROOT, ROUT, v. n. To roar, bellow, Banffs.]

[ROOTIN, ROUTIN, adj. Roaring, bellowing, ibid.]

[To ROOTER, v. n. 1. To work in a rude, hurried, or unsubstantial manner, Banffs.

2. With prep. up in or on, to build, to make, or to mend in a rude, coarse manner, ibid.]

[ROOTERAN, s. The act of working or patching in a rude way, ibid.]

[ROOTERIN, adj. Rude, unskilful, boorish, ibid.]

ROOTHER, s. A species of shell-fish, Shetl.

"B. Balanus, Rother." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 321.

ROOT-HEWN, adj. Perverse, froward, S. B.

Ye'll see the town intill a bonny steer!

For they're a thrawn and root-hewn cabbrach pack.

Ross's Helenore, p. 90.

The idea seems borrowed from the difficulty of hacking the roots of trees, or of raising them out of the ground. Sw. rothugg-a, to root up; to cut off by the roots; from rot, radix, and hugg-a, caedere, S. hagg, E. hack, hew.

[ROOTSY, s. A red horse, Shetl.]

To ROOV, RUVE, RUIFF, v. a. 1. To rivet, to clinch, S.

"That there be ane prick of iron, ane inche in roundnesse, with ane shoulder under and abone, rising upright, out of the center or middest of the bottom of the firiot, and passing through the middest of the said over-croce barre, ruiffed baith under and abone." Acts Ja. VI., 1587, c. 114. Murray.

In the Act, 19 Feb. 1618, it is rooved; Murray, p. 440. The same, Ed. 1814, p. 536.

2. Metaph. to determine any point beyond the probability of alteration.

"In the mean time, they are so peremptor, that they may pass a vote, declaring the King, for no scant of fault, incapable to govern while he lives. If this nail be once rooved, we with our teeth will never get it drawn." Baillie's Lett., ii. 236.

Sibb. derives it from E. groove. But Fr. river is used precisely in the same sense. Both terms seem to be radically allied to Isl. roo, summitas clavi; Verel. Ferramentum clavi cuspidi tenaci aptatum; G. Andr., p. 200. Rauf, foramen, rauf-a, perforare, might also be viewed as having some affinity. V. NEID-NAIL.

[ROOV'D, pret. and part. pa. Rivetted, clinched.

Two persons once tried who would tell the greatest lie; the first said, "I knew a fellow who made a ladder and went up on it to the moon, and then drove a spike nail right through her face," "O," said the other, "my fellow went up and roov'd that nail on the other side." Gall. Encyc.]

[ROPED-EEN, ROPIE-EEN, s. pl. Sore eyes; the rheumy matter hardened on the eye-lashes, West of S.]

ROPEEN, s. Any hoarse cry.

"The ropeen of the raunyis gart the cras crope." Compl. S., p. 60. V. ROUP, v.

ROPERIE, s. A roperyard, a ropework, S.

The termination here, as in Tannerie, a tan-work, seems to be from A.-S. rice, jurisdiction, dominium; as also in Baillerie, i.e., the extent to which the power of a Bailiff reaches.

ROPLAW, s. A young fox, Teviotd.

Su.-G. raef, Dan. raev, Isl. ref-r, Fenn. repo, vulpes. Pers. roubah, id.

ROPLOCH, adj. Coarse, applied to woollen stuffs.

And gif the wife die on the morne,—
The vther kow he cleikis away,
With hir pure cote of roploch gray.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1582, p. 135.

V. RAPLACH.

To ROPPL, v. a. 1. To draw the edges of a hole coarsely together; as of a stocking, instead of darning it, Teviotd. V. RAPPLE up.

2. Applied to vegetation. Roppled up, grown up with rapidity, large, but not strong in appearance, ibid. Throppled up, synon.

RORIE, RORY, s. The abbrev. of the name Roderick, S.

[RORIE, ROARER, s. A term applied to any thing large of its kind, Clydes., Banffs.]

ROSA-SOLIS, s. The plant called Sundew, Roxb.; an obvious corr. of Ros solis.

ROSE, s. The disease called Erysipelas, S.

"The Erysipelas, or St. Antony's fire—in some parts of Britain is called the rose." Buchan's Dom. Medicine, p. 276.

Su.-G. ros, Germ. rose, Teut. rose, (vulgo rosa, Kilian,) id. The disease has evidently, because of the colour of the eruption, borrowed its name from the rose; as this, according to Wachter, is from Germ. rot; according to Ihre, from Su.-G. roed, red.

ROSE, s. The rose of a rooser, in that part of a watering-pot which scatters the water, Aberd.; perhaps from its supposed resemblance in its circular and convex form, to the flower thus denominated.

ROSE-LINTIE. The red-breasted linnet, Clydes., most probably denominated from the resemblance of its breast in colour to a red rose.

ROSEIR, s. "A rose-bush, arbour of roses; Fr. rosier;" Gl. Sibb.

ROSET, ROSSATE, ROZET, s. Rosin, E.

Full of roset down bet is the fir tre.
Doug. Virgil, 169, 17.

Burns uses rozet metaph. V. DRODDUM.

"Half ane barrell of pik. Ane barrell of auld rosett." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 257.

ROSET-END, s. A shoemaker's thread, S.

Some guns, she threeps, within her ken,
Were spik'd to let nae priming ben;
And as, in twenty, there were ten
Worm-eaten stocks,
Sae here and there a rozet-end
Held on their locks.

Mayne's Siller Gun.

V. ENDS.

[ROSETTY, adj. Tipped or smeared with rosin; as, rosetty sticks, fire lighters, Clydes.]

ROSIGNELL, s. A nightingale.

Syne tuke thame to the flicht,
The Osill and the Rosignell,
The Phoenix and the Nichtingell.
Burel's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 28.

Fr. rosignol, id., although this writer by mistake views them as different birds.

ROSIN, ROSSEN, s. A congeries or cluster of shrubs or bushes, Galloway.

"Rossens, bramble covers, sometimes termed rons, clumps of thorns and briars.—Rossens o' whuns." Gall. Encycl.

"Rob Fisher,—as we came down the green brae,—landed himself in a rossen o' briers." Ibid., p. 264.

Su.-G. ruska, Sax. ruschen, congeries virgultorum. V. RISE, RYS, s. But as the population of Galloway was chiefly Celtic, perhaps it is directly from Gael. rasan, brushwood, from ras, a shrub. This and our Rise are obviously from a common source.

ROSSENY, adj. Abounding with brushwood, Gall.

What notion gart ye croak awa
Sae far's the rosseny Netherlaw?
Gall. Encycl., p. 397.

[ROSIT, s. A disturbance, a quarrel, Banffs. V. ROOST.]

[ROSSHOLES, s. pl. Holes under the timbers of a boat for allowing the water to run along the keel, Shetl.]

ROST, ROIST, s. 1. "Tumult, disturbance;" Gl. Lynds. V. ROUST, v. to cry.

2. An impetuous current. V. ROUST, s. 2.

[To ROST, v. a. To roast, Barbour, vii. 165; part. pa. roestyk.]

[ROST, s. A roast, S.]

ROT, s. Six soldiers of a company.

"To make a complete company of marching men under arms, there must be one hundred twentie six men in armes, being reckoned to twenty-one rots, each rot being six men." Abridgm. of Exercise, Monro's Exped. P. ii., p. 183.

ROT-MASTER, s. A non-commissioned officer, inferior to a corporal.

"Two [of the rot] are esteemed as leaders, being a corporall, a rot-master or leader, and an under rot-master, being the last man of the six in field.—Then in a company you have twenty-one leaders, being six of them corporalls, and fiftene rot-masters, which to close the fields have allowed twenty-one men, called under rot-masters." Ibid.

Teut. rot, turma, manipulus, contubernium militum, decuria; rot-mester, decurio, manipuli praeses. Lat. decurio denoted, not only a captain of thirty-two men, but the foreman or leader of the file, a corporal. Germ. rott-meister, "a corporal, the head man of a file of soldiers;" Ludwig. V. RAR, which seems merely the Scottish pronunciation of this foreign word.

[ROT, s. 1. A line drawn on the ground to mark off the limit of, or as a guide to, work to be done, Banffs.

2. A row; also, a rut, ibid.]

[To ROT, v. a. 1. To draw lines on the soil as guides in planting, sowing, &c., ibid.

2. To rut, to furrow, ibid.]

ROTCHIE, s. The Greenland Rotche, Shetl.

"Alca Alla, (Lin. Syst.) Rotche, Greenland Rotche." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 274.

ROTCOLL, s. Horse-radish, S. B. Cochlearia armoracia, Linn.

Perhaps from Su.-G. rot, root, and koll, fire, q. burning root, because of its pungency; as it is now in Sw., for the same reason called peppar-rot, i.e., pepper-root.

ROTE, s. A musical instrument.

His rote withouten wene,
He raught by the ring.

Sir Tristrem, p. 106.

The rote, and the recordour, the ribus, the rist.

Howlate, iii. 10.

V. CITHARIST.

Chaucer uses the term. Notker, who lived in the tenth century, as Tyrwhitt observes from Schilter, says that "it was the ancient Psalterium, but altered in its shape, with an additional number of strings." According to Notker, the Psalterium was in his time in Teut. called rotta, a sono rocia. V. Schilter in vo. This seems to intimate that the name has some relation to the voice; and in Isl. rodl is rov. L. B. roecta, rota, rotta, Du Cange. Wachter contends, that its true name is crota, or chrotta. It is mentioned by Venantius Fortunatus, who flourished about 580, as a British instrument.

Græcus Achilliaca, Crotta Britanna canit.

Lib. vii. carm. 8.

The crota, as used by the ancient Britons, and by the Welch in modern times, is a stringed instrument, C. B. crioth, a sort of harp or lyre; crythor, one who plays on a stringed instrument, E. crowder. Ir. cruith, a lyre, a violin; cruitare, a musician.

It seems extremely doubtful, however, if the opinion of Wachter, that rotta is the same with crota, be well founded. Ritson derives the term "from rota, a wheel, in modern French vielle, and in vulgar English hurdy-gurdy, which is seen so frequently, both in Paris and London, in the hands of Savoyards." Dissert. on Romance, E. M. R., i. CLXV. N. V. Sir Tristrem, Note, p. 305.

ROTHER, s. "The Rothe of the culwering;" Aberd. Reg.

This probably refers to some sort of wheel employed about a culverin, as that at the lock, after spring-locks were introduced; from. Lat. rot-a, or Fr. rouille, a small wheel.

ROTHOS, s. A tumult, an uproar; a term used in the higher parts of Ang.; synonym. ruthar, q. v.

Its resemblance to Gr. podos, a tumult, noise of waters, (from peo, fluo), must be viewed as merely accidental.

[ROTHYR, s. A rudder, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 378, Dickson. O. Eng. rother.]

[ROT-RIME, s. A piece of literature of little meaning, Banffs.]

[ROT-RIME, adv. By rote, ibid.]

[To ROT-RIME, v. a. To repeat from memory without thinking of the meaning, ibid.]

ROTTACKS, s. pl. 1. "Old musty corn. Literally, the grubs in a bee-hive;" Gl. Popular Ball.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 293.

[2. Any thing that has been laid past till it has become musty, Banffs.]

ROTTON, ROTTAN, ROTTEN, s. 1. A rat, S. B.

"In this cuntrie [Buquan] are no Rottens scene at any time, although the land be woonderfull fertill." Descr. of the Kingdom of Scotland. V. RATTON.

"Glis, a rotten." Wedderburn's Vocab., p. 15.

[2. Any animal small of its kind, Banffs.

3. A person of small stature, with dark complexion and a profusion of hair, Clydes., Banffs.

4. A term of endearment, ibid.]

ROOF ROTTEN. The Black rat, Mus rattus, S.

"M. rattus, Black Rat.—S. Black rotten, Roof Rotten." Edin. Mag., July, 1819, p. 506.

One of the oldest streets in Glasgow is called the Rotten-row; the name of which some might be disposed to deduce from the abundance of rots. But a very ingenious idea is thrown out in a work lately published.

"Its name is the Rotten-row.—It comes, I doubt not, from the same root with routine, and signifies nothing more than the row or street of processions. It was here that the host and the images of the saints were carried on festivals, with all the usual splendour of Catholic piety. The same name, derived from the very same practice still subsisting, may be found in many towns in Germany. I remember, in Ratisbonne in particular, a Rotten-gasse, close by the Cathedral; and, over all Germany,—the canon who walks first on those occasions, bears a title of the same etymology, that of Rott-meister, literally procession-leader or master." Peter's Lett., iii. 167.

ROTTEN-FAW, s. A rat-trap.

[ROTTYN, adj. Rotten, Barbour, xix. 178.]

ROUBBOURIS, ROWBOURIS, RUBBOURIS, s. pl. [Kegs, barrels; also, hampers.]

—Sa the King gart euerie day
Befoir Bell and his altar lay
Fourtie fresche wedderis fat and fyne,
And sex greit roubbouris of wicht wyne.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 64.

[Lit. oaken casks, kegs, or kids, from Lat. robur, oak, or made of oak; but the term may here mean wine measures, or oaken kids. That the rubbour was not a cask or barrel is shown by the following entries in the Accts. of the Lord High Treasurer for the year 1494 (Vol. I., p. 252, Ed. Dickson) in the list of expenses of a Row-barge then in course of construction:

"Item, for ane barrell of ter, xvj s."

"Item, for ane rubbour to the ter, xiiij d."

Evidently, the rubbour was some kind of vessel into which the tar could be emptied for use: something like a kid. And this rendering is confirmed by the quotation given below; but in the Glossary it is rendered, "a hamper or keg."

On occasion of the assembling of the "great oist of Scotland" at Rossling mure, September 1, 1522, the Duke of Albany, as governor of the Kingdom in the King's name, charges the Stewart and Chamberlane of Strathern to hold "our Stewart and Chamberlane courtis of Strathern; and be equale modification among our tenentis of our landis & lordschip of Strathern provide xxxi Carriage hors furnist with lang sadillis, gadmusis, and all vther thingis necessar for carying of rubbouris, crelis & vtheris Carriage, with able personis to pas with thame furnist with vittale & expens for the space of xxxi days eftir ther cummyng to Roslyn Mure."—At Elinburgh, Aug. 5. 1522.—Orig. in Charter Room at Drummond Castle.

ROUGH, adj. 1. Rough, S.

—Persant the mornynge bla, wan, and har,—
The sulye stiche, hazard, rough and hare.
Doug. Virgil, 202, 27.

2. Hoarse, S. Germ. Ein rauher hass, hoarseness; literally a rough hass, or throat.

This, although apparently only a peculiar use of rau, hirsutus, greatly resembles Lat. rauc-us. V. ROULK.

3. Plentiful. A gude rough house, a house where there is abundance of provisions, S.

"He has a hole under his nose, that will never let him be rough;" S. Prov., Kelly, p. 145. "Plentiful," N.

The term is used, in conjunction with another, in a proverbial phrase; "They do nae keep a genteel house, but they have ay plenty of rough and round;" Clydes. Perhaps rough here denotes the plainness of the food; as round undoubtedly conveys the idea of abundance; corresponding to Su.-G. rand, bountiful, liberal, Wideg., largus, liberalis, Ihre. The last-mentioned writer views the term as allied to A.-S. rum, whence rumedlice, liberaliter, rumgifu, liberalis. But round, E. is used in the sense of large, as "a good round sum." V. Johnson. The Fr. say, Tenir table ronde, to keep open table. This, however, may be viewed as borrowed from the romantic histories of King Arthur.

"The feast was, indeed, such as the country itself furnished; for plenty of all the requisites for a rough and round dinner, were always at Duncan of Knock's command." Heart M. Loth., iv. 183.

4. As denoting immoral conduct. A profane swearer, a drunkard, &c., is called a rough, or a rough-living man, S.

5. Unshorn.

"That William Wauche of Dawik sall content & pay to William lord Borthwik tene score of gud and sufficient rough wedderis and yowis," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1489, p. 140.

That this is the signification is obvious from this term, though with a different orthography, being elsewhere contrasted with Clippit.

"That Johnne of Hamiltoun—sall restore—to maister David Cunynghame, &c. sevin score of yowis clippit, five score of gymmer and dymmont roche, price of the pece ovr hede thre schillings." Ibid., A. 1493, p. 179.

[ROUGH AN' READY, adj. With abundance, but no ceremony; as, a rough-an-ready dinner, Clydes. Similar to rough an' roun. V. under 3, s.]

ROUGH and RICHT, adv. 1. Entirely, Ang.

And tak her a' together, rough and richt,
She wad na been by far four foot of height.
And for her temper, maik she could hae nae,
She'd gar twa paps cast out on ae breast-lane.
Ross's Helenore, p. 35.

2. Expl. "indifferently well;" Aberd.

ROUGH, s. The coarser, also, the greater part of any thing, is vulgarly called the rough o't, S. O.; q. the rough part of it.

To ROUGH, v. a. To fit the shoes of a horse for going on ice; Raucht, frosted, Lothl.

ROUGH-HANDIT, ROUGH-HANDED, adj. Daring, violent, South of S.

"Being interrogated why he did not enter the said cottage, declares he had no warrant so to do; and that as Mucklebucket and his family were understood to be rough-handed, he, the declarant, had no desire to meddle or make with their affairs." Antiquary, iii. 177.

ROUGHNESS, s. Full house-keeping; as, "There's ay a deal o' roughness about you house;" S.

ROUGH-RIDER, s. A breaker of horses, S.

"He disappeared out of the avenue, from the wondering eyes of Mysic, who kept exclaiming, 'Safe us—he's like a rough-rider!'" M. Lyndsay, p. 294.

H

ROUCHSOME, adj. 1. Having some degree of roughness, S.

2. Rough in manners, unpolished, rustic, S.

ROUGH-SPUN, ROUGH-SPUN, adj. Rude, having coarse manners, S.

"It was under the command of Hab Elliot that I made my first raide; a gay rough spun coat he was, and nae cannie hand for a southland valley." Perils of Man, ii. 223.

[Roucht is used in a peculiar sense in the following passage.

For war yone deuillis hund away,
I roucht nocht off the lave perlay.
Barbour, vii. 24.

i.e., I should not reck, &c., being the pres. subj.]

ROUDES, adj. Expl. "haggard."

She has put it to her roudes lip,
And to hir roudes chin;
She has put it to her fause fause mouth,
And the never a drop gaed in.
Minstrelsy Border, ii. 136.

V. the s.

ROUDES, s. An old, wrinkled, ill-natured woman, Fife; pron. rudes.

Sae grey a gate! mansworn! and a' the rest!—

Ye lied, auld roudes.

Auld roudes!—filthy fellow, I shall auld ye.
Ramsay's Works, ii. 147, 149.

The termination indicates a Fr. origin; perhaps rudesse, harshness, austerity.

This term in the South of S., particularly in Roxb., denotes a strong masculine woman.

ROUDOCH, ROODYOCH, adj. Having a sour look, or sulky appearance, Ayrs.

This seems originally the same with the adj. Roudes.

ROUEN, part. pa. Rent, torn, riven; especially applied to old pieces of dress, and to wooden dishes when split, Roxb.

Isl. riuf-a, Su.-G. riw-a, lacerare.

ROUGHIE, s. 1. A torch used in fishing under night, Eskdale; elsewhere called Ruffie.

"I'm well convinced Gabriel dropped the roughies in the water on purpose—he does na like to see any body do a thing better than himsell." Guy Mannering, ii. 69.

"I wonder whether this is mair pleasing to heaven than when it was lighted up wi' lamps, and candles nae doubt, and roughies, and wi' the mirth [apparently meant as a misnomer of myrrh], and the frankincense that they speak of in the Holy Scripture." Antiquary, ii. 152, 153.

2. It seems used to denote brushwood in general.

"She began to make a bustle among some brushwood which was now heaped in the cave.—"What makest thou there?" "Laying the roughies to keep the cauld wind frae you, ye desperate do-nae-good. Ye're e'en owner weel off, and wots na; "it will be otherwise soon." Guy Mannering, iii. 234.

In Gloss. to the Antiquary it is expl. as also signifying "heath." This evidently belongs to the secondary sense here given.

Shall we suppose that a torch of this kind receives its denomination, as composed of rough materials, and coarsely formed; or rather, as having been originally made of brushwood? If the latter be preferred, we should view this as the primary signification of the term.

To ROUK, ROWK, v. n. "To lie close, to crouch;" Gl. Sibb.

Thair was na play bot Cartis and Dice,
And ay Schir Flatterie bare the price;
Roundland and rowkand ane till ane vther;
Tak thow my part (quod he) my brother,
And mak betuix vs sicker bandis,
Quhen ocht sall vaik amangis our handis,
That ilk man stand to help his fallow.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 286.

If we could suppose that it signified "to lie close, to crouch," it would be most natural to view it as allied to Isl. ruk-a, coarctatio, junctis genu calcibus sedentis; G. Andr. But rowkand and roundant seem to be perfectly synon.; both signifying whispering. V. ROWKAR.

ROUK, s. Mist, S.

Roke was used in the same sense in O. E. "Myst or roke. Nubula [r. nebula]." Prompt. Parv. "Myst or roty. Nubulosus [r. nebulosus]." "Roke, myst. Nebula. Mephis.—Roky or mysty. Nubulosus." Ibid.

Houlate, i. 4.

In MS. rolk. Fr. rauque, Lat. rauc-us. L is often inserted after u, and sometimes instead of it; is souplit for soupit.

To ROUM, v. a. To find place for. V. SOUM and ROUM.

[ROUN, adj. Round, S.; also, in lumps, as, roun coal, coal in lumps for household use, in opposition to smā' coal, for furnaces, Clydes.]

ROUN, ROUNE, s. 1. Letters, characters.

Tristrem was in toun;
In boure Ysonde was don;
Bi water he sent adoun,
Light linden spon;
He wrot hem al with roun,
Ysonde hem knewe wel sone.

Sir Tristrem, p. 115.

Here we find a very ancient Northern word, used, most probably, in its primary sense; A.-S. Isl. run, Su.-G. runa, litera, character. This term, because the ignorant were filled with admiration at the use of letters, which were thence a powerful mean of imposition in the hands of the designing, was transferred to magical characters. The idea may, however, be inverted. It may be supposed, that, as those, who have pretended to divine, have generally used some mysterious characters, or hieroglyphics, it was eventually used to signify letters in general.

Various etymons have been given of the word, which may be seen in the learned Ihre's Gloss. He derives it from run-a, to whisper. But perhaps the v. was rather derived from the s., as Moes.-G. run-a, C. B. rhin, Ir. run, denote a secret, a mystery; and, according to Pezron, Celt. rhyn-ia signifies magical secrets. V. Keyser, Antiq. Septent., p. 462.

Obrien, vo. Run, observes, that "if Olau Wormius had known that run is the common and only word in the old Celtic or Irish, to express the word secret, or mystery, it would have spared him the trouble of the long dissertation in the beginning of his book, de Literatura Runica, to account for the origin of the word Runae, which was a mysterious or hieroglyphic manner of writing used by the Gothic Pagan Priests, as he himself observes in another place."

Although the term occurs in some of the Celtic dialects in one sense, it is most probable that it is originally Gothic; as it is not only found in almost all the Gothic dialects, but found with a variety of cognates or derivatives. V. ROUN, v.

2. A tale, a story, a narrative.

Marke schuld yeld, unholt,—
Thre hundred ponde al bouu,
Of moné of a mold,
Thre hundred ponde of latoun,
Schuld he;
The ferth yere, a ferly roun /
Thre hundred barnes fre.

Sir Tristrem, p. 52.

i.e., "The fourth year, he should deliver three hundred noble children; a marvellous story!"

In the following passage, roune may signify either characters, writing, or tale, narrative.

I was at [Erceidoun];
With Thomas spak Y thare;
Ther herd Y rede in roune,
Who Tristrem gat and here.

Ibid., p. 9.

3. It seems to be used, in a loose sense, for speech, mode of expression, in general.

"Hunters whare be ye,
The tokening schuld ye blowe.—
Thai blewen the right kinde,
And raddle the right roun."

Sir Tristrem, p. 32.

To ROUN, ROUNE, ROUND, ROWN, v. n. 1. To whisper.

Mekeliche he gan mele,
Among his men to roun;
He bad his knightes lele,

2. It is expl., although I hesitate as to this use of it, to "mutter like a Runic inchanter;" Gl. Ant.

It occurs in various O. E. writings. Randolph uses it as broadly as if he had been a native of Scotland.

"These two things I have oft fear'd in her Grace; and found it now needful to speak a little word thereof, because of the French, that are daily rounding in her lugs some tittle-tattles or other." Lett. to Cecil, 1562. Keith's Hist., p. 232.

[ROUNALL, s. V. under ROUN.]• ROUND, adj. Abundant, plentiful. V. ROUCH, sense 3.• ROUND, ROUNDE, s. 1. A circular turret of a castle; denominated from its form.

"So he locked the deponer in the round within the chamber, and tooke the key with him. Shortly thereafter, the maister returned, and the king's majestie with him to the said cabinet in the rounde; and the maister opening the doore, entered with the king into the said rounde." Henderson's Deposition, Moyse's Mem., p. 304, 305.

From the same origin with the E. s. Fr. ronde, a circle.

2. A semicircular dike or wall, made of stone and feal, used as a shelter for sheep, *Roxb.*3. A merry dance, "in which the body makes a great deal of motion, and often turns round," Rudd.

Vpster Troyanis, and syne Italianis,

Doug. Virgil, 476, 2.

"The country swains and damsels," says Rudd, "call them S. roundels, not much unlike the Lydian measures of the Ancients."

Doug. mentions roundis, 402. 33, as if different from ringis, although they are certainly the same. Fr. dance à la ronde. V. RING DANCIS.

4. The tune appropriated to a dance of this kind.

Sum sang ring sangis, dancis, ledis, and roundis,

Doug. Virgil, 402, 33.

ROUND-ABOUT, s. 1. A name given to a circular fort or encampment.

"There are a great many *round-about*s in the parish, commonly called Picts Works. They are all circular and strongly fortified by a wall, composed of large stones." P. Castletown, Roxburghs. Statist. Acc., xvi. 84. V. RING, s. id.

2. A fire-place or chimney, of a square, or rather of an oblong form; in which the grate is detached from the walls, and so placed that persons may sit around it on all sides, S.

"The round-about fireside (still by much preferred where there are a number of farm servants and certainly by far most preferable, but for the difficulty of keeping them clear of smoke) was universally in use in the kitchen; that is, a circular grate placed upon the floor about the middle of the kitchen, with a frame of lath and plaster, or spars and matts, suspended over it, and reaching within about five feet of the floor, like an inverted funnel, for conveying the smoke; the whole family sitting round the fire within the circumference of the inverted funnel. Here was placed the judeman's resting chair or wooden sofa, upon which he sat or reclined after the fatigues of the day, listening, in those times, so dearthful of intelligence, to the news collected by the wandering beggar, or feasting his imagination upon the wonders of the lame soldier or sailor who had visited foreign countries." Pennock's Descr. Tweedd., Ed. 1815, N. p. 82, 83.

I do not recollect having seen the grate carried so far out as the middle of the kitchen: It is usually on one of the gable-ends; the wall forming a back to the seat which is immediately behind the fire. In many instances the roundabout is formed by a square projection from the gable.

3. An oatcake of a circular form, pinched all round with the finger and thumb.

"Think ye that, at will, Ducholly can—gie ye nackets and *round-about*s to your coffee and clarified whey?" Tournay, p. 31.

ROUNDAL, s. A kind of poetical measure, generally consisting of eight verses, in which the two last rhyme with the two first, and the fourth also corresponds to the first.

Rudd. views this word as somewhat different in signification from E. roundel.

The railyeare rekkinis na wourdis, bot ratlis furth rauys,
Fule rude and ryot resouns baith roundalis and ryme.

Doug. Virgil, 238, b. 22.

Fr. rondeau, "a rhyme or sonnet that ends as it begins;" Cotgr. Teut. rondeel, L. B. rondeletus, rhythmus orbicularis; Hisp. rondelet, circularis cantilena, Du Cange. The origin is evidently Fr. round, round.

ROUNDEL, s. A table, a board.

"I meane—by such kinde of charmes as commonly daft wices use, for healing of forsoken goods, for preserving them from euill eyes, by knitting roun-trees, or sundriest kind of hearbes, to the haire or tailes of the goods." K. James's Daemonologie, p. 100.

In my plume is seen the holly green,
With the leaves of the rouan tree;
And my casque of sand, by a mermaid's hand,
Was formed beneath the sea.

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 392.

The term roan-tree seems to have been formerly used in E. For, although not found in modern dictionaries, it is mentioned by Skinner.

Skinner is uncertain whether it may not receive this name from the colour called roan. But it is a Goth. term. Su.-G. ronn, runn, sorbus aucuparia, Dan. ronne, id. ronneber, the berries of the mountain-ash.

Ihre observes, that, among the ancient Goths and Icelanders, runn, denoted a shrub or bush, and supposes that, as a shrub springs up in a variety of shoots, which is often the case as to the roan-tree, it retained the name from this circumstance. He mentions another conjecture, which is far more probable, that this tree received its name from runa, incantation, because of the use made of it in magical arts.

The superstitious use of the Mountain-ash gives great probability to this etymon. Even in our own country, there are still some so attached to the absurd usages of former times, that, in order to prevent the fatal effects of an evil eye, to which they ascribe any misfortune that befalls their cattle, they cut a piece of this tree, peel it, tie a red thread round it, and put it on the lintel of the byre, or cow-house. Then, it is supposed, their cattle are proof against skaitth. Rouen-tree, id., Yorks., Marshall.

"The most approved charms against cantrips and spells was a branch of rouan-tree plaited, and placed over the byre door. This sacred tree cannot be removed by unholy fingers." Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 290.

Hence the traditionary rhythm;—

Roan-tree and red thread,
Puts the witches to their speed.

V. Huddleston's Notes to Toland's Hist. of the Druids, p. 233. In Loth. Ran-tree is the pron. Sometimes it was worn about the body.

—Ye, see droll, begin to tell us,
—How the aulic uncanny matrons
Grew whiles a hare, a dog, or batrons,
To get their will o' carles sleepan,
Wha has nae stauks o' roun-tree keepan,
Ty'd roun' them, whan they ride or sail,
Or sew't, wi' care, in their sark tail.

Picken's Poems, 1783, p. 59.

*"Alluding to the vulgar opinion of roun-tree being efficacious against all sorts of charms." N. V. RAN-TREE.

The ancient Skaldic writers celebrate a favourite tree of the ash genus, under the name Ygdrasil. In the Edda Saemundi it is said;—

Aser Ygdrasil

Hann ex æstu ritha.

Grinnis-Mal, str. xliii.

"The ash of Ygdrasil, that is the most excellent of trees." V. also str. xxxii. This tree was considered as sacred. In that very ancient poem, the Voluspa, it is poetically exhibited as the parent of the showers which descend into the valleys.

*Ask veit eg standa hettar ygdrasil,
Thaddan koma doeggvar thærs i dule fulla, &c.*

*Ego fraxinum scio exstare Ygdrasil vocatam, ———
Inde imbres ortum trahunt qui in valles decidunt.*

Voluspa, str. xix.

In Rosenius's edition of the Edda, a long description is given of it in Fable xiv. Under this tree it is said that the gods daily sit in judgment; that its branches extend throughout the world; that they shade heaven itself, &c. &c.

Gudm. Andr. in one place expl. Ygdrasels, arbor scientiae, (vo. Aska); in another Askin Ygdrasil, arbor mythologica Eddae, p. 136. He renders the term, quasi Othini jumentum, vel vehiculum; Ygg-r being the chief and proper name of Odin, as denoting that he is the object of fear. A curious reason has been given for its receiving the designation of Odin's horse or chariot; as if he had learned the Runic mysteries, when suspended from it;—quod forte Odinus ex ea suspensus fuerit, cum runis disceret. Gl. Edd. Saemund. vo. Droevill.

It has been said, that the Ygdrasil of the Edda is the mountain-ash; and, on the ground of this assertion, supposed that the superstitions, still connected with this tree in our own country, may be regarded as minute vestiges of the Gothic mythology. I have nothing to offer in opposition to this idea. On the contrary, it seems to carry a high degree of probability; not merely from the great proximity of the Su.-G. name of the tree to the term denoting magic, but from its use in regard to incantation. I find, however, no direct proof in any Icelandic work which I have had an opportunity of consulting, that our Ronn-tree is the species of ash so highly honoured under the name of Ygdrasil.

This charm is especially observed in Angus on the evening preceding Rook-day, (May 3d). They often also tie these branches round their cattle with scarlet threads. On this day, for preventing the power of witchcraft, some old women are careful to have their rocks and spindles made of the wood of the roan-tree.

The first of these customs has considerable analogy to one observed by the ancient Romans, in their Palilia, or Feast celebrated in the end of April, for the preservation of their flocks. The shepherd, in order to purify his sheep, was, in the dusk of the evening, to bedew the ground around them with a wet branch, then to adorn the *fold*s with leaves and green branches, and to cover the doors with garlands. He was also to touch his sheep with smoking sulphur, so as to make them bleat, and to burn the male olive, fir, sabine and laurel. V. Ovid. Fast., Lib. iv.

"It is probable that this tree was in high esteem with the Druids; for it may to this day be observed to grow more frequently than any other tree in the neighbourhood of those Druidical circles of stone so often seen in North Britain; and the superstitious continue to retain a great veneration for it, which was undoubtedly handed down to them from early antiquity.—Their cattle,—as well as themselves, are supposed to be preserved by it from evil; for the dairy-maid will not forget to drive them to the shealings or summer pastures with a rod of the Roan-tree, which she carefully lays up over the door of the sheal booth, or summer-house, and drives them home again with the same. In Strathspey, they make for the same purpose, on the first day of May, a hoop of the wood of this tree, and in the evening and morning cause all the sheep and lambs to pass through it." Lightfoot, p. 257.

To ROUP, ROWP, ROPE, ROIP, ROLP, &c. n.

1. To cry, to shout.

Warton, when referring to this passage, by mistake renders the word ramp; Hist. E. Poet., iii. 109.

2. It occurs in a peculiar sense, either as denoting an incessant cry, or perhaps hoarseness of voice, as the adj. roupy is now used, S.

The Rauls come roipand quhen he hard the rair,

Test. roep-en, clamare, clamorem edere, tollere vocem, clamitare, Germ. ruff-en. Rudd., having mentioned these verba, refers also to Isl. raup, jactantia, raupare, jactator, and hroop, clamour. The two former may perhaps be allied; because of the noise often made by a boaster or braggart. He has not, however, observed that Isl. Su.-G. rop-a is synon. with roep-en;
Alem. ruaf-an, ruof-en. The oldest form of the v. is in Moes.-G. hrop-jan, q/hrop-jas, clamare, exclamare.

Hence Belg. wt-roep, an outcry, Sw. utrop, Germ.
aus-rauf, id. Test. wt-roep-en, Sw. ut-rop-en, to proclaim.

A.-S. hroep-an, clamare. I know not, if we should view as a cognate the v. hrop-an, Lake xviii. 5, to vex, to molest; q. by importunate crying. Hickes mentions
E. outroeper, as signifying a herald. Rope, as used in Ywaine, cannot be viewed as a proof that the v. was
O. E. For it is undoubtedly a S. poem.

- ROUPER, s. 1. One who cries.

Land-louper, light Skouper, ragged Rouper like a raven.
Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 30.

2. The term rouper is still in use, as denoting the person who sells his goods by outcry, S.

"A rouper is pursuing his interest, when he pays the bell-man to intimate his roup; and you will pursue your interest, when you pay the same bell-man to cry at the kirk-door, 'Beware of roups.'—You have a better right to keep your money than the rouper hath to wrest it from you." Thom's Works, p. 447.

- ROUPING-WIFE, s. A female who attends outcries, and purchases goods, for the purpose of selling them again, S.

"In 1783,—the Lord Justice-Clerk Tinwald's house was possessed by a French teacher. Lord President Craigie's house by a rouping-wife or sales-woman of "An unco thing this, Mrs. Howden," said old Peter Plumdamas to his neighbour the rouping-wife, or sales-woman,—"to see the grit folk at Lunnoun set their face against law and gospel, and let loose sic a reprobate as Porteous upon a peaceable town." Heart Mid-Loth., i. 99.

- ROUP, s. 1. Hoarseness, S. pron. roop.

O may the roup ne'er roust thy weason!

May thirst thy thrapple never gizen!

Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore, st. 3.

Baith cooks an' scullions mony ane

Wad gar the pats and kettles tingle,—

To fleg frae a' your craigs the roup.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 77.

Some derive this from Isl. hroop, heroop, vociferatio, because this is frequently the cause of hoarseness. V.
Ray. The idea has great probability; as roustly, hoarse, seems formed by analogy, from the v. roust,
to cry.

2. Sometimes used to denote that disease otherwise called the croup, S.B. This is perhaps meant in the following passage:—

3. It also denotes a disease which affects hens in the mouth or throat, S.

To ROUSE with salt upon salt. To change the pickle in curing fish; or rather, to cure fish by the use of the finest salt. V. SALT UPON SALT.

"This barrel of salmon was for the superior's consumpt in his family; and being for that use, Scots salt was sufficient; and his charter not mentioning that it was for export, he was not bound to rouse them with salt upon salt." Fount. Suppl. Dec. iv. 845.

This is evidently the same verb with that formerly given as Roose, which expresses the pronunciation. But it seems doubtful, whether in the modern acceptation, there may not be some change of the original signification.

At first it seemed probable, that this term might be allied to Teut. ruysch-en, fricare; as referring to the practice of rubbing in the salt in the operation of curing. But I prefer Fr. rou-ir, to steep, or water, applied to hemp; ruissement, a steeping or watering of hemp; arrous-cr, to wet, to moisten.

[To ROUSE, ROOSE, v. a. To extol, to commend highly, S. V. RUSE.]

ROUSE, ROOSE, s. Commendation, boast, S. O.

Hence rousty, rusty. [A.-S. rust, rust, prob. a contr. of rustl, redness. V. SKEAT'S ETYM. DICT.] Teut. roest; and roestigh.

ROUST, ROST, s. A strong tide or current; or the turbulent part of a frith, occasioned by the meeting of rapid tides, Orkn.

"We had several rousts or impetuous tides to pass." Brand's Orkn., p. 7, 8.

"These currents have different names, as Dennis-roust, North Ronaldsha-roust." Ibid. p. 49.

"Roust, or Roust, a tide, where the sea usually runs high with ebb." P. Cross, Orkney, Statist. Acc., vii. 476.

"This lofty promontory is constantly exposed to the current of a strong and furious tide, which—is called the Roust of Sumburgh, roust being the phrase assigned in these isles to currents of this description." The Pirate, i. 4.

Isl. roest, raust, aestuaria, vortices maris, Verel. Incl. Rost, vortex, Ol. Lex. Run.; allied perhaps to Su.-G. rust-a, tumultuari. But the ingenious editor of the Gl. to Orkneyinga S., having expl. the term, cataracta maris, gorges, observes that such whirlpools take their name from raust, sonus, from the great noise which they make. Therefore, he says, the vortex of Malstroem, near the Faroe islands, is denominated from maal, muele, sermo, sonus. He mentions A.-S. rust, stridor, impetus fluvii, as synon. with raust.

To ROUST, v. n. 1. To cry with a rough voice, S. B.

And lo as Pharon cryis and doys roust,
With haltand wordis and with mekle voust,
Eneas threw ane dart at him that tyle.

Doug. Virgil, 327, 9.

2. To bellow; applied to cattle, S. B.

Thay twa bullis thus struand in that stound
Be mekill for wirkis vthir mony wound,—
That of thare rousting al the large plane
And woddis rank rowtis and lowis agane.

Doug. Virgil, 438, 7.

"Either from rust, as if the throat had contracted rust, or from Lat. raucus, raucitas; or from roul [id.], and all originally from the sound;" Rudd. "Much the same with Romp and Rout;" Sibb. Lye has come nearer to the mark, in referring to Alem. bluzreister, clamorus. V. Jun. Etym.

The origin is Isl. raus, vox canora; hahreist-a, vociferare, from ha, high, and reist, raust, voice. Ihre views Su.-G. rust-a, tumultuari, as a cognate term. Hence, ROUST, s. The act of roaring or bellowing, S.B.

ROUSTY, adj. 1. "Hoarse, having a rough voice," S. Rudd. V. ROUP, s.

2. Not polished, not refined; in allusion to the harsh music of one who is hoarse, or has a rough voice.

Ressae this roustie rural rebaldrie,

Pulice of Honour, Concl.

ROUSTER, s. A stroke, a blow, Buchan; [synon. roul, q. v.]

Isl. rosta, tumultus; Arist-a, Su.-G. rist-a, ryst-a, quater, rid, quassatio.

ROUSTREE, s. The cross bar on which the crook is hung, Aberd.

Perhaps from Su.-G. roeste, suprema aedificii pars.

To ROUT, ROWT, v. n. 1. To bellow, to roar as cattle do, S. ROUT, rawte, A. Bor. id.

Free faukls nae mair the owsen roul,
But to the fatt'ning clover lout.

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 106.

Nae mair thou'lt roule out-owre the dale,
Because thy pasture's scanty.

Burns, iii. 64.

V. CAM-NOSED.

This is the primary sense. According to Sibb. this word is formed ex sono. But it is evidently the same with Isl. rust-a, rugire belluarum more, frendere; or as G. Andr. expl. it, to roar as a lion or wild boar.

2. To roar, to make a great noise; used in a general sense.

The firmament gan rummylyng rare and roul.

Doug. Virgil, 15, 48.

It denotes the noise of waters.

Ane rouland burn amydwart therof rynniss,
Bumland and soundand on the craggy quhynniss.

Doug. Virgil, 227, 37.

3. To snore, South of S.

"The word pay, operated like magic. 'Jock, ye villain,' exclaimed the voice from the interior, 'are ye lying rouling there, and a young gentleman seeking the way to the place? Get up, ye fause loon, and shew him the way down the meikle loaning.'" Guy Mannering, i. 11.

[4. To break wind behind, Clydes.]

A.-S. Arut-an, "stertere, ronchisare, to snort, snore, or roul in sleeping;" Somner. For the v. to roul, occurs in the same sense in O. E.

ROUT, ROWT, s. 1. The act of bellowing, S.

Lyke as the bul, that bargane begyn wald,
Geuis terrybyl routis and lowis mony fald.

Doug. Virgil, 410, 12.

2. A roar, a loud noise, S.

They all lekkit, the salt wattri stremes
Fast bullerand in at every rift and bore.
In the mene quille, with mony roul and rore
The sey thus trublit, and the tempest furth sent Felt Neptune.—

Doug. Virgil, 16, 55.

V. the v.

To ROUT, v. a. To beat, to strike, S.

Their stent was mair than they con'd well mak out;
And whan they fail'd, their backs they roundly roul.

Ross's Helenore, p. 48.

Isl. rot-a, percutio, ictu onero; rot, ictus, G. Andr.

ROUT, RUTE, s. A blow; properly, a severe or weighty stroke, S. lounder, synon.

Bot he, that had his sword on hycht,
Roucht him sic roul, in randoun rycht,
That he the hede till harnys claiff.

Barbour, v. 632, MS.

Edit. 1620, rouls.

The rede blude with the roul folowit the blaid.

Gawan and Gal., iii. 23.

With that scho raucht me sic ane roul,
Quhill to the erde scho gart me leyn.

Mailland Poems, p. 201.

Thir hardy kempis al in waist let draw
Athir to vthir mony rutis grete,
On holl sydis feill double dyntis gan bete.
Doug. Virgil, 142, 16.

V. LOUNDER.

ROUT, s. Apparently, the Brent Goose, Anas Bernicla, Linn.

"In all this province there is great store—of wild-goose, ringouse, route, whaips, shotwhaips," &c. Gordon's Geneal. Hist. Sutherland, p. 3.

Isl. rola, anser silvestris. V. RUTE, and ROOD GOOSE.

ROUTAND, part. pr. [An errat. for Row-nand, whispering; also, saying the same thing repeatedly.]

The Inglis sic abasing
Tuk, and sic dreid of that tithing,
That in v. c. placis and ma
Men mycht se samyn rouland ga;
Sayand, "Our lordis, for thair mycht,
Will allgate fecht agane the rycht."

Barbour, xii. 360, MS.

"Whispering," Gl. Pink.

ROUTH, ROUCH, s. 1. The act of rowing, or of plying with oars; [also, a long spell of rowing, Shetl.]

The swift Priatis with spey routh fute hote
Furth steris the stern Mnestheus anane.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 20.

So that agane the streme throw help of me,
By airis rouch thidder caryit sal thou be.

Ibid., 241, 39.

It is written rouch either from corr. pronunciation, or by the mistake of some transcriber.

2. A stroke of the oar.

Besely our folkis gan to pingil and strife,
Swepand the flude with lang routhis belife.

Ibid., 77, 33.

[3. The part of the gunwale between the thowls, Shetl.]

"From rowe, as truth from true, ruth from rue, growth from grow;" Rudd. But he has not observed that the formation is A.-S. Reccete, roucelte, roucelte, remigatio; from recc-an, recc-an, recc-an, remigare.

Sw. rodd, id., from ro, to row.

ROUTH, ROWTH, s. Plenty, abundance, in whatever respect, S.

Let never man a wooing wend,
That lacketh thingis thrie:
A routh o' gold, an open heart,
And fu' o' courtesy.

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 143.

I dinna want a routh of country fair,
Sic as it is, ye're welcome to a skair.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 14.

Sibb. expl. it as also signifying, "rough, roughness; and thinks that, as denoting plenty, it may be from rife, plentiful. It has apparently more resemblance to Su.-G. roge, a heap, whence rogault, cumulus; rogadt maatt, a heaped measure. Hence,

ROUTHIE, adj. Plentiful, S.

Then wait a wee, and canie wale
A routhie butt, a routhie ben.

Burns, iv. 319.

ROUTH, adj. Plentiful, South of S.

"The rusticity of their benisons amused me.—One wished them 'Thumpin luck and fat weans.'—A third gave them 'A routh aumrie and a close nieve." Anecd. Pastoral Life, Edin. Month. Mag., June, 1817, p. 241. V. ROUTH, s.

Perhaps the genuine origin of this, as well as of the s. and its derivatives is C.B. rauth, wide or large, vast, capacious.

ROUTHRIE, s. The same as Routh, Fife.

"I ne'er likit to be nipit or pingin, gie me routhrie o' a' thing." Saxon and Gael, i. 121.

ROUTHLESS, adj. Profane, applied to one who neither regards God nor man, Fife.

It seems merely E. ruthless, used in a peculiar sense.

ROUTHURROK, s. A species of goose mentioned by Leslie, De Orig. et Mor. Scot., p. 35. V. QUINK.

"Routhurock-goose, Bernacle-goose, Anas erythropus. The name—occurs in the old writers on Orkney; but is now nearly unknown in the islands." Neill's Tour, p. 196.

Isl. hrotta, anser montanus; Fialla rota, hrotla, etiam animal anus, G. Andr., p. 124.

[ROVACK, s. 1. The rump; the buttocks, Shetl. Dan. røv.

2. The stump of the tail of an animal, ibid.]

To ROVE, v. n. 1. To be in a delirium, S. "To rove (in a fever); to be light-headed, or delirious;" Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 93; rave, E.

It seems to have been formerly used in E. in a sense nearly approaching to this. For Phillips expl. the v., as not merely signifying, "to ramble about," but "to have rambling thoughts."

Cecil uses the term in a singular sense. "I praye you procure some estimat of the charges on both partes, that I may rove to provyde payment." Sadler's Papers, ii. 74.

I scarcely think that the meaning is, that he would ramble through the country. It is more probably a Fr. idiom, as signifying "to cast in one's mind, to turn a thing over in the way of contemplating it in all its bearings; from rouer, "to wheele, turn round, swing about, go, compass;" Cotgr. It is also expressive of the manœuvres of a fleet. Dict. Trev.

2. To have a great flow of animal spirits, S. Roving is synon. with Ranting, with which it is joined.

O he's a ranting roving laddie,
O he's a brisk and a bonnie laddie.
Betide what will, I'll get me ready
To follow the lad wi' the Highland plaidy.
Ranting Roving Lad, Herd's Coll., ii. 180.

ROVING, s. Delirium, S.

"We run our souls out of breath, and tire them in coursing and galloping after our own night-dreams (such are the roving of our miscarrying hearts), to get some created good thing in this life."—Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 89.

To ROVE, v. a. To rove cotton, or wool, to bring it into that ropy form which it receives before being spun into thread. Statist. Acc. vi. 38.

"Upon the Don is—a mill for teasing, carding, and roving wool, and for waulking cloths." Stat. Acc. vi. 38.

VOL. IV.

"The preparation of wool by hand-cards was now laid aside; and the different manufacturers in Aberdeen sent their wool to the mills to be carded and roved." Thom's Hist. Aberd., ii. 151.

ROVE, s. Rest; the same with ROIF, q. v. [ROVIESTICK, *s. An awkward, poorly clad person, Shetl.]

[ROVIN', adj. 1. Applied to a person, free and merry-hearted, rattling, as used by Burns:—

Robin was a rovin' boy,
Rantin', rovin', rantin rovin',
Robin was a rovin' boy,
Rantin rovin' Robin.

2. Applied to the weather, unsettled, stormy, Banffs.]

[ROVIN, part. pr. Wandering, unsettled; as rovin in sleep, Banffs.]

To ROW, ROO, RUE, v. a. 1. To roll; part. pa. rowit.

The huge wallis weltres apön hie,
Rowit at anis with stormes and wyndis thre.
Doug. Virgil, 15, 40.

[2. To wind, turn, move round, S.]

3. To revolve, to elapse; applied to time, in a neut. sense.

Than the yong child, quiblk now Ascanius heicht,— Thretty lang twelf monthis rowing ouer, sall be king.
Doug. Virgil, 21, 20.

4. To revolve; applied to the mind.

—For his dere birling dredand sore,
Ilk chance in haist did row in hys memore.
Ibid., 383, 34.

Hence,

To row about, to be in an advanced state of pregnancy, a low phrase, S.

5. To roll wool or cotton for spinning, S.

Card it well ere ye begin,
When 'tis carled, row'd and spun,
Then the work is haffens done.

Tarry Woo, Herd's Coll., ii. 100.

6. To row sheep, to pluck the wool from sheep, to tear it off in the barbarous mode practised in Shetland, instead of shearing.

"It shall not be lawsum to any manner of persons to row sheep untill the time they be lawrullie certified by the Baillie to ane competent day, as they will essue to be holden and reputs as thiefs, and punished conform thereto." Acts A. 1623, Barry's Orkney, App., p. 468.

—"That no maner of persons shall row or take sheep on Sunday, under whatsumever colour or pretext, under the paine of 10 lib. Scots." Ibid., p. 470.

"The native sheep are seldom shorn; but about the middle of May, when the fleece begins to loosen spontaneously, it is pulled off with the hand. This operation is called roving the sheep. They are left very bare after it; but the people say that the wool on the animal continues much finer, when removed in this manner, than by the shears." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 211.

"If any person shall use a sheep-dog, and run therewith after his own sheep amongst his neighbours unaccompanied, mark, rue, or take any home without shewing the mark, he shall pay for the first offence four angels; for the second, six angels; and for the third, or at any time under cloud of night, shall be bolden and repute a common thief, and punished accordingly." Court Laws, App. Agr. Surv. Shetl., p. 3.

This is evidently from Isl. ry-a, (pret. ruide) vel-ore, eruere, detondere, expl. in Dan. by Halderson, Tage af (uld af) saarene; "to take the wool off sheep." The v. is deduced from ru, vellus solox, an entire or unshorn fleece. It is to be observed that as in Sw. y is sounded as u, it has often the same sound in Isl. V. G. Andr., lit. Y, p. 135.

Norw. ru is expl. "loose wool on sheep;" and ruc, "to take the loose wool off sheep;" Hallager. This is the immediate origin of the term as used in Orkn. and Shetl.

Undoubtedly allied to this is Su.-G. ry-a, a rough upper garment; also A.-S. reoice, a rug, and reoh, ryc, villosus. Teut. rouwen, polire rudem pannum, indicates a similar affinity.

7. To row a nievesfu', to turn round every cut of corn, so that all the stalks may be intermingled, in order that a great part of a sheaf may be retained in the hand before it be laid in the band. A reaper does well if he can fill the band at three handfuls, Roxb.

"Davie saw that one half of that crop at least was shorn during the night, all standing in tight shocks, rowed and hooded." Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 6.

8. To row up, to wind; as, "to row up a knock," to wind up a clock, S.

To Row, v. n. To move or to be moved with violence, S.

Now fields convuls'd like dashing waves,
Wild row along.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 37.

Row, Roow, s. 1. A roll, a list, S.

"The devil himself started up in the pulpit like a meikle black man, and calling the row, every one answered,—'Here.'" Newes from Scotl. 1591, Law's Memor. Pref. xxxvii.

"When the judge hes all gathered together and none away : when the rowe is called, and all are present : then when one sorte shall be placed at the right hand, and the other at the left hand ; then shall he fall to judgement." Rollock on 1 Thes., p. 225.

2. A roll of bread, S.

3. The wheel, an instrument of execution. To break upon the row, to break on the wheel.

"He was sentenced to be broken alive on the row, or wheel, and be exposed thereon for 24 hours; and thereafter the said row, with the body on it, to be placed between Leith and Warriston, till orders be given to burrie the body." M.S. Abridg., Justiciary Record, 1604. Law's Mem. Pref. xlix.

—"Johnne Earle of Marr—first cawsit Bell and Calder [two of the murderers of Regent Lennox] to be publicly punisht, brokin upoun the rowe, and thus pynit to the death." Hist. James the Sext, p. 154.

The term may be immediately from Fr. roue, which denotes not only a wheel, but this barbarous mode of punishment; Cotgr. Or perhaps from Su.-G. raabraaka (pron. robvoka), "to break upon the wheel;" Ihre. Belg. rabraaken, id. In Germ. it is rad-brechen, for rad is the word denoting a wheel; Franc. id. Wachter views the term as radically Celtic; C.B. rhod, Ir. rit, rhotha, id. The affinity of Lat. rota is obvious.

Under the word RATTN, we have seen that there is a reference to the mode of treating great criminals after death. It will be found that Roow and Ratts, although differently applied, must be traced to the same fountain. Fr. roue seems to have been traduced from Lat. rota.

I do not recollect any other instance of this barbarous mode of punishment in the history of Scotland.

BAWBEE-ROW, s. A half-penny roll, S.

"As for the letters at the post-mistress's, as they ca' her,—they may bide in her shop-window, wi' the snaps and bawbee rows, till Beltane, or I loose them." St. Ronan, i. 34.

ROWAR, ROWER, s. 1. A wooden bolt or bar, which may be moved backwards or forwards.

The tothir end he orland for to be,
How it sulk stand on thre rowaris off tre,
Quhen ane war out, that the laiff down sulk fall.

Wallace, vii. 1155, MS.

Edit. 1648 and 1673, rollers.

Fr. roul-er, to roll; rouleaux, "long and round leavers, whereon ships are gotten into a dock, and launched into the water againe; Cotgr."

- [2. A roller for flattening dough; used in making oat-cakes, scones, &c., West of S. called also a rowin-pin.]

ROWIN, ROWAN, ROWING, s. Wool as it comes from the cards, a flake of wool, S.

According to Sibb. q. rolling. But it seems rather allied to Rowe, v. a. q. v. Hence, perhaps, "To cast a rowan, to bear an illegitimate child," Sibb. This resembles the metaph. use of Lagen-gird, q. v.

"Children are employed to lift rolls or rowans from the carding engines, and unite them on the feeding-cloth," &c. Edin. Encyclop., vol. vii. 286.

This had been more anciently denominated a rowe.

"Filum, a thread. Naeta, a rowe." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 21.

[ROWIN-PIN, s. Same with ROWAR, s. 2, q. v.]

ROWAN, s. Auld rowan, "old jade,"

Pink.; a term given to a bawd, who, by a great deal of coaxing, endeavours to entice a young woman to marry an old man.

—Cum lick that beird auld rowan.

Now sic the trottibus and trowane,

Sa busilie as scho is wovane,

Sic as the carline craks.

Philotus, S. P. Repr., lii. 15.

Sibb. views it as the same term with that mentioned above. But it is certainly equivalent to witch, or sorceress, as allied to Germ. rune, Su.-G. runa; more commonly in a compound state, Al-runu, mulier fatidica, or as some render it, omnisia. Others suppose that the word is properly alte-runu, vetula saga, or as here, auld rowan. Keysler. de Mulier. Fatidicis, p. 469. The same writer informs us, that the ancient Finns had a goddess supposed to preside over storms, whom they called Roune. Now we know that it has been generally believed by the Northern nations, that the witches had great power in this respect. Germ. raune, Su.-G. runo, denote magical arts. V. ROUN, s. 2, also ROUN-TREE.

ROWAN, s. A name for the turbot, a fish, Fife.

"Formerly there was a very plentiful fishing upon the coast here, consisting of cod, ling, haddock, reseau or turbot, skait, &c.—But within these 4 or 5 years past, the fish have in a manner quite deserted these places (particularly the haddock), and none are now caught but a few cod, rowan, and skait." P. St. Monance, Statist. Acc., ix. 337.

ROWAND, adj. "Fyw ellis & 3 of tanne crance, fyw ellis & a half of rowand tanne." Aberd. Reg., A. 1535, V. 15, p. 653.

As this refers to a pynnokill of skins, it is probably meant for what is called Rone-skin.

[ROWANE, adj. Of or belonging to Rouen, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 153, Dickson.]

ROWAN-TREE, s. The mountain-ash. V. ROUN-TREE.

[ROWBRYALL, s. Robe royal.

"Item, for ane elne of taffata to mend the roubryall, xx^s." Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 145, Dickson.]

ROW-CHOW-TOBACCO, s. A game in which there is a long chain of boys, who hold each other by the hands, and have one standing steadily at one of the extremities, who is called the Pin. Round him the rest coil, like a watch-chain round the cylinder, till the act of winding is completed. A clamorous noise succeeds, in which the cry of Row-chow-tobacco prevails. After giving and receiving the fraternal hug, they disperse; and afterwards renew the process, as long as they are in the humour of it, Teviotd. [In West of S. Rowity-Chow-o-Tobacco, pron. rowity-chow-ity-bacco, and as the first syllable of each word is shouted, another hug or squeeze is given. The game is not so common as formerly.]

This play would seem to have originated in an imitation of the process of a Tobacconist in winding up his roll round a pin.

ROWE, s. Abbrev. of a christian name, perhaps the same with Rowie. "Rowe Baty;" Acts Ja. V., iii. 393.

ROWIE, s. Abbrev. of Rolund. "Run, Rowie, hough's i' the pot," is said to have been a kimmer's warning among the Graemes of the Debateable Land.

[ROWIN, ROWING, s. A flake of wool. V. under Row, v.]

[ROWIT, pret. and part. pa. Rowed, Barbour, iv. 368.]

ROWK, ROWIK, s. A rick of grain. "Tua rowkis of bair, & ane rowik of quhytt;"

i.e., barley and wheat; Aberd. Reg., A. 1565. V. RUCK.

ROWKAR, s. A whisperer, a tale-bearer.

"Also the wisman speikis of thame that arquhy-speraris, rowkaris & rounaris on this manner: Susurro inquinabit animam suam, et in omnibus odietur. 'A rowkar and rownar sall fylo his awin saule, & sall be hettit of all men. Mairour he sais: Susurro, et bilinguis maledictus erit multos enim turbavit pacem habentes. A man or woman that is ane rowkar and doubil toungit, is curst and wariit, for siclik ane persone hes put mekil trubil amang men & wemen, quhilk afore was at peace." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1551, Fol. 71, a.

Rowk is expl. "to be close, to crouch." But rowkar is here given as synon. with Lat. susurro. It may be allied to Su.-G. Isl. rykte, rychte, Germ. rucht, ge-rucht, fama. These terms are frequently used in a bad sense, and have been traced to Alem. ruog-en, Germ. rug-en, Isl. raeg-a, to accuse, to defame.

ROWM, ROWME, ROUME, ROOME, s. 1. Room, space, extent of place.

His hors in hy than has he tane,
And hym alane amang thame rale,
And rwilly roume about hym made.

Wyaltown, vill. 40, 172.

2. A place.

"Somwhat eastward, lies an yland named Olde Castell, a roome strong of nature, and sufficient ynough to nourish the inhabitants in cornes, fishe, and eggis of sea fowles that build in it." Descr. of the Kingdome of Scotlande.

3. A possession, a portion of land; whether occupied by the proprietor, or by a tenant.

"Our fais hes not only tint shamefully the landis that thay wrangusly conquest, bot ar vincust in battall, chasit and doung fra thair roumes, and inuadit with vncouth & domistik weris." Bellend. Cron., B. x. c. 20. Suis pulsi sedibus; Boeth.

—Theris hes done my roumis range
And teyhd my fald.

Mailland Poems, p. 318.

"Siclike thair wyfis, barnis, executouris, or assignais, sall bruke thair takis, stoidingis, roumes, and poscasionis, alsweill of Kirklandis, as of Temporall mennis landis." Acts Mar. 1547, c. 5. Edit. 1568.

Ev'ry pensioner a room did gain,
For service done and to be done;
This I'll let the reader understand,
The name of both the men and land.

Scott of Satchell's Hist. Name of Scot, p. 45.

Room is still commonly used for a farm, S.

4. Local situation, in relation to the ministry of the gospel.

"Such as have not received ordination, should not be permitted to teach in great rooms, except upon urgent necessity, and in the defect of actual ministers." Spotswood's Hist., p. 444.

5. Official situation.

—"It was not their pleasure he or his colleague Mr. Rankin should bruk their rooms any longer. So programs were affixed for the provision of two vacant places in their college." Baillie's Lett., i. 85.

6. Room is used for ordinal relation, like place in modern language.

"In the thrid roume, it comes in to be considered, how the signe and the thing signified coupled." Bruce's Serm. on the Sacra. 1590, Sign. B. 3. b.

"Thus, in the first room, our religious and reformation-rights, and next our lives and civil liberties, are laid at the King's feet, to be trampled upon." Wodrow's Hist., i. 311.

7. A particular place in a literary work.

"The 11th act of this session, December 15th, 1669, Concerning the Forfeiture of Person's in the late Rebellion, deserves a room in this collection." Wodrow's Hist., i. 313.

Moss-G. rumis, A.-S. Su.-G. rum, place of any kind.

ROWM, ROWME, ROUME, ROOM, adj. 1. Large, spacious.

Flakis thal laid on temye lang and wicht,
A roume passage to the wallis thaim dycht.
Wallace, vii. 985, MS.

—To behald thame walking to and fro
Throw the roume hallis, and so biass go,—
Ane paradise it was to se and here.

Doug. Virgil, 474, 32.

A.-S. Su.-G. rum, Isl. rum-r, Teut. ruym, amplus, spatiosus.

2. Clear, empty; used obliquely.

"A fair fire makes a room flet;" Ferguson's Prov., i.e., it makes those who are in it sit far from the fireside. "Scot. we say, To make a room house, when one drives them out that are in it, and so makes it empty, and consequently much room in it;" Rudd.

Teut. ruym also signifies laxus, vacuum; ruym-huys, domus laxa; Kilian. Belg. ruun huus maken, vacuum aedes facere, (Ihre); Zyne handen ruym hebben, to have one's hands free, Sewel.

To ROWM, ROWME, v. a. 1. To make room, to clear, to remove obstacles.

Out throu the thickest of that oste
Of legis, bolnyt than in boeste,
About hym than he roumyt thare
Thretty fute on breid, or mare.

Wynntown, ix. 27, 417.

Boskis withdrawis, and branchis al to rent
Can rattling and resound of thare deray,
To red thare renk, and roumes thaim the way.

Doug. Virgil, 232, 25.

Teut. ruym-en, vacuare, vacuum reddere; amputare ramos supervacuos, extricare agrum silvestrem: Sw. gifva rum, to clear the way. A.-S. rum-ian, viam aperire. We find indeed the very phrase used by Wynntown. Veg rum-ian, quasi diceres, obstacula viæ sammovere; Ihre, vo. Ryma.

2. To enlarge.

Joce, than Byschape of Glasgw
Roumyd the kyrk of Sanct Mongw.
Wynntown, vii. 8, 366.

Teut. ruym-en, ampliare, dilatare; Su.-G. rym-a, id.; evidently from rum, locus, or perhaps immediately from rum, spatiosus.

3. To place, to put in a particular situation.

"We have gevin—our commission to—dimit and renounce the government,—in favouris of our said sone to that effect, that he may be inaugurat, placit and rowmit thairin, and the crowne royall deliverit to him," &c. Instr. of Resignation, 1567. Keith's Hist., p. 432.

Germ. rum-en, res ordine disponere, suis singulas locis collocando; Wachter.

ROWMLY, adv. Largely, liberally.

A tendrare hart mycht na man have;
Til lordis rowmly he landis gave;
His swynys he mad rych and mychty.

Wynntown, ix. 10. 46.

In this adv. we have a vestige of a metaph. sense, in which the adj. has probably been used. A.-S. rum not only signifies largus, amplus, but faustus. In Belg., however, we have a phrase more nearly allied; Een ruyme beurs, a well-stuffed purse; also, a liberal hand. The term is used like Lat. largus, which not only signifies large, spacious, but liberal, open-handed.

To ROWME, ROUME, v. n. To roam, to wander.

—He went diuers thingis to se,
Rowming about the large tempill schene.

Doug. Virgil, 27, 11.

This is from the same origin with E. room, as Skinner has observed with respect to roam; because he who wanders in succession occupies much ground, and still seeks a new place.

A.-S. rum-an, Belg. ruym-en, Germ. raum-en, Su.-G. Isl. rym-a, removere, diffugere. Isl. rum, foras, Verel. Ind. Mod. Sax. id. Alem. rumo, procul, rumor; longius, Ihre in vo.

To ROWMIL, RUMMIL, v. a. To clear out; as, "to rowmil a tobacco-pipe," to clear it when it is stopped up; "to rowmil the fire," to clear it by poking out the ashes, Lanarks.

Teut. rommel-en, turbare.

To ROWMYSS, v. n. To bellow. V. RUM-MYSS.

[ROWN, ROWNDE, adj. Round; also, coarse as opposed to fine; as, rounde braide clayth, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 139, Dickson. V. ROUN.]

[ROWN, s. A whisper, a secret, a story. V. ROUN.]

[To ROWN, v. a. To whisper; also, to repeat and re-repeat. V. ROUN, v.]

[ROWNAN', ROWNAND, ROWNYNG, ROWN-NYNG, s. Whispering, Barbour, xii. 368.]

[ROWNDE, adj. Round, course. V. ROUN, ROWN.]

ROWSAN, part. adj. Vehement; as, "a rowsan fire," one that burns fiercely, S.O. V. ROUSING.

ROWSTIT, part. adj. This seems to be used in the same sense with Reistit, q. v.

"Rowstit fische, quhilk war not sufficient merchand guidia." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

To ROWT, ROUT, v. n. Apparently, to range; S.B. Royt.

"And at na man duellande within burghes be fundyn in manrent, nor ride nor rowt in feir of weir with na man bot with the king or his officiaris," &c., Parl. Ja. II., A. 1457, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 50. Ryde in rowt, Ed. 1566. Royt, ibid. p. 226, c. 13.

Su.-G. rut-a, vagari, discurrere; Teut. ruyten ende roocen, praedari, grassari, vastare; L.B. ruta, praedonum cohors, whence Rutarii, praedones, milites. V. ROTT, v.

[To ROWT, v. a. To beat, strike. V. ROUT.]

[ROWT, s. A severe blow, Barbour, vii. 626. V. ROUT, s.]

To ROWT, v. n. 1. To snore. Junius gives route as an E. word, although not mentioned by Johnson.

The King slepyt bot a litill than,
Quben sic slep fell on his man,
That he mycht nocht hald wp his ey,
Bot fell in slep, and rowtyt hey.
Barbour, vii. 192, MS.

[2. To break wind behind, Clydes.

3. To bellow. V. ROUT.]

A.-S. Arut-an, Isl. Ariot-a, id.

[ROWT, s. A loud noise, a bellow. V. ROUT.]

[ROWTIN, adj. Bellowing, noisy, S.]

[ROWT, s. A company, band, troop, Barbour, iv. 190.]

ROWY, s. King.

Precelland Prince! havand prerogatyve
As rowy royall in this regioun to ring;
I the besek aganis thy lust to stryve
And loufe thy God aboif all maner of thing.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 148.

V. ROY.

ROY, s. King.

Than Eduuarde self was callit a Roy full ryk.
Wallace, i. 120, MS.

It was used so late as the seventeenth century.

"The Bishop in his owne citie, and among his vassals, will thinke himselfe a pettie Roy; who dare deny to lend, to give, to serve them with whatsoever they have?" Course of Conformitie, p. 47.

Fr. roi, Gael. re, id. In Gl. Compl. it is said that the latter seems to be of Fr. origin. But this idea is unnatural. The Fr. term is in fact of Celt. origin. C. B. rhu, rhi, Corn. ruy, Arm. rue, roue, Ir. righ. Lat. rex is probably from the Celt. stock.

ROYALTY, s. A territory immediately under the jurisdiction of the king, S. V. RIALTE.

ROYAT, s. Royalty.

—Quha mair surely into royal rang.
Nor the greit Conquerour his freindis amang?
Yit we he poysonit, as sum dois expres.
Davidson's Commendatione of Vprichtnes, st. 5.

To ROY, v. n. To rave.

Rebald, renounce thy ryming, thou but royis;
Thy trechour tung has tane a Heland strynd.
Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 50.

Apparently from the same root with Teut. rev-en, Fr. rev-er, id. We say rove for rave. C. B. rheydh, mirth.

[ROYD, adj. Rude, severe. V. ROLD.]

[ROYDLY, adv. Fiercely, severely, Barbour, xi. 599.]

ROYET, ROYAT, ROYIT, adj. 1. Wild, irregular, unmanageable.

—To rede I begane,
The royetest ane ragment with mony ratt rime.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, a. 53.

2. In a moral sense, dissipated, S. like E. wild.

Ye royet louns, just do as he'd do;
For mony braw green shaw an' meadow,
He's left to cheer his dowy widow.
Fergusson's Poems, i. 84.

"Royet lads may make sober men;" Fergusson's S. Prov. p., 28.

3. Romping, that cannot be restrained from sport, S.

"From the same signification [Fr. deroyer], is the Scots word royet, or royit, signifying romping." Ramsay's Poems, i. 239, N.

[4. Applied to wind and weather, variable and stormy, Banffs.]

According to Sibb., "q. de-royed, from Fr. des-royer, or des-arroyer, perturbare." But by the supposed change, the word would have a signification quite contrary. If not allied to Roy, used as a v. q. v., I would refer to Fr. roide, fierce, ungovernable. Une course roide, the course, taken by an unmanageable horse. Lysandre et Caliste, p. 158.

[To ROYET, ROYIT, v. n. To romp, Banffs.]

ROYETNESS, s. Romping, S.

[ROYATOUSLIE, adv. Riotously, wildly, romping, Lyndsay, Ans. to Kingis Flyting, l. 48.]

[ROYATING, ROYETING, part. pr. Feasting well, Gall. Encyc.]

ROYL-FITTIT, adj. Having the feet turned outward, Lanarks.

If this be not allied to Su.-G. ryll-a, in gyrum a-gere, it may perhaps be traced to wrid-a, q. wriid-a, to writhe.

ROYNE, s. The scab, mange; Chaucer,—roigne, id. rougnous, scabby.

Concerning the brawls of dogs it is said:

Thay ar luving to men,
Bot nocht to them self than;
For wo is him that hes royne.

Colkelbie Son, F. i. v. 145.

Fr. roigne, rongne, "scurf, scabbiness, the mange;" Cotgr.

ROYSTER, s. 1. A vagabond, a freebooter, a plunderer.

"Somerled—gathered a great band of Roysters together, and arriving at the frith or bay of the river Clyde, there made a descent on the left side of it." Buchanan's Hist. Scot., i. p. 311.

It is used for facinorosos, Lib. vii. 43. It occurs also in O. E.

"He spared not his spurs, nor faoured his horse flesh: rode lyke a Royster, and doubted no daunger." Saker's Narbonne, ii. Fol. 63, a.

Elsewhere the writer uses it rather in the sense of spendthrift.

"The spending of my lyuinge, hath proouved me a lewde loyterer, and the losing of my lands a right Abbey lubber :—now shall my owne rod bee the remedy for such a royster : and my owne staffe my stale for so foolish a harbinger." Ibid. i. Fol. 32, b.

Junius renders roister, grassator, a robber; referring to Isl. Aristler, concussor, a term which occurs in the Death-song of Regner Lodbrog, st. 15. He also refers to Araustar, robustus, validus, fortis.

This term, at first view, might seem allied to Su.-G. rost-a, to prepare; in a secondary sense, to prepare for war, Isl. rosta, combat, warfare; especially as O.Fr. ruaterie, rustrerie, rustrie, signify pillage; rustre, a ruffian.

But, according to Bullet, L. B. Rustarii is the same with Rutarii, Rotarii, the designation given to a set of rascals, who committed great devastation in France, in the eleventh century. They embodied themselves in troops, like the regular militia, and in this way pillaged the different provinces of the kingdom. In O. Fr. they were called Routiers.

The name was afterwards transferred to the stipendiary forces, employed by the kings of England. They were raised abroad, and generally in Germany. Such were those, whom King John brought against Berwick, where they were chargeable with great cruelty.

Anno 1216, 18 Cal. Febr., cepit Johannes Rex Angliæ villam & castellum de Berwic, ubi cum Rutariis suis feroci supra modum & inhumana usus est tyrannide. In reditu autem suo Rutarii seu Ministri Diaboli Abbatiam de Coldeingam expoliaverunt. Chron. Mailros. Rer. Angl. Script., i. 190.

Bullet derives the term from Ir. ruathar, pillage; Du Cange, p. 1544, with greater probability, from L. B. rupturarius, a peasant, formed from rumpere, q. one who breaks up the ground, as these depredators chiefly consisted of peasants. Rutarii he views as originating from the Fr. pronunciation, in Routiers. It confirms this etymon, that Matth. Paris, and other writers of that age, use Ruptarii in this sense.

Both Spelman and he derive rouit, as denoting a tumultuous crowd, from L. B. rupta, Ruptariorum cohorts. It seems doubtful, however, whether the insertion of p in this word proves it to be from rumpere; as this insertion was very common with writers in the dark ages, as condempno for condemno, alumpnus for alumnus, &c. Perhaps ruptarii, rutarii, may rather be from the same origin with Ryot, v., q. v. or Teut. ruyter, miles, which seems properly to denote a soldier of cavalry. Germ. reuter, ritter, Dan. ryllere, a rider, a trooper; ryllerie, cavalry, troopers.

Sir. W. Scott prefers the last etymon. For he says, in a note on this article; "The German Cavalry of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries were called Reiters, in old Fr. Reistres, which signifies simply Riders. Their infantry were the Lanzknechts (Lansquenets in Fr.) i.e., spearmen."

2. The term is also applied to a dog, apparently of the bull-dog species.

Some dogs bark best after they byte;
Some snatch the heels and tails about,
And so get all their hams dung out.
A well-train'd Royster fast will close
His jaws upon a mad bull's nose.

Cleland's Poems, p. 112.

To ROYT, v. n. 1. To go from place to place without any proper business, to go about idly, S. B. A beast, that runs through the fields, instead of keeping to its pasture, is said to royt.

- [2. To be troublesome, to cause trouble, confusion, and noise; to stir up anger or strife, Clydes.]

Su.-G. rut-a, discurre, vagari.

This is also O.E. "Roytyn or roykyn [reykyn ?] gone ydyl aboute. Vago. Discurre.—Reyke or Royte ydyl walkinge aboute. Discursus." Prompt. Parv.

I strongly suspect that our Royt, and E. rut are radically allied. For royt, as applied to females, conveys the idea of that sort of gadding which is the effect of wantonness. To gang royting about, seems nearly the same with E. To go a rutting. Dan. ruter, bacchari, Isl. krut-a, cum impetu feror aliquo, and hriot-a, subsultare, have been mentioned by Junius and Lye, as cognate terms. Isl. roelt-a, divagari.

"A' is whumbled in the linn beneath. I couldna hae credited that sic stane and lime, the best of ashler and rubble, could hae slipped awa like a feal dike." Tournay, p. 459.

In E. rubble-stones are said to "owe their name to their being rubbed and worn by the water, at the latter end of the deluge, departing in hurry and with great precipitation." Woodward. The term rubble itself is used as denoting rubbish. Huloet renders "Rubble, or little stones," by Lat. caementa. In S. however, the term is used to denote rough stones, of any description, such as are commonly employed in building, without being polished, but merely as hewn by the hammer.

RUBBOURIS, s. pl. [Oaken casks, kids, or tubs.]

"That William Reoch, &c. sall—pay to John the Ross of Montgrenane knycht, five li. for a pan of coppir, & x merkis for certane panyell crelis & rubbouris, qnhilkis gudis werspulyeit & takin be the saidis persons out of the place of Montgrenain," &c. 2. A bully; as, "He comes out on me roaring like a rubiator," Roxb. It is also expl. as denoting "a swearing worthless fellow."

This is probably the sense in which it occurs in Davidson's Discurs of the Estailis on the Deith of Mr. Knox, st. 4.

Thow wil mis ane Moderatour,
Quhais presence muist greit and small,
And terrifeit baith theif and tratour,
With all vnrewlie Rubiatour.

L.B. robator and rubator are both used for a robber. This seems the same with RABIATOR, q. v.

A.-S. rudduc, used by Aelfric in the same sense; from rude, ruber, red; Isl. raud, Su.-G. roed, id.

To RUDDY, v. n. To make a loud reiterated noise, S. B.

The wind is said to rudly, when one means to express the loud irregular noise it makes, especially as striking upon any object that conveys the sound, as on a door or window. In like manner, it is said that there is a terrible rudlying at the door, when a person raps with violence and reiterated strokes, as if he meant to break it open.

Rudlying is nearly allied in sense to thud. There is this difference, however, that rudlying includes the superadded idea of repetition or continuance. Rudlying is the reiteration of thuds in uninterrupted succession. It perhaps also denotes rather a sharper sound than that expressed by thud, which, as vulgarly used at least, suggests the idea of a hollow sound. Ruddy is sometimes used as a s.

This is most probably allied to Isl. hrud, a storm, a tempestuous wind; as thud, q. v. has a similar origin. Isl. hrud and Su.-G. rid also denote force in general; hence transferred to the rage of battle; — impetus; certamen. Isl. skothrid, pugna, griol-hrud, saxorum jactus.

Isl. ruda, hrud-ia, fluctus pelagicus iteratus, Haldorson; from hrud-in, expuere.

It may be worthy of notice, however, that, in the same language, rudda signifies a club, Sw. rodda.

O. E. "Roclyona, or whirlewynde, Turbo," (Prompt. Parv.) might seem allied to our v. to Ruddy.

RUDE, s. 1. "The red taint of the complexion;" Gl. Shirr. V. under RUD, adj.

RUDE, s. The spawn of fish or frogs, Ayrs.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 65.

V. REDD.

RUDE, RWD, s. The cross.

Think how the Lord for the on rude was rent.
Think and thou fle fra him, than art thou schent.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 356, 16.

A.-S. Su.-G. rod, Germ. rode. Junius has observed that as the Cimbr. or old Isl. word roda signifies an image, it appears that "the word rod, in its primary signification, anciently denoted an image of any kind, until from a special reason it was restricted to the cross of Christ, and also to the representation of this." Mr. Macpherson says, that "such explanation is inconsistent with his own quotations, to which hundreds of others might be added, all expressly bearing that Christ died on the rule;" Gl. Wynt. This argument, however, is not conclusive. For, although used by A.-S. writers to denote the cross on which our Saviour himself suffered, this will not prove that the term, as first adopted by that people, properly signified the instrument of suffering. That material crosses were used, and probably with an image of Christ upon them, before the conversion of the A.-Saxons, cannot be denied. V. Bingham's Orig. Ecclesiast. B. viii. c. 6, s. 20. This people, when they saw the veneration paid to the cross, might naturally apply to it a term formerly appropriated to the images of their false gods. As little can it be doubted, that they had innumerable words in common with the Goths whom they had left on the continent.

RUDE-DAY, s. The third day of May, S. B. i.e., what in the Kalendar is called the day of the Invention of the Cross.

Some of the superstitions, connected with the first of May, seem to be transferred to this day, most probably as being so near the other. Some old women are careful, on the eve of this day, to have their rocks and spindles made of the Roun-tree, or Mountain ash, to preserve their work from the power of witchcraft. For the same reason, on the evening preceding this day, many hang up bunches of this tree above the doors of their cow-houses, and tie them round the tails of their cattle with scarlet-threads.

On this day, indeed, great attention to their cows is supposed to be necessary; as both witches and fairies are believed to be at work, particularly in carrying off the milk. V. MILK THE TETHER. Many, accordingly, milk a little out of each dug of a cow on the ground. It is believed that this will make the cow luck or prosper during the whole summer; and that the reverse will be the case, if this ceremony be neglected. I need scarcely say, that this is evidently a heathenish libation, either to the old Gothic or German deity Hertha, the Earth, or to the Fairies. A similar superstition is mentioned, vo. PAN-KALE.

Great virtue is ascribed to May-dew. Some, who have tender children, particularly on Rude-Day, spread out a cloth to catch the dew, and wet them in it, S.R.

On this day, as well as on Christmas, New-year, and Handseel-Monday, a superstitious person would not allow a bit of kindled coal to be carried out of his own house to a neighbour's, lest it should be employed for the purposes of witchcraft.

In Angus, the gathering of dew, on Rude-day before dawn, has been reckoned an auspicious rite. This has undoubtedly been transmitted from the heathen. One of the rites employed by Medea, for renewing the youth of Æson, was the use of "dew collected before the dawn of day." Metamorph. lib. vii. fab. 2. V. Sandys' Ovid, p. 133.

2. This name is also given in our old Acts to the 14th day of September.

"And also in consideration that the ordinarie fair yearlie haldin within the said burcht of Craill—was haldin—vpoun the fourtene day of September callit Rudday, quihilk fair in respect of the harvest wes in effect vnprofitable to the burgh," &c.

This is the day called the Elevation of the Cross, Wormii Fast. Dan. In p. 142, it is marked as on the 14th day, in p. 116 as on the 15th. In the Breviarium Romanum, A. 1519, it is designed Exaltatio Crucis; in the Prayer-Book of the Church of England, the Holy Cross. In this sense Rud day is used also by Wyntown, "Rud day [exaltation of the holy cross]—14th September." Cron. ii. 524.

The 14th of September is still called Rude day in Lanarkshire, and perhaps in some other counties, although in the North of S. this term is confined to the 3d of May. From this day (in September) a calculation is made as to the state of the atmosphere. For it is said, that if the deer lie down dry, and rise dry on Rude-day, there will be sax ocks of dry weather. This probably refers to Rude-ecyn, i.e., the wake or vigil of Rude-day.

In Roxb. Rude-day is the 25th September, which corresponds with the 14th old style.

A superstitious regard to this season has also prevailed in Germany. There witches are supposed to have peculiar power in the beginning of May. Among the Bructeri, as well as in Ireland, according to Camden, the woman, who, on the first day of May, first applied for fire, was believed to be a witch; Keysler, Antiq. Septent., p. 90, 91. He also says, that the Bructeri were wont to assemble during the calends of May, and spend their time in dancing and feasting in the open air and among the woods. This he ascribes to the abuse of those public assemblies which they used to hold at this season, when their prince or leader appeared among them. But it is more probable, that the respect paid to it was previous to these assemblies; that the nation, indeed, fixed on this as the time of assembling, because it was formerly consecrated by superstition. V. Keysler, p. 87, 88.

Although the regard attached to Rude-day must be immediately traced to Popery, there can be no doubt that many of the superstitions, observed at this time, may be traced to earlier times. There is a considerable resemblance between some of these and those observed by the heathen Romans. At this time, they celebrated their Floralia, a feast in honour of Flora. Lactantius, (Inst. Lib. i. c. 20) and Minucius Felix, (Octav., p. 233) assert that she was a common prostitute, who engaged to leave a great legacy to the city of Rome, if a feast should be observed in commemoration of her; and that the Senate, thinking that this would be disgraceful, pretended that the feast was in honour of the goddess who presided over flowers.

As this is a time of great gaiety among young people, who generally go out into the fields in parties for their amusement, it was observed in the same manner among the Romans.

Venerat in morem populi depascere saltus.

Ovid. Fast. Lib. 5.

The greatest mirth was indulged. Persons appeared in the most fantastic habits. Even shocking indecencies were tolerated. I do not know that the Romans had any custom exactly similar to the Maypole. But they wore garlands of flowers, and clusters of berries, on their heads.

Tempora subilibus cinguntur tota coronis, &c.

Ovid. ibid.

A great similarity may be observed between the superstitions observed on Rude-day, and those of Beltane in other parts of S. V. BELTANE.

To RUFF, v. n. 1. To beat a drum in that particular mode which is observed when proclamations are made, S.

This seems originally to have been an oblique use of Germ. ruff-er, to cry; Germ. ausgeruff-en, Sw. utrop-a, to proclaim; Germ. ruf-er, a crier.

This is also written ruffe.

"His Testimony is very short, and he got liberty to deliver it, tho' two drums were ready on each hand to ruffe, as Major White should order them." Wodrow's Hist., ii. 281.

"When James Robertson offered to speak upon the scaffold, he was interrupted by the ruffling of the drums; and when complaining of this, Johnstoun the Town Major beat him with his cane, at the foot of the ladder, in a most barbarous manner." Ibid., p. 266.

2. To give a plaudit, by making a noise with the feet, S.

RUFF, RUFFE, s. 1. The roll of the drum, S.
2. Beating with the feet, as expressive of applause, S.

—Baith appear that night at play;

That made the billies unco crouse.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 23.

3. Fame; celebrity, q. state of applause.

"Sir James being thus rebuked, what could he do against a king, a monarch, a victorious and triumphant king? to whom all had yielded, with whom all went right well, in his ruffe, in his highest pitch, in his grandeur, compassed about with his guards, with his armies." Hume's Hist. Doug., p. 21.

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 57.

Mr. Pinkerton derives it from Isl. riu/a, to rob. V. Note, p. 393. But it seems rather allied to Teut. ruffel-en, terere, verrere; q. the tear and wear of one's reputation.

To RUG, v. a. 1. To pull hastily or roughly, S.

O'er he lap, and he ca'd her limmer,
And tuggit and ruggit her cockernonie.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 303.

2. To tear, as a ravenous fowl with its beak, S.

Ane hidduous gripe with bustouns bowland beik,

And sparis not to rug, rife and guawe.

Doug. Virgil, 185, 24.

Chaucer uses rogge, as signifying to shake. Roggyn or Mezyn, Agito, Prompt. Parv. ap. Tyrwhitt.

[3. To gnaw, to keep on gnawing, as, "To hae hunger ruggin at the verra heart," West of S.]

4. To spoil, to plunder.

—"Or your forbears—to have bene ignorantis of God and ydolaturis; and yow (safing your dew honouris we speike) quha rugis, as ye may, fra God and all godly use, to your awin ketchingis, to be the trew discipulis of Christie?" N. Winyet's First Tractat, Keith's Hist. App. 207. Snatches, Margin.

Hence the phrase,

To RUG AND RIVE. To carry off by mere violence, implying the idea of a contention for possession, S.

"'Never mind, Baillie,' said Ensign Maccombich 'for the gude auld times of rugging and riving, (pulling and tearing) are come back again, and Sneekus Mac-Sneekus, and all the rest of your friends, maun give place to the longest claymore.'" Waverley, ii. 297.

RUG, s. 1. A rough or hasty pull, S.

2. A haul, a chance. When one purchases any thing under its common price, it is said that he has got a rug of it, S.

This is evidently from the idea of one's snatching at any object, or seizing it with some degree of violence. He greedily lays hold of the opportunity of an advantageous bargain.

RUGGAIR, RUGGER, s. A depredator, one who seizes the property of others by force.

"At the north end of Raasay, be half myle of sea frae it, layes ane ile callit Ronay, mair then a myle in lengthe, full of wood and heddir, with ane havin for heiland galeys in the middis of it; and the same hauein in guyed [good] for fostering of thieves, ruggairs and reivairs, till a nail, upon the peilling and spalyeing of poure pepill." Monroe's Isles, p. 28.

[RUGGIN, RUGGING, s.] 1. A pulling, the act of pulling hastily or roughly, S.

2. Gnawing, the act of gnawing; generally applied to hunger, West of S.]

RUGGIN AN' RIVIN, RUGGING AND RIVING.

1. Equivalent to tearing and scrambling, pulling and hauling, in a quarrel or contest, S.

"This is the time that the people of God should be at holding and drawing, rugging and riving, ere the enemies of our Lord possess his crown, and bruik it with peace." Cloud of Witnesses, Test. J. M'Colm.

2. It often conveys the idea of the rapacity shewn in seizing and carrying off the property of others, S.

"A weel, ye see,—this was a job in the auld times o' rugging and riving through the hail country, when it was ilka ane for himsel—when nae man wanted property if he had strength to take it, or had it langer than he had power to keep it." Antiquary, ii. 240.

"Rugging and Riving, tearing and pulling;" Gl. Antiq.

RUGGING AT THE HEART. A phrase used in the Highlands, and explained of hunger.

"Having been dying at home these two years with the rugging at the heart, I advised him to get the Doctor to her."—"The craving or rugging at the heart, i.e., hunger, is a disease but too frequent among the Highlanders." N. Saxon and Gael, i. 153.

Teut. ruck-en, trahere, vellere, avellere, rapere; Su.-G. ryck-a, (pron. reuck-a) trahere, raptare; Rycka ut taender, dentes evellere, S. to rug out the teeth. Dan. rag-er til sig, to pluck, to take by force. Ibro thinks that the antiquity of the Su.-G. term appears from Lat. runco, used to signify the tearing up of herbs; and that Gr. epu-eu, evellere, (Lat. ruo, eruo), is the common fountain. Perhaps he might have immediately deduced the v., from Isl. ry-a, eruere, vellere; G. Andr., p. 98.

RUG-SAW, s. Said to be a wide-toothed saw, S.

"The spears were of such size that a rugg saw was made out of each, and still to be seen here." Stat. Acc., P. Roxburgh, xix. 135.

Perhaps the same called a drug-saw, Inventories, p. 255.

RUH-HED, s. A species of turf, for fuel, S.

"Gae 'wa' and clod on a creel fu' a ruh-hede on the ingle." Saint Patrick, ii. 319. "Turfs for fuel, which are cut without paring off the grass, are expressively called ruh-heds, i.e., rough-heads." Ibid. N.

To RUIFF, v. a. To clinch, to rivet. V. ROOVE.

RUIFF-SPAR, s. A spar for a roof; "Ruiff sparris," Aberd. Reg.

This phraseology occurs in our Rates, A. 1611. "Double roafe sparres ;—single roafe sparres ;—wicker sparres ;—stiken roafe sparres."

[RUIK, s.] A rook; pl. ruikis, ruiks, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 3076.]

RUIL, s. An awkward female romp, Lanarks.; pronounced like Fr. rué.

Belg. revel-en, "to rave, to talk idly, by reason being light-headed;" Sewel. Isl. rugl-a, effutire; turbare; rugl, ineptiae, gerrae; confusio; rol-a, vagari; Su.-G. rull-a, in gyrum agere vel agi; q. to be still in a giddy and unsettled state.

[RUILLER, s.] A buoy, Shetl.; Dan. rulle, Sw. rulla, to roll about. V. ROILER.]

To RUINT, RUNT, v. n. To make a harsh noise as in grinding. "Hear, how that cow's ruintin."—"Runtin' and eatin'." The term is generally applied to the noise made in eating rank vegetable food, as turnips, Berwicks. It appears to be synon. with Ramsh and Ransh or Runsh. V. REUNDE, ROOND.

Prob. a corr. from C. B. rhinctare, to creak, to gnash; whence rhincyn, a grinding noise. Perhaps it is rather from A.-S. ryn-an, rugire, pret. rynde; ryn, frenitus, rugitus.

[RUISE, RUISSE, s. Praise, fame, commendation, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 2961; also, a boast, West of S.; Isl. hrosa, praise.]

[To RUISE, RUISSE, v. a. To praise, to cry up; also, to boast, brag, West of S. V. ROOSE.]

[RUIST, s. Small rain, Shetl. V. RUG.]

RUL, s. A young horse, Shetl. V. ROOL.
Isl. rolle signifies circumscription. But whether this be a cognate term is doubtful.

RULE-O'ER-THOUM, adv. Slapdash, off hand, without consideration, without accuracy; equivalent to the phrase, "By rule o' thoum," i.e., thumb. To do any thing rule-o'er-thumb, is to do it without a previous plan, without arrangement, Roxb.

This, I suspect, is a corr. of the more common phrase, Rule o' thum', (pron. thoom.) V. under THUM.

RULIE, adj. Talkative, Upp. Lanarks.

This term rather corresponds with E. brawling. Isl. rugl-a, augari, rugi, nugae. It seems to be the same term which enters into the composition of Gampuly, q. v.

RULESUM, adj. Wicked, worthless; or horrible.

—"Thay thoct na thing mair rulesum than to trubel sa haly and religiis pepill, perseverant as apperit, in continual veneracioun of the goddis." Belanden's T. Liv., p. 38. Violari ducerent nefas; Boeth.

Perhaps from O. Fr. roille, mechant, haissable, Roquentort; or Isl. hroll-r, horror, hroll-a, hryll-a, horrors, whence hrythleg-r, horrendus.

RULLION, RULLIAN, s. 1. A shoe made of rough untanned leather. V. REWELLYNYS and RIVLIN.

[2. A piece of thick, rough cloth, or any piece of thick, rough dress, Banffs.]

3. Applied metaph., to a coarse-made masculine woman, Fife.

4. A rough ill-made animal, Gall. V. RAULLION.

5. A rough rullion, also metaph. used to denote a man who speaks his mind freely and roughly, Fife.

6. A scabbit rullion, a person overrun with the itch, Roxb.; probably from the roughness in the skin, produced by this loathsome disorder.

RULLION, s. A sort of bar or pilaster in silver work.

"Betwixt each statue arises a rullion in forme of a dolphine, very distinct." Inventories, p. 340.

Fr. roulons, petits barreaux ronds.—Scansula.—On nomme encore roulons, les petites balustrades des bancs d'église. Dict. Trev.

[To RULT, RUYLT, v. n. To roll clumsily from side to side, Shetl.; Dan. rulle, Sw. rulla, to roll about.]

[RULT, s. A clumsy person with a rolling gait, ibid.]

RUM, adj. 1. Excellent in its kind, Loth.

2. Ingenious, especially in mischief or wickedness, Roxb., Galloway; [droll, funny, Lanarks.]

RUM-COVE, s. Expl. "a droll fellow," Lanarks.

Both these are cant E. terms. "Rum, fine, good, valuable. Rum Cove, a dexterous or clever rogue;" Grose's Class Dict.

It is not improbable that Rum is an old word, perhaps the same with Roume, wide, spacious, A.-S. rum, amplus. Lye gives as one sense of this term, faustus, happy, lucky. Rum-geofu signifies liberal, open-handed, large-hearted; Somn.

RUMBALLIACH [gutt.], adj. 1. Stormy, applied to the weather, Roxb.

2. Quarrelsome; as, "a rumballiach wife," a woman given to brawls, ibid.

This word has greatly the appearance of a Gael. one. But I find none that have any resemblance. Isl. rumba has precisely the first sense,—which seems to be the primary one; procella pelagica, Halderson. Shall we suppose that this term has been compounded with alag, in pl. aloeq, dirae fatales, expl. by Dan. forhælselse, enchantment; q. rumbaaloeq, "a storm at sea raised by the weird sisters," or "by enchantment?" As used in the second sense, it might thus denote one agitated by the furies, as in Isl. At vera i aloegum, furis agitari.

RUMBLEGARIE, RUMMILGAIRIE, RUMLEGARIE, adj. Disorderly, having a forward and confused manner, S.

Jouk and his rumblegarie wife,
Drive on a drunken gaming life.

Ramsay's Poems, li. 576.

It is also used, Burns, iv. 235. V. ILL-DEEDIE.

RUMBLEGARIE, RUMMILGAIRIE, RUMLEGARIE, s. A rambling or roving person, a sort of romp; without including the idea of any evil inclination or habit, South of S.

Tent. rommel-en, turbare et grassare; robustè et celeriter sursum deorsum, ultro citroque se movere; Gaer, prorsus, omnino; Kilian, q. "completely unsettled."

RUMBLING SYVER. V. SYVER.

RUMGUMPTION, RUMMILGUMPTION, RUMBLE-GUMPTION, s. What is commonly called "rough sense;" a considerable portion of understanding, obscured by confusion of ideas, awkwardness of expression, or precipitancy of manner, S.

"Ye sud hae stayed at hame, an' wantit a wife till ye gathered mair rummelgumption." Perils of Man, i. 78.

They need not try thy jokes to fathom,
They want rungumption,
Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore, p. 8.
But sure it wad be gryte presumption,
In ane wha has oae sma' rungumption.
Shirreff's Poems, p. 321.

Rungumption is used S. B., rummelgumption, elsewhere.

It may have been formed from A.-S. rum, rumwell, spatiosus, and geom-ian, curare, q., a large share of sense. Or, as used in the latter form, the first part of the word may be from rummil, to make a noise, the term being generally applied to those who are rough and forward in their manner, and at first view might seem destitute of understanding. It is equivalent to the S. phrase, rouch sense. Although gumption has the same meaning S. and A. Bor., the adj. rungumtious has quite a different signification; "violent, bold, rash. North." GL. Grose. V. GUMPTION.

The etymon given to the word, in the form last mentioned, is confirmed by the remark commonly made in regard to one who is viewed as having more sound than sense; "He has a gude deal o' the rumble, but little o' the gumption." Roxb.

RUMGUNSHOCH, adj. Rocky, stony; applied to soil or a piece of ground, in which many stones or fragments of rock appear, Ayrs.

RUMGUNSHOCH, s. A coarse unpolished person, ib.

RUMLIEGUFF, s. A rattling foolish fellow, Mearns.

From rummil, to make a noise, and guff, a fool.

To RUMMAGE, v. n. 1. To rage, to storm, Roxb.

[2. To search through, toss about, turn over, in a wild, angry, disorderly manner, Clydes.]

RUMMAGE, s. 1. An obstreperous din, ibid.

[2. A wild, disorderly, angry search or turn-over, Clydes.]

Isl. rumak-a, signifies barrire, to bray as an elephant, and rumak, barritus. As rumba, is procella pelagica; rumbung-r, is expl. caligo pelagica, cum odore procelloso; Halderson. From the sense given to the noun, it might seem allied to the E. verb, as referring to the noise made in searching. One is not quite satisfied with Skinner's derivation from Teut. rumen-en, to empty. E. rummage, might be at first used in a ludicrous sense; from Ital. romeaggio, O. Fr. romivage, a pilgrimage to Rome; in order to expose the absurdity of roaming to such a distance under pretence of religion, or for procuring relics.

RUMMELSHACKIN, adj. Raw-boned, loose-jointed, Berwicks.; synon. Shacklin, q. making a rumbling noise in motion.

To RUMMIL, RUMMLE, RUMLE, v. n. 1. To make a noise, to roar, E. rumble.

Ane routand burn an ydwart therof rynniss,
Rumland and soundand on the craggy quhynniss.
Doug. Virgil, 227, 33.

[2. To move, roll, or shake, so as to produce a low, heavy sound, S.]

Teut. rommel-en, Su.-G. raml-a, Ital. rombol-are, Gr. ρῶβ-ειν, strepere. Seren. derives the Su.-G. v. from Isl. rymb-er, murmur. Perhaps it should be viewed as a dimin. from Su.-G. raam-a, boare. V. RAME, v.

To RUMMLE, v. a. To stir about; as, "to rummle potatoes," when mixed with any liquid, Clydes. Teut. rommel-en, celeriter move.

[RUMMLE, RUMLE, s. 1. A low, heavy, and continued sound; as, a rummle o' thunner, S.

2. Any movement or action that causes such a sound, S.

3. A wall, dyke, or building hurriedly put up, or in a rickety state, Banffs., Clydes.

4. A house or room that is large and ugly, ibid.]

[RUMMILGAIRIE, RUMLEGARIE, s. A rambling, roving, romping person. V. RUMBLEGARIE.]

RUMMLE-HOBBLE, s. A commotion, confusion, Perth.

Teut. rommel-en, to make a noise, and hobbel-en, a word of a similar meaning, for increasing the sense; formed like Teut. hobbel-tobbel, &c.

[RUMMLIN, RUMLAN, RUMLIN, s. 1. A continued low heavy sound, S.

2. The act of making such a sound, or whatever causes or produces it, S.]

[RUMMLIN, RUMLIN, adj. Causing, or producing a low, heavy sound, S.]

[RUMMLE-THUMP, s. Beat potatoes, Clydes.; potatoes and cabbage, Angus.]

RUMMLEKIRN, s. A gullet on rocky ground, Gall.

"Rummekirns, gullets on wild rocky shores, scooped out by the hand of nature: when the tide flows into them in a storm, they make an awful rumbling noise; in them are the surges churned." Gall. Encycl.

To RUMMYSS, RUMMES, RUMES, ROWMYSS, v. n. To bellow, to roar as a wild beast, S.

Lyke as ane bull dois rummesing and rare,
Quhen he eschapis hurt ome the altare,
Doug. Virgil, 46, 13.

Of his E dolpe the slowand blude and atir
He wosche away all with the salt watir,
Grissilland his teith, and rummisse full his.
Ibid. 90, 47.

A lion, caught in the toils, is described as Roland about with hydious rummising.
Henrysonc, Evergreen, i. 195.

RUMMISS, s. A loud, rattling, or rumbling noise, Clydes.

"Down cam the wearifu' milkhouse, an' the hail en' o' the byre neest it, wi' an awsome rummiss, ding-an' the cheese-rack, boins, curries, an' hannies, a' to smash." Edin. Mag., Dec. 1818, p. 503. V. RUMIS.

Rudd. views this word as probably derived from the sound. But there seems to be no ground for the supposition. It is undoubtedly a deriv. from some one of the verbs mentioned under Rame. Isl. rym-a, rym-ia, is used in a similar sense. Skogdyren rymia ecke, naer tha hafa graeced; The beasts of the field roar not, when they have grass, Job, vi. 5. Wachter mentions Fr. ramas, as signifying noise, although I have not observed this word in any other dictionary.

[RUMP, s. An ugly, raw-boned animal, commonly applied to cows, Banffs.]

To RUMP, v. a. To deprive one of all his money or property; a phrase often applied to a losing gamester; as, "I'm quite rum-pit," Fife; synon. Runk, Rook.

Perhaps in allusion to an animal whose tail is cut off very near the rump.

RUMPLE, RUMPILL, s. 1. The rump, or rump-bone, S.

"It is a sign of a hale heart to rift at the rumpie," Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 44.

"Ye ride aae near the rumpie, ye'll let nane lowp on behind you;" Ibid., p. 84.

Some aint a craig
Stan' snugly, shaded frae the burning day;
An' rub their yeuky rumples on the turf.
Davidson's Seasons, p. 61.

2. The tail, S.

"Otheris allegis thay dang hym [St. Austine] with akait rumpillie. Nochtelies this derisoun succedit to thair gret displeasure. For God tuke on thaim sic vengeance, that thay and thair posterite had lang tailis mony yeris eftir." Bellend. Cron., B. ix. c. 17.

Perhaps a late learned, but whimsical writer, did not know that he had the authority of one of our own historians on his side.

RUMPLE-BANE, s. The rump-bone, S.

But he has gotten an auld wife,
And she's come hirplin hame;
And she's fa'n o'er the buffet-stool,
And brake her rumpie-bane.
Herd's Coll., ii. 229.

RUMPLE-FYKE, s. A designation for the itch, when it has got a firm seat, Galloway.

Sae Cumberlaw an' Helen Don
In jumping o'er a dyke, man,
Fell, belly-laught, on Doctor John
Wha cur'd the rumpie-fyke, man.
Davidson's Seasons, p. 91.

From rumpie and fyke, q. v.; because a person, who is very bad with this disorder, like a farsy horse, rubs his back against a tree or wall for the purpose of removing the itchiness.

RUMPTION, s. A noisy bustle within doors, driving every thing into a state of confusion; as, "to kick up a rumption," Roxb.

Apparently formed from Lat. rump-ere; as giving the idea of every thing being broken to pieces.

RUMPUS, s. A disturbance, a tumult, Roxb.; corr. perhaps from Fr. rompue, a rout, a discomfiture.

[To RUMPUS, v. n. To quarrel, to cause a disturbance, to behave disorderly, Clydes., Banffs.]

RUN, part. pa. Having one's stock of any thing exhausted, with the prep. of added; as, "I'm run o' snuff," my snuff is done, S. B., run short of.

To RUNCH, v. n. To grind with the teeth, to craunch, Upp. Lanarks.

RUNCH, s. The act of grinding any harsh edible substance, ibid.

Fr. rong-er, to gnaw; to chew, to champ; O. Fr. run-ier, corroder, manger; Roquesfort.

RUNCH, s. An iron instrument for wrenching or twisting nuts on screw-bolts, Roxb.; evidently corr. from E. to wrench, or Teut. renck-en, torquere.

RUNCHES, s. pl. Wild mustard; a term applied both to Sinapis Arvensis, and Raphanus Raphanistrum, S. skellies, synon. skellachs, Loth.

"The ground, if it is much dunged, runs excessively to runches, skellochs, &c., and is full of quickens and couch grass." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 80.

"Runches and Runchballs; carlock, [i.e., charlock,] when it is dry and withered;" A. Bor. Ray's Coll., p. 59. V. SKELLOCH.

Some define Runches as a larger and whiter flower than Skellachs, Loth.

On runtes and runches in the field,
With nolt, thou nourish'd was a year;
Whill that thou past baith poor and peild,
Into Argyle some lair to leir.
Poisart, Watson's Coll., iii. 8.

RUNCHIE, adj. Raw-boned; as, "a runchie queyn," a strong, raw-boned woman; Fife.

Supposed to be borrowed from the coarse appearance of the largest kind of wild mustard seed, called runches.

To RUND, v. n. V. ROOND.

RUND, ROON, s. 1. A border.

"Runds of cloath ilk three thousand ells"—duty fixed in bullion at "one ounce." Acts Cha. II., Ed. 1814, VII., 253.

2. The border of a web, the selvage of broad cloth, S. Roon, expl. "a shred, a remnant," Shirr. Gl., is the same word.

In thae auld times, they thought the moon,
Just like a sark, or pair o' shoon,
Wore by degrees, till her last roon
Gaed past their viewing.
Burns, lii. 254.

A.-S. Su.-G. Teut. rand, Isl. rond, raund, margo, extremitas. The primary sense of the Su.-G. and Isl. words is, linea, which Ihre derives from rad, id. with the insertion of n.

To RUNDGE, v. n. "To range and gather," Gl. Evergreen.

—Quha kelp ay, and heip ay
Up to themselves grit store,
By rundging and spunging
The lall laborious pure.

Vision, Evergreen, l. 219, st. 12.

It seems doubtful if this word be not misapplied.
For it may rather signify to gnaw, to consume, being apparently the same with rounge. V. RONGED.

RUNG, s. 1. Any long piece of wood; but most commonly a coarse heavy staff, S.

With bougars of barnis thay beft blew capps,
Quhill thay of bernis said briggis;
Tha retrd rais rudellie with the rappis,
Quhen rungs was laid on riggis.

Chr. Kirk, st. 14.

Here the word evidently signifies any rough poles, or pretty gross pieces of wood, as the cross spars of barns, called bougars. Perhaps it has the same meaning in the following passage:—

The calves and ky met in the lone,
The man ran with ane rung to red,

Bannatyne Poems, p. 217, st. 8.

"I'll take a rung, and risle your rigging with it;"
S. Prov. Kelly, p. 396.

Sair sair he pegh'd, and fought against the storm,
But aft forfaughen turn'd tail to the blast,
Lean'd him upo' his rung, and tuke his breath.

The Ghast, p. 2.

"As the law of nature admits of self-defence, so are not the proportion or disproportion of arms considered in law in a strict sense, or arithmetically with respect to the length, breadth, or sharpness of one weapon in comparison with another; but in a larger sense, and geometrically, as the law says, i.e., with respect to the strength, fierceness, and vigour of one man, though without any other arms than his limbs, or but a staff or rung, in comparison with an assaulted feeblen man, though having a sword and deadly weapon." MacLaurin's Crim. Cases, p. 29.

2. A spoke, [spar, or step; as, the rungs of a ladder, S.]

Teut. ronghe, fulcrum sive sustentaculum duarum currus extremitatum; Kilian.

3. Used metaph., in relation to the influence of poverty.

An' as for Poortith, girnin carline!—
Aft hae I borne her wickit snarlin,
An' felt her rung.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, l. 120.

[4. An ugly, big-boned animal or person,
Clydes., Banffs.]

Skinner observes, that those timbers of a ship, which constitute her floors, are called rungs; perhaps q.
rings, (from their being bolted to the keels), ringed poles. But we have the very term in Moea.-G., in the sense still most common in S. Hrugg, supposed to be pron. hrung, virga. "And commanded them, that they should take nothing for their journey, nibra hrugga aina, save a staff only;" Mark vi. 8. Hence Isl. raung, pl. rungor, Su.-G. rong, rang, uraeng, Fr.
varangues, the ribs of a ship. Isl. rang is also used to denote the perch or pole on which fowls sit while they sleep; which most nearly approaches to the most ancient sense, and to that retained by us. Honan sittler ei sa hogt a rang, Chron. Rhythm. ap. Ihre; i.e., S. "The hen sits na sa heich on the rung." Junius strangely views E. rodde, Belg. roede, as synonymes of Moea.-G. hrugg, mentioning no other; Goth. Gl. In the Gl. to Landnamabok, Isl. rong, costa navis, is derived from rang-r, Dan. vrang, obliquus. But as we find the same term in Moea.-G., this derivation seems inadmissible.

[To RUNG, v. a. To beat with a stick, or runq, Banffs.]

[RUGAN, RUGIN, RUNGING, s. A beating with a stick, a thrashing, ibid.]

[RUNG-CAIRT, s. A cart with open sides, i.e., made with rungs or spars of wood, ibid.,
West of S.]

RUNG-WHEEL, s. As there are two wheels in a corn-mill, which work into one another, the one which has cogs drives the other,
and is called the cog-wheel, the other, from its having spokes or rungs, is called the rung-wheel, Roxb.

[RUNG, s. A hollow sound, Shetl.]

[To RUNG, v. n. To reverberate, to give forth a hollow sound, ibid.

Dan. runge, to resound.]

RUNGAND, part. pr. Raging, resounding. V.
RING, v.

RUNGATT, adj. Errat. for Runigatt, as elsewhere. Fr. renegat.

"This fed sow,—his face being sweating, and froath-ing at the mouth like ane hair, spatt at Mr. George Wischart, saying, Quhat answeris thow to this rungatt traitour theife, quhill we have dewlie proved be sufficient witnes againes the?" Pitcottie's Cron., p.
460. Runigatt, p. 472.

To RUNGE, v. n. "To rummage, to search with avidity;" Gall. Encycl.; probably a variety of Reenge.

RUNG-IN, part. pa. Worn out by fatigue; applied to men or horses, that are so exhausted by running that they cannot contend for victory any longer; Fife.

This may be viewed as an additional sense of the v.
to RING in. V. the origin of the phrase there given.

[RUNGY, s. Field mustard, Sinapis arvensis,
Shetl.]

[RUNI, s. A heap of stones, ibid. Norse, runne, id.]

RUNJOIST, s. A strong beam laid along the side of the roof of a house which was to be covered with thatch, Aberd. Pan.
synon. Lanarks.

"Strong spars, called runjoists, were laid along side of the roof." Agr. Surv. Aberd., p. 129.

[RUNK, s. A broken, or twisted, hence useless branch of a tree, Shetl. Dan.
ranke, a branch.]

[RUNK, RUNKE, s. A fold, a plait, a crease, West of S. Dan. rynke, a fold, rumple.]

RUNK, adj. 1. Wrinkled, Aberl.

"Bat the thing that anger'd me warst ava was, to be aae sair guid'd by a chanler-chafed auld runt earlen." Journal from London, p. 4.

[2. Used as a s., and applied to an old woman, Shetl.

3. Dry, as applied to the weather: used also as a verb, as, "It's beginning to runk," i.e., to dry up, ibid.]

RUNKLE, RUNKILL, s. 1. A wrinkle, S.

Alecto hir thrawin vissage did away,—
And hir in schape transformyt of ane trat,
Hir forret skorit with runkillis and mony rat.
Doug. Virgil, 221, 35.

2. A rumple, a crease, S.

"Christ hais luffit the kirk,—to mak it to him self ane glorious congregatioun, haiffand na spot nor runkil, nor ony siclyke thing, bot that it suld be haly & without reпреif." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 17, a. b.

This is proverbially applied, in allusion to what are otherwise called the nicks in a cow's horn. "We may ken your eild by the runkles of your horn;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 75; "spoken to old maids when they pretend to be young;" Kelly, p. 359.

To RUNKLE, v. a. 1. In part. pa. runkled, runkled, wrinkled, S.

At har't at the shearing nae younkens are jeering,
The bansters are runkled, lyart, and grey.
Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 3.

Auld Bessie, in her red coat braw,
Came wi' her ain oe Nanny,
An odd-like wife, they said, that saw,
A moupin runkled granny.
Ramsay's Poems, i. 272.

2. To crease, to crumple, S.

A.-S. wrincl-ian, Belg. wrinkel-en, Germ. runt-zeln, Su.-G. rynck-a, rugare.

[RUNKLED, adj. Wrinkled, crumpled, creased, tossed, broken, S.]

RUNKLY, adj. Wrinkled, shrivelled, S.

He fell a prey to runkly eild,
An's trampit aff afore us.
A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 204.

To RUNK, v. a. 1. To deprive one of what he was formerly in possession of, whether by fair or foul means; as, in play, to take all one's money, S.B.

2. To attack or endeavour to undermine one's character, Ayrs.

3. To satirize, ibid.

A.-S. wrenc, fraus, dolus; or Teut. wronck, wronck, injuria; latens odium. Most probably it has originally been used in a bad sense, from Isl. reinki, crafty, rank-or, fraud; Pers. renc, guile.

[RUN-MILK, s. Milk coagulated by the heat of the weather, Shetl.]

[RUNNALAN, s. V. RUNNICK.]

RUNNER, s. In cutting up of beeves, the slice which extends across the fore-part of the carcase under the breast, S. V. NINE-HOLES.

RUNNICK, RUNNALAN, s. A kennel, a drain, Shetl.

Isl. renna, canalis.

RUNNIE, s. A hog, a boar, Shetl.

Isl. rane, verres non castratus, Su.-G. rone, id. Ihre derives these terms from ron, an old word signifying pruritus, lascivia.

RUNRIG. Used both as an adj. and a s. 1. Applied to land belonging to different owners, S.

"A separate act passed in the same session of parliament, 1695, c. 23, for dividing lands belonging to different proprietors, which lie runrig, with the exception of acres belonging to boroughs or incorporations. Lands are said to lie runrig, where the alternate ridges of a field belong to different proprietors." Erskine's Instit., B. III. T. iii. s. 59.

"Landis lyand togidder in run-rig, and swa pertenant and occupyit be divers and sindrie personis, everie ane of thame may be compellit, at the instance of ane uther, to concur in keeping of gude nichtbourheid ane with the uther, in tilling, labouring, sawing, scheiring, pastouring, and dykeing, and in all uther thingis pertening to gude and thriftie nichtbourheid." Balfour's Pract., p. 536, 537. V. NYGHTBOURHEID.

2. Run-rig is also expl., "a common field, in which the different farmers had different ridges allotted to them in different years, according to the nature of their crops." P. Ayton, Berw. Statist. Acc., i. 80, N.

This mode of possession, or of farming, has been accounted for in the following manner:—

"This neighbourhood, on both sides of Tweed, was formerly the warlike part of the country, and exposed to the inroads of the English; the lands, therefore, all lay run-rig, that when the enemies came, all the neighbourhood, being equally concerned, might run to oppose them." P. Smallholm, Roxb. Statist. Acc., iii. 217.

The same reason is elsewhere assigned for this mode of farming, Ibid., i. 80, 81, v. 322, N.

The same absurd plan of farming exists in the Hebrides. V. Pennant's Tour, 1772, p. 201. Various estates in S. are still possessed in this manner. In Orkney, this mode remains both among tenants and landholders.

"Many of the lands that belong to the same proprietor, as well as those that are the property of different proprietors, are blended together in what is called runrig." Barry's Orkney, p. 352.

Notwithstanding the plausibleness of the reason assigned for this custom, as securing common exertion during a state of warfare, it would seem that we ought to trace it to an earlier period. It is most probably a remnant of the ancient Gothic or German manners. We learn from Tacitus (De Moribus Germ.) that, "among the Germans, the cultivated lands were not considered as the property of individuals, but of the whole tribe, which they cultivated, and sowed, and reaped, in common." V. Barry, p. 103.

Cæsar gives materially the same account of the manners of the Germans. "Neque quisquam agri modum certum, aut fines habet proprias; sed magistratus, ac principes in annos singulos gentibus, cognationibusque hominum, qui una coierunt, quantum, et quo loco visum est, agri adtribuunt, atque anno post alio transire cogunt." De Bell. Gall. Lib. vi. c. 22.

The prevalence of run-rig, in Orkney and Shetland, even among different landholders, affords a strong presumption that it was introduced from Germany or Scandinavia, and gradually found its way, in Scotland, from North to South.

The name seems evidently derived from the circumstance of these lands or ridges running parallel to each other.

RUNSE, RUNSH, s. 1. "The noise a sharp instrument makes, piercing flesh;" Gall. Encycl.

Fr. roncé, "hurled, or making a whurring noise;" Cotgr. Or from rong-er, to gnaw, as denoting the sound made by this operation. V. RANSE, RUNSH, v.

[2. The act of grinding any harsh edible substance. V. RUNCH.]

3. The piece taken out by such an act; as, "He took a runsh o' the turmet, i.e. turnip, West of S.]"

[To RUNSH, v. n. V. RUNCH.]

RUNSY, s. A common hackney horse.

Vpon ane rude runsy he ruschit out of toun,
In ane ryall array he rydis full richt
Euin to the mountain. —

Rauf Coilyear, D. j. a.

Rouncie, id. Chaucer. Prol. v. 392.

He rode upon a rouncie, as he conthe.

L.B. runcin-us, equus minor, gregarius; Du Cange. O.Fr. roncin, ronchi, ronci, cheval de service; Roquefort. C.B. rhensi, a rough-coated horse, a pack-horse; Owen.

RUNT, s. 1. The trunk of a tree.

—Muskane treis sproutit,
Combust, barrant, unblomit, and unleift,
Auld rotlin runtis quharin na sap was leift.
Palace of Honour, i. 3.

2. The hardened stem or stalk of a plant, as of colewort or cabbage. A kail-runt, the stem of colewort, S.

"The stems, or, to give them their ordinary appellation, the runts, are placed somewhere above the head of the door; and the Christian names of the people whom chance brings into the house, are, according to the priority of placing the runts, the names in question." Burns, iii. 126, N. V. BOWKAIL.

3. The tail of an animal; properly, the upper part of it; Galloway.

The cow was missed at the slap,
At milking time at e'en. —

"Upo' the hill," the callant cries,
"She cock'd her gaucy runt."

Davidson's Seasons, p. 50.

4. "A short person;" Gall. Encycl.

5. An old cow, S. B.; a cow that has given over breeding, Caithn.

This is evidently quite different from the sense of the word, as used in England, where it signifies an ox or cow of a small size. It is probably from the same origin, however; Belg. rund, a bullock, Germ. rinde, an ox or cow. V. RHIND MART.

6. An old woman, q. a withered hag. An opprobrious name for a female, generally one advanced in life, with the adj. auld prefixed, S.

Prob. this is the secondary sense of the term as denoting an old cow. For in the north of England, a woman is said to be runted when she is fifty years old; it being a question sometimes put to a son, "Is your mother runted yet?"

Isl. Arund is expl. mulier; but poetically, from the name of a heathen goddess. It also signifies, Mulier libertina.

The term is perhaps radically the same with Germ. rinde, [O. H. Germ. rinta,] bark; also, crust: a runt, S. being but the stalk hardened into a sort of bark?

To RUNT, v. n. To bounce, to prance, to caper; to rush forth, Galloway.

Forth frae the house away they runted;
Swearing their wrath wuld ne'er be blunted,
While liv'd a clan,
That wuld wi' gun or braid-sword dunt it,
Wi' man to man.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 35.

Frae the hills he hameward runted. Ibid., 39.

This term, as necessarily including the idea of impetuosity, is most probably from Isl. runte, a boar not gelded, (Verel.) Su.-G. ronte, runte, id. from ron, pruritus, lascivia. Hence also ronsk, a stallion; Germ. ranz-en, coire. If this conjecture be well founded, runt may be viewed as resembling Brainge not only in signification, but in tradition.

There may be some affinity between this term and the well-known phrase used by Shakespear, Aroint thee witch! (Macbeth); especially as "Rynt you, witch, quoth Besse Locket to her mother," is a proverbial phrase in Cheshire. V. RAY, GROSE.

If, however, we suppose rynt to be an abbreviation, and aroint to be the original pronunciation; the term might perhaps be viewed as a corr. of Fr. arry avant, "on afore, away there hoe; from the Carter's cry, Arry;" Cotgr.

RUNTHEREOUT, s. A vagabond, one who has no fixed residence, who lives as it were sub dio, S.; rather rinthereout.

"The ne'er be in me, sir, if I think you're safe among these Highland runthereouts." Waverley, iii. 132.

From the v. to run or rin, and the adv. thereout, out of doors, in the open air. V. THAIROWT.

RUNWULL, adj. "A person is said to be runwull, when out of the reach of the law;" Gall. Encycl. V. WILL, adj.

RURALACH, s. "A native of the rural world;" Gall. Encycl.

RURYK, adj. Rural, rustic, vulgar.

Wallace a lord he may be clepyt weyll,
Thocht ruryk folk tharoff half litill feill,
Na deyme na lord, bot landis be thair part.
Wallace, vii. 398, MS.

Lat. rus, rus-is, the country.

To RUSCH, RUSCHE, RUSS, RYSS, v. a.
1. To drive, to drive back, to put to flight, to overthrow.

L

For thair within war rycht worthy ;
And thaim defendyt doughtely ;
And ruscht thair fayis oet agayne,
Sum best, sum woundyt, sum als slayne.
Barbour, iv. 93, MS.

For athyr part set all thair mycht
To rusche thair fayis in the fycht ;
And with all mycht on othyr dang.
Ibid., xiv. 200, MS.

Men sayis that the Inglis thare
On bak a gret space royssyd ware.
Wyntoun, viii. 26. 144.

[2. As a v. n., to fall down, Barbour, xii. 513.]

Su.-G. rus-a, rusk-a, A.-S. hreo-an, raes-an, to rush, to fall down. Ihre views Moes.-G. drius-an as originally the same, only with d prefixed. Isl. hryce, irruptio.

RUSCHE, RWHYS, s. Drive, violent exertion of force; [onset, attack.]

Thaire thair layid on dwyhs for dwyhs,
Wyth mony a rap; and mony a rwys
Thare was delt in-to that felle.

Wyntoun, viii. 16. 202.

To RUSE, ROOSE, v. a. To extol, to commend highly; sometimes written reese, S.
Ruze, reouse, reuze, A. Bor.

Syttand at dis ilk ane saia his entent ;
Carpis of pece, and ruse it now, lat se,
Quhen that they younder inuadis your countra.

Doug. Virgil, 379, 42.

Thouch sum be trow, I wot rycht few ar thei ;
Who findith truthe, let him his lady ruse.

Henryson's Test. of Crescide Chron., S. P., i. 174.
Come view the men thou likes to roose.

Ramsay's Works, i. 123.

The world will like me if I'm rees'd by you.
Ibid., 347.

"Every body ruces the ford as he finds it;" S. Prov.
Radd. i.e., commands it more or less. For here the term is meant to bear an ambiguous sense.

"Ruse the fair day at night;" S. Prov. "Commend not a thing, or project, till it has its full effect;" Kelly,
p. 282.

Ill rused is sometimes used, as in the S. Prov.; "If it be ill, it is as ill rused;" i.e., discommended. V.
Kelly, p. 210.

The term, in its primary sense, has included the idea of boasting. It has still a similar application. One is said to ruse himself; also, to ruse his gudes, when he prefers them to those of others. This corresponds to Isl. rous-a, jactabundè multa effutio; G. Andr. Ros-a, laudare, extollere; Verel. Ind. Su.-G. ros-a, roos-a, Dan. ros-er, Ital. ruzz-are, id. Ihre imagines that it may be derived from ris-a, to elevate. It would be more natural to refer to Moes.-G. razda, speech; especially as Isl. rous, evidently allied to ruse, denotes prodigality of words, futile talk.

RUSE, RUISSE, RUSS, s. 1. Boast.

I compt na thing al thoct yone fant Troianis
Rekin thar fatis that thame hilder brocht,
Al sic vane ruse I fere as thing of nocht,
In case thay proude be of the Goddis ansueris,
And thame awant therof with felloun feris.

Doug. Virgil, 279, 10.

Sum spendis on the auld vse,
Sum makis ane tume ruse.

Ibid. ProL 238, b. 3.

To mak a tume ruse, to boast where there is no ground for it, but the reverse; as, to boast of fulness, when one is in poverty. This phrase is still used, Ang.

Qubai gif King David war leivand in thir dayis ?
The quhilk did found sa mony gay Abayis.—

His successours maks litill ruise, I ges,
Of his devotioun, or of his holiness.

Lindsay, S. P. R., ii. 232.

The proprietor of the small estate of Deuchar, in Angus, had in his possession, till the year 1745, when it was carried off by the Highlanders, in their search for arms, a broad sword, transmitted from one heir to another, with this curious inscription;

At Bannockburn I serv'd the Bruce,
Of quhilk the Inglis had na russ.

The account has this collateral proof of authenticity, that the family have in their possession seisins from the time of David Bruce downwards. These I have examined.

Come, fill us a cog of swats,

We'll mak nae mair toom roose.

Maggie's Tocher, Herd's Coll., ii. 78.

2. Commendation, praise; without the idea of boasting being included, S.

Ros is used in this sense, O. E.

A morn Lybeaus was boun

For to wyne renoun,

And ros wythoute les.

Lybeaus, Ritson's E. M. R., ii. 33.

Chaucer, ruce, commend.

Su.-G. ros, roos, praise. Ihre observes, that it was used by ancient writers in the sense of boasting. Isl.
hroosun, praise, Dan. roeseglede, boasting.

RUSER, s. One habituated to self-commendation.

"A great ruser was never a good rider;" S. Prov.
"A man that boasts much, seldom performs well;"
Kelly, p. 38.

RUSH, s. A sort of flux or diarrhœa in sheep, when first put upon new or rank pasture, Teviotd., Loth.

"Purging, or Rush. Mr. Stevenson. Diarrhœa, or Rush. Mr. Laidlaw." Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 407.

RUSH, s. An eruption on the skin, S.
Hence, rush-fever, the vulgar name for scarlet fever, S.

Lancash. rash must be originally the same; although used in a more limited sense, as defined by T. Bobbins,
"a sort of itch with infants." Both terms seem formed from synon. verbs; for rasch signifies to rush, to break out forcibly.

RUSHIE, s. A broil, Fife.

Tent. ruysch, strepitus, ruysch-en, strepere, perstrepere. Su.-G. Isl. rusk-a, id.

Su.-G. Isl. rusk, strepitus, turbatio; rusk-a, turbare, conturbare; Su.-G. id., motitare, concutere.

To RUSK, v. n. 1. To scratch, to claw with vehemence, Fife. It is often conjoined with a synon. term; as, Ruskin' and clawin'.

2. To pluck roughly; as when a horse tears hay from a stack, he is said to be ruskin' at it, Fife; to Tusk, synon.

Sic ruskit, bandless graith
Wad haud a world a-steer.

MS. Poem.

Tent. ruysch-en, rectius, ruylach-en, scabere, terere, fricare; Kilian. He views ruyl, scabies, as the origin;
Germ. raud.

RUSKIE, s. 1. A basket for carrying corn, during the operation of sowing, Perthshire. Loth.

It is made of twigs of briar and wheat straw.

2. "A sort of a vessel made of straw to hold meal in."

"You are as small as the twitter of a twin'd rusky," S. Prov.; "a taunt to a maid, that would gladly be esteemed neat, and small;" Kelly, p. 395.

3. A hive for bees, made of rushes or straw, S.B. skep, synonym.

4. A coarse straw hat worn by peasant-girls and others, for defending their faces from the sun, Roxb., Mearns; synonym. Bongrace.

From A.-S. rise, a rush, Su.-G. rusk, congeries virgultorum; or rather, radically the same with ryssia, Germ. reusche, Fr. ruche, a bee-hive.

RUSKIE, 1. As an adj., healthy and stout, as, "He's a ruskie fallow," a vigorous young man; "That's a ruskie fychel," that is a stout healthy young foal, Upp. Clydes.

[2. As a s., A strong person of rough manners, Banffs.]

This seems radically the same with RASCH, RASH, q. v. Isl. roest-r, Su.-G. Dan. rask, strenuus, fortis.

[RUSSA, s. A stallion. Used to denote the male of any species, as hesta does the female; as, rusa bairn, a boy, hesta bairn, a girl, Shetl. Faroese, ros, a horse.]

[RUSSIE-FOAL, s. A young stallion, a slovenly person, ibid.]

[RUSSAT, RUSSATE, adj. Of a dull red or brown colour, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 14, Dickson.]

[RUSSAT, RUSSATE, RUSSAIT, s. Cloth generally of a coarse sort worn by the lower order of people. It was at first named from its colour; but latterly the term indicated the quality rather than the colour of the cloth, ibid. i. 17, 234. O. Fr. russet.]

[RUTE, s. A root; rute and grund, the origin, source, cause, Lyndsay, The Dreame, l. 880.]

RUTE, s. A blow. V. ROUT, s. 2.

RUTE, s. A fowl; perhaps the same with the Rood-Goose.

"The quink, Acts M. Isl. A goose; q. the Rood Goose.

d, ii. s. The claik, ie peice, xviii. d."

a species of wild called Fiella rota, Andr., p. 124. V.

RUTEMASTER, RUTMASTER, ROOTEMASTER, s. The captain of a troop of horse;

RUTH, adj. Kind. "Ruth and ready," still disposed to shew kindness, Ayrshire.

"She has been a most excellent wife, and a decent woman, and had aye a ruth and ready hand for the needful." The Provost, p. 254.

A.-S. hrow-ian, misereri: Mec hroweth, me misere; Lye.

RUTHER, s. A loud noise, a tumultuous cry, an uproar, S.

Sic a ruther raise, tweesh riving hair, Screeding of kurches, crying dool and care, Wi' thud for thud upon their bare breast lane, To see't and heart, wad break a heart of stane.

Ross's Helenore, p. 23.

A.-S. hruth, commotion, C. B. rhuthr, impetus, rhuthro, cum impetu ferri, Ir. ruathar, pillage. It may, however, be of the same origin with Ruddy, q. v., especially as Isl. hrid denotes a combat.

To RUTHER, v. n. 1. To storm, to bluster, Mearns.

2. To roar, ibid. V. RUTHER, s.

RUTHER, RUTHYR, s. Rudder.

A hundreth schippis, that ruthyr bur and ayr, To turn their gud, in hawyn was lyand thar.

Wallace, vii. 1066, MS.

O. E. "Rothyr of a shyp. Amplustre. Temo," &c. Prompt. Parv.

RUTHIE, s. The noise occasioned in the throat or breast by oppressed respiration, Aberd.

A.-S. hrut-an, Isl. hriot-a, (pret. hrawt), ronchos docers, stertere; hrot, hryt-r, ronchus. Hence O. E. to rout, to snore.

RUTILLAND, part. pr.

RUTOUR, s. A spoiler, an oppressor.

"Than sal thay corruppit rutouris, his mynyons, be salut as kyngis, and haldyn in reuerence among us." Bellend. Cron. Fol. 11, a. V. ROYSTERS.

[To RUTT, v. n. To rake up, as a pig, Shetl. Dan. rode, to rake up, to trench the ground.]

RUTTERY, s. Lechery.

*Thocht scho bewitchet wald in ruttery ring,
The nobillis soult nether of thair enduire,
That lowne to leif, nor her to be his haire.
Declarations, &c., Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 271.*

From Fr. ruit, the rut of deer. Skinner gives different etymons of the Fr. word. But perhaps it may be more properly traced to Su.-G. rut-a, vagari, discurrere; as brute animals, in the rutting state, run from place to place. Seren., on the E. word, refers to Goth. rhatur, a ram, and rant-a, to bellow.

To RUVE, v. a. To clinch. V. ROOVE.

RUWITH. Within.

*Fight was prodly, with purpour and pallé;
Birds branden above, in brend gold bright;
Ruwith was a chapell, a chambour, a halle;
A chymné with charcole, to chaufe the knight.*

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 9.

*With iss was a chapelle, a chambir, and ane haille.
Lairng's Early Pop. Poetry, st. 35.*

Perhaps it had been originally in with, written according to our established mode.

[RUVD, adj. Rude, severe, Barbour, ii. 356.

Fr. rude, rough, harsh.]

[RUVDLY, adv. Rudely, boisterously, ibid., ii. 349.]

[To RUYL, v. n. To roll from side to side, Shetl. Sw. rulla, Dan. rulle, to roll.]

[RUYL, s. A person who walks in a rolling manner, ibid.]

To RUYNATE, v. a. To destroy, to bring to ruin.

—"Haveing diligentlie and advysitlie considerit the estait of the burcht of Dunbartane, being in danger to be ruynatit be the violent cours of the river of Levin and rage of sea, whereby gif tymous remede be nocht provydit, in verie schorte tyme the haille towne sall be carryt away and distroyit," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1607, Ed. 1814, p. 376.

L.B. and Ital. ruinare, destruere.

[RUYS, s. pl. Rows, streets, Barbour, xv. 71.]

[To RÜZ, v. a. and n. To praise, to boast of, Shetl. V. RUSE.]

[RÜZ, s. Praise, boasting, ibid.]

RWHYS, Wyntown. V. RUSCHE, s.

[RYBBALDAILL, s. Low company, Barbour, i. 335.]

[RYBBALDY, s. Low dissipation, ibid., i. 341.]

RYBEES, s. pl. [Prob. an errat. for rubees, rubies.]

*Thus Schir Gawyn, the gay, Gaynour he ledes,
In a gleterand gide, that glemed full gay,
With riche ribaynes reidsett, ho so right reides,
Rayled with rybees of rial aray.*

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 2.

[RYCHT, s. Right, Barbour, i. 78, 159; also, that which is right, proper, or correct, S.]

[RYCHT, adv. Right, exactly, Barbour, i. 8; also, very, ibid., x. 84.

[RYCHTSWA, adv. In the same manner, accordingly, Acts James II.]

[RYCHTWISLY, adv. Righteously, uprightly, ibid., i. 366.]

[RYCHTWYSNESS, s. Righteousness, uprightness, Wyntown.]

[RYCHTIS. Take his rychtis, took the Eu-charist, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 171, Dickson.]

[RYDAR, s. A gold coin, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 89, Dickson. V. RIDARE.]

[RYDE, adj. Severe, Barbour, xii. 557. V. ROID, RUDE.]

[To RYDE, RYD, v. n. To ride, Barbour, ii. 73; part. pr. rydand; part. pa. ryddin, ryddyn, rydyn.]

RYE-CRAIK, s. A provincial designation for the land-rail, Renfrews. Corncraik, S.

*The pairtrick sung his e'ning note,
The rye-craik rispt his clam'rous throat,
While there the heav'nly vow I got
That erl'd her my own.*

Tannahill's Poems, p. 154.

This name differs from the common one, merely in the specification of a particular species of grain, from amidst which this fowl occasionally sends forth its unvarying note.

RYFART, s. A radish. V. REEFORT.

To RYFE out, v. a. To plough up land that has been lying waste, or in pasturage; synonym. break up.

"We, for the gude trew and faithful service done, and to be done to us, be owre lovittis the baillies burgesses and communitie of Selkirk,—grantis and gevis license to thame, and thair successors, to ryfe out, breke, and teil yeirle ane thousand acres of thair common landis of our said burgh in what part thair of thai pleas, for polecy, strengthening, and bigging of the samyn," &c. Charter James V. 1538, ap. Minstrelsy Border, i. 264. V. RIVE.

[RYG, s. A ridge, Barbour, xix. 308, 314; also, the back, S. A.-S. hrycg, the back.]

[RYGORUSLY, adv. Strictly, Barbour, iv. 88; severely, vi. 136.]

[RYME, s. Rime, verse, Barbour, iii. 178. A.-S. rim.]

[RYMMYLL, RUMMEL, s. A blow, ibid., xii. 557.]

[To RYN, v. n. To run, ibid., i. 103; part. pr. rynand, rynnand, Isl. renna, to run.]

[RINNARE-ABOUT. The same with Rinabout, q. v.]

RYK, RYKE, adj. [Noble, well-to-do, rich.]

Schyre Thomas of Mynagrawe that ilk tyde
Herd, that the Lord Percy wald ryde,
Wyth all the folke of Berwyke,
That worthy war, bath pure and ryk,
Towart Dwns set hym to fare.

Wynlowe, ix. 278.

The land had rest, the folk were ryke,
And soysowne was of froyt and fule.

Wynlowe, viii. 33. 214.

Than Eduuarde self was callit a Roy full ryk.
Wallace, i. 120, MS.

Moes-G. reika, princeps, praefectus; A. S. rica, princeps, potens; ryc, Sa. G. rik, Belg. ryk, Isl. ryk-ur, dives.

These terms were primarily used to denote power, which, in barbarous times, was the great source of wealth; because powerful men enrich themselves by making the weak their prey.

To RYND, v. n. 1. To pertain, to belong.

—"First to consider, geue the genrale consail had the spreit of God to do that thing quhilke ryndit to the weil of the rest of the congregatioun, as had the Apostolis?—Swa it is necessary, that thay quhilke occupis the place of the Apostlis, hane the gyft of the haly gaist (conforme to the promeis of oure Saluour), to do in all sortis that ryndis to thair office." Kennedy of Croseraguell, Compend. Tractiue, p. 27.

"M. Quintyne. It ryndes to yow to preif, that Melchisedec made no oblation of bread and wine vnto God." Reasoning betuix Croseraguell and J. Knox, D. iij. a.

"We have thocht necessary to send unto your Grace this berar—for declaratioun of sic thingis as ryndis hiechtlie to the commune weale of baith thir realmes, traisting that it will be your Gracis pleasour to condescend and grant unto the samyn." Lett. Earl of Arran to Hen. VIII, Keith's Hist. App., p. 12.

2. To tend.

—"The quhilke—libell—was alluterlie generale, inepte, & vncertane, nocht expremand the tyme and maner, &c. the quhilke of the commune law—suld hane bene expreslie expremit; vtherwayis the said Robertis just defensais in sa gret ane caus, quhilke ryndit to the tynsale of lif, landis, and guidis, war tane away contrar all ourdour of law, equite, & resounne." Acts Mary, 1543, Ed. 1814, p. 440.

"My lord Justice, &c. continewis the summondis rait—tuiching the productione of ane decret gevin be the Papis halines of his cardinalis concernyng the purchesing of the bischoprick of Dunkeld, to be sene & considerit—gif the samin ryndis to the enorme hurt of the preuilege of the croune or nocht." Acts Mary 1548, Ed. 1814, p. 446.

Su.-G. rind-a, A.-S. hrin-an, aethrin-an, Germ. rein-en, tangere; O. Teut. reen-en, conterminum esse. I need scarcely observe, that touching, used metaph., is equivalent to, concerning, pertaining to.

To RYND, v. a. A term applied to one whose affairs are in disorder; "Gie him time to rynd himself," i.e., allow him time to get things into some sort of order, Perthis.

I know not whether this has any relation to Isl. ryn-a, (ryndi, rynt), occultas res perscrutari; or to Arein, purus, q. to clear one's self.

[RYND, s. A long strip of cloth, Shetl., Clydes. V. ROIND, RUND.]

[RYNE, s. A rein; pl. rynes, reins, S.]

RYNE, s. Kingdom, territory, domain.

Thai tarsit up tentis, and turnit of toun,
The Roy with his round tabil, richest of ryne.
Gawron and Goll, i. 18.

Either, kingdom, Fr. regne; or, as this is otherwise written and pron. S., perhaps rather territory, domain; Teut. ryna, limes, confinium. The latter seems supported by another passage—

Now is the Round Tabil rebutit, richest of rent.
Ibid., iv. 11.

[To RYNG, v. n. To reign, rule, Barbour, i. 78. O. Fr. regner.]

[RYNGIS, s. pl. Rings, ibid. iii. 209.]

RYNSIS, or RYNSS, s.

—"Sa that the commonis wifis, na thar seruandis, nouthar in burgh na in land, wer nouthar lange taile na syde nekit hudis, na pokis on thar slefis [sleeves], na costly curches, as lawne or rynsis," &c. Parl. Ja. I. A. 1429, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 18, c. 10.

This curious sumptuary law has been omitted in former editions.

[RYOLI, adj. Royal, Barbour, xiii. 30. V. REAL.]

To RYOT, v. a. To destroy, to ravage, to spoil.

All that he fand he makyt his;
And ryotyt gretly the land.

Barbour, ix. 500, MS.

Roytyt, Ed. Pink.

— Inglis man he come agayne,
And gert his folk wyth mekil mayne
Ryot halyly the cwntré.

Wynlowe, viii. 30. 111.

Isl. riod-a, Su.-G. rod-ia, desolare, vastare; Teut. ruyt-en, destruere, vastare. Hence the Belg. phrase, ruyten and rooven, to pillage and plunder. V. ROISTERS.

[RYOT, s. Riot, depredation, Barbour, xvii. 510.]

RYOT, s. Prob. an errat. for rowt, crowd.

— The nawyne
Of Frawns thai tuk wp all of were,
And wan thame all wyth thare powere,
And slwe the Amyrall of that flot.
Than all the lawe in that ryot,
That thai in-to schippys fand,
Thai let rycht nane than pas to land.

Wynlowe, vii. 9. 100.

Mr. Macpherson views it as perhaps an err. for rowt, q. crowd, army. Or, it may signify destruction, E. rout, from the v.

[To RYP, RYPE, v. a. To clear off obstructions; as, to rype a pipe, to rype the ribs, i.e., of a grate, Clydes., Shetl.]

To RYPE, v. a. To reap.

"Schir Michael Balfoure of Burley, knyght, not vpoun any respect of gayne and proffit that he mycht rype thairby, bot vpoun the carnest affection and grite regaird he hes to his maiesteis seruice—vndertuke—the bringing hame of ten thousand standis of armour." Acts Ja. VI., 1600, Ed. 1814, p. 191.

A.-S. rip-an, metere, to reap.

RYPE-POUCH, s. A pick-pocket; a term applied by school-boys, when any thing has been taken out of their pockets, S.

[In country districts the term is used somewhat fancifully by school-boys. Having induced a companion to open the seed-vessel of the plant Shepherd's Purse, (Capsella Bursa-pastoris), they derisively shout, "ripe the ladies' pouches."]]

[To RYSS, v. n. To rise, Barbour, i. 573; part. pa. rysyn, viii. 216, ryssyn, iv. 166.]

[RYTH, adv. Right, wholly, ibid., i. 194.]

To RYUE, RYVE, v. a. To rob, to spoil.

—Thai besid Enuerkething,
On west half toward Dunferlyng
Tuk land; and fast begouth to ryue.

Barbour, xvi. 551, MS.

V. RYU, v.

RYUER, s. A robber.

With thy virginal handis breke anone
Yone Troiane ryueris wappinnis and his spere.
Doug. Virg., 330, 44.

Rudd. observes; "But 125. 10. our author seems to denote a Hawk by it."

Glade is the ground the tendir flurist grene,—
The very hunter to fynd his happy pray,
The falconere rich ryuir vnto fleyne.

I concur in Sir W. Scott's remark on the second passage quoted from Doug. Virg.

"It signifies simply river. It was by the sides of lakes and rivers that hawking at the heron, the kind of sport chiefly approved, was practised."

Thus, the meaning is, "the weary hunter and the falconer fly to the rich river, in order to find their prey."

River is the general orthography of the MSS. from which Mr. J. Graham Dalyel has published his edition of Pittcottie.

"After this the king past to the Illes, and thair punished theife and river condignlie." P. 357.

[To RYUE, v. n. To recoil, to rebound.]

RYUING, s. Apparently, the recoil of a piece of ordnance.

"Thairefter, the Regent—causit masonis to begin to redd the bruiseit wallis, and to repaire the foirwark to the forme of ane bulwark, platt and braid aboue, for the resett and ryuing of many canonis." Hist. James the Sext., p. 236.

This bulwark was to be level and broad, not only that many cannons might be placed there, but that they might have sufficient room to recoil.

The term is probably corr. from Fr. revenir, to return, to come back.

[To RYVE, v. a. and n. 1. To rend, to tear. V. RIVE.]

2. To plough lea land; to ryve out, or to ryve up, is also used, especially if the land has lain long in lea, S. V. under RIVE.]

S.

The letter S, Ihre observes, was a peculiar favourite with the ancient Goths; qua nulla—carior, nulla frequentior.

This letter, as occurring in the beginning of words, in many instances cannot be viewed as a radical. While prefixed in some Goth. dialects, it was thrown away in others. This was especially the case before k. The same term sometimes appears with s, and sometimes without it. Of this we have some vestiges in our own language; as, cry and scry.

Se is often used by our old writers as the mark of the pl.; as, horsis for horses.

[S, s. "An iron hook of the shape of this letter, used by harrowers and ploughmen to join the treadwuddie to the buck in harrowing, and to the soam in ploughing; also to the swingletrees in each," Gall. Encycl.]

SA, SUA, SWA, conj. 1. So, consequently.

Quhen he is stuffit, thair strike, and hald hym on steir,
Sa sall ye stonay yone stowt, suppose he be strang.
Gawain and Gal., lii. 15.

"Brothyr," he said, "sen thow will sua,
"It is gud that we samyn ta."

Barbour, v. 71, MS.

2. In such a manner.

Now God gyff grace that I may sua
Tret it, and bryng it till endyng—
Barbour, i. 34, MS.

3. As, in like manner.

And on the north half is the way
Sa ill, as it apperis to day.
Barbour, viii. 40, MS.

It is now written sae; but often pron. sa. Moes.-G. sca, soc, swaci, A.-S. sua, Isl. suo, sua, Su.-G. Dan. saa, ita.

To SA, v. n. To say, to speak, to tell.

Pas on, sister, in my name, and thys ane thing
Sa lawlie to my proude fa, and declare.

Doug. Virg., 114, 41.

Alem. Germ. sag-en, A.-S. sæg-an, Su.-G. sæg-a.

[SAA, s. Salve, ointment; as, "Let the saa seek the sair," Clydes. V. SAW.]

To SAB, v. n. 1. To sob, S.

I may sit in my wee croo house,
At the rock and the reel to toil fu' dreary;

I may think on the day that's gane,
And sigh and sab till I grow weary.

Jacobite Relics, i. 46.

Nae mair that dear Parnassian queen
Now foots the dance on carpet green,
But greets by turns, an' dights her een,
An' sighs an' sabs.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 132.

2. Metaph. applied to the elastic motion of a wooden floor, occasioned by the fall of a heavy body, or by the starting of any of the joists, Loth.
3. Metaph. used to express the fading of flowers.

Nae mair he early gilds the morn,
(Now all the flowrets sab)
To visit chilly Capricorn,
Hence he forsakes the Crab.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 27.

SAB, s. A sob, S.

O dool! when'er they saw him gane,
They rais'd a lamentation;
An' yells, an' sabs, and mony a grane
Declar'd their deep vexation.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 203.

A.-S. sab, planctus.

To SAB, v. n. 1. To subside, to settle down, Loth. V. SAD, v.

"How comes it that this dore does na shut sae close as it used to do?" "It is because that part of the floor has sabbit a wee." See synonym. S.B.

[2. To saturate, to absorb moisture, Shetl.

In second sense at least, sab is allied to seep, to soak, to become soaked, and may be connected with A.-S. samad, together.]

[SABILL, adj. Black, sable, Lyndsay, Squyer Meldrum, l. 1701.]

SACHLESS, SACKLESS, adj. 1. Useless, silly, feeble, unavailing.

"May the great spirit of the elements shield thee," said he. "An' wha may he be, carle, an' it be your will?" said Ringan, "An' wha may ye be that gie me sic a sackless benediction?" Perils of Man, i. 14.

This is the same with Sackless; but pron. in Ettr. For. in a guttural way, q. sachless.

"Ben [being] doitrified with thilke drynke, and sackless and dizzye with lowtyn—I tint ilka spunk of ettlyng quhair the dor laye." Hogg's Winter Tales, ii. 41.

2. Simple, Dumfr.; nearly obsolete.

"Thank ye for no ganging growling awa' wi' theae sackless coofs—to seek your fortune asunder frae the lawful head o' your house, and among the cauld heartit fremit." Blackw. Mag., May 1820, p. 167.

"Sackless callant! sackless callant! loupin on the green tap o' Lagghill wi' a gang o' raving gomerals,—then snooling among rags and rams horns, with a horde of deaving gypsies." Ibid., June 1820, p. 281.

Both Sackless and Sackless are originally the same with Sackless, Sackless, guiltless. For A.-S. sackless does not only signify, sine culpa, but also, contentionis vacuus, quietus; and was most probably used to denote, not merely the legal state of one, as free from blame or prosecution, but his moral character, as indisposed to injure another. Hence, by a transition similar to that of E. innocent, it has been used, not only to denote one who is simple or guileless, but a person of weak understanding. Thus, A.Bor. "it is used to signify, a weak, simple person, an idiot, or natural;" Grose. V. SACKLESS.

SACK, s. One of the privileges of a baron. V. SAK.

[SACK, s. Sometimes used instead of the word "bottle," Shetl.]

SACKE, SACK, s. Sackcloth.

His Abbots gat an uncouthie turne,
When Shauellinges went to sacks.

Spec. Godly Songs, p. 35.

i.e., when monks and friars were obliged to put on sackcloth. The phrase is metaph., expressing their deep sorrow on account of the Reformation.

The phrase sack gown still denotes a gown made of sackcloth, such as that in which penitents used publicly to appear, according to the former custom of the church of Scotland; although, if I mistake not, this relic of Popish penance is now universally laid aside.

To this custom the following proverbial phrase undoubtedly refers—

Do'in well ourselfs, we canna help
Tho' a' friends binna stiddy;
Sma' is their kin that canna spare
To fill baith sack and widdy.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 15.

i.e., both the sack gown and the halter.

SACKET, SAKKET, s. A small sack or bag, S.B.

"The poiet confermis this samyn purpos, sayand, that euerye man of this varld baris tua sakkettis vittht hym. The fyrst sakket hyngis befor hym, vittht in the quhilk ar contenit al the vicis that his nychtbour committis; ande the nyxt sakket hyngis behynd his bak, vittht in the quhilk ar contenit al the vicis that his self committis." Compl. S., p. 216.

A dimin. from sack, a term which has passed through a great variety of languages; Moes.-G. sakk, A.-S. sacc, sacc, Alem. sac, Dan. Belg. sack, Fr. sac, Ital. Hisp. sace-o, Lat. sacc-us, Gr. sakk-os, Heb. ṣāḳ, id.

SACKETY, SACKIE, adj. Short and thick; as, "a sackety bodie," a little thick person, Roxb.; q. as resembling a stuffed sacket, or small sack.

[SACKIE, s. A dumpy person, one that looks like a sack when full, Gall. Encycl.]

SACKLESS, adj. 1. Useless, silly, feeble, good for nothing; as, "sackless mortal," Roxb.

[2. Simple, thoughtless. V. SACHLESS.]

To SACRE', v. a. To consecrate.

Thy secrete sawis and thy prophecys,
—I sall gar kepe, and obserue reuerentlie;
And, O thou blissit woman, vnto the,
Wise walit men sall dedicate and sacred.

Doug. Virgil, 165, 12.

Fr. sacrer, Lat. sacr-are.

O.E. "Sacrryn, or halowen. Consecro." Prompt. Parv.

SACRE, s. A piece of artillery, E. saker.

Denominated, like the falcon, from a species of hawk, in allusion to its destructive character.

SACRATE, adj. Sacred.

"They departit of the ciete—and past owre the river of Anien, to the sacrate montane, thre milis fra Rome." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 155. Sacram montem, Boeth. Lat. sacrat-us, id.

To SACRIFY, v. a. 1. To sacrifice, to offer religiously; Lat. sacrific-are.

Into this coup of gold Anchises hys syre
At the altare was wount to sacrify.
Doug. Virgil, 214, 7.

2. To consecrate, to dedicate.

Quis sal fra thens adorne in any stede
The power of Juno, or alteris sacrifye?
Ibid. 14, 34.

3. To appease, to propitiate.

Unto the hallowit stede bring in, thy cry,
The grete figure, and lat us sacrify
The haly goddes, and magnify hir might.
Ibid. 46, 30.

SACRISTER, s. One who has the charge of the utensils of a church; the same with Sacrist and Sacristan, E.

—"The tenementis, housis and yairdis lyand be-syd the Brigend of Drumfreis, quhilke pertint of auld to the sacristis and prebendaries of the college kirk of Lincludene, &c." Acts. Ja. VI., V. iv. 665.
L.B. sacristar-ius, sacristan-us, sacrista, id.

SAD, adj. 1. Grave, serious, not flippant.

Proportionyt lang and fayr was his wesage,

Sad men in deid wpon him can renew;
With retornyng that nycht xx he slew.
Wallace, v. 289, MS.

The Eril Malcom Stirlyng in kepyng had,
Till him he com with men off armes sad,
Thre hundreth hail, that sekry war and trew,
Off Lennox folk, thair power to renew.
Ibid., x. 56, MS.

Sade, Chaucer, steady; unsad, unsettled, unsteady.

O stormy peple, unsad and ever untrew,
And undiscrete, and changing as a fane;
— Thus saiden sade folk in that citee,
When that the peple gased up and doun.
— He so often hadle hire don offence,
And she ay sade and constant as a wall.
Clerkes T., ver. 8871. 8878. 8923.

4. Close, compact, cohesive, S.

A road, or foot path, is said to be sad, when it is beaten by the feet of passengers.

C. B. sathra, signifies calcare, conculcare; syth, solidus; Davies.

It is used by R. Brunne, p. 305, in the sense of close, compact.

Strenth suld non haf had, to perte tham thorgh outh,
So wer thei set sad with poyntes rounde aboute.
The king sauh tham comand so sadly in the mede.

O.E. "Sad or harde. Solidus." Prompt. Parv.

5. Heavy, S,

"The longer the stroake be in comming it commeth down the sadler." Z. Boyd's Balme of Gil., p. 41.

"A.Bor. sad, heavy; particularly applied to bread, as contrary to light;" Grose.

Mr. Todd, I observe, has incorporated this sense.

6. Heavy; as, the bread is very sad, i.e., not well raised, S.

"In some provincial dialects,—sad is used for heavy;" Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 146.

7. Weighty, solid; applied to proofs.

"Bot quhat auailis this equitie of the caus befor heireris,—utterly ignorant of the mater how it was done,—quhilke esteeme the sclanderis of maist lewd slicht personis, for sad testimoneis." Buchanan's Detect., D. i. b.

8. Flat, close to the ground, S.

Thus a thing is said to lie sad, S.

9. Sad is applied to colour, as denoting one that is grave, (as in sense 1,) or not gaudy; dark as opposed to light.

"Item, ane gowne of sad crammasay velvot, with ane braid pasment of gold and silvir, lynit with crammasay satyne, furnist with buttonis of gold." Inventories,
A. 1539, p. 33. V. CRAMMASAY.

The word is used in this sense in E.

10. Great, Aberd.; [singular, uncommon, remarkable, Banffs.]

To SAD, v. n. 1. To press down, to shake down, Lanarks., South of S.; synon. Sag.

Sandy rase—his bonnet daddit—
Then the hay, sae ruffed and saddit,
Towzlet up that nane might ken.
Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 159.

O.E. id. "Saddyn or maken sadde. Solido. Con-solido." Prompt. Parv.

2. To grow solid. The ground is said to sad, or be sadded, when the soil coheres, S.

Sadd, O. E. signifies to settle.

Austen, the olde, hereof made bokes,
And him selfe ordeined, to sadd vs in belene.
P. Ploughman, Fol. 49, a.

i.e., to confirm or settle us in the faith. E. sadden is still used in a similar sense, as signifying to make cohesive.

3. To make sad, to sadden.

"The lamentable losses, you have still by the hand of that wicked enemy,—make clear such a measure of the wrath and desertion of God, that oftentimes sads our hearts exceedingly." Baillie's Lett., ii. 100.

[A.-S. sæd, sated, satiated; Goth. saths, full, filled, sated. V. under SAD, Skeat's Etym. Dict.]

SADLY, SADLYE, adv. 1. Steadily, Chaucer, id.

Full sadly socht till Wallace off renoun.
Wallace, xi. 762, MS.

This messenger drank sadly ale and wine.
Man of Lawes Tale, ver. 5163.

2. Closely, compactly.

Tharfor comfort yow, and rely
 Your men about yow rycht starkly;
 And baldie about the Park your way,
 Rycht als sadly as ye may;
 For I trow that nane sall haff mycht,
 That chassys, with sa fele to fycht.
Barbour, xlii. 374, MS.

As sadly knit as ever ye may.

Edit. 1620.

Thir men retorne, withouten noyess or dyn,
 To thair maistir, told him as that had seyne,
 Than graithit sone thir men of armys keyne;
Sadlye on fute on to the housse thair secht.

Wallace, iv. 231, MS.

In this sense the adv. is used by R. Brunne. V. SAD.

O.E. "Sadly. Solide. Mature. Adverbia." Prompt. Parv.

[3. Very much, in or to a remarkable degree; sadlies is also used, and sodlie, sodlies, are other forms, Banffs.]

* SADDLE. To put one to a' the seats o' the Saddle, to nonplus, to gravel one, S.; obviously borrowed from the uneasy sensations of one who feels his seat on horseback too hard for him.

SADDLE-SICK, adj. Having the posteriors exoriated in consequence of riding, S.

"I trow ye'll fin' this a saft easy seat,—weel do I ken what it is to be saddle-sick mysel." The Entail, i. 49.

SADDLE-TAE-SIDE, adv. A term used to denote the mode in which women ride, Gall.

"Saddle-tae-side, the way females sit on the saddle, to one side," Gall. Enc.

Tae signifies to; or perhaps the one.

SADE, SAID, s. A sod, or turf; a sod for burning, a thicker kind of turf, consisting not merely of the surface, but of a considerable part of the soil which lies above the peats; Loth., Lanarks., Berwicks. The sade, the sward.

When he was young, nae yalder chield
 Out o'er the sade could gae.

A Scott's Poems, p. 13.

—Flow'rs nod fair the deep green sade aboon.

Ibid., 1811, p. 93.

Isl. syde, ager tam sativus quam inhabitatus, a Suio. Goth. sae, seminar; Seren. This he views as the origin of E. sod. Teut. sæd, satio, from sæy-en, to sow; sæde, cespes, gleba.

SADDILL CURRELL. The Curule chair.

"Be exampill of thir Hetruschis, the Saddill Currell and the Pretexse Gounne war brocht up in Rome." Bellenden's T. Liv., p. 15. Sella curulis, Boeth.

Lat. sedit-e, A.-S. setel, a seat.

SADJELL, s. "A lazy unwieldy animal;" Gall. Enc.; probably from Sad, heavy, like C.B. sadiael, of a firm tendency, from sad, firm.

VOL. IV.

SAE, s. A tub. V. SAY, SAYE.

SAE, adv. So, S.; seay, Yorks. V. SA.

SAEBE, SAEBEINS, SAEBINS, conj. 1. Since, S. i.e., being sae, or so.

Saebins she be sic a thrawin-gabbit chuck,
 Yonder's a craig, since ye have tint all hope,
 Gae till't your ways, and take the lover's loup.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 69.

2. If so be, provided that, used hypothetically, S.

"I turn't at the lin, jealousying that ye wad be a' hame afore me, an' saebins ye warn, maybe some hill stravauger wad hae seen or hard tell o' ye." Saint Patrick, i. 166.

[SAEBEET. So be it; as, "Weel, weel! saebet, for ye're the auldest, Clydes.]

SAEFAR, SAFER, SAFAR, adv. In as far; safur, sefur, Aberd. Reg.

"The custumaris at thar comptis making to be chargit with sa mony unce of ilk scrplar [semplar?] in the forme abone writtin, and to be dischargit of safur as thair deliver to the said warden and changeour." Acts Ja. III., 1485, Ed. 1814, p. 172.

[SAEGATE, SAEGAT, SAGAT, adv. In such wise, Barbour, vii. 368.]

[SAESAE, adv. So so, so and so, Clydes.]

[SAEDICK, s. A fish hold, a place frequented by fish; dimin. from Dan. sæde, a seat.

The fishermen in Shetland call a place in which they fish with hand-lines, a seat, a hand-line seat.

[To SAEG, v. a. To set the teeth on edge. V. SEG, v.]

[SAETER, SETTER, SETR, STER. Common affixes to names in Shetl., and always indicative of good pasture for cattle. Isl. setr, a dwelling.]

SAFER, s. The reward given for the safety of any thing; E. salvage.

"That days be kept every four days once, or within two months at least, and such as shall be found to be robbed of their goods, be redressed to the double, and with safcr, according to the law of marches." Spotswood, p. 306.

This word seems properly to signify a premium given for the safety or preservation of goods that have been lost or carried off; E. salvage, salvage money. V. SEFOR.

SAFER, SAFERE, SAFFERE, s. The sapphire; a precious stone.

"Item, a grete safir set in gold." Invent., p. 9. Belg. safir, Sw. safir, id.

[SAFER, adv. So far. V. under SAE.]

SAFERON, s. A head-dress anciently worn in Scotland. V. SCHAFFROUX.

M

[SAFF. May save: generally used in exclamations, as, "saff us a," "gude, saff us," Clydes.]

SAFRIE, s. V. SAFER.

SAFT, adj. Used in the different senses of E. soft, S. 1. As opposed to what is fatiguing.

Kind nobles, will ye but alight,
In yonder bower to stay;
Saft ease shall teach you to forget
The hardness of the way.
Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 36.

2. Pleasant.

To me nae after days nor nights
Will eir be saft and kind;
I'll fill the air with heavy sighs,
And greet till I am blind.
Ibid., ii. 165.

3. Tranquil, quiet, at rest, Gl. Sibb.

Teut. saft, suavis, mollis. Junius views Su.-G. saft, succus, as a cognate; Seren. adds Isl. sef-a, sedare.

4. Not vehement or ardent. "Saft fire makes sweet malt [maut];" D. Ferguson's Prov., No. 741.

[5. Easy-going, of facile disposition, easily imposed on, Clydes.]

6. Moist, drizzling, S.

"'A drizzling morning, good madam.'—'A fine saft morning for the crap, Sir,' answered Mrs. Dods, with equal solemnity." St. Ronan, ii. 33.

7. It is often used to denote mild weather, as opposed to that which is frosty, [in a state of thaw], S. This is also called appen weather.

SAFT, adv. 1. Softly, not harshly; applied to music, S.

In window hung, how aft we see
Thae keek around at warblers free
That carol saft, and sweetly sing!
Ferguson's Poems, ii. 36.

2. Lightly, as opposed to being fast asleep.

"O sleep ye, wake ye, Kinmont Willie,
"Upon the morn that thou's to die!"
"O I sleep saft, and I wake aft;
"It's lang since sleeping was fleyed frae me."
Minstrelsy Border, i. 151.

To SAFT, v. a. To soften, to make soft, to mollify; applied to the mind.

The mersy of that suet meik ros
Suld saft yow thairtill I suppois.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 121.

[To SAFTEN, v. a. To make soft, to thaw, S.]

SAFTLY, adv. Softly, S.

Then quickly he took aff his shoon,
And saftly down the stair did creep.
Minstrelsy Border, i. 84.

[SAFTY, SAFTIE, s. 1. A person of easy-going temper or disposition, one who is easily imposed on, Clydes., Banffs.]

2. A crab that has cast its shell, ibid.]

SAFT-EENED, adj. Disposed to flexibility, soft-hearted.

I a tear."

[SAFT-HEADED, SAFT-HEEDIT, adj. Easily gulled, like a simpleton, Clydes.]

[SAFT-SKINNED, adj. Sensitive, easily touched by a remark, ibid.]

To SAG, v. a. and n. To press down, to shake down, Lanarks.

This seems radically the same with the v. to Seg; and also with the O.E. v. "Saggyn" or statelyn. Basso. Prompt. Parv. This is, as expl. Ort. Vocab., "deponere, deprimere, to put downe."

[SAGAT, adv. V. under SAE.]

To SAGHTIL, v. n. To be reconciled, to make peace.

I shall dight the a Duke, and dubbe the with honde;
Withy thou saghtil with the Knight,
That is so hardi and wight.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 26.

A.-S. saght-ian, litem componere, reconciliare. V. SAUCHT. Hence, SAGHTLYNG, s. Reconciliation.

Dight was here saghtlyng,
Bifore the comly King,
Thei held up her hondes.

Ibid., st. 25.

SAID, s. A sod of a particular description. V. SADE.

[SAIDLE-TAE-SIDLINS, adv. After the mode in which females ride on horseback, to one side, Banffs. V. SADDLE-TAE-SIDE.]

SAIDLE-TURSIDE, s. A sort of wooden settee, used in country-houses, Banffs.; synon. Langsettle, Lang-saddle, q. v.

The first part of the word is evidently the same with settle, saddle, A.-S. sell, a seat. Whether the latter part refers to the situation of this seat in the vicinity of the ingle, or at the side, of the toors, i.e., turfs on the hearth, I shall not pretend to determine.

SAIG, s. An ox that has been gelded at his full age, Galloway.

While these, in lusty strength enjoy their loves,
The saig, poor dowy beast! nae pleasure kens,
Aboon a gowan tap; for sovereignty
Or pow'r among the herd he ne'er contends.
Davidson's Seasons, p. 46.

V. SEGO.

SAIGE, s. A seat. V. SEGE.

On euery syde he has cassin his E;
And at the last behakitis the cieté,
Saikles of batal, fre of all sic stryffe.
Ibid., 330, 47.

i.e., not engaged in battle.

A.-S. sacless, sine culpa, from [sacu, strife, crime, or a criminal charge], and leas, without; Isl. saklanes, id., which is allied to Moes.-G. sak-an, to reprove, to accuse. V. SAKE, s.

SAIKLESIE, s. Innocently.

Remember upon thy God omnipotent,
That is, and was, and euermore sail be,
And for thy sin he saiklesie was shent.
Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 216.

SAIKYR, HALFSAIKYR. "A species of cannon, smaller than a demi-culverine, much employed in sieges. Like the faucon, &c., they derived their name from a species of hawk." Gl. Compl.

"Mak reddy your cannons,—falcons, saikyrs, half saikyrs, and half falcons." Compl. S., p. 64.

The following passage has been quoted for illustrating the origin of the name—

"And in riding, they cast of haukes, called sakers, to the kytes, which made them greate sport." Hall's Chronicle, Fol. 207. V. Gl. Compl.

Fr. sacré, "a saker, the hawk, and the artillerie so called;" Cotgr.

SAIL-FISH, s. The basking shark, S. Squalus maximus, pinna dorsali anteriore majore, Linn.

"The sail-fish, or basking [i. basking] shark, appears on the coasts of the parish early in the month of May, if the season is warm; he is a stupid and torpid kind of fish; he allows the harpooner often to feel him with his hand before he darts at him." P. South Uist, Invern. Statist. Acc., xiii. 290.

"The sun or sail-fish occasionally visits us; this sluggish animal sometimes swims into the salmon nets, and suffers itself to be drawn towards the shore, without any resistance, till it gets so near the land, that for want of a sufficient body of water, it cannot exert its strength," &c. P. Lochgoil-head, Argyles. Statist. Acc., iii. 173.

It is named from the large fin which it carries above water. It is also called the Sun-fish, S.; Carbin, Cairban, or Carfin, Hebrides; Hoe-mother or Homer, Orkn.

SAILL, s. Happiness.

Sail never myne hart be in sail, na in liking,
Bot gif I loissing my life, or be laid law.
Gowan and Gol., i. 21.

V. SKILL.

"An impost—of twa shillings Scots to be payed upon the tan of all—vessels cuming within Dunnottir and Sainct Tob's Head," &c. Acts Cha. I., 1814, VI. 238.

Our ancestors seem to have been fond of prefixing the letter t before vowels, especially in names, as the Tantony bell.

SAIP, s. Soap, S.

I lerid you wyllis mony sawld,
To mix the new wyne with the awld;
—To sell ri-ht deir, and by gud chelp,
And mix ry meill among the saipe!
Lyndsay, S. P. R., v. 139.

A.-S. Daan. saepe, Belg. scep, Alem. seiphe, Lat. sap-o.

SAIPMAN, s. A soap-boiler, S.

"Saipman, a soap-maker;" Gl. Picken.

Su.-G. saar, gravis, A.-S. sar, gravis, molestus.

6. Niggardly, hard to deal with. A sair master, a hard master, a sair merchant, &c., S.

7. Costly, expensive, extravagant, S.

According to tradition, James VI. when he reflected on the great alienation of the royal domains in consequence of the liberality of David I. to the church, used to say, that "he was a sair Sant [saint] to the crown!"

8. Puny. A sair neebour, one of a diminutive appearance; opposed to a grand troop; Annand.

SAIR, s. A sore, a wound, S.; [sairis, generally applied to running sores.]

O' them sad tales he tells anon,
Whan ramble and whan fighting's done;
And, like Hectorian, ne'er impairs
The brag and glory o' his sairs.

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 96.

A.-S. Isl. sar, Su.-G. saar, dolor; vulnus.

SAIR, SAR, SARE, adv. 1. Sorely, as causing pain, S.

And than thair sulh schut harlely
Among thair fayis, and sow thair sar.

Barbour, xvi. 391, MS.

A.-S. sare, graver.

2. In a great degree, much. Meat much roasted, is said to be sore or sair done, as opposed to what is thain, i.e., rare, S.

From thens fordwarde Vlixes mare and mare
With new crimes begouth to affray me sair.

Doug. Virgil, 41, 45.

It is used in a similar sense by R. Brunne, p. 305.

Our Inglis men & thei ther togidre mette,
—Ther speres poynt ouer poynt, so sare & so thikke,
& fast togidre joynt, to se it was ferlike.

i.e., "so very close."

Germ. schr, Belg. seer, valde, Su.-G. saara.

[3. Dearly, at much cost; as, by sair, pay dearly for, suffer severely on account of, Barbour, xviii. 514.]

SAIR-AFF. Greatly to be pitied; often applied to one who is much straitened in worldly circumstances, who has scarcely the means of sustenance, S.; synon. Ill aff.

Somlice gretu swa saara; Aliqui plorabant dolenter;
Chron. Rythm. ap. Ihre, vo Saar. "Scot. They greet sair;" Callander. MS. Notes, ibid.; properly, "they grat sair."

[SAIR-EEN. Envious eyes; as, "A sight for sair-een," i.e., something that envious eyes would covet. The phrase is also used in the sense of, "to gladden one's eyes," as when speaking of a friend who has been long absent, West of S.]

[SAIR-FIT. A time of need; i.e., when one is unable to move about; as, "Keep something for a sair fit," lay past what you can against a time of difficulty, S.]

"Keep something for the sore foot," S. Prov.; "Preserve something for age, distress, and necessity," Kelly, p. 226.

"After a now wad it no be better to lay by this hundred pound in Tam Turnpenny's, in case the young lady should want it afterward [afterhand], just for a sair foot?" St. Ronan, ii. 118.

"At any rate, something for a sair foot may be gathered in the mean time." The Entail, i. 118.

SAIR-HEED, SAIR-HEAD, s. A common term for a head-ache, S.

She carps and grumbles two three days.
Synne supperless I go to bed;
The morn I wake with a sair head.

A. Nicol's Poems, 1739, p. 52.

[SAIR-HEEL. Same with Sair-Fit, q.v.]

SAIR-SOUGHT, adj. Much exhausted, in whatever respect, S. It is especially expressive of bodily debility.

SAIR WAME or WYME. Gripes, S.

SAIRLY, adv. Sorely,

—Baith hir tendir handes,
War strenyeit sairly boundin hard with handes.

Doug. Virgil, 52, 36.

SAIRNESS, SARENESS, s. Soreness, S.

To SAIR, v. a. 1. To serve; softened in pron. from the old way of writing v as u, serue, S.

She sair'd them up, she sair'd them down,
She sair'd them till and frae;
But when she went behind their backs,
The tear did blind her e'e.

Lady Jane, Jamieson's Popular Ball, ii. 379.

—Her heart it wad na sair

To think but Lindy to look hameward mair.

Ross's Helenore, p. 25.

2. To fit, to be large enough. The coat does na sair him, i.e., it is too little, S.

3. To satisfy. I'm sair'd, I am satisfied, I have enough; applied in various senses, very often to food, S.

Ha, ha, my lad, says they, ye are nae blate,—
It seems ye are na sair'd wi' what ye got,
Ye's find that we can cast a harrier knot.

Ross's Helenore, p. 47.

The squire that had an eye
Set close upon her, reel that she sud flee,
Says cannily, I'm sure ye are not sair'd;
Here's fouth of meat, eat on and do not spar't.

Ibid., p. 30.

4. To give alms to a beggar; as, "I canna sair ye the day," S.

SAIRIN, SAIRING, s. 1. As much as satisfies one, S.

Ye cou'd na look your sairin' at her face,
So meek it was, so sweet, so fu' o' grace.

Ross's Helenore, p. 16.

This term is very often used to denote as much food as satisfies one's appetite. Hae ye got your sair-ing? Have ye had enough of food.

[2. Service of food for a man or beast; also the dole given to a beggar, West of S., Banffs.]

3. It often denotes an acquaintance with any object to satiety or disgust, S.

"I hae had my sairin' o' sic cattle, an' though there wana anither 'oman in the wide world,—I wud sunner stand twalmonth's stark naked on the tap o' Clochan-dighter than come athort a leddie agen." St. Kathleen, iv. 40.

4. It is also ironically applied to a drubbing. "He got his sairing;" he was beaten till he could not well bear any more; or, according to a phrase of similar signification, "He had his bellyfull of it."

[SAIRIN, SAIRING, adj. Having the power to satisfy, Banffs.]

[SAIR-SIX, s. A mode of farming by a rotation of six crops; viz., two of grass, two of cereals, one of turnips, and one cereal, Banffs.]

[To SAIR, v. n. To savour. V. SAWER.]

SAIRLES, SARELESS, adj. Unsavoury, tasteless, S. B.

For as weill says Augustine,
The thing to all that spokin bene
To nane is spokin, as we know,
Experience dois daylie schaw.
Sa sic Preichouris as I have tald,
Bot not in deid sic as I wald:
That thinkis thame sellis dischargit weill,
Quhen thay haue run oure with ane reill
Thair sairles sermons red yistrene,
The hour sa spendit thay ar clene.

Diall. Clark & Courteour, p. 16.

V. SAWER.

SAIRIE, adj. 1. Poor, silly, feeble, Ayrs.

Curle, wee sairie thing, ye'll neist
Attack a roastit chuckie's breast.

Picken's Poems, i. 63.

2. Sairie man, an expression of affection; often used to a dog, Roxb. V. SARY.

[To SAIRL, v. n. To whine, Shetl.]

[SAIS. Say; ind. pr. in all the persons, also imp. pl.; still so used, S.]

To SAISE, v. a. To give seizin or legal possession to; a forensic term, S.

"The said vmq^t. Andro Weymes was astrictit to infett and saize the said vmq^t. Johne Weymes his son," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, vol. V. 124.

Fr. sais-ir, to seize, to take possession of. It is, however, more immediately from L.B. sais-ire, mittere aliquem in possessionem, investire. Some trace this to sacire, which has been explained, In patri-monium sociare. Du Cange, vo. Sacire. V. SABINE.

SAIT, s. 1. An old name for the Court of Session in S. Lords of the Sait, Lords of the Seat or Session.

Sum sains the Sait, and sum thame cursis.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 41.

Lords of the seate, Acts Ja. V., 1537, c. 53.

2. A see, an episcopate.

"Gawyn archibischep of Glasgw, protestit, in the name of the kirk of Glesgw, that quhat war done to the said lard of Keiro sulde turne the sait of Glasgw to na preiudice anent the ward of Cadder." Acts Ja. V., 1526, Ed. 1814, p. 311.

In a similar way the term sege, properly denoting a seat, is used for a see. V. SEKE. Also in A.-S. biscepsest, episcopi sedes. I need scarcely advert to the use of L.B. sedes in the same sense; whence indeed E. see.

SAK, SACK, s. A term used in our old laws to denote one of the privileges of a baron.

"And some criminal actions pertains to some of the judges foresaids, and to their courts: and chiefly to them quha hes power to hald their courts, with sock, sack, gallous and pit, toll and thame, infang-thief, and out-fang thief," Reg. Maj. B., i. c. 4, s. 2.

Sok undoubtedly denotes the right with which a baron is vested, of holding a court within his own domains. It seems also to signify the extent of the jurisdiction of this court.

A.-S. soc, is expl. not only curia, but, territorium, sive praeinctus, in qua Saca, et cetera privilegia exercebantur. Hickes, Thes. i. 159.

Sack seems properly to signify the right of the baron to prosecute his vassals in this court, and to decide the matter in controversy, by imposing fines or otherwise punishing the guilty.

A.-S. sac, saca, lis, actio, causa forensis. Hence E. sake, equivalent to cause; as, for God's sake, propter Deum. Sak is expl. by Rastell, as equivalent to placitum et emenda, i.e., as denoting not only the plea, but the pecuniary mulct imposed on the person found guilty: and in the laws of Edward the Confessor, as synon. with forisfactura or forfeiture. V. Spelman, vo. Sac. Su.-G. sak, signifies not only a cause, and also guilt or crime, but the fine imposed on the criminal.

Skene expl. sock, as, according to some, referring to the sock, or plough-share; "quhen the tenent is bound and oblished to cum with his pleuch to till and labour ane part of the Lordes landes." De Verb. Sign. vo. Sokmannia; also, Not. in Reg. Maj. Lib., i. c. 4. This idea seems to have been thrown out by Littleton. V. Spelm. vo. Soc. But it is quite fanciful. For sock, as denoting a plough-share, is not of A.-S. origin. Besides, soc, jurisdictio, is the same with soen, soena, where the resemblance is lost. A.-S. soc, I suspect, is from Moes.-G. sok-jan, A.-S. soec-an, to seek. 1. Because its literal sense is sequela. 2. Because it corresponds to L.B. secta. "Sok—now we call soyte, from the French worde suile, h.e. sequela," Skene, in vo. 3. Because this is confirmed by analogy. Su.-G. soek-a, signifies, in jus vocare; soeka och swara, actorem et reum esse, Leg. Ostg. ap. Ihre. Hence soekn, citatio in jus, corresponding to A.-S. soen; soeknedag, dies, quo in jus vocare licet, exactly analogous to our phrase a lawful day; i.e., a day in which a man might be brought into a court of law, in order to be prosecuted; Isl. yfersokn, suprema jurisdictio. Su.-G. soeka, is also used, in a secondary sense, as signifying to exact; soekn, an exaction; soeknare, quaestor, one who levies fines.

This analogy renders it highly probable that sac has the same origin; especially as Su.-G. sak, equally with soekn, signifies a mulct. The cognate Germ. term, sache, causa, lis, jus cognoscendi de causis controversis, is deduced by Wachter from sach-en, quaerere, inquirere.

SAKE, s. Blame, guilt; or accusation.

Swete Ysonde thinaro

SAKIREs, s. pl. [Prob. an errat. for Satires, satyrs.]

"Ane bed maid of sewit worsett with the figure of sakires and levis of treis furnissit with ruif and heid-pece, and thre pandis, all freinyeit with reid and grene worsett." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 209.

It seems doubtful whether this term refers to the hawk called the saker, Fr. sacre; or to savages, as the same word is expl. by Cotgr. "a ravenous or greedy fellow." [More prob. it is an errat. for satires, satyrs, which were favourite figures for sewed work in olden times.]

[SAKTA, interj. Softly, gently, Shetl.

[SALAND, part. pr. Sailing, Barbour, xix. 193.]

SALANG, adv. So long.

"And forthair, monethly iiii li salang as my lord governour sall happin to remane at the said assege, gif the assege lastis salang." Acts Mary, 1546, Ed. 1814, p. 472.

SALARIS, s. pl. Sellers, venders.

"Als at the kingis hienes depute—certane ce[r]-sours in cuerilk town, quhilk is ane port, quhilk sal haue power to cerna the salaris & passaris furth of the Rome for hauffing furth of money." Acts Ja. IV., 1503, Ed. 1814, p. 242.

SALD, pret. and part. pa. Sold.

"As to the surplus of wool—sald be the said Clays,—for samekle as is vnpat—the said Johnne to haue regress to the said Clayis." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1478, p. 28.

A.-S. seald, salt, datus; venditus; from sel-an, dare; vendere.

SALE, SAIL, SAILL, s. 1. A palace.

Thare stude ane grete tempill or sail ryall,
Of Laurent ciete sete impercall.
Doug. Virgil, 210, 55, sail, MS.

2. A hall, a chamber, a parlour.

The renk raikit in the sail, riale and gent,
That wondir wisly wes wrought, and wourschip and wela.
Gawan and Col., i. 6.

It seems doubtful whether the term here denotes the palace in general, or one chamber in it.

Within the chief palice, baith he and he Ar enterit in the sale ryall and hie.
Doug. Virgil, 472, 83.

The term is used in both senses in the Northern languages: A.-S. sal, aula, palatium; Su.-G. sal, habitaculum, conclave; aula, curia; Isl. sal, domus ampla et magnifica, multorum hospitum et convivarum capax;—camera in aedium editorio loco, quam adire per scalas necessam est; Verel. Ind. Germ. sal, templum, palatium; also, coenaculum, pars aedium amplior et ornatior; Fr. sale, Ital. L.E. sale, a hall.

A.-S. Alem. sal also denotes a private house. The natural origin of the term, in all its senses, is undoubtedly to be found in Moes-G. sal-jan, divertere, manere, hospitari; whence salith-vos, mansiones; A.-S. saellh, Alem. selitha, habitatio.

SALEBROSITY, s. A rough or uneven place.

"His Grace here wisely brought the Doctor off salebrosities, whence all his wits could not have delivered him with his credit." Baillie's Lett., i. 114.

Johns. gives salebrous as an E. word, although without any authority, from Lat. salebrosus, id.

That soucht na nothyr salss thair till
Bot appetyt, that oft men takys;
For rycht weill scowryt war thair stomakys.

Barbour, iii. 540, MS.

Instead of takys used in MS., I suspect that it ought to have been takys, lacks or wants. For, as the passage stands, it cannot bear any tolerable meaning. Barbour expresses the same idea with that contained in the emphatical S. Prov., Hunger's guide kitchen.

Germ. salze, Fr. sauce, id. The origin is Germ. salt-en, sale condire; as properly signifying a kind of pickle made of salt. V. Wachter, vo. Salz.

Doug. Virgil, Frol. 450, 47.

"I shall make it salt to you, i.e., I shall make you pay dear for it. That's the thing that makes the kail salt, Prov. Scot. Bor. i.e., That's the ground of the quarrel." Rudd.

2. Severe, oppressive, overwhelming.

In this sense it occurs in one mode of recitation of an old song:

It's naething but a saut sickness
That's like to gar me die.

The Queen's Marie.

In the more modern form:

Twas but a stitch in to my side,
And sair it troubles me.

Minstrelsy Scott. Border, ii. 168.

3. Costly, expensive; applied to any article of sale, S.

I need scarcely observe, that Lat. sales in pl. and E. salt, are both metaph. used to denote wit. Although this sense is different, there may be an analogy. The term as used S., might originally denote what is poignant to the mind. It may, however, have a reference to some ancient superstition, such as that mentioned by Kilian. Soute ende broode eten, offam judiciale edere. "This," he says, "was a bit of bread, devoted in the way of execration by certain words, which was presented to the guilty person; salt being at the same time offered, perhaps because it was customary to use it in execrations and imprecations. For the Germans, Saxons, Belgae, and many others, were firmly persuaded, that no one, conscious of evil, could eat bread devoted in this manner;" vo. Sout, sal.

This superstitious idea evidently corresponds to the constant use of salt in the sacred rites of the heathen, from whom it was immediately borrowed by the church of Rome. V. Casal. de Vet. Sacr. Christ. Rit., p. 205. It is well known that the heathen always used salt in their sacrifices. The sacred nature of this rite would naturally enough induce a persuasion of the efficacy of salt, when devoted in the manner described above; as the person who profaned it would be accounted so daring in his guilt as to call for an immediate intervention of the power of their offended deities.

It is said to have been an ancient custom among some heathen nations, that those who promised faith to kings, eat salt adjured or consecrated in the presence of the kings to whom they bound themselves. Hence it is said in the book of Esdras, that the princes of the Samaritans, when they wrote to the Persian kings accusing the Jews, thus expressed themselves; "We are mindful of the salt, which we eat in the palace." V. Du Cange, vo. Sal.

But the rite itself, as used in sacrifices, was probably borrowed from the Jewish custom. It was one of the laws delivered by Moses; "Every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt;" Lev. ii. 13. As salt was a symbol to which Pythagoras attached great importance, it has been supposed, on pretty good authority, that he learned the sacred use of it from the Jews. V. Gale's Court, P. ii. 130, 152, 153, 204.

SALT, s. A salt-cellar; Aberd.

BREID and SALT. The offering of breid and salt, as the instruments of adjuration, must be traced to the same origin.

In the records of the Presbytery of Edinburgh, Sept. 20, 1586, the following account is given of an oath required from Scots merchants trading to the Baltic, when they passed the Sound:—

"Certain merchantis passing to Danskerne [Denmark], and cuming neir Elsinure, chusing out one quhen they accounted for the payment of the toill of the goods, and that depositions of ano othe in forme following, viz. Thei present and offer breid and salt to the deponer of the othe, whereon he layis his hand, and deponis his conscience, and sweiris." Edin. Month. Mag., June 1817, p. 236.

This mode of swearing, although retained to so late an era, bears striking characters of a heathen origin. It is obvious, however, that in the course of ages the manner of using these symbols had been changed. But there is no reason to doubt, that this had been originally the same custom with that described by Kilian; who, in his brief notices concerning ancient usages, has thrown more light on the manners of the Teutonic nations than perhaps any other writer.

When explaining the word Sout, sal, he introduces the phrase, sout ende broode eten, Offam judiciale edere. "This," he says, "was a morsel of bread devoted and execrated by certain words, and consecrated by appointed sentences, which was presented to the guilty person, qui reo offerrebat;" apparently denoting the person charged with guilt, "salt being also exhibited, perhaps, because of the customary use of this in execrations and imprecations. For the Germans, Saxons, Belgae, and many others, were firmly persuaded, that no one who had a guilty conscience, could swallow the bread devoted in this manner. Something of the same kind is related concerning the actites (or eagle-stone) bruised, and baked with bread under the ashes, which a thief cannot swallow, but is either suffocated, or forced to acknowledge his guilt."

The bread devoted in this manner was by the ancient Saxons called Cornacale, Corned. The term occurs in the Laws of Canute, c. 5, Ed. Wheloc, p. 100. It is required that the person accused, ga to cornaele, and thaeer at gesaere sua sua Goot raede, "have recourse to Cornael, and take his fate with this according to the determination" or "judgment of God." Lamhard derives the term from A.-S. corn, execraturum, and aed, from neod, necessitas. Others render sneel, offa, a morsel, from snið-an, to cut, S., to sneel. This was sometimes called Offa execrata, also, Offa iudicialis. It certainly favours the former etymon, that this in A.-S. was also denominated Ned-bread, i.e., "bread of necessity," because the person accused was forced to eat it. V. Sommer in vo. It has been conjectured, that this was originally the sacramental bread,—and that, to avoid profanation, common bread was devoted for this purpose.

Lindembrog has given the form in which this morsel was cursed, p. 1307; and we learn from Ingulphus, that when the perfidious Godwin, Earl of Kent, attempted, by this mode of trial, to abjure the murder of the brother of Edward the Confessor, the bread stuck in his throat, as a judgment for his perjury. Gale, Rer. Anglic. Script., i. 66.

Of the general adoption of this appeal there is still a vestige remaining, in the execration often pronounced by those who wish to give the greatest assurance that they speak the truth; "May this bit stick in my throat if I tell you a lie!"

Whatever may have been the immediate origin of A.-S. cornaele, I am convinced that the phrase, bread and salt, refers to a period preceding christianity, and indeed to the established use of these symbols in sacrificial worship. In correspondence with this idea, Kilian renders the Teut. synonyme, Sout ende brood, Mola salsa; evidently viewing it as analogous to the ritual language of the Romans during the reign of heathenism.

As the oblation of the salted cake, or of bread with salt, was an act of the most solemn worship; and as the eating of it with another was a pledge of inviolable friendship; the person, who either tasted these, when judicially called, or who laid his hands on them when presented, must have been viewed, as not only declaring that he forfeited all claim to social rights, but that he renounced all interest in the blessings of religion, if he did not declare the truth.

It would appear that the tasting of salt, even without bread, was one mode of swearing allegiance in a very early period. Hence Leidrad, bishop of Lyons, observes, that, "according to some, it was an ancient custom, among certain heathen nations, for those who took an oath of fidelity to sovereigns to partake of salt that had been adjured or consecrated in the presence of those to whom they swore." In support of this, he adds; "Hence it is written in the book of Eodras, that the princes of the Samaritans, when writing to the Persian king, in regard to the accusation of the Jews, thus expressed themselves; 'We are not unmindful of the salt which we eat in the palace.' Mabillon. Analect. Tom. iii. p. 5. The passage referred to is Ezra iv. 14, which some read, 'Because we are salted with the salt of the palace,—it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour.' It seems doubtful, however, if they meant any thing more, by this metaphorical language, than that they had received various tokens of the royal favour.

SALTAR, SALTARE, SALTER, s. A maker of salt, S.

"Na persone—sall fie, hyre or conduce any saltaris, coilyearis, &c. without ane sufficient testimoniall of thair maister quhome they last scrut." Acts. Ja. VI., Ed. 1814, IV. 226, 237. Salteris, V. 598.

"That of every gangand pan—sex bollis of salt salbo ouklic delierit to the collectour,—and that of the reddist and first end of the hail salt maid in the pan, alsweill dew to the pan maisteris as saltaris, at x. s. viij d. the boll," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1574, Ed. 1814, p. 93.

"There is a place near that moss,—called the Salter-hirst, where people believe that salters dwelt, which is an indication that the sea has been there where the moss is now." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 77. V. SALTAR.

Gael. saltair, a saltmonger.

SALT-BED, s. The place where ooze, proper for the manufacture of salt, collects, Dumfr.

"By this operation the whole salt-bed, as it is technically called, is deprived of its surface to the depth of about the eighth part of an inch." Agr. Surv. Dumfr., p. 527.

SALT-FAT, SALTAT, SAUT-FAT, s. A salt-cellar, or vessel for holding salt, S.

—"Gin ye like Ise gang and fetch you your ain address: it is lying in a neuk of our saut-fat, carefully preserved, and just as fresh as whun it was to ha' been sent to the king." Donaldsoniad, Thom's Works, p. 370.

"The air sall hauc—ane maiser, ane salt-fat, ane butter plait," &c. Balfour's Practicks, p. 235.

"Item, in the sail cagent, a litill coffre of silver oure gilt with a litil salt-fat and a cover." Inventories, A. 1488, p. 6.

"Item, twa salfattis without coverris." Ibid., A. 1542, p. 72.

In our country, in former times, the saut-fat was invariably placed in the middle of the table. It was a pretty large vessel, of a flat form, that there might be no danger of the salt being spilled. For if this happened, it was universally accounted a bad omen. This is a very ancient superstition. We learn from Festus, that the Romans reckoned it ominous to spill the salt at table. Among them, the idea might originate from the custom of consecrating the table, by setting on it the images of the Lares and salt-holders, salinorum appositu; Arnob. Lib. ii. A family salt-cellar (pater-num salinum) was kept with great care; Horat. Od. ii. 16. 14. V. Adam's Rom. Antiq., p. 445. V. SALT.

A.-S. sealt-fact, id., Teut. sout-rat. A.-S. saet, fat, a vessel of any kind, is often conjoined with another s., particularly defining the use of the vessel meant; as cht-fact, a candlestick, i.e., a vessel for holding a candle.

The very form of these vessels, so big with the fate of the company, is particularly mentioned in our old records. Besides being flat, they seem to have been generally square.

"Item, ane trunscheor with ane salfatt in the nuik of it ourgilt." Inventories, p. 73. V. SAUTFAT.

"Item, twa nukit trunscheoris of silver ourgilt, with salfattis in the nukis of them." Ibid., p. 111.

It has been generally believed that the spilling of salt betokens ill luck. But it is perhaps not so well known that to throw some of it over the left shoulder dissolves the spell, and wards off the threatened ill.

Of such importance was this vessel among our forefathers, that, in ancient times, it formed a line of distinction between men of rank and mere vassals or retainers, although seated at the same table.

"Some gentlemen of consideration, with their sons, brothers, and nephews, occupied the upper end of the table.—Beneath the salt-seller (a massive piece of plate which occupied the midst of the table) sat the sine nomine turbi, men whose vanity was gratified by occupying even this subordinate space at the social board, while the distinction observed in ranking them was a salve to the pride of their superiors." Tales of my Landlord, i. 250, 251.

This humiliating custom was by no means peculiar to Scotland; it prevailed also in England, and was not unknown even on the continent. The celebrated Bp. Hall has been brought as a witness of the prevalence of the custom in England at least as early as the year 1597.

A gentle squire would gladly entertain
Into his house some trencher-chaplain;
Some willing man that might instruct his sons,
And that would stand to good conditions.
First, that he lie upon the truckle-bed,
Whilst his young maister lieth o'er his head.
Second, that he do, on no default,
Ever presume to sit above the salt, &c.

Satires, B. ii.

"He never drinks below the salt."

Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels.

—He believes it is the reason

You ne'er presume to sit above the salt.

Massey's Unnatural Combat.

The following passage from Perat, who flourished about the middle of the sixteenth century, has been brought to prove that this custom was "familiar at least in France."

Neque ejusmodi dicacitates nobilitatem honestant: quamvis enim clientium caterva, amicorum humiliores, totaque omnino infra salinum stipata cohors, scurrantem Dominum, et (ut ait Flaccus, ini derisorem lecti, cachinnationibus suis insulis adulari soleant, &c. De Inst. Not., p. 36. Edin. Month. Mag., May 1817, p. 133.

This mode of distinguishing rank, or expressing estimation, bears so singular a character, that one can hardly be made acquainted with it, without immediately proposing the question, "Whence could it possibly originate?" But, from the oblivion of former ages, and the indifference which men have generally manifested in regard to the origin of customs with which they were themselves perfectly familiar, there is reason to fear, that from the depths of antiquity no responsive voice shall be heard, none at least that can give a certain or distinct sound.

As, in the days of our forefathers, the salt-seller was placed in the middle of the table, that it might run no risk of being overturned, it might at first view seem that, as its position divided the table as it were into two equal parts, the expression, sitting above, or sitting below, the salt, meant nothing more than having a place at the upper, or at the lower, end of the table; and thus that the relation which one's seat was said to bear to the salt, was merely accidental, from the circumstance of the vessel which contained it being the central object, in the same manner as one, in our time, might be said to sit above or below the epergne.

But although it may afterwards appear that among the ancients salt was the established symbol of friendship, I do not see that the relative position of individuals, as above or below the vessel which contained it, could be meant in itself to imitate the greater or less degree of respect which their host entertained for them; for, in this case, actual propinquity to the salt-seller, whether the person was above or below it, must have been the test of estimation.

If, however, it should be supposed, that the salt-vat did not equally divide the table as to its length, but that it was placed nearer the head or bottom, as the less or more honourable guests, exceeded in number, this difficulty would be obviated. For, thus it must have been understood, that it was not propinquity to this symbol, but the possession of a seat above it, that constituted the peculiar badge of honour. But, perhaps, all that we can fairly deduce from the custom referred to is, that the choice of this utensil as marking the line of distinction, in connexion with the great importance attached to its contents, and the care exercised to prevent its being overturned, may be viewed as an indication that there was an hereditary respect to some more ancient rite or idea, the meaning of which, and even its peculiar character, had been lost in the lapse of ages.

Trivial as the custom under consideration may appear,—to those especially who would deem it a degradation were they to waste a thought on the vestiges of popular tradition, who find sufficient occupation for their superior powers in acquainting themselves with the ever-varying minutiae of modern manners,—the inquiry leads us much farther back than might at first be imagined, and points to sources of intelligence not unworthy of the investigation of the philosophic mind.

Various proofs have been given of the symbolical use of salt, in connection with divine worship, among ancient nations. As salt was invariably used in the sacred rites of the heathen, from whom immediately it was received by the Church of Rome, it has been thought that this custom was originally borrowed from the Jews. It was one of the laws delivered by Moses: "Every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt," Lev. ii. 13. V. vo. SALT, alj.

"The great importance attached to salt," says Pliny, "appears especially from the sacred rites of the ancients, who never celebrated any sacrifices sine mola salsa. For so they denominated toasted corn sprinkled with salt; for it, being bruised, was sprinkled on the victim. The fire, the head of the victim, and the sacrificing knives, were indeed all sprinkled with the crumbled cake." Hist. B. 37, c. 7. To the same purpose is the language of Juvenal;

Sertaque delubris, et farra imponite cultris.

Satyr, ii.

And of Tibullus;

At vanum in curis hominum genus omnia noctis
Farre pio placant, et saliente sale.

Lib. iiii. Eleg. 4.

Hence, as has been observed, the term immolatio; which was as it were the consecration of the victim by the act of sprinkling, or of laying, the salted cake on its head. The cake itself was called mola à molenando; because it was made of bruised corn, or that which had been ground, mola, in a mill. By means of this cake also, which, when bruised, they sprinkled on the sacrifice, they used to divine; whence the Gr. terms δευρομαντεία, i.e., "divination by meal;" and ουλοχρημαντεία, "divination by the salted cake."

But salt, even as symbolically regarded, was not exclusively appropriated to a religious use. It was also an established symbol of friendship between man and man. We learn from Eustathius, Iliad. A. that among the ancient Greeks, salt was presented to guests, before any other food, as a symbol of friendship. Hence Aeschines, when describing the sacred rites of hospitality, says that the Greeks made great account, της πόλεως ἄλας, "of the salt of the city and the public table." The language of Pliny, Salem et caseum edere, contains a similar allusion; and that of Cicero, Vulgò dicitur, multos modios salis simul edos esse, ut amicitiae munus expletum esse.

Eustathius has said that, "as salt consists of aqueous and terrene particles mixed together, or is a connexion of several aqueous parts, in like manner it was intimated that the stranger and his host, from the time of their tasting salt together, should maintain a constant union of love and friendship." This idea, however, seems by far too metaphysical and refined to have originated a custom received by nations in an early period of society.

Others, with greater plausibility, have observed, that, as salt preserves meat from corruption, the use of it as a symbol signified that the friendship which had its commencement in a mutual participation of it should be firm and lasting. It has also been supposed, that this custom respected the purifying quality of salt, which was commonly used in lustrations, and that it intimated that friendship should be free from all artifice, jealousy, and suspicion.

Potter, I find, has in general preferred the same idea that had occurred to me in regard to the origin of the use of this as a symbol of friendship. "It may be," he says, "the ground of this custom was only this, that salt was used at all entertainments both of the gods and men,—whence a particular sanctity was believed to be lodged in it. It is hence called θῖος ἄλς, divine salt, by Homer, and εἰρὸς ἄλς, by others; and salinorum appositum, by the placing of salt on the table, a sort of holiness was supposed to be derived to them." Antiq., ii. 415.

From the language of Philo Judæus, it has been inferred, with great plausibility, that although no mention is made of this circumstance in the Pentateuch, salt was always placed on the table of shew-bread, along with the loaves. "The table," says Philo, "has its position towards the south, upon which there are bread and salt." Vit. Moys. Lib. 3. Scacchus concludes that there must have been at least two salt-sellers, because the Gr. term (ἄλς) is used in the plural. Myrothec. ii., p. 495.

The figurative connexion between salt and friendship does not appear so close, that this can well be viewed as the primary use of the symbol. It seems necessary to suppose, that, before it would be applied in this manner, it had been generally received as an established emblem of what was permanent. Now, this idea was most probably borrowed from the mode of confirming covenants by sacrifice, in which salt was invariably used; and it is well known that sacrifice was a common rite in confederation, not only where God was the principal party, but between man and man. This is evident from the account given of the covenant between Jacob and Laban, Gen. xxxi. 44. 54. As an agreement of this kind was called "a covenant by sacrifice;" from the use of salt in the oblation, it was also denominated "a covenant of salt," Numb., 18, 19. That singular phrase, "the salt of the covenant," Lev., 2, 13, obviously contains the same allusion.

With this corresponds the Germ. term, salz-bund, explained by Wachter in his Glossary, Fœdus firmum validumque ratione durationis; q. "the salt bond or covenant."

The presenting of salt to a stranger, or the eating of it with him, might thus come to be a common symbol of friendship, as containing a reference to the ancient sacrificial mode of entering into leagues of amity; although those who used this rite might in general be total strangers to its meaning. Hence also, most probably, the idea so universally received, that the spilling of the salt was a bad omen; as it was supposed to forebode the breach of that friendship of which the conjunct participation of salt was the symbol.

It would appear, however, that the symbol itself had been pretty generally diffused among the nations. We are informed that to this day the eating of bread and salt together is a symbol of friendship among the Muscovites. Stuck. Antiq. Conviv., p. 270.

Those who wish to have further information in regard to this ancient custom, may consult Stuckius, above quoted, p. 148; Pierii Hieroglyph. fol. 221, D.; Pitisci Lexic. vo. Sal; and Potter's Antiquities of Greece, loc. cit.

SALTIE, SALT-WATER FLEUK. The vulgar names of the Dab, on the Firth of Forth.

"Pleuronectes Limanda. Dab.—It is often emphatically distinguished by the fish-dealers as the saltie, or salt-water fleuk." Neill's List of Fishes, p. 11.

Most probably thus denominated in contradistinction from the P. Fleus, called the Fresh-water Flounder, as it "frequents our rivers at a great distance from the salt waters." Pennant's Zool., iii. 187.

• SALTLESS, adj. Used metaph. as expressive of disappointment, S.

"I have had saltless luck;—the hare nas langer loves to brouze on the green dewy blade o' the clover." Blackw. Mag. May 1820, p. 159.

SALT MERT. A beeve salted for winter provision.

"John Lindissay—salt—restore—a kow of a deforce, a salt mert," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1479, p. 33. V. MART.

SALT VPONE SALT. The ancient designation of refined salt in S.

—"Dame Margrett Balfour, Lady Burly, haifing sum commoditie of coillis and panis within the lordship of Pittinweme,—hes vpoun hir large cost and expensis procurit the knowlege of the making of refynit salt vtherwayes callit salt vpone salt, quhilk will serue for the samin vses for the quhilk greit salt seruit befor," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1587, Ed. 1814, p. 495.

SALT SE, or SEA. A phrase commonly used by our old writers to denote the sea.

Vnder thy gard to schip we vs addres,
Ouer spynnand many swelland seyis salt.
Doug. Virgil, 72, 46.

But the term salt, as connected with sea, is not to be viewed in the light of a common poetical epithet. It seems evidently to have originated from its being formerly used as a s., denoting the sea itself. We may safely form this conclusion from analogy. For salt was the designation which the ancient Scandinavians gave to the sea. The Baltic sea is by Isl. writers commonly called Eystra salt, i.e., the Eastern sea; Germ. salz, mare, Gr. ἄλς, and Lat. sal-um, signify both the sea, and the seasoning which we give to our food, extracted from its waters. According to Ihre, it must remain uncertain, whether salt has its name from the sea, or the sea, as thus denominated, from salt. But Seren. observes, perhaps more justly, that Su.-G. salt, as denoting the sea, seems to be the radical term; as it is not likely that men would be acquainted with salt, before they had tasted the waters of the sea.

To SALUS, v. a. To salute.

He salut thrim, as it war bot in scorn,
"Dewgar, gud day, Bone Senyhour, and, gud morn."
Wallace, vi. 129, MS.

From Lat. salus, health; O.Fr. id. salution; or the v. salu-er.

SALUT, s. Health, safety; Fr. id.

"Pausanias Duc of Spart, to the kyng Xerxes, salut." Compl. S., p. 180.

SALUTE, s. A French gold coin, formerly current in Scotland.

"The Ryall of France sall haue cours for vi. s. viii. d. and the Salute hauand the wecht of the said new Lyon sall haif cours than als for vi. s. viii. d." Acts Ja. II., A. 1451, c. 34, Ed. 1566.

"Item, in a purs of ledder,—four hundreth tuenti & viii Lewis of gold, and in the same purs of ledder of Franche crownis fyve hundreth thre score & sex, and of thame twa salutis and four Lewis." Inventories, p. 13.

Fr. salute, "an old French crown, or coin, worth about 5 s. sterl.;" Cotgr. In the reign of James II., however, the salute is valued at eleven shillings, or half the estimate of the Henry noble. Acta, A. 1456, c. 64.

"Salus and Salut," says Du Cange, "was gold money struck in France by Henry V. of England; so denominated, because it exhibited the figure of the Annunciation made to the Virgin, or of the salutation of the Angel." Vo. Salus. In L.B. also Salucius and Salucia. In the article Moneta, however, he reckons this as one of the coins of Charles VI. struck A. 1421. The fact would seem to be that they were first struck by the latter, bearing only the arms of France; but that Henry the sixth struck a coin of the same description, containing two shields, one bearing the arms of France, and the other those of England. V. the plate in Du Cange, vo. Moneta, Nos. 10 and 12 compared.

SALVE, SALVEE, s. A term used to denote a discharge of fire-arms.

"They were prepared with a firme resolution to receive us with a salve of cannon and muskets; but our small ordinance being twice discharged amongst them,—we charged them with a salve of muskets, which was repaid." Monro's Exped. P. II., p. 66.

"Notwithstanding the enemy would empte salves of muskets on them before their landing." Ibid., p. 80. "At the first encounter they gave the Lord Gordon a salve of shot from the folds, where he was slain, with dyvers others." Contin. Hist. Earls of Sutherland, p. 526.

This term, like many others in the military line, has been evidently introduced by our old officers who served in the wars of Denmark and Sweden. Dan. salve, a volley or discharge of musket-shot; salve med canoner, a discharge of cannons. It is an oblique use of the term salve, as primarily signifying "a salute;" and has, I suppose, been first applied to a salute given by fire-arms, as a token of respect. Thus salve til soes still signifies "a salute, or saluting at sea." V. Wolff. The Danes seem to have borrowed it from the French. For salut denotes "a volley of shot given for a welcome to some great person;" Cotgr. I need scarcely add, that it must be traced to Lat. salve, a defective v. expressing a wish for health to him to whom the term is addressed.

"The sea Lark (charadrius hiaticula, Lin. Syst.) is seen in vast flocks around all our sandy bays and shores, especially in winter; but as soon as summer arrives, they retire to the bare and barren brakes, where they build a small nest on the ground, and lay four eggs of a whitish colour." Barry's Orkney, p. 306.

This is the sandy-lerrick, or laverock, of S.

"Besides, here are Eagles, Signets [Cygnets] Falcons, Swans, Geese, Gossander, Duck and Malard, Teal, Smieth, Widgeon, Seapyes, Sandelevericks green and gray Plover, Snite, Partridge, Curlew, Moor-game, and Grows." Franck's Northern Memoirs, p. 181.

"I had rather that the rigs of Tillietudlem bare naething but windle-straes and sandy-lavrocks than they were ploughed by rebels to the king." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 152.

"'Be good to us,' she exclaimed, 'if here is not the canty callant that—snapped up our goose as light as if it had been a sandie-lavrock.'" The Pirate, i. 233.

[SAND-LOO, SANNY-LOO. V. SANDY LOO.]

SAND-LOWPER, SAAN-LOUPER, s. A small species of crab, Cancer Locusta, Linn.

"Pulex Marinus, the fishers call it Sand-Lowper." Sibb. Fife, p. 133. V. LOUP.

SAND-TRIPPER, s. The Sand-piper, a bird, Gall.

"Sand-tripper, the sand-piper, common on shores;" Gall. Enc.

This, in signification, resembles the Germ. name, sand-lauferl, q. sand-louper. V. Pennant's Zool.

SANDE, part. pa. Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 2.

—Sande with sambutes of silke.

V. SAMBUTES.

Perhaps bordered, from A.-S. sweas, borders, Sommer; or embroidered, as corr. from Su.-G. saenckt, id. saenck-a, acu pingers.

SANDIE, SANNIE, s. The abbreviation of Alexander, S. Hence the English seem to have formed their ludicrous national designation of Sawney for a Scotsman; as the term is sometimes pronounced in this manner.

"Sandie Clerk." Acts III., p. 390.

SANDRACH, s. The food provided for young bees, before they are able to leave their cells; more commonly denominated bee-bread.

"If you make mead of the washing of combs—you must be careful that, before you break your combs into the sieve or strainer, you separate all the young bees, which you may easily know from the honey, as also, the sandrach or Bee-bread, which is a yellow substance, with which some of the cells will be full. These would give your mead an ill taste." Maxwell's Bee-master, p. 113.

Isl. son, vas mellis, and dreg, fex; q. "the dregs of the hinny-pig."

SANDY-GIDDOCK, s. The Launce, Amodytes Tobianus, Linn. Shetl.

"The people call them bottle-noses, and common black whales, but most generally ca'ing whales—Sandy-giddocks (sand-lances) were found in their mouths." Neill's Tour, p. 221, 222.

The whales, here mentioned, we are informed, are denominated ca'ing, because "being of a gregarious disposition,"—"if they are able to guide," or drive,—"the leaders into a bay, they are sure of likewise entangling multitudes of their followers."

SANDY-LOO, s. A name for the Sandlark, Shetl.

"Charadrius Hiaticula, (Linn. Syst.) Sandy Loo, Sand Lark, Ring Plover, Ring Dotterel." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 239.

Isl. loc, loa, lafa, charadrius nigro lutescente variegatus; expl. in Dan. "a lark;" Haldorson.

SANDY-MILL, s. To Big a Sandy Mill, to be in a state of intimacy, Loth.

Unless you my advice fulfil,
We'll never big a sandy mill.

G. Wilson's Coll. of Songs, p. 70.

This refers to the custom of children building houses in the sand for sport; otherwise expressed, "We'll never big sandy bowrocks thegither." V. BOURACH.

To SANE, v. n. To say.

Unquyt I do no thing nor sane,
Nor wairis a luvris thoct in vane.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 81.

Quhat sall I of his wonder workis sane?

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 160, 7.

Lyndsay, shewing the folly of worshipping images, has the following singular argument:—

Quhy suld men Psalmis to thame sing or sane,
Sen growand treis, that yeirlie beiris frute,
Ar mair to praise, I mak it to the plane,
Nor cuttit stockis, wanting bath crop and rute.

Warkis, 1592, p. 72.

It occurs in O. E.

If it be sothe, quod Pierce, that ye sayne, I shall it sone espye.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 33, a.

V. SEYNE.

To SANE, SAYN, SAIN, SEYN, v. a. 1. To make the sign of the cross, as a token of blessing one; [pret. sanyt, sayned, saynt.]

Quhen Schyr Aymer herl this, in hy
He sanyt him, for the ferly.

Barbour, vii. 98, MS.

In hyr presens apperyt so mekill lycht,
That all the fyr scho put out off his sycht,
Gaiff him a wand off colour reid and greyne,
With a saffyr sanyt his face and eyne.

Welcum, scho said, I cheiss the as my luff.

Wallace, vii. 94, MS.

Edit. 1648, sayned.

It occurs in Ywayne and Gawin—

He sayned him, the soth to say,
Twenty sith, or ever he blan,
Swilk mervayle had he of that man;
For he had wonder that nature
Myght mak so fowl a creature.

Ritson's E. M. R., i. 26.

i.e., He made the sign of the cross twenty times. Sayne is used in the same poem for a sign.

And sone sho frayed at Lunet,
If sho kouth ani sertain sayne. Ibid., p. 120.

Langland uses seynd in the same sense.

Than sate Slouth up, & seynd him swyth,
And made a vowe before God, for his foule slouth, Shal no Sunday be thys seven yere, but sikenes it let,
That I ne shall do me or day to the dere church.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 27, b.

This is undoubtedly the primary sense of the word. For as Germ. segn signifies a sign, and also blessing, and segn-en, to bless, to consecrate, to sanctify; the terms, as Wachter has observed, seem to be used metonymically, the sign being put for the thing signified. The same word occurs in Alem., Notker, Psa. cxxviii. 8. Gotes seggen si uber iuh; The blessing of God be upon you. In Gotes namen seggenen uuir iuh; In the name of God we bless you. Wachter conjectures that this mode of speaking had its origin among the Franks, who, he says, from the beginning of Christianity, used the sign of the cross in entering into vows, and consecrating persons and things, as the Catholics do at this day. He quotes the following passage from Alcuin. Hoc enim signum crucis consecrat corpus Dominicum, sanctificatur fons baptismatus, initiantur presbyteri et caeteri gradus ecclesiastici, et omnia quaecunque sanctificantur, hoc signo Dominice crucis cum invocatione Christi nominis consecrantur.

A passage in Kilian confirms this view; Kruyssen ende saeghenen, crucis signo se munire, to secure protection to one's self by the sign of the cross.

The S. v. and s. sync, synd, which denote a slight ablution, seem to have had the same origin. We may add Isl. sign-a, consecrare, Verel. Ind. Su.-G. id. notare signo crucis. A.-S. segnunge, signatio, from segn-ian, signare. Ille nullam salutem neque consolationem thurh heora segnungne onfeng, per eorum ministerium suscepit, Bed. 502, 26, where, says Lye, the Sax. interpreter, by the ministry of the priests wished sealing to be understood, i.e., with the sign of the cross. V. SYND.

2. To bless, God being the agent.

The King said, "Sa our Lord me sayn,
Ik had gret cause him for to sla."

Barbour, ix. 24.

"Hence Scot. Bor. the expression, God save you and save you." Rudd.

Sum saies the Salt, and sum thame cursis.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 41.

3. To pray for a blessing, S.

She—frae ill o't sain'd her o'er and o'er.

Ross's Helenore, p. 65.

Old people still speak of saining themselves, Ettr.
For.

Quhen that the schip was saynt and under sail,
Foal Brow in Hail thou purpost for to pass.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 71.

It seems also used in the South of S.

"Many of the vulgar account it extremely dangerous to touch any thing, which they may happen to find, without saining (blessing) it, the anares of the enemy being notorious and well attested." Minstrelsy Border,
ii. 187.

By some it is still believed that it is dangerous to receive commendation from another, unless it be accompanied by a wish for a blessing. Thus Kelly expl. the Prov., God sain your eye, man: "Spoken when you commend a thing without blessing it, which my countrymen cannot endure, thinking that thereby you will give it the blink of an ill eye: a senseless, but common, conceit." Prov., p. 120.

4. To consecrate, to hallow.

The truth ye'll tell to me, Tamlane,
And ye mauna lie;
Gin ye're [e'er] ye was in haly chapel,
Or sained in Christentie.

It has the same signification in O.E.

We tolde the seven hundurd towwys,
So Cryste me save and sayne.
Le Bone Florence, Ritson's E.M.R., iii. 13.

5. To heal, to cure; pron. Shane, Gall. V.
SHANED.

Teut. God seghene u, Servet, conservet te Deus; God seghene de maclejd, Deus conservet convivas, sit felix convivium, proxit convivis; Kilian.

SAIN, s. Blessing, S.B. V. the v.

SANG, s. 1. Song, S.

This sang was made of hym forthl.
Wynlow, vii. 10. 526.

2. Note, strain, S.

It is used in this sense in the old proverb; "Ye breed of the gowk, ye have ay but ae sang;" Kelly anglifies it—"one song;" adding, "Spoken to them that always insist upon one thing." P. 362.

[3. An auld-sang, an old saying, a proverb;
as, "Creep or ye gang, as the auld sang says;" also, almost nothing, the least value possible; as, "Ye may get it for an auld sang," "It's no worth an auld sang,"
Clydes.]

A.-S. sang, Su.-G. saang, Belg. gesangh, Germ.
gesang.

SANG-BUKE, SANG-BUIK, s. A book containing a collection of songs, S.

SANG-SCUILL, s. A school for teaching music.

"For instructiounes of the youth in the art of musik & singing, quhilk is almaist decayit,—our souerane lord requiestis the prouest, &c. to erecte and sett vp ane sang scuill with ane maister sufficient and able for instruction of the yowth," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1579,
Ed. 1814, p. 174.

"The sang sculis." Aberd. Reg., V. 18.

SANG. My sang, equivalent to, "my troth," Roxb., Aberd., Renfr.

What, civil folks! good sooth, I doubt it,
My sang, that's a' ye ken about it.
For sylphs that haunt the bogs and meadows,—
They warn'd us a' and bad us fear,
If ever Frenchmen do come here.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 43.

Altho' I say't, I'm nae a glutton;—
But sang! thought I, I'll slack a button,
If ye were scowder'd.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 6.

It is used as an oath; By my sang.

But by my sang! now gin we meet,
We'll hae a tramp right clever.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 87.

Su.-G. sann, signifies truth, Moes.-G. sunja, id., bisunjai, in truth. Itho says, Habemus hinc asseverandi formulam, min sann, mean fidem. Isl. sann-r, id., which enters into the composition of a great variety of words. A min sann, meo sensu, in my opinion; Hal-derson. The same phrase, however, is rendered by G. Andr., as synon. with that in the Su.-G. Mehercule,
p. 203. Isl. sann-a, jure jurando confirmare; soennunn, confirmatio; sonnunar-eid-r, juramentum fidelitatis.
Dan. sand, true; sand-e, verum predicare aliquid.
The term does not occur in A.-S.

SANGLERE, s. A wild boar.

So brym in stoure that stound Menzentius was.
Like to the strentny sangler, or the bore.

Doug. Virgil, 344, 35.

"Item, ane tapestrie of the historie of the huntis of the sangleir, contening sex peces." Invent., p. 144.

Fr. sanglier, id. L. B. singularis, Gr. μωρος;
according to Du Cange, because it delights in solitude, or because it wanders the two first years singly and alone. Also singlare, senglaris, senglerius, and sengla-ris, porcus.

SANGUANE, SANGUYNE, adj. Red, or having the colour of blood; sanguin, Chaucer.

—Sum gres, sum gowlis, sum purpoure, sum sanguane.
Doug. Virgil, 401, 2.

Fr. sanguin, id. Lat. sanguin-eus, from sanguis.

[SANNA, SUNNA. Shall not, Banffs.,
Clydes.]

SANOUROUS, adj. Healing, medicinal.

Under the circle solar thir sanourous sedis
Were nurist be dame Nature that nobill maistres.
Houlate, i. 3, MS.

"Savoury," Gl. But the poet speaks of herbs that were

Mendis and medicine for all menis neidis;
Help till bert, and till hurt, helefull it was.

He evidently uses sanourous as synon. with helefull.
Lat. sano, -are, to heal.

SANRARE, s. An errat. for Thesaurare, treasurer, Houlate, i. 17.

The Bannatyne MS. reads :
Upoun the sand yit I saw as thesaurare tane, &c., i.e., Treasurer.

SANS, prep. Without, Fr.

And bot my mycht resisted thame, sans dout
They had bene brynt or this in flambis role.
Doug. Virgil, 59, 3.

SANSHAGH, SANSHAUCH, SANSHUCH, adj.

1. Wily, crafty, Buchan.

2. "Sarcastically clever;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

3. Proud, distant, disdainful, petulant, saucy ;
as, "He's a sanshach callant," Aberd.

4. Nice, precise, pettish ; as, "Ye're a sanschaugh chiel," Mearns.

This may be from Gael. sean-aois, old age, qu. possessing the sagacity of age ; or rather from saobhnosach, morose, peevish, (bh bounded as v) ; Ir. synnóach, Lhuyd ; from saobhnos, anger, bad manners. The root seems to be saobh, silly, foolish, mad ; whence also saobhmhianach, punctilious. Isl. sannasgar-menn denotes prophets, (Verel), from sann-ur (Su.-G. sanir), true, and saga, narration. But the second is preferable.

To SANT, v. n. 1. To disappear, to be lost ;
as, "It's santed, but it will maybe cast up again ;" Ettr. For.

2. To vanish downwards at once without noise.
It is applied to spectres as well as to material objects, ibid.

"What's come o' my hare now ? Is she santit ? or yirdit ? or flown awa' ?" Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 142.
It has been thought that this term may refer to eels sinking into the sand. It would be more natural, surely, to view it as originating from the sudden disappearance of spirits, q. saints. It seems, however, to have strong marks of antiquity as a verb. Alem. suin- an and sunst-an signify tabescere. With the prefix, firwant is absorptus ; hodie, verschwand, disparuit.
Ferwundun also scuto, transierunt tanquam umbra.
Inde, says Wachter, schwinden, evanescere in auras, disparere ex oculis,—the very idea conveyed by our Sant. Su.-G. swinn-a, deficere ; foerswinn-a, ancientsly foerwaend-a, evanescere.

[SANVEELTING, SANVEILTRE, s. A disease of horses occasioned by their swallowing sand along with their food, causing them to writhe and roll about, Shetl. Sw.
sand, sand, valse, to roll.]

SAP, s. 1. Liquid of anykind, as milk or small beer, taken with solid aliment, especially with bread, for the purpose of moistening it.

To 'ford him sap, a cow he'll chuse
To pick around his borders.

Morison's Poems, p. 45.

Belg. sap, id. 'Tis vol sap ; It is full of liquor.
The Icelanders give the name of sap to drink. It is radically the same with A.-S. sæp, Su.-G. Germ. sapf, succus, juice ; which Wachter derives from sapfen, to moisten. V. next word.

2. Sorrow, Dumfr.

3. Tears, caused by affliction or vexation,
ibid.

Here the term is evidently used metaph. like Teut.
sap van de boomen, lachrymæ arborum.

4. A ninny, a heavy-headed fellow, S. A.

"He maun be a saft sap, wi' a head nae better than a foxy frosted turnip." Rob Roy, ii. 16.

This is merely a figurative use of E. sap, A.-S. sæp, succus ; as conveying the idea of softness.

SAP-MONEY, s. Money allowed to servants for purchasing sap, S.

"The skippers, or men who have the charge of the boats,—have for their wages, during the winter season, 6l. with 4 bolls of oatmeal, and 7s. for sapmoney, or drink to their meals." P. Ecclesgreig, Kincard.
Statist. Acc., xi. 93.

* SAPPY, adj. 1. Applied to a female who is plump, as contrasted with one who is meagre, S. ; synon. Sonsy.

2. Addicted to the bottle ; applied to those who sit long, who moisten themselves well, or are often engaged in this way, S. ; as,
He's a braw sappy lad, he'll no rise soon.

Sic sappy callans ne'er are right
But whan the glass is fillin'.

Ruickbie's Way-side Cottager, p. 187.

SAPS, s. pl. "Sops, bread soaked in some nourishing liquid," Gl. Sibb. It is more generally boiled.

Alc-saps, wheaten bread boiled in beer ; when butter is added, this mess is called butter-saps. This is commonly given as a treat, among the vulgar, at the birth of a child.

Perhaps Gael. sabhs, soup, is allied.

SAP-SPALE, SAP-WOOD, s. The weak part of wood, nearest to the bark, S. ; q. that which retains most of the sap.

Analogous to A.-S. sæp-spone, assulæ succosæ,
"sappy chips or splinters of wood or trees."

SAPOUR, s. "A sound or deep sleep ; Lat. sopor ;" Gl. Lynds.

SAPPLES, s. pl. A lye of soap and water, suds, S.

"Judge of my feelings, when I saw them—rubbin the clothes to juggons between their hands, above the sapples." Ayra. Legatees, p. 265.

"Saip-sapples,—water that clothes have been washed in ;" Gall. Encycl.

A diminutive from S. sap, or A.-S. sæpe, soap. This lye, before the clothes have been washed in it, is called a graiith, q. what is prepared for cleaning them ; it is called sapples, properly after the operation of washing ; often saipy sapples ; in Lanarks. more commonly Serptins.

[SAR, SARE, 1. As an adj., sore. V.
SAIR.

2. As an adv., sorely, Barbour, ii. 351.

3. As a s., a sore ; also sorrow, pain of mind,
S.]

To SAR, v. a. To vex, to gall, to press sore on one.

Throun oute the thikest of the press he yeld ;
And at his horse full fayne he wald half beyne,
Twa sarde him maist that cruell war and keyne.
Wallace, ii. 58, MS.

In Edit. 1648, it is rendered, grieved.

"This king was huntand ane wolf in the fellis, and quhen schow was sarit with the boundis, schoruschit on the king, and bait him in the syde." Bellend. Cron., B. ix., c. 21. Urgeretur acrius a canibus, Boeth.

A.-S. sar-ian, dolere ; Su.-G. sar-a, laedere, vulnerare ; to wound, to hurt, Wideg.

SARIT, pret. Vexed. V. under SAR.

SARY, SAIRY, adj. 1. Sad, sorrowful.

Palinurus, quod sche, thou sary syre,
Qubiddir is becummyn sic vndantit desire
To the !—Doug. Virgil, 176, 28.

A.-S. sari, sariy, tristis, moestas, from sar, dolor.

2. Sorry, wretched, pitiable.

"That sary Benet," he sayd, "am I,
That led that state waworthily."
Wyntoun, vi. 13. 21.

That sary lyf contenyd be,
Qwhil wast but folk wes the centre.
Ibid., viii. 37. 131.

"Sary man, and then he grat ;" S. Prov. "an ironical condolence of some trifling misfortune." Kelly, p. 291.

"Ye'll gar me claw a sairy man's haffet," Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 83.

3. Weak, feeble ; synon. Silly, S.

"It is a sary hen that cannot scrape to one burd."
S. Prov. ; "spoken of them that have but one child to provide for." Kelly, p. 181.

4. Poor, in necessitous circumstances.

"You will make [me] claw a sary man's haffet,"
S. Prov. "By your squandering and ill management you will undo me." Kelly, p. 382. "Poor," N.

5. Mean, contemptible.

"Seeing by force of truth, they are now at last driven (dispairing of the matter it self) for all other argument, to quarrel our callings, this sairie shift may be wrung from them also." Forbes's Defence, p. 3.

"All thir sary litill crelis to be distroit & put downe." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

6. Expressive of kindness or attachment ; as, Sairy man, like E. poor fellow, Roxb. V. SAIRIE.

It has originally included the idea of compassion.

SARBIT, interj. Some kind of exclamation.

O sarbit, says the Lady Maisery,
That ever the like me befa' !

Jamieson's Popular Ball., ii. 272.

This exclamation may have originally expressed the sensation of pain ; for Isl. sarbit-r signifies exacerbatus, exulcerans, Verel. Or it may be viewed as a sort of imprecation, sair be it! like weary sa, Aberd. ; q. "sorrow take it ;" A.-S. Isl. sar, dolor. Dan. sær, however, denotes any thing singular or wonderful ; *sær*t, mirè, surprisingly.

SARCE, SARCH (St.) V. SARIS.

To SARD, v. u. [Futurere.]

I trow Sanctam Ecclesiam ;
Bot nocht in thir Bischops nor friers,
Quhilk will, for purging of thir neirs,
Sard up the ta raw and down the uther.
Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 234.

["Go teach your grandam to sard," is a Nottingham proverb. V. Halliwell's Dict.]

SARDE, pret. Vexed, galled. V. SAR.

SARE, s. A sore, S. V. SAIR.

To SARE, v. n. To soar.

Quham lynaly he clippis at the last,
And loukit in his punis saris fast.
Doug. Virgil, 390, 41.

Seren. derives E. soar from Isl. scir-a, swerr-a, vibrare.

To SARE, v. n. To savour. V. SAWER.

SARELESS, adj. Useless, unsavoury, S.B.

Quo' he, Indeed this were a sareless feast,
To tak in earnest what ane speaks in jest.
Ross's Helenore, p. 104.

q. savourless. V. SAIR, v.

To SARFE, v. a. To serve.

"In remuneration of—the trow service done to us in our said tendire aige,—and for geving occasioun to vtheris our subiectis to sarfe ws diligentlie in sic trow and hertlie obeysance—be thaire presentis dischargis and exoneris our saide traist Cousing," &c. Acts Mary, Ed. 1814, App., p. 601.

SARGEAND, s. A squire, an attendant on a person of rank.

Sé ye not quha is cum now ?—
A sargeand out of Soudoun land,
A gyane strang for to stand,
That with the strenth of my hand
Bereis may bind.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 173.

This word is used in the same sense with sergeant, Chaucer, a squire attending a prince or nobleman. Fr. sergeant, Germ. scherge, a lictor. Seriaunt is a servant, R. Glouc. Wachter derives scherge from Alem. scurgi, averte.

SARIELY. [An errat. for Sarraly, closely, compactly, combinedly ; hence, harmoniously, in full chorus, Barbour, v. 5, MS.]

—Byrdis smale,
As turturis and the nyctingale,
Begouth rycht sariely to syng ;
And for to mak in thair singyng
Swete notis, and sownys ser,
And melodys plesand to her.

"Loftily," Gl. But it seems to signify, artfully ; from A.-S. scarolice, mechanice, artificiose ; from sear, seara, searuka, art. [More prob. from Fr. serrer, to lock fast, to combine : hence metaph., to sing in chorus or in harmony. V. Skeat's Ed., Gl and Notes.]

The King weile sone in the mornyng,
Saw fyrst cummand thar fyrst eschele,
Arrayit sarraly, and weile.

Barbour, viii. 222, MS.

And thai, that in the woldis sid wer
Stud in array rycht sarraly,
And thought to hyd thar hardly
The cumnyng of thar enymys.

Ibid., ix. 140, MS.

i.e., artfully, carefully, cautiously ; as taking the benefit of the covert of the wood.

A.-S. seare is expl. "stratagema; a subtil contrivance;" Somner. It is also used to denote warlike engines. V. Lye.

It occurs in a similar sense with respect to the care of the army about the King, when he was sick. In myddis thaim the King thair bar, And yeld about him sarraly.

Ibid., ver. 176, MS.

—A bidding has he mad,
That na man sall be sa hardy
To prik at thaim, bot sarraly
Rid redy ay in to bataill,
To defend gif men wald assail.

Ibid., xvi. 114, MS.

SARIS, SARCHIS. "Sanct Saris day;" apparently, St. Serf's day, Aberd. Reg.

It is also written Sarce. "Sanct Sarce day." Ibid., A. 1538, V. 16. "Sanct Sarchis day;" ibid., V. 25.

This is the person in Lat. called Servanus. He was contemporary with Adamnan, abbot of Iona. See some account of him, Hist. of the Culdees, pp. 131, 132, 167, 168. He is erroneously called Sernanus by Chalmers, De Fortit., p. 133, who fixes the day consecrated to him on the 20th of April.

SARK, SERK, s. 1. A shirt, S. A. Bor.

Thar with in haist his weil off castis he,—
Held on his sark, and tuk his suerd so gud
Band on his nek, and syn lap in the flud.

Wallace, ix. 1178, MS.

On fute I sprent, into my bare sark,
Willful for to complete my langsam wark.

Doug. Virgil, 403, 54.

"He has been row'd in his mother's sark tail;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 31. It is thus expl. "The Scots have a superstitious custom of receiving a child, when it comes to the world, in its mother's shift, if a male; believing that this usage will make him well beloved among women. And when a man proves unfortunate that way, they will say, He was kep'd in a board-cloth; he has some hap to his meat, but none to his wives." Kelly, p. 139, 140.

A.-S. syric, syrc, indusium; Dan. meene sercke, a surplice, Rudd. Su.-G. særk, indusium muliebre; Isl. serk-ur, vestis seu indusium muliebre, ac nobile quidem interulæ genus; G. Andr. He derives it from Lat. seric-um, silk. It seems to confirm this etymon, that Fland. sark denotes cloth of silk. I have, however, heard an amateur of the Gr. language, with great gravity, derive our S. word from σαρκ, σαρκ-ος, caro, because the shirt is next to the body, [or, that which has been stripped off.] Valck.

2. A hieland serk, a shirt worn in the Highlands.

"Ane hieland syd serk of yellow linyng [linen], pasmentit with purpour silk and silver—Foure Inglis sarkes with blak werk. Ane Inglis sark of qubeit werk." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 215.

It appears from this curious notice, that the saffron-coloured shirt of the Irish was also used by our Highlanders, and even so late as the reign of James VI. It is here expressly distinguished from those of the English pattern. The description seems exactly to agree with that given by Fynes Moryson. It is called a syd serk, which marks its resemblance in size.

"Ireland yelds much flax, which the inhabitants work into yarne, & exporte the same in great quantity. And of old they had such plenty of linnen cloth, as the wild Irish used to weare 30 or 40 elles in a shirt, al gathered and wrinckled, and washed in saffron, because they never put them off till they were worne out." Itinerary, F. iii., p. 160.

[SARK-ALANE, adv. Having nothing on but a shirt or shift, S.]

SARKED, SARKIT, part. pa. 1. "Provided with shirts or shifts," Shirr. Gl., S.

I shall hae you shod and sarkit,
Ere the snawy days come on.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 84.

On's back a coat o' hame-made claithe,
And underneath weel sarkit

Burns, The Vision, st. 5.]

2. Covered with thin deals, S.

"The roofs are sarked, i.e., covered with inch-and-half deal, sawed into three planks, and then nailed to the joists, on which the slates are pinned." Pennant's Tour in S., 1769, p. 147.

SARK-FU', s. A shirtful, S.

SARK-FU' O' SAIR BANES. 1. A phrase used to denote the effect of great fatigue or violent exertion, S.

2. "A sound beating," S.; Gl. Antiquary; or rather the consequence of it.

"I'll give you a sarkful of sore bones." Kelly's Prov., p. 396.

—"If ye say no, ye shall hae the best sark-fu' o' sair banes that ever ye had in your life, the first time ye set a foot bye Liddell-mote!" Guy Mann., iii. 113.

SARKIN, SARKING, s. 1. Cloth for making shirts, shirting, S.

My Kimmer and I gade to the fair,
Wi' twal pun' Scots in sarking to ware;
But we drank the gude brown hawkie dry,
An' sarkless hame came Kimmer an' I.

Nithsdale and Galloway Song, p. 95.

2. The covering of wood above the rafters, immediately under the slates, q. the shirting.

"I told them of the sarking of the roof, which was as frush as a paddock-stool; insomuch that, in every blast, some of the pins lost their grip, and the slates came hurling off." Annals of the Parish, p. 236.

SARKING, adj. Belonging to shirts, S.

"Order was given out to search the country for hides, gray cloaths, and sarking cloath," &c. Spalding, i. 289.

[SARKIT, s. A short shirt or blouse, Banffs.]

SARKLESS, adj. Not having a shirt, S. V. SARKING.

SARK-TAIL, s. The bottom of a shirt, S.

—Turning coats, and mending breeks,
New-seating where the sark-tail keeks.

Doug. Virgil, 69, 44.

Fr. sais-ir, comprehendere; whence L.B. sasire, and sasine, forensic term.

SASINE, s. Investiture, S.; the same with E. seizin.

SASINE by Presenting, or by Deliverance of, EIRD and STANE. A mode of investiture in lands, according to our ancient laws, S.

"It is previt—that Robert of Kinglassy promist & grantit in jugement to Alex^r. Couane the tyme the said Alex^r. begane his process & present erde & stane before the alderman & balyeis in the hede court for recovering of a tennement & land lyand in the burgh of Perth, beside the Curate Brig, that he suld hafe payt the said Alex^r. the annuel aucht of the said land and tennement of the terms that tyme bigaue," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1480, p. 72.

"The King—may direct his precept—to the Schiref, or his deputis, chargeand thame to pass incontinent to the principal messuage of the saidis landis, and their to tak sasine thair of in his Hienes name, be deliverance of yeird and stane, as use is, and recognosce and retene the samin in his handis, as superiour thair of, to remane with him in propertie in all time cuming." Balfour's Pract., p. 482.

This has been for several centuries, although with some variations, a common mode of investiture among different European nations.

Sometimes it was merely per cespitem, or by giving a turf as part of the soil. In a very ancient record, contained in the Extracts from the old Register of St. Andrews, this symbol is mentioned as used in the time of the Pictish dominion. The account occurs in what is said of Regulus. But although the story with respect to the reliques of St. Andrew be viewed as a mere legend, there may be a reference to what was really transacted in the ninth century: and it is not probable, at any rate, that a custom would be introduced which was not known to be of great antiquity.

In memoriale datae libertatis rex Hungus cespitem arreptum, coram nobilibus Pictis, hominibus suis, usque ad altare S^ti Andreae detulit; et super illud cespitem eundem obtulit. V. Pinkert. Enq., i. 460. App.

This turf he brought, and laid on the altar of St.

Andrew, as part of the soil of Kilrymont, which he thus devoted as a perpetual alms-gift.

We find the same symbol used in France, A. 1206. Obtulit super altare S. Petri per cespitem, &c. Cespitem de terra donavit, et totam terram, &c. V. Du Cange, vo. Investitura, col. 1523.

Sometimes it was given per lapidem, or by a stone. Et ad opus Capituli cum quodam lapide investio, et in possessionem, vel quasi, induco. A. 1262, Ibid., col. 1532.

Du Cange enumerates a great variety of other symbols. Per herbam et terram, Per ramum et cespitem, Per baculum, Per fustem; by grass with the soil, by a turf with a branch in it, by a rod, a staff, a knife, a ring, a cup, &c., &c.

"The symbols," Erskine observes, "by which a feudal subject is expressed, are different, according to the different nature of the subjects, that may be made over by a superior. The symbols for land, are earth and stone; for mills, clap and happer; for fishings, net and coble; for parsonage-tithes, a sheaf of corn; for tenements of houses within borough, hasp and staple; for parsonages, a psalm-book, and the keys of the church; for jurisdictions, the book of the court, &c. Instit. B. ii. T. 3, sect. 36.

Throughout Hindostan, infestment is given by means of rice and water, taken from the land purchased, which the seller of the property delivers to the buyer. Some flowers are put into water: the seller pours the water out of the vessel, saying, "I give you the water of" such an estate; the buyer receives part of the water into his hand, which is held near his mouth, and drinks it. The heir must be present, as giving his consent to the transaction. The buyer puts two fanams into the water, before it is poured out, as a symbol of his making the purchase. These fanams, after the effusion of the water, are retained by the seller as the return made by the purchaser for the water bestowed, and thus as a proof of the completion of the bargain. V. HESP; also STAIT and SESING.

[SASSER-MEAT, s. Sausage, Shetl.]

SASTEING, s. [The sting or pole used in carrying a say or water-bucket. V. under SAY and STING.]

SASTER, s. A pudding composed of meal and minced meat, or of minced hearts and kidneys salted, put into a bag or tripe, Loth., Teviotd. Hence the Prov., "Ye are as stiff as a stappit saster," i.e., a crammed pudding.

This seems to have some affinity to Fr. saucisse, E. sausage.

SAT, s. A snare.

Y sain we nought no sat;
He douteth me bituene.

Sir Tristrem, p. 117.

"From saetinga, insidiae.—We have not discovered an ambush," Gl. But it more nearly resembles Su.-G. saett, sata, id.; saett-a, insidias struere.

[SAT, pret. Became, suited, fitted, Barbour, i. 394.]

SATE, s. "An omission, trespass, miscarriage, slip," Rudd.

Wele, quod tothir, wald thou mercy cry,
And mak amendis, I sall remit this falt,
Both vthir wayis that sate sall be full salt.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 450, 47.

Rudd. derives it from Fr. saut, a leap, jump, skip; saut-er, to skip over. Faire le saute, to become bankrupt, to flee the country for debt.

SATOURE, s. A transgressor, a trespasser.

Rycht so the sature, the false thief, I say,
With suete treason oft wynith thus his pray.
King's Quair, iv. 12.

Tytl. Edit.

According to this reading, it might seem allied to Fr. sauter, a leaper, q. one who overleaps proper bounds. V. SATE. Tytl. expl. it, "the lustful person." But Sibb. writes seator, Chron. S. P., i. 42. This may be from Fr. fautier, faulty; faut, fault.

SATHAN, s. The ancient mode of pronouncing the name Satan; still used by some old people, S.

"Thay teache be instinctiōne of Sathan, and contempt of God, that his kirk hes bene inuisibil." N. Burne's Disput., f. 184, b.

Perdition! Sathan! is that you?
I sink—am dizzy—candle blue!
Last Speech of Miser, Ramsay's Works, i. 311.

C. B. Sathan, an adversary; Satan.

To SATIFIE, SATISFICE, v. a. To satisfy, S.

"Our pretence is not to satisfie & delite the delicat earis of curius men, bot to establishe the conscience of sick as ar of mair sobir knowlege, and vnderstandyng nor we ar, geue thayr be ony." Kennedy of Crosraguell, Compend. Tractiue, p. 7.

"They fill corn sacks," S. Prov.; "spoken to children when they say they are not full; a word that the Scots cannot endure, but would rather [they should say] they are not satisfic'd, that is, satisfied." Kelly, p. 325.

[SATTERAL, adj.] Short-tempered and tart, Banffs.]

SATTERDAY, SATERDAY, s. Saturday, the last day of the week.

This day, in the calendar of superstition, has been reckoned unlucky.

"Certane craftis men—will nocht begin their warke on the Saterday, certane schipmen or marinars will nocht begin to sail on the Satterday, certane trauelars will nocht begin their iornay on the Satterday, quhilk is plane superstition, because that God Almychty made the Satterday as well as he made all other dayis of the wouke." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1551, Fol. 22, b.

A.-S. sæter-dæg, i.e., the day of Saturn. For the A.-S. called Saturn Seater; as they also gave him the name of Crodo. V. Verstegan, p. 84.

SETTERDAYIS SLOP. A gap or opening, which, according to law, ought to be left in cruives for catching salmon, in fresh waters, from Saturday after the time of Vespers, till Monday after sunrise.

"Thay that hes cruuis in fresche watters, that thay gar keip the lawis, anentis the Setterdayis slop." Acts Ja. I., 1424, c. 13, Edit. 1566.

"The water should be free, that na man sall take fisch in it, fra Saterday after the Euening song, vntill Munday after the sunne rising." Stat. Alex. II., c. 16. V. SLOP.

[To SATTLE, v. a. and n. To settle, to make or to become quiet by means of a beating or scolding, Banffs.: the local pron. of E. settle.]

[SATTLER, s.] Whatever brings a person to peace or silence, ibid.]

SATURNDAY, s. The same with Saterday.

"On the Saturnday ano sessionoun only fra nyne houris to tuell houris in the foir noone.—The haill penalteis to be payit for the Saturndayis absens, whair in thair is onlie ano sessionoun." Acts. Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 339.

In A.-S. Sætern-dæg, is used as well as Sæter-dæg.

It may be observed that Saturday is marked as an unlucky day in the calender of the superstitious. To fit on Saturday betokens a short term of residence in the place to which one removes. It is also deemed very unlucky to begin any piece of work on this day of the week, S. A.

SAUAGE, SAWAGE, adj. Brave, intrepid.

This term is used by Henry the Minstrel in a milder sense than that attached to it in our times.

Yong Wallace, fulfillit of hie curage,
In pryss of armys desirous and sauage;
Thi waslage may neur be forlorn.

Wallace, ii. 2, MS.

Here it may perhaps signify ardent, vehement in spirit. As Wallace was still deservedly a great favourite with the nation, we may perceive somewhat of this attachment in the manner in which the passage has been treated. Early editors, viewing the term savage as disrespectful to the guardian of Scottish liberty, have altered the verse; as in Edit. 1648.

Young Wallace, then fulfilled of hie courage,
In prise of arms desirous of vassalage, &c.

This forms part of the character of a worthy clerk.

Maistir Jhone Blayr was off in that message,
A worthy clerk, bath wyss and rycht sauage.

Ibid., v. 534.

I can scarcely think that the author used it for sage. Thus, however, it is rendered Edit. 1648.

A worthie clerk, both wise and als right sage.

SAUCH, SAUGH, s. A willow or sallow tree, S.; as the flowers of willows are here termed palms.

Saugh and sauif, A. Bor., willow.

"Salix caprea, Common Sallow, Anglis. Saugh, Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 607.

"There are still three considerable woods in the parish;—and consist of oak, alder, birch, saugh, and ash." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc., xv. 321.

The learned Dr. Walker mentions a variety of species, with their Scottish designations; although, I suspect, he has substituted the E. generic term for the tree instead of the S.

1. "Salix hermaphroditica, Linn. Scot. Black Clyde Willow." It is denominated from the place where it grows, "on the side of the Clyde in Crawford moor, at Black's Croft. 2. Salix malifolia; Scot. Apple-leaved Willow.—Angl. Goat broad-leaved Sallow. 3. Salix rubra, Scot. The Red Saugh. 4. Salix Evoninae. The Eron willow. Grows below Eron bridge, on the road from Moffat to Dumfries." Essays on Nat. Hist., p. 424, &c.

Sw. sach, salig, A.-S. salh, O. Fr. saulx, sahuc, Gael. seilach, Lat. salix. Thwaites views A.-S. sal, black, as the root. But this idea must be rejected, unless we can suppose, that this was also the origin of the Lat. name.

SAUCHEN, SAUCHIN, adj. 1. Belonging to the willow, Perthis.

The moon sparkles sweet on this clear-springing-fountain,
Sweet as it rows by this lang sauchen-tree.

Donald and Flora, p. 121.

2. Soft, not energetic, S. B.

Syne Francie Wincy steppit in,
A sauchin slivery slype.

Christmas B'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 124.

In Edit. 1805, slavery occurs instead of slivery.
Teut. saecht, molli, mitis, lentus.

[3. Of a sour, stubborn, disposition, dogged, Banffs.]

To SAUCHEN, v. a. To make supple or pliable, Roxb.

SAUCHIE, adj. Abounding with willows; as, "a sauchie brae; a sauchie bank," &c.; Clydes.

"An' whar [hae] ye been, dear dochter mine,

"For joy skimes frae your ee."

"Deep down in the sauchie glen o' Trows,

"Aneth the cashie wud."

Ballad, Edin. Mag. Oct. 1818, p. 323.

SAUCHEN-TOUP, s. A simpleton, one who is easily imposed on, Mearns; from Sauchen, q. pliable, as the willow, and Toup, a foolish fellow.

SAUGH-TREE, s. A willow, S.

At the ruins of Babylon.

Where wee dwelt in captiuitie,

When wee remembered on Syon,

Wee weeped all full sorrowfully,

On the sauch-trees our harpes wee hang,

When they required vs ane sang.

Psa. 137, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 105, 106.

[SAUGH-WAND, s. A willow wand, S.]

[SAUGH-WAN'-CREEL, s. A wicker basket, Gall. Encyc.]

SAUCHBARIAN, s. A species of alms-gift anciently belonging to ecclesiastics.

Habebunt et quartam partem obventionum que in communi conferuntur Kildeis, Clericis personis et servia, ab aliis qui ibidem sepulturas eligunt, et partem que eos contingit de communi elemosina que dicitur sauchbarian. Registr. Prior. Sti. Andr., p. 439.

The term is written in the same manner in this deed, as contained in the Chartulary of Aberdeen, p. 13. Macfarlane's MS., Fol 5, Orig.

[SAUCHIN, adj. Soft, &c. V. under SAUCH.]

SAUCHT, SAUGHT, part. pa. 1. Reconciled.

Quhen the King thus was with him saucht,
And gret lordschippis had him betauht,
He wroux sa wyse, and sa awysé,
That his land fyrst weil stablyt he.

Barbour, x. 300, MS.

Adoun he fel y fold,
That man of michel maught,
And cride;

—"Tristrem be we saught,
And have min londes wide."

Sir Tristrem, p. 163.

A-S. saecht, seht, id. Wurdon sachte, Erant reconciliati, Chron. Sax. A. 1077. This is the part. of sehtian, id., reconciliare, componere. Hence saechtlian, id., litem componere, which is far more probably the origin of E. settle, as used to denote the removal of variance or disturbance, than settle, a seat, referred to by Dr. Johns.

A-S. set-an, sett-an, also signifies, componere; sedare, pacare. Both this v. and seht-ian are radically the same with Isl. saecht-asl, reconciliari, amicitiam contrahere; whence samsaecht, Isl. saechtmal, a covenant. Syith and assyith are to be traced to the same fountain: as denoting the atonement made, or fine paid, for procuring reconciliation.

2. At ease, in peace, undisturbed.

Now lat vs change scheildis, sen we bene saucht
Grekis ensenyeis do we counterfete.

Doug. Virgil, 52, 6.

i.e., Since we are presently without disturbance, our enemies being at a distance.

A. Bor. saft, hearts ease; "to be at saft, to be easy and contented; also reconciled;" Grose. This is merely the S. word corr. in the E. pronunciation, in the same manner as Laugh, Laughter, &c.

Perhaps Su.-G. sackta, tranquillus, pacificus, may be viewed as rather allied to saetta, reconciliari, than to Goth. sef, tranquility, which Ihre considers as the root. Hence sackta, quietly, gently; sackta, to allay, to compose; sacktmogig, pacific. Osackit, inquietude, which nearly resembles S. saucht, is still used. Gael. sieghai, quiet, seems allied.

SAUCHT, SAUGHT, s. Ease, tranquility, S.

"S. Bor. To sit in saucht, to live in peace and quiet; and, to live in unsaucht, i.e., trouble;" Rudd.

For as her mind began to be at saught,
In her fair face ilk sweet and bonny draught
Come to themselves. —

Ross's Helenore, p. 32.

"Better saught wi' little aught, nor care wi' mony a cow;" S. Prov.; Ferguson, p. 8; i.e., peace, with little in one's possession.

A-S. sahte, seht, peace, friendship, reconciliation; Isl. saett, id. V. the part. Teut. saecht, tranquillus, pacificus; saecht-en, saechtigh-en, mitigare, lenire. Gael. sogh, prosperity, ease, pleasure; sioth, peace, quietness.

SAUCHNING, SAUGHTENING, SAWCHNYNG, s.

1. Reconciliation, agreement, pacification.

Made was the saughtening,
And alle forgerve bidene.

Sir Tristrem, p. 104.

Nor I beleif na freyndschip in thy handis,
Nane sic trety of sauchning nor cunnandis
My son Lausus band vp with the perfray.

Doug. Virgil, 353, 17.

2. A state of quietness or rest.

Wpon him self mekill trawail he tais;
The gret battail compleit apon him gais;
In the forbreyt he retornyt full oft:
Quham euir he hyt thair sauchnyng was wnsoft.

Saughtning, Edit. 1643.

3. Agreement, settlement of terms, Selkirks.

"Bot scho skyrit to knuife lownly or siccarlye on thilke sauchning." Hogg's Winter Tales, ii. 41.

Literally, their rest was not soft; a contradictory phrase, meant more emphatically to express that the persons referred to had a hard fall, or a severe fate.

SAUCHTER, SAWSCHIR, s. Prob., a Saltier, or St. Andrew's Cross.

"Marche stanis markit with the sauchter."—"Ane gret grey stane with ane sawschir, abow," i.e., above. Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

Gael. seachter denotes the number seven. But more probably a corr. of Fr. sautoir, Saltier of St. Andrew's cross.

SAUDALL, s. A companion, a mate; Lat. sodal-is.

—The bird into the breir,
Dois cry vpon his saudall deir,
With mony schirm and schattir.
Burel's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii.

To SAUF, v. a. To save.

I sall thi kyndnes quyte,
And *sau*f thyn honoure.
Gawan and Gol., iv. 8.
Fr. *sau*f, safe; Lat. salv-o.

SAUF, TO SAUF, prep. Saving, except.

In-tyl Albyone be-lywe
He come, quhare nowthire man na wywe
To *sau*f geawntis thare he fand.
Wyntown, iii. 3. 59.

SAUFAND, SAULFFING, prep. Except, q. saving.

"That this parliament be dissoluit now, *sau*fand that the persounis that salbe nemmyt—sall haue provere quhill this Setterday cum viij daies to avise & conclud vppone the materis abone writtin." Parl. Ja. III., 1478, Ed. 1814, p. 122.

—"The personis—remittit and dischargeit for all crymes, &c. saulffing in sa fer as the said remissioun and dischaarge mycht extend to the murtheris of our saidis dearest gudeschir and uncle," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1579, Ed. 1814, p. 160.

[SAUFLY, adv. Safely, Barbour, x. 484.]

[SAUFTE, SAVITE, s. Safety, Barbour, iii. 183, iv. 536.]

SAUFE, s. Salve, ointment.

—Pretius inuntment, saufe, or fragrant pome.—
Doug. Virgil, 401. 41.

SAUGHE, s. The sum given in name of salvage; an old term used in the Border Laws.

"That deliverance shall only be made for the single value of all attemptats committed before the 10th day of September past, and that deliverance shall be made of Double and Saughe of all attemptats committed since the said 20th day of September, according to the articles and agreement heretofore taken for both the realms." Indent, Lord Dacre and the Master of Maxwell, Keith's Hist. App., p. 95.

The meaning of double and saughe is shown by the phrase used by Archbp. Spotiswood, which is certainly synonymous. "That—such as shall be found to be robbed of their goods, be redressed to the double, and with *sau*fer, according to law of marches." V. SAFER.

Saughe may be allied to Teut. saligh-en, salvere, serve; saligh, beatus, felix. I need scarcely say that in S. l is very often changed into u.

SAUGHIRAN, part. adj. "Lifeless, inactive, sauntering;" Gl. Picken, Ayr.

Ir. Gael. seachran-am, to go astray, seachranach, erroneous, straying; C.D. sejur-a, to be idle, to trifle, sejurga, an idler.

[SAUGH-TREE, s. The willow, S. V. SAUCH.]

SAUL, SAWL, s. 1. The soul, S.

I am commandit, said scho, and I man
Vndo this hare to Pluto consecrate,
And lous the saul out of this mortall state.
Doug. Virgil, 124. 50.

A.-S. *saw*l, sawel, Isl. *sna*l, Moes.-G. saiwala, id. Alem. sele, *se*la, seulu, anima; Su.-G. *sia*el, Isl. *sia*l, sala; Dan. *sia*l; Germ. seele; Belg. siele; A.-S. *saw*ul, *saw*l, id.; sawle, Chaucer, Yorksh.

In all the examples given by Lye, A.-S. *saw*l appears only as signifying the spirit, or intellectual part of man, as contradistinguished from the body. But it also occurs as denoting animal life, as in Matt. vi. 25. "Is not, *seo saw*l sele thonne mete, the life more than meat?"

Wachter observes, on Germ. seele, that it signifies both animal life, and the soul as including all its affections and propensities; Sensus ab anima ad animum prolatus. From Schilter, however, there is no evidence of Alem. sele having been used in the inferior sense.

The Moes.-G. term, saiwala, is undoubtedly the most ancient. It occurs in both significations; as denoting animal life in the passage quoted above, according to the version of Ulphilas; "Niu saiwala mais ist fodeinai; Is not the life more than meat?" In other places, it denotes the soul strictly so called; "Mikileid saiwala meina Fan; My soul doth magnify my Lord;" Luke, i. 46. Also in Joh. xii. 27. "Now is, saiwala meina gadrobnoda, my soul troubled."

Junius, in his Gothic Glossary, supposes that the term saiwala is formed from śaw, vivo, and A.-S. wala, fons, as signifying that the soul is the fountain of life. But an etymon is always extremely doubtful, when the term is supposed to be formed from two words in different languages; or in languages which, although they may have been originally the same, have been long disjoined from each other.

Lye throws out a conjecture, that Moes.-G. saiwala, or, as he supposes it to have been pronounced, saiw-ala, may be connected with Isl. *se*fe, mens, animus, also vita; as Moes.-G. ai had the same sound with Isl. e long. He does not pretend to give the sense of ala; leaving it uncertain whether it was a mere termination, or some significative term. This learned writer had not observed what might have seemed to strengthen his etymological conjecture, that A.-S. *se*fa, has precisely the same signification with Isl. *se*fe,—intelligentia, mens, animus; Lye.

2. Mettle, spirit; as, "He has na hauf a saul," he has no spirit in him, S.

[3. A vulgar oath; as, "By my saul," Mearns.]

SAULES, adj. Dastardly, mean, S. q. without soul. V. COCKLAN.

SAULL PREIST. V. COMMONTIE, s. sense 1.

SAULL-PROW, s. Spiritual profit, benefit of the soul.

V. Prow.

[SAUL, SALD, part. pa. Sold, Mearns.]

SAULFFING, prep. Except. V. SAUF-AND.

SAULLIE, SAULIE, s. A hired mourner, one who walks in procession before a funeral company, S.

"That no deule weedes be given to Heralds, Trumpeters, or Saulies, except by the Earls and Lords, and their wives. And the number of the Saulies to be according to the number of the deule weedes, under the paine of ane thousand pounds." Acts Ja. VI., 1621, c. 25, s. 12. Murray.

How come mankind, when lacking woe,
In Saulie's face their hearts to show!

Ferguson's Poems, p. 98.

The name might seem to have had its rise from the deule weedes appropriated to them, from A.-S. sal, black. But if we should suppose, that, in the time of Popery, these mourners, during their procession, chaunted prayers, the name might be supposed to originate from their frequent repetition of Salve Regina.

[SAUNT, s. A saint, Orkn.]

To SAUR, v. n. To savour. V. SAWER.

Now, mony a rantin feast, weel stor'd,
*Saur*s sweetly on the rustic board.

Picken's Poems, l. 79.

SAUR, SAURIN, s. The smallest quantity or portion of any thing, Upp. Clydes.; probably q. a savour, as we speak of a tasting in the same sense.

SAURLESS, adj. Insipid, tasteless, Moray.
V. SARELESS.

SAUT, s. Salt, S.

"Before ye chuse a friend, eat a peck of saut wi' him;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 18; i.e., be thoroughly acquainted with him.

This pronunciation is pretty general in the north of E., as in Westmorel. Yorks.; also in Lancash. V. GL. Teut. saut, sout, sal; Kilian.

[SANT, adj. Severe, troublesome, costly, S.
V. SALT, adj.]

To SAUT, v. a. 1. To salt, to put in pickle, S.

2. To snib, to put down, to check, Aberd.; q. to make one feel as if laid in pickle, or experience a sensation similar to that excited by salt when applied to a sore.

3. To heighten in price; as, "I'll saut it for you," I will make you pay dear for it, S.
V. SALT, adj.

[4. To punish, to take revenge; as, "I'll saut him for that trick yet," Banffs.]

[SAUT-BACKET, s. A salt-box, Clydes., Banffs.]

[SAUT-FAT, s. A salt cellar, S.]

[SAUT TO ane's KAIL. 1. No to hae saut to ane's kail, to be in great poverty, S.]

"They mak sic a din about saving, saving, that I think in a wee while they'll no leave him saut to his kail." Petticoat Tales, ii. 164.

[2. No to mak saut to ane's kail, to make almost nothing by one's work or professional exertion, S.]

SAUT ON ane's TAIL. To cast or lay saut on ane's tail, to get hold of one, S.

"You will ne'er cast saut on his tail," S. Prov.

"That is, he is clean escap'd;" Kelly, p. 380.

"His intelligence is so good, that were you coming near him with soldiers, or constables, or the like, I shall answer for it, you will never lay saut on his tail." Redgauntlet, ii. 267.

This may merely signify that one person has got beyond the reach of another. But it is not improbable, from the great use made of salt in religious ceremonies, that the phrase refers to some superstition, supposed perhaps to prevent or counteract magical influence, the memory of which is now lost.

SAUTER, s. A saltier in heraldry.

Suppriset with a surget, he beris hit in sable,
With a sauter engreled, of silver full shene.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., l. 24.

SAUTIE, s. The name given to a species of flounder, Edin. and Mearns. V. SALTIE.

[SAUVETIE, s. Safety. V. under SAUF.]

SAUYN, s. An errat. for Saysin, seizin.

—Quhiddir fleis thou now, Enee!

Leif neuer, for schame, thus desolate and waist

Thy new alliance promist the in haist,

Of Lavinia the spousing chalmers at hand,

And al his ilk regioun and this land, —

My richt hand sal the sauyn gif, quod he.

Doug. Virgil, 342, 10.

"For saving, and that for sare;" Rudd. But perhaps this is an error for sasyn, i.e., seizin, corporal possession.

In consequence of examining the MSS., I find that, although saving is the word in that used by Rudd., in the oldest MS. it is saysin.

SAVENDLE, adj. Strong, sufficient, secure; as, in giving orders about any work, it is commonly said, "Mak it very savendle;" Roxb.

From the same origin perhaps with Savendie. But V. SOLVENDIE.

SAVIE, s. Knowledge, experience, sagacity, Loth. Fr. savoir, id.

SAVIE, adj. Possessing sagacity or experience, ib.

SAVENDIE, s. Understanding, sagacity, experience, Loth., Ayrs.

This word more nearly resembles Fr. savant, skilful, learned, of great experience.

SAVING-TREE, s. The sabine, a plant, S.

Saving-tree—is said to kill the foetus in the womb.

—It takes its name from this,—as being able to save a young woman from shame.—This is what makes gardeners and others wary about giving it to females." Gall. Encycl.

In E., however, it is denominated Savin, as well as Sabine: and the former seems the most ancient form of the word, as corresponding with A.-S. safine, Teut. sarcbloom, Germ. sevenbaum, Su.-G. sæfienboom, id. This form of the word is also confirmed by Prompt. Parv. "Sauyent tre. Sabina." They are all supposed to originate from Lat. sabina-a. This is written L. B. savin-a. In Fr. both sabine and savinier are used.

The ancient Romans seem to have ascribed virtues to this plant somewhat of a similar kind. Of the Savine Pliny says: "It driveth back and keepeth down all swelling impostumes. Applied outwardly, it draweth dead infants out of the bodie; but no lesse it worketh, being but received by way of perfume." Hist. B. xxiv. c. 11.

- * SAVOUR, s. A term used in S., especially with respect to preaching the gospel, equivalent to Fr. onction.

The E. language has no word exactly corresponding. Hence onction has of late been adopted from the Fr. Savour occurs in 2 Cor., ii. 15, in a sense very nearly the same. What is there said in relation to God, is, in our use of the term, transferred to those who know the power of divine truth. Hence,

- * SAVOURY, adj. Possessing onction, S. V. SAIRLES, which is used in a sense directly opposite.

- SAW, SAWE, s. 1. A word, saying; often applied to a proverb; an old saw, S. O.E. id.

In fragil flesche your febill sode is saw; —
Nurist with sleuth, and mony vnsenly saw.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 93. 15.

Sé that thy saw be sicker as thy seill.

Stewart, Bannatyne Poems, p. 149.

A.-S. saga, sage, dictum, dictio, from sag-an, dicere.

2. A discourse, an address.

All thai consentyt till that saw.
And than in till a litill thraw,
Thair iiii bataillis ordanyt thai.

Barbour, xi. 302, MS.

This term is used to denote a pretty long speech made by Robert Bruce to his army, on the day preceding the battle of Bannockburn.

3. Language in general.

Allsua set I myne intent,
Fra that I sene had storis sere,
In Cronnyklys, qnare thai wrytten were,
Thare matere in-tyl fowrne to draw,
Off Latyne in-tyl Ynglys sawe.

Wynatoun, i. Prol. 30.

4. A sentence, a legal decision; or perhaps rather a testimony given in a court of law.

Se meikle tressone, sa mony partial sawis,
Sa littill resone, to help the common cawis,
That all the lawis ar not set by ane bene;
Sic feniet flawis, sa mony wasit wawis,
Within this land was never hard nor sene.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 43.

"So many partial sentences or decrees;" Ibid., p. 252, N. But it seems doubtful, whether this phrase be not rather meant to denote the testimony given by witnesses before judgment is passed. Thus partial sawis may signify the evidence of witnesses who have sworn falsely; or who have received what our law calls partial counsel, as having been instructed what to say.

The cognates of this word are used in a forensic sense in various Northern languages. Dan. sag, an action, a suit, a process. Fœre sag moden, to see one at law. A.-S. sage, a witness, saga, a testimony. Ilu fela sayena; How many things they witness; Quam multa testimonia; Matt. xxvii. 13. Germ. sag-en, to give evidence in a court of law, to confess, to denounce; sage-man, an informer, an accuser; aussage, a judicial confession, the deposition of witnesses; Su.-G. sægnarting, the place of judgment, in which sentence is pronounced, or rather where witnesses are heard; Leg. Westro-Goth. ap. Ihre, vo. Sæga.

5. An oracle, a prediction of a deity; also, a foreboding, a presage.

Thus Juno says;

Bot now approachis to that innocent knycht
Ane fereful end, he sal to dede be dycht;
Or than my sawis ar voyde of verite.

Doug. Virgil, 341, 16.

And in relation to Venus it is said—

—All other thingis thou knawis
Is now conforme vnto thy moderis sawis.

Ibid., 31, 28.

A.-S. sage, "praesagium, a divining, a foretelling;" Somner. From the resemblance, one might almost suppose that the Romans had borrowed their name for a wise woman, or witch, saga, from the Goths.

This word, especially as denoting a proverb, an old saying, evidently proves its near relation to Isl. Su.-G. Alem. Franc. saga, a narration, a history, whether true or false; the name given by the Icelanders to all the ancient annals of their country, and history of their ancestors, whether transmitted by tradition, or in the rude songs composed in early ages. A.-S. sage also signifies a tale; whence sage-man, sag-man, "delator, the tale-teller, the talesman;" Teut. sæghe, fabula, narratio; Moes.-G. insagt, id. V. SAYARE.

- To SAW, v. a. To sow, in its various senses, S.; [part. pr. sawin, used also as a s.]

—Armouris, swerdis, speris, and scheildis
I sal do saw and strow ouer al the feildis.

Doug. Virgil, 227, 10.

Saw is also used for the part. pa.

In fragil flesche your febill sode is saw.

Ibid., Prol. 93. 13

Moes.-G. sai-an, A.-S. saw-an, Su.-G. Isl. saa, Alem. sau-en, Germ. sa-en, Dan. saa-e, id.

- To SAW out, v. n. To sow for grass, S.

"The sweepings of the hayloft, or gleanings from the barn floor, and hay stack, half ripened, ill cleaned, and often musty, with a few pounds of clover seeds, or perhaps without any other seeds whatever; thereby scattered over the soil, forms frequently what is termed sawing out." Agr. Surv. Galloway, p. 151.

- SAWER, SAWOUR. 1. A sower, S. Belg. zaaijer, id.

2. A propagator, metaph. used.

—"But als the publict quietnes hes bein brokin, and divers troublis hes interuenit; out of quihill, as Almighty God hes deliverit and preseruit hir Majestie from tyme to tyme, even sa hes he manifested hir Hienes meaning and intention to hir loving subjectis, and the sawours of sic seditious rumours to appeir, as thai wer indeed, calumniatoris and untrew spekaris." Keith's Hist., p. 572.

- To SAW, v. a. Either for save; or say, in the sense of address.

—Amyd the ful mischeuous flicht,
The grete slaughter and routis takand the flicht,
On horsbak in this Tarehone baldly draw,
Willful his pepil to support and saw.

Doug. Virgil, 391, 4.

SAW, s. A salve, an ointment, S.

"Ye hae a saw for ilka sair," S. Prov. Kelly gives it quite in an E. form; "You have a salve for every sore;" "Spoken to those who are ready at their answers, apologies, and excuses." P. 367.

"Saw, salve, plaister;" Gl. Picken.

SAWCER, s. A maker or vender of sauces.

"In a case betwixt Jo. Scot, the Sawcer of Edinburgh, and one Hog, found that the principal lands being disposed by a base infetment, and the acquirer of the lands being in possession thirty or forty years, and thereafter being evicted from him by a decreet; the said acquirer has recourse to the warrandice," &c. A. 1666. Fount. Suppl. Dec. ii. p. 424.

Fr. sawcier, id. Celu qui compose ou qui vend des sauces. Dict. Trev. The term, as Roquefort remarks, was originally applied to an officer in the king's kitchen, who had charge of the sauces and apiceries, A. 1317. Sawcier is used as synon. with Epicier; L. B. Salsarius. V. Du Cange.

It is a curious trait of the more simple mode of living in the capital, even in Charles II.'s time, that it could give sustenance only to one maker of sauces, who is therefore distinctively designed the Sawcer of Edinburgh.

SAWCHYNG, Wallace, x. 332. Perth Edit. V. SAUCHNING.

SAXON SHILLING. A shilling of British money, Highlands of S.

"A shilling Sterling is by the Highlanders termed a Saxon Shilling." Saxon and Gael, i. 3.
Gael. sgillin Shasgunach, English shilling, Shaw; whereas sgillin Albanach, [i.e., a shilling Scots] signifies a penny.

*To SAY, v. n. I yow say, I tell you; said me, told me, said to me.

—The toun, as I yow say,
Wes throw gret force of fechtung tane.

Barbour, xiv. 224, MS.

This is an A.-S. idiom. Sege me, dic mihi; Seegath me, dicite mihi; me being the dative as well as the accusative case in A.-S.

To SAY awa, v. n. [1. To ask a blessing; as, when the family are seated and the meal ready, the wife says "Say awa, guid-man," Perth., Aberd.]

2. To fall to, to begin to eat; a vulgar invitation where no blessing is asked; as, "Say awa, noo," ibid.] W. Beattie's Tales.

[SAY-AWA, s. Loquacity, "gift of the gab," Banffs.]

SAYARE, s. An author, a poetical writer.

The sayare eik suld wele consider this,
His mater, and quham to it intillit is.

Doug. Virgil, ProL 271, 34.

He is here speaking of the Heroic style of writing.

For ethar is, quha list syt down and mote,
Ane vther sayaris faltis to spye and note,
Than but offence or falt thame self to wryte.

Ibid. Exclam., 485, 42.

Either immediately from A.-S. saeg-an, narrare, or from sage, narratio; whence sage-man, delator. V. SAW, s.

Nearly allied both to sayare and sage-man, is O. E. segger. R. of Brunne, speaking of his translation of Langtoft's Chronicle, says:—

I mad nocht for no disours,
Ne for no seggers no harpours,
Bot for the luf of symple men,
That strange Inglis can not ken.

ProL xcix.

Hearne renders the term, "sayers, historians." R. Brunne had undoubtedly the minstrels, the hereditary chroniclers of the nation, especially in his eye. The only sense given of disours, in the Gl., is discourse. But it evidently signifies rehearsers, tale-tellers; Fr. discur, a speaker. As a poet was called a Makare, because he composed, he might be designed a Sayare, or Segger, because he recited his compositions; unless the name was from saga, sage, as descriptive of the general character of these works, which were merely rhetorical histories or narrations.

SAYN, s. Saying.

Thre yer as thus the rewm stud in gud pess:
Off this sayn my wordis for to cess,
And forthyr furth off Wallace I will tell,
In till his lyff quhat awentur yeit fell.

Wallace, viii. 1612, MS.

Of this saying me worthis for to cease.

Edit. 1648.

Me worthis, i.e., it is necessary for me, may have been the reading of some other MS.

Sayn, however, may possibly denote felicity; in reference to peace; Germ. seyen, benedictio.

SAYAR, s. One who assays metals.

"The said James sall haue fredome and priuilege to prent golde and siluire with the kingis irlis, as he did of before, he gevand to the kingis grace fre of ilk punde wecht of cunyeit money xx schillingis, except the warlanis fe, the sayaris fe, and the sykaris [r. synkaris] of the irlis fee to be paid of the kingus pursas." Acts Ja. V., 1526, Ed. 1814, p. 317.

SAY, SAYE, s. 1. A bucket, or vessel for carrying water, Inverness, Orkn.; a milk-pail, Dumfr.

"Of the samin wyse thair be ordanit thre or foure says to the commoun vse, and vi. or may cleikis of irlin, to draw downe timber and ruitis that ar fyrir." Acts Ja. I., 1426, c. 83, Edit. 1566. Saye, c. 63. Murray.

This term occurs in Aberd. Reg., and in such connection as to throw some light on that obscure term sasteing, Wallace, ii. 41.

—"Ane cumycone, ane bukat, say & say stynng," &c. A. 539, V. 16.

The sasteing is therefore a pole used for carrying the say, or larger water-vessel, perhaps a cask, on the shoulders.

The soicens-say is supported by two bars laid across the tub, or permanently attached to the say itself, Aberd.

This term occurs in the National Records.

A. Bor. "so or soa, a tub with two ears to carry on a stang;" Ray's Coll., p. 66. V. STRING, STENG.

Su.-G. saa, id. situla, vas, quo aqua portatur; Isl. saa, majusculum quodvis vas, Ol. Lex. Run. The Fr. use seau, in the same sense, which is most probably from the Goth. Wachter observes, that, with the ancient Germans, sao denoted water; hence Ihre supposes that saa, as signifying a vessel for holding water, naturally derives its origin.

SAY, adv. So; S. sae.

"It was nocht posselie to thaim to haif comperit & to haif instructit and informit thair procuratouris in say lie & wychtie [weighty] causis concerning thair lif, landis, heretage, and gudis." Acts Mary, 1542, E. 1814, p. 416.

[SAYN, s. Saying. V. under SAY, v.]

SAYND, s. Message or messenger.

For his saynd till thaim send he.
And that in hy assemblyt then,
Passand, I weyne, a thousand men.

Barbour, v. 196, MS.

"Saind is a messenger or message;" Clav. Yorka.
A.-S. sand, missio, legatio, also legatus. Send, is used so as to signify an embassy, S. B. Sonde, O. E.

The fond hue here sande
Adronque by the stronde
That shulde Horne brynge.

Geste King Horn, Ritson's E. M. R., ii. 132.

If he wild mak a werk of fyne,
Send your sand to seke Merlyne.

R. Bruane, App. to Pref., clxxxix.

SAYNDIS-MAN, s. A messenger.

I rede ane sayndis man ye send to yone senyeour.
Gawan and Gol., ii. 2.

Mr. Pinkerton leaves the first part of the word sayndis, as occurring here, for explanation. But it evidently ought to be printed sayndisman, from A.-S.
sandes-man, nuntius; from sandes the genit. of sand, a message, and man, i.e., one employed to deliver a message, Isl. sandeman, id. ap. lhre, vo. Saenad.
V. SAYND.

[SAYR, adj. and s. Sore, &c. V. SAIR.]

[SAYR, adv. Sorely, Barbour, i. 440.]

SC. Words not found with this orthography, may be looked for under Sk.

• SCAB, s. 1. The itch, as it appears in the human body, S.

2. Metaph., any gross offence, synon. out-breaking.

"It is only God's guardle, euen his sauing grace, which hath kept my life from scab & scandale." Z.
Boyd's Last Battell, p. 989.

To SCABBLE, v. n. To scold, Buchan.

Wae wags ye, chiel, whare hae ye been,
Ye've gottin sic a drabblin?
To gar me rise in sic a teen
An' pit my tongue a-scabblin.

Tarras's Poems, p. 69.

If not corr. from E. to equable, formed, like the E.
v. itself, from the more primitive Su.-G. karbbt-a, Mod.
Sax. kabbel-a, rixari, altercari, by prefixing the sibil-ation.

SCABYNIS, s. pl. Assessors; or analogous to Councillors in Scottish burghs.

"Anent the supplicacioun gevin in before the lordis of artiklis & of consale, in the behalf of the burrow masteris [burgomasters], scabyne, and con-sale of the toune of Middleburghe in Zeland, tuich-ande the residence and staple of the merchandis and merchandise of this realme of Scotlande to be haldin at the said toune of Middleburghe for certaineris tocum," &c. Acts Ja. V., 1536, Ed. 1814, p. 305.

L. B. Scabini, Scabinii, sic olim dicti iudicum As-sessores, atque adeo Comitum, qui vices iudicum, obstant. The term occurs in the Capitularia of Charlemagne, A. 805, and 813. Postquam Scabini cum (latronem) dijudicaverint, non est licentia Comitibus vel
Vicariis ei vitam concedere. Du Cange.

SCAD, s. 1. Any colour slightly or obliquely seen, properly, by reflexion; or the reflexion itself, S.

"Your cross is of the colour of heaven;—and that dye and colour dow abide fair weather, and neither be stained nor cast the colour; yea it reflects a scad, like the cross of Christ." Rutherford's Lett. P. ii. ep. 23.

But whan, owre Calton-hill, the sun
Comes glimmeran like the twilight,
The wights, dispos'd for e'ning-sun,
Flee frae the scad o' daylight.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 53.

2. A gleam, S. O.

"We came to the eastern side of Loudoun-hill, the trysted place, shortly after the first scad of the dawn."
R. Gilhaize, iii. 93.

"Scades o' light, flares or flashes of light;" Gall.
Encycl.

3. Scad is also used to denote the variegated scum of mineral water, S.

Evidently the same with E. shade, as a shade of blue, green, &c.; A.-S. scade, Germ. schutte, umbra.
Hence, as Wachter observes, schetz, E. sketch of a thing, because it is shadowed out. Johnson derives the E.
word from Lat. schedula.

To SCAD, SKAD, v. a. 1. To scald, S. Fr.
eschaud-er, id.

2. To heat by fire, without allowing the liquid absolutely to boil, S. V. SKAUDE, v.

3. To heat in any way; to boil, Roxb.

[4. To disgust, to fret, Banffs.

5. To soil by frequent use, ibid.]

SCAD, SKAUDE, s. 1. A scald, a burn caused by hot liquor, S.

[2. A disgust, a vulgar name for tea, S.; vexation, Banffs.]

[SCADDED, SCADDIT, adj. 1. Scalded, parboiled, S.

2. Vexed, disgusted, fretted, Banffs.

3. Soiled, faded, ibid.]

SCADDED BEER, or ALE. A drink made of hot beer or ale, with the addition of a little meal, nearly of the consistence of gruel, Roxb.

SCADDED WHEY. A dish used in the houses of farmers, made by boiling whey on a slow fire, by which a great part of it coagulates into a curdy substance, ibid. Synon. Flee-tins, also Flot-whey.

SCADDEM, s. A bad smith; thus, "He's naething but a scaddem," Teviotd.

This seems merely a cant term, as if denoting that he could do no more in the way of his profession than to scald, instead of perfecting any work; like Burnein,
q. v.

SCADLIPS, s. Broth, containing a very small portion of barley, S.B., and on this account more apt to burn the mouth; q.
scald lips.

There will be sheep-heads, and a haggize,
And scaddips to sup till ye're fow.
Ritson's S. Songs, l. 211.

SCADDAW, SCADDOW, s. A shadow, Ettr.
For., Lanarks.

"The moon was hingin' o'er the dark brows of Hopertooty, and the lang black scaddaws had an eiry look." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 140.

The eerie scaddaws o' the aiks
Fell black ower the skinklan grun'.
Old Ballad, Edin. Mag., Sept. 1818, p. 153.

A.-S. scadu, scaduwe, id.

SCADLING, s. A kind of dressed skin;
the same with Scalding, q. v.

"Small wnwollit skynnis sic as hoyg schorlingis, scadlingis, and fuitfail." Aberd. Reg., A. 1538. V. 16.

SCAFF, SKAFFIN, s. 1. A term used by the vulgar to denote provisions, food of any kind. Fine scaff, excellent provision, S.

We'll ripe the pouch, and see what scaff is there;
I wat, when I came out, it wasna bare.

Ross's Helenore, p. 74.

—Scaff and raff ye ay sall ha!

Jamieson's Popular Ball., ii. 363.

2. Expl. "merriment, diversion," Sibb. Gl.

Sibb. conjectures that it originally signified feasting.
V. next word.

To SCAFF, v. a. To sponge, to collect by dishonourable means. V. SKAFF.

"They scaffed throche all Scotland, oppressand the leall men als weill as the theiff, for their particular commoditie." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 512.

"Ordanis"—that thar be nae "bygging of mair vittail nor sustenis thaim self, and topping of the sam-en, scaffyng thair nythbouris." Aberd. Reg., xvi. c. 15.

SCAFFAR, s. A parasite.

"He commandit all idill pepil, as juglaris, menstralis, bardis, & scaffaris, othir to pas out of the realme, or ellis to fynd sum craft to wyn thair leiffyng." Bellend.
Cron. B. ix. c. 18. Mimos, histriones, bardos, parasitos, Boeth.

Elsewhere this is connected with scetheouris or flatterers.

"He banist all tauernaris, drunkartis, scaffaris & vane scetheouris, out of his hous." Ibid., B. xi. c. 7.
Adulatores parasitosque, Boeth.

Sa.-G. skaffare, Dan. skaffer, Teut. schaffer, one who provides food for others, a steward, a clerk of the kitchen; L.B. skapwardus, from Su.-G. skap, provision, and warda, to keep. Alem. scepf-an, Germ. schaff-en, procurare; Belg. schaff-en, to dress victuals; whence schaftyd, the time of taking any meal.

The transition, to the sense in which it is here used, is easy, as denoting one who makes court to others for the sake of his belly; corresponding to E. smell-feast, Belg. pantikker, Gr. rapasitos, from rapa
and erw, frumentum.

SCAFFERIE, s. Extortion. V. SKAFRIE.

[SCAFFATIS, s. pl. Scaffolds, Barbour, xvii. 343: scaffating, scaffolding, Accts.
L. H. Treasurer, i. 389, Dickson.]

SCAFFIE, adj. A term applied to a smart but transient shower, S. O.

"Scaffie showers, showers which soon blow by."—
'A caul' scaff o' a shower,' a pretty severe shower;"
Gall. Encycl. This is synon. with SKIFT, q. v.

SCAFF-RAFF, SCAFF and RAFF, s. Refuse; the same with Riff-raff, South of S.
Expl. "rabble," Gl. Antiquary. E. tag-rag and bob-tail.

"If you and I were at the Withershins' Latch, wi' ilka ane a gude oak supple in his hand, we wald not turn back, no for half a dozen o' yon scaff-raff." Guy
Mannering, ii. 51.

—"And sitting there birling,—wi' a' the scaff and raff o' the water-side." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 104.

Su.-G. skaf denotes a mere rag, any thing as it were shaved off; raff-a, to snatch any thing away, to carry off quickly. But perhaps rather from S. scaff, provision, and A.-S. reaf-ian, rapere, q. those who forcibly carry off the food of others.

To SCAG, v. a. To render putrid by exposure, S. B.

"Scag, to have fish spoiled in the sun or air;" Gl.
Surv. Moray. Scaggit, part. pa.: as, "a scaggit had-die," a haddock too long kept.

Isl. skack-a, iniquare? Or Gael. sgag-a, to split, to shrink.

[SCAG, s. Putrid fish, Banffs.]

[To SCAIGH, v. a. To obtain by wiles or mean ways, S. V. SKAIGH.]

SCAIL, v. and s. V. SKAIL.

SCAIL, s. A sort of tub; or perhaps used for a basket.

Her maidens brought me forth a scail,
Of fine main bread and fowls hail;
With bottles full of finest wine.

Sir Egeir, p. 13.

Skail still signifies a tub; q. v.

To SCAILIE, v. n. To have a squint look.
V. SKELLIE.

SCAIRTH, adj. Scarce.

—"That diuerss and sindrie persones—heas wait all —indirect meanis in slaying of the saidis wyld foulle and bestiall, quhairby this countrey, being sa plentifullie furnessit of befoir, is becum altogidder scairth of sic wairis." Acts Ja. VI., 1600, Ed. 1814, p. 236.
Scarce, Ed. 1597.

Whether the term was ever commonly used in this form I know not; but it nearly resembles Su.-G.
skard-a, imminuere, Isl. skeril-a, comminuere, defic-ere; skeril-r, also skert-r, diminutio; Dan. skaar, id.

SCALBERT, s. "A low-lifed, scabby-mind- ed individual;" Gall. Encycl.

Perhaps q. scabbert; Teut. schabbe, scabies, and aeril, intoles. In Isl. ber-skallot, signifies bald; from ber, nudus, and skalle, cranium.

SCALD, SCAUL, s. 1. A scold; applied to a person, S.

2. The act of scolding, S. V. SCOLD.

[SCALDER, s. The Jellyfish, Banffs.]

SCALDING, SKALDING, s. A species of dressed skin formerly exported from Scotland.

"Skynniss vnderwrittin callit in the vulgar tounge scorlingis, scaldingis," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1592.

"Flutfalls and scaldings ilk thousand," &c. Acts Cha. II., Ed. 1814, VII., p. 253. Scaldings, Rates, A. 1670, p. 75. V. SCORLING.

Qu. if as having the wool taken off by scalding?

SCALDRICKS, s. pl. Wild mustard, Loth.; skellies, synon.

"The long-continued use of the town dung has filled the soil full of every kind of annual weeds, particularly bird seed, or wild mustard, called here scaldricks." P. Cramond, Loth. Statist. Acc., i. 217. V. SKELLOCH.

To SCALE, v. a. To separate, to part, &c. V. SKAIL.

SCALING, s. Act of dispersion. V. under SKAIL, v.

SCALE-STAIRS, s. pl. Straight flights of steps, as opposed to a stair of a spiral form, S.

"A turnpike stair is—a stair of which the steps are built in a spiral form,—in opposition to straight flights of steps, which are called scale stairs." Arnot's Hist. Edin., p. 246, N.

Fr. escalier, a staircase; a winding stair.

SCALKT, pret. v. Bedaubed.

He scalkt him fowlar than a faul;
He said he was ane lichelus bul,
That croynd even day and nicht.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 360.

The term seems to signify, bedaubed; q., he so bearded him with filth, that he made a more ridiculous appearance than a fool with his motley coat. Thus it is the same with skait, bedaubed, S. V. SKAIT.

SCALLINGER SILUER. "Scallinger siluer and feis;" Aberd. Reg. V., 16, p. 578.

"The small customis & scallinger syluer for this year." Ibid. A. 1538, V. 16.

These seem to be both errors for stallinger, q. v.

SCALLION, s. A leek, Annandale.

This term is used in E. as signifying a kind of onion; Johns. Phillips expl. it, "a kind of shalot or small onion." Lat. Ascalonitis.

SCALLYART, s. A blow or stroke, W. Loth., Lanarks.; apparently synon. with Sclaffert, as properly denoting a stroke with the open hand.

Lat. skella, diverberare palmis; skella, flabrum, skell-r, ictus, flabelli aut palmarum sonitu; G. Andr. Skella hordini, to slap the door so violently as to make the whole house to shake; Januam sic claudere ut tota domus trepidet; Verel. The sound emitted seems to have originated the term, from Su.-G. skall-a, to emit a sharp sound of any kind; whence skallra, to rattle.

SCALP, SCAWP, s. 1. Land of which the soil is very thin, generally above gravel or rock, S. scawp, Shirr. Gl.

Plenty shall cultivate ilk scawp and moor,
Now lea and bare, because the landlori's poor.
Ramsay's Poems, i. 60.

This seems merely a metaph. use of E. scalp, from Teut. schelp, q. a shell.

2. A bed of oysters or mussels, S.

"Around this little island, commonly called Mickery, there are several oyster scalps." Sibb. Fife, N., p. 93.

"On the south side of this part of the Tay, there is a scalp of a small kind of mussels, esteemed good bait for the white fish." P. Ferry-Port-on-Craig, Fife, Statist. Acc., viii. 461.

[To SCALP the land. To pare off the surface of the soil, Orkn., Shetl.]

SCALPY (pron. Scaupy), adj. A term applied to ground, when the soil is thin, S. V. SCALP.

[SCAM, s. A crack, an injury, Shetl. Dan. skramme, id.]

[SCAMBED, adj. Injured, cracked, ibid.]

SCAMBLER, s. "[Scottish] A bold intruder upon one's generosity at table;" Johns. V. SKAMLAR.

To SCAME, SKAUM, v. a. To scorch, S.

"But this wise and valiant M'Donald—wrote to the committee of Murray, then sitting in Auldearn, a charge, with a fiery cross of timber, whereof every point was scamed and burnt with fire, commanding all manner of men within that country to rise and follow the king's lieutenant, the lord Marquis of Montrose, under the pain of fire and sword." Spalding, ii. 216. V. SKAUMIT, and Fyre Croce.

SCAMELLS, s. pl. The shambles.

—"Upoun the morn they marchit from Leith with displayit bands to Edinburgh, and plantit a gaird-hous at the comon scamella." Hist. James the Sext, p. 190. V. SKAMYLL.

SCAMP, s. 1. A cheat, a swindler; often used as to one who contracts debt, and runs off without paying it, Loth., Perth.

[2. Idle wandering, lazy working, Banffs.

3. Work done in a hurried, perfunctory manner, Clydes.]

Teut. schamp-en, to slip aside, to fly off; whence Fr. escampe, a speedy dislodging, a quick retreat, escamper, to fly, to retire hastily; E. scamper.

[To SCAMP, v. a. 1. To do work hurriedly or carelessly, S.

2. To go about idly or lazily, S.

3. To play mischievous tricks, Clydes.]

[SCAMPAN, SCAMPIN, s. The act of going about in idleness, S.]

To SCANCE, SKANCE, v. a. 1. To reflect on, to turn over in one's mind, S.

I marvell our records nothing at all
Do mention Wallace going into France;
How that can be forgote I greetlie scance;
For well I know all Gasconie and Guien
Do hold that Wallace was a mightie Gian,
Even to this day; in Rochel likewise found
A towre from Wallace name greatly renown'd.
Muse's Threnodie, p. 161.

Perhaps it may here signify, am surprised, am at a loss to account for it.

Fall oft this matter did I skance.
Philotus, S. P. R., lii.

Give him your gude advyce,
And pance not, nor skance not,
The perril nor the pryce.
Cherrie and Slae, st. 97.

The word seems radically allied to Isl. skyn-ia, censeo, agnosco; skyn, ratio, sensus; Su.-G. skoena, intelligere, mentis acie videre; in its literal senso, to see, to behold; skoen, judicium; Dan. skionner, to judge, skionsom, prudent.

2. To reproach; to make taunting or censorious reflections on the character or conduct of others, especially in an oblique manner, S.

But war ye me, your heart wad scance ye,
In spite o' Pleasure's necromancy.
Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 182.

Hae thou nae fears; I'll gie my hand
Nane e'er for likin' me shall scance ye.
Hogg's Scot. Pastorals, p. 57.

3. To give a cursory account of any thing, S.

—'Bout France syne did scance syne
An' warn'd them ane an' a'
T' oppose ay sic foes ay,
An' stan by king an' law.
A. Douglas's Poems, p. 133.

Now round the ingle in a ring,
On public news they're scancin. Ibid., p. 151.

4. To make trial of, to put to the test, Buchan.

The young gudewife plumps in a ring,
Cries, "Lay yir hands about ye,"—
Sae on they bang wi' cuttie-haste
To scance their fortune fair, &c.
Tarras's Poems, p. 61.

To Scance has been till of late used in Aberdeen, both in the grammatical and in the popular sense, for Scan; and it is not quite obsolete in this acceptation.

To SCANCE at, v. a. To conjecture, to form a hasty judgment concerning.

"As I can scance at his meaning, hee thinketh my error to be in this remarkable: that, to him, I appear to make it all one thing or alike to receive the sacraments or ordination from a wolfe or thiefe, as to receive them from a hyreling or reprobate." Forbes, To a Recusant, p. 11.

To SCANSE of, v. a. Apparently to investigate, to examine, to scrutinize.

"He commes more particularly to the vengeance. To scanse of these things ouer far it is but vaine curiositie. Therefore it is expedient in these things to hold fast the plaine words, that we alter not to the one side nor to the other." Rollock on 2 Theas., p. 28.

SCANCE, s. 1. A hasty survey in the mind; a cursory calculation, S.

I gave it a scance, I ran over it hastily; as the word glance is used in E. for the act of the mind. V. the v.

2. A cursory view of any subject in conversation, S.

3. A transient view of any object with the natural eye, S.

O happy hour for evermair,
That—gae him, what he values sair,
Sae braw a skance

Of Ayrshire's dainty Poet there
By lucky chance.
Skinner's Miscellaneous Poetry, p. 103.

SCANCLISHIN, s. 1. Scanty increase, W. Loth.

2. A small remainder, ibid.

Corr. perhaps from E. scanty, (which Junius derives from Dan. skan-a, Sw. skon-a, to spare), or rather Fr. eschanteler, to break into cantles.

SCANNACHIN, part. pr. [Glancing, gleaming.]

"An' see, Liddy Rosybell, how beautiful the sun is scannachin' on the water." Saxon and Gael, ii. 99.

Gael. scainnea, a sudden eruption.

To SCANSE, SKANCE, v. n. 1. To shine; often applied to one who makes a great show. Skancin, shining; also, showy, S.

The cheeks observe, where now cou'd shine
The scansing glories o' carmine!

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 96.

—Our bairns' expences
I think sal twin me o' my senses;
In silk an' sattin ilk ane scances
An' gawze beside.

Picken's Poems, i. 123.

"A scansin' queyn," a good-looking, bouncing young woman, Perth.

This is nearly allied to skoén, pulcher, skoén-a, Germ. schon-en, ornare. The origin is undoubtedly Su.-G. skin-a, Germ. sychn-en, lucere, splendere.

2. To make a great blaze on any subject in conversation; to make an ostentatious display, S. B.

3. To embellish, to magnify in narration. When one is supposed to go beyond the truth, especially in the language of ostentation, it is said, He's skancin, S. B.

Corresponding to Su.-G. beskoén-a, beskoén-ia, (Germ. beschon-en), causam suam ornare verbis, lhre; Beskoénia en sat, to set a gloss upon a thing.

SCANSE, SCANCE, s. A gleam, S.

"I couldna believe my ain een whun I looket up amang the craigs an' saw a red scance o' light beekin' on the taps o' the highest o' them." St. Patrick, i. 168.

SCANSED, SCANSYTE, part. adj. Having the appearance of, seeming; characterised in any particular way; [as, "He's an ill-scansed laddie," i.e., he has the look of a bad boy, Clydes.]

This peess was cryede in August moneth myld;
Yhet God of battaill furios and wild,
Mars and Juno ay dois thair besynes,
Causer of wer, wyrrak of wykitnes;
And Venus als the goddess of luff,
Wycht ald Saturn his coursis till appruiff;
Thir iiiii, scansyte of diuerss complexioun,
Battaill, debaite, inwy, and destructioun,
I can nocht deyme for thair melancoly.

Wallace, iii. 347, MS.

These foure shoces of divers complexion.

Edit., 1648.

This seems allied to scance, v. to shine; but in this sense it most nearly resembles Su.-G. skin-a, apparere, prae se ferre; Germ. schein-en, manifestare; a secondary sense of the v., as signifying to shine.

SCANCER, SCANSER, s. A showy person, Clydes.

2. One who magnifies in narration, ibid., Mearns.

*SCANT, s. Scarcity. V. SKANT.

SCANTLINS, adv. Scarcely, S.B. Gl. Shirr.

SCANT-O'-GRACE, s. A wild, dissipated fellow, S.

"'I kenn'd that Scant-o'-grace weel aneugh frae the very outset," said the Baillie,—"but when blude was warm, and swords were out at ony rate, wha kens what way he might hae thought o' paying his debts?" Rob Roy, iii. 33.

*SCANTLING, s. 1. A scroll of a deed to be made, a rude sketch, Ayrs.

"Hae ye made ony sort o' scantling o' what you would wish done?" The Entail, i. 145.

[2. The juncture of a roof with the walls of a house, Clydes.]

3. A rafter; generally used in pl., and applied to the rafters which support the roof of a to-fall or projection, Ang., Clydes.

[O. Fr. eschantillon, "a small cantle or corner-piece, also, a scantling, sample, pattern, proof of any sort of merchandise," Cotgr.; from O. Fr. eschanteler, older form of eschanteler, to break into cantles, to cut up into small pieces. V. Skeat's Etym. Dict.]

SCAP, SCAUP, s. Used in the same sense with Scalp, for a bed of oysters or mussels.

"For the saidis landis of Pilmure, the Linkis, the Mussilscap, and pece land callit the Salt gerss," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1612, Ed. 1814, p. 517. V. SCAUP.

SCAPE, s. A bee-hive. V. SKEPP.

SCAPETHRIFT, s. A spendthrift, a worthless fellow, q. one who escapes from all thriving, or economy.

"Nixt vnto Robert succeeded Hugh Southerland earle of Southerland, called Freskin, in whose dayes Herald Chisholme, (or Herald Guthred) thane of Catteynes, accompanied with a number of scapethrifts and rebells, (so the historie calleth them) began to exercise all kynd of misdemeanors and outrages." Gordon's Hist. Earls of Sutherl., p. 27.

"In the days of William king of Scotland,—Herald Chisholme (or Herald Guthred, the sone of Mack-William,) thain of Catteynes, being accompanied with a number of scape-thrifts, rebells, and rascalls, (so the historie calleth them), began to exercise all kind of misdemeanors, by invading the poor and simple people with spoillings and slaughters, in all pairts thereabouts." Ibid., p. 432.

SCAR, SKAIR, SCAUR, s. 1. A bare place on the side of a steep hill, from which the sward has been washed down by rains, so that the red soil appears; "a precipitous bank of earth," Loth. Sibb. writes also skard.

Is it the roar of Teviot's tide,
That chafes against the scaur's red side?

Is it the wind, that swings the oaks?
Is it the echo from the rocks?
What may it be, the heavy sound,
That moans old Branksome's turrets round?
Lay of the Last Minstrel, C. I. 12.

This seems nearly synon. with cleuch, S.B., in one of its senses.

"The Nevis overflowed many parts of the glens, and the nameless torrents, that in dry weather exist not, were tumbling down in reddened foam from every scaur." Lights and Shadows, p. 376.

2. A cliff, Ayrs.

Whyles owre a linn the burnie plays,
As thro' the glen it wimpl't;
Whyles round a rocky scar it strays;
Whyles in a wiel it dimpl't.

Burns, iii. 137.

Grose defines scarre, A. Bor., "a cliff, or bare rock, on the dry land; from the Saxon carre, cautes. Hence Scar-borough. Pot-scars: pot-sherds, or broken pieces of pots;" Prov. Gl.

This seems to be the same with Su.-G. skaer, rupes; from skaer-a, to cut, Alem. scir-an: as its synon., klippa, a rock, is from klipp-a, secare. C.B. esqair signifies the ridge of a mountain. V. SCHOR, adj.

SCARRIE, SCAURIE, adj. Abounding with scaurs. V. SCAR, SKAIR.

SCAR, adj. Wild, not tamed, Shetl. V. SKAR.

"There have been several petitions presented, anent the great abuse that has been committed in several paroches by the keeping of scar sheep, the owners thereof running and hunting them with dogs, to the great prejudice of their neighbours,—who have tame sheep. There was a petition presented,—that such as had scar sheep might be appointed to tame them." Agr. Surv. Shetl., App. p. 61.

This is evidently the same with Skar, from Isl. skiarr, fugax; these sheep being called scar, because they fly at the approach of man.

[To SCAR, v. a. To surprise, alarm, put to flight, S. V. SKAR.]

SCAR, SCAUR, s. Whatever causes alarm, S.

"If this new custome be imposed, it will be a scar and hinder to strangeairs to come heir for coale." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, Vol. V. 182. V. SKAR, s.

[SCAR-CRAW, SCAUR-CRAW, s. A scare-crow, West of S.]

SCARCEMENT. V. SCARSEMENT.

SCARCHT, s. A hermaphrodite, S. Scart.

"In the year preceding, there was a bairn which had both the kinds of male and female, called in our language a scarcht." Pitcottie, p. 65.

E. scrat is mentioned by Skinner, Gen. Etym. But Grose gives it as A. Bor., "used for men and animals;" Prov. Gl.

A.-S. scrilla, id. This Ihre considers as allied to Isl. skratt, the devil; because a hermaphrodite is tanquam naturae infelix monstrum; vo. Skratta. But he has not observed that there is another Isl. term, which has still greater resemblance; skraede, homo meticulosus, nebulo; G. Andr., p. 214.

SCARE, SKARE, SKARIN, s. Share, Ayrs.

"Nae doubt, yours has been an eydent and industrious life,—and hitherto it has na been without a large scare o' comfort." The Entail, ii. 56.

This is doubtless the old pronunciation; from A.-S. scar, id. scar-an, Su.-G. skær-a, partiri.

SCARF, SCART, s. The name given to the corvoraunt; and also to the shag, Orkney. V. SCARTH.

[SCARF. To beat the scarf, to strike the arms vigorously across the chest to promote warmth, Shetl.]

SCARGIVENET, s. A cant word for a girl, from twelve to fourteen years of age, used in the West of Scotland, in the neighbourhood of Glasgow, and in Ayrshire.

SCARMUS, s. A skirmish.

"Edward prince of Scotland, eldest son to king Malcolm decessit, throw ane wond that he gatt at ane scarmus nocht far fra Anwik." Bellend. Cron. B. xii. c. 12.

Fr. escarmouche, Ital. scarramuccia, L.B. scarmutia, scarmutia. As Ital. mucc-ire, as well as Fr. muss-er, signifies to hide, Du Cange thinks that the word is formed from scara and muccin, militaris cohors occultata; observing, that it properly denotes those combats which have their origin from ambushes. V. SKYRM.

SCARNOCH, SKARNOCH, s. 1. A number, a multitude; "a skarnoch o' words," a considerable quantity of words, Ayr.

2. A noisy tumult, Lanarks.

Teut. schaere, grex, turba, multitudo: collectio, congeries; schaer-en, congregare; Su.-G. skara, turba, cohors.

SCARNOGHIN, s. A great noise, Ayr.

SCARPENIS, s. pl. Thin soled shoes, pumps; Fr. escarpines.

—Thair dry scarpenis, baythe tryme and neit;
Thair mullis glitteran on thair feit.

Maitland Poems, p. 184.

SCARROW, s. 1. Faint light, especially that which is reflected from the wall, Galloway.

The farmer—ca's frae his cot
The drowsy callan; wi' unwilling step
He stalks the bent, wi' scarrow o' the moon,
To tend his fleecy care.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 7.

There are various Goth. terms to which, in this sense, scarrow might seem allied; Isl. skiar, a window, transenna, fenestra, G. Andr.; properly, one made of thin and pellucid parchment, Verel. Ind.; Moes-G. skær-an, ga-skær-an, illustrate; skiaer, clarus, perspicuus; Su.-G. skær, skir, lucidus, as skirduk, a pellucid cloud. It might seem, indeed, radically allied to Skyrin, q. v., as applied to the rays of light.

2. A shadow, Ettr. For., Gall.; Scaddow, synon.

"The scarrow o' a hill, the shadow of that hill; the scarrow o' a crow, the shadow of a crow,—on the earth, while it flies in the air;" Gall. Encycl.

To SCARROW, v. n. To emit a faint light, Galloway, Roxb.

2. To shine through the clouds. In this sense, it is said of the moon, It's scarrowing, ibid.

SCARSEMENT, s. 1. The row of stones which separate the slates of two adjoining roofs, S.

2. The edge of a ditch where thorns are to be planted; that part which projects when a dike is suddenly contracted; Galloway.

"For a dyke of sixty inches, there the stones are of a moderate size, twenty-eight inches is a proper width at the grass, leaving a scarsement of two inches on each side when the first row of stones is laid." Agr. Surv. Gall., p. 85.

3. A projection among rocks, Gall.

"Scarsement, a shelf amongst rocks; a shelf leaning out from the main face of a rock; on scarsements build sea-fowl;" Gall. Encycl.

To SCART, v. a. 1. To scratch, to use the nails, S.

Yea, weighty reasons me inclines
To think some eminent divines
Makes their assertions here to thwart,
And one another's cheeks to scart.

Cleland's Poems, p. 89.

"Biting and scarting is Scots folk's wooing;" Ferguson's Prov., p. 9.

"I'll gar you scart where you youk not;" S. Prov. Kelly, p. 397.

O. E. scratte. "I scratte, as a beast dothe that hath sharpe nayles. J'égratigne. The cattle hath scratte hym by the face." Palsgr., B. iii. F., 353, b.

2. To scrape, to clean any vessel very nicely with a spoon, S.

"Scart the cogue wad sup mair;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 61.

And syne the fool thing is oblig'd to fast,
Or scart anither's leavings at the last.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 76.

3. To gather money in a penurious way, to scrape together money; used rather in a neut. sense.

If lone of money, whence all evill springs,
Thee, (prickt with thornie cares) in bondage brings,
Moue thee to scrape, to scart, to pinch, to spare,
To rake, to runne, to kill thy selfe with care;
Things most secure to doubt, to waite, to watch,
Of penny, or of penny-worth to catch
Some guat, by chance in spider-web arriv'd,
Of bowel-wasting wretched wayes contriv'd;
Draw neere, heere learne but for the day to care,
Uncertaine to suck up to-morrow's ayre.

Mores True Crucifyze, p. 191, 192.

4. It is sometimes applied to indistinct writing, or by the illiterate to writing of any kind, S.

"Alice—readily confided to her the whole papers respecting the intrigue with G——'s regiment, of which she was the depository.—'For they may oblige the bonnie young lady and the handsome young gentleman,' thought Alice, 'and what use has my father for a whin bits of scarted paper?'" Waverley, iii. 256, 257.

It seems radically the same with Belg. kratz-en, Dan. kratz-er, id.; per metaph. Hickeys informs us, that the A. Norm. wrote escriut; A. Bor. scravut.

To SCART out, v. a. To scrape clean; applied to a pot or dish, S.

I wis Auld Reekie, dainty quean,
May lang scart out her coggie clean;
An' may she ne'er want goods nor gear,
To gust her gab on a new year!

A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 52.

To scart out clean, is obviously a tautology.

To SCART one's BUTTONS. To draw one's hand down the breast of another, so as to touch the buttons with one's nails; a mode of challenging to battle among boys, Roxb., Loth.; perhaps a relique of some ancient mode of hostile defiance.

SCART, s. 1. A scratch, S.

"They that boud with cats maun count apo' scarts;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 72.

2. A meagre puny-looking person, S.

3. A niggard, S.

4. Applied to writing, the dash of a pen, S.

"The man is not fined yet." "But that cost but twa scarts of a pen," said Lord Turntipet." Bride of Lammermoor, i. 138.

SCART, adj. [Puny, diminutive.]

Riven, raggit ruke, and full of rebaldrie.

Scart scorpion, scaldit in scurilitie,

I se the haltane in thy harlotrie,

And into uther science nothing slie.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 51.

He may allude to the puny size of the scorpion, although burning with ill humour. A very small person, especially a puny child, is called a weary scart, S.

SCART-FREE, adj. Without injury, S. One is said to have come off scart-free, who has returned safe from a broil, or battle, or any dangerous situation.

All whom the lawyers do advise,
Gets not off scart free, but are fain
To take some other shift or train.

Cleland's Poems, p. 110.

It seems generally to have been interpreted, free from even a scart or scratch. But I am doubtful whether it be not allied to Isl. skard, Su.-G. skaerd-a, a hurt, injury, or wound; Alem. orskardi, laesio acria, lidsardi, laesio membri. V. HALE-SKARTH.

SCARTINS, s. pl. What is scraped out of any vessel; as, "the scartins of the pot," S.

"Scartings, the scrapings of a pot," Gall. Encyc.
Fr. gratin is used in this very sense.

SCARTLE, s. An iron instrument, such as scavengers use for cleaning a stable or cow-house, Tweedd. clatt, scraper, scraple, synon.

Meg, muckin at Geordie's byre,

Wrought as gin her judgment was wrang;

Ilk dauld of the scartle struck fire,

While, loud as a lavrock, she sang!

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 156.

From the v., as signifying to scrape.

To SCARTLE, v. a. 1. To scrape together by taking many little strokes, Clydes., Roxb.

A diminutive from the v. To SCART.

[2. To gather, to collect, by means of constant and long continued saving; as, "I'll buy't as soon as I hae scartled thegither as mony bawbees," Clydes.]

SCART, SKART, SCARTH, SCARF, s. The corvorant, S. Pelecanus carbo, Liun.

The Scarth, a fysh-fangar,
And that a perlyte.

Houlate, l. 14, MS.

And in the calm or loune weddir is sene,
Aboue the fludis hie, ane fare plane grene,
Ane standyng-place, quhar skartis with thare bekkis
Forgane the son gladly thaym prunyis and bekis.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 45.

Mergus is the word here used by Virg., which is the name given to the corvorant by Pliny, Lib. x. c. 33.

"The corvorant, here called the scart, frequents the island in the loch of Clunie." P. Clunie, Perth. Statist. Acc., ix. 235.

"The Skag, (pelecanus graculus, Lin. Syst.), so well known by the name of Scarf, is very frequently seen with us in both fresh and salt water.—The Cormorant, or Corvorant, (pelecanus carbo, Lin. Syst.), our great Scarf, is a species not so numerous as the former, but like it in most respects." Barry's Orkney, p. 300.

"This is called Scart, Frith of Forth." Neill's Tour, p. 199.

Norw. skarv, Isl. skarv-ur, Germ. scharb, id. Thus it appears that scart is a corruption of the Northern name, which is still retained in Caithness.

"In the summer months, the swarms of scarfs, marrots, faiks, &c. that come to hatch in the rocks of Dungisbay and Stroma, are prodigious." P. Canisbay, Caithn. Statist. Acc., viii. 159.

Skarv, skarv-ur, and scharb, seem merely abbreviations. For the Sw. name is sioe-korf, and Germ. scharb is given as synon. with see-rabe, i.e., the searaven, korf and rabe both signifying corvus. Thus the E. name, properly corvorant, is partially from the same origin with scarf; being comp., as some have supposed, of corv-us, and vorans.

SCAS, s. Small portion?

Kenely that cruel kenered on hight,
And with a scas of care in cautil he strik,
And waynes at Schir Wawyn that worthely wight.
Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ii. 22.

Fr. escas signifies the tenth penny of moveables, wherein a foreigner succeeds a freeman: Alem. scas, a penny; money; substance; originally the same with SCATT.

To SCASH, SCASS, v. a. and n. [1. To beat, batter, crush, or press roughly or carelessly, Clydes.

2. To twist, to turn awry, to become twisted or turned awry; also, to scuff, to wear one's dress in a slovenly or careless manner, ibid., Banffs.]

3. To squabble, to wrangle, Aberd.

—Ye ken I like nae fash;
But fan anes folk begin to scash,
I'm fear'd for harm.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 19.

Fr. escach-er, "to beat, batter, or crush flat; to thrust, press, knock," &c.; Cotgr. Isl. skass, foemina gigns, insolens, Haldorson; skessa, Cyclopica mulier, whence skess-ant, desaeovre, inhorre; G. Andr. Dan. skose denotes "a nipping jest, a taunt, a scoff;" and skos-er, "to jeer, to taunt, to scoff."

[SCASH, s. 1. A blow, thump, Clydes.

2. A twist, wrench, twisting, ibid., Banffs.]

[SCASH, SCASHIN, adj. Twisted, turned to one side; as, a scash fit, a foot with the toes turned outwards, ibid. Scash is also used as an adv.]

[SCASHIE, s. A squabble, Aberd.]

SCASHING, SCASHIN, SCASSING, s. Beating, [slapping; synon. daudin, and often used as a part.]

"Bying of wool in landwart, & scassing of wther nychtbouris callandis." Aberd. Reg., A. 1535, V. 15, i.e., "the boys belonging to their neighbours."

[SCASHLE, s. 1. A slight twist, wrench, or ruffle; also, a waddling or shuffling movement.

2. The sound made by wrenching, or by shuffling the feet along the ground, ibid.]

To SCASHLE, v. a. and n. [1. Same with Scash, v., s. 2.]

2. To use any piece of dress as a thing of no value, to use carelessly, S. B.

[3. To walk with a waddling or shuffling gait, or with the toes turned outwards, Banffs.

4. To make a shuffling or scraping noise, as when a person walks so; scushle is also used, ibid.]

[SCASHLIN, SCASHLAN. 1. As a s., the act of walking, as in s. 3 of v.; also the sound made by so walking, ibid.

2. As an adj., having a waddling or shuffling gait, ibid.

3. As an adv., in a waddling or shuffling manner, ibid.]

[SCASH-MOO'T, SCASH-MOUTH'D, adj. Having the mouth awry, Clydes., Banffs.]

SCAT, s. Loss, damage; for Skaith.

"It is part of the scat of the geir quhilk was castine furth of the schipe." Aberd. Reg., V. 25.

SCAT, SCATT, s. A tax; the name of a tax paid in Shetland.

"The hills and commons are again divided into scattolds, from each of which a certain tax, called scatt, was anciently paid to the Crown of Denmark, when Shetland made a part of the Danish dominions; became payable to the Scottish monarch, when these islands were finally ceded to Scotland; fell at length, by donation from the Crown, to a subject superior, and is at present payable to Sir Thomas Dundas of Kerse, Bart., [afterwards Lord Dundas].—The scatt may amount to 6*l.* for each merk of land, and is paid chiefly in butter and oil." P. Unst, Shetl. Statist. Acc., v. 196, N.

Scatt is understood to be a tax properly payable to the king for the privilege of pasturing on the hills or commons, and of cutting peats there. For all land which is not the property of an individual, is supposed to belong to the king. Hence the terms Scatt-butter, Orkn., Shetl., Scatt-oil, Shetl.

Dan. skat, Su.-G. Isl. skatt, A.-S. sceat, Belg. schot, Mod. Sax. schatten, a tax, E. shot, scot and lot. Ihre expl. the Su.-G. term as primarily signifying money. A.-S. sceat had the same meaning. In the reign of the Saxon king Ethelbert, it denoted a farthing. The term appears in its oldest form in Moes.-G. skatta, pecunia. It was also the name of one species of coin; Ataungeith mis skatt; Shew me a penny, Luke xx. 24. Hence skattjane, money-changers, Mar. xi. 15.

To SCAT, SCATT, v. a. and n. 1. To rate, to share; also to be rated; as, to Scat and Lot, to pay shares in proportion, to pay scot and lot.

"Gif ony ship tyme be storm of wether,—the merchandis are not haldin to pay ony thing thairof, nor to scat and lot thairfor." Balfour's Pract., p. 623.

Almost all writers have expl. the phrase Scot and Lot, in its secondary sense only, without adverting to what seems to have been its original use. Isl. skaut, Su.-G. skoet, and Dan. skiod, signify sinus vestis; fimbria; Moes.-G. skaut denoting the hem or lap of a garment. The word was used concerning alienation of property; "lots being cast into the lap of the purchaser, or a rod, sometimes a turf, as a symbol of the transfer." When heritable property was to be divided among minors, rods or lots were cast into the skoet or lap of their nearest relations; and as these were drawn the division was determined. V. Ihre, vo. Skoet, col. 618. The terms skoet and lutt were both used in regard to this transaction. See also Du Cange, vo. Scotare. The accurate Kilian defines Teut. schotte end lot as merely signifying census; deriving schotte from schatt-en, censere. But whence then its connection with lot? It was the ancient mode of collecting money to cast it into the lap of the receiver, from skoet-a, in sinum conjicere: and as Germ. schoss signifies sinus vestis, and also census, tributum, Wachter has remarked that "a tax is properly money collected, from schicss-en, jacere, conjicere."

2. To subject or be subjected to the tax called Scat, Orkney.

—"And na forcop quia double malt scattit." Rental Book of Orkney, p. 9.

Su.-G. skatt-a, tributum exigere; also, tributum pendere; Teut. schatt-en. L.B. scott-are, id.

[SCATALD, SCATHALD, s. V. SCATHOLD.]

[SCAT-BRITHIER, s. pl. A name given to those whose sheep pasture promiscuously over the common, Shetl.]

[SCATFU, adj. Inclined to pilfer or steal, i.e., to take a share of your neighbour's property, ibid.]

SCATHOLD, SCATTHOLD, SCATTOLD, SCAT-TALD, SCATHOLD, s. Open ground for pasture, or for furnishing fuel, Shetl., Orkn.

"The uncultivated ground, outside of the enclosure [or town], is called the scathhold, and is used for general pasture, and to furnish turf for firing." Edmonston's Zetl., i. 148.

"The hills and commons are again divided into scattolds," &c. V. SCATT, s.

Perhaps from Isl. skatt, and hald, usus, q. holding, also custodia, from one sense of hald-a, which is passere. Verelius, however, mentions skattloil as signifying prædium vectigale. If this be the original form, the last syllable must be from lod, terra, fundus.

SCATHOLDER, SCATHALDER, SCATTALDER, s. One who possesses a portion of pasture ground called scattald.

"That the sheriff of each parish, with twelve honest men there ride the marches of the parish, betwixt the first of October and the last of April yearly, or when required thereto by the scattalders, under the pain of £10 Scots." App. Surv. Shetl., p. 7.

INSCATHOLDER, INSCATTALDER, s. One who possesses a share in the common or pasture ground called a Scattald, Shetl.

"That all horses belonging either to outs cattalders, or ins cattalders, oppressing and overlaying the neighbourhood, be instantly removed, after due advertisement given their owners, and that at the kirk-door, under the pain of being confiscate to the king." Ibid., p. 6.

OUTSCATHOLDER, OUTSCATTALDER, s. One who has no share in the pasture ground. V. INSCATTALDER.

SCATLAND, s. Land paying the duty distinguished by the name of Scat, Orkn.

"Item, w^t Flawis jd terre scatland an^t in butter cat vij d.—And in land male the said d terre, scatland an^t viij m." Rental of Orkney, A. 1502, p. 12.

SCATTERGOOD, s. A spendthrift, S.

"And now, my lords, there is that young scattergood, the laird of Bucklaw's fine, to be disposed upon—I suppose it goes to my lord Treasurer." Bride of Lammermoor, i. 135.

To SCAUD, v. a. To scald, S. V. SKAUDE.

SCAUD, SCAWD, s. [1. A scald; also, that which scalds, as a flash or jarp from boiling water, West of S.

2. A gleam, gleaming; as, "There's a scaud in the sky," ibid.]

3. "A disrespectful name for tea;" (Gall. Encyc.) probably imposed by those who thought it of no other use than to scald or skaud the mouth, as it is sometimes contemptuously called het water.

[SCAUDIN, SCAWDIN, s. 1. The act of scalding; as, "I'll hae anither scaudin o' whey the day," ibid.

2. The quantity scalded or to be scalded; as, "That's a big scaudin o' milk ye hae," ibid.]

[SCAUD, SCAWD, SCAUT, adj. 1. Scrofulous, S.

2. Faded or changed in colour. V. under SKAW.]

[SCAUD-HEAD, SKAUT-HEAD; s. 1. A head disfigured with patches of scrofula, S.

2. A scrofulous disease that causes the hair to fall off, Clydes., Shetl.]

SCAUD-MAN'S-HEAD, s. A name given to the shell of the sea urchin, S. Echinus esculentus, Linn.; in Orkney and Shetland called Ivegar, a name nearly obsolete.

To SCAUM, SCAME, v. a. To burn slightly; to singe, S.

SCAUM, SKAUM, s. 1. The act of singeing clothes by putting them too near the fire, or by means of a hot iron, S.

2. A slight burn, S.

But ay when Satan blaws the coal,
I find its best the scaum to thole.

Picken's Poems, l. 132.

3. The appearance caused by singeing; a slight mark of burning, S. V. SKAUM, and SCAME.

SCAUM O' THE SKY. "The thin vapour of the atmosphere;" Gall.; [scad, West of S.]

Mactaggart leaves the sense rather indefinite; for he first speaks of "the thin white vapours," and says afterwards, "There is red scaum, white scaum, and many others;" Gall. Encycl.

He seems to view the term as the same with E. scum. For this is part of his definition,—"the scum of the sky." It is probably allied to Su.-G. skumm, subobscurus, q. that which partially darkens the eye; Isl. skaum, crepusculum, skima, lux parva, also expl. rimula lucem præbens.

SCAUP, SCAWP, SCAWIP, s. 1. The scalp, the skull, S. This word is used in a ludicrous phrase, equivalent to, I'll break your skull; "I'll gie you sic a scallyart, as'll gar a' your scawp skirl."

Want minds them on a thackless scawp,
Wi' a' their pouches bare.

Tarras's Poems, p. 17.

2. A bed or stratum of shell-fish; as, "an oyster scawp," S. It seems to be named so from the thinness of the layer.

"The scawip of mussills & kokilliss." Aberd. Reg.

3. "A small bare knoll;" Gl. Sibb., S.

[4. Thin, hard soil, Banffs.]

SCAUR, s. A precipitous bank. V. SCAR.

SCAURIE, SCOREY, s. The young of the herring-gull, Orkney.

"The Brough—is the resort and nursery of hundreds of scauries, or herring-gulls, (larus fuscus). I believe the Orkney name scaurie is applied to this gull only while it is young and speckled; and it loses its speckled appearance after the first year." Neill's Tour, p. 25.

Isl. skioer is given as the name of a bird; pica vel sturnus, G. Andr., p. 213. The bird here referred to is undoubtedly the Sea-pie, or Oyster-catcher, hoema- topus ostralegus, Linn., which in Sw. is called Strand-skiure, Norw. Strand-skiure. V. Pennant's Zool., p. 482.

SCAW, s. 1. Any kind of scall, S.

2. The itch, scrofula, S.

3. A faded or spoiled mark, Dumfr. Hence, [To SCAW, v. a. and n. To destroy, spoil, fade; to become faded; generally applied to colour, Banffs.]

SCAW'D, SCAW'T, part. adj. [1. Scrofulous, S.]

2. Having many carbuncles on the face, Mearns.

3. Changed or faded in the colour; especially as applied to dress, ibid.; often Scaw'd-like, Mearns, Clydes.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. skallog, depilis.

[SCAW, s. A barnacle, Banffs.]

SCAW, s. An isthmus or promontory, Shetl.

"A child might travel with a purse of gold from Sumburgh-head to the Scaw of Unst, and no soul would injure him." The Pirate, i. 202.

Isl. skagi, promontorium, from skag-a, prominere, Haldorson; skaga, promontorium porrectum oblique, skag-a, deflectere, G. Andr., p. 208. In p. 209, however, he simply renders it, Isthmus porrectus. Verelius explains skagi, syrtis, brevia.

SCAWBERT, adj. 1. Applied to those who render themselves ridiculous by striving to appear above their rank in life, making unwarranted pretensions to gentility, Aberd.

[2. A stalwart person of somewhat stubborn, disagreeable temper, Banffs.]

Perhaps from A.-S. scaw-ian, sceaw-ian, videre, used in a neuter sense, and beahrt, praeclarus; q. to make "a bright shew," or ostentatious appearance.

SCAWP, s. "A bare dry piece of stony ground;" Shirr. Gl. V. SCALP.

SCAZNZIED.

"The king of France, hearing of the commotioun betuix the king & his nobilitie, willed ane revnioun to be maid amanges thame, sua as the king mycht keip his awin honour and priuiledges, and naywayis to be scaznized or preiugit." Belhaven MS. Mem. Ja. VI., fo. 24. v.

This word had most probably been pronounced scainyied; and, as it respects the history of France, may have been formed from O.Fr. escang-er, to alter, to change; L.B. eschang-iare; whence escange, barter, exchange.

SCELLERAR, s. One who has the charge of the cellar.

The Goull was a garnitar,
The Sicerthbak a scellerar,
The Scarth a fysh-fangar.

Houlate, i. 14.

L.B. cellarar-ius, cellerar-ius, cellar-ius, cui potus et escae cura est, qui cellae vinariae et escariae praest, promus; Du Cange.

O.E. "cellerar, an officer, [Fr.] celerier." Palsgr. B. iii. F. 23.

SCEOLDER, SCHALDER, s. The sea-pie, a bird, Orkn.

"The Sea-Pie.—Haematopus Ostralegus, Linn. Syst.—Orc. Sceolder." Low's Faun. Orcad., p. 91.

This term may have immediately originated, by the custom, so common among the Goths, of prefixing the letter s, from kielder, the name of this bird in the Faroe Isles, (V. Penn. Zool., p. 376); and this again from Dan. kield, id., written kielder by the learned Dane, Bartholin, and expl. Pica marina. V. Linn. Faun. Succ. N., 192. The Norwegians indiscriminately use the name of kield and tield for it. The Icelanders call the male bird Tialldur, and the female Tilldra. Tialldr, haematopus, pica marina; Haldorson.

SCHACHT, s. Property, possession, land.

The yonger wend up-on-land, weil neir
Rycht solitair; quhyle under busk and breir,
Quhyle in the corn, in uther meny schacht,
Vs outlawis dois that levis on ylin wacht.

Henryson, Chron. S. P., l. 107.

—"Probably means, 'of others aucht, or property.'" Ibid., p. 114. N.

Schacht seems indeed to signify property, as referring to land. Fland, schacht lands, a rood of land. V. D'Arny.

SCHADDOW HALF. That portion of land which lies towards the north, or is not exposed to the sun. V. SONIE HALF.

[SCHAFE, s. A thin slice; as, a schafe o' luif, a slice of bread, Clydes.]

[SCHAFE, s. A sheaf. V. SCHAFIE.]

SCHAFFIT, part. pa. Provided with a sheaf of arrows. V. BOWIT and SCHAFFIT.

SCHAFFROUN, CHEFFROUN, SAFERON, s. A piece of ornamental head-dress anciently used by ladies.

"Item, ane schaffroun with ane burd of gold with lxxxii perle send to the quene in England.

—"Item, ane cheffroun sett with goldsmyth werk with xxxv perle." Inventories, p. 27.

"In the first ane saferon with ane chenye of gold of blak veluous contenant lviij linkis, weand ane unce thre quarteris & halff ane unicorn wecht." Ibid., p. 24.

The term seems properly to have denoted a hood. Fr. chaperon, "a hood or French hood (for a woman); also any hood, bonnet, or letice cap;" Cotgr. L.B. caparo, capero, capiro, from Fr. chaperon, by the inhabitants of Languedoc called capayro, tegmen capitis, cuculla. Du Cange views the term as equivalent to brevior-capa; although others derive it from the Lat. term capronae used by Lucilius in his Satires to denote the hair which was before the forehead, quasi a capite pronae. Non. Marcell. cap. 1. In computo Stephani de la Fontaine, A 1351. Pour Madame la Duchesse de Lembourg, fill de mons. le Duc de Normandie, 2. Chaperons, l'un pendant, l'autre à enfourmer, tout fourré de menu vair. Sometimes it was worn loose or open, at other times close.

Belg. kaproen, a nun's hood; Teut. kapruyn, calantica, capitium, mitra, mitella, &c.; Kilian.

SCHAFTMON, SHAFTMON, SCHATHMONT, s. "A measure of six inches in length; or, as commonly expressed, the fist with the thumb turned up;" Sibb. Gl.

He clef thogh the cautel, that covered the knight,
Thogh the shindan shelde, a shaftmon, and mare.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., ii. 15.

A.-S. scarft-mund, "semipes;—the measure from the top of the thumb set upright, to the uttermost part of the palme, which is by a tall man's measure half a foot;" Somner. He mentions shaftmet and shaftment as E. words. They are still used, A. Bor. The origin may be scarft, cuspis, and Dan. Sax. mund, manus, q. the point of the hand.

[Schaftmonde is the form used in Morte Arthure, l. 4231.

In-to the schuldre of the schalke a shaftmonde large
That the schire reile blode schewed on the maylys.]

Ial. mun, Su.-G. mon, however, signify summa, quantitas; folesmon, a foot-breadth, haarsmon, the breadth of a nail. Hence one might almost suppose, that the A.-S. word had some affinity, and had originally denoted a measure as long as the head of a spear.

SCHAGHES, s. pl. Groves. V. SCHAW.

SCHAFIE, SCHEIF, s. 1. A quiver or bundle of arrows, amounting in number to twenty-four.

"The king commands that ilk man haueand the valour of ane kow in gades, sall haue ane bow with ane schafie of arrowes, that is, twenty-four arrowes." 1 Stat. Rob. I. c. 26, s. 4.

The phrase was also used in E., and originated, according to Minshen, from the circumstance of the arrows being "tied up like a sheaf of corn." Schilter, however, gives Alem. scaph as equivalent to quiver; Tbeca, armarium. Fr. Junius in Willeram., p. 220. Hodie, schaft.

Whether the term was formerly used in E. in the same sense, is uncertain; but the L. B. term garba, corresponding with sheaf, is found in Rymer. Viccomes Gloucestrise provideat infra ballivam suam de mile Garbis sagittarum. T. 5, p. 245. The same term occurs in our laws;—in the very place indeed given above, according to Skene's translation; Vna garba, sagittarum, scilicet, viginti quatuor sagittas, &c.

Wachter has fallen into a curious blunder here, or perhaps his printer, (vo. Garbe), which Ihre has adopted, (vo. Kerje), and which I would certainly have followed, had I not thought of examining the reference. He says, that, according to Du Cange, the phrase occurs, in Statutis Roberti I. Regis Siciliae. But Du Cange refers only to the Statutes Roberti I. Regis Scotiae. By such inadvertence are errors continued.

Wachter subjoins that the mod. Sax. word schaub corresponds in signification.

2. A certain quantity of iron or steel.

"Ane schef of irone contains sextene gades; ane schef of steile contains fourteene gades." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Schafa.

SCHAIK, To-SCHAIK, pret. Shook.

—Brym blastis of the northyn art
Ouerquhelmyt had Neptunus in his cart,
And all to-schak the leuys of the treis.
Doug. Virgil, 200, 22.

V. To, 2

To SCHAIK, v. a. V. SCHAPE.

[SCHAIR, SHARE, pret. Shore, cut, Barbour, xv. 82.]

SCHAKERIS, SHAIKERS, s. pl. 1. "Labels or thin plates of gold, silver, &c., hanging down, bractea, from the E. shake;" Rudd.

—All his hede
Of goldin schakeris and rois garlandis rede,
Buskit full well.—

Doug. Virgil, 139, 50.

—The quhilk lyke silver shakers shynd
Embroydering Bewties beil.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 4.

The term seems nearly correspondent to spangles, and may be allied to Teut. schackier-en, alternare, variare, because of the change of appearance.

2. The moisture distilling from flowers.

—Syluer schakeris gan fra leuys hing,
With crystal sprayngis on the verdure ying.

Doug. Virgil, 401, 26.

SCHAKER-STANE, s. The stone-chatter, a bird; now S. stane-chacker, q. v.

The Stainyell and the Schaker-stane,
Behind the laue were left alane,
With waiting on their marrows.

Burel's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 28.

SCHAKLOK, s. Perhaps a picklock, "Calling him commound thief and schaklock;" Aberd. Reg., V. 18.

Q. one who shakes or loosens locks. Teut. schack-en, however, signifies rapere, to ravish, to force.

SCHALD, adj. Shallow; shoul, S., schawld, Wyntown.

Sa huge wylsum rolkis, and schald sandis,
And stormes grete ouerdreuin and sufferyt haue we.

Doug. Virgil, 148, 48.

He spyit, and slely gert assay,

Barbour, ix. 354, MS.

"Shawl waters make maist diu;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 61.

Than Trent and Temys war sa schawld,
That a barne of twelf yhere awlde
Mycht wayd oure thame, and na spate
That mycht mak thare kneys wate.

Wyntown, vii. 5. 169.

This adj., as also the noun schald, a shallow place, are still in common use in Clydes., and are pronounced in the same manner.

O.E. "Scholle not depe. Bassus." Prompt. Parv. We may trace this form of the word in mod. Shoal.

Schald, and E. shallow, as well as shoal, must have all the same origin. This, however, is very obscure. Johnson derives shallow from shoal and low; Spiegel. and Seren. from Sw. skallig, calvus, glaber, a term metaph. applied to land that is barren and burnt up; Rudd., with more probability from A.-S. scylf, a shelf.

SCHALD, SHAULD, s. A shallow place.

Now schaw that strenth, now schaw that his curage,
Quhilk on the *schald*is of Affrik in stormes rage
Ye dyd exerce.—

Doug. Virgil, 133, 52.

Syrribus, Virg. V. SCHOR, adj.

[SCHALDER, s. The Sea-pie, a bird, Shet.]

[SCHALIM, s. A musical instrument. V. SCHAM.]

SCHALK, SCHALKE, SHALK, s. 1. A servant.

Out with snerdis thai swang, fra thair schalk side.
Gawan and Gol., ii. 20.

It seems meant for schalk's sides, the sides of their servants or squires; for there is no evidence that schalk was ever used for left, q. left side.

A.-S. scale, Su.-G. Isl. skalk, Moca.-G. skalks; skalk-man, Alem. scalck, Germ. Belg. schalck, id. Hence Mareskalk, a marshal, literally, a servant who has the charge of horses; sene-schalck, a steward, from sin, sind, familia, and schalck, servus, &c.

2. A knight.

In this sense it is applied to Sir Rigel of Ronc, i.e., the river Ronc.

Schailp thê evin to the schalk in thi schroud schene.
Gawan and Gol., ii. 23, compared with st. 22.

As knecht, originally denoting a servant, became a title of honour, we find that schalk, id. underwent a similar change. A knight, indeed, as long as the term retained its military sense, still denoted a servant, as the Knights of St. John, i.e., the servants consecrated to him. The change was properly with respect to the degree of honour attached to the designation, as arising from the supposed dignity of the service. The same observation applies to schalk in its composite state. V. SKALLOO.

SCHALM, SCHALME, SHALM, SHAWME, SCHALIN, SKALIN, s. According to Rudd., the cornet or crooked trumpet; although he says that Doug. seems to use it simply for tibia, a pipe.

[An instrument like a clarionet or a hautboy.]

Trumpetts and schalins, with a schout,
 Playd or the rink began.

Evergreen, ii. 177.

—The Dulsate, and the Dulsacordis, the *Schal*in of assay.

Houlate, iii. 10.

On Dindyma top go, and walk at hame,
 Quhare as the quihissail renderis soundis sere,
 With tympanys, tawbernis, ye war wound to here,
 And bois schalmes of torned busch boun tree.

Doug. Virgil, 290, 45.

Fraunces has "Schalmus, pype, Sambuca." Cooper expl. the Lat. word by "doulcimer;" in Ort. Vocab. the sense is left indefinite. Sambuca, est quodam genus symphonie musicum.

Su.-G. schalmcia, Teut. schalmey, Fr. schalemie, a pipe; Belg. schalmey, a hautboy. Some derive the word from Su.-G. skall-a, to sound. But it seems rather from Lat. calam-us, a reed, or pipe.

Chaucer uses schalmies, which, according to Tyrwhitt, signifies psalteries.

SCHALMER, s. 1. A musical instrument.

"Mary had also a schalmer, which was a sort of pipe, or fluted instrument, but not a bagpipe." Chalmers's Mary, i. 73.

2. The person whose business it was to play on this instrument, or on some sort of pipe.

"Pipers, and schalmers, were sometimes used synonymously, in the Treasurer's books, during the reign of James IV.—James Ramsay, schalmer, had a salary of £59, 4s. Scots in 1563-4." Reg. Signat. B. i. ibid. V. SCHALIN.

SCHAND, SCHANE, adj. Elegant, beautiful. V. SCHEYNE.

SCHAND, s. Beauty, elegance.

schane,

Off all coloure maist clere, beldit abone.

Houlate, iii. 20, MS.

V. SCHEYNE. Shand, however, may here signify form, figure; O. Teut. schene, scheene, schema.

[SCHANGIE, s. and v. V. SHANGIE.]

SCHANGSTER, s. A singer in a cathedral; or perhaps, a teacher of music. "Johnne Lesley & Gilbert Blayr schangsteris;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1538, V. 16.

SCHANK, SHANK, s. 1. The leg; used in a more general sense than E. shank.

Bot his feint schankis gan for eild schaik.

Doug. Virgil, 142, 12.

The term seems to have been formerly used in E. with the same latitude. Hence, the name of Long-shanks given to Edw. I.

2. The stalk or stem of an herb, the trunk of a tree, S.

"Scot. The stalk of any herb or plant is called the shank." Rudd. [Synon., runt.]

—The ancient aik tre

Wyth his big schank be north wynd oft we se

Doug. Virgil, 115, 23.

Robur, Virg., as it is used for stipes, ver. 29.

With the dynt the master stok schank is smyte.

[3. The shaft, stalk, or haft, as of a spear, hammer, &c., S.]

4. In pl. stockings, Aberd. [V. under SHANK.]

The term, in this sense, has been used in Aberdeen for about three centuries. Accordingly "schankis & schone" are mentioned in Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16. It seems to have been familiar in Fife during the reign of James VI.

"1601. The 16 of Februar, ane proclamation,—that nae wool be transportit out of the countrie, and that nae clothe come hame nor hattis nor schanks, nor naything of wool." Birrel's Diary, p. 53.

"Scot. Bor. the word shanks is most frequently used for stockings, and the women who weave them are named shankers," Rudd.

It had been formerly used in this sense, Loth.

I'll steal from petticoat or gown,
From scarlet shanks and shoon with rose.

To SHANK, v. a. 1. To travel on foot, S.

She'll nae lang shant upo' all four
This time o' year.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 16.

2. To knit stockings, Aberd.

SHANKS-NAIGIE, s. To ride on Shanks Mare, Nag, or Nagy, a low phrase, signifying to travel on foot, S. V. Gl. Shirr.

"No just sae far; I maun gang there on Shanks-naggy." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 22.

And ay until the day he died,
He rade on good shanks naggy.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 182.

SHANKER, s. A knitter of stockings, S.

"Schanks, stockings. Schankers, the women who knit them;" Gl. Sibb.

To SHANK aff, v. n. 1. To set off smartly, to walk away with expedition, S.

It's nae sae very lang sinsyne,
That I gaed shankin aff to shine
At kirk o' Deer.

Tarras's Poems, p. 37.

3. To depart, by whatever means, S.

—Syne gied a fearfu', dreary croon,
An' aff for aye he shanket
Wi' Death that day.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 202.

To SHANK aff, v. a. To send off without ceremony, S.

"They think they should be lookit after, and some say ye should baith be shankit aff till Edinburgh castle." Antiquary, iii. 146.

To SHANK one's self awa, v. a. To take one's self off quickly, S.

"'Na, na, I am no a Roman,' said Edie. 'Then shant yoursel awa' to the double folk, or single folk, that's the Episcopal or Presbyterians yonder.'" Antiquary, ii. 303.

[To SCHANK, v. a. To sink. V. SHANK.]

SCHANT, part. adj. Soiled, dirty.

In a description of the tawdry dress of women, it is said that they appear,

With clarty silk about their tailis,
Their gounis schant to shaw their skin,
Suppois it be richt oft full din.

Maitland Poems, p. 185.

The dirtiness of their gowns is ironically represented as meant for a foil to the skin, though often abundantly dun. Clarty expl. the idea conveyed by schant, which is from the same origin with schent, q. v. For Teut. schend-en, signifies to pollute. Also, schande maeck-en, vitiate, pollucere.

To SCHIAPE, SCHAP, v. a. and n. 1. To contrive, devise, plan.

There was also craftellie schape and mark
The namekouth hous, quhilk Labyrinthus halt.
Doug. Virgil, 163, 20.

The phrase, schape thame, seems nearly allied to E. "lay themselves out, dispose themselves."

"Anent maisterfull men that schapis thame to occupy maisterfully lordis landis bath spirituale and temporale,—that the personis complenyeande sall cum to the kingis schirref or bailye," &c. Parl. Ja. II., A. 1457, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 61.

2. To purpose, to intend.

Abuset hir, accuset hir,
With serpent wordis fell,
Of schavelis and rebellis,
Lyk hiddeous houndis of hell.

Grange's Ballad, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 279.

This can scarcely be a corr. of schavelling; as I have not observed that the latter is ever applied to any but Roman priests. Teut. schav-en is rendered, impudenter et inverecundè petere; Kilian.

Perhaps, depredators, from L.B. scarill-um, praeda.

SCHAVELLING, s. A contemptuous name given to a Romish priest or monk, because of the tonsure or shaven crown.

"We detest and refuse the usurped authoritie of that Roman Antichrist.—His three solemne vowes, with all his shavellings of sundrie sorts;" National Covenant, 1580, Collect. Conf., ii. ii. 121, 123.

In the Lat. Translation, ascribed to Mr. John Craig, this is rendered; Variasque rasurae sectas.

"Now sum wil say, thir wer Preichouris, and Ministeris of the word, and had bin sum time anoynt shavelingis, markit with the beistis mark." H. Charteris, Pref. to Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, A. 4. a.

The term was used in the same sense by O. E. writers.

—"Shifting shavelinges, and nosegay nunnes." Narbonus, Part. i. 41.

Sibb. says that shavelingis is expl. vagabonds. He therefore refers to schavaldouris as a synon. term. I need scarcely say, that there is not the slightest connexion. Had he looked into Johns., he would have observed the true sense of it, as used by Spenser.

To SCHAW, v. a. To shew: part. pa. schaw.

Quhilk with Euander kyng in cumpany,
Followand the signis schaw, has fast hereby Chosin aue stede.

Doug. Virgil, 241, 27.

A.-S. scæw-an, id.

SCHAW, SCHAU, SHAW, s. Appearance, show.

"Thay—ar bot neu intrudit men, and apostatis from the catholik religion, lyk unto your selfis; and hes na schaw of the face of ane kirk." N. Burne, F. 123, a.

—"To put farr from us all shaw or appearance of what may give his Ma. the leist discontent, we have resolved for the present onlie to mak remonstrances," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 237.

A.-S. scæw, a shew.

SCHAW-FAIR, s. Any thing that serves rather for shew, than as answering the purpose in view, Aberd.; an inversion of the E. phrase, a fair shew.

[SCHAWAND, SCHAWIN, part. pr. Showing, Lyndsay, Exper. & Courteour, l. 1838.]

SCHAWAND MODE. The name anciently given to the indicative mood in our Scottish seminaries.

"Indicatio modo, schawand mode." Vaus' Rudimenta, B 6, b.

[SCHAWING, s. 1. Showing, outward exhibition, external sign, Barbour, xvi. 95.]

2. Used for wapinschawing.

—"At thai mak thar schawingis & monstouris with sic harness and wapnis as thai haif." Acts Ja. V., 1540, Ed. 1814, p. 363.

Here schawing is conjoined with musters. V. Monstour.

[SCHAWYT, pret. Shone, gleamed, Barbour, viii. 217.]

SCHAW, SCHAGH, s. 1. A wood, a grove, a shaw.

And in a schaw, a litill thar besyde,
Thai lugyt thaim, for it was nere the nycht.

Wallace, iii. 68.

And the fat offerandis did you cal on raw,
To banket amynd the derne blesst schaw.

Doug. Virgil, 391, 34.

With solas thei semble, the pruddest in palle,
And suwen to the sovereigne, within schagles schene.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., l. 6.

Su.-G. skog, Isl. skog-r, Dan. skov, A.-S. scua, Ir. Gael. saeghas, id. The term as used in Celt., is borrowed, I suspect, from some of the Goth. dialects, (especially as it does not occur in C.B.) in the same manner as Ir. salvaiste, woody, from Lat. sylvest-ris.

2. It seems also used in the sense of shade, thicket, covert.

The place he tuke, and ful priue vnknew
Liggis at wate vnder the derne wol schaw.

Doug. Virgil, 382, 45.

Schaw here must certainly be understood as conveying a different idea from wood, or wood.

Schaw, according to Camden, denotes "many trees near together, or shadow of trees." Remains, Surnames, Lett. S.

This seems indeed to be the primary and proper sense of the word. When applied to trees, the sense is evidently secondary, from A.-S. scua, or Su.-G. skugga, a shadow, because of the shelter they afford. V. Skuo.

It is evident, at any rate, that it is the same Goth. word which signifies a shadow and a wood. Thus Su.-G. skog, sylva, cannot be viewed as radically different from skugga, umbra. Thre views Gr. skia, umbra, as the root. V. Skuwes.

SCHAWALDOURIS, s. pl. Expl. "wanderers in the woods, subsisting by hunting."

Willame of Carrothyris ras
Wyth hya brethyr, that war manly,
And gat till him a cumpany,
That as schawaldouris war wakand,
In-til the Vale of Annand.

Wyntown, viii. 29, 217.

"Shavallres occurs in Knyghton.—Prompt. Parv. expl. it, discursor, vagabundus;" Gl. Wynt.

Mr. Macpherson has observed, that schaw and wald both signify wood, forest, &c. But schaw, in this composition, may signify covert, q. those who live in the shelter of the woods. Or the last part of the term may be allied to A.-S. weallian, Su.-G. wall-a, peregrinari, vagari. Accipiat de motu inconstante, qualis est vagantium et erronum; Ihre, in vo.

To SCHAWÉ, v. a. To sow.

"Alsua he taks of Litill Dunmeth part fra the Tode stripe to Edinglasse, that is alsmeikill land as a celdr of aits will schawe." Chart. Aberd. MS. Fol. 140.

SCHAWLDE, adj. Shallow. V. SCHALD.

SCHAWME, s. V. SCHALM.

[SCHAYM, s. Shame, Barbour, vii. 632.]

SCHEAR, s. A chair. "Ane gret akkyn shear," a great oaken chair, Aberd. Reg.

To SCHED, SHED, v. a. and n. 1. To divide, to separate.

—The sterne that wes stout
Hit Schir Gawayne on the gere, quhill grevit was the gay,
Betit doune the bright gold, and beryallis about;
Scheddit his schire wedis scharly away.

Gawan and Gol., iii. 27.

Moes.-G. skaid-an, A.-S. sceod-an, Teut. scheyd-en, Su.-G. sked-a, separare, partiri. Lancash. shead, sceod, to divide, to separate. Sched, id. R. Brunne. V. SCHILTHUM.

2. To part, to separate from each other.

—Gif that we sched,
Thou sall not get thy purpose sped.
Cherrie and Sae, st. 72.

Than fled thay, and sched thay,
Emery ane from ane udder.

Burel's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 24.

It also occurs in O.E., in the same sense.

R. was perceyued, thei were renged redie;
& how ther pencils weyued, son he mad a cris:
"Arme we vs I rede, & go we hardilie,
" & we sall mak tham schede, & sondre a partie.

R. Brunne, p. 159.

"Depart," Gl. Hearne.

3. To sched the hair, to divide the hair of the forehead, by combing the one half to the right side, and the other to the left, S.

4. To sched with, to part with, to separate from.

"O! if I had back again where I had it once, ten thousand worlds should not gar me sched with it again."
W. Guthrie's Serm., p. 16.

"Whatsoever thou hast done, if thou hast a desire after Jesus Christ,—and cannot think of parting with his blessed company for ever; or, if thou must sched with him, yet dost wish well to him and all his, thou needest not suspect thyself to be guilty of this unpardonable sin." Guthrie's Trial, p. 215.

SCHED, SCHEDE, SHEDDING, s. 1. One quantity separated from another of the same kind.

—Than Dares
His trefw companyeous ledis of the preis,—
For sorrow schakand to and fra his hele,
And scheddis of blude furth spittand throw his lippis.
Doug. Virgil, 143, 33.

Rudd. renders it "streams, gushes." But it rather denotes blood in quantities thrown out at different times, separate clots of blood; crassum cruorem, Virg. V. SHED.

2. Schede of the croun, the division of the hair on the crown of the head, S. shed of the hair.

—Lo the top of litil Ascanens hede
Among the dulefull armes wyll of rede
Of his parentis, from the schede of his croun
Schane al of licht vnto the erd adoun.

Doug. Virgil, 61, 43.

Her war'ring hair disparpling flew apart
In seemly shed.

Hudson's Judith, p. 55.

"Shame's past the shed of your hair;" Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 23, spoken to those who are impudent.

[Shedding is a form still in common use.

Gin he look'd blyth, the lassie look'd mair,
For shame was past the shedding o' her hair.

Ross's Helenore, First Ed., 103.]

"For doutles mony of siclik fornicatouris, blindit be carnal concupiscence of thair hart, trowis that sympil fornicatioun is na deadly syn, nor to thame damnabil, and sa nocht beand punissit be man, & haiffand na feir of God and alwa schame of this world being past the sched of thair heer, thai leise continually in huir dome, thai corrup the ayre with the exempl of thair unclein lyfe, thai lufe and cheris all that are siclik as thame self, thai het all thame that leiuis ane chast lyfe." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 53, 54. V. also Boyd's Last Battell, p. 269.

Belg. scheytsel des haairs, id.

—"Suffering these sparkles of goodnesse to die out, after that they haue shaken out of their mouth the bridle of restraining grace while it is cast loose, lying upon their maine, they plod on from one sinne to another, till shame bee past the shedde of their haire, so that they bee passed all feeling." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 269.

The only idea I can form of this singular figure is, that, as it is the face which is subject to blushing, the persons, to whom this language is applicable, have so lost all sense of shame, that their blushes are visible on no part of their countenance; so that the very power of testifying consciousness of doing wrong has as it were receded from every part that can possibly indicate this, and sought a hiding-place for itself amidst the hair that covers their heads. The metaphor might almost seem to be borrowed from the language of inspiration. Jer. iii. 3, in which Jerusalem is charged with such impudence of forehead, that she "refused to be ashamed."

Besides the Belg. phrase quoted above, there is an old Teut. one mentioned by Kilian, scheytsel des hoofds, sinciput; q. "the shed of the head." He expl. scheytsel, divisio, separatio. The Swedes have a singular phrase, meant to convey the same idea as ours; Hon har bitit hufvudet af skammen; She is past shame; literally, "She has bitten the head off shame." The learned Verelius has given an old Isl. proverb, which has a considerable portion of that kind of zest, which seems to have been so grateful to our honest but unpollished ancestors. Skomhundum skitu refar i brunni; Impudentibus canibus cacarunt vulpes in fonte vel puteo.

SCHEIDIS, s. pl. [An errat. for SCHEILDIS, shields.]

Thus thai mellit, and met with ane stout stevin.
Thir luffy ledis on the land, without legiance,
With seymely scheidis to schew thai set upone sevin;
Thir cumly knightis to kyth ane cruel course maid.

Gawan and Gol., iii. 2.

"Shields," Gl.

[Set upon sevin, encountered in battle. For other meanings of this phrase see Halliwell's Dict. under Set: evidently it is the origin of our modern phrase, at sizes and sevens.]

SCHEIK, s. 1. The cheek, Aberd. Reg.

[2. Metaph., bold assertion, mere wind, insincerity, expressing with the lips what does not come from the heart, Shetl.]

SCHEILD, s. A common sewer.

"Syndry Inglismen knew all the secretis of the place, & clam up throw ane scheild, and brak the wall in sic manner that thai maid ane quiet passage to thair fallowis." Bellend. Cron., B. xvi. c. 18. Per cloacam subterranean, Boeth.

"The heretik Arius blasphemit our saluour Christ denyand his deuinitie, bot he eschāpit nocht the vengeance of God, for quhen he passit to the scheild to purge his wame, al his bowallis & guttis fell doune throw him, and swa deit miserablie." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, 1551, Fol. 33, b.

A.-S. scelle, terrae concavitas; Su.-G. Dan. skiul, a shed, a covert, a shelter; Germ. schilt, Alem. sciltis, a hiding-place. A sewer might receive this name, as being covered.

SCHEILL, in pl. Schelis. V. SHEAL.

[SCHEIP, s. A sheep.]

SCHEIP-HEWIT, adj. Having the hew or colour of the wool, as it comes from the sheep, not dyed.

This lowrie little ansuer mackis
Bot on a gray bonnet he tackis;
A scheip hewit clock to cover his cleathis;
But lad or boy to Leyth he geathis;
Lapp in a bott, and maid him boun;
Sen syne he cam not in the toun.

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent. p. 342.

Thus it appears, not only that cloaks or mantles of undyed wool had been worn in the beginning of the seventeenth century, by men of the lower classes, but that this term was then in use.

SCHEIP-KEIPAR, s. [Lit. groat-saver, cheap-liver; applied to a penurious churl.]

That pedder brybour, that scheip-keipar,
He tellis thame ilk ane caik by caik.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 171.

This does not signify shepherd, as might seem at first view; for this idea has no connexion with the rest of the stanza. V. Hegeskaper. It might signify shopkeeper, from A.-S. scopp, Belg. schap, as mention is made, a little downward, of his buith. I question, however, if shopkeeper was a term then in use. As there is here a description of a penurious wretch who stays at home when bread is to be baked, counts it all caik by caik, and carefully locks it up; scheip-keipar may signify keeper of provisions, from the same origin with Scaff, scuffer, q. v. [Grain, and especially oats, when husked was said to be shaped, shaped, or scaped; and oats in that state were called shapes, shaps, scaps, scapins. Hence, as oats formed the chief article of food in Scotland, one who was saving of his food would be called a shape-keeper, a groat-saver.]

[To SCHEIR, v. a. To cut, but generally applied to the cutting of corn. V. SCHERE.]

SCHEIRAR, s. A reaper. V. SHEARER.

VOL. IV.

SCHEL, SHEL, s. [A shell; metaph., pudendum muliebre; pl. schellis, Lyndsay. Answer to the Kingis Flyting, l. 45.]

"A strumpet," Sibb. Gl.

In the passage referred to, which is rather too coarse for insertion, Lyndsay, with great freedom, warns James V. of the ignominy and evil consequences of his voluptuous life; and, in two different stanzas, he compares him to a restless ram running [about among the sheep.]

[SCHELDIS, s. pl. Shields, Barbour, vi. 217.]

SCHELIS, pl. Wynter schelis, Bellend. V. SHEAL.

SCHELLIS, s. pl. Apparently, scales. "A pair of schellis;" Aberd. Reg. Teut. schaele, lanx.

SCHELL-PADDOCK, s. The land tortoise.

—Schell-paddock, ill-shapen shit,
Kid-bearded jennet, all alike grit.

Watson's Coll., ii. 54.

"That thair be cunyiet ane penny of silver called the Mary ryal,—havand on the ane side ane Palm tre crownit, ane schell-poddok: crepand up the shank of the samyn." Cardonnel's Numismata Scot. Pref., p. 18. He, by mistake expl. this lizard, p. 98.

This intelligent writer, in his Note on this Act, inadvertently contradicts the text. For he says: "The famous yew tree of Cruickstone, the inheritance of the family of Darnley in the parish of Paisley, is made the reverse of this new coin."

That this had been the common name in the first part of the seventeenth century appears from Wedderburn. "Testudo, a schell-poddok," Vocab., p. 15.

Belg. schilpau, Teut. schilt-padd, testudo; according to Kilian, from its resemblance to a shield. But it seems more natural to think, that it received this name from its being covered with a shell, q. the shell-frog, Su.-G. skyllpadda, or as Ihre writes it, skylpadda, id. Wachter derives schilpadda from schilt, not as signifying a shield but a covering; tectum, operimentum.

SCHELLUM, s. A low worthless fellow.

"The gratitude of thae dumb brutes, and of that pair innocent, brings the tears into my auld een, while that schellum Malcolm—but I'm obliged to Colonel Talbot for putting my honours into such good condition, and likewise for purr Davie." Waverley, iii. 346.

Skinner gives skellum in the same sense. V. SHELUM.

SCHELTRUM, s. V. SCHILTRUM.

SCHENE, SCHEYNE, SCHANE, SCHAND, adj.

1. Shining, bright.

Now passis furth Cupide full diligent—
Berand with him the Kingis giftis schene,
Qubilk suld be present to the riall Quene.

Doug. Virgil, 35, 17.

2. Beautiful.

On kneis scho felle, and cryit, For Marye scheyne,
Let skiandryr be, and flemyt out of your thoct.

Wallace, ii. 336, MS.

Or here perhaps it signifies pure.

It is often used substantively, like bright, &c.

This Dawy Erle gat on that schene

Dawy, that wes slayne at Kyllblene.

Wyntoun, viii. 6. 229.

R

Mr. Macpherson observes, that "this very much resembles Ossian's beautiful metaphor of Sun-beam, or simply Beam." Note, p. 497.
Schane and schand, id. It is said of the Peacock, that he is Schrowd in his schene weid, and schane in his schaip.

Houlate, i. 7, MS.

I have appeillit to your presence, pretious and puir,
 To ask help into haist at your Holynace,
 That ye wald crye upoun Christ, that all hes in cuir,
 To schape me ane schand bird in a schort space.
Ibid., 9, MS.

A.-S. scen, scon, Su.-G. skon, skion, Germ. schon, id. from A.-S. scin-an, Germ. schein-en, to shine.

SCHENE, SCHEYNE, s. Beauty.

My schroud and my schene were schyre to be schawin.
Houlate, iii. 22.

Yit than his schyne, cullour, and figure glaid
 Is not al went, nor his bewty defaid.

Doug. Virgil, 362, 24.

In this metaph. sense fulgor seems to be used in the original. V. SCHAND, id.

SCHENKIT, part. pa.

Thair speris in splendris sprent,
 On scheidis schenkit and schent.

Gawain and Gol., ii. 24.

Burst, Pinkerton. But it seems rather to mean, agitated, shaken; Germ. schwenck-en, motitare, turbare; swack-en, labare. In Edit. 1503, schonkit.

SCHENT, part. pa. 1. Confounded, disturbed.

All thouch the erth wald myddyl with the see,
 And with diluge or inundatioun schent,
 Couir and confound athir element.

Doug. Virgil, 414, 44.

2. Overpowered, overcome.

Bot sum time eike to thame ouercummin and schent
 Agane returnis in breistis hardiment.

Doug. Virgil, 51, 23.

3. Degraded, dishonoured.

—In quhat land lyeis thou manglit and schent,
 Thy fare body and membris tyrryt and rent?

Doug. Virgil, 294, 26.

Quhan from the scharp rolk skarslie with grete slicht
 Sergestus can vpweille his schip eull dicht,
 Mokkit and schent scho cummis hame full slaw.

Ibid., 136, 45.

In both these places, it may, however, signify, marred, maimed. Chaucer, shend, to ruin. It is also used O.E. as signifying to degrade.

A.-S. scend-an, confundere, dedecorare; Teut.
schend-en, id. also, violare, deformare.

To SCHENT, v. a. and n. 1. To destroy, to kill.

—Queene Helene I espy.—
 Sche dreding les the Troyanis wald hir schent,
 And cast sum way for hir distruction,
 Becaus all Troy for hir was thus bet down—
 Hir self sche hid therefore.—

Doug. Virgil, 53, 6.

Thus it is used, O.E.

To deeth they wold me have ydo.—
 Be wordes of har mouthe,
 Well may man kouth they schend.

Lybeaus, Ritson's E. M. R., ii. 86.

2. To go to ruin.

Thy service mony sair repents,— Quhen body, fame, and substance shents,
 And saul in perel.

Scott, Evergreen, i. 112.

This is evidently formed from the part. pa. of the O.E. v. Schend.

[To SCHER, v. V. SCHERE.]

SCHERAGGLE, s. A disturbance; a squabble, Upp. Clydes. V. SHIRRAGLIE.

SCHERALD, SCHERET, SCHARET, s. A green turf; shirrel, shirret, Aberd. Banffs.

And he him self the Troyane men fute hate
 On sonkis of gersy scheraldis has doun set.

Doug. Virgil, 216, 52.

—To the commoun goldis eik bedene
 The altaris couerit with the scherald grene.

Ibid., 410, 53.

"It had na out passage bot at ane part quhilk was Belland. Cron., B. iv. c. 3.

"The confiderat kyngis to put remeid to thir im-pedimentis, and that the curage and spreit of thair army suld not deokay be lang tary commandit ilk man to wyn als mony scherettis on the ground (as he mycht beir) to mak ane gait throw the mos to assaille thair ennymies." Ibid., B. viii., c. 13. Cespites terra exci-dere, Boeth.

"The floors [were] laid with green scharrets and spreits, medwarts, and flowers, that no man knew whereon he yeid, but as he had been in a garden."
Pitcottie, p. 146.

"On a suddenty, our great gilligapous fallow o' a coachman turned o'er our gallant cart amon' a heap o' shirrets an' peat-mow." Journal from London, p. 3.

"Shirrets, tufts," Gl. Shirr.

"From shear, q. d. new shorn or cut out," Rudd., Sibb. Perhaps rather from Germ. schar-en, scherr-en, terras scalpere, radere; scharte, fragmentum, res fracta, (caesura) Teut. schorre, gleba, cespes; Kilian.

SCHERE, SHEER, adj. Waggish; A sheer dog, a wag, S.

Teut. sheer-en, illudere, nugari; or it may be merely an oblique use of E. sheer. V. SCHIRE, adj.

To SCHERE, SCHER, v. a. and n. 1. To cut, to part, to divide.

The varyant vesture of the venust vale
 Schrowdes the scherand fur.

Doug. Virgil, 400, 38.

[2. To cut corn, or grass with a hook, S.]

[SCHERAND, part. pr. Shearing, cutting,
 Barbour, xvi. 455.]

SCHERE, SHEAR, s. 1. The parting between the thighs, S.

Like to ane woman her onir portrature,
 Ane fair virginis body doune to hir schere;
 Bot hir bynd partis ar als grete wele nere
 As bene the hidduous huddum or ane quhale.

Doug. Virgil, 82, 23.

[2. A cut, slice; used also for sherin, q. v.
 Clydes.]

A.-S. scear-an, scindere; Su.-G. skaera, partiri.
 Hence,

SCHERE-BANE, SHEAR-BANE, s. The os pubis, S.

In Teut. there is a v. which has a great resemblance; scherde-been-en, grillare, divaricari, distendere pedes, sive crura; to stride.

[SCHERERE, SCHERARE, s. A shearer; also, one who dresses the pile of cloth, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 17, Dickson.]

SCHERENE, s. Syren, enchantress.

Natour sa craftely alwey
Hes done depaint that sweet scherene. —
Bannatyne Poems, p. 191.

To SCHESCH, v. a. To elect, to choose.
Scheschit, Aberd. Reg., V. 16.

To SCHETE, v. a. To shut.

The paill saulis he cauchis out of hell,
And vthir sum thare with gan schete ful hot
Deip in the soroufull grisle hellis pot.
Doug. Virgil, 108, 15.

Pret. schet, shut. V. UNWAR.

This v. was used in O.E. "Schettyn with lockes. Sero. Obsero.—Schetynge, schettynge or sperynge, clausura. Schettynge out. Exclusio." Prompt. Parv. A.-S. scyt-an, obserare, Teut. schutt-en, intercludere, claudere. Perhaps the original idea is retained in Su.-G. skut-a, trudere, impellere; a door being shut by a push or thrust.

[SCHETHIS, s. pl. The projecting sides of a cart; also, the cross timbers to which the bottom of the cart is nailed, Accts. L. H. Treasurer, i. 281, 291, Dickson.]

[To SCHIEW, SHEW, v. a. and n. To swing; also, to move up and down, to shove; as, "To schew on a yett," i.e., to swing on a gate; "To schew the box roun," to shove, &c., Clydes.]

[SCHIEW, s. A swing, a sea-saw; also, a shove, ibid.]

SCHIEWE, pret. Shoved.

Himself the cowbil with his bolm furth schewe,
And quhen him list halit vp salis fewe.
Doug. Virgil, 173, 49.

Teut. schuyt-en, protrudere.

To SCHIEW, v. a. and n. To sew, S.

"Item, ane dowblet of blak sating cuttit out upoun blak taffate, with ane small freinye of gold, and but-tonis of schewing gold in the breist." Inventories, A. 1542, p. 89. This, in the next article, is called "sewing gold."

To SCHEYFF, v. n. To escape.

He said, My lorde, my consaill will I gif;
Bot ye do it, frai scaith ye may not scheyff,
Yhe mon tak pees, with out mar taryng,
As for a tyme we may sent to the King.
Wallace, iii. 264, MS.

Teut. schuff-en, to fly.

[SCHEYNE, adj. Beautiful. V. SCHENE.]

SCHEYTSCHAKKING, s. A duty formerly exacted from farmers, who had grain to sell, in the market of Aberdeen. Those who bought up the grain had claimed as a perquisite all that adhered to the sacks, sheets, &c. Aberd. Reg., A. 1541. V. SKATT, v.

Doug. Virgil, 297, 34.

3. Improperly used to denote a large piece of flesh cut off.

Furth haue thay rent thare entrellys ful varude,—
Syne hakyng thame by tailleys and be sydis,
In the hayt flambis brycht has thame laid.
Doug. Virgil, 455, 62.

As conjoined with tailleys, this can scarcely signify sides or halves of the animal. Frusta is the word used by Maffei. Caesim in frusta trucidant.

Rudd. derives it from Lat. scidium, Gr. σχιδιον, from σχίζω, scindo. But whatever relation this word may be supposed radically to have to the Gr., it is immediately allied to A.-S. scide, a billet of wood, Lancash. shide; Isl. Su.-G. skid, Germ. scheit, lignum fissum, lamina liguea; split-wood.

The s., in its various forms, has evidently originated from the Goth. verbs, signifying to separate, or divide; as Teut. scheyd-en, scheed-en, dividere; Lat. scind-o, scid-i. V. SCIED, v.

SCHILL, adj. Shrill, S. V. SKIRL.

Doug. Virgil, 201, 35.

This term occurs, although rarely, in O.E.

Than blew the trumpes fulle loud & full schille.

R. Brunne, p. 30.

Sibb. oddly refers to Teut. schrey, clamor. It is evidently allied very closely to Alem. scill-en, schell-en. skell-en, sonare. Psalterium scillit also ein lira; Psalterium sonat instar lyrae; Notker. Psal. cxli. 1. Din stimma schell in minen oron; Thy voice sounds in my ears; Willeram. cap. ii. 14. ap. Wachter. Sw. skall, skat, sound; Isl. skiall, sonorous, skiall hogg, verber sonorum; Germ. schall, schall-en, to sound, schellen, tingling; Belg. een schelle stem, a shrill voice. Hence Germ. schelle, a bell; S. skellet, q. v. a sort of rattle; Gael. sgulam, to tinkle, to give a shrill cry, is evidently allied.

SCHILL, SCHIL, adj. Chill, S.B.

—Full off in schil wynteris tyde,
 The gum or glaw amyd the worldis wyde,
 Is wount to schene yellow on the grane new.

Doug. Virgil, 170, 10.

Schill, ibid. 134, 30. The S. pronunciation has more affinity than the E. to Su.-G. seal, subfrigidus; a word, which, according to Ihre, is used only by the Swedes. Hence Isl. seal-a, refrigerare. He says that it properly denotes chillness produced by the breeze, from swaler, aura. But as E. chill has been immediately formed from A.-S. cele, algor, perhaps we ought to trace Su.-G. seal to kyl-a, refrigerare.

SCHILLING, s. Grain freed from the husk. V. SHILLING.SCHILTRUM, SCHILTRUM, SCHYLTRUM, s. [A squadron, a compact body of armed men.]

The Inglis men, on othyr party,
 That as angelis schane brychtly,

 That thal war in, to bid fechtung;
 Or that it wes for abaying;
 I wate nocht. But in a schilthrum
 It semyt thal war all and sum;
 Owtane the awawarl anerly,

 Be thaim selwyn, arayit war.

Barbour, xii. 425, MS.

Wyntoun, viii. 11, 35.

According to Mr. Macpherson, this is "a word of which the precise meaning is unknown, if indeed it has not had more meanings than one." Mr. Pinkerton observes, that, "from Hearn's Robert of Gloucester, it appears that a schilthrum is an host ranged in a round form." The Bruce, vol. ii., p. 137, N. It would seem that neither of these gentlemen has observed that the word is immediately derived from A.-S. I find it spelled two ways. Scel-truma, coetus, cohors, turma. According to this orthography, it would appear to be composed of scel, a multitude, and trum, a troop or band, or composition of the word indicates nothing as to the form, though it is clear from Barbour's description that this was peculiar; for he describes the vanguard as differently disposed. The true orthography seems to be scylt-truma, which Lye renders, scutum validum, testudo. Thus he has evidently viewed the word as compounded of scylt, a shield, and trum, powerful. But perhaps the last word is rather truma, q. a troop with shields, or a troop in the form of a shield.

This etymon, as well as the translation of the word by testudo, indicates the form of the Schilthrum. I need scarcely say, that properly it must have meant a body of armed men closely joined to each other, and covering their heads with their bucklers, so that the massive weapons of their enemies could not hurt them. In this sense A.-S. scylthrum was certainly used. For Lye quotes a phrase from Aelfric's Gram. which conveys this idea. Under thiccum scylt-truma, subter densa testudine. This term therefore expresses that figure which has been called in Gr. χελων, Lat. testudo, Fr. tortue, E. tortoise, Belg. schild-paet, Germ. schild-krote, a tortoise, schild-duck, testudo militaris.

But although this must have been the original meaning, there is no certain evidence that it is used in this sense by Barbour. All that clearly appears, from his description of the battle of Bannockburn, is, that the whole army of the English, except the vanguard, formed one body, instead of being in distinct battalions, like that of the Scots. For having said of the Scots, that they were

In thair bataillis all purwayit

With thair braid baneris all displayit;

and that

Thai went all furth in gud aray,

And tuk the plane full apertly;

he adds, that the English

War nocht arrayit on sic maner:

For all thair bataillis samyn wer

In a schilthrum.

B. xii. 411, 420, 427, &c.

He says, that he knows not whether this was for want of room to extend themselves properly, or from fear. Afterwards he calls this large body a gret schelthrum, 443. Wyntoun seems to use the term still more generally, as merely denoting a body of armed men, and as equivalent to Hyrsale, q. v. Lye, vo. Hreotha, conjectures that the military tortoise was also called, by the A.-Saxons, Bord-hreotha, and Scylt-hreotha.

The word occurs in Rich. Coeur de Lyon—

Asonder he brake the scheltron.

It is also used by R. Brunne, when describing the Battle of Faukirke [Falkirk], p. 305—

Ther scheltron sone was shad with Inglis that were gode.

Shad signifies parted, separated. Warton understands scheltron as denoting "soldiers drawn up in a circle;" Hist. E. P. i. 166. This seems indeed to be the meaning of the term, according to the description given by R. Brunne, p. 304, 305—

Our Inglis men & thei ther togilere mette,

Ther forinast conrey, thier bakkis togilere sette,

Ther speres poynt ouer poynt, so sare & so thikke,

& fast togilere joynt, to se it was ferlike.—

Strength suld non haf had, to pette thaim thogh oute,

So wer thei set sad with poyntes rounde aboute.

"The Scottes," according to Hollinshed, "were deuided into four schilthrons, as they termed them, or as we may say, round battailes, in forme of a circle, in the whiche stode the people, that caried long staves or speares which they crossed pyntly together one wythin an other, betwixt which schiltroons or round battails were certain spaces left, the which were filled wyth theyr archers and bowmen, and behinde all these were theyr horsmen placed." V. Gl. R. Brunne, p. 647.

[Lit., a shield-troop, i.e., an armed company; from A.-S. scyld, a shield, and truma, a troop; and, as generally used, the term does not imply any particular form of the company. Indeed, Wyclif uses it to translate "aciem" in 1 Kings iv. 2. V. Prof. Skeat's note to Barbour, xii. 429.]

SCHIMMER, s. Glare.

"We descried, by the schimmer of the snow, and a ghastly streak of moon-light—that passed over the fields, a farm steading." R. Gilhaize, ii. 276.

"The ocean was all glowing and golden with the schimmer of the setting sun." Ibid., i. 45. V. SKIMMERIN.

Doug. Virgil, 112, 48.

The same idiom appears in Sw. skips-brott, from bryt-a, to break. Teut. schip-broke, shipwreck; and Lat. naufragium, from navis and frango.

SCHIFFAIR, s. The act of making a voyage; navigation, a sea voyage.

It was so usual, in ancient writing, to confer this title on persons of rank or authority, that R. of Brunne dubbs Noah himself.

Of thare dedes salla be my sawe,
In what tyme & of what lawe,
I salla yow schewe fro gre to gre,
Sen the tyme of Sir Noe.

Prolog. to Chron., xcvi.

This title was also given to Popes and Bishops.

Wyntoun, vii. 7. 219.

The Byschape that tyme of Glasgwe,

Ibid., ix. 12. 98.

This title descended at length to ordinary Priests. V. POPE'S KNIGHTS. Rudd. derives it from Fr. sieur, as contracted from seigneur, from Lat. senior. But the etymon given by the learned Hickes is far more probable, from Goth. Sihor, lord. Augustine informs us, that the Gothic Christians, who were captives at Rome, used to say in their own barbarous language, Arme Sihor, i.e., Lord have mercy. This is from sihor, or sigora, as signifying a victor, one who triumphs; and this from sige, victory. Wormius observes, that Sir or Siar was used more anciently than Her, which has the same meaning.

2. Schir is still used in comp. in the sense of father, S. V. GUDSCHYR.

SCHIRE, SCHYRE, SHIRE, adj. 1. Clear, bright, E. sheer.

2. Clear, as opposed to what is muddy.

"Clear liquor we call shire," S.B. Gl. Shirr. also improperly applied to what is thin in the texture, as "thin cloth," ibid.

3. Pure, mere, S.

Buchanan's Detection, F. i. b.

In the Queen's letter, appointing the trial of Bothwell, all the messengers, employed to summon the accuser and witnesses, are called "schireffs in that part conjunctlie and seuerallie, speciallie constitute." Ibid., E. 8. a.

This is evidently an improper, as it is an unusual, sense of the word, instead of maires or schireff's serians.

SCHIRRA, SCHIRRAYE, s. A sheriff.

Barbour, v. 157, MS.

Scho is universally the reading in MS., where sche occurs in the copies.

The use of this term, in speaking of a female, instead of naming her, had been deemed by our good mothers so disrespectful as to give rise to a proverb, which consists in a play on the word as susceptible of a different meaning.

"Had you such a shoe on every foot, you would shochel."—"A scornful return of a woman to a fellow that calls her sche [it should have been scho] and not by her name." Kelly, p. 142.

The point of this reply consists in scho, and the E. word shoe, being pronounced in S. exactly with the same sound, S.

Moes-G. so, soh, Isl. su, A.-S. seo, id. Dr. Johns. mentions Moes-G. si as synon.; but has not observed that so is not only the article prefixed to the feminine gender, but also, as well as si, used as the pron. feminine; So quino; This woman, Luke vii. 39. Thatei habaida so; Which she had; Mar. xiv. 8.

Wyntown, viii. 39, 84.

This phrase of winning shone seems very ancient. As connected with hose, it is often used in old Ballads, with respect to a page, or boy who acts as a servant. It is still vulgarly said of a servant who is a bad worker, that he is not fit to win schone to himself. It seems uncertain whether it originated from the circumstance of stockings and shoes constituting the wages of a boy, as, in many places, a pair of shoes is still one article promised as part of wages; or from the marauding warfare carried on in former times. The language of Wyntown would suggest an idea rather ludicrous, that when Knights were in want of shoes, they were sent to make an inroad in order to carry off cattle, for affording them the necessary supply; as David Bruce is said to employ his knights. The hides might at times be as necessary as the beeves themselves. We certainly know that the Lady of the Manor used in former times, when her larder was nearly empty, to present a covered dish containing a pair of clean spurs, as a signal to the Laird and his retainers to set off in quest of a supply. V. Minstrelsy of the Border, i. Introd. cviii. But Wyntown most probably uses the phrase, as borrowed from the wages of a hireling, to denote an act of service, and the reward connected with it in the enjoyment of the booty.

SCHOR, SCHORE, SCHOIR, adj. 1. Steep, abrupt; including the idea of rugged.

—Twasum samyn mycht nocht rid

Ibid., ver. 600, MS.

This is evidently the same with schore, Doug. Virgil, 342. 16.

On cais thare stude ane meikle schip that tyde,
Hir wail joned til ane schore rolkis syde.

Radd. views the term as denoting the shore, and the whole phrase as signifying "a rock hard by the shore, or lying flat or low as the shore." But schore undoubtedly corresponds to A.-S. scorene; scorene clif, abrupta rapes, a craggy rock or cliff, Somner; from A.-S. scyr-an, to separate, Su.-G. skoer-a, to break; skoer, brittle, easily broken. The Germ. v. schor-en, eminere, is used to denote rocks rising out of the sea. This sense exactly agrees with the phrase used by Virg. Crepidin saxi.

—Duris cautibus, assiduam praecepta mole ruinam Intentans—Lat. Vers.

Thus it conveys the idea of a rock that is not only precipitous, but so shattered as to threaten the destruction of those who approach it.

2. Rough, rugged; without the idea of steepness conjoined.

Sa tha sam folk he send to the dep furl,
Gert set the ground with scharp spykis off burd;
Bot ix or x he kest a gait befor,
Langis the schauld maid it bath dep and schor.
Wallace, x. 44, MS.

[3. High, mighty; as, a schore chiftane, a high and mighty chieftain.]

—Avenand Schir Ewin thair ordanit, that thre
To the schore chiftane chargit fra the kyng.
Gawain and Goh., ii. 3.

SCHOR, SCHORE, s. 1. [A steep rock, a rocky coast; hence metaph., a forbidding prospect.]

"Bishop Finlay had been raised—to the dignity—less for his love and piety than for other qualities, which were thought in that age to be of an account as good in the management of the Highland schores." Spawife, i. 54.

"As for Edmonstone,—he has not the ruth of a Highland schore." Ibid., p. 144.

Gael. schor signifies a champion. But this may be allied to S. schor, rough, rugged.

In Ayra, the phrase, "a Highland shore," signifies a dark outlook," i.e., a gloomy, or forbidding prospect; apparently in allusion to a mariner, who is driven towards the land, and sees nothing before him but the bleak and rocky coast of the Highlands.

2. A threatening, Loth. Tweedd.

The King than stud full sturlyly,
And the fyvesum, in full gret hy
Come, with gret schor and manassing.
Barbour, vi. 621, MS.

Be necht abaysit for thair schor,
Bot settis speris yow befor.
Ibid., xi. 562, MS.

Erl he was maid off bot schort tyme befor,
He brukit nocht for all his bustuous schor.
Wallace, vii. 1079, MS.

Mr. Pinkerton renders this boasting, as used by Barbour; Lord Hailes, scorn in the following passage—

Weill, quoth the Wolf, thy language outragius
Camis of kynd; sa your fader befor
Held me at bait als with bostis and schoir.
Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 117.

Thi schore compt I nocht ane laik.
Gawain and Goh., i. 8.

i.e., I reckon not thy threatening a disgrace to me. In Edit. 1508, instead of laik, it is caik.

Sibb. derives the v. from Sw. skorr-a, reprehendere. But it is not used in this sense. It merely signifies, to grate, to make a harsh noise. It may be allied to Su.-G. skur-a, primarily to scowr, to clean; in a secondary sense, to chide; skur, reprehension; taga en i skur, to quarrel one; Mod. Sax. schur-en, id. Eenac to degen schuren, to chide one severely. Dan. skurren, discord. In a similar sense it is vulgarly said, S. I gaff him a skour, I scolded him severely. Lat. scurre, a low jest, might thus be viewed as a cognate.

Prob., this v. was originally used in relation to objects, which, from their external position, threatened to fall. Thus a crag broken off from, or slightly attached to, a ridge of rocks, might be said, in an oblique sense, to schore a person sitting or passing under it, because being a schor rock, or broken off from the mass, it was likely to tumble down, and thus threatened destruction to passengers. V. SCHOR, adj. and SCAR.

Schoir is used by Dunbar, in one place, where it cannot bear this sense.

Quhan that the nycht dois lenthin houris,
With wind, with hail, and havy schouris,
My dulé spreit dois lurk for schoir,
My hairt for langour dois foirloir.

Maitland Poems, p. 125.

Mr. Pinkerton seems to view it as here meaning terror. Perhaps it may signify grief, vexation, from Germ. schur, id. Or it may mean, lurks for protection, from Fr. essor-er, to shroud one's self from wet, to shun approaching or threatening storms; Cotgr.

To SCHOR, SCHORE, SCHOIR, v. a. 1. To threaten, S.; synonym. boist; part. pr. schorand.

—Awful Enee
Can thaym manace, that name sa bald suld be;—
Schorand the ciété to distroy and doune cast,
Gif ony help or supplé to hym schew.
Doug. Virgil, 439, 49.

—Priest, sober bee,
And fecht not, nouthor boist nor schoir.
Spec. Godlie Songs, p. 20.

Fyrst, do behald yon schorand heuchis brow,
Quhare all yone craggy rochis-hingis now.
Doug. Virgil, 247, 27.

"Quhat panis or punitiones ar thair, quhilkis eftir the scripture, God schoris to all the brekars and transgressouris of his commandis?" Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 7, a.

"The enemy, after this long storm, shoring to fall down on Glasgow, turned to Argyle, and went through it all without opposition." Baillie's Lett., ii. 93.

This word is still used in Loth., Clydes., and in the South. It is said of a day that looks very gloomy, that it shores rain.

2. To scold, S.

SCHORE, s. [A shower of rain.]

Stand at defence, and schrink not for ane schore:
Think on the haly marthyris that are went.
Doug. Virgil, Frol., 356, 13.

Junius renders this pugna, Etym. But Rudd. considers it as simply signifying a shower of rain. It appears that this metaph. used, was a proverbial phrase in former times.

Thocht all beginnings be maist hard,
The end is plesand afterward;
Then schrink not for a schoure.
Cherrie and Slae, st. 37.

The sense given by Rudd. is confirmed by the language of the Scottish Translator of this Poem, who wrote so early as 1631, and must have known the use of many words and phrases now unintelligible, or very obscure. He renders it,

—Tenuis veniente procella
Illico non paveas.
Cerasum et Silvestre Pomum, p. 19, 20.

[SCHORT, adj. Short, curtailed, wanting, insufficient, Barbour, vii. 268.]

Su.-G. Isl. skort-a, deesse, to be deficient; A.-S. ge-schort-en, Germ. Belg. schort-en, id.

Mr. Tooke expl. E. short, q. shored, shor'd, as literally signifying, cut off, from A.-S. scir-an, to shear, to cut, to divide; as "opposed to long, which means extended, long being also a past participle of leng-ian, to extend, or to stretch out." Divers. Purley, ii. 172.

Ihre vj^{tes} A.-S. scort, brevis, or Lat. curt-us, as the origin. That the letter s was prefixed appears probable from Su.-G. kort, which has a more simple form, being used in the same sense.

To SCHORT, v. a. and n. 1. To grow short, to decrease, to contract.

Yit quhan the nycht begynnys to schort,
It dois my spreit sum pairt confort.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 127.

2. To curtail.

She was tyred with his speeches,—
But he some patience extorted,
By promissing that he should short it.
Cleland's Poems, p. 32.

Scort is used in O. E. as a v. a., in the sense of shorten.

Thorgh Edrike's conseile Knoute did him slo,
& tok quene Emme & wedded hir to wife,
Thorgh Edrike's conseile, scho scorted his life.
R. Brunne, p. 49.

3. Applied to the means used for producing an imaginary abbreviation of time, and preventing langour, S.

Wyth dyuers sermond carpend all the day,
Thay short the houris, driuand the tyme away.
Doug. Virgil, 473, 51.

And quhill thay thus towart the ciété pas,
With sindry sermons shortis he the way.
Ibid., 252, 25.

Thus with sic manere talking euery wicht
Gan driuing ouer, and shortis the lang nycht.
Ibid., 475, 47.

Shakespeare uses this metaph. though in an E. form—

Say, what abridgement have you for this evening?
What masque? what music? how shall we beguile
The lazy time, if not with some delight?
Midsummer Night's Dream.

4. To recreate or amuse one's self; with the pron. prefixed or subjoined, S.

The clerk rejoyis his bukis ouer to seyne,
The luffyre to behald his lady gay,
Young folke tham schortis with gam, solace and play.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 125, 13.

They fall to wersling on the goldin sand,
Assayand honest gammis tham to schorte.
Ibid., 187, 29.

Yit sure I furth, lansing ourthort the landis
Towart the sey, to short me on the sandis.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 226.

This is evidently a metaph. use of the v. as signifying to abbreviate. The same transition may be remarked in the formation of Isl. skent-a, tempus delectamentis fallo, skentum, temporis quasi decurtatio; from skam, short, G. Andr. V. Ihre. Teut. scherts-en, Germ. scherz-en, Belg. schers-en, jocari, nugari, ludere, have a great resemblance. But the analogy between these, and the terms signifying to shorten, is lost, if the assertion of Wachter be well-founded, that the primary sense of scherz-en, is ludere, salire, lascivire. He derives it from Gr. skript-aw, id. Ital. scherz-are, to joke, is evidently from the same origin, whatever this may be.

SCHORTE, s. [Prob., mirth, sport, fun.]

There is na sege for na schame that schrynkis at schorte
May he cum to hys cast be cloyking but coist,
He rekkyis nowthir the richt, nor rekles report.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, a. 25.

At schorte seems here to signify, at a taunt or derision; whether as allied to Teut. scherts, jocus, I shall not pretend to determine.

Elsewhere at schort signifies quickly.

Hay, hay, go to, than cry thay with ane schout,
And with ane huge brute Troianis at short
Thare wallis stuffit, and closit euery port.
Doug. Virgil, 275, 4.

VOL. IV.

SCHORTSUM, adj. 1. Cheerful, merry, S. B.

2. Causing cheerfulness, S. B.

"Any thing that is pleasant and delightful is called Scot. shortsum;" Rudd.

The term is understood as including the idea of the reverse of what is denoted by the Fr. word ennui. It is analogous to our expressive national phrase, to hand ane out o' langer.

3. Applied to a pleasant situation, Buchan.

V. SCHORT, v. a.

[SCHOT, pret. Rushed, dashed, Barbour, viii. 54; A.-S. scēotan, to shoot, rush, dash.]

[SCHOT, s. 1. Rush, dash, onset, Ibid. xii. 77.

2. A shot, a stone shot for war-engines, Ibid. xi. 119; also, shot, shooting, xiii. 48, 52, 75.]

SCHOT, SCHOTE, SHOT, s. [A window set on hinges and opening outward like a shutter.]

Ane shot wyndo unschet ane litel on char,
Persaunt the mornnyng bla, wan and har.
—The schote I closit, and drew inward in by,
Cheuerand for call, the sessoun was so snell,
Schupe with hait flambs to steme the fresing fell.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 202, 24, 33.

This is expl. by Rudd, "the shutter of a window."

"There was on a scaffold opposite the cross,—read by Mr. Archibald Johnston, a protestation, avowed by Cassils, &c.—Some out of shots [small round or oval windows] cried rebels, on the readers." Baillie's Lett., i. 68, 69.

The words in brackets have evidently been inserted by the editor. But he seems to have mistaken the sense. Wodrow explains it otherwise.

"Her house was upon the East side of the Salt-market [Glasgow], towards the foot of it, in a timber fore-land, with windows called shots, or shutters of timber, and a few inches of glass above them." Hist., ii. 286.

Chaucer also uses the term.

And forth he goth, jolif and amorous,
Til he came to the carpenteres hous,
A litel after the cockes had ycrow,
And dressed him up by a shot window.

Miller's T. ver. 3353.

"A shot window," according to Mr. Tooke, "means a projected window, thrown out beyond the rest of the front: what we now call a Bow window." Divers. Purley, ii. 132. He derives it from A.-S. scil-an, projicere. [In the West of S. such a window is called an outshot window. The shot window, or shot, is one that can be opened or shut like a door or shutter by turning on its hinges.]

[SCHIOT, s. A compartment in the stern of a boat, Shetl.]

SCHIOT, part. pa. Allowed to expire, or elapse.

—"We did examine the Lard of Cesfurde our Wardane of our middill merchis; and be his report undirstude the occasion of the delay of justice, gif ony hes occurrit this tyme bypast, stude not in his defalt, being alwayis reddie to haif observit dayis of Trew, and to haif maid and ressavit redres of all attemptattis according to the law of merchis, and yit were the dayis of Trew schot on the partie of Ingland." Instruct. to Sir A. Ker of Hirsell, Keith's Hist. App., p. 170, 171.

Su.-G. skiut-a upp, differre, quasi diceres ultra diem conductum procrastinare; Ihre, vo. Skiuta, trudere, s. 3.

[SCHOTS, SCHOTTS, s. Called also fore-shots, overproof spirits. V. SHOTS.]

SCHOUFER, s. A chaffern, a dish for keeping water warm.

"Item, twa doubill planttis maid to refraine heit watter in maner of schoufer. Item, four schouferis." Inventories, A. 1542, p. 72.

Fr. eschauff-er, to warm.

[SCHOUR, s. A shower, Barbour, xiii. 43.]

SCHOURE, s. A part, a division; applied to music.

Quhen thay had sangin, and said, softly a schoure;
And plaid as of paradys it a poynt war;
In come jaland the Ja, as a jugloure.

Houlate, iii. 11.

Teut. scheur, shore, ruptura; scheur-en, to divide, A.-S. scyr-an, id. scyr-maculum, divisio partibus. This term seems to have been anciently used in the same sense with O. E. fit. By the way, the latter may have been adopted to denote a division, as being originally put at the end of a song or poem by the author, in the same manner as explicit. Thus Fit might simply signify, "It is done. This is the end of the work, or part."

SCHOURIS, SCHOWRIS, s. pl. Sorrows, afflictions; throes, agonies.

Rest at all eis, but sair or sitefull schouris;
Abide in quiet, maist constant weillfair.

Palice of Honour, ii. 30.

Thairfoir, deir dow, sum pitie tak,
And saif mee fra the schowres.

Philotus, S. P. R., iii. 5.

"Swed. sorg, Goth. saurg, aerumna, dolor; Teut. sorghe, cura," Sibb.

The pangs of childbirth are still called schours, S. That this is from the same root with sorrow, is probable, not only from the use of the latter term in the same sense E., but because the word rendered sorrow, in relation to childbirth, Joh. xvi. 21, is saurga in the version of Ulphilas. Schour, however, might be traced to Germ. schauren, tremere, schauren, tremor.

Schoures is used by R. Brunne in a metaph. sense, for contentions, broils.

Ther after ros hard schoures in Scotland of the clergie,
Bishopes, abbotes, & priours, thei had misborn tham hie,
& alle that fals blode, that often was forsuorn,
That neuer in treuth stode, sen Jhesu Criste was born.

Chron., p. 333.

In the Fr. original, dolours is the term used.

[To SCHOUT, SCHOWT, v. n. To shoot, hoot, hoot at, Barbour, ix. 366; pret. schoutit.]

[SCHOUT, s. A shout, cry, Ibid., vi. 158.]

To SCHOUT, v. a. and n. 1. To shoot; to strike with any missile weapon, as with an arrow.

The archeris, that thai met sleand,—
I trow thai sall nocht schout gretly
The Scottis men with schote that day.

The Bruce, ix. 291. Ed. 1820.

2. To dart or rush forward, to come on with impetuosity and unexpectedly; synon. with Lans, Lance, v.

Bot me think it spedfull that we Abid, quhill his men scail be
Throw the countre, to tak their pray:
Than fersly schout on thaim we may.

The Bruce, x. 1032, Ed. 1820.

Swa sudanly on thaim schot thai,
That thai war sua abaysyt all,
That thai leyt all thair wapnys fall.

Ibid., x. 410.

V. SCHUTE, v.

To SCHOW, v. a. 1. To drive backward or forward, to shove, E.

To schowin is used Doug. Virgil, 134, 32, but whether in the infin. or part. pa. is doubtful.

—And with lang bolmes of tree
Pykit with irn, and scharp roddis, he and he,
Inforis oft to schowin the schip to saif.

2. As a v. n., to glide or fall down.

Thryis schowing down on the erd sche fell.

Ibid., 44, 32.

A.-S. scuf-an, Belg. schuyff-en, Su.-G. skuff-a, Isl. skjuf-a, trudere.

SCHOW, s. A push, a shove.

As he gat ben throw,
He gat mony greit schow;
Bot he was stalwart I trow—

Rauf Coilyear, C. liij. a.

To SCHOWD, SHOWD, v. n. [1. To swing, to rock, to move backwards and forwards, Banffs.

2. To dandle a child, to lull it asleep, ibid.]

3. "To waddle in going;" Gl. Shirr. howd, S. B.

—Showing frae side to side, and lewdling on.

Ross's Helenore, p. 59.

V. LEWDER.

Teut. schudil-en, to shake.

[SCHOWD, SCHOWDIN, s. 1. A rock* or swing, a rocking or swinging motion, ibid.

2. The act of dandling, ibid.

3. A waddling gait, ibid.]

[SCHOWD, SCHOWDIN, adv. With a rocking, swinging, or waddling motion, ibid.]

[SCHOYNE, s. pl. Shoes, Barbour, ii. 510.]

[SCHOYR, s. Menace; threatening, noisy clamour, Barbour, vi. 621. V. SCHOR.]

[SCHIRAIFF, pret. Shrove, Ibid., xi. 377.]

SCHREFTIS-EVIN, s. Shrove-Tuesday; the same with Fastringis-Ewyn; being the season allotted for very particular confession or shriving, before the commencement of Lent.

—At schreftis evin sum wes so battalouss,
That he wald win to his maister in feild
Fourty florans with bill and spuris beild.

Colkelbie Sow, v. 879

This refers to the cock-fighting usual on this evening. V. FASTRINOIS-EWYN.

[SCHREVIN, part. pa. Shriven, Barbour, xix. 211.]

SCHREW, SCHROW, s. A worthless person, an infamous fellow.

This cuntre is ful of Caynds kyn
And ayc schyre schrewis.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238 b, 33.

"Conarus—gaue braid landis to maist vile and diffamt creaturis, because thay lonit his corrupit man-eris & vice; and be counsaill of thir wickit schreuis he gouernit his realme." Bellend. Cron., B. v. c. 6.

Thai wickid schreuis
Has laid the plowis; That nane, or few, is
That ar left ocht.

Maitland Poems, p. 332.

By O. E. writers, as well as by our own, this word was used in a worse sense than in our times. As it now denotes a clamorous woman, a vixen, it has been deduced from be-schrey-en, to make a noise. But this derivation supposes that to be the primary, which we know is only a secondary, sense. We must therefore seek an origin that suggests the worst idea which has been affixed to the word. Seren. derives shrew from lal. shraueis [shraueis], mulier cyclopica, from akra, horrendum quid, and veif, mulier. Skinner derives it from Germ. be-schrey-en, incantare, fascinare, ut beschrew you, malum te fascinum corripit; may you be subjected to the evil effects of witchcraft. Mr. Tooke views it as originating from A.-S. syro-an, syrew-an, to vex, to molest, to cause mischief to. But the v. used in this sense, as far as I can observe, always assumes a different form. It is sorg-ian, sorgh-ian. That written syro-an, syrew-ian, invariably signifies moliri; insidiari, machinari, contere; be-syrew-an, "to lay in wait, to deceive, to beguile;" Sommer. Syrew, insidiae. Thus, schrew might originally denote a deceitful person, who still endeavours to deceive others. Schreuit may with propriety be viewed as the part. past, syrawde, insidiatus, or imperf. insidiabatur. The term shrewd, in its modern acceptation, seems to allude to this original signification.

Tyrwhitt renders it, as used by Chaucer, "an ill-tempered curst man or woman." But Chaucer employs the term in a worse sense than what is merely applicable to the temper.

"The juge that dredeth to do right, maketh men shrewes;" i.e., wicked men.

Applying the words of the apostle Paul, concerning magistrates as bearing the sword, he says;

"They beren it to punish the schreues and misdoers, and for to defende the goode men." Tale of Melibeus, p. 285, Ed. Tyrwhitt.

To SCHREW, SCHRO, v. a. To curse, to wish a curse to, E. beschrew.

I schro the lyar, full leis me yow.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 153.

V. SCHREW, s.

SCHREWIT, part. adj. 1. Wicked, accursed.

All said Lacon justlie (sic was his hap)
Has dere bocht his wikkit and schrewit dede,
For he the haly hors or stalwart stede
With violent straik presumyt for to dare.

Doug. Virgil, 46, 26.

2. Unhappy, ill-boding; as E. shrewd.

The fereful spaymen therof prognosticate
Schreuit chancis to betide, and had estate.
Ibid., 145, 15.

3. Poisonous, venomous.

Pirrus with wappynnis feirliche did assaile;
Lik to ane eldir, with schreuit herbis feil,
Cummin furth to lycht. Ibid., 54, 43.

Mala gramina pastus, Virg.

SCHROUD, s. Dress, apparel.

Schalp the evin to the schalk in thi schroud schene.
Gawan and Gok., ii. 23.

In Edit. 1598, shroud; but undoubtedly an error of the press.

My schroud and my schene were schyre to be shawin.
Moulate, iii. 22.

A.-S. scrud, garments, apparel; Dan. skraut, Su.-G. skrud, from A.-S. skryd-on, Isl. skryd-a, amicire, vestire. Veralius gives, as the origin, Isl. skraut, pomp, elegance; as skrud always denotes elegant dress, or that used on occasions of ceremony. Hence E. shroud, our last dress, a winding sheet. V. SCHURDE.

To SCHRYFF, SCHRYWE, v. a. To hear a confession, E. shrive; also, to make confession; pret. schraiff, part. pa. schrevin.

—Mony thaim schraiff full devoutly,
That thought to dey in that mellé.

Barbour, xi. 377, MS.

Mahoun gart cry ane dance,

SCHRYN, SCHRYNE, s. A small casket or cabinet.

"That William Halkerstoune—has done wrang in withhaldin fra Johnne of the Knollis—a met almy, a weschale almy, a schryn, a wayr almy," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1489, p. 131.

This is mentioned in the same connexion with a wayr almy by Sir James Balfour. Also in Aberd. Reg. "Twa baik breddis, ane almy, ane vair staw, ane schryne." A. 1533, V. 16. V. SCRINE.

To SCHUDDER, v. a. To oppose, to withstand.

And ferdar eik amynd his feris he
Twyis ruschit in, and schudderit the mellé.

Doug. Virgil, 307, 8.

E. to shoulder. Teut. schouder, humerus.

2. To cause a flat body to move along the ground as a shovel is moved, as, "to schule the feet along the grun'," to push them forward without lifting them off the earth, S.

SCHULE-THE-BROD, s. The game of shovel-board, S.

"Cachepole, or tennis, was much enjoyed by the young prince; schule the board, or shovel-board; billiards; and call the guse." Chalmers's Mary, i. 255.

SCHUPE, pret. v. V. SCHAPE.

SCHURDE, part. pa. Dressed, attired.

Thus Schir Gawayn, the gay, Gaynour he leides,— Schurde in a short cloke, that the rayne sheldes.

Sir Gawayn and Sir Gak, i. 2.

A.-S. scrydde, scrud, indutus; Isl. skrud, ornatus.

V. SCHROUD.

[SCHURE, pret. Cut, Lyndsay, Squyer Meldrum, l. 1306.]

SCHURLING, SHORLING, s. "The skin of a sheep that has been lately shorn or clipped," Gl. Sibb.

A.-S. scor-ian, tondere.

This, however, is a term used in E. V. Cowel, vo. Shorling.

"His maiestie and estaitis,—vnderstanding how necessar and profitabill the schurling skynnis ar for lynning cuschenis, making of pokis, lynning powchis, gluffis, and cletthing of the puir;—thairfor it is statut—that na merchand &c. transport any of the saidis schurling skynnis," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1593, IV., p. 30.

To SCHUTE, v. a. 1. To shoot, launch, dash, push. Su.-G. skiut-a, Teut. schutten, propellere.

This v., as conjoined with the prep. by, or about, signifies:—

2. To put off, to delay, S.

And gin ye wad but shoot it by a while,
I ken a thing that wad your fears beguile.

Ross's Helenore, p. 20.

Su.-G. skiut-a is used in the same sense, only with a different prep. Skiuta upp, differs.

3. To pass any particular time that is attended with difficulty. One who has many bills to pay at a certain period, says: I wish I could get such a time shot by, S. To shute about, id.

4. To avoid, to escape.

"I am confident, the safest way to shoot the shower is, to hold out of God's gate, and to keep within his doors, until the violence of the storm begin to ebb, which is not yet full tide." Walker's Peden, p. 57.

To SCHUTE, v. n. Used impersonally to denote the inequality of vernal weather, when a rough blast is immediately succeeded by a bright gleam of the sun. It is commonly said: "It's gude March weather, schutin' (sheetin', Aberd.) and shinin'," S.

The phraseology would seem to suggest an antithesis; as if schutin' referred to the blast preceding the gleam. But as I have no proof of the use of any of the Gothic synonyms in this sense, I suspect that it merely denotes the breaking forth of the sun.

To SCHUTE about. 1. A vulgar phrase used to denote that one is in ordinary health; nearly corresponding to Fr. se passer, to make shift, S.

2. In a passive sense, one is said to be no ill to shoot by, or easily shot about, when he can satisfy himself with a slight or homely meal, when he is not hard to be pleased as to victuals, S.

To SCHUTE, or SHOOT, over, or o'er. 1. To entertain in a slight and indifferent way, to be at no expense or trouble in preparation for, S. To shoot by, synonym.

"The deil's kind to them wi' his gowd and his gear, and his dainties; but he shoots auld decent folk over wi' a pickle ait-meal, and a wheen cauld kail-blades." Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 26.

2. To spend or pass with difficulty; applied to time, S.

O whare'll our gudeman lie,
Till he schute o'er the simmer?

Cromek's Remains of Burns, p. 295.

[SCHUTAND, part. pr. Shooting, Barbour, xvi. 121.]

SCHUTE, s. A push, S.

SCHUTE-STOCK, s. The instrument in masonry and joinery called in E. a bevel, Aberd.; pron. sheet-stock.

Allied perhaps to Teut. schutt-en, propellere; or Su.-G. skiut-a, prominere, because one leg of the square thus denominated is crooked, or as it were shot out from the rest.

To SCHIWNE, v. n. [To shudder, to be horrified.]

This Raynald menynd wes gretly,
For he wes wycht man and worthy.
And fra men saw this infortown,
Syndry can in thare hartis schone,
And call it iwil forbynyng,
That in the fyrst of thare steryng
That worthy nian suld be slayne awa,
And awa gret rowtis past them fra.

Wyntown, vill. 40, 68.

"Oppressed with care or grief—sonyied, cared. Fr. soign-er. Or it may be shun, decline the battle. R. Brunne has schonne." Gl. Wynt.

It seems to be from the same root with E. shun, although different in meaning. A.-S. scun-ian signifies not only to avoid, but to fear; timere, revereri, Lye. Thus it is equivalent to S. tak fricht.

SCHWYNE, s. pl. Shoes, a strangely disguised form of schone; but perhaps as meant to express the Aberd. pron. sheen.

"Tua pair of schwyne, & ane pair of new brekis." Aberd. Reg. A. 1645, V. 19.

[SCHYNAND, part. pr. Shining, Barbour, iv. 166.]

[SCHYNYNG, s. Sheen, brightness, ibid., vi. 217.

SCHYNBANDES, pl. Perhaps, armour for the ancles or legs.

His gloves, his gamesons, glowed as a glede,—
And his schene schynbandes, that scharp wer to shreds.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., ii. 5.

Teut. scheen-plaete, ocrea, tinbiale, scheene-ijser, ocrea ferrea.

[SCHYR. Sir, Barbour, i. 73. V. SCHIR.]

SCHYR, s. 1. A county, like shire, E.

2. A division of land less than a county, sometimes only a parish.

"And likwiss ye pass to the chymeis of the thrid part of the landis of Ledyntosh and Rothmays, and thair pertinence lyand within schyr of Rane and the scheridome of Aberdene," &c. A. 1523, Chartal. Aberd. Fol. 147.

In a deed of the Bishop of Aberdeen, in the same Chartulary, this schyr is denominated a parish.

—De duabus partibus terrarum nostrarum de Rothmays, parochie de Rain, &c. Fol. 156.

In a charter granted by David I., to the Abbey of Dunfermlin, mention is made of schiram de Kircalduitt, i.e., Kirkcaldy; schiram de Gellad, and schiram de Gatemile, which probably had no higher claim to the designation. Chart. Dunferml. Dalrymple's Coll., p. 383.

The original word is A.-S. scir, scyr, a share, a division, from scir-an, to shear, to cut, to divide. It is only arbitrarily applied to a county; for it properly denotes an indefinite section. Therefore, although it denotes what is strictly called a shire, it also signifies a parish. In this sense, it is sometimes conjoined with the term preost, a presbyter or priest; preost-scyre, sacerdotis provincia, parochia. In the same manner, it is extended to a diocese; sometimes singly, at other times combined with the term biscep. Biscep-scyre, episcopalis provincia, diocesis. V. Lye.

[SCHYRE, adv. Brightly, Barbour, iv. 619. V. SCHIRE.]

[SCHYRREFFYS, s. pl. Sheriffs, ibid., i. 190.]

SCISSIONE, s. Schism.

"Alsua at ferme & faste obedienco be kept til our haly fadir the pape Eugene—And at rigorouss processis be maid agaynis the fauoraris of scissione, & the agayn-standaris of the said obedienco." Parl. Ja. II., A. 1449, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 33.

Lat. scissio, a cutting.

SCIVER, SKIVER, s. A skewer, S.

"If your fire be very brisk, butter a sheet of white paper, and, with small wooden scivers, pin it to your beef." Receipts in Cookery, p. 37.

SCLADYNE, s. A chalcedony.

—Schurde in a short cloke, that the rayne shedes,
Set over with saffres, sothely to say,
With saffres, and schulynes, set by the sides.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., i. 2.

i.e., sapphires and chalcedonies. Fr. calcidoine.

To SCLAFF, SCLAFFER, v. n. 1. To lift the feet in a clumsy way, as by rubbing on the ground, or setting them down as if one's shoes were loose on one's feet, Fife, Loth., to shuffle along, E. Sclatch may be viewed as synon.

2. Used to express the sound made in setting down the feet in this manner, ibid.

Belg. slof, careless, negligent; as a s., an old slipper; slof-en, to draggle with slippers; Germ. schlaf, torpor; schlaf-en, torpere; laxari. Wachter derives it from schlapp, laxus, remissus; or schleiff-en, to drag, to trail; per humum trahere. He also views A.-S. steebe-scoh, a slipper, as a cognate term; Germ. schlaferig, ignavus, remissus.

SCLAFF, s. [1. A slight blow, stroke, or fall; as, a sclaff on the lug, a sclaff on the ice, Fife, Ayr.

2. The sound made by a stroke or fall; as, To play sclaff on the grund, to fall down flat, Fife, Ayr.]

SCLAFFERT, s. 1. A stroke, properly, on the side of the head, with the palm of the hand, S. V. SCLAFF.

L. B. eclaffa, alapa; escclaffa, to beat, Du Cange.

2. A disease in the glands under the ear, the mumps, Loth.; called the buffets, Ang.

SCLAFFS, SCLAFFERS, SCLIFFANS, s. pl. A pair of worn-out shoes, sometimes used as slippers, Fife; [scliffans, Gall. Encyc.]

SCLAFFER, s. A thin slice of any thing; [sclaf is also used] Clydes.

SCLAITE, SCLATE, SKLAIT, s. Slate, for covering houses, S.

"Gif the samin be founde aulde, decayed, and ruinous, in ruife, sclaite, dures, windowes, fluring, loftis, &c.,—to decerne that the conjunct fear or life-renter sall repair the saidis landes, and tenements, in the partes theiroy decayed." Acts Ja. VI., 1594, c. 228.

The word has had this form in O. E. "Sclate or flat stone. Latericia, Ymbrex." Prompt. Parv.

L.B. sclata, assula; which Du Cange views as probably formed from Fr. esclat, a splinter of wood; also a shingle. E. slate has been derived from Moes-G. slakhta, planus, Su.-G. slact, laevigatus; as having a plain surface. V. Seren.

To SCLAITE, v. a. To cover with slate, S.

The same orthography, however, occurs in O. E.

"All the foreparte of Grenewiche is couered with blewse sclate.—I sclate a house with stone sclates." Palgr., B. iii. F. 352, b.

SCLATE-BAND, s. "A stratum of slate amongst bands of rock;" Gall. Encycl.

[SCLATE-PEN, s. A slate-pencil, Clydes.]

SCLATE-STANE, SKLATE-STANE, s. A small bit of slate, or stone resembling slate, S.

"Ye biggit houses, and ye plantit vineyards, an' threw away money as ye had been sawing sklate-stanes." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 313.

It is a vulgar superstition, that the money given by the devil, or any of his emissaries, as a reward for service, or as arles on entering into it, although when received it had every appearance of good coin, would against next day appear merely as a piece of slate. To this superstition there is a reference in the following passage—

"She laid on the table a small piece of antique coin. —Said his gentle sister, 'Gie the ladie back her bonie die, and be blithe to be rid on't—it will be a sclate-stane the morn, if not something worse.'" The Pirate, i. 136-7.

SCLATER, SCLATAR, s. A slater, one who covers roofs with slates, S.

"A bony improvement or ens noo, to see tyleyors and sclaters leavin, whar I mind Jeuks an Yerls." Marriage, ii. 124.

To SCLANDER, SKLANDER, v. a. To slander, S.B.

"Whosoever sclanders us, as that we affirme or believe sacraments to be naked and bair signes, do injurie unto us, and speaks against the manifest trueth." Scots Confession, Collect. of Confess., ii. 83, 84.

"I sclander one, I hurt his good name with my yuell raporte." Palgr. B. iii. 352, b.

Menage, Du Cange, and Roquefort trace F. esclandre to Lat. scandalum. The Fathers de Trevoux prefer Lat. clades. But it seems most probable that it has been an old Frankish term; as so nearly corresponding with Isl. klaundur, injuria, damnum, Olav. Rex. Run.; Handr-a, damno afficere; Haldorson. G. Andr. defines klandr, Clandestinum quid: Factio clandestina ac periculosa. The servile letter s has been prefixed, as in innumerable instances.

SCLANDER, SKLANDYR, s. Slander, S.B.

So lang woned thai this londe in,
Or thai herde out of Saynt Austin,
Among the Bretons with my kelle wo,
In sclandire, in threte, & in thro.

R. Brunne, Prol. xcviij.

"He is blessed that schal not be sclandred in me." Wielif, Matt. xi.

On kneis scho felle, and cryit, For Marye scheyne,
Let sklandyr be and flemyt out of your thoct.

Wallace, ii. 337, MS.

Fr. esclandre; Su.-G. klander, from kland, infamy.

SCLANDERAR, s. 1. A slanderer, S.

2. One who gives offence, or brings reproach on others, by his conduct.

"Ar thay nott oppin sclanderaris of the congregatioun (for the maist part) quhilkis sulde be myrrouris of gude lyfe?" Kennedy of Crossraguell, Compend. Tractiue, p. 79.

To SCLASP, v. a. To clasp, Ettr. For., Teviot.

SCLASP, s. A clasp, or the act of clasping, ibid.

On the Border, the sibilant is frequently prefixed; as in scoach for poach, &c.

To SCLATCH, v. a. and n. 1. To huddle up any piece of work, to do it clumsily and insufficiently; often applied to a house that is ill built, S. V. CLATCH, v. 2.

2. To bedaub, Ettr. For.; Splairge, synon.

3. To walk heavily and awkwardly, S.

SCLATCH, s. A big lubberly fellow, S.

SCLATCH, s. A stroke with the palm of the hand, Ang. V. CLASH, v.

[SCLATE, s. 1. A slate. V. SCLAITE.

2. A piece of wood nailed to that part of the oar which travels over the routh, to prevent the oar from feathering, Shetl.]

SCLATER, s. Wood-louse, Oniscus asellus, Linn., S.

Supposed to derive this name from being commonly found under the slates, S. sclates, of old houses.

[SCLATY-SCRAE, s. A person of very contemptible appearance or character; one fit to be likened to a sclater, a slimy worm found under slates or ebb-stones, Shetl.]

[SCLAUNDER, SCLAUNDRE, s. and v. Slander. V. SCLANDER.]

To SCLAURIE, v. a. 1. To bedaub, to splash with mud, Fife.

2. It denotes the soiling of one's clothes in whatever way, ibid.

3. To calumniate, to vilify one's character, ibid.

4. To scold; as, "to sclaurie one like a randy beggar," ibid.

It must be viewed as radically the same with SLAIRY, and also with SLERO, v; the principal difference arising from the insertion of the ambulatory letter K.

To SCLAURIE, v. n. To pour forth abusive language, to call names, Fife.

—Poor sklintin' Geordie,
Wha sclauried an' grain'd,
Fell clout on his doup,
A' mittled an' brain'd. MS. Poem.

Evidently the same with Slairy, to bedaub, used in a metaph. sense.

SCLAVE, s. A slave.

—Eik my fader of his assent
Tuelf chosin matrouns sal you gif al fre,
To be your sclaus in captiuité.

Doug. Virgil, 285, 12.

Fr. esclave, Hisp. esclavo, L. B. slav-us. Vossius derives it from Germ. slaf, and this "from the Slavi or Slavonians, a great number of whom the Germans having taken captives, made slaves of them;" Rudd. Serenius deduces Su.-G. slaf, id. from slap-a, trahere, durius laborare. V. SKLAIF.

[SCLEFFIS, SCLEVIS, s. pl. Sleeves, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 22, 144, Dickson.]

SOLEITIN-FITTIT, adj. Having plain soles, splay-footed, Caithn.; probably the same originally with SCLUTE, v.

SCLENDER, adj. Slender, S. B.

"Yit ar we not as sclender of judgement, that inconsideratly we wald promise that, quihilk efter we micht repent." Knox's Hist., p. 176.

SCLENDERS, SCLENTERS, s. pl. 1. The loose thin stones which lie on the face of a scar, Lanarks. Sclithers, S. A.; also, sclenters.

2. Used to denote the faces of hills covered with small stones, Tweed. Hence, SCLENDERIE, adj. A term applied to a place covered with scleanders; as, a sclenderie place, a sclenderie brae, Tweed.

"The sun's reflection from the scarry braes, or sclenters, as they are called, gives a warmth to the tillage, which the season alone would not produce." Armstrong's Parish of Mannor, Notes to Pennecuick, p. 209.

In the northern dialects, if we except the Germ., skl or schl scarcely ever occur; whereas s is often prefixed in an arbitrary way. Hence I have been inclined to think that Scleanders, or Sclenters, might be allied to Su.-G. klint, scopulus; especially as klint alternates with klett, which might seem to be the origin of the provincial synonyme Sclithers, id.

To SCLENT, SKLENT, SKLINT, v. n. 1. To slope, to decline, S. slant, E.

High on the *sklent*in skew, or thatched eave,
The sparrow, nibbling ravager o' garden pride,
Seeks out a dwelling-place.—

Davidson's Seasons, p. 43.

2. To move obliquely.

—Ferefull wox alsua
Of drawin swerdis sclentyng to and fra
The bricht mettell, and vthir armour sere.

Doug. Virgil, 226, 6.

3. To look obliquely, to look askance, Ayr.

I ne'er my neighbour's faults am scannin';
An neither let ae ee nor lither
Sklent, wi' unkludness, on a brither.
Picken's Poems, i. 66.

4. To hit or strike obliquely, S.

Thus sayd he, and fra his hand the ilk tyde
The casting dart fast birrand lattis glyde,
That feand *sklent*is on Eneas scheild.

Doug. Virgil, 347, 40.

"Bot the stoutnes of the Marques le Beuf (d'Albny, they call him) is most to be comendit; for in his chamber, within the Abbey, he started to ane halbart, and ten men were scarce able to hald him. Bot as hap was, the inner-yet of the Abbay keipit him that nycht; and the danger was between the croce and the Salt Trone; and so he was a large quarter of a myle from the schott and *sklent*ing of boltes." Knox's Hist., p. 305.

5. To speak aside from the truth, to fib, S. A., Fife.

"That doctor was the gabbiest body ever I met wi'; he spake for them a', and I whiles feared that he *sklent*a wee." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 49, 50.

—Poor sklintin' Geordie,
Wha sclauried an' grain'd,
Fell clout on his doup,
A' mittled an' brain'd. MS. Poem.

6. To err doctrinally, to go aside from the truth.

"In this poynt ve in special ministeris of Scotland sayis that our maister Caluin hes *sklent*it, quha grantis it [Ordour] to be ane treu sacrament." Nicol Burne, F. 153, a.

7. Used metaph., to denote immoral conduct in general.

Quhat kimmer casts the forrest stane, lets se,
At thae poor queans, ye wrangfully suspek,
For *sklent*ing bouts.—

Semple, Evergreen, i. 76.

Sw. slant, id. slint-a, lapsare, Seren.; most probably from slind, latus, q. what hits the side of any object, C. B., &c.

To SCLENT, SKLENT, SKLINT, v. a. 1. To give a slanting direction, S.

—Cynthia pale owre hill an' glen
*Sklent*s her pale rays.

A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 118.

2. To dart askance, in relation to the eyes, S.

To hear the love-lorn swain complain,
Lone, on "The Braes of Balandine,"
It e'en might melt the doriest she
That ever *sklent*ed scornfu' e'e.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 93.

3. To pass obliquely, Galloway.

Fu' fast the side o' Scree I *sklent*ed—
Davidson's Seasons, p. 179.

4. To cut so as to produce a slanting side; as, "To sklent a stane, a buird," &c., Clydes.

SCLENT, SKLENT, s. 1. Obliquity, S.

2. Acclivity, ascent, S.

With easy sklent, on ev'ry hand the braes,
To right well up, wi' scatter'd busses raise.

Ross's Helensburgh, p. 22.

C.B. yeglent, a slide, yeglent-iaw, to slide. It is strange that Dr. Johns. could find no other origin for the E. synonyme, slant, than that of Skinner,—Belg. slanghe, a serpent.

3. A glance, South of S.

"I gae a sklent wi' my ee to Daniel Roy Macpherson, an' he was—fa'n into a kink o' laughing." Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 24.

A SKLENT, adv. Obliquely, aslant.

Thy tyrd companions, a sklent,
Are monstros like the mule that made them.
Poets. and Montgom. Watson's Coll., iii. 7.

SCLENTINE-WAYS, adv. Obliquely, zigzag, S.B.

— Sclentine ways his course he aften steer'd.
Morison's Poems, p. 186.

[SCLEW, pret. Slew, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 131, Dickson.]

To SCLICE, v. a. To slice. V. SKLICE.

To SCLIDDER, SCLITHER, v. n. To slide to the right or left, when one intends going straight forward; particularly applicable to walking on ice, Teviotdale.

A.-S. slider-ian, dilabi, Teut. slidder-en, prolabi; more nearly resembling Germ. schlitter-n, in lubrico decurrere.

SCLITHERIE, adj. Slippery, ibid.

SCLITHERS, s. pl. Loose stones lying in great quantities on the side of a rock or hill, Loth.

But fir'd wi' hope, he onward dashes,
Thro' heather, scithers, bogs, an' rashes.
Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 103.

These stones, being loose, slide downwards, the term being always applied to stones lying on a declivity. V. the etymon of Sclidder, v.

SCLIFFANS, s. pl. "Useless thin shoes;" Gall. Enc. Sclouts synon.

Allied perhaps to Germ. schlipf-en, to glide. The term, indeed, seems to have a common origin with E. slipper. V. SCLAFF, v.

SCLIMPET, s. A small thin piece of any thing, as of a rock, Ayrs.

This seems equivalent to lamina.

Perhaps q. s'im part; as pet is used for part in Forpet, i.e., the fourth part. Germ. schlimm, naughty, scurvy.

SCLINDER, SCLENDIR, adj. Slender.

"Brevelie considering the first part of thair titill to this thair supreme auctoritie, I fand it nocht only scinder and licht, bot planelie inglorius, and a thing to deprive thaim of all auctoritie without delay, gif thai had hald ony afore." N. Winyet's Fourscoir Three Questionis, Keith's Hist., App. p. 219.

Sclendir is still used in some parts of S.

To SCLITHER, v. n. To slide. V. SCLIDDER.

SCLOITS, s. pl. "Useless thin shoes;" Gall. Enc. (Scliffans synon.) This seems nearly allied to Sklute, s.

To SCLOY, v. n. To slide. V. SKLOY.

SCLUCHTEN (gutt.), s. A flat-lying ridge; sometimes Cleuchten, Ayrs., Renfrews.; probably from Cleuch, with s prefixed.

To SCLUTE, v. n. To walk with the toes much turned out, Roxb.

This is merely a more limited sense of the v. as given in the form of SKLUTE.

SCLUTT, s. The name given to a species of till or schistus, Lanarks.

"Sclutt, soft and coarse till." Ure's Hist. Rutherglen, p. 293.

SCLYS, s. A slice, a splinter, S.B.

And a sclys of the shaft, that brak,
In-til his hand a wounde can mak.
Wyntown, viii. 35. 43.

Germ. schleiss-en, rumpere.

SCOB, s. 1. A splint, a thin piece of wood used for securing a bone newly set, after it has been broken, S.

2. The ribs of a basket are also called scobs, Ang.

3. A limber rod (of hazel) used for fixing the thatch on houses, Clydes., Ayrs.

SCOWB AND SCRAW. V. SCRAW.

To SCOB, v. a. and n. 1. To take long stitches in sewing, to sew in a clumsy manner, S.

Scowb, id. Ettr. For. Qu. to resemble a thatcher in placing his scobs at a distance from each other?

2. To scob a skep, to fix cross rods in a hive, that the bees may build their combs on them, S.

3. To gag, by keeping the mouth open by means of cross pieces of wood.

—"30 Sept' 1632. Two Englishmen were punished at Edin' for drinking the king's health. One of them had his mouth scobit, and his tongue being drawn out the full length, was bund togidder betuix twa stickes hard togidder with ane skeinyie threid, the space of half ane hour or thereby." Nicol's Diary, MS.

Allied perhaps to Teut. schobbe, squama; because splints resemble scales in thinness.

SCOBERIE, SCOBRIE, s. The act of sewing coarsely and carelessly, or with long stitches, Loth.

SCOB, s. An instrument for scooping, Clydes.

SCOB-SEIBOW, s. 1. Those onions are thus denominated, which, having been sown late, are allowed to remain in the ground during winter, and are used in spring, S.

2. This name is also given to the young shoots from onions, of the second year's growth, S. Allium cepa, Linn.

I know not the reason of the name. They are also called cob-seibous. V. SKIBOW.

- To SCODGE, v. n. "To pilfer;" Gall. Enc. Scodging is expl. "looking sly," ibid.

- SCODGIE, s. "A suspicious person;" ibid., i.e., one who is suspected of a design to pilfer.

Isl. skot, latibulum; or skod-a, aspicere; whence skolan, inspectio.

- SCOG, s. That part of fishing tackle to which the hook is fastened, Shetl.; synon. Link, or Ienk, Clydes.

This being made of hair, the term seems to be the same with Su.-G. skaegg, A.-S. sceaga, pilus, coma; Lappon, skangia, skautja, the beard, which has probably been the primary sense, from Su.-G. skygg-a, to shade, to cover, as with leaves; as the face is thus shaded or covered by the beard.

- To SCOG, v. a. To shelter, to secrete.

- SCOGGIT, part. pa. Sheltered, Ayrs.

"I'll be scoggit wi' my ain hamely manner." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 21. V. SKUG.

- SCOGGY, SCOKKY, adj. "Shady, full of shades;" Gl. Sibb. V. SKUGGY.

- SCOGIE, s. A kitchen drudge, S.

- SCOGIE-LASS, s. A female servant who performs the dirtiest work, S.

The Scogie-lass does rin wi' haste,
And bring the kale.

The Har'at Rig, st. 91.

V. SKODGE, SKODGIE, s.

- [SCOIL, s. A squeal, Aberd.]

- [SCOITTULD, s. The furthest aft tilfer, Shetl.]

- [SCOL, SCOLD, SCOLL, s. A small round wooden dish, similar to the highland quaich, a drinking vessel, Shetl. Isl. sköl, Dan. skaal, a dish.]

- To SCOL, SCOLD, SCOLL, v. n. To drink healths, to drink as a toast; [part. pr. scolding, used also as a s.]

"Healthing and scolding is the occasioun of much drunkenness." Acts Cha. II., Ed. 1814, i. 368. V. HEALTH, v. n.

—"Men of strength to mingle strong drinke, and to scoll as wee say: How call ye such scolls? Scolls of health. What folie is this, that a man should losse his health by drinking the scolls of health?" Z. Boyd, Balme of Gilead, p. 81. V. SKUL, SKULL, SKOL, s.

- SCOLDER, s. A drinker of healths.

"Ordains the said act to be extended and executed against scolders, filthy speakers, and makers or singers of bawdie songs." Acts. Cha. II., ut sup.

VOL. IV.

- *SCOLD, SCALD, s. The act of scolding; A terrible scald, a severe drubbing with the tongue, S.; most commonly in vulgar language, scald.

As there is no term in E. that precisely conveys this idea, Dr. Johns. has mistaken the origin of the v. It is not, as he says, Belg. scholden, but schelden, id. This is nearly allied to Su.-G. skæll-a, conviciari, whence skællsord, Germ. scheltwort, convicium, q. a scold-word. The root is undoubtedly the v., which signifies to emit a sharp sound; Alem. schell-a, sonare; irscal, insonuit, also increpuit; Gl. Lips. In Isl. the devil is called Skolli, primarily signifying irrisor.

- SCOLDER, s. A name given to the Oyster-catcher, Orkn.

"The Sea Pie (Hoematopus ostralegus, Linn. Syst.)—in some places here gets the name of the Scolder." Barry's Orkney, p. 306.

Perhaps from the loud and shrill noise it makes when any one approaches its young." V. Pennant's Zool., p. 483.

- SCOLE, s. A school; pl. scoleis.

—"And to support the nurishing & vbring of hir heines cousingis and cousingnessis;—and in halding of thame at the scoleis during their minoritie," &c. Acts Mary, 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 552; i.e., "in carrying on their education."

Lat. schola, Fr. escole, id.

- To SCOLL. To drink healths. V. SCOL, SKUL.

- SCOLLEDGE, s. The act of carrying one in a scull or cock-boat.

"Minervale, scolledge. Naulum, the freight." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 20.

Scolledge must have been a term of common use in S. But I have not met with this, or with the Lat. word which is rendered by it, any where else.

- To SCOMER, SKOMER, v. n. To sponge, cater.

Bettir thou gains to leid a dog to skomer,
Fynd pyck-purse pelour, than with thy master pingle.
Dunbar, Everygreen, ii. 53.

This seems to mean, "to cater for thee," or, "smell where there is provision." Belg. schuymen, a smell-feast, gaan schuymen, to sponge, to be a smell-feast, to live upon the catch; and this from schuym, the scum of the pot.

- To SCOMFIS, SCONFICE, v. a. 1. To suffocate, to stifle. It denotes the overpowering or suffocating effect of great heat, of smoke, or of stench, S.

—Her stinking breath
Was just enough to scconfice one to death.

Ross's Helenore, p. 36.

2. Used as a v. n. To be stifled, S.

Now very sair the sun began to heat,
And she is like to scconfice with the heat.

Ibid., p. 27.

"Scumfish'd, smothered, suffocated; North." Gl. Grose.

"My cousin, Mrs. Glass, has a braw house here, but a' thing is sac poisoned wi' snuff, that I am like to be scconfished whiles." Heart M. Loth., iv. 28.

It may perhaps be radically allied to Isl. kafn-a, Su.-G. kufu-a, quafu-a, to suffocate, Isl. kof, suffocation; s being prefixed, which is very common in the Goth. languages, and m inserted.

But, perhaps, it is merely an oblique sense of the ancient word signifying to discomfit, (V. Scumfit). Ital. sconfigg-ere, id.

SCOMFIS, SCOMFICE, s. A state approaching to that of suffocation, caused by a noxious smell or otherwise, S.

SCON, SCONE, s. 1. A cake. V. SKON.

[2. Pl. scons, dried cow-dung used as fuel, Shetl.]

SCON, SCONE-CAP, s. The old broad bonnet of the Lowlands, Dumfr., Ayrs.

"From the shepherd's shealing of turf and broom to the pillared palace of marble and pure gold—from the scone cap, to the jewelled bonnet—have I ever seen song cherished and esteemed." Blackw. Mag. Dec. 1820, p. 322.

Thus designed as in its breadth and flatness resembling a barley scone. V. SKON.

To SCON, v. a. and n. 1. To make flat stones, &c., skip along the surface of the water, Clydes.

2. To skip in the manner described above; applied to flat bodies, ibid.

Isl. skund-a, skynd-a, festinare.

To SCONCE, v. a. 1. To extort; or, to excite another; by undue means, to spend, Ang.

2. To sconce a woman, to jilt her, to slight her, Stirlings. Blink, Glink, synon.

To SCONE, v. a. To beat with the open hand, to correct, S. skelp, skult, synon.

It still signifies, to beat on the backside, Aberd.

SCONE, s. A stroke of this description, ibid; expl. "a blow with the open hand on the breech," Mearns.

"To scone, to beat a child's buttocks with the palm of the hand;" Rudd.; vo. Scounys.

Isl. skayn-a, skoyn-a, Su.-G. skan-a, leviter vulnerare. Some derive this from skan, cutis; others from skā, accidere; Gl. Kristn. and Landnamabok. Ihre refers to A.-S. scaen-an, frangere. He also observes, that Su.-G. skena denotes a wound caused by striking, as distinguished from saar, which signifies one produced by a sharp weapon.

SCOOF, SCUFE, s. A sort of battledoor made of wood, used for striking the ball at Tennis, in order to save the palm of the hand from the severity of the stroke, Teviotdale.

Belg. schop, schup, a scoop, spade, or shovel; denominated from the resemblance as to form. The Dan. word denoting a scoop or shovel, seems exactly retained. This is skuffe.

SCOOL, s. Swelling in the roof of a horse's mouth, usually burnt out with a hot iron, Gall.

"Scool, a disorder of horses;" Gall. Enc. V. SKULE.

SCOOPIE, s. A straw-bonnet, Ettr. For.

Teut. schobbe, is expl. Operculum, tegumentum; and Isl. skupla, a loose sort of covering for the head, calyptra, rendered in Dan. "a loose, upstanding woman's head-toy," Haldorson; skuppl-a, calyptram ordinare. Because, however, of its projecting form, our term may be a dimin. from E. scoop.

[To SCOOR, v. a. and n. To cleanse, wash, physic; to scoop or wear away; to move rapidly. V. SKOUR.]

[SCOOR, s. 1. A cleansing, physicing, West of S. Banffs.

2. That which cleanses or physics, ibid.

3. A race or run of water, Clydes.

4. A quick walk, a race, ibid, Banffs.]

[To SCOOT, v. n. To go about in a lazy, idle manner, to wander about, West of S., Banffs.]

SCOOT, SCOUT, [pron. scoot], s. A term of the greatest contumely, applied to a woman; as equivalent to trull, or camp-trull; Moray, Ayrs.

"'Base scoot!' exclaimed Andrew,—'what puts such a thought into your head?'" Sir A. Wylie, ii. 159.

A Celt or Highlander can hardly receive greater disgrace than to be thus denominated. This, it is supposed, originates from the traditional prejudice, transmitted from time immemorial, against this name, as first given to a foreign race who had intruded themselves among the ancient Gaels. Scuite, in Gael., signifies a wanderer; and, though this name has been imposed both on the Irish and North-British Celts, it is contemptuously rejected by both.

[SCOOTIE, adj. Low, mean, beggar-like, Clydes.]

[To SCOOT, v. a. and n. To eject, jerk, or squirt; also, to flow or gush out with force, Clydes.]

[SCOOT, s. 1. A gush or flow of water; also, the pipe or opening from which it flows; thus, the flow of rain-water collected from the roof of a house is called a scoot, and so is the pipe out of which it flows, Clydes.

2. A syringe; called also a scoot-gun, and a scooter, ibid, Gall.; skyter, Aberd.]

3. A braggadocio, one who delights in being the hero of his own story, Berwick's; as, a windy scoot.

This may be from Su.-G. skint-a, to shoot, Dan. skytte, a shooter, q. one who over-shoots.

SCOOT, s. "A wooden drinking caup [cup], sometimes scoop, being wood scooped out;" Gall. Encycl.

Su.-G. skudd-a, effundere. V. SCUD, v., to quaff.

SCOOTIFU', s. "The full of a scoot," ibid.

SCOOTIKIN, s. A dram of whisky, ibid.

SCOOT-GUN, s. "A syringe;" Gall. Encycl. [V. under SCOOT, v.]

SCOPIN, s. [A quart vessel.]

Thai twa, out of ane scopin stowp,
Thai drank thre quartis soup and soup.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 114.

This phrase might, at first view, seem to signify, as Mr. Pinkerton conjectures, a chopin stowp, or vessel containing two English pints. But it is probable that the term means drinking, from the v. Scoup, q. v.

SCORCHEAT, s. Supposed to denote sweet-meats. Fr. escorch-er, to pill, to blanch?

This term frequently occurs in the Records of Aberdeen in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, as in the following passage:

"The magistrates gave the king a propine of twa casks of wine, three buists [boxes] of scorchheatis," &c.

"Thre dossan of pundis of scorchheatis." Ibid., A. 1535, V. 15.

* To SCORE, v. a. To mark with a line, E.

To SCORE A WITCH. To draw a line by means of a sharp instrument, aboon the breath of a woman suspected of sorcery, was supposed by the vulgar to be the only antidote against her fatal power, and also the only means of deliverance from it, S.

A witty wife did than advise
Rob back to gang to maukin wife,
An' score her over, ance or twice,
Aboon the breath.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 93.

"The only cure for witchcraft is to score the witch over aboon the breath," N. ibid.

"It is scarcely thirty years since one of the millars was tried for his life, for scoring a woman whom he supposed to be a witch. He had long suspected her as the cause of all the misfortunes attending him; and, enticing her into the kiln one sabbath evening, he seized her forcibly, and cut the shape of the cross on her forehead. This they call scoring aboon the breath, which overthrows their power of doing them any further mischief." Hogg's Mountain Bard, N., p. 34.

SCORE, s. A deep, narrow, ragged indentation on the side of a hill, South of S.

Isl. skor, fissura, rima, expl. by Dan. verne, a cleft, a crevice, a gap.

SCOREY, s. The Brown and White Gull, Orkn.

"The Brown and White Gull (Larus naevius, Linn. Syst.), which the people here call the Scorey, is much more rarely met with than most others." Barry's Orkney, p. 303.

Others view this as the Herring-gull, Larus fuscus, Linn.

The Skua Gull is called Skua Hoirei, Clus. Exot., p. 368, ap. Penn. V. SCAURIE.

SKORLING, s. The skin of a shorn sheep.

"Our souerane lord—appreis and—confirmis the tua giftis—grantit to the—commwnitie of Haddingtoun; the ane—makand thame and thair successouris saulf, frie and quite fra all payment of custume of salt and skynnis vnderwrittin, callit in the vulgar tounge, Scorlingis, scaldingis, futefailis, lentrenvaro, lamb-skynnis, todaskynnis, calfskynnis, cwuing skynnis, otterskynnis, and fwmartskynnis." Acts Ja. VI., 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 580.

This is undoubtedly the same with SCHOIRLING, q. v.

To SCÖRN, v. a. To rally or jeer a young woman about her lover; to rally her, by pretending that such a one is in suit of her. Hence, scorning, this sort of rallying, S.

At bughts in the morning nae blyth lads are scorning,
The lasses are lonely, dowie, and wae.

Flowers of the Forest, Ritson's S. Songs, l. 3.

This seems merely an oblique sense of the E. v., from Teut. schern-en, ludere, illudere; which Lye derives from A. S. scernu, finis. But, according to Cotgr., Fr. escorn-er signifies, to deprive of horns; hence, to disgrace.

SCÖRN, s. The Scorn, a slight in love, or rejection after having made a proposal of marriage, S.

I was a young farmer, in Scotland born,
And frae a young lassie had gotten the scorn,
Which caused me to leave my own countrey,
And list me into the militarye.

Jacobite Relics, li. 464.

[SCORNSUM, adj. 1. Scornful, given to scorning as above, Shetl.

2. Troublesome, bothersome; as, scornsum ganging, slippery walking, as on ice, ibid.]

To SCÖRP, SCÖRP, SKARP, SKRAP, SKRIP, SCRIP, v. n. To mock, to deride, to gibe.

Scho skornit Jok, and skrippit at him;
And murgenit him with morkis.

Chr. Kirk, st. 4. Chron. & P., li. 360.

Skrippit, Edit. Maitland Poems, p. 444.

Skrappit, Edit. Callander, p. 112.

The ja him skrippit with a skryke,
And skornit him as it was lyk.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 22.

"Thair was presentit to the Quein Regent, by Robert Ormistoun, a calfe having two heidis, whairat sche scorppit, and said, 'It was bot a counoun thing.'" Knox's Hist., p. 93. In Lond. Edit. 1644, it is ludicrously converted into skipped.

"The Cardinall skrippit, and said, It is bot the Yeland fote; they ar come to mak us a schow, and to put us in feir." Ibid., p. 41.

Scrape is still used in Fife, and perhaps elsewhere, as a v. denoting the expression of scorn or disdain.

I know not if the term be allied to Isl. skrippe, obcaenum quid ac tetrum; or Su.-G. skrapp-a, jactare se, which is derived from skraf-a, nugari, skraf, nugae, Isl. ord skraepi, a perverse and prattling woman. Kilian, however, mentions schrobb-en as synon. with schobb-en, convitiari, cavillari, a secondary sense of the v., as signifying to scrape or scrub. V. SCRIBAT.

[SCOSCIE, n. A starfish, Banff.]

* SCOT AND LOT. For the probable origin of the phrase, V. To SCAT.

To SCOT, v. n. To pay taxes. This is not used as a v. in E.

"To scot, lot, wache, wald & ward;" Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

L. B. scott-are, dicuntur tenentes depraediis et agris, qui Scoti pensationi sunt obnoxii. Du Cange. The term occurs in a Chart. of Hen. II. of Engl. Monast. Angl. I. 666. Su.-G. skatt-a, tributum pendere; also tributum exigere.

SCOTTING and LOTTING. Payment of duties.

"Thair scotting & lotting, with the furing of his gedis furth of Aberdeen to Leyth." Aberd. Reg., A. 1845.

SCOTCH, s. An ant or emmet, Roxb.

SCOTCH-GALE, s. A species of myrtle, S. Myrica gale, Linn.

"Near to the King's Well, in the same barony, is to be found what is called the Scotch-gale, a species of the myrtle." P. Fenwick, Ayr. Statist. Acc., xiv. 60.

"Myrica gale. Gale, Goule, Sweet Willow, or Dutch Myrtle. Anglia. Gaul, Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 613.

This is said to be "a valuable vermifuge." Statist. Acc., xvi. 110.

A.-S. gagel, "pseudo-myrtus, eleagnus: quod Belgis hodieque gaghel. Gawle, sweet willow, or Dutch myrtle-tree;" Somner.

SCOTCH MARK. A characteristic name, to distinguish one individual from another, borrowed from a defect or imperfection, whether natural or moral, S.

It is generally remarked of the Scots, that they have a knack of describing persons from their infirmities or failings. This, it must be acknowledged, is not an amiable trait of national character; yet it cannot justly be denied that it is very common among us. In this sense it is often said, "I'll give you a Scotch mark of him." Thus, a person is designed "cripple Jock," "hitching Tam," "gleyit Andro," (V. GLAYR.) The characteristic is frequently taken from some mental imbecility; as, "havering Rab," "gawky Kate," &c. Some moral imperfection, or predominant vice, is often resorted to as the distinguishing denomination; as, "drunken Will," "cursing Jamie," "tarry-finger'd Meg." With still less feeling, it is by no means unusual to particularise an individual from some family stain, or some moral flaw that attaches solely to the parent; as, "That's he whase father was hangit," or "whase mother was o'er thrang wi'" such a one.

SCOTCH MIST. A phrase proverbially used to denote a small but wetting rain, S.

"A Scotch mist will wet an Englishman to the skin;" S. Prov., Kelly, p. 18.

This, though used as a S. Prov., is meant to express the taunt of an Englishman in regard to the moist climate of the north; as if we accounted that a mist only, which beyond the Tweed would be deemed sufficient to give a thorough drenching.

SCOTS AND ENGLISH. A common game of children, S.; in Perthshire formerly, if not still, called King's Covenanter.

"Then was the play of the Scots and English begun, a favourite one on the school green to this day." Perils of Man, i. 3.

[SCOTS-ROOM. Room to throw the arms; a term used in fighting, Banffs.]

[SCOTS-WILLIE, s. A "peerie" codlin, Shetl.]

[SCOTTE-WATRE, s. V. SCOTTIS-SE.]

SCOTTIS BED. Ane Scottis bed, a phrase which occurs in Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16, to which it is not easy to affix any determinate meaning.

Some may be apt to inquire, if, in so early a period, this could mean any thing but a bed of heather?

SCOTTISWATH. The frith of Solway.

"These watry sands of Solway were termed Scottiswath, or the Scottish ford, after Cumberland had been yielded to Scotland; and were also very properly termed Myreford, or miry ford." Pink. Enq., i. 207.

There can be no reasonable doubt that wath is the same with Su.-G. wad, Isl. vud, Lat. rud-um, Ital. guad-o, (whence Fr. gué), all signifying a ford; from Su.-G. wad-a, Isl. rad-a, Dan. wad-er, A.-S. wad-an, Lat. vad-ere, transire vadum. Snorro uses vud in this sense, Deir foero yfir á nockra, thar sem heitir Skiotans-vad eðr Vapna-vad. Heimskringla, Englinga-Sag., c. 21. Macpherson seems justly to suppose that this must refer to a different place from Solway. Geogr. Illustr. V. SCOTTE-WATTRE.

SCOTTIS-WATTRE, SCOTTIS-SE, SCOTTE-WATRE. Names for the Frith of Forth.

"Illa aqua optima—Scottice vocata est Forth, Britannice Werrid, Romane (lingua vulgari) vero Scotte-watre, i.e., aqua Scotorum, quae regna Scotorum et Anglorum dividit, et currit juxta oppidum de Strivelin." De Situ Albaniae, ap. Johnst. Antiq. Celto-Norman, p. 136.

"Goodall—[Introd. ad Fordun]—has shewn that Usher, Carte, Innes, and others, have fallen into gross errors, by mistaking Scottineath for Scottiswatre. The former, as Fordun undesignedly tells us in two places, is Solway frith; the latter is perfectly known to be the frith of Forth. Indeed, wathe, or wade, implies a ford; while watre means a small sea, or limb of the sea." Pinkerton's Enquiry, ii. 207.

Towart Angus syne gan he far,
And thought sone to mak all fre
That wes on the north half the Scottis Se.
Barbour, ix. 309, MS.

Than all thame galdryd he,
That on south half the Scottis Se
He mycht purches of armyd men.
Wyntown, viii. 31. 6.

"The hail thre Estatis hes ordanit, that the Justis on the south syde of the Scottis see set thair Justice airis, and hald thame twyis in the yeir, and alsua on the north syde of the Scottis see, as auld vse and custume is." Acts Ja. II., 1440, c. 5. Ed. 1566.

This phrase, I suppose, must have been used by A.-S. writers. For what is rendered in the A.-S. translation of Orosius, Scottis see, is expl. by Lye, Scotticum mare aive fretum. Lye, most probably finding the Frith of Forth thus designed by A.-S. writers, understood this as meant; or perhaps Alfred, the A.-S. translator, had the same idea, from the use of the expression in his time. It does not appear, however, that this was the meaning of Orosius; for, in the original, he calls it, Mare Scythicum, probably referring to what is now called the German Ocean, and describes it as, a septentrione, so that it would seem that it is the same sea which he mentions frequently after, under the name of Oceanus septentrionalis.

The Frith of Forth is called the Scottish Sea, Acts Malc. II. c. 8. The country "on the north side of the Scottes sea," is distinguished from that "beyond the Scottes sea, as in Lowthian, and these partes betwix the water of Forth and Tine." As Mr. Pinkerton observes, that part of Scotland south of Clyde and Forth was not accounted to be in Scotland proper, till a late period, but only belonging to it.

The reason of Forth having been called the Scottish sea, seems to be, that the Angli of Northumberland held all the south east part of Scotland, from the Forth to the Tweed, for about a century before the year 685. From this date it belonged to the Picts; and even after the union of the Scottish and Pictish kingdoms, the old distinction remained. V. Pinkerton's Enquiry, ii. 205, &c.

Bocce gives a later origin to this designation; for, according to him, it had its rise from the conquest of the southern parts of Scotland, by the Saxons, about the year 859, after the death of Kenneth MacAlpine. He gives the following as one of the articles of the humiliating peace granted to the Scots. "The watter of Forth sall be marche betwix Scottis & Inglis men in the east partis, & it sall be namyt ay fra thyne furth, the Scottis see." Bellend. Cron., B. x., c. 13.

This designation is used by John Hardyng.

On the morowe, Sir Robert Erie Umfreuile
Of Angou then the regent was by north
The Scottis see; and Aymer Walence the while Erie of Pembroke, by south the water of Forth
Wardeyn was of Scotland forsoth,
That day faught with Kyng Robert Bruys,
Besyde Jhonstounne, where he fled without rescowes.

Chron., Fol. 168, b.

Angou is here, by mistake of the transcriber or printer, put for Angos, of which Umfreuile is called erie, Fol. 167, a. This is the same Umfreuile to whom Hardyng ascribes the defeat and capture of William Wallace. V. GOSSE.

SCOUDRUM, s. Chastisement, Aberd.

Probably from Scud, to chastise. In Mearns, however, Cowdrum is used in the same sense.

SCOUFF, s. A male jilt. A Scouff amang the lasses, a giddy young fellow who runs from one sweetheart to another, Border. V. SCOWP.

This seems a corr. from the v. Scoup, to run, q. v.

To SCOUG, SCOUK, SCOWK, v. n. 1. To flee for shelter, [to run into a place for safety or hiding; also, to dash or flow under, as a stream under a bank, Clydes.; Synon., cook, jouk, q. v.]

2. "To go about in a hiddlins way, as intending a bad act," Mearns.

[3. To look sour, angry, or like one bent on some mischief or revenge, Clydes.]

They girn, they glour, they scouk, and gape,
As they wad ganch to eat the starns.

Jacobite Relics, i. 119.

SCOUK, s. 1. A look indicating some clandestine act of an immoral kind.

There's something for my graceless son,
That awkward ass, wi' filthy scouk.

Ibid.

[2. A skulking, cowardly fellow, also, one with a down or dogged look is called a scouk, Clydes.]

SCOUKIN, SCUKIN, part. adj. Ill-looking, ashamed to look up; as, "Ye're a scoukin ill-far'd-like carle;" Mearns; synon. Thief-like.

Apparently the same with Scouging. V. SKVO, s. and r.

[SCOWKING, SCOWKYNQ, s. Skulking, cowardice, Barbour, viii. 140.

Dan. skulke, to slink, Sw. skyla, to hide, Du. schuilen, to lurk.]

SCOULIE-HORN'D, adj. Having the horns pointing downwards, Clydes.

A.-S. scoul, scul, obliquus; whence scul-eaged, squint-eyed, and the E. v. to Scowl.

To SCOUNGE, v. n. 1. To go about from place to place like a dog; generally applied to one who caters for a meal, who throws himself in the way of an invitation, S.

2. To pilfer, Strathmore.

Prob., this term has been formed from Fr. esconser, to hide, to conceal; especially as it implies the idea of something clandestine. Su.-G. skynd-a, however, signifies to procure.

SCOUNRYT, Barbour, xvii. 651. V. SCUNNER.

To SCoup, or SKoup AFF, v. a. To quaff, to drink off, S.B.

O. Tent. schorp-en, Germ. schopf-en, to drink. Wachter thinks that the origin may be Franc. schaff, a hollow vessel; Su.-G. scopa, a vessel for drawing water, a bucket, or scoop, and Belg. schorp, id. are evidently allied. V. SCOPIN.

SCoup, s. A draught of any liquor, S.B. wacht, synon.

SCoup, SCowP, s. 1. Abundance of room, a wide range, S.

2. Liberty of conduct, S.

For many a menyie o' destructive ills
The country now maun brook frae mortmain bills,
That void our test'ments, and can freely gie
Sic will and scoup to the ordain'd trustee.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 86.

Sibb. views this as the same with E. scope. But perhaps it is rather from the same fountain with the v. scoup, q. room to run about.

Scoup, however, is used by Doug. in a sense not easily intelligible.

Decrepitus (his baner schane noch clair)
Was at the hand, with many chiftanis sture.—
Bot smirk or smyle, bot rather for to smure,
Bot scoup, or skist, his craft is all to scayth.

King Hart, ii. 54.

The uncertainty of the meaning of skist leaves the other term in a similar state. O. Fland. schoppe signifies sport. This would correspond with smirk or smyle, and form a contrast with scayth. But there is reason to suspect that skist has been originally skift, a word still commonly used, S. B. Thus the phrase might signify, that without any particular scope or aim, and also without facility of operation, his whole craft lies in doing harm.

To SCoup, SCowP, v. n. To run with violence, to spring, to skip; "to leap or move hastily from one place to another ;”

Shirr. Gl. S. B.

This term is also used in Dumfr.

Wae's me, that disappointed houp—
Shoud' drive fowk frae this warld to scoup
To endless night !

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 60.

“Scoup, to run precipitately ;” Gl. ibid.

It was used in O.E. as signifying to spring, to bound. “I scoupe as a lyon or a tygre dothe whan he doth folowe his pray. Je vas par saultées. I have sene a leopard scoupe after a bucke, and at ones rent out his paunche.” Falsgr. B. iii. F. 347, b.

The lyon, and the leopard,
From louping, and scouping, war skard,
And faine for to fall down.

Burd's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 17.

Thair wes na bus could hald thame bak,
So trimly thay could scoup ;
Nor yet no tike culd thame oretak,
So lightly thay did loup.

Ibid., p. 20.

V. DANDER, v.

Teut. schop-en, incedere cum impetu, Isl. skop-a, discurrere. Perhaps Moea-G. skov-jan, ire, is radically connected. Here undoubtedly we have the origin of E. skip, and not in Ital. squitt-ire, as Johnson strangely imaginea.

SCOU-HOLE, s. A subterfuge.

Neither's the scoup-hole with [worth] a flee,
Or sixteenth part of a Kildee.

Cleland's Poems, p. 86.

SCOUPPAR, SKOUPER, s. 1. A dancer, q. a skipper.

“Vertew—in that court was hated, and filthines not onlie menteined, bot also rewarded ; witnes the Lordship of Abircorne, the barony of Achermoutie, [q. Auchtermoutie?] and dyvers uthers perteyning to the patrimony of the Croun, gevin in inheritance to Scoupperia, Daunsera, and Dallians with Dames.” Knox's Hist., p. 345. Skippers, Lond Edit., p. 374.

2. A light unsettled person. This, at least, seems the signification in the following passage—

Land-louper, light skouper, ragged rouper, like a raven.
Poetw. and Montgom., Watson's Coll., iii. 30.

*SCOUR, s. 1. The act of scouring, S. The s. is not used in E.

2. A hearty draught or pull of any liquid, S.

—Gif, when thirsty,
Frae the strait-trailing udder o' some ewe,
I suck a scour o' milk, you'll no be angry.

Donald and Flora, p. 74.

3. A large dose of intoxicating liquor, S. A.

At the Bour we'll have a scour,
Syne down the links of Gala water.

Old Song.

Probably from the idea of drink making its way rapidly through the passages of the body.

4. A thorough purgation of the bowels, applied to a man, S.

5. A name given to the diarrhoea in cattle, S. V. LASK.

To SCOUR OUT, v. a. To drink off, S.

An' ilka blade had fill'd his wame,
Wi' monie scour'd-out glasses.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 158.

Isl. skyr, sorbillum.

*To SCOUR, v. a. 1. To whip, to flog, to beat, Aberd.

2. It is most commonly applied to the whipping of a top, ibid.

SCOUR, SCOURIN, s. Severe reprehension, S. O.; Scourie, Dumfr., (pron q. scoo); synon. Flyte.

Su.-G. skur-a, fricando purgare, also signifies, increpare, objurgare; whence skur, reprehensio. Taga a en i skur, objurgare; Mod. Sax. schür-en, acriter reprehendere; lhre.

SCOURING, s. A drubbing.

“So many of them as got off joined themselves to George Monro, who having always kept behind, escaped this scouring.” Guthry's Mem., p. 284.

[*To SCOURGE, v. a. 1. To exercise great severity, to act as a hard taskmaster, Banffs.]

2. To scourge the land, to exhaust the strength of the soil, S.

“The principal crops consist of oats, barley, and rye. The last has, of late years, been in no high estimation, from the effect it has in scouring the ground.” P. Cromdale, Moray, Statist. Acc., viii. 255.

[SCOURGER, s. One employed to keep sturdy beggars out of a parish, Sess. Rec. of Inveravon; called Buff-the-beggars in Ayr.]

SCOURIE, adj. Shabby. V. SCOWRY.

SCOURINS, s. pl. A kind of coarse flannel, Caithn.

“Of their wool the tenants' wives made clothing for the family, and any surplus was sold at the country fairs, either in yarn, blankets, scourins, (a kind of flannel), or black greys, a kind of cloth made for the men's coats and great-coats.” Agr. Surv. Caithn., p. 207.

To SCOUT, SCOOT, v. a. To pour forth any liquid substance forcibly, S.

An' gut an' ga' he scoutit.—

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 155.

It is also used in a n. sense; to fly off quickly, most commonly applied to liquids.

But as he down upon her louted,
Wi' arm raxt out, awa' she scouted.

Ibid., ii. 103.

Su.-G. skint-a, jaculare.

The term is used to denote one under the influence of a diarrhoea; Isl. skvett-a, liquidum excrementum jaculari; Verel. V. SCOOT.

SCOUT, s. A syringe, S. V. SCOOT-GUN.

SCOUTH, SCOWTH, s. 1. Room, liberty to range, S. scoup, synon.

“The Doctor, contrair to the opinion of Bede—will have the wall to be built by Severus in stone, and that the last reparation in stone by the Romans, was upon Severus his wall in Northumberland, that the Scots and Picts might have the greater scouth, and so not molest the Brittons, when the Romans had deserted them." Sir James Dalrymple's Collections, p. 19.

2. Freedom to converse without interruption, opportunity for unrestrained communication, S.

For when love dwells between twa lovers leel,
Nor good nor ill from ither they conceal:
Whate'er betides them, it relieves their heart,
When they get scouth their dolor to impart.

Ross's Helenore, p. 18.

3. "Room;" Gl.

An' as we're cousins, there's nae scouth
To be in ony swidders;
I only seek fat is my due,
I mean fat was my brither's.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 4.

4. Abundance; as, scouth of siluer, abundance of money, scouth of meat, &c.

As Su.-G. skott not only signifies cess, public money, but sometimes food; it may have been transferred to denote abundance.

SCOUTH and ROUTH. A proverbial phrase. "That's a gude gang for your horae; he'll have baith scouth and routh," S. i.e., room to range, and abundance to eat.

[SCOUTHIE, adj. Capacious, of large size, Banffs.]

SCOUTHER, s. A hasty toasting. V. SCOWDER.

SCOUTHER, s. Sea blubber, Clydes.; so named on account of its power of scorching the skin. V. SCOWDER.

SCOUTHER, s. A flying shower, Loth., Clydes.; [a sprinkling of snow, Banffs.]; synon. skrow, S. B.

[To SCOUTHER, v. n. To rain or snow slightly, Banffs., Clydes.]

SCOUTHERIE, adj. Abounding with flying showers; Scouthry-like, threatening such showers, S. B.

Mair scouthry like it still does look,
At length comes on in mochy rook;
The Embrugh wives rin to a stook.

The Har'st Rig, st. 81.

SCOUTI-AULIN, s. The Arctic Gull, Orkn.

"There is a fowl there called the Scuti Allan, of a black colour, and as big as a wild duck, which doth live upon the vomit and excrements of other fowls, whom they pursue, and having apprehended them, they cause them vomit up what meat they have lately taken, not yet digested." Brand's Zetl., p. 109, 110.

"Arctic Gull, Larus parasiticus. This bird is sometimes simply called the Allan; sometimes the Dirt Allan;—and it is also named the Badoch.—They pursue and harass all the small gulls till these disgorge or vomit; they then dexterously catch what is dropped, ere it reach the water. The common names are derived from the vulgar opinion that the small gulls are muting, when they are only disgorging fish newly caught." Neill's Tour, p. 201. V. SKAITBIRD.

To SCOVE, v. n. To fly equably and smoothly. A hawk is said to score, when it flies without stirring its wings; a stone scoves, when it moves forward without wavering; Lanarks.

Allied perhaps to Isl. skýfe, scindo, seco, q. cutting the air; or rather to Su.-G. swæfu-a, librari. Hoeken swæfvar i lufst; the hawk is hovering in the air; Wideg. Germ. schweib-en, id. This is probably the sense of Score in the following passage:

— In place of the goose pen
Used by my forebears, I hae taen
A pouk o' Pegasus's wing,
On whilk hee'd up I score and sing.

Poems, Engl. Scotch and Lat., p. 109.

SCOVIE, s. A fop, Lanarks. Hence,

SCOVIE, adj. Foppish, ibid.

SCOVIE-LIKE, adj. Having a foppish appearance, ibid.

Teut. schowigh, vitabundus; pavidus; q. having a startled or unsettled look. Or V. SCOWR.

SCOVINS, s. The crust which adheres to a vessel in which food is cooked, Shetl.

Su.-G. skoefre, tegmen, from ske, id. Isl. Dan. skore, crusta, Isl. skof, id., skof-ir, crusta lactea in fundo ollae adusta; Halderson. This definition exactly corresponds with the signification of Scorins.

SCOW, s. [1. A stick, a small branch or twig; pl. scows, sticks, brushwood, firewood.

2. A barrel-stave, Shetl.; a piece or bit], Aysr.; as, To ding in scow, to drive or break in pieces, Moray.

[3. Metaph. applied to anything long and thin; as, "A great scow of a woman," Shetl.

Dan. skor, wood, forest, skore, to cut down trees.] Perhaps radically connected with the primitive Isl. participle skaa, denoting separation or disjunction.

To SCOWDER, SCOUTHER, SKOLDIR, v. a. To scorch, to burn slightly, S. pron. scowther. A scowther bannock, a scorched cake.

Fy, skowdert skin, thou art but skyre and skrumple.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 54.

Thy skoldirt skin, hewd lyke a saffron bag,
Gars men dispyt thair flesch, thou spreit of Gy.

Ibid., p. 56.

V. EWDER, s. 2.

He's in a Satan's frything pans,
Scouth'ring the blude frae aff his han's, &c.

Remains Nithsdale Song, p. 165.

Prob., Lancash. and Yorks. "scither, scithur, to blaze, to burn very fiercely," (Gl. Bobb.) is the same term, retaining more of its original Goth. form; especially as Thorseby renders it "to singe:" Ray's Lett., p. 338.

A. Bor. swilden, "to singe or burn off, as heath," (Grose) seems to claim the same origin.

Sibb., with considerable appearance of probability, derives it from Teut. schoude, a chimney, schoud-en, to warm. But the Teut. v. properly signifies, to warm liquids. It is given by Kilian, as a cognate of Fr. eschaud-er, Ital. scald-are, whence E. scald, S. scald. All these terms are also restricted to liquids in a heated state, in which sense scowder is never used.

Its origin undoubtedly is Ial. swid-a, Dan. swid-er, Su.-G. need-a, need-ia, id. adurere, leni igne perstringere. Ital. scott-are, to burn, to scald, is most probably from the same source. Ihre views swi, as denoting heat in the ancient Goth.; whence, he says, Ial. swi, aeris mitigatio, swiar til, aura incalescit. A. Bor. scowder'd, overheated with working, (Gl. Grose) has evidently a common origin.

The custom of singing the head and feet of an animal for food has prevailed with the Goths, as well as in S. G. Andr. gives this account of the use of the term swid. "Adusta vel ambusta frusta, veluti culinarii rustici solent caput et pedes pecorum depilare adustione signis, caput pedesque swid vocare solent." Lex., p. 231, i.e., scowder, S. It seems questionable, if this custom was known in England, as the sage monarch, James VI., after his accession, found, to his great mortification, that none of his cooks could grace his table with a black sheep's head, till one of his majesty's countrymen taught them the method of singing it.

SCOWDER, s. 1. A hasty toasting, so as slightly to burn what is thus prepared, S.

"I'll just tell ye ae thing, neighbour, that, if things be otherwise than weel wi' Grace Armstrong, I've gie you a scowther, if there be a tar-barrel in the five parishes." Tales of my Landlord, i. 137.

Ial. swide, adustio; swida, ambustio, inflammatio.

[2. A slight burn; also, the mark made by it, S.]

SCOWDERDOUP, s. A ludicrous designation for a smith, Roxb. V. Forest Minst., p. 137.

SCOWF, s. 1. Empty, blustering, Teviotd.

2. A blusterer; as, "He's naithing but a scowf," ib.

3. Also expl. a low scoundrel, ibid.

Dan. skuffer, to gull, to babble, to shuffle; skuffer, a cheat, a false pretender.

[SCOWKING, s. Skulking, cowardice, Barbour, viii. 140. V. SCOUg, v.]

SCOWMAR, s. A scowmar of the se, a pirate, a corsair.

Thai had bene in gret perell ther;
Ne war [a] scowmar of the se,
Thomas of Downe hattyn wes he,
Hard that the ost as straitly than
Wes stad; and salyt wp the Ban,
Quhill he come wele ner quhar thai lay.

Barbour, xiv. 375, MS.

Belg. see-schuymer, a sea-rover; Fr. escumeur de mer, id. from escumer, to skim, whence the phrase, escumer des mers, to scour or infest the seas.

In the laws of the Lombards, and writings of the middle age, robbers are often denominated Scamari, scamares, Scamatores; whence Fr. escamott-er, to steal. Ipse quantocius Istri fluentia prætermans latrones properanter insequitur, quos vulgus Scamares appellabat Ægippius, in Vita S. Severini, cap. 10. Et plerisque ab actoribus, Scamarisque et latronibus undique collectis, &c. Jornandes de Reb. Getic., c. 58. V. Du Cange. These terms Ihre views as from the same origin with Su.-G. skam, diabolus, cacodaemon, Ial. skiacman, malefactor. I suspect, however, that scowmar, although nearly allied in sense, has no etymological affinity.

SCOWR, s. A slight shower, a passing summer shower, Upp. Clydes., Ettr. For. V. SKOUR.

This retains the form of A.-S. scur, Ial. and Su.-G. skur, imber, nimbus. Hence, SCOWRY, adj. Showery; denoting weather in which intermitting showers are accompanied by blasts of wind, S. A scowry day, one of this description.

May Scotia's simmers ay look gay and green,
Her yellow har'at frae scowry blasts decreed!
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 59.

A scowrie shower, a flying shower, Perths.

Moes.-G. skura windis, a great storm of wind; Mar. iv. 37. Hence A.-S. scur, imber.

SCOWRY, SCOURIE, adj. 1. Shabby in external appearance; thread-bare, as applied to clothes; a scoury hat, S.

The tod was nowthir lean nor scowry,
He was a lusty red-haired Lowry,
Ane lang tail'd beist and grit withall.
Dunbar, Evergreen, i. 201.

I wha stand here, in this bare scowry coat,
Was ance a Packman, worly mony a groat.
The Loss of the Pack, a Tale.

2. Mean in conduct; used especially in the sense of niggardly, S. O.

3. "Having an appearance as if dried or parched; also wasted;" Gl. Sibb. In this sense it is sometimes applied to ground.

Sibb. derives it from scowder. But it is undoubtedly nothing but a corruption of E. scurvy, which is commonly used in sense 2.

SCOWRINESS, SCOURINESS, s. Shabbiness in dress, S.

"O Jean, Jean, do I grudge meat or clait on ye? an' that little whippy maun be casting up our poor-tith, and your scouriness." Saxon and Gael, iii. 58.

SCOWRY, s. A scurvy fellow, S. O.

Young Willie Pitt, o' ready wit,
Did lay this plot for Lowrie;
For a' his grace, and honest face,
Fox thought him but a scowrie.
R. Gallowsay's Poems, p. 208.

SCOWRY, s. The Brown and White Gull, Orkn., Shetl.

"For your harvest on the crag, I suppose you mean these scowries." The Pirate, i. 111. V. SCAURIE.

[SCOWT, SKOWT, s. A barge, a scow, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 382, 391, Dickson. Dutch, schuyt, id.]

To SCOWTHER, v. a. To scorch. V. SCOWDER.

SCOWTHER, s. A slight flying shower, Aberd. Mearns. V. SCOUTHER.

SCOY, s. "Any thing badly made;" Gall. Encycl.

SCOYLOCH, s. "An animal which plaits its legs—in walking;" ibid.

C.B. yego signifies "a going or starting aside," yegoi, "to turn or start aside, to go aslant;" Owen. Scoy has undoubtedly a common origin with E. askew. V. SKAIVIE. Scoyloch, however, more closely resembles Su.-G. scarlg, obliquus, transversus. Munde skaelg, a distorted mouth, S., one that is shoul'd. Ihre derives this word from ska, an ancient Goth. particle denoting separation, and lig, like.

SCOYLL, SCUYLL, s. A school, Aberd. Reg.

[SCRA, SCRAW, s.] A divot or thin turf, Dumfr.

SCRA-BUILT, adj. Built with divots or turfs, ibid.

Down frae the scra-built shed the swallows pop,
Wi' lary slaughter, on the gutter dub.
Ane picks up straes; anither, wi' his neb
Works up the mortar.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 42.

It has been supposed that this denotes a flimsy building, q. the skeleton of a house. V. SKRAE. But it is undoubtedly from Gael. scrath, Ir. syraith, a turf, a sod. V. SCRAW.

This being pared from the surface of the ground, these terms might seem allied to C. B. ysgraw, "that forms a crust," Owen.

SCRAB, s. 1. A crab, Pomum sylvestre; pl. scrabbis.

Syne brade trunscheouris did thay fill and charge
With wilde scrabbis and vthir frutis large Betid.

Doug. Virgil, 208, 44.

Skinner derives E. crab from Belg. scrabb-en, mordicare, because of its acid and harsh taste.

2. In pl. "stumps of heath or roots," S.B. GL. ROSS.

A hail hauf mile she had at least to gang,
Thro' birns and pikes and scrabs, and heather lang.
Ross's Helenore, p. 26.

Scrubbe occurs in the same sense; although metaph. used.

"What was hee but a knottie, barren, rotten scrubbe, marring the ground?" Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1200.

[3. Anything stunted, knarled, or shrivelled; as, a scrab o' a tree, (i.e., a stunted tree), a scrab o' a beast, scrabs o' fingers, Clydes., Banffs.]

[SCRABBIE, adj. Stunted, knarled, shrivelled, ibid.]

[SCRABBLE, SCRABBLICH, s. Dimin. of scrab, in s. 3, Banffs.]

A.-S. scrob, scrobb, Belg. skrobbe, frutex.

SCRABER, s. The Greenland dove, Columbus Grille, Linn., in Orkn. called Tyste.

"The Scraber, so called in St. Kilda, in the Farn Islands, Puffinet, in Holland, the Greenland Dove, has a small bill sharp pointed, a little crooked at the end, and prominent." Martin's St. Kilda, p. 32.

VOL. IV.

[To SCRACHLE, SCRAUCHLE, v. n. To creep, to crawl, to move along with the utmost difficulty, Clydes.; part. pr. scrachlin, used also as a s. V. SCRAUCHLE.]

SCRADYIN, SKRAWDYIN, s. A puny sickly child, Perths. Gael. scraidain, "a diminutive little fellow;" analogous to Isl. skraeda, homo nauci, expl. by Dan. drog, our Droch or Droich.

SCRAE, SCREA, s. 1. A shrivelled old shoe, Dumfr.

"Mickle sorrow comes to the scrae, ere the heat comes to the tea [for tac, toe]," S. Prov.; "spoken when one holds his shoe to the fire to warm his foot." Kelly, p. 251.

"Was be t' scrae, ere heat win to tac," Prov. South of S.

A certain shoemaker, from his making shoes of bad leather, which were apt to shrivel and become hard, got the nickname of Scrimple-hard-scrae, ibid.

[2. Applied to any thing puny, scraggy, or shrivelled, Banffs.

3. An ill-natured, fault-finding, cross-grained person, Ayrs.]

Norv. skraa, also skrae, expl. in Dan. "a shoe, an old shoe;" Hallager. Prob., allied to Dan. skraa, skraey, "wry or awry, crooked;" as the term Bauchle originates from the same idea. Or it may be allied to S. Skrae, often used to denote a shrivelled person.

To SCRAFFLE, v. n. To scramble, Gall.

"When any one—flings loose coin among the mob," they are "said to scraffle—for it." Gall. Enc.

SCRAFFLE, s. The act of scrambling, ibid.

This might seem allied to Teut. schraffel-en, corradere. But perhaps it appears in a more primitive form in Belg. grabbel-en, to scramble.

SCRAIGH, SCRAICH, s. A shriek, Gall. V. SKRAIK.

[To SCRAIGH, v. n. To shriek; also, to cry, to scream, to complain; as, "That bairn's aye scraighin," Clydes.]

[SCRAIGHIN, s. Crying, screaming, shrieking, ibid.]

SCRAIGHTON, s. "Any person fond of screaming;" Gall. Encycl.

But the ither may go,
The auld scraighion sae din [dun],
To the regions below,
And display her tan'd skin.

Ibid., p. 343.

SCRAIGH O' DAY. The first appearance of dawn, Roxb. Clydes.

"We started at the scraigh o' day, and drove on." Perils of Man, ii. 264.

It is Skreek, S.B. q.v. The orthography scraigh suggests a false idea as to the meaning and origin of the term, as if it signified the cry of day. The radical word is Creek, from Teut. kriecke, aurora rutilans.

V

To SCRALL, v. n. To crawl.

This Moses made the frogs in millions creep,
From floods and ponds, and scrall from ditches deep.
Hudson's Judith, p. 19.

Formed from E. crawl, or, Su.-G. kraell-a, by prefixing s. V. the letter S.

SCRAN, s. [Food, provisions, supply, Clydes.]; also, ability, or means of effecting any purpose, Roxb. V. SKRAN.

[SCRANEL, s. A morsel, Shetl.]

To SCRANCH, v. a. To grind somewhat crackling between the teeth, Aberd. V. CRANCH.

Sewel writes it schrans-en, "to eat greedily." Tent. schrans-en, dentibus frangere; et comminuere, dentibus conficere cibum; Kilian.

SCRANNIE, s. "An old ill-natured, wrinkled beldame;" Gall. Enc.

Isl. skran signifies scruta, old tattered garments. But the resemblance seems merely accidental. Skræla, is to dry, arefacere; Su.-G. skrin, excissus. These terms agree with the outward appearance of the subject. Skræla-a, vociferari; skraen, clamor stridulus, correspond with the character given of her temper. The word may, however, be a dimin. from S. Skrae, q. v.

To SCRAPE, v. n. To express scorn or disdain, Fife. V. SCORP.

[SCRAPIT, part. pa. Ill-scrapit, evil-speaking; also applied to a foul-mouthed person; as, "Ye've an ill-scrapit tongue, Ayrs.]

SCRAPIE, SCRAPE-HARD, s. A mean, nig-gardly person, a miser; from the idea of his scraping money together, S. [In Banffs., scrap-hard.]

[SCRAPIT-FACE, s. A person with a thin, haggard face, Shetl.]

SCRAPLE, s. 1. An instrument used for cleaning the Bake-board, Roxb.

2. One for cleaning a cow-house, Ettr. For.; synon. Scattle.

Su.-G. skrap-a, radere, to scrape; whence skrapa, a curry-comb, that which is used in scraping. Dan. scrabe, a scraper. The S. word, in its form, nearly resembles C. B. crafell, yegravell, a curry-comb.

SCRAT, s. 1. A scratch, a slight wound, rut; evidently a transposition of Scart, a scratch, Galloway, Banffs.

[2. The noise made by scratching, Banffs.]

[To SCRAT, SCRAWT, v. a. and n. To scratch; also, to make a scratching sound, Banffs.; scrawt, part. pr. scrawtin, used also as a s. Clydes.]

SCRATTED, part. pa. Scratched. "To be scratted, to be torn by females;" Gall. Encycl.

This seems to have been the more ancient disposition of the letters, as in the more primitive Su.-G. v. kraell-a, radere. V. SCART, v.

SCRAT, SKRATT, s. A meagre, mean-looking person, Loth. Hence, SCRATTY, SKRATTY, adj. Thin, lean, having a puny appearance, ibid.

I am at a loss whether we ought to view this as originally the same with Scart, s., used precisely in the same sense; or as the relique of another term, anciently used to denote a hermaphrodite, Scarcht, S. but in O. E. written Scrat. V. Phillips and Skinner.

SCRATCH, s. An hermaphrodite, Pit-scottie's Cron., p. 162.

This is the form of the word given from the MS. from which the Ed. 1814 has been printed. In that of 1728 it is Scarcht, q. v. This change has probably been caused by transposition of the letters. Scratch bears less resemblance to any of the terms mentioned under that article. Phillips calls scrat "an old word." Huloet writes it Scrayle.

[SCRATH, s. The Cormorant, (Pelecanus carbo, Pennant), a bird, Banffs.]

To SCRAUCH, SCRAUGH, v. n. 1. To utter a loud and discordant sound, to scream, Roxb.

They hadna gane a mile, a mile,

A mile but barely three,

Whan they hae met the wily parrot,

Come scraughin out that way.

Old Ballad, Earl Richard.

Thus gaed they on wi' deavin din,

A' scraughin, yelpin thro' ither.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 15.

This is merely a provincial variety for SCREIGH and SKRAIK, q. v. Ir. Gael. spreach-am, to whoop, to shriek. C. B. yegrech-ian, id.

2. To shriek; the pronunciation of the South of S. It has been supposed that Screigh perhaps implies greater shrillness in the sound than Scraugh.

To nae thrown boy, or scraughin wife,
Shall thy auld banes become a drudge;
At cats an' callans, a' thy life,
Thou ever bore a mortal grudge.

Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 184.

The term is here used as equivalent to scolding.

SCRAUGH, s. A loud and discordant sound, ibid.

"To be sure, I blew sic points of war, that the scraugh of a clockin-hen was music to them." Bride of Lammerinoor, ii. 247. V. SKRAIK, SKRAIGH.

To SCRAUCHLE, v. n. To use as it were both hands and feet in getting forward, to scramble, Lanarks.

Prob. allied to Isl. skra, Germ. schrag, oblique; and Su.-G. skrill-a, per lubricum ferri.

SCRAW, s. A thin turf, Gall., Dumfr.

"Scraws, thin turfs, pared with slaughter spades to cover houses;" Gall. Encycl.

SOOB AND SCRAW, "a snug phrase;" ibid.
The writer must mean, that this phrase conveys the idea of snugness; or intimate that every thing is in a compact state, like the roof of a house, when the turfs are well secured.

Gael. scrath, sgraith, a turf, sod, green-sward. C. B. ysgraw, what forms a crust.

SCREA, s. A shoe, Dumfr. V. SCRAE.

[To SCREE, SCREE on, v. n. To manage to get on in some way, Shetl.]

[SCREEBIT, adj. Poor, lean, fleshless, Shetl.]

[SCREEBY, s. Scurvy-grass, (Cochlearia officinalis) a plant, Banffs.]

To SCREED, SKREED, v. a. 1. To rend or tear quickly, S.

—A ruther raise, tweesh riving hair,
Screeing of kurches, crying dool and cara.

Ross's Helenore, p. 23.

2. To do any thing smartly, quickly, or continuously.

—On the fourth of June,

Our bells screeed off a loyal tune.

Ferguson's Poems, li. 14.

On this Sir W. Scott observes, justly I believe, "It is rather to dash it off, to do it with spirit."

3. To talk fluently or continuously, S. To skreed off, or awa'.

Auld farant tales he screeeds awa'.

Farmer's Ha'.

4. To lie; especially as denoting that sort of falsehood which consists in fabrication or magnifying in narration.

The word, as used in this sense, seems to have no connexion with Skreed as signifying to rend, or tear; but rather with A.-S. scrith-an, vagari, "to wander, to go hither and thither," Somner; or rather with Isl. skreidi, inanis excusatio, vana verba; Su.-G. skryt-a, jactare, &c. V. SKREED, v.

Halderson renders Isl. skreyt-a, ultra modum laudare. As it primarily signifies ornare, he deduces it from skraut, ornatus.

[5. To injure, to defame, to spoil, S.]

—Some their neighbours names are screeeding.

Morison's Poems, p. 81.

According to Sihb., from Teut. schrooden, mutillare, decurtare, praesecare; schroode, segmen. As the term seems necessarily to imply the idea of the sound made in the act of tearing anything, I suspect that it should be traced to Isl. skrida, rupium fissuram lapsus et ruina. Thus sknaeskrída denotes the fall of snow in a conglomerated state from the mountains; Conglobatae nivis ex montibus lapsus; Verel. He mentions, as a cognate, Moes-G. disksreit-an, scindere, dissecundare. It is used in the very same sense with our skreil. The high priest, disksreitlands vasjos seinos; rending his clothes; Mark xiv. 63. Faurhah als disksreitnoda in twa, gah stainos disksreitnodedun; The veil of the temple was rent in twain, and the rocks rent; Matt. xxvii. 51.

Teut. schrood-en may be traced to the same fountain; as well as Germ. schrot-en, to divide, says

Wachter, in whatever way this is done, by breaking, cutting, mutilating, &c. Also A.-S. scread-an, be, scread-an, dissecundare, screading, resectio, screadingungas-frusta, also screade, whence E. shred; corresponding to Isl. skurd-ur, sectio, our skreid of cloth. Su.-G. skraed-a, secare. This term has probably given origin to Gael. scread, a cry, shout; screadan, the noise of any thing rending. V. the s.

SCREED, SKREED, s. 1. The act of rending or tearing; a rent, S.

"Challenge of Tailieouris. In the first, thay mak refuse and skreidis in men's claiith, sumtimes for haist, and sumtimes for ignorance." Balfour's Pract. Chalmerl. Air, p. 582.

2. The sound made in rending, S.

3. Any loud shrill sound, S.

Their cudgels brandish'd 'boon their heads,—
Their horns emittin martial screeids.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, li. 12.

The ice gae a great scree; a phrase used to denote the noise made by the cracking of ice, exactly analogous to Isl. snæskrida, mentioned above.

4. The thing that is rent or torn off; as, a screeed of cloth, S. Ihe mentions this as A. Bor. vo. skraeda. V. the v.

"Item, that thay [Tailieouris] tak pieces and skreidis to sleives, and uther small thingis." Balfour, at sup.

5. A dissertation, a harangue; sometimes conjoined with an adj. expressive of length, as, a lang screeed.

"If I warnae sae sick, I wad gae her a screeed o' doctrine." Cottagers of Glenburnie, p. 231.

The Minister gae us an unco screeed the day; We had a long and earnest sermon to-day.

6. A poetical effusion in writing, S.

Sae, tho' on Rhime's twa-forkit hill
My tatter'd tent I'm strikin',
I'll hae this partin' skreed to tell

How weel ye're worth the likin'.

Picken's Poems, i. 146.

7. A long list or catalogue, S.

8. Metaph., with respect to immorality in general.

Ye, for my sake, hae gi'en the feck
Of a' the ten commands

A screeed some day.

Burns, lii. 30.

9. A screeed of one's mind, a phrase always used to denote a discourse that is not pleasing to the hearer; as being expressive of disapprobation or reprehension.

"'Weel done!' cried Mrs. Smith. 'I trow ye gae her a screeed o' your mind.'" Ibid., p. 262.

10. A screeed o' drink, a long revel, a hearty drinking-bout.

It is used in the following manner: "He's no a tippler, nor a habitual drunkard; but he takes a screeed sometimes. When he takes a screeed, his wife 'ill no see him maybe for three or four days."

The phrase occurs in a celebrated novel; but it seems doubtful whether it is not used in too limited a sense, as if it denoted a shorter debauch than that which it generally signifies.

"Naething confuses me unless it be a screed o' drink at anorra time." Guy Mannering, ii. 52.

"Screed,—a rash frolic;" Gl. Antiq.

"Had he not deet [died] amang hands in one of his screids wi' the lairds o' Kilpatrick, I'm sure I canna think what would hae come o' me and my first wife." The Entail, i. 284.

Named perhaps from its length, or continuation.

To SCREED, SKREED, v. n. 1. To cry, to scream.

It made me yelp, and yeul and yell

An' skirl an' skreed.

Watson's Coll., i. 38.

2. To produce a sharp sound, S. It seems rather to convey the idea of what is grating to the ear.

"A better vialer [violer] never screeded on a silken cord, or kitted a cat's trypes wi' his finger ends." J. Falkirk's Jokes, p. 8.

From its connection with skirl, it seems formerly to have denoted a shrill or piercing sound, perhaps allied to Franc. scriot, clamor, which must certainly be viewed as of the same stock with Scry, q. v. Verel. mentions Sw. skrijt, clamor, vo. Skraekr.

To SCREEDGE, v. a. To tear, Ettr. For.; the same with Screed.

SCREEL, s. "A large rocky hill nigh the sea; a haunt for the fox;" Gall. Encyc.

This is merely a local name.

[To SCRENGE, v. n. V. SCRINGE.]

[SCREEVELIN, s. A small coil of hay or corn, Shetl. V. under SCRIEVE.]

SCREG, s. A cant term for a shoe, S.

It has been deduced from Gael. scraw, covering, crust.

To SCREIGH, SKREIGH, v. n. To shriek, S.

"It is time enough to skreigh, when ye're stricken;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 47.

Lancash. "skrikeing, to squall, or cry out;" T. Bobbins.

Su.-G. skrik-a, vociferari, Isl. skrack-a, Dan. skryg-cr. Ithre gives the Su.-G. v. as a frequentative from skri-a, id. V. SKRY.

SCREIK, SCRYKE, s. Shriek, howling, S. B. skreik.

The young children and frait matronis eik
Stude all in raw, with many pietuous screik,
About the tressour quhymerand woundis sare.

Doug. Virgil, 64, 20.

And oft with wyld scryke the nycht oule
His on the rufe allane was hard youle.

Ibid., 116. 9. V. the v.

SCRENOCH, s. A noise made about any trifling matter, Banffs. V. SCROINOC.

SCREYB, s. The common designation of the wild apple, Clydes.

Evidently from Crab, with s prefixed, as in many words of Gothic formation.

SCREW, s. 1. A small stack of hay, S. B.

"The hay thus collected is put into small coles, and shaken once or twice a-day (if the weather be fair) for a week, when it is ready to be packed into small shocks (provincially called screws), secured with ropes made of heather." Agr. Surv. Sutherl., p. 78.

[2. A small packet or parcel of anything; as, a screw o' tobacco, a small quantity of tobacco wrapped in paper, a supply for a pipe, Clydes.]

Corr. probably from Gael. crnach, "a rick, or heap of any thing;" Shaw. Isl. skrufa, however, denotes a small heap of fishes laid out to be dried; as expl. by Haldorson; "a stack of fishes."

SCREW-DRIVER, s. The tool used by carpenters which in E. is called a turn-screw, S.

SCRIBAT, pret. v. Jeered, taunted, made game.

Methocht his wit wes quyt went away with the laif;
And so I did him dispys, I scribat quhen I saw him,
That superexpendit ewil of speche, spulyeit of all vertew.
Dunbar, Mailand Poems, p. 59.

This is evidently the same v. with Scorp, q. v.

In Edit. 1508, however, spittit is used instead of scribat.

To SCRIBBLE, SCRABBLE, v. a. To tease wool, S.

"They have erected a teasing or scribbling, and a carding machine, which are driven by a small stream of water." P. Twyneholm, Kirkcudbr. Statist. Acc., xv. 80.

Belg. schraffel-en, to scrape; Tent. schraffel-en, corradere, verrere, apparently from Teut. schraff-en, to scrub.

SCRIBE, s. A crab (apple), Clydes. V. SCRAB.

This is also communicated in the form of SCREYB, q. v.

SCRIDDAN, s. A mountain torrent, Ross.

"The farms which are bases to high mountains, as in Kintail, suffer great losses from what is called scrid-dan, or 'mountain torrent.' The farm of Auchuirm, in Glenelchaig, once a populous town, was, in 1745, rendered uninhabitable, and is since converted to a grazing, by an awful Scriddan." P. Kintail, Statist. Acc., vi. 249.

"When the rain falling on the side of a hill, tears the surface, and precipitates a large quantity of stones and gravel into the plain below, we call it a scridan." Glenfergus, i. 203.

Perhaps from Gael. screadan, the noise of any thing rending; Shaw. V., however, SCREED, v. and s.

To SCRIEVE, v. a. To scratch; to scrape, to peel; Ang. Flandr. schraeff-en, radere.

SCRIEVE, s. A large scratch, Ang.

[SCREEVELIN, s. A small coil of hay or corn, Shetl.]

To SCRIEVE, SKRIEVE, v. n. 1. To move or glide swiftly along, Ayrs., Roxb.

Scho thro' the whins, an' by the cairn,
An' owre the hill gaed scrievin.

Burns, iii. 136.

But, o'd'd by thee,
The wheels o' life gae down-hill scrievin,
Wi' rattlin glee.

Ibid., p. 13.

It is used metaph. in the same sense, S.

Expl. "gleesomely, swiftly," Gl.

"Redhough an' his lads hae been as weel scrievin o'er law and dale as lying getting hard pelts round the stane wa's o' Roxburgh." Perils of Man, i. 54.

Dan. skraev, a stride, a step, a pace; skraever, to stride, to stride over; Wolff.

Sibb. refers to Su.-G. skrid-a, leni motu provehi; but more prob. from Isl. skref-a, gradi, whence skref, gressus, passus; or skrepp-a, lubricè dilabor, G. Andr., p. 215.

[2. To read or write quickly and continuously, Ayrs.]

3. To talk familiarly, implying the idea of continuation, S.

Allied to Su.-G. skraefw-a, to rant, to rattle, to rave; whence skraefla, a rattling, or ranting fellow or woman.

SCRIEVE, SKRIEVE, s. [1. A piece of writing; also, the statement or story written.] A lang scribe, a long letter or writing, S.

[2. A lengthy familiar conversation or learned discourse; as, "We sat down and had a scribe about the craps," S.]

Teut. schrijv-en, Germ. schreyb-en, Lat. scrib-ere, to write.

SKRIEVER, s. 1. A clever fellow, one who goes through his work expeditiously, Border.

2. An inferior sort of writer, a mean scribe, Loth.

To SCRIPT, SKRIFT AFF, v. a. and n. 1. To rehearse from memory; including the idea of ease and fluency in repetition, S.

"Whan ye was our dominie, a' the children ga'd to the kirk wi' yow,—an' wad ha'e scrift aff a psalm or a paraphrase ilka Sunday night, an' had some kind o' havins thro' the owk." Campbell, i. 327.

2. To magnify in narration, to fabricate, to fib.

Isl. skraf-a, fabulari, nugari, skraef, nugae, Su.-G. skraefwa, locutulus, skarfw-a, to patch is metaph. used in the same sense with our skrift; because he who mixes falsehood with truth, as it were, adulterates the truth of the addition of rags. Serenius expl. the E. v. to Fib, of Sw. skarfw-a. In the same figurative sense, one is said to cobble, S. when he patches up a story; and a person of this description is sometimes called a cobbler.

[SCRIPT, s. 1. A recitation, a long-winded story, Clydes.

2. A fabrication, a fib, a falsehood, ibid.]

SCRIM, s. A very thin coarse cloth, used for making blinds for windows, buckram, &c., S. B.

"There was no cloth made at Forfar, but a few yard-wides called Scrims." P. Forfar, Statist. Acc., vi. 512.

Scrim is evidently the same with Su.-G. skerm, tegmen, umbraculum cujusunque generis in bello contra ictus, domi contra vim solis, foci, luminis, &c. Alem. skerm, Germ. schirm, Ital. schermo, defensio; Ibre. The origin of these terms is uncertain.

To SCRIM, v. a. 1. To rub, scrub, rinse; as, "to scrim the cogs," to rinse the milk-vessels, ibid., Upp. Clydes. V. SCRYM, v.

2. To strike smartly with the open hand on the breech, Mearns.

[To SCRIMGE, SCRYMGE, v. a. and n. 1. To rub or scrub briskly, Banffs.

2. To beat severely, ibid.

Part. pr. scrimgean is used as a s. in both senses.]

[SCRIMGE, SCRYMGE, s. 1. A hard rub, ibid.

2. A severe beating, ibid.]

SCRINGER, s. 1. One who is avaricious, but not from necessity, who from mere covetousness wishes for what he stands in no need of, Teviotd.

[2. A person of disagreeable disposition and manners, Banffs.]

[To SCRIMGE, v. n. Banffs. form of Scringe, q. v.]

To SCRIMP, SKRIMP, v. a. 1. To straiten, to deal sparingly with one; used both as to food and money. He scrimps him in his meat, he does not give him enough of food, S.

For some had scrimpt themsel's o' food
To wait that night.

Shirref's Poems, p. 212

—Ye'ee nae be scrimp'd of meal;

And ye hae south of milk, I see, yoursel.

Ross's Helenore, p. 95.

Hence scrimpit, parsimonious, niggardly.

—What signifies your gear?

A mind that's scrimpit never wants some care.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 66.

2. To limit, to straiten; in a general sense, S.

Was she found out for mending o' their meal?

Or was she scrimped of content or heal?

Ross's Helenore, p. 50.

He gangs about sornan frae place to place,

As scrimpt of manners as of sense and grace.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 136.

Sibb. properly derives it from Teut. krimp-en, contrahere, diminuire, coarctare, extenuare. In some other dialects s is prefixed; hence Germ. schrimp-en, corrugari, Su.-G. skrump-en, corrugatus.

SCRIMP, SCRIMPIT, adj. 1. Scanty, narrow, deficient; applied to food or money, S.

Each in their hand a scrimp hauf bannock got,
That scarce for aens wad fill their mouth and throat.

Ross's Helenore, p. 49.

2. Contracted, not correspondent to the size; applied to clothes, S.

Plain was her gown, the hue was o' the ewe,
And growing scrimp, as she was i' the grow.

Ross's Helenore, p. 23.

—Sic is the way
Of them wha fa' upon the prey;
They'll scarce row up the wretch's feet,
See scrimp they make his winding sheet.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 467.

3. Limited, not ample.

"It may be, this scrimp and scanty proclamation of pardon was not so pleasing to them as the former, and their friends spare them." Wodrow's Hist., ii. 74.

It is also used in relation to company or retinue.
"Mr. Buchanan likewise narrates how the Queen, in order to have more leisure to follow her private intrigues, sent away the King [Darnly] forcibly to Peebles, with a very scrimp attendance, in the rigour of winter." Keith's Hist., p. 328.

SCRIMP, adj. Not liberal, sparing, niggardly, Aberd., Angus.

4. Deficient; in relation to mind.

How mony do we daily see,
Right scrimp of wit and sense.
Who gain their aims aft easily
By well-bred confidence?

Ramsay's Works, i. 114.

Sw. krimpe, little; Belg. bekrompen, narrow, scant.
V. the v.

SCRIMP, adv. Sparingly, S.

"When Dr. Lighton [Leighton] was Commendator of Glasgow, and he himself Professor of Divinity there, —he allowed and invited all people to accuse their Pastors, and give in what indictment they pleased against them,—this was not done scrimply neither, nor out of mere form; but if there was any partiality, it was against the Minister." Account of the present Persecution of the [Episcopalian] Church in Scotland, A. 1690, p. 48.

"But the cases are very different, where the mosses are scrimply sufficient, for a length of time to supply the inhabitants." Dr. Walker, Prize Essays Highl. Soc., S. ii. 117.

SCRINE, s. Prob., a casket for holding jewels.

"The air sall haue—an e wair almerie, ane scrine, ane letteron, ane press," &c. Balf. Pract., p. 235.

This, from the connexion, seems to have the same meaning with Fr. escrain, a casket, a small cabinet, Cotgr.; Mod. Fr. ecrin, id. properly, a casket for holding jewels; Lat. scrin-ium, whence A.-S. scrin, arca, capsa sacra, capsula, cistula; Su.-G. skrin, Alem. scrine, Belg. scryn, Isl. skrija, C. B. ygrin, Ital. skrigno, Hisp. excrinuo, E. shrine.

[To SCRINGE, SCRENGE, v. n. To move about prying into secret places, turning over and examining every thing, Clydes.]

[SCRINGE, SCRENGE, s. A prying, eager search, rummage; also, one who so searches, ibid.]

[SCRINGER, SCRENGER, s. A person given to scringing, ibid.]

[Gael. rannsaich, Manx. ronnsee, search, rummage; perhaps from Dan. skriian, A.-S. scrin, a shrine, from the eager manner in which pilgrims seek after and examine the relics belonging to the shrine they visit.]

SCRIP, s. A mock; most probably one expressed by a distortion of the face.

Wallace as than was laith to mak a ster,
Ane maid a scrip, and tyt at his lang suorde:
Hald still thi hand, quoth he, and speik thi word.
Wallace, vi. 141, MS.

V. SCORP.

SCRIPTURE, s. A pence.

I hint ane scripture, and my pen furth tuke;
Syne thus began of Virgil the twelt buke.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 404, 35.

Fr. scriptoire, id.

SCRIVER, s. Prob., paymaster.

"Another that was scriver to a troop, who was sitting in a chamber himself, the house fell and smooed him." Wodrow MSS. Law's Memorials, p. 199, N.

Belg. schryver, a scribe; schryver, (op een schip), a purser. Dan. skryver, a secretary.

SCROBIE, s. The scurvy.

"1655—This year, Mr. Jhone Duncan, minister of Curia, departed out of this life; he died of the scrobie." Lamont's Diary, p. 109. V. SCRUBIE.

SCROG, s. 1. A stunted bush or shrub, S.; [a crooked, scraggy limb, Banffs.]

—Every thyng that doith repare
In firth or feild, flude, forest, erth or are,
Or in the scroggis, or the buskis ronk,
Lakis, maressis, or thare poulis donk,
Astablit lyggis styl to sleep and restis.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 450, 2.

"Al the grond of the palecis of that tryumph and toune [Troye] and castel, is ouergane with gyrs and vild scroggis." Compl. S., p. 31.

In pl. it is commonly used to denote thorns, briars, &c., and frequently small branches of trees broken off, S.

The term scraw, used in Ireland, is similar both in signification and in origin.

"And to see her standing in the midst of them Boddei Sassoni, just like a young acion of an old oak on the Boggras, flourishing lonely and green among the scraws and briars that have sprung up in a night season, like mushrooms." Florence MacCarthy, iii. 78, 79.

[2. A stretch of stunted shrubs, brushwood.]

Fyue foullis I chaist out throw ane scrog,
Qubairfoir thair motheris did me warie;
For thar war drownit all in a bog.

Lyndsay's Works, 1592, p. 300.

This word, by Rudd., Sibb., and in Gl. Compl., is viewed from A.-S. scrobb, frutex, whence E. shrub. But perhaps it is rather allied to Teut. schrag, schraeg, pl. schraeghen, spars or slips of wood for supporting vines; ligna transversa, capreoli; canterii. V. Wachter, Kilian. The origin is Germ. schrag, obliquus.

SCROGGY, SKROGGY, adj. 1. Stunted, S.

The company al samyn held away
Throw scroggy bussis furth the nerrest way.
Doug. Virgil, 264, 19.

In sere plecis the herde at his desyre
Among the scroggy rammell settis the fyre.
Ibid., 330, 47.

"The name of the town [Dumfries] is, by some, supposed a compound of Gothic or Celtic, with a Roman word, Drumfriars; by others, it is considered as more entirely Celtic, Drumfresh, a hill or rising ground clad with furze or scroggy bushes." P. Dumfries, Statist. Acc., v. 140.

"John of Wallinford mentions the Castrum Puel-larum as at the Northern extremity of Northumbria. This name our writers apply to Elinburgh. It is a mere translation of the name of Dumfries: Dun-Fres; Dun, castellum, urbe; Fru, Fre, virgo nobilis, Ice— landic. This was the name given by the Piks, while the Cumri of Cumbria called the same place Abernith, as it stands at the mouth of the Nith. Pinkerton's Enquiry, ii. 208.

2. Abounding with stunted bushes or brushwood, S.

—Quhare now standis the golden Capitoile,
Vmquhille of wyldie buskis rouch skroggy knoll.
Doug. Virgil, 254, 12.
On skroggy braes shall akes and ashes grow.
Ramsay's Poems, l. 60.

- SCROINOCH, SCRONNOCH, SCRYNOCH, s.
Noise, tumult, Aberd.

Nae doubt, sma' scroinoch they wad mak,
If she in lofty style could crack.
Shirref's Poems, p. 320.

- [To SCRONNOCH, v. n. To shout, screech, yell, ibid.]

Sibb. naturally enough refers to Sw. skraen, clamor stridulus; Gl.

- SCROOFE, SCRUF, s. 1. A thin crust or covering of any kind, S.

"The outwarde scroof, suppose it appeareth to be whole, where the inward is feasted, anaieth nothing, bot maketh it to vndercoate again." Bruce's Eleven Serm., T. ii. a, b.

"Strive therefore euer to keep the soule in a sense and feeling, and let not that miserable scroofe to goe ouer thy soule." Rollock on the Passion, p. 12.

—His nose will lose the scruf,
Gif he fa' down.
R. Galloway's Poems, p. 18.

Lancash. "scroof, a dry sort of scales;" T. Bobbins.

2. Applied also to money that is both thin and base.

"Now they spair not planelie to brek down and convert gud and stark mony, cunyit in our cunye-house, in our Soveranes les aige, into this thair corrupted scruf and baggages of Hard heidis and Nonsounts." Knox's Hist., p. 164.

Radically the same with E. scurf, Su.-G. skor, the scurf of a wound, according to Seren. from skorpa, crusta.

- [To SCROOFE, v. a. To take off the surface; to touch slightly; to do any thing slightly or superficially, S. V. SCRUF.]

- SCROOFIN, SCRUFAN, s. A thin scurf or covering; as, a scrufan of ice, S. B.

Su.-G. skrof is used in the latter sense, glacies rara. V. preceding word.

- SCROPPIT, adj. [Mean, scraping, niggardly.]

Ane scroppit cofe quhen he begynnys
Sornand all and sindry airtis,
For to by hennis reid-wod he rynnys.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 170.

This is the description of what is now called a cadger. Lord Hailes renders scroppit, contemptible, illustrating this sense by the passage in Knox's Hist., quoted under SCORP.

Scroppit, as here used, seems synon. with E. scrubbed, scrubby, mean, sordid; from Belg. schrobb-en, to scrub, whence schrobber, a mean fellow, a scoundrel; Germ. schrabb-en, to scrape money together, schrobber, avaricious.

- SCROW, SKROW, s. 1. A scroll, a writing, S.

Thy scrows obscure are borrowed fra some bulk.
Polw. and Montgom., Watson's Coll., iii. 6.
Dirten Dunbar, on quhome blaws thou thy boist?
Pretendand thee to wryte sic scaldit skrows!

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 48.

It is rather singular that this orthography should have been used by Sir Ralph Sadler, not after he had been long resident at the Scottish court, and might have adopted the pronunciation of the country in some instances, but so early as the year 1537, while as yet he was only on his way to fulfil his first embassy.

"Not passing ii or iii dayes before my cumyng, musters made in Cliveland upon the hilles, which was by means of dyvers billes and scrowes sett upon posts and church-dores thoroughly out the bishopricke, and tost and scatered abroad in the contrey by some sedyteous persons, which do nothing else but go up and downe to devise mischief and devisioun." Sadler's Papers, ii. 596, 597.

2. Damaged skins, which are fit only for making glue, are called Scrows; also, the scraps taken from skins, and used for the same purpose.

"Scrows of ox and cow, or other hides per ton,
0 4 0"
Dues on Goods, Thom's Hist. Aberd., ii. 52.

3. The name given most commonly to the minute cancri observed in pools and springs, Cancer stagnalis and C. pulex, S. It is, however, also occasionally applied to some of the aquatic larvae of flies and beetles, especially to the larva of the Dytiscus marginalis.

Squilla, nostratibus the Scrow. Sibb. Scot., p. 34.
Su.-G. skrof, skeleton, from its appearance?

- [To SCROW, v. a. To cut off the scraps or torn pieces from skins, West of S.; synon. snod.]

- SCROW, s. 1. A number, a crowd, a swarm; apparently implying the idea of bustle and confusion, Ettr. For., Dumfr., Gall.

To bell the cat wi' sic a scrow,
Some swankies etiled;
But oh! they got a fearfu' cow,
Ere a' was settled.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 73.

"Scrow, a large quantity of people;" Gall. Enc.

2. "Riot, hurley-burley;" Dumfr., Gl. Mayne.

Dan. skrog is rendered moles, as denoting a large mass of any kind. But it may be from S. scrow, a scroll, as including a number of names.

- [* To SCRUB, v. a. and n. To act in a niggardly, parsimonious, or oppressive manner in bargain making, to be saving or exacting in the smallest matters, S.]

- * SCRUB, s. A niggardly oppressive person, S.; q. one who is still rubbing very hard for gain, or to avoid expenditure.

- [SCRUBBIE, adj. Of a niggardly, exacting nature or disposition, S.]

[SCRUBBIENESS, s. Sordid parsimony, S.]

SCRUB, s. The plane that is first used in smoothing wood, the fore-plane, or jack-plane, Aberd.

Isl. skrubbsfell signifies runcina, a plane; Sw. skrub and skrubbyvel, "jack-plane, rough-plane," Wideg.; from Su.-G. skrubba, Dan. skrubber, to rub.

SCRUBBE, s. V. SCRAB.

SCRUBBER, s. A handful of heath tied tightly together for cleaning culinary utensils, Teviotd.; from E. to Scrub, or Belg. schrobber, a scrub.

SCRUBBLE, s. 1. The act of struggling, Loth.

2. A squabble, an uproar, ibid.

3. The difficulty to be overcome in accomplishing any work, as E. struggle is often used, ib.

To SCRUBBLE, v. n. 1. To struggle, Loth.

2. To raise an uproar, ibid.

Dan. skrub, signifies a beating, a cudgelling.

SCRUBIE, s. The vulgar name of the scurvy, S.

Isl. skyrbing-ur. This term occurs A. 1239; although some understand it of the elephantiasis. V. Von Troil, p. 324, Su.-G. skoerbing. Hence, SORUBIE-GRASS, s. Scurvy-grass, S. scroobie-grass, A. Bor.

SCRUFE, s. A scurf, S. V. SCROOFE.

To SCRUFE, v. a. 1. To take off the surface, S.

2. To touch slightly; as, "It scruf the ground," it glided along the surface. Applied also to slight and careless ploughing, when merely the surface of the ground is grazed, S.

3. To do anything superficially; as, "He only scruf his subject," S.

[SCRUFAN, SCRUFIN, s. A thin scurf or covering, S.]

To SCRUG one's Bonnet, v. a. A person is said to scrug his bonnet, when he snatches it by the pique, and lifts it up, or cocks it, on his brow, that he may look smart, bold, or fierce, Fife, Perth.

He scruggil's bonnet, aff he startit,
Gudenight, coth he, an' sae they partit.
Duff's Poems, p. 107.

Allied perhaps to the E. v. to shrug, and Sw. skruk-a, humeros attollere.

[SCRUINNICH, s. 1. A shrill cry, a yell, Banffs.

2. The act of screaming or yelling about anything sudden or unexpected, ibid.

3. A person given to screaming or yelling, ibid.]

[To SCRUINNICH, v. n. 1. To shout, screech, or yell, ibid.

2. To talk in a highly excited, screaming, manner, ibid.]

[SCRUINNICHIN, SCRUINNICHAN, part. pr. Used as a s. and as an adj. in both senses of the v., ibid.]

To SCRUMPILL, v. a. 1. To crease, to wrinkle; synon. Runkle.

"Ane chartour,—being be chance brint, singit be the fire, scrumpillit, or the seil thair of meltit and brokin, in sic sort as it cannot perfectlie be red or kept in time cuming, as ane sufficient evident to mak faith to posterité, the tenour thair of, and the chance foirsaid beand provin be sufficient witnessis,—auch and could be renewit and redintegrat be him, or his airis," &c. Balfour's Practicks, p. 188.

To scrumple, to ruffle, Lancash.

2. Applied to animal food that is much roasted; a scrumplit bit, i.e., crisp, as contracted by the force of the fire, Fife. V. SCRUMPLE, s.

[SCRUNKIT, adj. V. SKRUNKIT.]

To SCRUNT, v. n. V. SKRUNT.

SCRUNT, SKRUNT, s. 1. A stubby branch, or a worn-out besom, Lanarks., Fife.

2. A person of a slender make, a sort of walking skeleton, ibid.

3. A scrub, a niggard, ibid.

SCRUNTIT, adj. Stunted in growth, meagre, Lanarks.; evidently the same with Scruntty, q. v. Also Scruntet-like.

"She went on, her eye having caught the figure of Caley Mulloy, 'Haud abye! ye scruntet-like wurlyon o' the pit: haud abye!'" Saint Patrick, ii. 313.

SORUNTY, SKRUNTIE, adj. 1. Stubby, short and thick, Lanarks.

2. Stunted in growth, Roxb.

Next, by the banks o' bony Tweed,
Was hatch'd a cock o' shilla's breed,
Wha, on his native scruntty thorn,
'Mang birds o' song bude hail the morn.
A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 59.

3. Meagre; applied to a raw-boned person, Fife, Loth.

4. Scrubbish, mean, niggardly, Fife; q. shrivelled in heart as well as in external appearance.

SCRUNTINESS, s. The state of being stubby, Lanarks.

"If any one is brought before a Presbytery, &c. to be questioned for Sculdudry, i.e., fornication, or adultery, and shows a neglect of their authority, the offender is not only brought to punishment by their means, but will be avoided by his friends, acquaintance, and all that know him and his circumstance in that respect." Burt's Letters, i. 231, Let. 9.

2. Grossness, obscenity, whether as regarding facts of narration, S.

"I was of a firm persuasion, that all the sculdudry of the business might have been well spared from the eye of the public, which is of itself sufficiently prone to keek and kook, in every possible way, for a glimpse of a black story." Blackw. Mag., June, 1821, p. 371.

3. Rubbish; tatters; Mearns, Upp. Clydes.

The first part of the word is most probably formed from Germ. schuld, A.-S. scylt, Alem. sculdi, Su.-G. skyld, Isl. skuldi, a fault, an offence; whence L. B. sculted-um, a great offence, and scultet-us, a bailiff, A.-S. sculdeta, an exactor, one who exacted satisfaction from delinquents. V. Spelman. Thus the word might originally be q. sculdet-ry, or an offence of that kind that subjected to a fine.

Callander, in his MS. notes on Ihre, has given the former etymon. He mentions the S. term under Su.-G. skoela, debtor, Moes.-G. dulgi-kula, id. Ir. sgaldruth, however, denotes a fornicator, Lhuyd. The origin is Alem. sculen, &c., debere, because satisfaction is due to the law, on account of the offence. The s. indeed primarily signifies debt, obligation.

SCULDUDRY, adj. 1. Connected with crim. con., S.

But a' sic clish-clash cracks I lea'

To yon sculdudry committee.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 105.

2. Loose, obscene, S.

"The rental-book—was lying beside him; and a book of sculdudry sangs was put betwixt the leaves, to keep it open at the place where it bore evidence against the Goodman of Primrose-Knowe," &c. Red-gauntlet, i. 232.

SCULE, SKULE, SKULL, s. A great collection of individuals, S., generally applied to fishes, and equivalent to E. shoal, as a scule o' fish, a shoal of fishes.

Its banks along, quhilk hazels thrang
Quhare sweet-saired hawthorns blow,
I lufe to stray, and view the play
Of fleckit scules below.

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 356.

By mistake printed scales.

Ane felloun tryne come at his taill,
Fast flichtren through the skise,
Bot suddenly that skull did skaill.

Burel's Pilgr., Watson's Coll., ii. 24.

The word is common in O. E. A scill of fish; Yul. Barnes. "Scull of fyssh. Examen." Prompt. Parv.

An there they flye a dye like scaled sculs
Before the belching whale.

Chauc. Troil. & Creseide.

The immediate origin is A.-S. scoule, "coetus magnus, multitudo; a great company, a multitude, a shole;" Somner. But this is undoubtedly from scylan, Su.-G. skil-ia, to separate. A skule seems properly to denote one company disjoined from another.

SCULL, s. A shallow basket; sometimes used as a cradle, S.

"Her father had often told her that he built the first house in Portnockie the same year in which the house of Farskane was built, and that she was brought from Cullen to it, and rocked in a fisher's scull instead of a cradle." P. Ruthven, Banffs. Statist. Acc., xiii. 401. V. LENNO, and SKUL.

*SCULLION, s. Same sense as in E.; also, a knave, or low worthless fellow, S.

To SCULT, SKULT, v. a. 1. To beat with the palm of the hand, S. synon. skelp, scud, scon.

2. To chastise by striking the palm, Ettr. For.

Isl. skell, skellde, id. diverbero palmis; skell-r, a stroke, G. Andr. It might, however, be deduced from A.-S. sculd, Germ. schuld, debt, what is due to one; in the same sense as we say S. to pay, or to give one his payment, when he is beaten for a fault. V. AICHINS.

SCULT, s. 1. A stroke, properly with the open hand, S.

"Scuda, lashes; the same with scults;" Gall. Enc.

2. A stroke on the hand; Pandy, synon. Ettr. For.

SCUM, s. 1. A greedy fellow, a mere hunks, Fife.

2. A contemptuous name, corresponding with Lat. nequam, Fife; synon. Scamp, Skellum.

"The men were drawn up among the trees tae defend them, a gay while afore the vile scums wan for'et." Saint Patrick, i. 169.

A taylor, just frae Lon'on come,
—A menseless, gabbin', pridefu' scum,
Wi' ruffles at his sark.

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 120.

Oh! did I think the day wad come,
That I should been a cadger scum, &c.

The Cadger's Mares, Turris's Poems, p. 52.

The only difference between this and the secondary sense of the term as used in E. is, that it is here applied to an individual.

To SCUM, v. a. To scum up one's mou', to strike a person on the mouth, and so prevent him from speaking, Aberd.

"I'll scum your chasts for ye," I'll strike you on the chops, Loth.

The latter seems, q. skim, brush along; or, to take the scum from them, q. wipe them. The other is less intelligible.

[To SCUM, v. a. 1. To skim, Clydes.

2. To catch the herrings that drop from the nets as they are hauled, Banffs.]

[SCUM, adj. Skimmed; as, scum milk, Clydes.]

[SCUM, SCUMMINS, s. That which is, or has been, skimmed, ibid.

Scum is the term generally used for skimmed milk; scummins, i.e., skimmings, for what has been skimmed off.]

[SCUMMER, s. The boy who catches the herrings that drop from the nets; see v. s.

2, Banffs. In Wick he is called the aave.
He scums with a small round net attached to a long pole.]

[SCUMFIS, s. and v. V. SCOMFIS.]

SCUMFIT, part. pa. Discomfited.

Quhat mysteryt ma in a power to pass,
All off a will, as I trow set ar we,
In playne battaill can nocht weill scumfit be.
Wallace, viii. 466, MS.

Altered to discomfist, Edit. 1648.

Ital. sconfiggere, id.

SCUN, s. "Plan, craft," Galloway.

I has nae scun ava,
And's ay for counting my purse, O!

Gall. Encycl., p. 361.

Mactaggart views this as allied to "scunge, a sly fellow." But there is no connection; the latter being most probably from the v. to Scounge, to go about from place to place like a dog; whereas Scun is a word of great antiquity, allied to Su.-G. skoen, judicium, Isl. skyn, id., used to denote "the knowledge of good and evil," in the Isl. version, Gen. iii. Skyn godz oc illae. The Dan. synon. is skioen, judgment, understanding, skill. Su.-G. skoer-ja, primarily signifies to see; in a secondary sense, to understand, to discern with the eye of the mind. Isl. skyn-ia, censere, agnoscere; sapere, intelligere; Dan. skioenn-e, id. The root is retained in many derivatives; as, Sw. skoensam, discerning, skoensamhet, discernment, Wideg; Isl. skynsam-r, prudens, sapiens; rationalis; skynsemi, skynsemd, ratio, intellectus; skynlaus, irrationalis, brutus; Dan. skioensom, skioensomhed, &c.

SCUNCHEON, s. A stone in the inner side of a door or window, forming the projecting angle, S.

Perhaps allied to Germ. schantze, E. sconce, as forming the bulwark or strength of the wall.

Immediately from Fr. escousson, "the back part of the jamb of a window," Cotgr. Teut. schants-en, Su.-G. skans-a, munire.

SCUNCHEON, s. A square dole or piece of bread, cheese, &c., Teviotd.

It is frequently thus designed among the peasantry, perhaps from its resemblance to the corner-stone of a building, which has this name.

TO SCUNNER, SCOUNER, v. n. 1. To loathe, to nauseate, S.

Yea, some will spue, and bock, and spit
At moats like to a midge's foot.
We scunner at most part of meat,
Which we're not used for to eat.

Cleland's Poems, p. 104.

2. To surfeit, S. B.

3. To shudder at any thing, because of its repugnance to the dictates of the mind.

"This James—procured the Pope's dispensation to marry his eldest son upon his brother's daughter, sister to the said William. By this cause, without doubt, the whole lands should be united in one; yet, notwithstanding, the rest of the Douglasses scunnered, thinking the marriage to be unlawful." Pitscottie, p. 18.

4. To hesitate, to startle at any thing from doubtfulness of mind.

"He explains his not seeing through the King's authority, and says he scunnered to own it, and that such things had been done, as in a well guided commonwealth would annul his right." Wodrow, ii. 301.

5. To shrink back through fear.

Bot that that held on feyt in hy
Drew thaim away deliuerly;
And scounryt nocht for that thing,
Bot went stoutly till assailling.

Barbour, xvii. 651, MS.

According to Sibb., this word is "merely a variety of shudder." But the idea is contrary to evidence. A.-S. scunung signifies abomination; onscun-ian, to loathe; scun-ian, in its simple state, not only vitare, aufugere, but timere, reveriri; whence we discover the reason why its derivative scunner is applied, not only to loathing, but to fear. It appears, indeed, that fear is the primary idea. Thus, in like manner, Germ. schuen-en, signifies vitare, fugere, verab-scheu-en, abominare. The radical word may be Isl. sky, abhorre, evitare.

TO SCUNNER, v. a. To disgust, to cause loathing, Aberd., S.A.

"The first and fairest, as well as the maist fragrant, is the scented southron wood," muttered the hag, 'for when it's fairly on lowe, its thick and steaming scent wad smother the scunnering smell o' an acre o' corses.'" Blackw. Mag., Aug. 1820, p. 513.

SCUNNER, SKUNNER, SKONNER, s. 1. Loathing, abhorrence, S.

We might have miss'd a beastly blunner,
Had we not spew'd out our skunner
Against this Tes, in every where,
As Antichristian hellish ware.

Cleland's Poems, p. 106.

Sae comes of ignorance, I trow;
'Tis this that crooks their ill-far'd mou'
With jokes sae crouse, they gar fouk spew
For downright skunner.

Ross's Helenore, Beattie's Address, st. 12.

"The head o't was as yellow as biest milk; it was enough to gi' a warsh-stamach'd body a scunner." Journal from London, p. 3.

2. A surfeit, S. B.

3. The object of loathing; any person or thing, which, from whatever cause, excites disgust, Aberd.

SCUR, s. 1. The name given to the minute cancri in pools or springs, Lanarks.; synon. with Scrow, s. 2.

2. The Cadew, or May-fly, immediately after it has left its covering, Clydes.

Allied perhaps to Scrow, a generic name for aqueous cancri. Or to Isl. skurd, caesura; q. deprived of its coat?

[SCUR, s. The hard covering that grows over a wound or sore, Banffs.; like E. scurf.]

[To SCUR, v. n. To become covered with a scur, ibid.]

SCURDY, s. 1. A kind of moorstone, S.

"The greatest part of the parish stands on rock of moorstone, commonly called scurdy: it is of a dark blue colour, and of so close a texture that water cannot penetrate it." P. Lunan, Forfars. Statist. Acc., i. 442.

2. A resting-place in general, a favourite seat, Ayr.

Isl. skord-a, firmo, colloco firmiter; skorda, fulcrum?

SCURF AND KELL. V. KELL.

[To SCURFUDDLE, v. a. To tarnish, Banffs.; synon., to scuff.

Scurfuffle is lit. to scuff the scur, i.e., to break or crumple the surface.]

[SCURFUDDLE, SCURFUDDLIN, s. 1. Tarnishing; also, the act of tarnishing, ibid.

2. A tarnished piece of dress, ibid.]

SCURL, SKURL, s. A dry scab after a sore, S. as Sibb. observes, a dimin. from scurf. V. SCUR.

SCURR, s. 1. "A low blackguard;" Gall. Encycl.; from Lat. scurra, a scoundrel.

2. "Any thing low;" ibid.

SCURLY, adj. Opprobrious. Scurly words, Loth.; corr. from Fr. scurile, id.

SCURRIE, adj. Low, dwarfish; Scurrie-thorns, low dwarfish thorns, in muirland glens;" ibid.

"They [gleds or kites] build there on what the shepherds call scurrie thorns, low dwarfish thorns." Ibid., p. 231.

See the etymon given of SKUR, as applied to small horns. Isl. skor-a, incidere; Teut. scheure, schoore, scissura, ruptura.

[SCURR, s. A spot of fishing ground, Shetl.]

[SCURREOUR, s. V. SCURROUR.]

SCURRIE, s. The Shag, Pelecanus Graculus, Linn., Mearns.

Norw. Top-Scurv, id. This name would seem to be borrowed from that of the young Herring Gull. V. SCAUREY, SCOREY.

SCURRIEVAIG, s. V. SKURRYVAGE.

SCURRIE-WHURRIE, s. A hurly-burly, Clydes. This is merely an inversion of Hurry-Scurry, q. v.

SCURROUR, SCURREOUR, SKOURIOUR, SKURRIOUR, s. 1. A scout.

The spy he send, the entré for to se,
Apon the moss a scurrou sone fanil he,
To scour the land Makfadyane had him send.
Wallace, vii. 796, MS.

In a dern woode thai stellit thaim full law;
Set skourioris furth the contré to aspye.
Ibid., iv. 431, MS.

Although Fr. coureur signifies a scout, the term may be from Fr. escur-er, literally to scour, as the v. is metaph. used in military language, to scour the fields, or as above, to scour the land. Ital. scorridor signifies a scout. Its form would indicate some affinity to Su.-G. skyr-a, circumcursitare.

2. An idle vagrant fellow, Rudd.

SCUSHIE, s. A cant term for money, Aberd. perhaps formed by corr. from cash.

Or if, as we have sometimes seen,
Mischance should wear their scushy done,
May some guid friend the want supply.
Shirref's Poems, p. 245.

V. LANG-CRAIG, 2.

To SCUSHIE, v. n. [To scuffle, to shuffle]; to make a noise by walking with shoes either too large or having the heels down, ibid. V. SCASHIE, v.

- [2. To work in a slovenly, lazy, unmethodical manner, to be slatternly, Clydes.]

SCUSHIE, s. 1. A scuffle; also, the noise of a scuffle, Aberd.

2. An old, thin, worn out shoe, Aberd.

[2. A shuffling, grating noise, made by walking with old or badly fitting shoes, Clydes.

3. The act of working in a slovenly, unmethodical manner; also, work done in such a manner, ibid.]

[SCUSHILIN, s. Same with SCUSHIE, s., in s. 2 and 3, ibid.]

SCUSIS, pl. Excuses.

Thy scusis and rusis
Sall serve for na effect;
Bot rather, sall farther
Thy knaifré to detect.

Burel's Pilg., Watson's Coll., ii. 45.

Ital. scusa, an excuse. Rusis, self-commendations.

SCUTARDE, s. "Skulker," Pink.

I have ane wallidrag, ane worm, ane auld wolat carle,—
Ane scabbit skarth, ane scorpion, ane scutarde behind.
Mailland Poems, p. 48.

It seems rather to convey the idea of one in whom nature is so decayed, that he has lost the power of retention; from the v. Scout, q. v.

To SCUTCH, v. a. 1. To beat, to drubb.

"He made a long and pitiful narration of Strafford's oppression: That being at table with Lord Mure and Lord Loftes, discourse falling in concerning the Deputy's scutching of a gentleman with a rode, of his name, and of the gentleman's treading, by accident, on the Deputy's gonty toes, it was alledged he had said, that man had a brother in England who would not be content with such a revenge for such an affront," &c. Baillie's Lett., i. 269.

2. To scutch lint, to dress flax after it has been beaten with a mallet, by striking it with an instrument like a wooden sword, S. This operation is accurately described in the following extract:

"After it [that is, the flax] has been duly watered and dried, the sheaves are formed of the thickness of a man's leg, and beat with mallets on a smooth stone, to separate the seed from the rind. Then it is separated into handfuls such as a person can easily grasp; and with a wooden instrument, made in the form of a hedge-bill or large knife, in the right hand, and holding the lint in the left, over the end of a small perpendicular board set firmly in a sole, which is held turning one end of the lint after another to the stroke, is scutched or whipped, with the wooden instrument, down by the foot, and about three feet high, the lint and turning the inside out, as appears necessary, until the rind be completely separated." Agr. Surv. Invern., p. 161.

It is the same with E. scotch, although applied in a peculiar sense. The flax is whipt or beat with a switch. Ital. scutic-are, has been given as synonym with E. scotch. Scusso signifies stripped. Perhaps it is radically the same with the E. v. to switch.

[3. To cut the tops of twigs in a hedge, or of thistles in a field, by striking them with a sharp hook or scutching knife, Clydes.

4. To push or drag one body over another in a jerking or grating manner; also, applied to walking in a shuffling manner, Banffs.

5. To do garden or field work in a slight or careless manner, ibid.]

Ir. and Gael. sguils-cam, to beat, to dress flax.

SCUTCH, SKUTCH, s. 1. A wooden instrument, shaped like a coultter, used in dressing flax, hemp, &c., S.

2. One of the pieces of wood which in a lint-mill beats the core from the flax, or in a thrashing mill beats out the grain, S.

"It appeared to Mr. Mickle that the purpose of separating the grain from the straw might be accomplished—by skutches—beating out the grain, in place of pressing, or rubbing it out." Agr. Surv. E. Loth., p. 77.

[3. A cut at the top of a twig or a thistle; also, the act of trimming a hedge, or cutting down thistles, Clydes.

To SCUTLE, (pron. as Gr. v.) v. a. To pour from one vessel to another backwards and forwards, in a childish way; so as frequently to imply the idea of spilling part of the liquid, S., synonym. jirgle.

This appears properly a v. n. As necessarily including the idea of spilling part of the liquid which is poured from one vessel to another, it seems very nearly allied to Isl. squett-a, irrigare solutius, projicere liquorem. It has been supposed that this v. may be allied to Skutlaveinar, translated cup-bearers. "There were in the fore-castle, Eirek Skifa, Thorfin Sigvald, &c., ok enn fleiri skutlaveinar, and many of the cup-bearers." Haco's Expedition against Scotl. Transl. by Johnstone, pp. 36, 37.

Isl. skutill-veinn is indeed rendered by Halderson, Pincerna regius, pocillator; and in pl. by Verelius, Pincernae, mensae servientes, as synonym. with Sw. skiaenkesvenner, q. skink-svains. It must be observed, however, that skutill, also skutul, does not by itself denote drink or any kind of liquor. Both in Isl. and Su.-G. it signifies primarily a small table, mensa parva. Hence it has been transferred to a dish used at table; so that skutill-vein strictly signifies one who serves at a table. Ithre has remarked that the dishes of the ancients were so formed, that in each dish provisions were brought for two guests, who were thence denominated dikumaetar, q. dish-mates or dish-companions. It was, indeed, one of the laws of Gothland, that "all dishes should be sufficient to contain the food of two who should eat together." He adds that the same custom prevailed among the Greeks; referring to Lucian. in Lapith.

This may seem akin to Isl. skutl-a, to toss backwards and forwards, (ultra citroque jactare), Germ. schuttel-n, motitare, from Su.-G. skudd-a, Germ. schutten, to pour out, which have been traced to Chald. skada, fudit. Our term, however, has great resemblance to Isl. gull-a, liquida moveo, et agito cum sonitu; G. Andr., p. 100.

SCUTLES, s. pl. Any liquid that has been tossed backwards and forwards from one drinking vessel to another, S. synonym. jirgle. V. the v.

SCUTTLINS, s. pl. The light or refuse wheat, which is ground by itself, that it may be made into an inferior kind of flour; Fife.

SOUTTLIN-FLOUR, s. The flour made of the refuse of wheat, ibid.

From E. scuttle, "the wooden conduit or trough in a mill, thro' which the flower falls into the meal-tub;" Phillips. This seems most nearly allied to Su.-G. skudd-a, excutere, effundere; or Isl. skul-a, jaculari.

SEA-FIKE, s. The name given to a marine plant, which, when rubbed on the skin, causes great itchiness, Loth.

It seems to have received this name, because it fikes, or causes disquietude to the skin. Isl. fuk, Sw. fyk, alga marina; Verel.

SEA-GROWTH, SUMMER-GROWTH, s. The names given by fishermen to various species of Sertularia, Flustra, &c., which are attached to small stones, shells, &c., S.

SEA-HEN, s. A name given, according to Sir R. Sibb., to the Lyra, a fish. V. CROONER.

SEA-MOUSE, s. The Aphrodita acu Linn., Lanarks.

This is exactly correspondent to one of its names, Mus marinus.

SEA-PIET, s. Pied oyster-catcher. Ha topus ostralegus, Linn. S. V. Statist. P. Luss, Dumbartons. xvii. 251.

This term corresponds to Fr. Pie de mer, B. Pica marina, Caii, and nearly to Dan. strand, i.e., the magpie of the shore or strand. V. Zool., p. 482.

This seems to be a vestige of the Strathclyd session of the country, C. B. caer, signifying a mound, and caer-u, to encompass with a wall. caer enters into the formation of many local names, as Carlisle, Carstairs, Carphim, &c., marking the site of a fortification. It seems doubtful, if the first syllable has any connexion with E. sea, mare; the word being confined, as far as we learn, to an inland part of the country. Sea-caer be a corr. of C. reasonable causis for the weil of his maiestie and of his said realme of Scotland. As also decernis—for the saidis causis, quhilis they haue knawin and tryit to be for the seand weil of his maiestie and realme," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1606, Ed. 1814, p. 340.

This term occurs frequently in the Acts of Ja. VI., and is merely a variation of Fr. seant, fitting, seemly, becoming, from seoir, to sit. "The seant weil of his maiestie," is therefore equivalent to the Fr. phrase, used negatively, Il n'est pas seant à un homme de sa dignité. Dict. Trev.

The phrase "great, reasonable, profitable, and sene causis," as ibid., p. 335, occurs however: but I can scarcely think that sene and seand are used as synonymous.

SEANNACHIE, SENNACHIE, s. "Highland bard;" Gl. Antiquary. More properly a genealogist.

"On the application which they gave to study, and the proficiency which they made in science, it entirely depended, when, or whether, they should be raised to the station of Sennachai. These, according to tradition, and the etymology of the word, were the chronologers, and genealogists, and historians of the Celtic nation.—These were probably the Σενοδοχοι of Lærtius, and the Sennones and Sennani that we read of in some other authors who treat of the religious order of the Celts." Smith's Hist. of the Druids, p. 6, 7. V. SHANNACH.

Gael. seanachidh, id., from sean, old, ancient; whence seanachas, antiquities, history, narration. Shaw renders seanachdh, "an antiquary."

SEANTACK, s. A fishing-line to which baited hooks are suspended by short lines; the one end of the great line being fastened to the bank of the river, and the other kept across the stream by a weight, Moray.

SEARCHERS, s. pl. The name given to certain civil officers formerly employed, in Glasgow, for apprehending idlers on the streets during the time of public worship on Sabbath.

"If we bide here, the searchers will be on us, and carry us to the guard-house for being idlers in kirk-time." Rob Roy, ii. 132.

SEATER, SETER, s. [1. A common termination of local names, Shetl. V. the term STER.

2. The pasturage attached to a cottage, ibid.]

3. A meadow, Orkney.

"As to our meadows, they are always called Seaters. Though I am little acquainted with the Norwegian language, I understand a Seater to be a place for maintaining milch cows; and these Seaters are to this moment properly adapted for it. We have many in this parish, namely, Kirk-seater," &c. P. Birsay, Statist. Acc. xiv. 320, N.

[Sw. sätta, to set, place, locate; säter a seat, abode; säteri, freehold, frankfree. Hence the different meaning of seater: it is the place, the seat or abode, the pasture, or the meadow. An American would call it his location.]

SEATH, SEETH, SETH, SAITH, SEY, s. The coal-fish, Gadus Carbonarius, Linn. S.

"Seath, Gadus Carbonarius." P. Glasgow, Lanarks. Statist. Acc., v. 536.

"The fish, which frequent Lochlong, are cod, haddocks, seuth, lythe," &c. P. Arroquhar, Dumbartons. Ibid. iii. 433.

"The fish commonly taken on this coast are cod, skate, hollibut, haddocks, whittings, saiths or cuddies." P. Drains, Elgin, Ibid. iv. 79.

"The tenants have from their landlords three-pence allowed for a ling, a penny for a cod or tusk, and a halfpenny for a seth (cole fish)." P. Dunrossness, Shetl., Ibid. vii. 397.

"Asellus Niger, the Colefish of the north of England, our fishers call it a Coleman's Seeth." Sibb., Fife, p. 123.

These fish are called not only seuths, but "pollers and baddocks," on the East coast. V. BADNOCK.

"In Orkney and Shetland the fry are called sillocks or sellocks; at Edinburgh, pollleys; and at Scarborough, para. The year-old coal-fish is the cooth of Orkney; the pillcock of Shetland; the pollock of the Hebrides; the glasscock of Sutherland; the cuddie of the Moray Frith; the grey polley of Edinburgh; and the billet of Scarborough. The appearance of the coal-fish varies much with its age: hence a new series of provincial names. In Orkney it is, 1. a sillock; 2. a cooth; 3. a harbin; 4. a cudden; and, 5. a sethe. The full grown fish is also, in different places, termed a sey, a grey ling, a grey lord, &c." Neill's Tour, p. 209.

Dr. Barry mentions only three stages.

"The Coalfish (Gadus carbonarius, Linn. Syst.), which is so well known here by the name of the sellock, cuth, or seth, according as the age of it is either one or two or more years, is much more abundant than any other, and, indeed, exceeds in number almost all the rest of our fish taken together." Hist. Orkney, p. 293.

They are also, in an early stage, called Tibrics. V. TIBRIC.

Isl. seid is thus indefinitely expl., Pisciculi nomen, G. Andr., p. 204. Shall we suppose that sey, the name of the pollack in Norway, has been transferred to this fish? V. SEY, s. 2.

There can be no doubt that this is originally an Isl. word. For Halderson defines seid, fætura asellorum minuta; seydi, asellus tenerrimus, sive fætura asellorum.

SEAT-HOUSE, s. The manor on an estate, Loth.; synon. The Place.

[SEAT-TREE, s. The wooden seat at a loom, Tannahill.]

SEAWA, s. A discourse, a narrative, Aberd.

This ought to be written Say-awa', from Say, v., and away.

To tell a' saild and done.

D. Anderson's Poems, p. 85.

SECOND-SIGHT, s. A power, believed to be possessed by not a few in the Highlands and Islands of S., of foreseeing future events, especially of a disastrous kind. The persons whom these events respect, accompanied with such emblems as denote their fate, are said to be presented in spectral vision to those who are gifted with this power.

"I cannot speak of the second night till fuller information be given. I am undoubtedly informed, that men and women in the Highlands can discern fatality approaching others by seeing them in waters, or with winding-sheets about them; and that others can lecture, in a sheep's shoulder bone, a death within the parish, seven or eight days before it come." Sinclair's Invisible World, p. 114.

—The man's a warlock, or posset
With some nae gool or second-sight at least.

Gentle Shepherd, Act iii. Sc. 3.

Whether this power was communicated to the inhabitants of the Highlands and Islands of S. by the northern nations, who so long had possession of the latter, cannot now be determined. But traces of the same wonderful faculty may be found among the Scandinavians. Isl. ramskeygn denotes one who is endowed with the power of seeing spirits: Qui tali visu præter naturam præditus est, ut spiritus et daemones videat, opaca etiam visu penetret; Verel. Ind. The term is formed from ramm-ur, viribus pollens, and skygn, videns; q. powerful in vision.

[SECREIS, s. pl. Secrets, Barbour, iv. 577.]

SECRET, s. A coat of mail concealed under one's usual dress.

"How soon the Earl [Gowrie] saw him in his chamber, he called upon this deponent [Henderson], and had him put on his Secret and Plate Sleeves," Cromarty's Acc. of Gowrie's Conspiracy, p. 47.

This is evidently distinguished from the armour used for the head. For Henderson afterwards sent to his own house for his "steel-bonnet and gantlet." Ibid., p. 48.

"Let thy secret lous bee vnto his soule like a Secret or jack in this bloodie battell." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1172.

This term has been borrowed from the Fr., but changed as to its application. For Fr. secrete is a thin steel-cap, or a close scull worn under a hat; Cotgr.

SECT, s. 1. The attendance given by vassals when summoned by their superiors.

—"Committand to him his hienes full power—Lieutenant and iustice courtis, &c. to sett, begin, affix, hald and continew, Sectis to mak be callit. absentis to amerciat, trespassouris to punische," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1598, Ed. 1814, p. 171.

This is the same with Sovr, sense 2, q. v. L. B. Secta Curiae, seu Secta ad Curiam, est servitium, quo feudatarius ad frequentandam curiam domini sui teneatur; Du Cange.

2. Pursuit; Sect of court, legal prosecution; synon. Soyt.

"The kingis hienes—remittis—all sect of court for the accioun & causis of thar being in the field of Steruillin, Blakness, or vtheris placis agane his hienes." Acts Ja. IV., 1488, Ed. 1814, p. 207.

L. B. sect-a, jus persequendi aliquem in iudicio, de re aliqua, maxime de criminali; Du Cange.

To SECT, v. n. [Prob. an errat. for Set.]

Poems of the Sixteenth Century, p. 29.

Either a vulgar corruption of the legal term executors; or used as equivalent to it. For L. B. Sectores is thus defined: Apud Papiam, ex Glossis antiquis MSS. proprie dicuntur, qui bona proscriptorum et secant et dividunt. Idem: Sector, divisor, abscissor, cultor, usurpator; Du Cange.

In the passage quoted, the relations of the patient are represented as so eager to secure his property, that they neglect all concern about his soul.

[SECULER, s. Secular men, laymen, Barbour, iv. 12.]

[SEDA-SOOP, s. Thin, unsettled sowens, Shetl.

This term, lit., seedy-soup, in the West of S. sometimes called seedy-broo, (pron. seedy-brac), is exactly descriptive of sowens when in the first stage of steeping, and before the seeds, &c., have fallen to the bottom of the dish.]

SEDEYN, adj. Sudden; sedeynly, suddenly.

This is the orthography of the Perth. Edt. of Wallace. Both sodeyn and sodeynly are used in the MS.; the o occurs almost invariably where it has been read as e.

SEDULI, s. A schedule; used in reference to the Legend of a Popish Saint.

Compleyn, Sanctis, thus, as your scull tellis,

Wallace, ii. 215, MS.

[To SEE, v. a. 1. To consider, think over; as, "I'll see what can be done for you," Clydes.

2. To plan, devise, arrange; as, "I'll see that he meets you the morn," ibid.

These applications of the v. are peculiar, but quite common. The nearest approach to them in E. is in the phrase, "let me see."

To SEE about, v. a. [1. To attend to, look after, look into; as, "I'll see about that at ance," Clydes.]

2. To acquire an accurate knowledge of, or become acquainted with, surrounding circumstances, S.

"Monro—takes—his own men out of Drum, (whilk Marischal had caused man with his men, with whom the lady was not so well acquainted as before, whereupon she left Drum, and dwelt in Cromar, while she saw about her)." Spalding, i. 259. i.e., "till she was fully informed as to the state of matters."

[To SEE after, v. a. 1. To see after a person, to make inquiries regarding, to search for, to find out or try to find out; as, "I'm gaun to see after a servant;" also, to tend, to attend to, to serve, to assist; as, "He's auld noo, an' needs somebody to see after him," ibid.

X

2. To see after a thing, to look out or search for, to try to get; as, "I mun see after the key o' my kist;" also, to begin to prepare, to get ready;" as, "I mun see after the dinner," ibid.]

To SEE till or to, v. a. 1. To care for, to attend to; often used to denote a proper provision of food, conjoined with weel, S.

"We havena far gait to gang at ony rate, and then she will be weel seen till, for the Lady o' Loretto is unco kind and civil till her guests." St. Johnston, i. 13.

"The beasts, Sir Gabriel, shall be weel seen to, till the rights o' the matter ha'e been sifted in due course of law." Rotherlan, i. 238.

2. To observe, to survey, S.

That I hae at banes-brakin been,
My skin can sha' the marks;
I dinna tell you idle tales,
See to my bloody sarks.

Ulysses' Answer to Ajax, p. 26.

- [3. To arrange for, make ready, prepare; as, "I'll see till a' that," I'll make all necessary arrangements, Clydes.]

A. S. to-se-on, aspicere, intueri. It appears that this phrase was used by O. E. writers, although overlooked in dictionaries. For Somner expl. the v. in the form of to-geese-on, "to have regard to or of, to see to." Tent. toe-sien, providere, consulere sibi, suis rebus, &c.

To SEED, v. n. A mare or cow is said to seed, or to be seedin', when the udder begins to swell and give indication of pregnancy; as, "She'll no be lang o' caavin now, for I see she's seedin'"; Teviotd.

This might be traced to Ir. and Gael. siat-am, to swell, siat, a tumour. Sed, however, signifies "a cow with calf;" and seidd, "a full belly, a tympany."

[SEED, s. A term of reproach, applied to a person of hot temper, Banffs. Prob. allied to last word.]

SEED, SEEDS, s. The remains of the husk of oats after grinding. V. SEIDIS.

SEED-BIRD, s. A name given to a sea-fowl, S. A.

"Sea-fowls appear here in great numbers in the spring, about seed-time; they follow the plough, and are thence called seed-birds." P. Sprouston, Tiviotdale, Statist. Acc., i. 67.

SEED-FOULLIE, s. The Wagtail, S. Motacilla alba, Linn.

Perhaps q. seed-fowl, from Su.-G. saed, and fugl. Or the latter part may be formed from folja, sequi; q. the companion of the seed-time. For its Sw. name, saedsaerla, has this signification; as it announces to the husbandman the proper time for sowing. Saedsaerla, motacilla, ab ara, nuntiare, quippe quae suo adventu culonis nuntiat, tempus adesse, quo hordeum sulcis mandandum est; Ihre. vo. Saed.

SEED-FUR, s. The furrow into which the seed is to be cast, S.

"In the spring give a steering-fur, as it is called; then the seed-fur; then sow barley or bear, with grass-seeds." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 83.

SEED-LAUEROCK, s. The wagtail, Upp. Clydes.

This seems to be the white water-wagtail; as it has a similar name in Sweden; sacdes-aerlu, or the seed-wagtail. In Denmark it is called Havre-Saeer, apparently the Oats-sower. It must have been thus denominated, because "in spring and autumn," according to Pennant, "it is a constant attendant on the plough, for the sake of the worms thrown up by that instrument." Zool., ii. 275.

[SEED-LIKE, adj. Apparently ready for the seed; as, "The laan's real seed-like," Banffs.]

[SEEDGE, s. Rate, speed, ibid.]

SEEING-GLASSE, s. A looking-glass, a mirror.

This word had been anciently used in S. For the title of a work by one of our reformers is, "William Keth his seeing glasse, sent to the nobles and gentlemen in England, &c., 32." Ames's Antiq., iii. 1793.

This word in its composition resembles Isl. siöna, gler, speculum, from sion, vision, sight, and gler, glass; Haldorson. G. Andr. gives the same term in the form of sionargler, p. 207, under si-a, videre. Skugsio and skugsion are used in the same sense; q. that in which one sees one's shadow. Hence the name of that very singular work, written in the twelfth century by one of the Norwegian kings, Kongs-Skugj-Sio, i.e., Speculum Regale.

* To SEEK, v. a. 1. To court, to be a suitor, to ask in marriage, S.

Syne in a little I maun gang again,
And whilk was worst of a', maun gang my lane,
Am bidden court and daut, and seek the lass;
O aunt! but I was at an unco pass!

Ross's Helenore, p. 37.

This, in sense, most nearly approaches to Su.-G. seekt a, ambire, to court.

[2. To beg; as, "Ye're aye seek, seekin'," West of S.] To seek one's meat, to beg from door to door, S.; synon. to gae fra door to door.

3. To soak; as, "The water's seekin to my verra skin," Clydes.; synon., perhaps a corr. of, seep.]

4. To attack in a hostile manner. V. SOUCHT.

[5. To overtask, to exhaust, Banffs. V. SUCK.]

SEEK and HOD. The game of Hide and Seek, Angus. It is merely an inversion of the E. name; hod being used for hide, also as the preterite and part. pa.

SEELFU', adj. Pleasant. V. SEILFU'.

[SEELFUNESS, s. Complacency, sweetness of disposition, Angus.]

SEENIL, adj. Rare, singular, Fife. V. SEYNDILL.

SEENILLIE, adj. Singularly; as, seenillie gash, remarkably loquacious, ibid.

This signification would almost suggest that it had been originally the same with E. signal, signally, or Fr. signallé, notable.

To SEEP, v. n. 1. To ooze, Gall. V. SIPE, v.

[2. To soak through, Clydes. V. SEEK, s. 3.]

SEER, s. The designation given to one who is supposed to have what is called the second-sight, S.

"'Ise tell you, lady,' answered Cecil, lowering her voice, 'we have a seer in Glen Eradine; and he was greatly troubled with me standing at Jemmy's left hand.'"—"One who has the second sight," N. Discipline, iii. 20.

SEERIE, adj. Weak, feeble, Fife.

This seems radically the same with Sary, Sairy, q. v.

To SEETHE, v. n. To be nearly boiling, S. B.

The sense is thus varied from that of the E. v. of A.-S. seoth-an, Isl. siot-a, Su.-G. siud-a, Germ. sied-en, aestuarie.

To SEFOR, v. a. To save, to preserve, to provide a remedy.

With God's grace, wee tak it upon hand,
To sefor this as resoun can remeid,
In tyme to cum thair of thair be na pleid.

Priests of Peblis, S. P. R., i. p. 14.

It is printed sef or, as if two words. But this I apprehend, is by mistake. The sefrie (pron. safrie) of any thing is the preservation of it in safety. It sometimes denotes the reward supposed to be due for the care exercised in preserving and returning any thing that has been lost; from Fr. sauv-er, to save, to preserve. V. SAFER.

To SEG, SEYG, v. a. and n. 1. To fall down.

This term is especially used concerning liquids, when, in consequence of absorption, they sink down in the wooden casks that contain them, S. swag, E. The roof of a house is also said to be seggit, S. B. when it has sunk a little inwards.

E. swag, "to sink down by its weight," (Johns.) seems to have a common origin; although perhaps more immediately allied to Sw. swig-a, loco cedere, Isl. swieg-in, inclinare.

[2. To cause to fall down or become solid, Ayrs.

When filling a sack with grain or meal the men will say, "Let's seg it noo," and stop filling in order to shake the sack that the grain may settle down more compactly.]

3. Metaph., applied to the influence of intoxicating liquor, S. B.

When drink on them begins to seg,
They'll tak't to see the showman.

Morison's Poems, p. 16.

Su.-G. Isl. sig-a, subsidere, delabi; ek segg, lenté defuó; A.-S. asig-an, dilabi; Belg. zyg-en, to fall down.

This word is evidently of great antiquity. For Ulphilas uses sig-an and ga-sig-an, as signifying, delabi, deorsum ferri, subsidere. Junius views sig-an as the origin of E. sink, Alem. sink-en, &c. mergi.

SEOGING, s. 1. The act of falling down, or state of being sunk, S.

[2. The act of shaking a bag or box, during the process of filling it, in order to make it hold as much as possible, Clydes.]

O. E. Saggyn or Satelyn. Basso. "Saggynge or sat-lynge. Bassatura. Bassatio." Prompt. Parv.

[SEG-BACKIT, adj.] Hollow-backed; applied to a horse whose back is sunk or hollow, Mearns.]

To SEG, v. a. To set the teeth on edge by eating any thing acid, Loth., S. A. Lanarks.; [part. pa. seggit, used as an adj.]

As the use of the term in this sense seems to convey the idea that the teeth, when set on edge, seem as if sunk down in their sockets, it is probable that this is originally the same SEG, v. n. to fall down.

SEG, SEGG, s. The yellow flower-de-luce; applied to all broad-leaved rushes, S.

"Iris pseudocorus. Segs, i. e., Sedge. Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 1078.

Seg, Gloucester. id. V. Marshall's Econ. Gl.

My mother sent me to the segs,
There to gather teachit eggs. Old Song.

The word Seg is used as the general name for all broad-leaved rushes, not being confined to the Iris.

It is also O. E. "Segge or star. Carix." Prompt. Parv. V. BULLSBAGS, BULL-SEG.

"I saw many grene seggis, that ar gude to prouoke the flouris of vemen." Compl. S., p. 104.

[In Ayrs. it is called Seggan, whether blue or yellow.

The mountain daisie, an' the seggan blue,
The hawthorn flower, an' pinkies no a few;—
Sic youthfu' shepherds aft bestow'd on me.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 148.

A.-S. secg, Fland. sejge, id.

SEGGY, adj. Abounding with sedges, S.

For mark nor meith ye wadua ken;
The greensward how, an' seggie den,
Are straited even-o'er.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 36.

By Egypt's seggie Nile, they say
The crocodile greets o'er his prey;
As he the heifer faith'd to kill,
An' scrupl'd guiltless bluid to spill.

Picken's Poems, i. 7.

SEGE, s. 1. A soldier.

This gud squier with Wallace bound to ryd,
And Robert Boid, quhilk wald no langar bide
Vudir thrillage of segis of Ingland,
To that fals King he had neur maid band.

Wallace, iii. 53, MS.

The A.-S. word secg signifies "a soldier, a warrior;" Somner. Miles; vir strenuus, illustris; Lye. Isl. segg-ur, vir, miles; Verel. Ind. Seigr, homo propositi tenax. It is probably from the same source with Su.-G. seger, siger, A.-S. sige, Germ. sieg, victory; especially as Isl. sig signifies battle, fight.

It seems pretty evident that Blind Harry uses sege in its primary sense, as it refers to the military government of our injured country under Edw. I.

2. Used for man, in a general sense.

I slak on ane suevnyng, slomerand ane lite,
And sone ane selkouth sege I saw to my sycht.—
There is na sege for na schame that schrynkis at schorte,
May he cum to hys cast be cloyking but coist.
Doug. Virgil, Prolog. 238, a. 9. 25.

Hickes, among different examples of the word being used in this secondary sense in O.E., refers to the following from P. Ploughman—

I have seen segges, quoth he, in the city of London
Bere byghes full bryght about their neckes.—
I must sit, sayd the Segge, or els I must needs lay,
I am a Surgeon, sayd the Segge, and salves can make.

SEGE, s. 1. A seat; properly, a seat of dignity.

For feyndys ar off sic natur,
That thai to mankind has inwy;
For thai wate weill, and witterly,
That thai that weill ar lifland her,
Sall wyn the sege, quharoff thai wer
Tumblyt throuch thair mekill prid.

Barbour, iv. 228, MS.

Doun sat the goddis in thare segeis dyuynne.
Doug. Virgil, 313, 26.

Prince Eneas from the hie bed with that Into his sege riall quhare he sat,
Begouth and sayd.

Ibid. 38, 34.

2. A see; [pl. segis, mansions (in astrology), Barbour, iv. 697.]

"Item, Anentis the article maid to prouyde, how the auld actis and statutis, maid againis thame that dois contrare the kingis priuilege, grantit to his predecessors and successors, be the sege of Rome," &c. Acts Ja. V. c. 100, Edit. 1568. V. AW, v.

3. The berth in which a ship lies.

"And gif the ship be on ane hard saige, the master sould gar the shipman amend it incontinent, that the ship tak na skaith." Ship Lawis, Balfour's Pract., p. 622.

It was used in O.E. "Sege or sete. Sedes. Sedile." Prompt. Parv.

[4. A siege; pl. segis, Barbour, iv. 45, xx. 64.]

Fr. siege, a seat; corr. from Lat. sedes.

To SEGE, v. a. To besiege; [part. pr. segande, besieging, Barbour, xvii. 511.]

—"Nocht expremand—gif thai war segit be him or his army, & resistit be the saidis personis," &c. Acts Mary, 1542, Ed. 1814, p. 417.

Spencer uses siege in the same sense. But this use is now obsolete. Fr. sieg-er is sometimes used for assig-er, but the language is viewed as corrupt. V. Dict. Trev.

SEGIT, SEGYT, part. pa. 1. Seated, placed, set.

Quhare-eyvr that stane yhe segyt se,
Thare sall the Scottis be regnand.

Wynetown, iii. 9, 48.

[2. Besieged, Barbour, xi. 114.]

SEGG, s. Bull-seg, an ox that has been gelded at his full age, S. This name is used both in the North and South of S.

"An what made you, ye misleard loons,—come you gate into the ha', roaring like bull segs, to frighten the laddy, and her far frae strong." Monastery, i. 140.

"If it is several months before being gelded, it retains, ever after, the appearance of a bull, and is in that part of Scotland, termed a bull-seg." Agr. Surv. Ayr., p. 419.

This term is said to be from Lat. "that has been cut;" Gl. Surv. Moray. Sec are must be the v. meant, and indeed bos secatus is used in this sense in the laws of the Visigoths. V. Du Cange in vo.

"Buli-segg, a gelded bull. North." Gl. Grose.

Sibb. adds, "A foul thick-necked ox, having the appearance of a bull;" Gl. Shall we therefore suppose that the designation is formed from A.-S. secg, callus; "the thick skinnies in a man's hands, or other parts grown with labour?" V. Somner. Isl. sigg, callus.

SEGGAN, s. [The iris; applied to all broad-leaved rushes, Ayr. V. under SEG.]

SEGSTER, s. A term which frequently occurs in the Records of the city of Aberdeen as signifying a sexton.

As E. Sexton is corr. from Fr. Sacristain, Segster is a similar corr. from L.B. Segrestar-ius, id., one of the various forms which this ecclesiastical term assumes, q. Segrester.

SEIBOW, SEBOW, s. A young onion, S.

"That his Grace would discharge tith sebowes, leekes, kail, onions, by an act of secret council, till a Parliament be conveyed." Act Gen. Assembly, A. 1574. Calderwood, p. 822.

Germ. zwiebel, an onion, zwiebelein, a young onion; perhaps from Lat. cepe. The Germ. also use the phrase zwiebel-bett, for a bed of onions.

Falsgrau defines O. E. "chebole, a young onion; ciuol," Fr.; scipouille, a sea onion.

[SEID, s. Seed, kindred, Barbour, i. 63.]

SEIDIS, SEEDS, s. pl. 1. That part of the husk of oats which remains in meal; as, "That meal's fow o' seeds," it is not properly cleaned, S.

"The hail subiectis susteinis greit lose [loss] and skayth in paying als deir for dust and seidis as gif the samyn wes gnid meill." Acts Ja. VI., 1598, Edit. 1814, p. 179. V. Dustr.

2. Sowen-seeds, the dust of oat-meal mixed with the remains of the husks, used for making flummery, after being so long steeped as to become somewhat sour, S.

SEIGNOREIS, pl. Supreme Courts; applied, apparently in derision, to the meetings of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

—"His hienes hath restored in integrum the estate of bishops, and hath contramandit the seignoreis presbiteries,—in respect his hienes had livele experience, that they wer gret instrumentis of unquietnes and rebelloun be there populare disordor."

—"Wishing heartlie your g. welfare, and to assist us with your l. prayer, help and gudwill at her hienes hand in maynteninge of this goode work against the pretendit seignoris, the end whereof tendis to evert monarcheis and destroy the scepter of princes, and to confound the whole estate and iurisdiction of the kirk," &c. Abp. Adamson's Lett. to Abp. Whitgift, Life of Melville, ii. 521.

Fr. seigneurie, "an assembly of great lords;" Cotgr.

[SEIK, adj. Sick, Barbour, ix. 112.]

[SEIKNESS, s. Sickness, Ibid. iv. 191, ix. 35.]

[To SEIK, v. a. To seek, to search for, Ibid., v. 557.]

To SEIL, v. a. To strain; A. Bor. sile.

"Our sowins are ill sowr'd, ill seil'd, ill salted, ill sodin, thin, and few o' them." Kelly's S. Prov., p. 274.

Su.-G. sil-a, to strain; sil, a straining dish. Ihre refers to Syr. salal, percolare.

SEILDYN, SELDYN, adv. Seldom.

The mynister said, It has bene seildyn seyn,
Quhar Scottis and Ingliss semblit bene on raw,
Was neuir yit, als fer as we could knaw,
Bot othir a Scott wald do a Sothroun teyn,
Or he till him, for awentur mycht faw.

Wallace, ii. 300, MS.

"Gud fortoun & gud maneris ar seildin grantit at anis to leuand creatouris." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 11, a.

Bot seldyn thare our appetite is found;
It is so fast into the body bound.

Henryson's Orpheus, Moralitas.

Chancer, selden; A.-S. seldan, seldon, Belg.; selden; Isl. saldan; Dan. seilden; Su.-G. sellan, id. either from A.-S. seld, rare, uncommon, or, as some have supposed, from this conjoined with hwaenne, quando. According to Lye, it appears that this term was used in Moes-G. from sild-aleik-jan, admirari, Add. Jun. Etym.

[SEILE, SEYLE, s. A seal, Barbour, i. 611, 613.]

SEILE, SEYLE, SELE, s. Happiness, prosperity, S.B.

He thoctt weill he wes worth na seyle,
That mycht of nane anoyis feyle.

Barbour, i. 303, MS.

Happy, allace, ouer happy and full of sele,
Had i bene, only gif that neuir nane
At our coist had arriuit schip Troiane.

Doug. Virgil, 123, 13.

"Thus Scot. Bor. they say, sele faw, [i.e., fall or befall] me; sele and weal, health and happiness." Rudd.

"Seil never comes till sorrow be away;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 61.

Seil o' your face, is a phrase still used in Aberd., expressive of a wish for happiness to, or blessing on, the person to whom it is addressed.

Ye—think my muse nae that ill-fawrd,
Seil o' your face!

Skinner's Misc. Poetry, p. 109.

Su.-G. saell, happy, Isl. saela, happiness. This seems only a secondary meaning. A.-S. sel signifies good, in a moral sense. The transition is very natural; for moral goodness can alone produce true happiness. As A.-S. sael is used in the sense of bene, well; it also signifies, tempus opportunum, thence transferred to what happens prosperously, res prosperae, integrae; Lye.

SEILFU', SEELFU', adj. 1. Pleasant, S. B.

Gin ye o'er fortherome turn tapseie turvy,
Blame your ain haste, and say not that I spur ye.
But sound and seelfu', as I bid you, write.

Ross's Helenore, Introd.

—But yesterday I saw,
Nae farrer gane, gang by here lasses twa,

They had gane will, and been the forth all night;
But O! ane of them was a seelfu' sight.

Ibid., p. 94.

V. SEILE.

2. Happy, foreboding good, Ang.

Neist the first hippen to the green was flung,
And thereat seelfu' words bath saild and sung.

Ross's Helenore, p. 13.

SEELFUNESS, s. Complacency, sweetness of disposition, happiness of temper, Ang.

An' tho' I say't, she's just as guded an aught,
As wyssie an' fu' of seelfuncas an' saught,
As ousie she, that ever yeed on bean,
Gentle or semple, except I now will nane.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 106.

—She's just as guded a child,
Wise and kind hearted, cheerful, meek and mild, &c.
Edit. Third.

Bean, hero, bane, Third Edit. would at first view seem meant for bone. S. bane, S.B. bein. But perhaps it refers to bend or benn leather.

SEILY, SEELY, adj. Happy. Seely Wights, and Seely Court, a name given to the Fairies.

"Corri Sühcha', the round hollow valley of the Fairies, or Peaceable People, whom the Lowlanders call Seely Wights." Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 236, N.

But as it fell out on last Hallowe'en,
When the Seely Court was ridin' by,
The queen lighted down on a gowan bank,
Nae far frae the tree where I want to lye.

"Seely Court, i.e., pleasant or happy court, or court of the pleasant and happy people. This agrees with the ancient and more legitimate idea of Fairies." Ibid., ii. 189.

"Chaucer has sely, exp. happy, seliness, felicity; a Teut. selig, selig, Belg. saligh, beatus, felix." Rudd. vo. Seile. V. How.

This shews the sense in which we are to understand the phrase silly.

For oght the kirk culd him forbid,
He sped him sone, and gat the thrid;
Ane Carling of the Quene of Phareis,
That ewill win gair to elphyne careis;
Through all Braid Albane scho hes bene,
On horsbak on Hallow ewin;
And ay in seiking certayne nyghtis,
As scho sayis, with sur [our] sillie woyhtis.

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 320, 321.

Braid-Albane is for Braidalbin. Sillie does not here signify, as might seem at first view, weak, puny, from their small size; but is the same as Seely.

Sely is the form of the word in O. E. "Sely or happy. Felix. Fortunatus." Prompt. Parv.

SEILIS, interj. Expressive of admiration.

—All the suynis awnaris
Saild, Seilis how the fulis fairis!

Colkelbie Sow, F. i. v. 202.

A.-S. sillice, mirabiliter, from sillic, mirabilis.

In a MS. copy it is, "Saild ferlis." If this be the true reading, it must signify, "saild forthwith," or "suddenly," from A.-S. ferlice, subito.

SEIM, s. "Resemblance, likeness, appearance;" Gl. Sibb.

Germ. ziem-en; Isl. saem-a, decere, convenire.

[SEINLY, adj. Fair, comely, well-favoured, S.]

SEINDLE, SINDLE, adj. Rare, not frequent, S. synle, seenil, S. B. A seenil ein, one occurring by itself and seldom, Aug.

*Beysda that, sindle tymes thou reis
That evir Courage keeps the keis
Of Knowlege at his belt.*

Cherrie and Slae, st. 30.

*But sindle times they e'er come back,
Wha anes are heftit there.*

Ramsay's Poems, i. 44.

SEINYE, SENYE, SENYHE', SEINGNY, s. A synod, a consistory.

"Efter the Pasche he came to Edinburghe, to hald the seinye, as the Papistes tearme their unhappie assemblie of Baalis schaven sort." Knox, p. 63.

It seems probable, however, that here it signifies such a procession in honour of the Saints, as is common in Popish countries, when their images are carried through the streets. For in MS. II. it is:

"Efter Easter he come to Edinburghe to hald their processions."

*This Pape of Rome the thryd Gregore,
Gert a senyde solempne be sene,
Four hundyr Bychapys and awchtene,
And sere ma Prelatis regulare.*

Wyntown, vi. 1. 53.

*Per. Remember for to reforme the Consistory.—
Per. Quhat caus hes thow, pylour, for to plenyie?
Quhair wes thow evir summond to thair senyie!*

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 169.

*Of Sathanis seinye, sure sic an unsaul menyie
Within this land wes never hard nor sene.*

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 45.

Lord Hailes improperly renders seinye filth, Lat. sanies. V. Note, p. 257, 258.

Mr. Macpherson views it as corr., like O. Fr. senne, from Gr. σενος. In Dict. Trev., however, senne, which is rendered, assemblee à son de cloche, is derived from Lat. signum; Fr. sign, a signal, the sound of a bell, whence locsin. Bullet derives senne from Celt. sen. O. Fr. senes was used to signify parliaments or general assemblies. A.-S. seonath, a synod; Teut. seyne, scene, senne, id.

It may, however, signify badge. V. SENEHE.

This in O. E. is written Seene, also Ceene. "Seene of clerkes. Synodus." Prompt. Parv.

To SEIP, v. n. To ooze, to leak. V. SIPE.

[SEIPAGE, s. Leakage, Clydes., S. B.]

[SEIPIN, adj. Very wet, soaking, dripping, ibid.]

[SEIPINS, s. pl. Drippings; refuse to be soaked or strained, also, the liquor soaked or strained from any substance, ibid.]

SEIR, SERE, adj. Several, various, separate. Seer, id, A. Bor.

*Before Persye than seir men brocht war thai;
Thai folowit him of felouny that was wrocht.*
Wallace, iv. 122, MS.

In seir partis, in several divisions; Ibid.

*On maruellus wyse thare fient schaddois sere,
And figuris nyce dlyd he se and espy.*

Doug. Virgil, 207, 51.

According to Rudd, contr. from sever, or serre, or several, Fr. server, Ital. severare; all from Lat. separare. But the word is purely Goth. Su.-G. saer is an adv. denoting separation, as defined by Ihre. Taga i saer, to divide into parts.

*Tha jak biwler them allow saer;
Quam impero omnibus et singulis.*

Hist. Alex. May.

i.e., when I rule over all and each of them. Isl. [ser, for one's self; also, separately, one by one.] Hence, Su.-G. saerdeles, Isl. sierleilis, separately, i.e., in several deals, quantities, or divisions; Su.-G. saerabild, separate, &c. Ihre remarks the affinity of A. Bor. seer. They are gone seer ways; they have taken different ways. He also observes that Lat. se has the same force in composition; as se-orsum, apart, se-parare, to separate, &c. I have observed no A.-S. term that has any affinity; although ser, sere, is used by R. Brunne and other O. E. writers.

SEIR, s.

*Ane helme of hard steill in hand has he hynt,
Ane scheld, wrought all of weir,
Semyt wele upon seir.*

Gowan and Gol., ii. 17.

If this be the true reading, the phrase may signify, curiously devised, from A.-S. sear, a device. It is seir, however, in Edit. 1508. Thus it would signify, in good order, well prepared, as se of icere. But it is doubtful, whether this be not an error in the old copy, as by this reading the usual alliteration is lost.

SEIRIE, adj. Of distant, reserved, or cynical manners; suggesting the idea of some degree of hauteur; Moray.

This might seem allied to *Teut. seer, seerigh, dolens, moestus; exulceratus; A.-S. saeri, tristis, dolens; as if the original idea had been that of pain caused by a sore or wound. But with more propriety it may be traced to some Goth. terms expressive of local distance; as Su.-G. saer, a particle denoting separation, asunder. Isl. sier, seorsim, (Verel.); At fara sier, seorsim profaisci. Verelius also gives this particle in the form of ser. Hence serley-r, singularis; item, morosus, Halderson. I am disposed to think that the radical word is sier, the dative of the pronoun sibi; as referring to what a man does by himself. Hence serleg-r is by Ranolph Jonas written sierleg ur, and rendered, sui sensus, singularis; and siergod-ur, philautos, q. "good with himself," or in his own eye. V. Dictionary. Isl., p. 122. The latter term is expl. by Verelius, sibi bonus, (and written by Halderson sergod-r) arrogans, fastuosus (Dan.) hormodig, i.e., high-minded. Ray conjectures that A. Bor. seer, several, divers, "is but a contraction of sever." But here we see its genuine origin. I may also refer to Dan. saer, singular, apical, odd, &c., whence saer-deles, id.*

SEIS, pl. 1. Seats, places.

*The fragrance flowris bloumand in their seis,
Oairspreid the lewis of natures tapestrieis.*

Palace of Honour, Prol. st. 3.

It is a metaph. use of the word see, from Lat. sedes.

2. Used to denote thrones, or royal seats.

*Se ye may knaw the courtes inconstance,
Quhen princes bene thair pullit from thair seis.*

Lyndsay's Warkie, 1592, p. 203.

V. SE, s. 1.

[SEIS, SEES, v. Pres. Ind., sing. and pl. of to see, Barbour, ix. 89; seestu, seest thou.

For a long time past the town of Paisley, Renfrewshire, has been called Serstu, by people in the neighbouring towns: prob., because that word was used there long after it had been given up elsewhere.]

SEIS, s. pl. Times. V. SYIS.

To SEISSLE, v. a. (Gr. σι) 1. To confuse, to put in disorder, Berwicks., Roxb.

2. To trifle, to spend time unnecessarily. It is used as a part. to signify one who is inactive or unhandy; as, a seisslin body, ibid.

SEISSLER, s. A trifter, ibid.

Teut. siess-en, to cease; sussel-en, titubare, cespitare; or rather from C.B. sissal-a, to gossip, sissialur, a gossip. Dan. syl-er, and Isl. syl-a, convey an idea directly the reverse; for they signify, "to be busy."

SEISTAR, -s. The sistrum, an instrument of music.

Viols and Virginals were heir,
The Seistar, and the Sumpion,
With Clarche Pipe and Clarion.

Burel, Watson's Coll., ii. 6.

Fr. sistre, a kind of brazen timbrell.

SEITIS, s. pl. "Seems to signify plants or herbs," Rudd. Sibb. adds flower-plots.

The plane ponderit with semelie seitis sound,
Bedyit full of dewy peirls round.

Doug. Virgil, 401, 28.

Rudd. refers to A.-S. seten, planta, setine, propagines, setten, plantaria. He might have added Su.-G. saett-a, Teut. sett-en, to plant. Moca.-G. sat-jan, occurs in the same sense; saetidedun, they planted, Luke xvii. 28. A.-S. sett-an, id. "pastinare, to digge and delve for planting;" Sommer. Sets is still used S. to denote slips of flowers or plants.

To SEJOYNE, v. a. To separate, to disjoin;
Lat. sejung-o.

"Sejoyne me his Spirit from the word,—the mirrour of the worde is bot a dimme mirrour, and a sealed letter to all men." Bruce's Eleven Sermon, P. 4. 1.

SEJOINED, part. adj. Disjoined, separate.

"The Lords found a sum lent out by a wife elad with a husband, (though the obligation ran to repay it herself,) belongs to the husband, to his heirs and executors, unless she could say that she had a provision separate and sejoined by paction from her husband, (like a peculium,) not belonging to him." Fount. Dec. Suppl. iii. 130. Lat. sejung-ere, id.

[SEK, s. 1. A sack; pl. sekkis, Barbour, viii. 444.

2. Metaph., dismissal; as, "He's gotten the sek," he has been dismissed; synonym. the bag.

This term has no doubt originated from the workman carrying his tools in a sack or bag when leaving his employment or when in search of it.]

SEKER, SEKIR, adj. Firm, sure, secure.
V. SICKER.

[SEKIRLY, adv. Certainly, surely, of a surety, Barbour, iv. 216, 662.]

[SEKIRNES, s. Security, ibid., iv. 178; Confirmation, xx. 150.]

SEL, SELL, pron. Self, from which it is corrupted, S., A. Bor.; Ray.

SELABIL, adj. Delightful; [syn., seelfu'.]

I mean thy crafty werkis curious,
So quyt, lusty, and maist sententious,
Pleasant, perfyte, and selabil in all degre.

Doug. Virgil, 3, 16.

V. SEILE.

SELCH, SELCHT, SELCHIE, s. 1. A seal, or sea-calf, Phoca vitulina, Linn. S. selch.

"There is thre thyngis that ar neuyr in danger of thoundir nor fyir flucht, that is to saye, the laurye tree: the sycond is the selcht, quihik sum men callis the see volue: the thrid thyng is the eyru, that fleis as his." Compl. S., p. 93, 94.

"This is still the pronunciation of the fishermen on the coast of Fife;" Gl. Compl. Elsewhere it is selch, S.

"On the east shore of Watterness, lyes ane ile callit Eilan Askeria, abounding in greasing and pasture, maire wait for sheilling and pasture then for corne land; guid for fishing and slaughtur of selchies, pertaining to M'Cloyd of Lewis." Monroe's Isles, p. 29.

"The seal—is here generally known by the name of selchy." Barry's Orkney, p. 317.

A.-S. selc, sealc, phoca.

[2. A big, stout, flabby person, Banffs.]

3. Used to denote what is otherwise called a shilf-corn, Gall.

"Sealeh,—a shilcorn or small bunyion;" Gall. Encyc. Selthorn, Dunfir.

SELCOUTH, adj. Strange, uncommon.

A selcouth thing be thia was done:

At Sanct-Johnestone be-sid the Freris,

All thair entrit in Barreris,

Wyth bow and ax, knyf and swerd,

To deil amang thaim thare last werd.

Wyntown, ix. 17. 14.

Skinner mentions this word as occurring in P. Ploughman; but he has misquoted the place.

—Much people saved of selcouth sores.

It appears also in Prompt. Parv. "Selcouth, or sel-dom seyn. Rarus." Also, "Selcouthness, Raritas."

A.-S. sel-cuth, rarus, insolitus, from seld, seldom, and cuth, known. V. COUTH.

SELE, s. Happiness, prosperity. V. SEILE.

SELE, s. A yoke for binding cattle in the stall, S.

By means of this implement, the devil, and his myrmidons the witches, are believed to exercise a considerable portion of their power in doing injury to men by the destruction of their cattle. Although a sele is so formed as merely to inclose the neck of one ox or cow in the stall, it is asserted that two have often been found, of a morning, bound in one; which is reckoned more than any exertion of human strength could accomplish. But the spell is so lit ited, that the poor animals suffer no detriment before they are seen by human eyes. If the person who first sees them does not give or procure instant relief, they are inevitably suffocated. It is singular that this should be credited, not merely by the vulgar, but by persons of rank and education. A lady in Angus assured me, in the most solemn terms in which any assurance could be given, that she had herself seen it in her father's cow-house.

O. E. sole, I suspect, has been used in the same sense. "Sole, a bowe about a beastes necke;" Palsgr. B. iii., F. 65, a. He gives no correspondent term in Fr.

Su.-G. sele, a collar, a yoke; which Ihre derives from A.-S. secl, a rope; Germ. seil, Belg. seel, Isl. sile, id. Moca.-G. sail, a thong. V. Jun. Gl. vo. Insa- lidelun. It appears that Ihre had not observed, that A.-S. sal denotes "a collar or bond;" Somner. Isle seems to bear the very same sense with our sele, being expl. a ligament of leather, by which cattle and other things are bound; Ol. Lex. Run.

SELF, SELFF, adj. Same, very.

—In that self tyme fell, throw caiss,
That the King of England, quhen he
Was cummyng with his grēt menyne
Ner to the place, as I said ar,
Quhar Scottis men arayit war,
He gert arest all his bataill.

Barbour, xii. 2, MS.

The Son the self thing with the Failer is,
The self substance the Holy Gaist, I wya.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 308, 42.

This corresponds to A.-S. self, syf, ipse. On thære sylfan nihle; On that very night. Moes.-G. aliba, Alem. selbo, Su.-G. sialf, Isl. sialfr, Belg. zelf, id. selfst, the self-same. V. Tyrwhitt, Gl.

SELF, SELWYN. The Self, the Selvin, used as a demonstrative pronoun, like Lat. ipse.

"Distroy Fidena with the flammeis of the self, senye may na wayis neis the same be youre benevolence." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 356. Suis, flammis delete, Lat.

Not that our tounge is in the seluin skant,
Bot for that I the fouth of langage want.

Doug. Virg., Pref. 5.

Thai persawyt, be his spekyng,

That he was the selwyn Robert King.

Barbour, vii. 125, MS.

Ruddiman observes, vo. Self; "Tis remarkable, that our author [the Bishop of Dunkeld] and others of that time constantly write the self, or the selvin, for itself."

I have remarked this idiom with the demonstrative only in a few instances in the A.-S. language. Of the selue mynstre, Ex illo ipso monasterio, Chron. Sax. 33. 40. On the selue der-fald, In eo ipso ferarum saltu, ibid. 232. 32.

Selven is often used by Chancer, and is merely the accusative singular of A.-S. self, seolf, syf. On hire selfne; In se ipseam. In thære seolfan nihle; In illa ipsa nocte, Bed. 2. 6. The syfne; Te ipsum, Lev. 19. 18. Hyne syfyn, Se ipsum, Matt. 16. 24. On tham sylfan lechte, In illa ipsa luce, Bed. 596. 3.

The term appears in its more ancient form in Moes.-G. Silba, ipse; in dative and abl. sing. silbin, in accus. silban. Du mis silbin, Ad me ipsum, Joh. 14. 3. Bi mik silban, Circa me ipsum, Joh. 8. 14.

SELF-BLAK, adj. 1. Denoting black as the natural colour of the wool; i.e., the same which the animal wore.

"That the housband men and laboreris of the ground wear no clothing bot grayes, quhyt, blew, and self-blak claithe maid of Scotland,—vnder the payne of fourtie pundis toties quoties." Acts Ja. VI., 1621, Ed. 1814, p. 626.

2. Mean, paltry.

"He is speaking of this rewarde that he was to receiue at Christ's comming, and he speakes not of these earthlie stipeunds, howbeit there be much adoe and stryfe for them in the land, if they were neuer so selie." Rollock on 2 Thes.

Chaucer uses selly, in the sense of simple. But our term is more allied to Su.-G. salig, poor, miserable. This Ihre views as a cognate of Gr. Barb. salor, foolish.

SELKHORN, s. V. SHILFCORN.

[SELKIE, SELKY, s. A seal, Shetl. V. SELCH.]

SELKIRK BANNOCK. A sweet cake of flour, baked with currants, &c., S.-A.

"Never had there been—such making of car-cakes and sweet scones, Selkirk bannocks, cookies, and petticoat-tails, &c." Bride of Lammermoor, ii. 285.

SELTIT, SELKITH, adv. Seldom, Eskdale; evidently corr. from Selkouth, q. v.

SELL, s. A seat. "Repairing of the pair folk sellis in the kirk;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1538.

Fr. seile, stooles or seat; "any ill-favoured, ordinary or country stooles, of a cheaper sort then the joynd, or buffet-stooles;" Cotgr. For then they had no fixed seats in churches.

SELLABLE, adj. Vendible; Sellabill, Ab. Reg.

—"With power to the saids commissioners to sett downe the pryces of sellable teinds." Acts Cha. I., V. 37.

SELLAT, s. 1. A helmet or head-piece for foot-soldiers.

He pullis down his sellat quhare it hang,
Sum dele affrait of the noyis and thrang.

Doug. Virgil, 230, 33.

[2. A small pan or pot provided with a lid, a sellat-pan, Banffs. V. SKELLET.]

Fr. salade, Hisp. celata, Ital. celato. Some view Lat. celo, -are, as the origin; because it covers, and in some sense conceals the head.

SELLIE, adj. Attached to one's own interest, selfish, Clydes., Roxb.; either from Sell, self, or a corr. of A.-S. selflic, sui amans. V. the s.

SELLIE, s. A diminutive from Sell, self. "Sellie's ay sellie, self is still for self;" Gall. Enc.

SELLOCK, s. A fish. V. SILLUK.

SELLOUR, s. A cellar.

"He bocht ane sellour fra me for xvi sh." Aberd. Reg., A. 1548, V. 20.

Fraunces writes it "Seler. Selarium." Hence, "Selerer. Selerarius. Promus." Prompt. Parv.

[SELLY, s. A marvel, wonder; pl. sellyes, Troy Book, l. 5153.]

[SELLY, SELY, *adj. Marvellous, wonderful, Ibid., l. 13275.]

SELLY, SELY, adv. [Marvellously, wonderfully.]

I hard ane may sair murne, and meyne;

Scho sychit selly soir.

Mourning Maiden, Maitland Poems, p. 205.

"Wonderfully? sellic, Sax." Ellis, Spec. ii. 32. This conjecture is certainly well-founded. Is that sellic thing, Est ea miranda res; Boet., p. 193.

SELWYN, pron. The selwyn, the same, the selfsame. V. SELF.

SELY, adj. 1. Poor, wretched, S. silly.

Sely Scotland, that of helpe has gret neide,
Thi natione all standis in a felloun dreid.
Wallace, ii. 200, MS.

SEMBLANT, SEMBLAND, s. Appearance, show.

With glaid semblant and vnsage full beuyng
Thir woundis fyrst to thame carpis the Kyng.
Doug. Virgil, 212, 1.

Thus said sche, and with sic senkhand as micht be,
Him towart hir has brocht but only threite.
Ibid. 56, 36.

Fr. semblant, from sembler, to seem.

To SEMBLE, v. a. To assemble.

Set thou apoun the horssit Tuskane rout,
Wyth pynsellis sembit samyn, with ane schont.
Doug. Virgil, 382, 36.

SEMBLAY, SEMLAY, SEMBLE, SEMLE, s. 1. Meeting, interview.

A blyth semblay was at his lychtyn doun,
Quhen Wallace mett with Schyr Richard the knyght.
Wallace, ii. 414, MS.

2. Act of assembling.

Off the castell come cruelle men and keyne.
Quhen Wallace has thair sodand semle seyne,
Towart sum strenth he bownyt him to ryd.
Wallace, v. 772, MS.

V. BIGORR.

3. An assembly.

At Renfrew a mawngery
Costlyk he made ryaly.
Fewteys he tuk of mony thare,
That gaddryd to the semle ware,
And awcht fewte for thar tenawndry.
Wyntoun, viii. 28, 78.

Semly appears in this sense in O. E. Semly or congregation. Congregatio. Semlyng, or metyng togyder. Concursus. Congressio." Prompt. Parv.

4. Hostile encounter, the meeting of opposite parties in battle.

Cruell strakis forsuth thar mycht be seyne,
On ayther syde, quhill blude ran on the greyne;
Rycht peralous the semblay was to se.
Hardy and hat contenynt the fell mellé;
Skew and reskow off Scottis and Ingliss alss.
V. the v. Wallace, v. 833, MS.

Su.-G. saml-a, Dan. saml-er, Germ. sammel-en, Belg. zamel-en, Fr. sembler, to collect; to assemble; Su.-G. samling, a meeting; from the particle sam, which marks conjunction.

SEMBLAND, s. An assembly.

The statis gret of all Ingland
Thare gaddryd war to that semblande.
Wyntoun, vi. 20, 12.

SEMBLE, s. The parapet of a bridge, Ettr. For.; probably from A.-S. sceammel, scamnum, a bench; Isl. skemmill, Dan. skammel, &c. id.

SEMBLING, s. Appearance. V. SEMBLANT.

Behald now to tair men of might,
That mekill hes, and wald haue mair;

VOL. IV.

And to thare sembling take gude sight,
How that they passe away so bair.
Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 213.

Like Fr. semblance id., from sembler, to seem, to make shew of.

To SEMBYL, v. n. To make a wry mouth, in derision or scorn, S., to schamble the chafts; showl, synon.

Sum ledis langis on the land, for luf or for lak,
To semyl with thare chaftis, and sett apoun syse.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 14.

Fr. sembler, to seem; Lat. simul-are, to counterfeit; Germ. schlimm, however, signifies wry, Belg. scheef muyl, a wry mouth.

SEME, s. Vein, in relation to metal; a peculiar use of E. seam.

"Thairfor quhensoeur ony myne or seme of mettall wes found be ony of the leigis of this realme, the same wes ather neglectit or be all moyanis possible obscurit." Acts Ja. VI., 1592, Ed. 1814, p. 556.

[SEME, SEYME, s. In ship-building, a nail driven through the overlapping portion of two planks, and clenched with a rivet, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 253, 254, Dickson.]

[SEME-KLUV, SEMM-KLUV, s. An iron tool for driving the rivet on the nail, Shetl.]

SEMEIBLE, SEMEABLE, adj. 1. Like, similar.

"And all vtheris the kingis liegis assistaris to sic opunyeonis be punist in semeible wise." Acts Ja. V., 1525, Ed. 1814, p. 295.

This, according to the fac simile, might perhaps be read semeable.

2. It seems to signify becoming, proper; like E. seemly.

"With power to the said reuerend father—to enter the tenentis of the saidis landis, ressaue thair gersumis and vtheris dewteis in als frie and semeable maner as the said reuerend father was in vss of befor the said annexatioun." Acts Ja. VI., 1597, Ed. 1814, p. 147.

That this is most probably the sense appears from the tenor of the act, which states that the possessors of bishoprics, &c., had been subjected to a considerable abridgement of their rights in consequence of the annexation made of ecclesiastical lands to the crown.

[SEMM-KLUV, s. V. under SEME.]

SEMPETERNUM, s. A species of woollen cloth.

"Cottons, sempeternums, castilians," &c. Act. Cha. II. V. PERPETUANA.

Lat. sempitern-us, everlasting. The clothiers even in that early period, had by way of ruse, invented names for their fabrics, which, if well-founded, must soon have ruined their trade.

SEMPLE, adj. Ordinary, vulgar, [of low estate: gentle and simple, rich and poor.] V. SYMPILL.

SEMPILNES, s. Meanness, low condition in regard to rank.

"Plesit your Grace to call to remembrance the faithful service, lawlie obedience, and grete offers proceeding of trow hart and mynd that my sempilnes hes maid unto your Hienes.—Maist humlie beseking your hienes till accept thir my lawlie offiris, and trow service, and revesse my sempilnes in favour." Declaration of Friar And. Cairns, about A. 1523. Pinkerton's Hist. Scotl., ii. 483. V. SYMPILL.

SEN. 1. As a conj., since, seeing, S. A. Bor.

Doug. Virgil, 253, 26.

According to Mr. Macpherson, sen (conj.) "seems merely the part. passive of se [to see] as the Fr. use vu." This agrees with what has been advanced by Mr. Tooke, Divers. Purl., i. 269; with this difference, that, while he derives the prep. from the part. past, he says that the conj. has sometimes the sense of the one part, and sometimes of the other. But seen that, or seen as, seems a harsh and unnatural resolution of since, now used for sen.

One great and obvious defect of Mr. Tooke's ingenious system, viewed in a general light, is that it proceeds on the supposition that the A.-S. is a language completely insulated; or at least, that whatever intimacy of connexion it has with the cognate tongues in other respects, it has none with regard to the formation of its particles. As it is universally admitted that the A.-S. and O.-Sw. were so similar, that a Saxon could easily converse with a Swede; it might naturally be supposed that A.-S. seoththan, siththan, deinde, postea, were radically the same with Su.-G. sidan, sedan, id. Now the Su.-G. conj. has no affinity to se, videre; but is evidently from sid, sero, post. There is no good reason to doubt, that A.-S. siththan has had a similar origin. For sith exactly corresponds in its signification to Su.-G. sid. Moes.-G. seitho signifies late, sero. Ihre (vo. Seilan.) accordingly views A.-S. siththan as comp. of sith, post, and than, tunc, as corresponding to postea, posthinc. He also observes, that the order observed in the A.-S. term is inverted in Moes.-G. thanaseiths, posthac. The world sith ni thanaseiths saiquith, seeth me not henceforth; John, xiv. 19. This is from than, tunc, and seith, sero. Alem. sid also signifies post quam. Isl. síðan, Teut. seyd, sind, postea. It must, therefore, be quite unreasonable to deduce sen, in its different forms, from the v. see; as this mode of derivation pours contempt on all the analogy of kindred tongues, and even destroys the unity of the same language. For it might have been added, that there seems to be no example of a or nd being changed into th, in the formation of A.-S. words.

Sen may be viewed as bearing the same relation to A.-S. siththan, as Su.-G. sen to sidan, postea, of which it is a contraction. Su.-G. sidan was used as synon. with sidan. Send, thereafter, q. v., in its form corresponds to this. V. SYNG, adv.

SEN, s. Filth, nastiness.

Allace, send ilkane man wald be sa kynde
To have this latter freind into his mynde.

Priests Peblis, S. P. R., i. 44, 45.

This is evidently the same with Syne, q. v.

* SEND, SEN, s. 1. Mission, the act of sending, S.

"Thair is na euil of payne or trubil in the pepil, bot it cummis be the send of God." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 91, a.

2. A message, a despatch; also, in regard to the local situation of the sender, a Send-down, or Send-up, S. B.

3. A term used to denote the messengers sent for the bride at a wedding, S. B. V. SAYND.

"The harbingers of the bridegroom, (or, to use Cecil's phrase, the send) a party of gay young men and women arrived." Discipline, iii. 24.

"A couple of envoys (Scot. sends) arrive from the bridegroom, who lead the bride to the temple of Hymen; she having, on their arrival, presented each with a pair of gloves," &c. Edin. Mag., Nov. 1818, p. 412.

There is a striking resemblance between this custom and that of the ancient Romans. The bride, in her way to the house of the bridegroom, was attended by three boys, clothed in long white robes, guarded with purple, who were called Praetextati. It was requisite that their parents should be alive. They were therefore denominated Pueri praetextati patrimi et matrimi. One of these carried before the bride a torch of white thorn. The other two led her by the hands.

When the bride was put to bed, the friends of both parties used to snatch away the torch which had been borne by her praetextatus. If this torch happened to be inadvertently put under the bed, it was supposed to be a presage of the early death of one of the parties. Another reason for carrying off the torch is assigned by Servius. The torches used on this occasion being, as he says, of the corneil-tree, and burning long, they were accounted guardians of life to those who got hold of them. For they concluded that, by having these in their possession, they should live long. Rosin. Antiq., p. 429.

SENYIE-CHAMBER, s. The place in which the clergy assembled.

"Amongst the other buildings in the abbey and monasterie of St. Andrews, there was a chapter house where the convent met to consult about their affairs. —But where it stood none can tell. And after the reformation, I find they met in the senyie-chamber." Martin's Reliq. D. Andr., p. 40.

SENYHE', SENYE, s. Distinguishing dress worn in battle.

Seny, O. E. "Seny or token. Signum." Prompt. Parv.

Lat. sign-um, Gl. Wyntown. Perhaps rather contr. from insignia.

[SENZORY, SENZHOWRY, s. Dominion, Barbour, V. 231, I. 151. V. under SENYEOURE.][*SEPULTURE, s. A sepulchre, Lyndsay, Squyer Meldrum, l. 1653.]SEQUELS, s. pl. The designation of one species of duty exacted at a mill to which lands are astricted, S.

Ersk. Inst. B., ii. t. 9, § 19.

Du Cange gives L. B. sequela, as synon. with Secta Moutue, and Secta ad Molendinum. Quieta clamavimus ecclesiae Rothomagi,—omnia molendina—cum omni sequela et moltura sua, sine aliquo retinemento eorum quae ad molendinum pertinent vel ad molturam. SEQUESTRE, s.

"The Romans were not long before Christ, but drawne in as sequestres by the Jewes owne partialities;—and albeit the stronger, yet so farre suffered and maintained the liberty both of state and religion, as at Christ his birth Herod was a mighty king, and the state and religion for freedom from any forraigne oppressioun, flourishing." Forbes on the Revelation, p. 234.

Fr. sequestre signifies "he into whose hands a thing is sequestred;" Cotgr. But I suspect that the term is here used in the primary sense of Lat. sequester, a mediator, or umpire.

[SER, adj. Various, separate, several, Barbour, iii. 270. V. SEIR.]SERD, pret. v. Served, S.

SERE, SER, adj. Several. V. SEIR.

SERE, adv. Earnestly, eagerly, anxiously.

My fame is knawin aboue the element,
I seik Itale (as native cuntre) ser;
My linnage cummis fra hiest Jupyter.
Doug. Virgil, 24, 50.

Rydd. views it as here signifying sure, Fr. sur.
But it certainly means eagerly, anxiously; A.-S. sare,
Germ. schr.

SERE, s. Sir, Lord. V. SCHIR.

SEREACHAN-AITTIN, s. A bird.

"The seriachan-aillin is about the bigness of a large mall, but having a longer body, and a bluish colour; the bill is of a carnation colour. This bird shrieks most hideously, and is observ'd to have a greater affection for its mate, than any fowl whatsoever." Martin's West. Isl., p. 73.

Perhaps the name should be read screechan-aillin, because of its shrieking.

SEREVARIS, s. pl. Sea-robbers or pirates.

"Pilyeit in the streime be menn of wair or serewaris."
Aberd. Reg., V. 15.

This corresponds with the language of Gawin Douglas;

Yone fah se seuer wyl leif in sturt.

and with that of Blind Harry;

Apon the se yon seuar lang has beyn.

V. REWAR, and REYFFAR.

SERF, s. The state of sowens or flummery before the fermentation commences, or when it has only gone so far as to admit of their being boiled into a thick consistency, and altogether free of acidity, Moray.

Gael. searbh, (pron. serv) sour, may have been originally used to denote sowens in a more advanced state, and afterwards been limited in its sense. Searbhan is given by Shaw as signifying oats.

To SERF, v. a. To deserve. V. SERVE.

SERGE, SIERGE, s. A taper, a torch.

And in hys graf wes sergis twa
Brynnand clere, and one of tha
Wes brycht brynnand at hys hewyd,
The tothire at hys fete wes lewyd.

Wyntown, vi. 14, 62.

The blessand torchis schane and sergis bricht,
That fer on bred all lemes of thare licht.

Doug. Virgil, 475, 52.

"The Earl of Athol went next to the French Ambassador, bearing the great sierge of wax." Spotswood, p. 197.

Mr. Macpherson renders the term, as used by Wyntown, lamps. But in this case there must be a deviation from the proper sense: Fr. cierge, the largest kind of wax-candle; sometimes, a flambeau. Veneroni expl. Ital. cerio by flambeau, and cierge as synon.
Lat. cer-cus, id.; as properly being made of wax.

SERGEAND, SERGEAN, s. 1. "A degree in military service seemingly not unknown;"
Gl. Wynt.

And wyth that folk he held his way
Til Roxburgh, quhare the Ballyol lay,
That had befor in Ingland bene:
Of Sergeandys thare and Knychtis kene
He gat a gret company.

Wyntown, viii, 26, 396.

Spelman views S. B. serjantus, as equivalent to scutifer. It seems indeed to correspond to squire, or the attendant of a knight. The term is evidently a corr. of Lat. serviens. It however appears, from Du Cange, that serjantus was also used to denote a soldier on foot, one belonging to the infantry; and sometimes an inferior kind of knight, eques serviens.

2. An inferior officer in a court of justice.

In this sense serjeant and seriaund are used by Skene. But the E. word bears the same meaning.

SERK, s. A shirt, S. V. SARK.

SERKINET, s. A piece of dress. V. GIR-
KINET.

SERMONE, SERMOND, s. Talk, discourse.

"Thayr wes na sermone among thaym how thair army schuld be arrayit." Bellend. Cron., B. x. c. 17.
Sermo, Boeth.

Wyth dyuers sermond carpend all the day,
Thay schort the houris, driuand the tyme away.

Doug. Virgil, 473, 50.

[SERMONYNG, s. Discourse, explanation, same sense in O. E.]

—Of that wille were other mo,

R. Brunne, App. to Pref. cxcii.

SERPE, s. Apparently a sort of fibula made in a hooked form.

"Others might wear serpes, belts, broaches, and chains." Pink. Hist. Scotl., i. 124.

Fr. serpe, sarpe, a hook or small bill; Falz, Dict.
Trev.

[SERPENT TOUNG. A test for detecting poison in food or drink; frequently mentioned as an appendage of saltcellars in inventories of plate of the 14th and 15th centuries.

Sometimes it was set with rock crystals and gems in candlesticks, drinking cups, &c.; sometimes it was mounted in silver or gold, like the so-called unicorn's horn; but it was always used as a test of poison in food or drink. Laborde, in his Notice des Emaux, ii.
303, 354, 497, treats of it as a real serpent's tongue, which, in the middle ages, was reputed to be a test of poison. In those times, pilgrims to the reputed scene of St. Paul's shipwreck brought from Malta certain fossils supposed to be the petrified tongues of vipers, and possessed of great virtue as amulets. Olaus Wormius, in the Museum Wormianum, describes them as tongue-shaped, and of a grey or yellowish colour.
V. Gl. Acta. L. H. Treas., i. 437, Dickson.]

[SERPENTYN, s. A sort of gun, called also a culverin, Ibid., i. 291, 295.]

SERPLATHE, s. Eighty stones of wool.

"That na merchand of the realm pas ouer the see in merchandice, bot he haue of his awin proper gude, or at the leist committit till his gouernance thre serplathis of woll." Acts Ja. I., 1424, c. 41. Edit.
1566.

"Serplath—containes four-score stanes." Skene,
Verb. Sign. in vo.

This term elsewhere assumes nearly the same form with the word used in the E. law.

—"Robert Mar consentit—to comper before the prouost & bailieis of Edinburgh—for the pley of the serplare of woll." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1478, p. 11.

"Serplar of woll, (Serplera Lanac, otherwise called a pocket) is half a sack. Fleta, lib. ii. c. 12." Jacob's Dict.

Fr. sarpiliere, whence E. sarpler, a packing cloth. L.B. sarplar-e, sarplar-ius, sar-plar-ium. Seren. mentions E. sarp-cloth as synon., which our term most nearly resembles.

SERPLINS, s. pl. The soapy water in which clothes have been boiled, Lanarks. V. SAPPLES.

To SERS, SEIRS, v. a. To search.

Or els the air sould not have tholit
So heich for to be persit;
Nor yit the arde for to be holit,
And so deip down be serst.

Maitland Poems, p. 257.

—Now here, now there rensit in sindry partis,
And seris turnand to and fro al artis.

Doug. Virgil, 240, b. 18.

For this cause they both socht and serst,
How thay might hane thair blude.

Burel's Pilg., Watson's Coll., ii. 32.

To SERUE, SERVE, SERF, SERWE, v. a. [1.

To serve, to serve at meat, to perform,
Barbour, xvi. 451, 595, x. 342.]

2. To deserve, to be worthy of.

Set we haif nane affectionne
Of caus til Ynglis nationne;
Yelt it ware baith ayne and schame,
Mare than that serve, thaim to defame.

Wyntoun, ix. 20. 58.

Wallace answered, said, "Thow art in the wrang."

Quham dowis thow, Scot? In faith thow serwis a blaw.

Wallace, i. 398, MS.

Dowis should certainly be thowis.

Quhare I offend, the lesse represe serf I.

Doug. Virgil, 4, 23.

This term has been of general use. It is preserved in several S. Proverbs. "He that does bidding, serves no dinging.—An apology, when we are told that we are doing a thing wrong, intimating that we were bid to do so." Kelly, p. 149.

"They wite you, and they wite you no wrong, and they give you less wite than you serve," i.e., less blame than you merit." Ibid., p. 318, 319.

SERUIABLE, adj. Active, diligent.

The bisy knapis and verlotis of his stabill
About thaym stude, ful yape and seruiabil.

Doug. Virgil, 409, 20.

Prosperus, Virg.

* SERVICE, s. 1. At country funerals each act of going round the company with the offer of wine, or spirits, &c., S.

"All they want by repeating often, Let us lift, boys, is to have another service or round of bread, cheese, and whisky; so that when lifting time comes, some of those drunken and gormandizing mourners can scarcely lift themselves." Gall. Enc. vo. Lift.

This is probably a change of the meaning of the term formerly applied to the religious service performed on this occasion, or the Office for the Dead. As S. Dregy has been transferred from the funeral service to the computation after the interment, this term seems to have undergone a similar change. For old Fraunces gives the one as synon. with the other. "Seruyce or diryge. Exequiae." Prompt. Parv.

2. Assistance given to masons and carpenters while building or repairing a house, S.A.

"Service is a provincial phrase for labourers, to dig away earth from the foundation of a house, prepare mortar, and assist in rearing scaffolds, carrying stones, joists, &c." Note, Agr. Surv. Roxb., p. 28.

SERVITE, SERVYTE, SERVET, SERVIT, s.
A table napkin, S. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 161.

"The general himself, nobles, captains,—and soldiers, sat down in the Links, and of their own provision, with a servit on their knee, took breakfast." Spalding's Troubles, i. 123.

"The air sall haue—twelf servettis and ane buird-claith of dornique, or than the best linning buird-claith." Balfour's Pract., p. 235.

SERVETING, s. Cloth for making table napkins.

"Linnin cloth called towelling and serveting of Holland making, the eln xxvi s. viii d." Rates, A. 1611.

Fr. serviette, Teut. servett, mantle; from Fr. servir, because its use is to keep the clothes clean, during meals.

SERVITOUR, s. 1. In old writings it often signifies clerk, secretary, or man of business.

2. The name formerly given to a writer's apprentice.

"In a moment, the Bailie was in search of his apprentice (or servitor, as he was called sixty years since,) Jock Scriver; and, in not much greater space of time, Jock was on the back of the white poney." Waverley, iii. 272.

3. A servant or attendant, in a general sense; an expression of duty or respect.

SERVITRICE, SERVITRIX, s. A female servant, a lady's maid.

—"Takand the burdeine vpon thame for vmq^t Maistres Margaret Winchester, servetrix to his Majesties said vmq^t darrest mother," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, Vol. V. 124. Servitrix, Aberd. Reg.

[SEHING, s. Possession; as in the phrase, to be seized of a thing, Ibid. vi. 496.]

SEHING OX, SEISIN OX, SAISING OX. A perquisite formerly due to the sheriff, or to the baillie of a barony, when he gave infeftment to an heir holding crown lands; now commuted into a payment of money, in proportion to the value of the property.

"That lettres be writtin to the schiref to mak the oz be restorit agane to Elizabeth Geddas, that was takin for the said pretendit sesing." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1488, p. 100.

Erskine speaks of this perquisite as due only to the sheriff. Inst., R. iii. t. 8, § 79. But it appears that it was also viewed as one of "the profitis & eschetis of a balyery."

"The lordis decretis—that Johnne Lindissay of Colvintoun sall—restore to James lord Hammiltoun the soumez & gudis vnderwritten of the profitis & eschetis of the balyery of Cranfurle takin vp be the said Johnne the tyme he visit the said office of balyery, & pertening to the said lord Hammiltoun; xiiij. sesing aria, iiij ky, xij wedderis of a bludewyte," &c. Ibid. A. 1479, p. 33.

Raising oz, Acts Ja. VI. 1567, App. Ed. 1814, p. 40.

SESSION, SESSIOUN. s. The name given to the Consistory, or parochial eldership in Scotland, S.

It consists of the Minister, who constantly presides; of the Ruling Elders; and of Deacons, who have a right of judgment only in causes which respect the support of the poor, or the management of ecclesiastical temporalities. All ordinary causes, in which the congregation are interested, are tried and determined by the Session. In some places there is one general session for the different parishes within the liberties.

"This ordour has been ever observed sen that tyme in the Kirk of Edinburgh,—that the suld Session befor thair departure nominat 24 in electioun for Elders, of quhom 12 are to be chosen, and 32 for Deacons, of quhome 16 ar to be elected." Knox's Hist., p. 267. V. ELDER, ELDERSCH.

SESSIONER, s. 1. A member of the Court of Session, a senator of the college of justice in S.

—"Most part of the whole consenting; and in lyke maner the sessioners with the advise and approbation of the most part of that hous." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 401.

2. A term used during the establishment of Episcopacy in the reign of Charles II., to denote a member of the Session or Consistory.

"That the Ministers give in upon oath a list of their Sessioners, their Clerks and Bellmen, of withdrawers from the church, and noncommunicants."

"One thing is observable, that their Sessioners, as they are called, members of their Sessions, are here just made use of as informers against honest people." Wodrow, ii. 319.

SESTUNA, interj. Expressive of admiration; equivalent to, "Would you have thought it?" It is often used also after refusing to grant a request, Orkn. V. SEESTU.

It is evidently, Sest thou now [or not.]

To SET, v. a. 1. To give in lease, to hire, S.

—He denyd hys tendis then
For til set til hys awyne men.

Wynloun, vii. 9. 256.

"He quha lattis or sets the thing for hyre, to the vse of ane other man, sould deliver to him the samine thing; and he quha receaves it, sould pay the hyre." Reg. Maj. B. iii. c. 14, s. 2.

"To set; to lett, as land, &c." Gloucester. Marshall's Econ. Gl.

"Wee are so farre from denyng to Antichrist a place, yea and an ordinarie calling in the church, that wee affirme constantlie, that so it must have bene.—But so wee grant him to be in it, as yet hee is none of it, more than a boile or apostume, in the body, is a member of the body, so wee grant him to have had rule, and ordinarie calling in the church, as had these husband-men, to whom indeid the vineyard was set, but they murdered the heire." Forbes's Defence, p. 12, 13.

This may be a peculiar use of A. S. saet-an, Su.-G. saett-a, collocare, q. to fix or place one in possession of a house or farm; whence A. S. saeta, an inhabitant, Su.-G. saeteri, a principal village. Teut. sett-en te koope, venalem exponere domum, agrum, &c.

The v. in S. is often used in a neut. sense, but improperly; as, A house to set, i. e., to be let.

[2. To plant; as, "to set tail," S.]

3. To beset, to way-lay. To sett the gait, to beset the road or highway.

Syne Waus wes slayne, that hat Rolland,
He wes set hard, I tak op hand.

Wynloun, viii. 38. 86.

"Because mony evill disposit persounis vis apounes cruele malice & forthocht felony to lay wachis and be-sett gaitis quhair thai vnderstand mene are to ryde and pass,—geif ony persounis beis ourtane be ane assise of setting the gait, laying wachis, &c., the committaris—tharof sall be pvnist to the deid, albeit the persoun or persouns that thai laid waching fore eschaip thair scaith." Acts Ja. V., 1525, Ed. 1814, p. 297, 298.

4. To lay snares, to beset with snares.

Quhen that the range and the fade on brede
Dynnys throw the grauis, sercheing the woddis wyd,
And sutis set the glen, on eury syde,
I sall apoun thame ane myrk schoure doun skale.

Doug. Virgil, 103. 51.

This exactly agrees with—Saltus indagine ciugunt, Virg.

Su.-G. sitt-a, Isl. sit-ia, in insidiis sedere; Lat. insid-ere, id.

Su.-G. Isl. saett-a, A.-S. saet-an, insidias struere, Lat. insid-ere.

[5. To make or give a pattern; as, "The maister'll set your copy," Clydes.

6. To lead, to guide; as, "She sets the fashion," ibid.]

7. To become one; in respect of manners, rank, merit, and obligations, &c., S.

And in spek wispit he sum deill;
Bot that sat him rycht wondre weill.

Barbour, i. 393, MS.

It sets him well, wi' vile unscrapit tongue,
To cast up whether I be aukl or young.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 148.

"It sets him ill to behave sae to me," i. e., He acts a very ungrateful part.

"It may be that many will be content to be exercised in an honest and liberrall action, so that they may keep their hands clean: but when it comes to an handy work, and to put to their hands, and file their fingers, or to the bowing of the back, and of the head, that is ouer strait, it is ouer sore to a Gentle-man to doe that, it settes him not: he is a Loris sonne, should he fyle his hands with labour? But Paul sayes, Labour with thy owne handes, rather ere thou be idle in this lyfe, put to thy hand to a spade, or shouell and dig dykes." Rollock on 1 Theas., p. 190.

In this sense, it would seem, the v. to Sit had been used in O. E.

"Syttlyng, becommynge, [Fr.] aduenant, aseant; " Palagr. B. iii. F. 64, a. "It is nat syttlyng for you to do thus. Il ne vous est pas seant de faire ainsi."

"It sytteth nat for your estait to weare so fyne furres. Il ne siet poynt," &c. Ibid. F. 362, a, b.

8. To become, applied to any piece of dress, S.

Wald scho put on this garmond gay,
I durst sweir be my seill,
That scho woir never grene nor gray,
That set hir half so weill.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 104.

Fu' rich is thy heart in leal kindness, my lassie,
Tho' hamely thy claitthing, yet aught sets my lassie;
Thou art a new pearl, in gowd I will case ye,
An' next to my heart, O! for ever I'll place ye.

Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 94.

A dress is said to set one, or to be setting, when it becomes the complexion or form of the wearer, S.

Su.-G. saet-a, convenire; saetelig, conveniens. At hant saets sem best; what is most proper for his station, S., what sets him best, Spec. Reg., p. 623. Ihre, on this word, refers to the Fr. impers. v. sied, as a cognate term. Cet accoustrement luy sied bien; This garment becomes, becoms; or fits him well, Cotgr.

9. To disgust, to excite nausea; as, "The very sight of that soss set my stamrack," S.

This must be an oblique use of the v., as signifying to fix or settle; q. it so settled my appetite that I could not partake of it.

[To SET, v. n. 1. To congeal, to become fixed or solid; as, "The glue's begun to set," Clydes.]

2. To cease growing, to become mature; as, "The neeps are settin, Ibid., Banffs.

3. To come or bring to a dead halt, Ibid.]

To SET aff, v. a. 1. To dismiss, to turn off, S.

Teut. af-sett-en, abdicare af-setten van sijn ampt, dimovere officio, Belg. afgezet, "turned out, deposed, dismissed from one's place," Sewel. The phrase is often used S. to denote the dismissal of a servant, or of any one in office.

2. To fob off, to shift off, S.

Was'tna your paction, ere I loot you gae,
That just yourself I for my hire sud hae?
But thinkna, man, that I'll be set aff sae,
For I'll hae satisfaction ere I gae.

Ross's Helenore, p. 81.

- [3. To deliver, tell, narrate; as, "He sets aff a story brawly," West of S.]

4. To fire, set fire to; as, "He set aff the cannon," Ibid.]

To SET aff, v. n. 1. To slip off, to go away, S.

2. To start, to go away, to begin a work or a journey; generally implying the idea of expedition, S.

3. To loiter, to linger, to be dilatory, Abern.; synon. Put aff.

- * To SET after, v. a. To pursue, S. I set, or set out, after him; I pursued him.

This is a Su.-G. idiom. Saetta efter en, aliquem properato cursu persequi; saett-a, cum impetu ferri, being thus used.

- * To SET by, v. a. 1. To care, to regard.

—To their sembling take gude sight,
How that they passe away sa bair,
And set not by how that we fair,
That winnes all that they spend.

Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 213.

In E. it occurs in an active sense only.

2. To give as a substitute, especially for something better, to make to suffice; as, "I'll set him by wi' a pair dinner the day, as I hae naething better to gie him," S.

- [3. To lay aside, to save; as, "Try to set by something for a rainy day," Clydes.]

[To SET down, v. a. To rebuff, humble, S.]

- [* To SET on, v. n. 1. To settle to, to begin in earnest, West of S.]

2. To accommodate, to get settled; as, "He's weel set on wi' a grievance," Banffs.]

- * To SET out, v. a. To eject, to put out forcibly; as, "I set him out of the house," S.

[To SET owre, v. a. To capsize, overturn, Clydes.]

[To SET to the gait. To set out on a journey; to begin work, Banffs.]

- * To SET Up, v. a. 1. To raise, exalt, but often used as expressive of contempt for a person who assumes some distinction, S.; as, "Set you up, truly!"—"She maun hae a new gown; set her up!"

[2. To utter, to use; as, "She set up her chaff", she used insolent language, West of S.]

3. To nauseate, to disgust; to set up upon, to lose one's relish for, to become nauseated with, S. B.

- * SET, SETT, part. pa. [1. Leased, let, S.]

2. Wrought after a particular pattern, S.

"Ane new colored women's plaid, most sett to boday red. Item, ane gray broken plaid, sett most to the green." Depred. on the Clan Campbell, p. 114.

3. Disposed; applied to the temper of mind, or as in E., the disposition.

Bot he quham by thou fenys thyself begatte
Achill was not to Priame sa hard sette.

Doug. Virgil, 57, 7.

"As Scot. we say, He is very ill set, i.e., ill natured, crabbed, cross-grained; as the E. say, ill-contrived," Rudd.

"The commissioners told how the marquis and town of Aberdeen were peaceably set, obedient to the king and his laws." Spalding's Troubles, i. 118.

4. Seated at a table for a meal, or for computation, S.B.

Myself' gaed creepin' up ahin, —
But they were set, e'er I got in,
An' drivin' roun' the bicker.
Cock's Simple Strains, p. 121.

5. Cast down, distressed, afflicted, Aberd.

The only v. to which this seems allied in signification is Teut. sett-en, sidere ad ima vasa; q. quite sunk.

- SET, SETT, s. 1. A lease; synon. with Tack.

—"Decretis—that he sall haue na dale nor entrometing tharwith in tyme tocum, without he optene tak and set tharof." Act. Audit., A. 1471, p. 14, col. Also p. 15, col. 1.

—"And to content & pay til him the malis of the samin sene [since] tyme of the set maid to the said Schir Johne." Ibid., A. 1476, p. 46.

"A lètre of sett," a missive granting a lease. Ibid., A. 1478, p. 67.

"He should not delapidate his benefice in any sort, nor make any set or disposition thereof, without the special advice or consent of his Majesty, and the general Assembly." Spotswood's Hist., p. 452.

2. A sign or billet fixed on a house, to shew that it is to be let, Aberd.

3. A gin or snare.

Then to the hycht thal held thair way,
And huntyt lang quhill off the day;
And socht schawys, and setis set;
Bot thal gat litill for till etc.

Barbour, iii. 479, MS.

The Kyng than warnyd hys menyhð
Wyth hym at hwtyng for to be. —
Than on the morne wyth-owtyn let,
The setis and the stable set.

Wynntown, vii. l. 46.

Su.-G. sata, Alem. seid, insidiae feris positae; A.-S. seatha, tendicula.

4. The particular spot in a river or frith, where stationary nets are fixed, S.

"Interrogated, How many feith-sets have the Nether Don fishers on the Fraserfield side of the river, and what are the names of them?—Below the bridge there are two feith-sets:—and during his time, he never heard or knew that the heritors of Nether Don, or their tenants, were interrupted in the use and possession of said feith-sets." State, Leslie of Powis, v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 56.

5. The net thus set, S.

"Interrogated, Whether the fishers have not been in the practice of hauling their fishing-nets and feith-sets to the shore at the different places above-mentioned,—whenever they had occasion to do so? Depones, that they were in use to do so; that in the night-time, and when the water is flooded, the fishers go in boats to their feith-sets." Ibid.

Teut. sett-en; Su.-G. saett-a, collocare; saetta ut et naet, to lay or spread a net, Seren.

6. Used nearly in the same sense with attack, shock, or onset, S.

Great may the hardships be, that she has met,
And gotten for my sake so hard a set.

Ross's Helenore, p. 45.

I shanna tell you, nor can I do yet,
How sad the set was, that my heart did get.
Now I might gang as soon, and drown mysell,
As offer hamewith, after what befeel.

Ibid., p. 70.

It is always used in a bad sense; as, a set of the toothache, a set of the cauld, &c.

7. 1. Kind, manner, fashion. A new set o't, a new kind, S.

Either from set, as signifying a scion, or Su.-G. saett, manner, fashion, wise.

8. Shape, figure, cast, make, Aberd.

9. The pattern of cloth. It is said to be of this or that set, especially where there are different colours according to the pattern followed in the weaving, S.

"To ascertain and discriminate those separate divisions of society, every clan wore a different set, as they stile it, of tartan." Grant's Superstitions of the Highlanders, ii. 207.

"Flora gave me a small bit of the silk tartan they wore upon them, which I send that you may see the set, knowing you have a great taste in web making, and as I will need a new dress at the competition of pipers." Saxon and Gael, ii. 6.

"In dyeing and arranging the various colours of their tartans, they displayed no small art and taste, preserving at the same time the distinctive patterns or sets, as they were called, of the different clans, tribes, families, and districts. Besides those general divisions, industrious housewives had patterns, distinguished by the set, superiour quality, and fineness of the cloth, or brightness and variety of the colours." Col. Stewart's Sketches, i. 79.

10. The socket in which a precious stone is set.

—"Upon the samys bonet tene [ten] settis, in every set four dyomontis, on the ta syd one rubie and one tabillydymont with xxiii settis of perle in every set four perle," &c. Inventories, A. 1541, p. 67.

—"Tene [ten] plain dyamontis in settis of gold, xviii. settis of perle, & thrie in every set, and nyne set lang, and four in every set." Ibid. p. 67, 68.

- [11. The proper or usual method of doing work; also, the nature or requirement of the material worked; as, "I hae na got the set o't yet," West of S.]

12. The fixed quantity of any article regularly supplied; as, ["Ye're a half-pint short o' yer set this time," S.]

A.-S. saet-an, set-an, statuere, constituere, Teut. sett-en, Germ. setz-en; whence ghaet, gesetz, lex, constitutio; Alem. kesszidu, institutione, Kero ap. Schilt.

13. The set of a borough, its particular constitution, or the form of its administration, according to charter, including the number of magistrates and counsellors, the mode of election, &c., S.

"At last, Charles I. in 1633, established and confirmed all the grants of his royal predecessors, in favour of the borough; and the set, or form of its government, was ratified by the convention of boroughs, in 1706." P. Elgyn, Moray, Statist. Acc., v. 3. This term seems especially to respect the mode of managing elections.

"The sets are essentially a description of the established forms of procedure at the annual elections, and a recognition of the parties entitled to participate therein."—"The records of the Convention are not extant prior to 1552; but, according to Wight,—the Convention in that year established a set or uniform mode of election to be observed in all the Boroughs, of Scotland." Mr. Burne's Addr. Conv. of Boroughs, Edin. Nov. 23, 1824. Dunl. Advert. Nov. 25.

[14. The form, shape, or position, given to an article; as, "That thing 'll no keep the set," Clydes.]

SET, SETT, conj. Though, although.

And set tyl this I gawe my wylle,
My wyt I kene swa skant thare-tylle,
That I dowte sare thaimie tyl offende.

Wyntown, l. Prol. 33.

Thocht all war heyr the schippis of braid Bertane,
Part suld we los, set fourtoun had it suorn;
The best wer man in se is wa befor.

Wallace, ix. 83, MS.

Sic plesand worles carpand he has forth brocht,
Set his mynd troublit mony greuous thoct.

Doug. Virgil, 19, 28.

Seren. mentions Sw. oansett as used in the same sense. A.-S. set is expl. ideo, idcirco. This particle is most probably the imperat. of the v., like suppose.

[SET-AFF, s. Outfit, outfitting, Clydes.]

[SET-BY, s. A substitute, a put-by; as, "It's no a dinner, but just a set-by," S.]

SET-DOWN, s. An unexpected, overwhelming reply; a rebuff, S.

[SET-GEAR, s. Money placed at interest, Niths.]

[SET-IN, adj. Lasting for a considerable time; as, "It's a real set-in frost noo," Banffs., Clydes.]

[SET-LIKE, adj. Stunted in growth, ibid.]

SETS, s. pl. Corn put up in small stacks, Loth.

Isl. sate, Su.-G. saata, cumulus foeni; from saett-a, to place.

SET-STANE, s. A hone, or stone with a smooth surface, used for setting, or giving an edge to, a razor or other sharp instrument, S.; often simply Set, Roxb.

He—stole his scalping whittle's set-stane.

Remains Nithsdale Song, p. 166.

SETTER, s. 1. One who gives a lease of heritable property to another, S.

"It sall nocht turne the settare nor the takare to preiudice any maner of way for the tynsale of the said landis," &c. Acts Ja. IV., 1503, Ed. 1814, p. 244.

2. One who lets out any thing to another for hire; as, a horse-setter, a horse-hirer, S.

"He was—a setter of tacks to his sons and good sons, to the prejudice of the church." Baillie's Lett., i. 137.

VOL. IV.

[SETTIN', s. The act, power, or right, of giving on lease; as, "Nae doot he has the settin o' the lan'," S.]

[SETTIN', SETTING, part. adj. 1. Becoming mature; as, "The lad's noo a settin' chiel," Clydes.]

2. Becoming, graceful; She's a setting lass, she has a natural gracefulness of manner, that makes her look to advantage.

The ither too was a right setting lass,
Though forthersome.—

Ross's Helenore, p. 94.

—Says she, that lad was a' ber care,
That was so setting with his yellow hair.

Ross's Helenore, p. 50.

[SETT-ON, adj. Incumbent; a sett-on rufe, Lyndsay, Exper. and Court., l. 1384.]

[SET-UP, adj. Affected, prim, nice, S.]

SETE, s. Legal prosecution.

"The said David allegiand at the said landis of Logycarroch belangit him be renone of Sete and forfait be the said Andro.—The said David allegis that he has lettres of tak of the said landis maid to him be lauchful process & forfaitour led apone the said Andro," &c. Act. Audit., A. 1474, p. 41.

This term, as it is nearly synon., has a common origin with Soit, soyt; L. B. sec-ta, from sequor. It seems indeed to be the old law term only a little varied. Secta, jus persequendi aliquem in judicio de re aliqua, maxime de criminali; Du Cange. The word sect-a appears sometimes in the form of set-a and setl-a, although in another of its significations.

SETER, SEATER, s. A local name in Shetl. V. the term STER.

SETH, s. The Coalfish. V. SEATH.

[To SETH, v. a. and n. To seethe, boil, Barbour, xx. 571.]

SETHILL, s. A disease affecting sheep in one of the sides, which makes them lean all to one side in walking, S.B.

A.-S. sid-adl is expl. lateris dolor, pleuriticus. But perhaps the S.B. term is merely a corr. of side-ill.

[SETIS, s. pl. Traps, snares for game, Barbour, iii. 479. V. SET, v. 4 s.]

SET-ON, part. adj. A term applied to what is singed or slightly burned in the pot or pan; as, to broth when it bears the marks of the Bishop's foot; also, settin-on, Teviotd.

SETT, pret. Ruled.

Tuo yere, he sett that land,
His lawes made he cri.

Sir Tristrem, p. 50.

A.-S. sett-an, disponere, occurs in a sense pretty similar. Sette thar to landes and rentes; Disposuit insuper terras et redditus; Chron. Sax. 240, 13.

SETTE, part. pa. Disposed. V. SET, id.

Z

SETTE GEAR. "Money placed at interest," Nithsd.

We'll sell a' our corn, Carlin,
We'll sell a' our bear,
An' we'll send to our ain Lord
A' our sette gear.

Remains Nithsdale Song, p. 138.

It is expl. as in the definition, in a Note by the editor. In Hogg's Ed. it is Settle-gear.

[SETTIRDAY, s. Saturday, Barbour, xi. 352.]

[SETTERDAYIS-SLOP, s. A gap ordained to be left in the cruives for catching salmon in fresh waters, which had to be kept open from Saturday after Vespers till Monday after sunrise, Acts, James I.]

SETTERTOUN, s. A term occurring in an Act of Ja. VI respecting Orkney and Zetland.

—"Foir copland, settertoun, anstercoip," &c. A. 1612. V. ROICH.

SETTING, s. A weight in Orkney, containing 24 marks.

"Imprimis, 24 marks makis ane setting." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Serplath.

"24 merks make 1 setting, nearly equal to 1 stone 5 lb. Dutch." P. Cross., Orkn. Statist. Acc., vii. 477.

"Setten, the same with a Leish pound.—Six setten makes a Meel." MS. Explic. of Norish words.

Although Setting is synon. with Lispud; the former term, I am informed, is most commonly used in Orkney, and the latter in Shetland.

SETTING-DOG, s. A spaniel, S.; setter, E.

* To SETTLE a minister, v. a. To fix him in a particular charge, S.; synon. to Place.

"In some cases the Presbytery having refused to induct or settle, as they call it, the person presented by the patron, it has been found necessary to appeal to the General Assembly." Boswell's Life of Johnson, ii. 244.

In the same sense, a congregation is said to get a settlement, when the Pastor is introduced to the discharge of the pastoral office among them, S.

SETTLE, s. A kind of seat. V. LANG-SETTLE.

SETTLE-GEAR, s. [Same with Sette-Gear.]

—We'll send to Lord Nithsdale
A' our sette gear.

Jacobite Relics, ii. 36.

A.-S. setl, setel, sedes, sella.

SETTLIN, s. Such a beating as brings one into a state of submission, S.

"To get a settlin, to be frighted into quietness;" GL Shirrefs.

SETTLINS, s. pl. The dregs of beer, S.

"Them that seldom brew, are pleas'd wi' settlins;" S. Prov. Settling is used in this sense in E.

SETTREL, SETTEREL, adj. Thick-set, dwarfish, S. B.

"The second chiel was a thick, settrel, swown pallach." Journal from London, p. 2.

From A.-S. setl-an, Su.-G. saett-a, to place, to fix. We say that one is set in his growth, when it is supposed that he will not grow any taller, S.

SETTREL, s. pl. Young sprouts plucked in spring from coleworts planted in the beginning of winter, Stirlings.

A diminutive from E. set, a plant or shoot laid in the ground.

SETTRIN, SET RENT, s. A certain portion allotted to a servant or cottager, when working to his master; consisting of different kinds of food, as porridge, broth, and bread, Ang., Perth.

More is generally allowed than one person can eat; but whatever the labourer leaves, he has a right to carry home to his own family. The vessel appropriated to this use is called the settrin cap. The phrases, settrin bread, settrin meal, &c., are also used.

This is a corr. of set rent. "We say Scot., He lives upon his purchase, as well as others on their set rent, Prov." Rudd. vo. Purche. V. also Kelly, p. 392.

"Now I think the very annuity and casualties of the cross of Christ,—and these comforts that accompany it, better than the world's set-rent." Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 6.

SEUCH, SEWCH, s. 1. A furrow, a small ditch, S.

In the meyn tyme Eneas with ane pleuch
The ciete circulit, and markit be ane seuch.

Doug. Virgil, 153, 11.

It is now written sheugh. V. SHARN.

2. A fosse connected with a rampart, a ditch surrounding a fortification.

"Perceaving that that labor did butt small profite, he cawait shute at the town wall the 17.—Bot the grounds within were so weil fortified with rampers and deepe seuches, that they durst not mak assault." Hist. James the Sext., p. 155.

3. A gulf.

As we approachit neir the hillis heid,
Ane terribill seuch birnand in flammis reid
Abhominabill, and how as hell to see,
All full of brinstane, pick, and bulling leid,— I saw.

Palace of Honour, iii. 4.

Seugh, A. Bor., a wet ditch; E. sough, a subterraneous drain; not from Fr. sous, as Johnson derives it, but as allied to Teut. soye, souwe, cloaca, Isl. sag-r, Sw. sog, colluvies, ductus aquae fluentis. Perhaps Lat. sulc-us, is from the same origin.

To SEUCH, v. a. 1. To cut, to divide.

Thay seuch the fludis, that souchand quhare thay fare
In sunder slidis.—

Doug. Virgil, 132, 17.

Lat. sulc-are. V. the s.

2. To plant by laying in a furrow. Thus the phrase, sheughing kail, occurs in an old Jacobite song. V. SHEUCH, v.

SEUERALE, adj. Applied to landed property as possessed distinct from that of others, or as contrasted with a common.

—"Charging to tak an inquisicioun—qubethir the said land—has bene broukit & joyait be the saide Johne of Carmichell & his forbearis in tymes bigane, outhir in ering & sawing, or in pasture, as propirte & seuerale til him;—or gife the samyn landis war common pasture bathe to the said Johne & James, & bathe thair gudis commonly pasturit." Act. Audit. A., 1473, p. 27.

SEUERALE, s. In seuerale, in distinct possession.

"The actionne—anent the etin & distroying of certane corne—vppone the landis of Wistounne pertening to him in seuerale & propirte," &c. Ibid., p. 26, 27.

This phrase occurs in the same sense in O.E.

More profit is quieter found

Where pastures in several be.

Tusser's Husbandry.

L.B. seuerale-is. Et praedictas 40 acras terras praedictas seuerales. Monast. Anglican., T. ii. p. 509.

Separalis is used in the same sense. In separali, Fleta lib. 2. c. 54, § 15.

SEUIN STERNES. The Pleiades, S.

The Pleuch, and the poles, the planetis began,
The Son, the seuin sternes, and the Charlie wane.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, b. 2.

SEVEN SENSES. A phrase used to denote one's wits; as, "Ye've fley'd me out o' my seven senses," You have frightened me out of all the wits I ever possessed, S.

The French, who are usually charged with a propensity to rhodomontade, are, in this instance, more moderate than we ourselves are. For they content themselves with five. J'y mettray tous mes cinq sens, "I will employ my best endeavours in the matter;" Cotgr.

Could it be meant to denote all our mental powers, as alluding to a number in all ages viewed as expressive of perfection; especially as, during the prevalence of Popery, so many things, connected with religion, were expressed by this number, as the seven sacraments, the seven deadly sins, the seven canonical hours, &c.?

[SEVEN-SHIFT. A plan of rotation of crops extending over seven years; as, two crops of grass, two of oats after grass, a green crop, a cereal crop, and grass seeds, S.]

[SEVINTENE, adj. Seventeen, Barbour, xiii. 645.]

"The ald boll first maid be king David contenit a sexterne, the sexterne contenit xij gallonis of the ald met," &c. Parl. Ja. I., A. 1422, Acts Ed. 1814, p. 12, c. 22.

L. B. sextar-ius, sextar-ium, mensura liquidorum et aridorum; Du Cange. This measure varied greatly, as used in different countries.

SEY, s. The Coal-fish. V. SYE.

SEY, s. 1. The sey of a gown or shift is the opening in which the sleeve is inserted, S.

2. In the dissection of an ox or cow, the back bone being cut up, the one side is called the fore-sey, the other the back-sey. The latter is the sirloin.

"'He's a shabby body the laird o' Monkbarns,' said Mrs. Heukbane, 'He'll make as muckle about buying a fore quarter o' lamb in August, as about a backsey o' beef.'" Antiquary, i. 320.

"The proper pieces of beef for roasting are the fore-sey and sirloin." Receipts in Cookery, p. 36.

His squeamish stomach loaths the savoury sey,

And nought but liquids now can find their way.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 95.

Great tables ne'er engag'd my wishes,

When crowded with o'er many dishes;

A healthfu' stomach sharply set,

Prefers a back-sey piping het.

Ibid. ii. 363.

Isl. seya is rendered portiuncula, particula, and applied to the division of the body of a man; Verel.

"Wool, was then, for the first time in Scotland, manufactured by machinery into seys, serges, plaidens, and other coarse clotha." Thom's Hist. Aberd., ii. 151. Palsgrave renders "saye, clothe," by Fr. serge; B. iii. F. 60, b.

The learned Dr. Ledwich says that sack is an original Teutonic word, which "the Greeks and Romans changed in sagum and the French into sagia, saium, and saia." Antiq. of Ireland, p. 261.

Fraunces renders "Say, cloth" by Lat. "Sagum." Prompt. Parv.

Fr. sayete, "the stuffe say;" Cotgr. Skinner derives it from Fr. saye, Ital. saiio, Hisp. sayo, a long-skirted jacket, a military coat; all from Lat. say-um, id. because, he says, such cloth was proper for this purpose.

SEY, s. The sea.

Anone al most ye wend to sey in fere.
Doug. Virgil, 44, 34.

SEY-FAIR, adj. Properly, carried by sea; but used to denote what strictly pertains to the sea-faring line.

In an action before the Admiralty court against some merchants of Hamburg for exporting a few bolls of wheat from Scotland, "it was allegit be Maister Johanne Spens, prolocutor for the merchants of Hamburg, that the said Admiral, nor his deputes, wer na juges competent in the said matter, because it was na sey fair matter." Acts Sederunt, 16 January, 1534.

This v. is mentioned by Palsgrave. "I sey mylke, or clense, Je coulle du laict. This terme is to [too] moche northerne." B. iii. F. 361, a.

Lancash. "Sye, to put milk, &c. thro' a sieve." GL. Bobbins.

The O.E. v. "Syn-yn or clensyn licoure, Colo," (Prompt. Parv.) must have had a common Origin; although in form it varies more from the cognate terms in the other northern languages.

SEY-DISH, s. The searce used for straining milk, S.

Sigk-clout occurs in the same sense in a copy of Tak your auld cloak, &c., in the E. idiom, Percy's Reliques, I. 149.

Sometime it was of cloth in graine,
'Tis now but a sigk-clout as you may see.

Isl. sy-a, percolare; A.-S. se-on, ge-se-an, Germ. sey-en, Belg. seigh-en, sijgh-en, Dan. si-er, id.

To SEY, v. a. To assay, to try. V. SAY, v.

SEY, SAY, s. 1. A trial, [a small portion as a sample or test; also, a taste], the act of tasting.

He and the Eyll bathe to the Queyn thai went Rasawyt hyr fayr, and brocht hyr till a tent;
To dyner bownyt als gudly as thai can,
And serwit was with many likly man.
God purwyance the Queyn had with hyr wrocht,
A say scho tuk off all thing that thai brocht.
Wallace persawyt, and said, We haiff no dreid;

I can nocht trow ladyis wald do sic deid,
To poyson men, for all Ingland to wyn.
Wallace, viii. 1271, MS.

Sey, Ed. Perth.

i.e., "The Queen herself tasted of all the food she had brought with her, that the Scots might be assured she had no design to poison them." It is absurdly rendered in editions;

An assay she took of all that gud her thought.

2. An endeavour, an attempt, of any kind.
I sall mak a sey to do it, S.

SEY-PIECE, SAY-PIECE, s. A piece of work performed by a craftsman, as a proof of his skill in any particular art.

Sure Nature herried mony a tree,
For sprains and bonny spats to thee;
Nae mair the rainbow can impart
Sic glowing ferlies o' her art;
Whase pencil wrought its freaks at will
On thee, the sey-piece o' her skill.
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 35.

SEY-SHOT, s. An opportunity given, in play, of regaining all that one has lost, Fife.

SEYAL, s. "A trial;" GL. Picken, S.O.

To SEY, v. a. To see; the pron. of Ettr.
For.; [part. pa. seyn.]

[SEYING, s. Sight, Barbour, xvii. 88.]

SEYD, s. A sewer, a passage for water, Aug.
Tent. sode, canalis, cloaca; Su.-G. saud, a well.

To SEYG, v. n. To sink or fall down. V. SEG.

[To SEYK, v. a. To seek; Barbour, x. 453.]

[SEYLE, s. Good, goodness, Barbour, i. 303. A.-S. sæl, a good time.]

SEYME, s. The work at which a woman sews, S.

—"Ane change—from threid, seyme, and neidil, to danse at the feidil; from blushing to heir of marriage, to lauching to heir of loue." Nicol Burne, F. 189, a. b. V. SEAM.

[SEYMLY, adj. Comely, well-favoured, Gawan and Gol., ii. 17. V. under SEYNITY.]

To SEYN, v. a. To consecrate. V. SYND.

[SEYN, part. pa. Seen, Barbour, vi. 21.]

[To SEYND, v. a. To send, Ibid., iii. 748.]

SEYNDILL, SEINDLE, SINDILL, SENDYLL, adv. Seldom; pron. sindle, Loth. senil, S. O. seenil, S. B.

Thairfor, gude folkes, be exampil we se,
That there is nane thus, of the friends thre,
To ony man that may do gude, bot ane;
Almos deid that it be seindle tane.

Priests of Peblis, S. P. R., i. 48.

"Sendyll ar men of gret glutonie sene haue lang dayis or agit with proces of yeris." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 4.

Thairrowt he is bot seyn till sene.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 155.

i.e., he is seldom sene abroad.

Auld fayis ar sindill faythful freyndis found.

Mailland Poems, p. 162.

Though that she fantless was maun be allow'd;
But travell'd women ar but synle trow'd.

Ross's Helenore, p. 98.

"Them that secul rides times their spurs;" S. Prov.
"A gentle horse should be seindle spurred;" S. Prov.

For now a groat was a' my stock,

'Twad senil e'er be mair.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 64.

Sibb. says that this is a "perversion of Teut. and Sax. selden, raro." But it is evidently from a quite different origin; Su.-G. saen; saender, singulus; en i saender, singuli; sin, unus, singularis. Ihre marks the affinity between sin and Lat. singulus. Su.-G. sinung, signifies singular; sinaledes, sinalund, every one in his own way, as opposed to those who act conjunctly; quisque suo modo. In one instance I find single used for seindle in a prov. phrase. It appears as the adj.

"Single vae maketh pleasures the more agreeable."

Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 863.

TO SEYNE, v. a. To see; [part. pa. seyn, seen.]

Wallace, scho said, that full worthy has beyne;

Than wepyt scho, that peté was to seyne.

Wallace, ii. 333, MS.

As seyne for se, bene for be, sayne for say. It seems doubtful whether this idiom was formed from the A.-S. infin. or from the 3 pers. pl. pres. indic. In O. E. we find not only, they saien or seyne, but I saien. Seyn they, they say; Ploughman's Crede.

SEYNE, s. A sinew.

Wallace, with that, at hys lychtyn, him drew,
Apon the crag with his suerd has him tayne,
Throw brayne and seyne in sondyr straik the bane.

Wallace, ii. 400, MS.

A. Su.-G. senā, Germ. sene, id. V. SENON.

SEYNITY. [An errat. for Seymly, fair, comely, well-favoured.]

He hard ane hugill blast brym, and ane loud blaw,
As the seynity sone silit to the rest.

In Edit. 1508 it is seynily, which seems the true reading from Fr. signal, Ital. segnale, a signal. Silit may signify given, from A.-S. syll-an, dare, i.e., he heard the loud sound of a bugle horn given hastily, from without, as a signal to those who were within the castle.

SEYRICHT, s. The name of a book mentioned in Aberd. Reg.—"Tua buikis, viz. ane almanack, & ane callit the Seyricht." A. 1551, V. 21.

Belg. zeerecht, marine laws.

[TO SEYSS; v. a. To seize, Barbour, ix. 530.]

SEYSTER, s. An incongruous mixture of edibles, Upp. Clydes.; synon. Soss.

TO SEYSTER, v. a. To mix in an incongruous mode, ibid.

Teut. sauss-en, condire. Or shall we view it as allied to Isl. seydala, coctio, from seyd-a, decoquere diutius? A.-S. seaw, succus, liquor, is apparently from the cognate v. seath-an, to boil, E. to seethe.

This district, however, having belonged to the kingdom of Strathclyde, the word may be deduced from C.B. saig, a mess, seig-iaw, to mess.

SH. For words not found printed in this form, V. SCH.

SHA, SHAW, interj. The term of incitement used to a dog when called to give chase to any other animal, Gall.

"Sha, what is said to a dog, when ordered to hunt; Sha awa, run, you dog!" Gall. Encycl.

It has been conjectured that this has originated from Fr. chat, the cat; as if the naming of puss were a warrant for the dog to give chase.

Teut. schoi-en, fugere, defugere; C. B. yagog-i, to stir, to move; or perhaps rather from anc. Goth. skaa, insectari. V. Ihre, vo. Skaada, videre.

[SHAA, s. A mark, Shetl.]

To SHAB, v. a. "To smuggle, to send any thing away privately;" Gall. Encycl.

They shab'd pur Tamous aff to hell
Wi' nimble feet.

Ibid., p. 347.

As smuggling conveys the idea of acting under a covert, this term is probably allied to O. Teut. schabbe, schobbe, operculum, tegmen. Germ. schaub, palla, stola muliebris (which Wachter derives from Gr. σκέω, tego); Belg. schabbetje, "an old threadbare cloak, or cote," Sewel; Su.-G. skoefwe, tegmen.

SHABLE, SHABBLE, s. 1. A crooked sword, or hanger.

"A sea-captain offered to strike off my head with a shable." Colvil, Introd. to Mock Poem, p. 8.

"Even the church-yard on a Sunday was sometimes the scene of action, where two hostile lairds, with their respective adherents, rushed upon one another with their durks and their shabbles." P. Strathdon, Aberd. Statist. Acc., xiii. 184.

Su.-G. Dan. Belg. sabel, Germ. säbel, Fenn. sabeli, a crooked sword, a scymitar. Wachter derives the term from Arab. seif, a sword, properly of the falchion kind.

"Garnock having, at a committee of Council, railed at General Dalziel, calling him a Muscovia beast, who used to roast men, the General in a passion struck him with the pomel of his shable on the face, till the blood sprung." Fountainhall, i. 159.

Sir Thomas Urquhart gives the term in its proper form.

"Yet at their pleasure was he compleatly armed cap-a-pe, and mounted upon one of the best horses in the kingdom, and a good slashing sable by his side." Rabelais, B. I., p. 186. In the original, bracquemart. In the Errata, however, prefixed to vol. ii. he refers to this as a mistake. P. 186, for sable, r. shable.

This is an O. E. word. Skinner gives sable as signifying, ensis Sarmaticus, without mentioning sabre. Phillips gives both, as equally signifying "a kind of simetar, hanger, or broad sword."

2. It is now generally used to denote an old rusty sword; Ane auld shable, S.

3. Any little person or thing, Strathmore.

To SHACH, v. a. To shape or form any thing in an oblique way, to distort; pret. shacht; part. pa. id., also beslacht, S.

There are many cognates in the other Northern languages. Isl. skag-a, to decline, to bend, to turn out of the way; deflectere, G. Andr.; skaga, a promontory which stretches obliquely; skack-ur, skackr, obliquus, impar, inequalia habens opposita latera; skack, obliquitas, duarum ejusdem rei laterum inequalitas, Landnamab. Gl.

These words are formed from Isl. ska, an inseparable particle, corresponding to Lat. dis, and denoting disjunction. Hence also Su.-G. ligga skafottes, divaricata crura alterius capiti obvertere, lhre; to lie heads and thraws, S.; skack-a, to set asunder; skack-a, to divide, to break off; Isl. skaegetland, one who has unequal teeth, q. whose teeth are shack, or shackell. To the same fountain must we trace Isl. skeif-r, Dan. skaev, Germ. schief, E. skew, and askew, oblique.

Norv. skak, askew, whence skiaekke, having a distorted mouth, skiaekkin, distorted. The root seems to be skaa, distorted, the same with Isl. ska.

SHACH-END of a web. The fag-end, where the cloth becomes inferior in quality, in consequence of the materials growing scanty, or of the best being used first, S. B. V. preceding word.

To SHACHLE, v. a. and n. 1. Touse anything so as to distort it from its proper shape or direction, S. He has shachlit aw his schoon, he has put his shoes quite out of shape. Hence Shachlin, unsteady, infirm, S.

2. To shuffle in walking, S. shochle, Loth.

"Had you such a shoe on every foot, you would shochel;" S. Prov. "A scornful return of a woman to a fellow that calls her she, and not by her name." Kelly, p. 142. She (S. echo) is pron. in the same manner as shoe.

SHACHLE, s. 1. Any instrument or machine that is worn out, S. B.

2. Shachle, "a weak animal, all shachled or shaken;" Gall. Enc.

3. A feeble, diminutive, half-distorted person, Dumfr. In the part. the vowel o is used, ibid. V. SHOCHLED.

SHACHLED, part. adj. 1. Distorted, twisted; as, Shachled fut, distorted feet, S.

"Ye shape shoos by your ain shachled feet;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 86.

I spier'd for my cousin, fu' couthy and sweet,—
And how her new shoos fit her auld shackl't feet.

Burns, iv. 250.

Leg. shackl't.

Teut. schahl, schehl, obliquus. V. SHACH.

Perhaps the provincial E. v. Shale may be viewed as allied. "To Shale (proper to the feet) in with the heels, and out with the toes;" Thoresby, Ray's Lett., p. 336.

2. [Worn out, discarded, cast away; as in the phrase, Shachled schoon or shoes], metaph. applied to a female that has been deserted by her lover, or thrown aside like a pair of old shoes, S.

"Colonel Douglas Ashton—heard the Marquis of A——say,—that his kinsman had made a better arrangement for himself,—and that Bucklaw was welcome to the wearing of Ravenswood's shaughled shoes." Bride of Lammermoor, iii. 9, 10.

[To SHACK, v. a. and n. To shake, to cause to shake, S. V. SHAK.]

[SHACK, s. A shake, a wrestle, S.]

[SHACK-A-FA, s. A wrestling match, Clydes., Banffs.]

SHACKLE-BANE, s. 1. The wrist, S. improperly written shekel bane.

He gowls to be sa disappointed,
And drugs, till he has maist disjointed
His shekel bane.—

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 495.

Contrive na we, your shakle bane
Will mak but little streik.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 35.

q. the bone on which shackles are fixed. A. Bor. shackle of the arm, id.

2. Used, perhaps ludicrously, to denote the pastern of a horse.

"An' the quick sands get a grip an yor nagg's shakle bene,—heel wumble down the bourn; and whar au [are?] ye then?" Franck's Northern Memoirs, p. 61.

SHAFT, s. A handle; as a whip-shaft, the handle of a whip, S.

Su.-G. skift, Isl. skapt, manubrium.

[SHAFTS, s. pl. The jaws, Shetl.; pron. chafts in South and West of S.]

SHAFTS, s. A kind of woollen cloth, Aberd.

"Clothes manufactured from the above wool,—three quarters to yard broad seys, sarges, shafts, plaidings, baizes, linsey-woolseys, jemmies, and stripped apron stuffs." Statist. Acc. (Aberd.) xix. 208.

SHAG, s. 1. The refuse of barley, or that which is not properly filled, generally given to horses or cattle, S. dichtings, synon.

"Mr. Robert Meiklejohn, brewer, Alloa, sowed a quantity of shag, from English barley, crop 1820, being the skimmings of his malt cisterns." Edin. Cal. Mercury, 9th Dec. 1822.

2. The term is sometimes applied to the refuse of oats, Strathmore.

"Oats have about ten times the quantity of shag they had last year." Caled. Merc., Nov. 13, 1823.

As, in thrashing, the beards are not so easily separated from this kind of corn, as that which is fully ripened, it may have received its name from this circumstance; from Su.-G. skaeegg, hair in general, hence applied to the beard; Isl. skegg, Dan. skiaegg, id. A.-S. scceage, coma.

[SHAG, s. Same as SEGG, q. v., Banffs.]

[To SHAGGLE, v. a. To corrode a substance by gnawing it, to gnaw, Shetl. Dan. sagle, to slaver.]

[To SHAGL, v. a. To cut raggedly, as with a blunt instrument, ibid. Isl. seigl, tough, sagla, to cut badly.]

[SHAIR, s. A chair, ibid.]

[To SHAIR, v. a. To rub one body against another, to grate, to grind; as, "To shair the teeth," ibid.]

SHAIRN, s. The dung of cattle. V. SHARN.

[SHAIVLE, s. Distortion, Banffs.]

[To SHAIVLE, v. a. To distort, to become distorted, ibid. V. SHAVEL.]

[SHAWLE-MOO'T, adj. Having the mouth distorted, ibid.]

To SHAK, SHAKE, v. a. [1. To shake, wrestle. V. SHACK.]

2. To reduce, emaciate; one is said to be sair shaken, when much emaciated by disease or long confinement, S.

To SHAK one's crap. To speak loudly and vehemently, to give vent to one's ill humour, S.B.

Afore ye lat him get o'er meikle time
To schak his crap, and scauld you for the quean,
Be bauld enough to tell him a' your mind.
Shirrefs' Poems, p. 54.

This metaph. seems borrowed from the cackling of a fowl, when provoked.

To SHAK a foot. To dance, S.

—Sweeter far than any tongue can tell,
Was that first night I shook a foot wi' Nell.
A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 97.

To SHAK a fa' (fall), to grapple, to wrestle, S. V. FAW.

SHAK, SHAKE, s. 1. Emaciation, as described above; as, a sair shake, S.

[2. He's nae great shakes, not of good character S.]

SHAK-DOWN, SHAKE-DOWN, s. "A temporary bed made on the floor, when a house is crowded;" S. V. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 173.

It is also used metaph.

They've taen him neist up in their arms,
And made his shak-down in the barns.
Allan o' Maut, Jamieson's Popul. Ball., li. 238.

"The same blanket which serves them for a mantle by day, is made a part of their bedding at night, which is generally spread upon the floor: this I think they call a Shakedown." Burt's Letters, i. 107.

SHAKE-RAG-LIKE, adj. Resembling a tattered-demon, South of S.

"'He was a shake-rag-like fellow,' he said, 'and he dared to say he had gypsy blood in his veins.'" Guy Mannering, ii. 77.

[SHALD, SHALL, SHALE, adj. Shallow, S.]

[SHALLOCH, s. A small shallow tin vessel, Banffs.]

SHALLOCHY, adj. Shallow. "Shallochy Land, land of a shallow nature;" Gall. Enc.

SHALE, s. A name given to alum ore, S.

[SHALER, s. 1. A shade of grey peculiar to the wool of Shetland sheep, Shetl.

2. Hoar frost, ibid.]

SHALL, s. The scale suspended from a balance for weighing, Aberd.

Teut. schale van de waeghe, lanx; Belg. schal, id. a

SHALL, s. 1. A shell, Aberd. Isl. and Su.-G. skal, testa.

[2. A shawl, Clydes.]

SHALLOCH, adj. Plentiful, abundant, Mearns. V. HAMMIT.

[SHALLOCH, s. V. under SHALD.]

[SHALMILLINS, s. pl. 1. Small pieces, Shetl. V. MOOL.

2. As an adv., in small pieces, ibid.]

SHALT, s. A horse of the smallest size; Shaltie, dimin., Aberd.; the same with SHELTYE.

When near the town, he made a halt,
And lighted there, and left the shalt.
W. Beattie's Tales, p. 29.

To SHAM, v. a. To strike, Loth.; as, I'll sham your legs.

To SHAMBLE, SHAMMEL, v. a. and n. 1. To rack the limbs by striding too far; as, You'll shamble yoursell, pron. shammil, Ang.

2. To distort, to writhe; as, "He shambled his mou' at me," S.B.; synonym. Shewel, Showl.

3. To distort the face, to make a wry mouth, S. Hence shamble-chafte, wry mouth, distorted chops, S. B.

Compare you then to Thersites,
Wha for's ill-scrappit tongue,
An' shamble-chafte, got on his back
Puss wi' the nine tails hung.
Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 24.

V. SEMBYL.

[SHAMMEL-SHANKS, s. pl. Crooked legs; also applied to a person whose legs are crooked.]

SHAMMEL-SHANKIT, adj. Having crooked legs, Teviotd.

SHAMBO, SHAMBO-LEATHER, s. The leather called shamoy, S.

—No windy flourished flying feathers,
No sweet perniusted shambo leathers.
Watson's Coll., i. 23.

* SHAME, s. Often used in profane language as a substitute for the devil's name, as,

Shame care, S.B.; or in imprecation, as, Shame on ye, Shame fu' ye, i.e., befall you, S.; synon. with Foul, Sorrow, Mischief, &c.

When I think on this world's pelf,
And how little I hae o't to myself;
I sigh when I look on my threabare coat,
And shame fu' the gear and the baggie o't.

Herd's Coll., ii. 19.

Elsewhere blady.

It is a singular coincidence, that Su.-G. Tage mig skammen, should have a similar application; Diabolus me auferat. There, however, perhaps not very naturally views skamm in this acceptation, as contracted from Isl. skiaeman, maleficus, q. scathman. I would prefer considering it as a metaph. use of skamm, pudor; or as meant to point out the father of our shame.

[SHAME-REEL, or SHAMIT DANCE. In several counties of Scotland this was the name of the first dance after the celebration of a marriage. It was performed by the bride and best man, and the bridegroom and best maid. The bride's partner asked what was to be the "shame spring," and she commonly answered—"Through the world will I gang wi' the lad that loes me," which, on being communicated to the fiddlers, was struck up, and the dance went on somewhat punctiliously, while the guests looked on in silence, and greeted the close with applause. This dance was common in Forfarshire twenty years ago. The origin of the term is sufficiently obvious in the shamefacedness of the bride.]

SHAMLOCH, s. A cow that has not calved for two years; W. Loth. Gael. simlach, id.

SHAMS, s. pl. Legs. Fr. jambes, id.

SHAN, adj. 1. "Pitiful, silly, poor;" Gl. Rams.

Of umquhile John to lie or bann,
Shaws but ill will, and looks right shan.—
Ye're never rugget, shan, nor kittle,
But blyth and gabby.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 225, ii. 329.

2. Shan would seem to be used in Ayr., as signifying backward, averse.

An' tho' we stownlins eat, yet man
At theft an' robbing is na shan.
In ither kintries far awa
He thinks'n' nae harm to rob awa.

The Two Rats, Picken's Poems, i. 67.

This term may, however, be allied to C. B. ysgan, Armor. agan, light, inconsiderable; inconstant, wavering, vain, &c.; Lhuyd.

Allied perhaps to A.-S. scande, Teut. schande, ignominia, dedecus; Su.-G. skand-a, probro afficere.

Shan, shame-facedness, bashfulness; Linc. Gl. Grose.

SHAND, adj. The same with Shan, but apparently used in a stronger sense, as signifying worthless, South of S.

"I doubt Glossin will prove but shand after a', mistress," said Jabos, as he passed through the little lobby beside the bar; 'but this is a gude half-crown ony way.'" Guy Mannering, ii. 187. "Base coin. Cant word." Gl. Antiquary.

To SHANE, v. a. To heal, to cure; properly used to denote the supposed effect of superstitious observances, Galloway.

It occurs in the account given of the magical rites used for recovering a cow that is considered as elf-shot.

"A burning peat is laid down on the threshold of the byre door;—if she walks quietly over the peat, she remains uncured; but if she first smell, then lets a spang over it with a billy [the act of bellowing], she is then shaned, cured." Gall. Enc., p. 210.

It is also mentioned under the word Sinn, to wash.

"Probably this and shane, that which breaks witchcraft, are one; red-hot irons are sometimes thrown into a churn, so that it may get, or that the cream therein may become butter; this is termed shaning." P. 427.

This is immediately a corr. of S. Sane, v. That Synd, or as here written Sinn, is a corr. of the same word, there seems to be little reason to doubt.

SHANG, s. A sort of luncheon; "shang o' breed and cheese, a piece,—a bite between meals;" Gall. Enc.

Isl. stan, signifies crusta, cortex.

SHANGAN, SHANJAN, SHANJIE, s. "A stick cleft at one end, for putting the tail of a dog in, by way of mischief, or to frighten him away;" Gl. Burns, S.

He'll clap a shangan on her tail. —
Burns, iii. 62.

And Gibbie skelp'd before the fae,
Like Colly wi' a shangin. —

Davidson's Seasons, p. 20.

It is pronounced shangie, Roxb. A letter is sometimes fastened by this means to the tail of a dog, who carries it to the place appointed, faster than it would go by post.

Gael. seimnigh-am, to couple, to yoke.

Perhaps originally the same with Shangie, s. q. a shackle. As denoting what is cloven, it may, however, be derived from the Isl. part. ska, signifying disjunction. V. SHACH. Hence,

To SHANGIE, v. a. To inclose in a cleft piece of wood, S.A.

A bridal haudin at the mill,
The watch were there resortin,
To shangie ilka lassie's tail. —

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 8.

SHANGIE, s. 1. A shackle that runs on the stake to which a cow is bound in the byre; hence also called rin-shackle, Fife. V. SHANGAN.

2. The chain by which dogs are coupled, Fife.

Hence, it has been supposed, the term Collie-shangie, q. "a quarrel between two dogs which are bound with the same chain, which must be the more violent as they cannot get away from each other."

It must be observed, that, in Fife the term is used in a general sense as denoting a chain. Perhaps shangie is merely a liquid modification of Fr. chaine, a chain.

SHANGIE, adj. Thin, meagre, S.

Gael. seang, small, slender, slender-waisted; seang-aim, to make slender or thin, to grow slender; Shaw.

SHANGINESS, s. The state of being slender, meagreness, S.

• SHANK, s. [1. A leg; the leg of a stocking, a stocking in the process of knitting, S.]

2. The handle; as, "the shank o' a spune;" [also, the prong of a knife or a fork that goes into the handle,] S.

3. The projecting point of a hill, S. V. Now.

"I heard a queer unearthly greet coming down the shank, and wizing ay nearer and nearer to the byre door." Blackw. Mag., Nov. 1820, p. 201,

4. The pit or shaft that is sunk for reaching the coals, S. V. SCHANK.

From A.-S. scenc-an, to sink; or perhaps the E. word, as denoting a handle, is used metaph., in the same manner as shaft for a pit.

Nine score o' fathoms shanks down lead,
To let the hammerin' core in.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 265.

To SHANK, v. a. and n. 1. To sink a [shaft for water or for coal]; as, "to shank for coals," Clydes.

— "Three new coal-heughs were shanked in the Douray moor, and ever since there has been a great plenty of that necessary article." Annals of the Parish, p. 64.

[2. To fit with a prong or a handle; as, to shank a fork, West of S.]

3. To knit stockings, ibid., Aberd.

4. To travel on foot; as, "I shankit every fit o' the road."

[5. To go, depart; also, to send, despatch; as, "I'll shank to bed noo," "Shank them to bed," S.]

To SHANK aff, v. n. To depart quickly, S. V. under SCHANKS.

To SHANK aff, v. a. 1. To send off without ceremony, S.

"They think they should be lookit after, and some say ye should baith be shankit aff till Edinburgh castle." Antiquary, iii. 146.

2. To set off smartly; to walk away, depart, or vanish quickly, S.

It's nae sae very lang sinsyne,
That I gaed shankin aff to shine
At kirk o' Deer.

Tarras's Poems, p. 37.

— Syne gied a fearfu' dreary croon,
An' aff for aye he shanket
Wi' Death that day.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 202.

To SHANK one's self, awa, v. a. To take one's self off quickly, S.

"Na, na, I am no a Roman," said Edie. 'Then shank yoursel awa' to the double folk, or single folk, that's the Episcopals or Presbyterians yonder." Antiquary, ii. 308.

VOL. IV.

SHANKER, s. 1. A knitter of stockings, S.

"Shanks, stockings. Shankers, the women who knit them;" Gl. Sibb.

[2. A sinker of shafts; as, "a well-shanker, a pit-shanker," West of S.]

SHANKS, s. pl. Stockings. V. SCHANK.

SHANKS-NAIGIE, s. To ride on Shanks Mare, Nag, or Nagg, a low phrase, signifying to travel on foot, S. V. Gl. Shirr.

"No just sae far; I maun gang there on Shanks-nagg." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 22.

And ay until the day he died,
He rode on good shanks nagg.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 182.

SHANKUM, s. A person, or beast, that has long small legs; Orkn. V. SCHANK.

SHANNACH, s. Commonly expl. a bone-fire; but properly one lighted on Hallow-eve, Perth; sometimes shinicle.

It is a corr. from Gael. Samhnag, or, as it is otherwise written, Samh-in, the great festival observed by the Celts at the beginning of winter. Dr. Smith, having spoken of Bellane, says:

"The other of these solemnities was held upon Hallow-eve, which, in Gaelic, still retains the name of Samh-in. The word signifies the fire of peace, or the time of kindling the fire for maintaining the peace. It was at that season that the Druids usually met in the most central places of every country, to adjust every dispute, and decide every controversy. On that occasion, all the fire in the country was extinguished on the preceding evening, in order to be supplied, the next day, by a portion of the holy fire which was kindled and consecrated by the Druids. Of this, no person who had infringed the peace, or was become obnoxious to any breach of law, or any failure in duty was to have any share, till he had first made all the reparation and submission which the Druids required of him. Whoever did not, with the most implicit obedience, agree to this, had the sentence of excommunication, more dreaded than death, immediately denounced against him. None were allowed to give him house or fire, or shew him the least office of humanity, under the penalty of incurring the same sentence."

"In many parts of Scotland, these Hallow-eve fires continue still to be kindled; and, in some places, should any family, through negligence, allow their fire to go out on that night, or on Whitsuntide, [Gael. Be'il-tia,] they may find a difficulty in getting a supply from their neighbours the next morning." Gaelic Antiquities, Hist. Druids, p. 31-33. V. HALLOW-EEN BLESS.

Similar rites were observed in Ireland. O'Halloran asserts that Samhain was the name given to the moon.

"This planet was undoubtedly worshipped by the name of Samhain; and as the feast of Bel, or the sun, was proclaimed by fires and other public rejoicings on May eve, so was that of Samhain, or the moon, the eve of November." Hist., i. 113.

"It was the custom on the eves of Samhain and Bel, or of November and May, for the priests to light up holy fires through the kingdom; all culinary fires whatever to be then extinguished, nor to be rekindled but by some of these new ones.—In that portion of the imperial domain taken from Munster, he [Tuathal] erected a magnificent temple called Flachta, sacred to the fire of Samhain, and to the Sannothei, or priests of the moon. Here, on every eve of November, were the fires of Samhain lighted up, with great pomp and ceremony, the monarch, the Druids, and the chiefs of the kingdom attending.—It was deemed an act of the highest impiety to kindle the winter fires from any other: and for this favour the head of every house paid a scrabal, or threepence, tax, to the Arch-Druid of Samhain. In like manner, every May eve was the fire of Bel lighted up, in the temple of Uisneach." Ibid., p. 221.

This writer fancies, that the worshippers of the moon "were called by both Greeks and Latins Samnothei, probably from the Irish Samhain-Dia; as being votaries of the goddess Samhain." Ibid., p. 114. Ir. samh is the sun; also, the summer.

SHANNAGH, s. A word used in this form, "It is ill shannagh in you to do" this or that; i.e., It is ill your part, or it is ungrateful in you to do so.

Perhaps from Ir. Gael. sean, prosperity, happiness; q. "it cannot conduce to your happiness;" or allied to seannach, crafty, cunning, as equivalent to the phrase, "It is ill policy." Isl. skan-a signifies emendari, meliorari; q. "It will not make the matter better." Su.-G. skoen is rendered judicium.

[SHANTIE, s. A urinal, Shetl. V. CHANTY.]

[SHANTIL, adj. "A thing is said to be "shantil" when it is amissing, and supposed to be carried off by fairies; perhaps from the word enchanted, Gl. Shetl.]

SHAP, s. A shop, Ettr. For. Teut. schap, promptuarium. V. CHAP.

To SHAPE away, v. a. To drive away.

*Ane cursit fox lay hid in rox;—
Nane might him shape away.*

Spec. Godly Songs, p. 6.

Lord Hailes renders it, without any apparent reason, "cut off." It is certainly allied to Germ. schieb-en, schupf-en, to drive; Teut. schuff-en, id. Kilian.

SHAPINGS, s. pl. The small bits of cloth that are cut off with the scissors in shaping any piece of dress, S. [Syn. collings, colls.]

SHARD, s. A little despicable creature; used as a term of reproach. This term is often applied contemptuously to a child; generally to one that is puny or deformed, Aberd.; q. "a mere fragment."

Either a figurative use of E. shard, A.-S. sceard, a fragment; or allied to Isl. skard-a, minnere; Su.-G. skard, fractura; Isl. skard, laesio; whence lidiskarti, laesio membri; Verel.

To SHARE, v. a. To pour off the lighter parts of a liquid from the heavier, Lanarks., Ettr. For.; the same with Schire, v.

To SHARE, v. n. Applied to liquids, when they separate in a vessel into two or more parts, ib.

SHARINS, s. pl. The useless or less valuable part of liquids, whether poured off or remaining in a vessel, ibid.

[SHARG, adj. Tiny, mean, lean, withered, Perths.]

SHARG, s. 1. A tiny, mischievous creature, Kinross, Perths.

2. Petulant, unnecessary expostulation, ib.

To SHARG, v. a. To tease; applied to language, Shetl.

SHARGAR, SHARGER, s. A lean person, a scrag; sometimes used to denote a weakly child, S., also shargan.

At first I thought but little of the thing;
But mischief's mother's but like midge's wing.
I never dream'd things wad ha gane this length;
But we have e'en seen shargars gather strength,
That seven years have sitten in the flet,
And yet have bangsters on their boddom set.

Ross's Helenore, p. 89.

V. PLAY-FEIR and WARYDRAGEL.

[To SHARGAR, v. a. and n. 1. To stunt in growth; to grow or become stunted, Banffs.]

[SHARGART, adj. Stunted, ibid.]

SHARGIE, adj. Thin, shrivelled, Ayrs.

[SHARGIN, part. adj. Peevish, carping; as, a shargin body, Shetl.]

Ir. Gael. searg, dry, withered; searg-am, to wither, pine away, consume; (hence Ir. searg, "a worthless man or beast;" O'Reilly); searganach, dried up, withered.

[SHARLES, s. Charles, a name, Shetl.]

[SHARL-PIN, s. The pin that connects a hinge of a door, ibid.]

SHARN, SHEARN, SHAIRN, s. The dung of oxen or cows, S. scarn, A. Bor.

They turn'd me out, that's true enough,
To stand at city bar,
That I may clean up ilka sheugh,
Of a' the sharn and glaur.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 30.

Fuff play'd the priming—heels ower ither,
They fell in shairn.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 51.

A.-S. searn, Fris. scharn, Dan. skarn, dung.

[To SHARN, SHARNEY, v. a. To daub with the dung of oxen or cows, S.]

SHARNEY, SHARNY, adj. Bedaubed with cows' dung, S.

"Ye shine like the sunny side of a sharney weght;" i.e., an instrument for winnowing corn; Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 86. This is spoken in ridicule of those who appear fine.

SHARNEY-FAC'D, adj. Having the face befouled with cow-dung.

And there will be *Juden Macclourie—
With flea-lugged sharney-fac'd Laurie, &c.*
Blythesome Bridal, Herd's Coll., ii. 25.

SHARNEY-PEAT, s. A cake consisting of cows' dung mixed with coal-dross, dried in the sun, and used in some places by the poor for fuel, S.

Cows' dung, dried for the same purpose, is called casings, A. Bor. Ray.

SHARNIE, s. A name given to the person who cleans a cow-house, S.

SHARPING-STANE, s. 1. A whetstone, S.

[2. Metaph., any severe lesson by experience is often so called, West of S., Banffs.]

SHARRACHIE, adj. Cold, chill, piercing; a term applied to the weather, S. B.

Sometimes it is pron. shellachie, which is possibly the original word, from the same fountain with chill, written schill by Doug.

SHARROW, adj. 1. Bitter, in relation to the taste; also used in a general sense, Caithn.

2. Keen; as, a sharrow craver, one who acts the part of a dun, ibid.

This, it is probable, is originally the same with Sharrachie. But both words are radically different from Shellachie, although synonymes. Sharrow and Sharrachie may be allied to Su.-G. skare, nix frigore densata, snow so hardened by frost as to bear the footsteps of men and beasts; Isl. skari, id. This properly signifies the crust of any thing; and has been viewed as a term allied to Lat. scara, the crust of a wound; Su.-G. skarra, a wound, a fracture in the skin. But whatever be the origin of the Su.-G. and Isl. terms, although strictly denoting the effect of severe weather, they might naturally be transferred to that state of the atmosphere whence this originates. Ir. and Gael. searbá signifies bitter, sharp, severe.

[To SHARRY, v. n. To quarrel, dispute, Banffs.]

[SHARRY, s. A quarrel, dispute, ibid.]

[SHARRYIN, SHARRIEAN. 1. As an adj., quarrelsome, fault-finding, ibid.

2. As a s., the act of quarrelling, ibid.]

SHATHMONT, s. A measure of six inches in length.

His legs were scarce a shathmont's length,
And thick and thimber was his thighs.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 139.

It is more properly written SCHAFTMON, q. v.

To SHAUCHLE, v. n. To walk with a shuffling or shambling gait, S. V. SHACH.

SHAUGHLIN', part. pr.

"'What' roars Macdonald—'you poor shaughlin in-kneed bit scray of a thing!'" Reg. Dalton, iii. 119.

SHAUL, SHAWL, adj. Shallow, S.

His luggies o' right ancient date,—
He reck'dna meikle on their trim,
Saebiens they warn shaul or slim.

Picken's Poems, ii. 80.

SHAULING, s. Killing salmon in shallow water by means of a leister, S. A. V. LEISTER.

"Shaul water maks mickle din," Prov. V. SCHAL.

SHAUM, s. The leg or limb, Buchan.

An end like this wad be mair pleasin,
And to my wither't shaums mair easin,
Than tytin on frae e'en to morn,
A stranger to baith hay an' corn.

The Caidgers' Mares, Tarras's Poems, p. 63.

—Had wylie Lowrie cleekit aff a lam',
Or craggy heugh had thrown a queack's shaum.

Ibid. p. 117.

Most probably by a slight change from Fr. jambe, the leg or shank; Ital. gamba, id. Ihre expl. Su.-G. skalm, as denoting one leg or limb of any thing that is forked; Eruprie notare videtur crus alterum rei cujusvis bifurcae.

[To SHAUM, v. a. To sit lazily by the fire, toasting one's limbs, Banffs.]

[SHAUMIN', adj. Indolent, lazy, lounging by the fire, ibid.]

[SHAUMIN, SHAUM, s. The act of sitting lazily lounging by the fire, ibid.]

SHAUP, s. 1. The hull, the husk; as, a peashaup, the hull of peas, S.

2. Metaph. for anything empty, weak, or worthless; that is but a mere husk.

Here, Sir, you never fail to please,
Wha can, in phrase adapt with ease,
Draw to the life a' kind of fowks,
Proud shaups, dull coofs, and gabbling gowks.

Ramsay's Works, i. 134.

[3. A fragment, a broken piece, a chip, Banffs.]

Teut. schelp, putamen, Su.-G. Isl. skalp, vagina; Dan. skulpe, "hulls, husks, coats, or shells of pulse," Wolf; from Germ. schel-en, Su.-G. skyl-a, to cover.

[To SHAUP, v. a. To shell from the pod; as in shelling beans or peas, Clydes.]

SHAUPIE, SHAWPIE, adj. Lank, not well filled up; applied to the appearance; q. resembling any empty husk, Loth., Perth., S.O.

"She's a weel fared hisev, maistly as trig's yoursel, madam, when ye was a lass; but your grown portly, an' she, poor thing's a wee shauppy, as we say." The Smugglers, i. 229.

SHAUPIT, part. pa. Furnished with pods; as, weel-shaupit pease, S. O.

[SHAUVE, s. A saw, Banffs. Shav, Aberd.]

[To SHAUVE, v. a. To saw, ibid.]

[SHAUVINS, s. pl. Sawdust; also, chips sawn from planks, ibid.]

SHAVE, SHEEVE, s. 1. A slice; as, a shave of bread, S., shive, E.

Be that time bannocks and a sheave of cheese
Will make a breakfast that a laird might please.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 73.

She begs one sheave of your white bread,
And a cup of your red wine.
Jamieson's Popular Ball., ii. 124.

Thick, nevel't scones, heer-meal, or pease,
To brither down a shave o' cheese,
I'd rather hae—than a' their—teas
That grow abroad.
Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 63.

O.E. "Shyue of brede or other lyke. Lesca. Scinda."
Prompt. Parv.

[2. A part of a pulley; as, a pullev-shave; called also a pulley-sheeve, pulley-shee,
Aberd., Ayrs.]

Belg. schyf, a round slice. This is indeed the precise sense of our term. Sw. en skifva brod, id.
from skifw-a, diffindere, in tenuous laminas secare; Isl.
skjfe, scindo, seco.

To SHAVE, v. a. To sow, Aberd. shaw,
Buchan.

[SHAVE, s. A trick, prank, practical joke,
S.]

SHAYER, s. A humorous fellow, a wag, S.; V. Gl. Shirr.; borrowed from the idea of taking off the beard.

There's him at Agincourt wha shone,
Few better were or braver;
And yet wi' funny, queer Sir John,
He was an unco shaver
For monie a day. Burns, iii. 97.

A low word, borrowed, as would seem, from cant language. "A cunning shaver, a subtle fellow, one who trims close; an acute cheat." Grose's Class. Dict.

SHAVIE, s. A trick, prank; a disappointment.

To PLAY one A SHAVIE. 1. To play one a trick, good or bad, S.

And so to fortune I must leave ye,
I wish she play not you a shavie.
Meston's Poems, p. 129.

The kintra ca'd him dainty Davie,
For mony a prank an' mirthfu' shavie.
Blackw. Mag., Dec., 1822.

2. To disappoint one, S.

To WORK ONE A SHAVIE. The same with last.

—Sic wickedness her armies in,
Sic blackguards in her navy,
An' kirk an' state are sisters twin,
To work the land a shavie,
I dread some day.

Anon.

The origin is probably Dan. skiaer, Isl. skjif-r, oblique, awry, (E. askew); q. to set one off the proper or direct course. V. SKAVIE.

SHAVITER, s. A term expressive of contempt; as, a puir drunken shaviter, Ber-wicks.

SHAVITER-LIKE, adj. Having the appearance of a blackguard, Ettr. For.

SHAVELIN, s. A carpenter's tool, Aberd.
V. CHAVELING.

[SHAVELIS, s. pl. Plunderers. V.
SCHAVELIS.]

SHAW, s. Show, appearance.

It is used as an argument against the importation of "Ingils claith and vtheris Ingils wairis and maircheandice maid of woll," that "the same claith" has "onlie for the maist parte ane outwarde shaw, wantand the substance and strength quhilk oftymes it appeiris to haue." Acts Ja. VI., 1597, Ed. 1814, p. 119. V.
SCHAW, v.

SHAW, s. A wood.

This, which is used as a country word in E., is there limited, according to Phillips, to "a wood that encompasses a close." With us the sense is more general.
V. SCHAW.

SHAWS, pl. The foliage of esculent roots;
as of potatoes, turnips, carrots, &c., S.

It is also used in sing., to denote all the herbage of a single root; as, a carrot-shaw.

"A potatoe shaw was lately dug up, which had 103 attached to it, the least of them of a proper size, and the most part very large, all produced from a single potatoe, set uncut." Edin. Evening Courant, 31 Oct., 1805.

Teut. schawe, umbra.

SHAW, s. A piece of ground which becomes suddenly flat at the bottom of a hill or steep bank, Teviotd. Thus Birken-shaw, a shaw covered with short scroggy birches;
Breckan-shaw, a shaw covered with ferns.

It might seem allied to Isl. skag-a, prominere, skagi, promontorium; as denoting a piece of ground that juts out.

SHAW, interj. A term of incitement addressed to a dog, Galloway. V. SHA.

SHAWL, adj. Shallow. V. SHAUL, and SCHALD.

SHEAD of corn. V. SHED.

SHEAL, SCHELE, SHEIL, SHIELD, SHIEL-
LING, SHEELIN, s. 1. A hut, or residence for those who have the care of sheep; also a hut for fishermen, S.

"On the sides of the hills, too, upon spots where shields have been occasionally erected, to shelter the shepherds in summer and harvest, when feeding their flocks at a distance from their ordinary dwellings, the sward is richly variegated with clover, daisies, and other valuable grasses and wild flowers." P. Durness, Sutherl. Statist. Acc., iii. 377.

"Here we refreshed ourselves with some goats' whey, at a Sheelin, or Bothay, a cottage made of turf, the dairy-house, where the Highland shepherds or graziers live with their herds and flocks, and during the fine season make butter and cheese." Pennant's Tour in S., 1769, p. 122, 123.

"The fishers built another sheal on the said haugh on the north side, and both sheals on the north side still remain: That said sheals are built of feal." State, Leslie of Powis, &c., 1805, p. 143.

Ten miles frae onie town this shealing lies,

An' to see here sic twa is gryte surprise.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 71.

The term had also been used for the huts erected by fishermen on the banks of rivers. Hence we read of "bygging of the schelis on the watter syd," Aberd. Reg., V. 16.

"Biging of ane scheill vpon the watter syd of Doyne [the river Don]." Ibid., Cent. 16.

The fishermen also complain of the "skayth thai sustene throw want of the fysche, becaus" the person referred to "had cassin done the scheill." Ibid.

Sometimes it seems to be used as equivalent to cottage.

—"Quhat skayth scho sustenis throu want of hir scheill, that scho ma ouset the same on thaim that stoppis hir to big it." Ibid., V. 16.

Among the Swiss, shale, pronounced q. shalt, is the term used to denote the temporary huts erected by shepherds in the Alpine regions.

There are terms in L.B. nearly resembling Sheal and Shealing. These are Scalia and Scalinga. The first belongs to the kingdom of Arragon. De Scaliis factis in heremo, sive in monte, si quis signaverit locum, & arando prosecutus fuerit, valeat sibi quantum araverit, &c. Fori Aragon. Lib. 3 ap. Du Cange.

Scalinga occurs in the Monast. Anglic., Tom. ii. 130. Et communem pasturam totius morae, cum liberis hominibus meis, et unam Scalingam thymalem in competenti loco ultra Hertingburn. Ibid.

The sense, however, is evidently different. For both these terms regard ground, and such as, although in (heremo) a desert place, may be ploughed. Scalinga would seem to denote some land used for pasture in winter, preferable to the common moors. It is not improbable, however, that in both instances the terms had been thus obliquely applied in consequence of shealings being places to which men resorted in summer for pasture. Scalia is perhaps a term transmitted from the Goths in Spain.

2. A shed erected for sheltering sheep on the hills during the night; containing also a lodge for the shepherd, S.

3. A summer residence; especially, one erected for those who go to the hills for sport, S.

"It [Durness] surely has been a sheal, or summer dwelling of old, belonging to the bishopric of Caithness." P. Durness, Sutherland. Statist. Acc., iii. 576.

4. Schelis, pl. Wynter schelis, winter quarters; the term being improperly used.

"Agricola—returnit in Brygance, leuand his army in the wynter schelis." Bellend. Cron. B. iv. c. 11. In hibernas dimissus exercitus, Boeth.

5. Metaph. used to denote a nest for a field-mouse.

As I hard say, it was a semple wane
Of fog and fern, full fecklessly was mail,
A silly sheil, under a eard-fast stane.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 146.

This term is not unknown in England. "Sheal, a cottage or shelter: the word is usual in the wastes of Northumberland and Cumberland." Camden's Remains, Surnames, Let. S.

It is undoubtedly of Gothic origin. Isl. sael is used precisely in the first sense given above, also saelo-hus, and sello-bod. The former is thus defined by Verel; Tuguria in sylvia, montibus, aut litoribus, quae aestivo tempore inhabitant, qui pecorum pascendorum curam habent, aut iter per inuia facientes. Suel, domuncula aestiva in montanis; saelu-hus, tuguria viatoribus ad pernctandum exstructa; G. Andr., p. 205.

A.-S. sæld, seld, a mansion, Alem. selüha, a tabernacle, seem to be from the same fountain.

Perhaps it is the same word which appears with the insertion of k; Su.-G. skale, Isl. skali, a cottage, whence skalabu, one who dwells, or has a hut, in the woods. In Iceland, "formerly houses were built in some particular places for the use of travellers, which were called Thiod-bratur-skaala;" Von Troil, p. 57. Isl. skiul is used almost exactly as in sense 2. Latebra, proprie tectum sine parietibus, ad arcendam pluviam a substantibus; gardaskiul, q. a yard skiell; skogaskiul, a wood or schaw-skiell, &c. V. Verel. Ind., p. 229. Ihre informs us, that, in the Salic Law, skaal denotes a building, hastily thrown together, in which the hunters lie in wait. The affinity of this to sense 3 is so plain, as to require no illustration. Hence probably Isl. skall-a, to drive wild beasts into the nets; and skalla-lag, the society of huntsmen. Ihre derives skale, a cottage, from skyl-a, to cover; whence also skiul, tegmen, the same with the Isl. word mentioned above. Sael has been deduced from Moes-G. sæl-jan, to inhabit, whence sælihwos, habitations, mansions.

As Ir. sgalain denotes huts, cottages, (Obrien) Gael., id. (rendered in sing. by Shaw); it seems highly probable that the Celts borrowed the term from the Goths, with whom it appears to have been of far more general use.

It may be conjectured that this word was used by the Picts to denote even their superior sort of buildings, otherwise called burgs or bruchs. For, according to G. Andr., Dan. skale has the sense of conclave, rotunda domus; as distinguished from stue, which he renders, curta domus.

To SHEAL, SHIEL, v. a. To sheal the sheep, to put them under cover, to inclose them in a sheal, S.

I see a bught beyond it on a bog.
Somebody here is shealing with their store,
In summer time, I've heard the like afore.

Ross's Helenore, p. 77.

Skil is used in the same sense, A. Bor. But Grose improperly expl. it, "to sever sheep;" misled by the similarity of the v. to that signifying to separate.

To SHEAL, SHILL, SHOOL, v. a. To take the husks off seeds, S.

"There are—great complaints that the corn is not well shealed." Statist. Acc., xvii. 117. V. SHILLING.

"I shale peason.—I wyll shale peasen whyle thou shalest the beanes." Palsgr. B. iii. F. 348, a.

To Sheal Peas is, I am informed, a phrase common in the midland counties of E.

[SHEALIN, SHILLIN, SHILLING. 1. As a s., the act of shelling seeds, taking off the husks; also, seeds freed from the husk, S. V. SHILLING.

2. As an adj., fit or fitted for husking seeds; connected in any way with the process, or place for carrying it on, as, "a new shealin-machine," "the shilling-hill," S.]

[SHEALIN SEEDS, SHILLIN SEEDS. V. under SHILLING.]

Belg. scheele, the husk; scheel-en, A.-S. sceal-inn, Germ. schal-en, Su.-G. skal-a, to shell, putamen auferre; Germ. geschalete gerste, peeled barley.

The radical v. seems to be Su.-G. skil-ia, A.-S. scyl-an, disjungere, because thus the grain is separated from the husk.

To SHEAR, SCHEIR, v. a. 1. To cut down corn with the sickle, S. A. Bor.

"Weir standand betwixt this realme and England, and the cornis of the bordouris beand schorne and stoukit, and the awneris thair of dar not leid nor put the samin in the barn yaird, for fear of the burning thair of be the enemeis, gif the samin perish and rot for the maist part upon the feildis, and tenentis awneris could not be compellit to pay teind for the samin." A. 1563. Balfour's Pract., p. 146.

O. E. id. "Sheres or repyn. Meto.—Scheryng or repyn of corne. Messura. Messio." Prompt. Parv.

2. To reap, in general; [also, to cut, to prune, S.]

And sen that thou mon scheir as thou hes sawin,
Have all thy hope in God thy Creatour,
And ask him grace, that thou may be his awin.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 258.

"Qubasa sawis littil, sall scheir littil also, and he that sawis plenteously sall lykwaiss scheir largely." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 66, a.

To SHEAR, SHEER, v. n. To divide, to part, to take different directions, Perth.

"There is, on the south, a high ground from east to west, going over the top of Mount Turlam, the height whereof, or, in the language of old papers, the place where wind and water sheers, separates it from the parish of Muthill." Trans. Antiq. Soc. for Scotl., II. 66.

A.-S. scer-an, scir-an, dividere; Teut. schier-en, Sa.-G. skaer-a, partiri.

SHEAR, s. The act or process of shearing or reaping, S.

And ay they tell that "a green shear
Is an ill shake."

The Har'st Rig, st. 6.

The meaning is, that if grain be reaped before it be properly ripened, the loss is greater than that generally sustained by its being shaken.

The master donna langer bear,
To see sae high and rough a shear.

Ibid., st. 72.

A.-S. scer, tonsura.

SHEARER, s. 1. More strictly, one employed in cutting down corn, as distinguished from a bandster, or one who binds the sheaves, S.

Scarse had the hungry gleaner put in binde
The scattered grain the shearer left behinde—

Hudson's Judith, p. 3.

"Male shearers [receive] from 20s to 30s, female ditto from 15s to 20s for the harvest season." P. Maryculture, Aberd. Statist. Acc., vi. 82, N.

2. In a general sense, a reaper, S.

Thus to gae to the shearing, to go to work as a reaper, without any reference to the particular kind of work in which one may be employed, S.

"The reaper or scherer cutteth it doune, the cart or sled drawn by hors or some other beast, draweth it to the barne, or to the barnyard." Reasoning betuix Croersguell and J. Knox, Prol., ii. b.

"The profanatione of the Sunday is greatlie occasioned in the tyme of harvest by the great confluens of pepill—for hyiring [hiring] of scheiroris." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, Vol. V. 202.

A.-S. scer-an, tondere. But our use of the term seems of Scandinavian origin; Su.-G. skaer-a, metere, false separe; skaera saced, to reap, skaera, a sickle, skeord, the harvest, skeordetid, the time of harvest, i.e., S.

the shearing. A reaper in Sw. is skeordeman, i.e., a shearer.

SHEARIN, s. 1. The act of cutting down corn, S.

To-morrow we'll the shearin' try,
'Gain' breakfast-time, if it be dry.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 114.

2. By a common metonymy, harvest in general, S.

SHEAR o' a hill. The ridge or summit, where wind and water are said to shear, Aberd.

SHEAR-SMITH, s. A maker of shears. This is mentioned among the incorporated trades of Edinburgh.

"Approves the haill rights—granted to—smiths, cutlers,—penterers, shear-smiths," &c. Blue Blanket, p. 16.

It appears from their armorial bearings, that their principal work had been to make such shears as are used for sheep. "Shear-smiths. Gu. Wool-shears, impaled Az." Ibid., p. 497. V. SHEERMEN.

SHEAR-KEAVIE, s. That species of crab called Cancer depurator, Linn. receives this name at Newhaven. V. KEAVIE.

SHEARN, s. V. SHARN.

SHEAVE, s. A flat slice, as of bread, S. V. SHAVE.

To SHED, v. a. and n. 1. To divide, to separate, S. V. SCHED.

2. To separate lambs from their dams; a pastoral term, Loth., Roxb.

SHED, s. 1. The interstice between the different parts of the warp in a loom, through which the shuttle passes, S.

"The principal part of the machinery of a loom, vulgarly called the Caam or Hiddle,—makes the shed for transmitting the shuttle with the weft." Adam's Rom. Antiq., p. 523. V. HEDDLES and SCHED.

Su.-G. sked, Isl. skeid, pecten textorius, per quem stamen transit, quique fila discernit, must undoubtedly be viewed as a cognate term; as well as, in the general sense of the S. term, skeide, intervallum.

2. Used, in a general sense, for an interstice of any kind, Mearns.

"Thus, sheel-teeth, and shed of the teeth, denote the interstices between the teeth.

3. A shed of land, a portion of land, as distinguished from that which is adjacent, S.

4. A shed of corn, a piece of ground on which corn grows, as distinguished from the adjacent land on either side, S.

"1670, May 30.—A great storm of thunder and lightning att night; it did scorch and spoile some sheeds of corne at Lawderdail." Lamont's Diary, p. 274.

From A.-S. scad-an, Teut. scheyd-en, separare; scheyding, partitio.

5. Shed of the hair. V. SCHED, SCHED, s.
SHEDDIN', s. The act of separating lambs from the parent ewes, ibid.

—An useless gauffin tike,
 That ne'er cude gie a decent turn
 At sheddin', fauldin', bought, nor burn.
Hogg's Scot. Pastorals, p. 20.

SHEDDER-SALMON. A female salmon;
 the male being denominated a kipper, South of S., Annandale.

"In such a river, the close-time might end sooner;
 but the termination of close-time is not the object, and is indeed very immaterial, if shedder salmon, kipper, and foul fish, are not to be taken at any time."
Fisherman's Lett. to the Proprietors and Occupiers of Salmon Fisheries in Solway, p. 7.

SHEDE, SHEED, s. A slice; sheed, S. B.
 [A sheed of land, a measurement, Orkn.]

Shaftes in shide wode thei shindre in shedes.
Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., ll. 13.
 Asunder I shall kait it
 In sheeds this day.

A. Nicol's Poems, 1739, p. 74.

V. SCHIDE.

To SHEDE, SHEED, v. a. To cut into flat slices, S. B.

[SHEEFFIE-SHAFFIE, s. A frivolous excuse. The words are also used separately,
Banffs. Prob. a vulgar corr. of shuffle.
 Used also as a v., of which the part. pr. is used as a s. and as an adj.]

SHEELING, s. The same with Shilling.

"The Sheeling is the thin substance containing the meal, and which, by the last operation of grinding, is separated into two parts, viz. Meal, and Meal-Seeds."
Abstract, Proof respecting the Mill of Inveramsay, A.
 1814, p. 1.

SHEELIN-HILL, s. The eminence near a mill where the grain is separated by the wind from the husks, S.

[I'll hie me to the sheeling-hill
 And bide among the braes, Callum.
Tannahilt, Ed. 1874, p. 193.]

"By every corn-mill, a knoll-top, on which the kernels were winnowed from the husks, was designed the sheeling-hill." Agr. Surv. Peeb.

SHEEMACH, SHEIMACH, s. [1. A piece of thick matted cloth, or dress; a matted mass of any fibrous substance, Banffs.]

2. "A kind of pack-saddle; same with sunks." Gl. Sibb.

But it seems more strictly defined, "a kind of bass made of straw or sprot-ropes plaited, on which the panniers are hung, which are fastened to a pack-saddle."
Kincardines.

This is nearly allied to Gael. sumag, Su.-G. some, Alem. Germ. saum, a packsaddle. A.-S. seam, sar-cina jumentaria, sem-an, onerare.

3. A thing of no value, something that is worn out, S. B.

This may be only a secondary sense of the preceding word, borrowed from a sheimach when useless.

[SHEEN, s. pl. Shoes, Aberd.]

SHEEN of the Es. The pupil of the eye,
 S. B. sicht, sight, synon. from its brightness.
 V. SCHENE.

Isidorus gives augin schun as signifying the pupil of the eye. Ihre conjectures that Su.-G. oegnasten, id.
 was originally oegnasken, quasi lucidum oculi. In A.-S. it is seon-cagan; but this rather corresponds with our sicht of the ee.

It may, however, be from A.-S. seo, the sight of the eye; accus. seon.

SHEEP-HEAD SWORD. The vulgar designation for a basket-hilted sword, S.

The great lieutenant's warlike suit,—
 Was two large pistols, monstrous boots,
 A sheep-head sword, gray plaid.

Lintoun Green, p. 12.

SHEEP-NET, s. An inclosure composed of nets hung upon stakes, for the purpose of confining sheep, Renfr.

"Mr. John Smith from Roxburghshire, farmer at Millbank, in Erskine parish, has fed annually about 300 or 400 Highland sheep on his turnip fields, by using sheep-nets, for folding." Agr. Surv. Renfr., p. 147.

SHEEP-ROT, s. Butterwort or Yorkshire sanicle, an herb, S. B. Steep-grass, or Yearning-grass, S. A. Pinguicula vulgaris, Linn.

This is named Sheep-root, Roxb., also Clowns. It is said to receive the former name, because, when turned up by the plough, the sheep greedily feed on it.

As in the South of S. it is called Steep-grass, and Yearning-grass, it is probably thus denominated from its being occasionally used in the same manner as it is by the Laplanders and the inhabitants of the northern parts of Sweden, who substitute it for rennet. V.
Lightfoot, i. 76, 77. Linn. Flor. Suec., No. 25. The latter says, that by the English and others it is reckoned noxious to sheep.

SHEEP'S CHEESE, s. The root of Dog-grass, Triticum repens, Linn.; Loth. Roxb.

SHEEP-SHANK, s. "To think one's self nae sheep-shank, to be conceited;" Gl.
Shirr, S.

I doubt na, frein', ye'll think ye're nae sheep-shank,
 Ance ye were streekit o'er frae bank to bank.

Burns, iii. 54.

Most probably in reference to the lankness of the leg-bone of a sheep, as indicative of feebleness.

SHEEP-SILLER, s. A certain allowance to ploughmen, Berwicks.

"They [the hinds] receive a certain stipulated quantity of grain, instead of wages, according to bargain, from 13 to 15 bolls, of six bushels each, and a yearly allowance in money, according to agreement, from 30s. to 40s. each, in name of sheep-siller, being a commutation of an ancient permission of keeping a few sheep on the farm." Agr. Surv. Berw., p. 414.

SHEEP-SILLER, s. Common Mica; q.
 the silver of sheep.

"The light was a sort of twilight or gloaming;—
 and he knew not whence it came, if it was not from the walls and roof, which were rough and arched like a grotto, and composed of a clear and transparent rock, incrustated with sheep-silver and spar, and various bright stones." Northern Antiq., p. 400, 401.

SHEEP'S SOWRUCK, Triticum repens.
V. SOWROCK.

SHEEP-TAID, s. A tick or sheep-louse, Clydes. synon. Ked, Kid.

To SHEER, v. n. To divide, to part. V.
SHEAR, v.

SHEER-FEATHER, s. A thin piece of iron attached to the plough-share, for the purpose of cutting out the furrow, Clydes.,
S. O.

SHEERMEN, s. pl. The name of one of the corporations of Edinburgh.

"The craft of Bonnet-makers of old made a part of the company of Walkers or Sheermen in the city of Edinburgh; and they generally resided in Leith Wynd." Spottiswoode's MS. Law Dict., vo. Bonnet.

"The Bonnet-makers were incorporated—A. 1530—at which time they appear to have been united to the fraternity of Walkers and Sheermen." Maitl. Hist.
Edin., p. 309.

A-S. scear-an, to shear. Old Fraunces gives "Schar- man or schermen;" Tonsor; Tonsarius." Prompt. Parv.
This might have been used in the same sense with our Sheerman. For in Ort. Vocab. Tonsor is rendered "a clypper."

To SHEET, v. a. To shoot, Aberd.; Sheet
styth, shot dead. V. STITH, STYTH.

SHEEVE, s. A slice. V. SHAVE.

[To SHEEVE, v. a. To cut into slices. When followed by doon, it means to cut down the whole piece; when followed by aff, to take off one or more slices, or merely a portion, Banffs.]

[SHEIMACH, s. V. SHEEMACH.]

SHELKY, s. The seal, Shetl. V. SELCHT.

SHELL. You're scarcely out of the shell yet;
a phrase applied to young persons, to those especially who affect something beyond their years, S. It is obviously borrowed from a chick bursting the shell.

To SHELL down, v. a. To expend, applied to money; as, "the gold is shelled down."
V. ASH-KEYS.

Shelling out is used as equivalent; borrowed from the act of taking grain out of the husks.

SHELL-SICKNESS. A disease of sheep,
Shetl.

"The water or shell sickness, is a disease peculiar to those sheep who [r. which] feed on the hilly pastures at a distance from the sea-shore. It is occasioned by a quantity of water, lodged between the skin and the rim of the belly, which, when allowed to remain without application, occasions a great degree of heat, forming a crust over the tallow. They then loath their food, become quite dispirited, and at last fall a sacrifice to the distemper. The best cure for this disease is salt water." App. Agr. Surv. Shetl., p. 47.

"The Shell sickness has been improperly confounded with dropsy. It consists in a thickening and concret-ing of the omentum and larger intestines into small white lumps resembling shells, from which it receives its name. It is common to sheep that feed on wet mossy pastures." Zetl., ii. 223.

SHELLYCOAT, s. 1. The name given to a spirit, supposed to reside in the waters, S.

"Shelly-coat, a spirit, who resides in the waters, and has given his name to many a rock and stone upon the Scottish coast, belongs also to the class of bogles.
When he appeared, he seemed to be decked with marine productions, and in particular with shells, whose clattering announced his approach. From this circumstance he derived his name.—Shellycoat must not be confounded with Kelpy, a water spirit also, but of a much more powerful and malignant nature." Scott's Minstrelsy, I. Intro., civ. cv.

2. A sheriff's messenger, or bum-bailiff, Loth.

I dinna care a single jot,
Tho' summon'd by a shelly-coat;
Sae leally I'll propone defences,
As get you flung for my expences.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 70.

Denominated perhaps from the badges of office on his coat.

SHELM, s. A rascal.

"When the Landgrave called him shelm, Pultroon, Traitor, and deceiver of him whose daughter he had married, he made earnest suit to the Emperour, for the liberty of his godfather, though in vain." Melvil's
Memoirs, p. 12.

Fr. schelm, knave, rascal, varlet. This, according to Cotgr., is from a Germ. word which signifies wicked.

Germ. schelm, originally signifies the carcase of a dog, or any other animal, that is cast out. Hence it has been applied to man; and denotes one whom all execrate as carrion, unworthy of the rites of sepulture.
The reproach, as Wachter thinks, originated from this,
that, as part of the punishment of some crimes, the bodies of the criminals were cast forth, after death, without burial.

Su.-G. skelm, Belg. schelm, E. skellum, Jun. skelm, id.

SHELM, s. The pieces of wood which form the upper frame of a cart, into which the starts or posts in the sides are morticed, Lanarks.

SHELEMENTS, s. pl. V. SHILMONTS.

SHELTIE, s. A horse of the smallest size,
S.

"This country [Shetland] produces little horses commonly called shelties, and they are very sprightly, tho' the least of their kind to be seen anywhere; they are lower in stature than those of Orkney, and it is common for a man of ordinary strength to lift a sheltie from the ground: yet this little creature is able to carry double." Martin's West. Isl., p. 377.

"Their horses are but little, yet strong, and can endure a great deal of fatigue, most of which they have from Zetland, and are call'd Shelties." Wallace's Orkney, p. 38.

"Col, and Joseph, and some others, ran to some little horses, called here shelties, that were running wild on a heath, and caught one of them." Bos- well's Journ., p. 252.

This was in the inland Col, one of the Hebudae.
 "The horses were well known for their small size and hardiness. They are called shelties in Britain."
 P. Unst, Shetl. Acc., v. 188.
Sheltie is prob., a corr. of Shetland, q. a Shetland horse.
 The Isl. and Dan. name of these islands is Hialland.
 V. Heims Kringla, i. 95.

[To SHEND, SHENDE, v. a. To mar, destroy; abash, confound, A.-S. scendan.]

[SHENDSHIP, SHENSHIP, s. Ruin, confusion.]

[SHENT, part. pa. Confounded, ruined, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 122.]

SHEPHERD'S CLUB or CLUBS. The Broad-leaved Mullein, Lanarks.

"Verbascum thapsus, Broad-leaved Mullein, Shepherd's club, Scotis." Ure's Rutherglen, p. 248.

Torn branches from his spreading shrubs,
 O'erlopt with stately Shepherd's Clubs.
 A. Wilson's Poems, 1816, p. 181.

SHEPHROAS, s. pl. [Prob., kids, i.e. KID-GLOVES.]

For she has invented a thousand toys,—
 As scarfs, shephroas, tuffs and rings.
 Watson's Coll., i. 30.

Fr. chevreau, a kid.

SHERARIM, s. A squabble, Mearns. This seems to be of the same family with Shirraglie.

[SHERE-GRASS, s. A kind of sedge with sharp prickly-edged leaves, S.]

SHERIFF GLOVES. A perquisite which, it appears, belongs to the sheriff of the county of Edinburgh at each of two Fairs.

"That they shall appoint—Harrow-Fair and Trinity-Fair, with the hail small customs, especially the sheriff fee, and sheriff gloves." Blue Blanket, p. 134.

Gloves formed a part of the price of investiture, which belonged not only to a lord, but to his representative. V. Du Cange, vo. Chirothecae, col. 577.

[SHERRA, SHIRRA, s. A sheriff, West of S.]

SHERRA-MOOR, s. A designation for the rebellion in Scotland, A. 1715, S. V. SHIRRA-MUIR.

SHETH, SHETHE, s. 1. The stick with which a mower whets his scythe, Annandale.

2. Applied to any object that is coarse and ugly; as, a coarse, ill-looking man is in derision termed "an ugly sheth," ibid.

Isl. skid, lamina lineae. Or shall we view it as the same with A.-S. scæth, a sheath, on the supposition that the scabbard was often employed for giving an edge to the sword which it contained?

SHEUCH, s. A furrow, a ditch. V. SEUCH.

They turn'd me out,—
 That I might clean up ilka sheugh,
 Of a' the sharn and glaur.
 R. Galloway's Poems, p. 30.

A learned friend remarks, that trench is probably the original sense of the word.

To SHEUCH, SHUGH, v. a. [1. To make a ditch or drain; also, to work in a ditch or peat-pit, as to sheugh peats, i.e., to cut them from the sheuch or pit, West of S.]

2. To lay plants together in the earth, when brought from the seedbed, before they are planted out, that they may be kept from withering, S. q. to put them in a sheuch or furrow.

—An' whan we gade to bring him hame,
 He was delving in his kail-yardie;
Sheughing kail and laying leeks,
 Bat the hose, and but the breeks, &c.
 Jacobite Song, Rem. Nithed. Song, p. 144.

To SHEUCH (gutt.), v. a. To distort, Mearns.

This is merely a provincial variety of Shack, v., id. In addition to the northern words there mentioned, it may be observed that C.B. yago, obliquity, yago-i, to go aslant, &c. acknowledge a common origin.

To SHEVEL, v. a. and n. 1. To distort, S. Hence shevelling-gabbit, q. having a distorted mouth.

Ye'll gar me stand! ye shevelling-gabbit brock.
 Ramsay's Poems, ii. 147.

V. SHOWL.

2. To walk in an unsteady and oblique sort of way, S. Shail, E. is nearly allied in sense.

Isl. skag-a, and skiogr-a, gradu ferri obliquo, are mentioned by Seren., as allied to E. skail. V. SHOWL.

SHEWARD, pret. Assured.

"The Lord James his awne servand, whom he had placed therto bye for the nonce, direct from the capten of the same [castell] sheward the douagier had desired the howse, and to perawede was first send the clerk of the register; to whom he answered, as he had receyvit the same by parliament, so woold he not deliver it withoute the same." Lett. J. Wood, Sadler's Papers, i. 619.

SHEWE, pret. of Shiave, Shaw. To sow, Buch.

A' body shewe that had to saw,
 For rigs was braw an' dry.
 Tarras's Poems, p. 70.

A.-S. seow, seminavit.

To SHEYL, SHYLE, v. a. To distort the countenance, Ett. For.; to squint, Gall.; Sheyld, sheytl, distorted; used in a general sense, Dumfr.

This is the same with Shevel, v. But it has been remarked that in the dialect of Dumfries-shire, there is a tendency to drop the letter v between two vowels, and to substitute the Scottish diphthong ey. The same thing appears in Geyl, a gable, &c. Fraunces gives O. E. sheylyn as a v., and schaylynge or scheylynge as a s., although without explanation, undoubtedly in the same sense.

B 2

SHIACKS, s. pl. A light kind of black oats, variegated with grey stripes, having beards like barley, S. B.

"The species of oats used for this last, [fauchs, with a single plowing, or one fur ley] and partly for the out-field, is called small oats, hairy oats, or shiacks. They yield from five pecks to half a boll of meal." P. Keith-Hall, Aberd. Statist. Acc., ii. 533.

Perhaps from Su.-G. skack, variegated, as these oats are striped.

To SHIAUVE, v. a. To sow, Buchan. V. the letter W.

SHIEGLE, v. a. and n. The same with Shoggle, to shake, to be in a joggling state, Gall.

When I grow auld, wi' blinkers hary,
Wi' banes a' shiegling and crazy,
To thee I will wi' joy repair.

Gall. Enycl., p. 353.

[SHIELIN, SHIELING, s. A hut. V. SHEAL.]

SHIEMACH, adj. Malignant, reproachful; as, "a shiemach hearsay," an injurious report, Ayr.

Gael. speamh-aim, to reproach.

• SHIFT, s. A rotation of crops, Stirlings.

"In the carse grounds lying to the west of Stirling, a course, or shift, as it is here called, of six years, is practised." Agr. Surv. Stirl., p. 143.

[To SHIFT, v. n. To plan, manage, provide; as, to shift for one's self, to provide for one's self, to support one's self, to need no assistance, Clydes.]

[SHIFTY, SHIFTIE, adj. Full of resources; used in good and bad senses, S.]

SHILBANDS, s. pl. Cart-tops, Dumfr.; synon. with Shilmonts. Laid-tree, id. Ettr. For.

[SHILCORN, s. A small, black, seed-like body, that grows in the skin, West of S. V. SHILFCORN.]

SHILFA, SHILFAW, s. The chaffinch, a bird.

Her cheek is like the shilfa's breast,
Her neck is like the swan's.

Mary Stewart, Hist. Drama, p. 113.

Wi' the shilfa's sang the green wud rang,
Wi' the laverock's the sky.

Ballad, Edin. Mag. Oct. 1818, p. 328.

V. SHOULFALL.

It is said, that this bird has its name in S. "from its striking the notes called sol-fa in old music books, when chanting its pretty song."

SHILFCORN, SHILCORN, SELKHORN, s. A thing which breeds in the skin, resembling a small maggot, and vulgarly considered as such; proceeding from the induration of sebaceous matter.

As worms and selkhorns, which with speed
Would eat it up.

Colvil's Mock Poem, p. 1. 9.

SHILL, adj. Shrill, S.

The S. and E. words seem to claim different origins; Shill being most clearly allied to Su.-G. skall-a, vociferari, skall-a, Isl. skell-a, tinnire; and Shrill to Su.-G. skraell-a, fragorem edere (Seren.); sonum streperum edere; Ibre, vo. Skraelle.

SHILLACKS, SHILLOCKS, SHEELOCKS, s. pl. The lighter part of oats; the light grain that is blown aside in winnowing, Aberd.

"Even in these Highland districts, the farmer gives his horses the lighter oats, provincially shillocks, and also a part of the chaff, and light grain of his bear." Agr. Surv. Aberd., p. 501.

Tent. schille, schelle, cortex, schill-en, schell-en, decorticare; or from Isl. Su.-G. skil-ia, separare.

SHILLIN, SHILLING, SCHILLING, SHILLEN, s. Grain that has passed through the mill, and been freed from the husk, S.

Ersch Katherine with thy polk, breik and rilling,
Thou and thy quean as greedy gleds ye gang,
With polks to mill, and begs baith meil and schilling.
Dunbar, Evergreen, il. 55.

"Another absurdity is, that shillen, i.e., shealing, or huller corn, is measured by the tacksman of the mill, and is paid, not in shealing, but in meal. There are accordingly great complaints that the corn is not well shealed." P. Rayne, Aberd. Statist. Acc. xv. 117.

i.e., grain that is shelled. V. SHEAL, v. 2. For the same reason it seems to be denominated huller corn, because the hull is removed.

SHILLIN SEEDS. The outermost husk of corn, after being separated from the grain; used for drying the grain in the kiln.

"About one half of the dust, and a small part of the sheeling-seeds, are given to the miller." Proof, Mill of Inverarity, p. 1. V. DUST.

• SHILLY-SHALLY, adj. Weak, delicate, Ettr. For.; evidently transferred from the signification in E. to a dubious and frequently varying state of health.

SHILMONTS, SHELMENTS, s. pl. 1. The frame or rail, generally extending over the wheels, which is laid on a corn-cart, for carrying a load of corn or hay, S.B.; Shelments, Loth.

2. The longitudinal bars of the sides of a muck-bodied or close cart; whether these serve to connect and compact rungs, according to the more ancient construction, or slots, which are now more generally used in the low country, Loth.

The respected friend, to whom I am indebted for the more accurate definition of this term, subjoins the following etymon:

"The origin is probably Fr. echelle. Echelles, the diminutive, is employed to designate a similar frame, on a smaller scale; and is thus defined in the Dictionary of the Academy:

Sorte de petite echelle, que l'on attache à côté du bât d'un cheval, pour porter, pour y accrocher des gerbes, des bottes de foin, de paille, &c.

"The resemblance of shelments to a ladder favours this etymon; and the old Fr. word echellement was perhaps used by the French peasantry in this sense." Eschellement, escalade; Roquefort. V. SHILVINS.

SHILPED, adj. Timid, Gall. "A shilped wretch,—a heart stript of manliness;" Gall. Enc.

SHILPETNESS, s. Faintness, tremor, ibid.

"I kend na now what to think; I had never been at a battle; a kind of shilpetness cam owre me." Gall. Encycl.

SHILPIE, s. "A person trembling always;" ibid.

I give these words distinctly from Shilpie, Shilpit, adj., because, although they might be viewed as the same, only used with considerable obliquity, I hesitate because of their apparent affinity to Isl. skelf-a, terrere, consternere; skialf-a, tremere; skelfing, trepidatio. In like manner one sense of Shilpit in Roxb. is "cold and and comfortless, ungenial;" Gl. Ant.

SHILPIE, SHILPIT, adj. 1. Insipid. Wine is said to be shilpit, when it is weak, and wants the proper taste, S.

"He pronounced the claret shilpit, and demanded brandy with great vociferation." Waverley, i. 151.

"Here, handmaiden—bring me a gill o' sherry."—"Sherry's but shilpit drink, and a gill's a sma' measure for twa gentlemen to crack owre at their first acquaintance." Redgauntlet, iii. 210.

This seems the primary sense, from Su.-G. skael, insipidus, aquosus, Germ. schael, id. Belg. verschaalden wyn, flat wine; from Teut. verschoel-en, vento corrumpti, in vappam verti, saporem et odorem genninum perdere; from schael, patera, q. too long left in the goblet or cup. V. Kilian.

2. "Of a sickly white colour, pale, bleached by sickness," Gl. Sibb. often shilpit-like, S. shilpie-like, S. B.

Warra, insipid, is used in the same metaph. sense.

"The Laird, as he peered at her over his spectacles, pronounced her to be but a shilpit thing, though weel enough considering the neer-do-weels that were aught her." Marriage, ii. 13.

There Care nae shilpit face can shaw;
He's boltit out amang the snaw.

Picken's Poems, l. 70.

3. Ears of corn are said to be shilpie, when not well filled, S. B.

In the latter sense it would seem more nearly allied to Teut. schelp, putamen, S. shaup, having only the appearance of a husk.

SHILVINS, s. pl. Rails that fixed the rungs which formed the body of a cart, constructed after the old fashion, Ang.

This word is also at times applied to the tops of a cart, or the frame used when it is loaded with hay or sheaves.

"Shelvings. Additional tops to the sides of a cart or waggon. North." Gl. Grose. It is the same with SHILMONTS.

Su.-G. skelwing, discrimen, paries intergerinus; Ibre, vo. Skilia, disjungere. He thinks, however, that it should rather be written, skelwaegg.

[SHIM, s. A horse-hoe, Banffs.]

[To SHIM, v. a. To hoe, to work with a horse-hoe, ibid.]

To SHIMMER, v. n. To shine.

The little windowe dim and darke
Was hung with ivy, brere, and yewe;
No shimmering sunn here ever shone;
No halesome breeze here ever blew.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 134.

And whan she cum into the kirk,
She shimmer'd like the sun.

Ibid., p. 190.

V. SKIMMERIN.

SHIMMER, s. One of the cross bars in a kiln, for supporting the ribs on which the grain is laid for being dried; Loth. Simmers, q.v.

"As some servants belonging to Mr. McKenzie, of Kincaig, were engaged in drying a quantity of oats on the kiln, the mid shimmer gave way, when three of them were precipitated into the killogy, and one of them—was unfortunately burnt to death." Edin. Even. Courant, 21st Dec, 1809.

SHIN of a hill. The prominent or ridgy part of the declivity, with a hollow on each side; one of the many allusions, in local designation, to the form of the human body, S.

"Adjoining to the thatched farm-house was one of these old square towers, or peel houses, whose picturesque ruins were then seen ornamenting the course of the river, as they had been placed alternately along the north and south bank, generally from three to six hundred yards from it—sometimes on the shin, and sometimes in the hollow, of a hill." Edin. Mag. Oct. 1817, p. 64.

[* SHINE, s. A display of any kind, good or bad, from a grand assembly to a street-row, West of S.

In a good sense the term is generally applied to a social gathering, especially when of a convivial kind, as a wedding, an assembly, or a merry-making, which is called a grand or great shine; a tea-party or tea-meeting, called a tea-shine, or a cookie-shine. In a bad sense the term is applied to any quarrel, scolding-match, or row, which may be a grand shine, or only a bit shine, according to circumstances. Synon. in bad sense, a rippet.]

[To GET UP A SHINE. To originate, plan, or provide for, an assembly, a merry-making, &c. To Raise a Shine, to cause or to begin a quarrel, &c., ibid.]

SHINGLE, s. Gravel.

"Having rested some time on the sea-shore, he rose and walked along the toilsome shingle," &c. R. Gilhaize, i. 63.

An improper orthography for Chingle, q. v.

SHINICLE, s. A bonfire. V. SHANNACH.

SHINNERS, s. pl. The refuse of a smith's stithy, Dumfr. Danders synon. Corr. from E. Cinders.

SHINNY, s. The game otherwise called Shinty, Aberd., S.-A.

SHINNY-CLUB, s. The bat used for striking with in this game, Roxb.

SHINNOCK, s. The same with Shinty, a game, Loth.

SHINTY, s. 1. A game in which bats, somewhat resembling a golf-club, are used.

"At every fair or meeting of the country people, there were contests at racing, wrestling, putting the stone, &c.; and on holidays all the males of a district, young and old, met to play at football, but oftener at shinty.—Shinty is a game played with sticks, crooked at the end, and balls of wood." P. Moulin, Perth. Statist. Acc., v. 72.

In London this name is called hockey. It seems to be the same which is designed not in Gloucester; the name being borrowed from the ball, which is "made of a knotty piece of wood;" Gl. Grose.

The game is also called Cammon. V. CAMMOCK.

It has been said, that Shinty and Hockey differ in this respect, that in the latter two goals are erected, each being formed by a piece of stick, with both ends stuck in the ground. The players divide into two parties; to each of these the care of one of the goals belongs. The game consists in endeavouring to drive the ball (which is made either of wood or of cork, as an old bung cut round for the purpose, which is called the hockey) through the goal of the opposite party. V. Book of Sports, 1810, p. 11-13.

But in Shinty, there are also two goals, called hails; the object of each party being to drive the ball beyond their own hail: but there is no hole through which it must be driven.

2. The club or stick used in playing, S.

Perhaps from Ir. shon, a club.

3. The ball, or knot of wood is called Shintie, Selkirk., Shinnie, Sutherland. Thus they speak of the club and shinnie.

In the counties bordering on the Highlands, and in Galloway, this game is called Shinny.

"Hugh shared by reflection the triumph of Norman:—For it was himself first put a shinny into the boy's hand." Clan-Albin, i. 120.

SHIOLAG, s. Wild mustard, Caithn.

"The tenants do not wish to sow bear until the 15th of May, because, say they, if we sow it earlier, the crop is choked with shiolog (wild mustard) and other weeds." Agr. Surv. Caithn., p. 93. V. SKELLOCH.

SHIPPER, s. A shipmaster.

"They called all the shippers and mariners of Leith before the council, to see which of them would take in hand to pass upon the said captain." Pitscottie, p. 95. V. SKIPPER, for which this is perhaps an error.

SHIRE, SHYRE, adj. 1. Used in the sense of strait, or S. scrimp; as, shire measure, that sort of measurement which allows not a hair-breadth beyond what mere justice demands, Teviotdale. V. SCHIRE.

2. Thin, S. B. "Thin cloth we call shire;" Gl. Shirr. q. pellucid.

SHIRIE, SHYRIE, adj. Thin, watery, applied to liquids; as, shyrie kail, Fife. The same with Schire, q. v.

SHIREY, adj. "Proud, conceited;" Gl. Picken, S. O. Teut. schier-en, ornare; Su.-G. skyr-a, lucidum reddere.

SHIRLES, s. pl. Turfs for fuel, Aberd. corr. from Scherald, q. v.

To SHIRP away, v. n. To shrink, to shrivel.

"It is sadly demonstrable to this day, that even professors sat-up, shirped away, and cryned into a shadow, as to all fervour of zeal for the cause, under the malign influence of that zeal-quenching Indulgence." M'Ward's Contendings, p. 146.

SHIRPET, part. adj. Thin and tapering towards a point, q. sharped, i.e., sharpened, Ayr.

"His face, which was wont to be the colour of a peony rose, was of a yellow hue,—and his nose was shirpet and sharp, and of an unnatural purple." Ann. of the Par., p. 370.

[SHIRRA, s. A sheriff, West of S., Loth.]

SHIRRAGH, SHIRROCH, adj. Sour, acrid, Clydes.

It seems originally the same with Sharraghie, piercing, q. v. [V. SHARROW.]

[SHIRRAGHIE, SHIRROCHY, adj. Having a sour, haughty, or passionate look, ibid.]

SHIRRAGLIE, s. A contention, a squabble. Loth. [Shirragle, Shirrang, Banffs.; the latter used also as a v.]

Su.-G. skurigla, increpare, to make a noise, to chide. Germ. schurigl-en, molestia afficere, to trouble, to disturb. Moes.-G. ayla, tribulatio. Ihre, without a sufficient reason, prefers Ital. scoreggia, a lash. Wachter derives it from Germ. schur, vexatio, and A.-S. egl-an, vexare, cruciare.

SHIRRA-MUIR, SHERRA-MOOR, s. 1. A designation used to denote the rebellion against government in the year 1715, from the name of the moor between Stirling and Dunblane, where the decisive battle was fought, S.

Ae hairst afore the Sherra-moor
I mind't as weel's yestreen,
I was a gilpey then, I'm sure
I was na past fyfteen.

Burns, Halloween, iii. 132.

2. Transferred to a violent contest of any kind, S.

"To hear him in this language [braid Scotch] telling of one of his Shirramuirs, how laughable it is!" Gall. Enc., p. 419.

3. A severe drubbing with the tongue, ibid.

It is pron. Shirra-meer, Aberd.

Aul' Luckie sittin near the lowe,
A Shirra-meer she gae him
Right derf that night.

Tarras's Poems, p. 69.

[SHIRRANG, s. and v. Squabble. V. SHIRRAGLIE.]

SHIRROCHY (gutt.), adj. Sour, haughty, Clydes. [V. under SHIRRAGH.]

SHIRROT, s. A turf or divot, Banffs. V. SCHERALD.

SHIRROW, s. A species of field mouse, the shrew, Roxb. V. SKROW.

SHIRT, s. "Wild mustard, Brassica napus," Gl. Sibb.

SHIT, s. [A small, puny, mean, or contemptible thing; a mere dropping; applied to persons or animals]; generally denoting one that is puny, S. [Teut. schitte, stercus.]

*Fra the Sisters had seen the shape of that shit,
Little luck be thy lot there where thou lyes.
Polva. and Montgom., Watson's Coll., ii. 16.*

SHIT-FACED, adj. Having a very small face, as a child, Clydes.; q. chit-faced?

SHITTEN, SHITTEN-LIKE, adj. Terms used as expressive of the greatest contempt imaginable, and applied to what is either very insignificant in appearance, or mean and despicable, S.

This exactly corresponds with Dan. skiden, dirty, foul, sluttish, &c. En skiden sag, a foul, base, ungenerous action; Isl. skitinn, sordidus.

SHITTLE, s. "Any thing good for nothing;" Gall. Enc.; [a dimin. expressive of the greatest contempt, from SHIT, q.v.]

To SHITHER, v. n. To shiver, Fife; merely a provincial variety of Chitter, q. v., or a corr. of E. Shudder.

—That Lord wha hears the widow's wail,
The lispin' infant's cry,
The hungry, shitherin' orphan's tale,
That kens na where to lie. MS. Poem.

[SHITTLE, s. V. SHUTTLE.]

SHIMYLICK, s. A gun or fowling-piece, Shetl.

SHOAD, ON-SHOAD, s. A portion of land; the same with Shed.

"An accompt of the Cotter rents, Cotter acres, and of the Outfield Shoads of land of Inverdoval," &c., 1679. Paper in Process, Berry v. Stewart and Dalgleish, A. 1810. The place referred to is in Fife. A. S. scead-an, separate; in pret. sceod.

To SHOCHLE (gutt.), v. a. and n. The same with Shachel. This term is often conjoined with another nearly synon. when applied to an object that is very much distorted; as, "She's baith shochled and sheyld," Dumfr.

SHOCHLES, s. pl. Legs; used contemptuously, Aberd.; perhaps originally applied to limbs that were distorted. V. SHACHLE.

SHOCHLIN', part. adj. 1. Waddling, wriggling, Aberd.; [used also as a s., Clydes.]

An' gutty carlies schochlin' rin.
D. Anderson's Poems, p. 17.

V. SHACH.

2. Used metaph., apparently in the sense of mean, paltry.

Debts I abhor, and plan to be
Frae schochling trade and danger free,
That I may, loos'd frae care and strife,
With calmness view the edge of life.
Bansay's Poems, ii. 441.

V. SHACHLE, v. n.

[SHOCKS, s. pl. Same with CHOUKS, q.v., Shetl.]

[To SHOCK, v. a. and n. To choke, Shetl.]

[SHOCKIT, pret. and part. pa. Choked, ibid.]

[SHOD, s. 1. A shoe; generally a child's shoe, Banffs.]

2. The tag of a lace; shods, iron plates for the soles of shoes, Clydes.]

[To SHOD, v. a. 1. To shoe, to furnish with shoes; as, "I'll shod ye weel," West of S., Banffs.; pret. and part. pa., shoddit, shod, ibid.

2. To fit with a metal tip, ring, or band; as, to shod a lace, an arrow, a staff, a pole, West of S.

3. To fit iron plates on shoes, or to cover the soles with tackets, ibid.]

SHODDIE, s. 1. A little shoe, such as that worn by a child, Dumfr., S.B., Clydes.

This diminutive retains the most ancient form of the Goth. word. Moes.-G. skaud, calceus, whence skaudaraip, a shoe-latchet. Ihre observes that the ancient Goths used sko and skod indiscriminately for a covering, tegmen, vagina, (vo. Sko); as sky-a, and skydd-a were properly one word, both signifying to cover, to protect; whence shoe and shod, denoting what covers the foot.

2. The iron point of a pike-staff, or the pivot of a top, Fife.

[SHODDIT, adj. Furnished with a shod or shods; as, shoddit-shoon, ibid.]

SHODE-SHOOL, s. A wooden shovel, shod with iron, S.B.

—A grape into a grupe to grub,
A shode shoal of a hooin club.
Country Wedding; Watson's Coll., iii. 47.

SHOEING THE AULD MARE. A dangerous sport among children, Gall.

"A beam of wood is slung between two ropes; a person gets on—this, and contrives to steady himself, until he goes through a number of antics; if he can do this, he shoes the auld mare; if he cannot do it, he generally tumbles to the ground, and gets hurt with the fall." Gall. Encycl.

To SHOE THE MOSS. To replace the uppermost and grassy turfs, after peats have been cast, South of S.

"The surface turfs are carefully laid aside, and after the peats are taken out, these turfs are brought back one by one, and placed upon the part that was made bare. This operation is called shoeing the moss, and the grass is scarcely ever stopt from growing." Essays Highl. Soc. iii. 448. V. also Gall. Enc., p. 426.

SHOELIN, part. adj. Distorted, Renfr.

—Mirran, wi' her shoelin' cloots,
Ran yellowchan' and greeting.
A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 202.

V. SHOWL, v.

SHOES, s. pl. The fragments of the stalks of flax, separated by the mill, or by hand-dressing. Shows is perhaps a preferable orthography.

Arthur Young writes shoves; when it would seem that the term is used in E. as a provincial term, for I do not find it in any Dictionary.

"As fast as it [flax] dries, they beat it on stones with a beetle, then they scutch it to separate the heart or the shores from the rest." Tour in Irel., i. 134.

To SHOG, SHUG, SHOOG, v. a. and n. To jog, jolt, shake; to shake from corpulence. V. SCHOG.

[SHOG, SHUG, SHOOG, s. A jog or shake, West of S.]

SHOG-BOG, s. [A spongy bog, which undulates when any person walks over it, S.]

SHOGGIE-SHOU, s. A game. V. SHUGGIE-SHUE.

SHOGGLE, SHOOGLE, SHUGGLE, s. [1. A rapid jog, shake, or jolt, S.]

2. A large piece of ice floating down a river during a fresh, S.

3. A clot of blood, Roxb.

Isl. skoegull, prominentia.

To SHOGLE, SHOOGLE, SHUGGLE, v. a. and n. [To shake or jog rapidly; to tremble, to be unsteady, S.] V. SCHOGGLE.

[SHOGGLY, SHOOGLY, SHUGGLY, adj. Shaking, tremulous; unsteady, loose, West of S.]

SHOGLE, SHOOGLE, s. A rapid shake or jog, S.

[SHOLMARKED, s. A calf with a piece off the ear at the time of birth, Shetl. V. Shål.]

SHOLMIT, adj. Having a white face; applied to an ox or cow, Shetl.

[Isl. hjálmr, Sw. hjälm, a helmet, Isl. hjálmottr naut, a white-faced ox.]

SHOLT, s. A small horse, Orkn., also Shalt; the same with SHELTIE, q. v.

SHONY, s. The name formerly given to a marine deity worshipped in the Western Isles.

"The inhabitants of this island [Lewis] had an ancient custom to sacrifice to a sea-god, called Shony, at Hallowtide, in the manner following. The inhabitants round the island came to the church of St. Mulvay, having each man his provision along with him; every family furnish'd a peck of malt, and this was brew'd into ale. One of their number was pick'd out to wade into the sea up to the middle, and carrying a cup of ale in his hand, standing still in that posture, cry'd out with a loud voice, saying, I give you this cup of ale, hoping that you'll be so kind as to send us plenty of sea-ware for enriching our ground the ensuing year: and threw the cup of ale into the sea. This was performed in the night time. At his return to land, they all went to the church, where there was a candle burning upon the altar; and then standing silent for a little time, one of them gave a signal, at which the candle was put out, and immediately all of them went to the fields, where they fell a drinking their ale, and spent the remainder of the night in dancing and singing, &c. The next morning they all returned home, being well satisfy'd that they had punctually observed this solemn anniversary, which they believ'd to be a powerful means to procure a plentiful crop." Martin's West. Isl., p. 28, 29.

Isl. áion, signifies phenomenon, spectaculum; Gl. Edd. But as Shannach, q. v., is corr. from the Ir. and Gael. name of Hallowmas, at which season this idolatrous act was performed in honour of the Hebridian deity, it is probable that Shony is itself a corr. of Shannach, or rather of Samhuin or Samh'in, in genit. Samhas; and that after the conquest of the western islands by the Norwegians, the inhabitants blended the Scandinavian worship of Nekker, the Neptune of the north, with the Celtic rites of Druidism, but retained the name familiar with their ancestors.

To SHOO, v. a. 1. To produce a swinging motion, [to swing,] Ayr.

"We'll—do nothing frae dawn to dark but shoo one another on a swing between the twa trees on the green." The Entail, i. 228. V. SHUZ, v.

[2. To back water with the oars; also to swing the boat round, Shetl.]

[To SHOO, v. a. To sew, West of S.]

[SHOOIN, SHOOING, s. The act or process of sewing; also, the article sewed or being sewed; as, "She sits at the shooin a' day." "Dinna sit doon on my shooin," Clydes.]

[SHOOSTER, s. One who sews, Shetl.]

SHOOD, s. The distant noise of animals passing; Shetl.

"Teut. schudd-en, quatero; vibrare, tremere.

SHOOGLE, s. A jog, shog, jolt, Ayr. V. SCHOGGLE.

—"Gie that sleepy bodie, Dirdumwhamle, a shoogle out of his dreams." The Entail, iii. 68.

SHOOL, SHOOIE, s. A name given to the Arctic Gull, Shetl.

"Larus Parasiticus (Linn. Syst.) Scoutiallin, Shooi, Arctic Gull." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 281.

This name seems to be borrowed from another species, the Larus Cataractes, which is called Skua, by Brunnick, and in the Feroe Isles Skue. V. Penn. Zool., p. 417. V. SKOOI.

SHOOL, s. A shovel, S.

Whar ance thou stood, clown chieils are diggin',
Wi' pick an' shool.
Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 180.

V. SCHULE.

To SHOOL, v. a. To shovel, S.

This v. is used with different prepositions; as, off, frae, on, out.

To SHOOL off. To shovel off, S.

—"Frae this window we can aw see Benenck wi' his white night-cap on; and he wad hae little to do that wad try to shool it off." Marriage, ii. 30.

To SHOOL frae. To remove from, by the act of shovelling, S.

When frae Benenck they shool the sna',
O'er Glenfern the leaves will fa'.

Marriage, ibid.To SHOOL on. Metaph. to cover, as in a grave, S.

"These twenty years past, our Covenants have gotten deadly wounds, and been laid in the grave by the demented, infatuate, black bargain of Union, Toleration, and Patronages; and the swearing Ministers have heartily and willingly, without either Boots, Thumbikins or Fire-matches, or any hazard to the neck by the bloody rope, shooled on the grave-mounds."
Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 104.

To SHOOL out. To throw out with violence,
S.

"Look you, you base old person, if you do put another jest upon me, I will cleave your skull-piece with this shovels."—"Hout, tout, Maister Dusterdivel,
I hae nae lived as lang in the world neither to be shoold out o't that gate." Antiquary, ii. 259, 260.

[SHOOL-THE-BOARD, s. A game. V. SLIDE-
THRIFT.][To SHOOL, v. a. and n. To distort. V.
SHOWL.]SHOONE, s. pl. Shoes, S. shune, (Gr. v.)

"Ilk soldier to have bands and shoone." Spalding,
ii. 150. V. SCHONE.

SHOOP, pret. of the v. to Shape, S.B.

At last he shoop himsell again to stand,
Wi' help o' a rough kent in till his hand.

Ross's Helenore, p. 44.

A.-S. scœp. Scœp, nihte naman; Fecit nocti nomen;
Caedm. V. SCHAPE.

[SHOOSKIE. 1. As an interj., an exclamation used in driving away cattle; common in the Highlands, and in Shetl.2. As a s., a name for the devil; also used as a term of disrespect, Shetl.

Dan. siasket, nasty, slovenly.]

[SHOOSTER, s. One who sews, ibid. V.
SHOO.] To SHOOT, SUTE, v. a. 1. To make a selection in purchasing cattle or sheep,
S. A. and O.

"Drovers, in purchasing these, will sometimes take the good and leave the bad; this is called shooting;"
Gall. Enc. V. SHOTT, s.

2. To push, push out, S.; as, "I'll shoot him o'er the brae." "Shoot out your tongue."
Pron. q. shute, like Fr. u. Hence,To SHOOT, SHUTE, v. n. 1. To run into seed, S. The v., as used in E. simply signifies to germinate.

"Time of sowing.—From the middle to the end of June; when more early, the turnips are apt to shoot before winter." Agr. Surv. Mid. Loth., p. 110.

2. To push off from the shore in a boat, or to continue the course in casting a net, S. B.

"Depones, That they had the following shots on the Fraserfield side of the river,—the Throat shot opposite the west point of the Allochy inch; and from thence they shot all the way to the sea." State,
Leslie of Powis, 1805, p. 80. V. SHOT, s. 4.

To SHOOT by, v. a. 1. To delay. V. SCHUTE.[2. To put past or over, to substitute; shoot-by is still used as a s. in the same sense, Clydes., Perth. Synon. put-by.]To SHOOT AMANG THE DOWS. V. DOW, s. a dove.OUT-SHOT, s. A projecting building, S.

The origin is found in Sw. skjut-a ut, projicere. V.
OUTSHOT.

[SHOOTHER, s. The shoulder, Clydes., Banffs.][To SHOOTHER, v. n. To walk heavily or with a lumbering step; the shoulders moving with each step, Banffs.]To SHOP, v. n. To knock, to rap at a door.

"The most pairt of the world ar so negligent in this poynt of dutie, that there are verie few that hane their heart free when the lord shoppeth." Bruce's Serm., 1591, B. Fol. 5, a.

Knocketh, Eng. Edit. But the proper word is chap-peth. V. CHAP.

SHORE, SHORD, s. The prop or support used in constructing flakes for inclosing cattle, S. A. [Shord, Shetl.]

Shored is used in a similar sense, A. Bor.

Their Patron so did not them learn,
St. Andrew with his shored cross.

Battle of Flodden, st. 131.

Propped, Note, p. 23.

Tent. schoore, fulcimen; schor-en, schoor-en, fulcres;
Isl. skur, suggrundia. The word is used in E. in the sense of buttress.

To SHORE, v. a. To count, to reckon, S.

Su.-G. skor-a, to mark; Isl. skora mantal, to number the people. The word is derived from skaer-a, to cut, from the ancient custom of making notches on a piece of wood for assisting the memory.

SHORE, s. Debt.

Syne for our shore, he died therefore,
And tholed pain for our mis.

Spec., Godly Songs, p. 23.

In the same sense E. score is used, derived by Skinner from Belg. schore, scisura, ruptura. But V. the v.
For our shore might be rendered, "on our account."

To SHORE, v. a. 1. To threaten. V. SCHOR, v.2. To offer, S. O.

A panegyric rhyme, I ween,
Even as I was he shor'd me.

Burns, iii. 356.

This is merely an oblique sense of the v. as properly signifying, to threaten. The E. v. offer is used in a similar sense, S. He offered to strike me; i.e. he threatened to give me a blow.

3. Used impersonally, denoting that rain is about to fall; as, It's shorin, Dumfr.4. To shore a dog to or till, to hound a dog on cattle or sheep, Dumfr.*5. To shore off or aff, to recall a dog from pursuing cattle or sheep, ibid. To stench, synon.

[SHOREMIL, s. The margin of the sea, the water's edge, Shetl. Isl. soer, the sea, mál, a boundary.]

SHORT, adj. Laconic and acrimonious; as, a short answer, a tart reply; to speak short, to speak tartly, S.

"Gif Isaiah had bene als short and craibed as Jonas, no question he wald haue speared a reason at God." Bruce's Eleven Sermon, D, 6, a.

"He maun be little worth that left you sae."

"He maybe is, young man, and maybe nay."

"Ye're unco short, my lass, to be sae lang;

But we maun ken you better ere ye gang."

Ross's Helenore, p. 57.

It is used by Beaumont and Fletcher.

"I want your absence:

Keep on your way, I care not for your company."

'How! how! You are very short: do you know me, Eros?
And what I have been to you?'"

The False One, p. 1189.

Su.-G. kort, brevis, (whence Isl. skorte, deasum) is used in the same metaph. sense. Kort om hufvudet; Est homo qui facile irascitur; Kort swar, iratum responsum, Ihre, vo. Stackig; and Teut. kort. Kort veur't hooft, iracundus, irritabilis. In like manner we say, Short of the temper, S.

[To SHORT, v. a. To amuse, divert; to cause the time to seem short, Mearns, Clydes.]

To KEEP SHORT BY THE HEAD. To restrict as to expenditure, to give narrow allowance as to money, S.; a metaphor borrowed from the short rein or halter given to an unruly animal.

"If he canna pay the lawing himsel, as I ken he's keepit unco short by the head, I'll find a way to shame it out o' his uncle." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 69.

SHORT-BREAD, SHORTIE, s. A thick cake, baked of fine flour and butter, to which sugar, carraways, and orange-peel are frequently added, S. It seems to have received its name from its being very friable. [Called shortie, in Mearns, and Scotch cake in England.]

"At length the question was carried; and some tolerable sherry, and a piece of very substantial short-bread were produced." Marriage, i. 32.

"Some persons—hold themselves entitled, after two or three times receiving a piece of short-bread, and a glass of elder-flower wine, to ask the lady who has given them such refreshment, in marriage." M. Lyndsay, p. 288.

SHORTCOMING, s. Defect, deficiency; used in a moral sense, as, shortcoming in duty, S.

"It would argue a just sensibleness—of our unworthy shortcomings, in not having more strenuously endeavoured to have prevented this course of defection,—if for this we were mourning, and taking shame to ourselves." M'Ward's Contendings, p. 222.

"Resolved, that the last Thursday of August should be observed by all our societies a day of fasting and mourning for our sad shortcoming in answering our profession under the cross, appearing by many lamentable evidences." Society Contendings, p. 343.

This term has been almost universally used by our ancestors, and is still very common in relation to religion. It is evidently formed from the beautiful and truly philosophical description given of sin by the Apostle Paul, Rom. iii. 23. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." In Isl. skort-r, signifies defectus.

SHORT-GOWN, s. 1. A gown without skirts, reaching only to the middle, worn by female cottagers and servants; sometimes with long, and sometimes with short sleeves, S. Synon. Curtoush.

"Four eln of lenyng claithe price iiij s., twa schort gowns price ij merkis, a new bonnate," &c. Act. Dom. Conc. A. 1492, p. 282.

"Three or four village girls, returning from the well or brook with pitchers and pails upon their heads, formed more pleasing objects, and with their thin short-gowns and single petticoats, bare arms, legs, and feet, uncovered heads and braided hair, somewhat resembled Italian forms of landscape." Waverley, i. 101.

When I was young, I thought me bonny
Wi' snooded hair and cockernony,
A short gown, jerkenet, cottoush,
An' plaiding coat—

Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 102.

V. CURTOUSH.

2. Synon. with E. bed-gown, as worn by females of a higher rank, S.

"Item, ane schort gown of sad cramasay velvott," &c. Inventories. V. SYCHTIS.

SHORT-SYNE, SHORTSYN, adv. Lately, not long ago, S.B.; opposed to Lang syne.

—Shortsyn unto our glen,
Seeking a hership came yon unko' men;
An' our ain lads, albaist I say't my sell,
But guided them right cankarly and snell.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 62.

V. SYNE.

SHORT-TEMPERED, adj. Hasty, irritable, S.

SHORTLIE, adv. Tartly.

"Gif he (Jonah) had vnderstood that the mind of God was not to cast off a sinner, he had not taken it so schortlie. But being ignorant of this, he falleth in this fuming & fretting against God." Bruce's Eleven Sermon. D. 6, b.

Thus it is used by Dunbar—

The guidwyf said richt schortlie, "Ye may trow,
"Heir is na meit that ganeand is for yow."

Mailland Poems, p. 74.

SHORTS, s. pl. 1. The refuse of flax separated by the fine hackle, Aberd. The coarse hackle removes the hards.

2. The refuse of hay, straw, &c., Teviotdale.

Isl. skort-r, defectus, Isl. and Su.-G. skort-a, de-esse, deficere; A.-S. secort, brevis. The adj., as occurring in Su.-G. and Teut., in the form of kort, has the appearance of greater antiquity; especially as obviously the same with Lat. cort-us.

[SHORTSUM, SHORTSOME, adj. Amusing; causing the time to seem short: opposed to langsum, Mearns, Clydes.]

SHOT, s. 1. The act of moving in any game, a move or stroke in play, S.

Su.-G. skott, ictus, from skiut-a, jaculari.

Thus it is applied to Curling.

—Some hoary hero, haply he
Whose sage direction won the doubtful day,
To his attentive juniors tedious talks
Of former times;—of many a bonspeel gain'd,
Against opposing parishes; and shots,
To human likelihood secure, yet storm'd,
With liquor on the table, he pourtrays
The situation of each stone.

Graeme's Poems, Anderson's Poets, xi. 447.

2. [Metaph., the end or aim in moving or acting.]

"The great shot of Cromwell and Vane is to have a liberty of all religions, without any exception. Many a time we are put to great trouble of mind. We must make the best of an ill game we can." Baillie's Lett., ii. 62.

3. [Move, game, play.] To begin new shot, new bod, to begin any business de novo, after one has been engaged in it for a time; to do it over again, S. B.

This is most probably a very ancient phrase [applied to both play and pay.] In one sense it seems allied to Su.-G. Isl. skot, E. shot, or share of money paid for drink, and bod, invitatio convivialis, Verel.; q. "You shall not only have a new feast, but a new invitation."

4. [Speed, success]; as "To come shot, to come speed," Shirr. Gl. S.

Sae up she starts, an' glow'd a' round about, —
An' wi' what pith she had, began to gang,
For fear that she sud be o'er'ta'en or lang,
But little shot she came, an' yet the sweat
Was draping frae her at an unco rate.

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 55.

"To come shot, to come speed, to advance;" Shirr.

Teut. schot, proventus; crescendi ratio; or rather schot, as in the Belg. phrase, Dat schipmarkt schot; That ship goes a great pace; Sewel.

VOL. IV.

5. The wooden spout by which water is carried to a mill, S.; perhaps from Su.-G. skiut-a, jaculare.

6. Shots, the boxes of a mill-wheel, which contain the water by which it is moved, S. B.

7. A kind of window. V. SCHOTT.

8. The sternmost part of a boat, Shetl.

"As the fish are taken off the hook they are gutted, headed, and laid in a part of the boat allotted for them, called the shot, being that division next the storm-sheets." Agr. Surv., Shetland, p. 87.

Norv. skott, skutt, expl. in Dan., den bagest deel af baaden, "the hindmost division of a boat;" Hal-lager; apparently a secondary use of Isl. skott, cauda, q. "the tail of the boat."

9. [A particular or fixed portion.] A spot of ground, a field, a plot of land, Loth.; synonym. sched.

Perhaps as originally signifying a small portion, q. a corner; Su.-G. skoet, angulus.

"The Infield is divided into three shots or parts, much about eighteen acres in all." Scot of Rossie, Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 32.

10. The particular spot where fishermen are wont to take a draught with their nets, S. B.

"Interrogated, If the deepening that branch of the river called the Allochy, at the west end, would hurt the shot at that end of the Allochy, or if the deponent is a judge of fishing?" State, Lealie of Powis, & Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 40.

"Being asked, If their fishing stations or shots have not been frequently repaired on both sides of the river, and at different times ever since he was a fisher? depones, That they have: That by the reparation made by Dr. Gregory's dike,—the bed of the river to the sea has been deepened, and the navigation of it ameliorated." Ibid., p. 96.

11. The act of drawing a net, or the sweep of the net drawn at the Leaw, S. B.

"Depones, That the fishing of Nether Don could not be carried on without sights from the high banks, as she is not a good banging water, by which he means taking chance shots, without seeing the run of the fish." Ibid., p. 58.

12. The draught of fishes made by a net, S.

"Herring Fishery. The boats in the Frith had an excellent shot on Monday, some of them coming in with about ten cranes each, or about 10,000 herrings." Caled. Merc., Jan. 22, 1825.

Sw. skottnaet, casting-net; Wideg.

Teut. schote, jaculatio, q. the act of shooting off with the boat from the bank; Belg. Netten schieten, to cast nets, Sw. skiuta ut ifraan landet, to put off from the shore.

13. Musketry; [as opposed to pikemen.]

"The streattis of Coppin Heavin, throw which his royal highnes sould pas, wer sett with certane ensignes and burgeris both of shot and pick." Pitscottie's Cron., p. 611; i.e., burgers armed some with muskets and others with pikes.

14. A name applied to young swine. The male and female are generally called shots when about three months old, Teviotd.

C 2

Applied also to an ill-grown ewe, and to the sheep or lambs which are rejected by a purchaser, when he buys with the right of selection; Perth.

"A few of the worst ewes, called shots, are likewise sold every year about Martinmas." P. Strathblane, Stirl. Statist. Acc., xviii. 569.

[In the district of Craven, Shotts is used in the same sense. V. Halliwell's Dict.]

Sw. utskjut-a signifies to reject; whence utskott, what is rejected, refuse, q. shot out, S. In Teut. the term is used, as in S., without the preposition; schot, ejectionem, id quod ejicitur; Kilian.

SHOT-ABOUT, s. 1. [One move or play each]; an alternate operation; as, "Let's tak shot-about," S.

2. [One thread of each colour or kind of yarn.] "Striped of various colours," Sibb. Gl.

From the act of shooting or throwing shuttles alternately, containing different threads; the name shuttle being itself from the same origin.

Teut. schiet-spoele, radius textorius, from schiet-en, joculari; Isl. skutul, Su.-G. skyttel, from skjuta, id. trudere, pellere.

[SHOT-A-DEAD, s. Death by being shot by the fairies, Banffs. V. ELFSHOT.]

SHOT, part. pa. Elfshot, q. v.

SHOT-BLED, s. The blade of corn from which the ear afterwards issues, S. shot-blade.

"The sunne—maketh—the cornes to come vp at the first with small green points, and after that to shoote vp to the shot bled, and after that to come to the seeds," &c. Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 726.

SHOT-HEUCH (gutt.), s. A steep bank of which the sward or surface has fallen down through the undermining of a stream, or by the action of water from above, S. In this sense the heuch is said to shoot. Synon. Scar, Scaur.

Su.-G. skjut-a, neutraliter usurpatum notat id, quod cum impetu prorumpit, quod loco motum est, et prominet. Biargit skutti, montis vertex prominuit. Isl. skate, Rupes prominens; Ihre. Prominens aliquid, et nutans sive terrae sive rupis; G. Andr., p. 216.

SHOT-ON. An expression equivalent to E. Shot off.

O gin I were fairly shot on her, &c.

Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 88.

Either synon. with shot, or scot-free; or as alluding to an arrow that is let off from a bow.

SHOT-STAR, s. 1. That meteoric substance often seen to shoot through the atmosphere, S.

Sw. stjern-skott, id. Teut. sterren-schot, lampas aeris, fax igneus quae in aere nascitur.

The frequent appearance of shot-stars is viewed by the peasantry in Teviotdale as foretoking lightning, thunder, and tempestuous weather.

2. A gelatinous plant (Tremella nostoc, Linn.) found in pastures, &c., after rain; vulgarly called, and believed to be, a shot or fallen star, S. V. FALLEN STARS.] Shot-stern, Ettr. For.

[SHOT-TO. 1. Shut, closed; as, "He shot to the door," West of S.

2. Cast upon; as in the fishing term, shot to the line, cast upon the line, Banffs.]

SHOT-WINDOW, s. 1. A projected window, S.

2. A window, sometimes without glass, and generally in stairs, which was hinged and opened outwards, S.]

"Go to the shot-window instantly, and see how many there are of them." The Pirate, i. 98. V. SCHOT, SCHOTE, &c.

[This form of window may still be seen in the Highlands, and in many of the old houses both in town and country. It is referred to by the late Robert Chambers, in his collection of Scottish Ballads.]

[TO SHOT, v. a. To cast nets or lines in fishing, Banffs. E. shoot. V. SCHOT.]

SHOTTLE, adj. Short and thick, squat, S. B.

SHOTTLE, s. A small drawer. V. SHUTTLE.

SHOULD, adj. Not deep, shallow, Orkn.; merely a variety of S. SCHALD, q. v.

SHOUGHIE, adj. A term applied to a short bandy-legged person, Perth., Kinross. V. SHACH, v.

SHOULDER. To rub shoulders, or shouthers, with one, to come so near as to touch another in passing, S.

A thief is said to rub shoulders with the gallows, when he narrowly escapes being hanged, S.

A bachelor is often advised to rub shoulders with a bridegroom, that it may produce an inclination for matrimony. In the same manner, an unmarried female jocularly says to a bride, "I must rub shoulders with you, it may help me to a husband," S.

SHOULDER of a hill. The declination or slope of a hill on the right or left hand, as the right, or left shoulder, S.

"Jasper was coming—over the shoulder of the Hermon-Law, when—he espied something in the shape of a horrible serpent—stealing along the bent after him." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 66.

"Millar, to keep as clear as possible of the haunts of men, on his return, brought his drove over the shoulder of Wallace's hill." Edin. Mag. Oct. 1817, p. 64.

SHOULFALL, s. The chaffinch; more commonly shilfaw, S. Fringilla coelebs, Linn.

"Fringilla, nostratibus Snowfeck et Shoulfall," Sibb. Scot., p. 18.

But our learned naturalist is undoubtedly mistaken in making this the same bird with the snowflake or snow hunting.

SHOUPILTIN, s. A Triton, Shetl.

"The new comers were—designed to represent the Tritons and Mermaids;—the former called by Zetlanders of that time Shoupiltins." The Pirate, ii. 41.

"Sir R. Sibbald says that the Shetlanders 'sometimes catch with their nets and hooks Tritons, they call them Shoupiltins.' This account does not agree with the superstition of the present day. There is only one shoupiltin or shoupiltie, whose character is that of Nickur, the demoniacal Neptune of the North of Europe." Hibbert's Shetl., p. 566. V. also p. 526.

Show, the first syllable, seems evidently corr. from Su.-G., Isl. sio, mare. Piltin may be from Norv. pilt, Isl. pilt-r, puer, or piltung-r, puellus; q. a sea boy, or a little man of the sea.

* To SHOUT, v. n. To be in the act of parturition; pron. like E. shoot; Upp. Lanarks., Roxb.

SHOUTING, s. Labour in childbirth, Upp. Lanarks., Roxb., Dumfr.

"Schouting, (Crying), inlying, child-bearing;" Gl. Sibb.

Were ye at Becka's shoutin', Sucky,
The tother night!—

Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 82.

This, according to some, does not, like the S. term Crying, refer to the noise made in consequence of suffering; but seems to express the same idea with Su.-G. skiut-a, protrudere.

SHOUTHER, s. Shoulder. To show the cauld shouter, to appear cold and reserved. V. CAULD SHOUTHER.

SHOVEL-GROAT, SHOOL-THE-BOARD, s. A game, S. V. SLIDE-THRIFT.

To SHOWD, v. n. and a. 1. To swing (on a rope.) S.B. Ir. and Gael. siud-am, to swing.

2. To waddle in going, S.B. V. SCHOWD.

SHOWD, s. 1. A swing, or the act of swinging, S.B.

2. A swinging-rope, ibid. Ir. Gael. siudadh, id.

SHOWDING-TOW, s. The same rope, Moray.

SHOWD, s. A rocking or jogging motion; applied sometimes to the motion of a ship, much tossed by the waves, S.B.

* SHOWERS, s. pl. 1. Throes, agonies, S.

"It cost Christ and all his followers sharp showers, and hot sweats, ere they won to the top of the mountain." Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 131. V. SCHOURIS.

2. Specifically, the pangs of child-birth.

"As the woman has a sharp dolour, which if it lasted, were intolerable: if the Lord gaue not leysure to draw their breath, betweene showre and showre (as they call it) it were intolerable. So the paines of hell are exceeding sharp and vntolerable." Rollock on Thea., i. p. 238.

SHOWERICKIE, s. A gentle shower, Kinross; a double dimin. from the E. word.

To SHOWL, v. a. To showl one's mouth, to distort the face, to make wry mouths, S. B. Shevel, S. O., id.

This is evidently of the same family with cheval used as an adj. by Dunbar, cheval mouth.

Su.-G. skaalg, obliquus; Munder skaelger, a showl mouth; Germ. scheel, askew, askint. The v. Skellie, to squint, q. v., is radically the same.

We may here refer to O. E. "schayler, that gothe a wrie with his fete, [Fr.] boyteux;" Palsgr. B. iii. F. 61, a. Also the v. "I shayle as a man or horse dothe that gothe croked with his legges! Je vas eschaya. It is to late to beate him for it now, he shal shayle as long as he lyueth." F. 348, a. V. SHEYL.

SHOWLIE, adj. Deformed by being slender and crooked, Clydes.

SHOWS, s. pl. The refuse of hay, S. B. V. SHOES.

[SHRAF, pret. Used reflect, shrived themselves, Barbour, xi. 377. Skeat's Ed.]

SHRIEGH, s. "Shriek;" Gl. Antiq., Roxb.

SHRIG, s. A term used in H. Blyd's Contract, a chap book which contains a number of antiquated words.

"Sen' in silder for tows to the baillies o' Dundee, and shout them in beneath the foundation, an' cut trees to let it o'er the shrig, we'll carry it up in a forenoon, an' make it twa couples higher, and strike through a through-art, an' it were but to see a seek [sick?] beast." P. 4.

[SHU, pron. She, Shetl.]

To SHUCK, v. a. To throw out of the hand, Orkn., Shetl.

This is obviously the same with Chuck, S. to throw a thing smartly out of one's hand. Perhaps the origin is Dan. skick-e, to send, q. to emit from the hand. To this source Ihre traces skaeckta, sagitta.

SHUCKEN, s. Mill-dues. V. SUCKEN.

SHUD, s. The coagulation of any liquid body, Ettr. For.

SHUD, SHUDE, s. Shud of ice, a large body of ice, Ettr. For. Shudes of ice, broken pieces of ice, especially in a floating state, Lanarks. Synon. Buird, ibid.

This is probably a peculiar use of the preceding word. If not, it perhaps denotes "what is separated," from A.-S. seced, the pret. of seced-an, separare.

To SHUE, v. a. To scare or fright away fowls, S. Germ. scheuch-en, id.

Germ. scheuch-en, id. "Shu, a term to frighten away poultry;" Lancashire, T. Bobbins. Fr. chou, "a voice wherewith we drive away pulleine;" Cotgr. In Galloway it is pronounced tshue, and often applied to dogs.

To SHUE, v. n. [To swing, as on a gate or a rope; to produce a swinging motion]; also, to play at see-saw, S.

SHUE, s. [A swing; a rope for swinging; also, see-saw.] The last is an amusement much used by children. A deal or plank being laid horizontally at some distance from the ground, and supported in the middle, one sits at each end; and this being set in motion, the one rises while the other sinks, S. In E. this is called Tetter-totter. V. Strutt's Sports, p. 227.

SHUGGIE-SHUE, s. A swing, S., or, as it is called in E., meritot, from shog and shue, q. v.

Brand, referring to Gay, mentions this word as common, A. Bor.

"Thus also of the Meritot, vulgo apud puerulos nostrates, Shuggy-Shew; in the South, a swing:"

On two near elms the slacken'd cord I hung,
Now high, now low, my Blowzalinda swung."

Popular Antiq., App., p. 406.

This is mentioned as one of the sports of Gargantua.

"There he played—at swaggie, waggie, or shog-pieshou." Urquhart's Rabelais, p. 96.

Mactaggart, describing this game as played in Galloway, says: "They recite this to the swings—

Shuggie, Shue, Druggie Draw,
Hand the grup, ye canna fa';
Hand the grup, or down ye come,
And danceth on your braid bum."

Gall. Encycl., p. 426.

SHUE-GLED-WYLIE. A game in which the strongest acts as the gled or kite, and the next in strength as the mother of a brood of birds; for those under her protection, perhaps to the number of a dozen, keep all in a string behind her, each holding by the tail of another. The gled still tries to catch the last of them; while the mother cries Shue, shue, spreading out her arms to ward him off. If he catch all the birds, he gains the game, Fife. In Teviotdale, Shoo-gled's-wylie. V. SHUE, v.

[SHUG, s. Mist, fog, Shetl.]

[SHUGGIE, adj. Misty, foggy, ibid.]

[SHUG, s. A call used to entice a horse to come to hand, ibid.]

SHUGBOG, s. A bog that shakes under one's feet, Loth.; evidently from S. Shog, to jog or shake. V. SCHOG.

To SHUGGIE, v. n. To move from one side to another; generally applied to what is in a pendent state, Ettr. For. V. SCHOG, v.

To SHUGGLE, v. n. To shuffle in walking, Lanarks. V. SHOGGLE, under SCHOG, v.

SHUGGLE, s. A shog. V. SHOGGLE, s.

SHUGHT, part. pa. "Sunk, covered," Gl.

Ajax bang'd up, whase targe was shught
In seven fald o' hide.

An ingenious and learned friend suggests that this must be the participle of the v. to Sheuch, Shugh, to earth up plants, q. v. Thus, the idea is, that the target of Ajax was so covered with seven folds of skin, that it might be said to be furrowed, or as it were entrenched in them. [V. SHEUCH.]

Sa. G. sto, tegmen, sky-a, tegere; skugga, umbra, skyyg-a, obumbrare; Isl. skyggd, tegmen, defensio.

SHUIL, s. A shovel. V. SCHUIL.

[SHÛL, s. A particular mark cut on the ear of an animal, a slit separating the ear into two lobes, Shetl.]

[SHULD, adj. Having the ear marked with a shul, ibid. Dan. skilt, separated, divided.]

SHULL, s. A shoal, Buchan.

Spottie, wi' his wonted fury,
Drew his spauls up for the chase;
An', in desperation's hurry,
Plampit through a shull o' ice.

Tarras's Poems, p. 56.

SHULLIE, s. A small shoal, a diminutive from Shull, ibid.

—Skippin lightly on ilk shullie,
Wyte he hid na scar nir lame. Ibid.

To SHULOCK, v. a. To sweep the stakes in a game, Roxb.; most probably from S. Shool, Schule, to shovel.

SHULOCKER, s. One who sweeps the stakes, ibid.

[SHUN, s. A shun of water, a temporary pool of water, a pit with water in it, Shetl.]

SHUNDBILL, s. "The decret past by the Foud;" MS. Explic. of Norish words.

The first part of the word is merely a variety, in pronunciation, of SHYND or SOIND BILL, q. v.

SHUNNERS, s. pl. Cinders, Gall.; [shinners, Clydes.]

The verra ploughmen had to yield,
Wi' hides as black as shunners.

Gall. Encycl., p. 268.

SHURE, pret. Did shear; applied to the cutting down of grain, &c., S.

In summer I mawed my meadows,
In harvest I shure my corn.

Herd's Coll., ii. 224.

SHURF, s. A term expressive of great contempt for a puny insignificant person, a dwarf, Roxb.; synon. Baggit.

"When Andrew Pistolfoot used to come stamplin in to court me i' the dark I wad hae cried,—'Get away wi' ye, ye bowled-like shurf! whar are ye comin pechin an' fuifin to me?'" Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 226.

A.-S. scorrf, scabies; scarf, fragmen; Su.-G. skraef-wa, Isl. skrae, homo degener et nihili; Su.-G. skrof, skeleton. Whether the term be allied to any of these, must be left as a matter of uncertainty.

[SHURG, s. Wet gravelly subsoil, Shetl.]

[SHURGIE, adj. Thinly covered with shingle, ibid.]

SHURLIN, s. A sheep newly shorn, Teviotd.

SHURLIN-SKIN, s. The skin of a sheep of any age or sex, taken off before the wool has grown again after it has been shorn, ibid. V. SCHURLING.

[SHUSIE, s. Vulgar form, also dimin., of the name Susan, S.]

[SHUT, s. The act of throwing out the sinker and hooks in fishing, Shetl. Su.-G. skiuta, Dan. skyde, to shoot, project.]

To SHUTE A-DEAD. To die; a phrase used concerning cattle. When they are very bad in any disease, it is said they are like to shute a-dead, S. B.

Perhaps in reference to animals pushing out their limbs at full length, when dying.

SHUTTLE, SHOTTLE, s. 1. A small drawer, S.

At Edinburgh we sall ha'e a bottle
Of reaming claret,
Gin that my half-pay siller shottle
Can safely spare it.
Hamilton, Ramsay's Poems, ii. 823.

[2. A compartment in a press, Shetl.; generally used in the pl. shuttles.]

3. A till in a shop, a money-box, S.

4. A kind of box in the upper part of a chest, extending across; used for keeping money; S. When the lid of the shuttle is opened, it holds up that of the kist.

5. A hollow in the stock of a spinning-wheel, in which the first filled pirn or bobbin is kept, till the other be also ready for being reeled with it, S.

A.-S. scitole is rendered osserana, q. shutting up, from scitt-an, osserare. [The term evidently implies that which is shut up, enclosed, or concealed.]

But the proper etymon of this term is said to be Fr. chatouille, which has a similar signification. I have not, however, met with it. Ital. scatola, and L.B. scatula, signify a box.

SHUTTLE o' Ice. "The Scotch Glacier."

"School-boys alide in rows down these shuttles, reminding travellers of the Alpine hunters, descending with their goats to the valley of Chaumonie;" Gall. Encycl.

Formed most probably from the v. to Schute, to dart forth, to move with velocity, Su.-G. skiut-a.

To SHY, SHY aff, v. n. Applied to a horse when it does not properly start, but moves to a side from an object at which it is alarmed, S.

Su.-G. sky, Alem. ski-en, vitare, subterfugere, whence E. sky, adj.

To SHYLE, v. a. and n. To make wry faces; to squint. V. SHEYL.

"Skyling, not looking directly at an object, but out at a side;" Gall. Enc. V. SKELLIE.

SHYND, SOIND, s. A court of law, Shetl.

SHYND or SOIND BILL. A deed executed in a court, ibid.

"The earliest written documents that are to be found on lands in Zetland, are those established by what is called a Shynd or Soind Bill; Shynd implying a court, and Bill a general name for any deed or writing done in court." Edmonston's Zetl., i. 129, 130. V. also Hibbert's Shetl. Isl., p. 302.

[Prob. from Sw. sond, a probe, sondera, to probe, test, prove; Dan. sonde, a probe, sondere, to probe, &c. Hence, the Shynd or Soind Court, is the Court of Probate, a rendering which fully explains the terms, and makes the extract, in which they occur, quite clear. Dr. Jamieson's note on this term, though very learned, explained nothing, and has been deleted.]

SIB, SIBB, adj. 1. Related by blood, akin, S.; sib'd, id. [sib men, kinsmen.]

"Ane bastard, quhais father is incertaine, be the law is vnderstand, be reason of bluid to be sib to na man, and nane to him." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Bastardas.

We're double sib unto the gods;
Fat needs him prattle mair?
Yet it's na for my gentle blude
That I do seek the gear.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 16.

This word occurs in P. Ploughman, but by Warton is erroneously expl. mother.

He hath wedded a wyfe, within these syx moneths,
Is sib to the seven artes, Scripture is hyr name.

Fol. 47, b.

And but ye be sibbe to some of these sisters seuen,
It is ful hard bi my head, quod Piers, for any of you al,
To get in gong at any gate there, but grace be the more.

Ibid., Fol. 30, b.

Such was the general influence of the Pharisaical system of later ages, in making void the law, that even this reforming Poet swears by his head.

2. Bound by the ties of affection, friendly, intimate, S.; [synon., pack, thick.]

3. Possessing similar qualities, like; used metaphor., S.

I'm but a ragget cout mysel',
Owre sib to you.

Epistle from a Taylor to Burns.

4. Similar in state or circumstances.

"You are o'er hot and o'er full, sib [sib] to few of the laird's tenants." S. Prov. Kelly, p. 363.

5. Having a right or title to; used in a legal sense.

"It is something to be sib [r. sib] to a good estate;" S. Prov., "because at the long run it may fall to us." Kelly, p. 197.

"Some argued—that creditors seemed to be much sibber to these annual-rents than the factors." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iv. 503.

This use of the word is evidently borrowed from the propinquity, arising from natural relation, originating a priority of claim to affection, duty, &c. The creditor is viewed as having a nearer connexion with the debtor than a mere factor on his estate.

6. O'er sib, too intimate; applied to unlawful connexion between two individuals of different sexes, ibid.

7. "To Mak Sib, to make free;" Gl. Shirr.

Prob., a cant local phrase, Aberd.; denoting either the actual donation of the liberty of the city, or referring to some ludicrous mode of pretending to confer it, in many places called brothering, or "giving the freedom of the town." This has been often done, by laying the person thus initiated on the braid o' his back in the gutter.

A.-S. sib-lufa, amor, benevolentia, amicitia. Ibre has observed that, in the Gothic languages, this term has primarily respected peace, amity. Thus the primary and more general sense of A.-S. sib, sibb, is pax. Hence it has been transferred to adoption; and, by another step, to consanguinity. Sibb-ian occurs as a v., pacificare, "to make peace or pacify;" Somner. In Moes.-G., in which it appears in its most ancient form, ga-sib-jon, signifies reconciliare; un-sibja, improbus, q. a troubler of the public peace. Alem. sibba also signifies pax; In erdu si sibba, "On earth let there be peace."

Sibbe, id. Chaucer. Litel sibbe, distantly related; Nigh sibbe, nearly related, Tale Melib. p. 280. Tyr-whitt's Edit. R. Glouc. writes ysyb.

Alle that were ogt ysyb Edmond the kyng,
Other in alyance of eny loue, to dethe he let bringe.
P. 315.

In a later MS. it is changed to sibbe.

A.-S. sib, consanguineus; Neh sib, proxime cognatus, Leg. Eccles. Canut. 7. Su.-G. si, cognatus; Teut. sibbe, affinitas.

[SIBLIKE, adj. and adv. Friendly, friendlike; as, "For a' that, we were aye siblike," Clydes.]

SIBMAN, s. A relation, a kinsman.

Se maid he nobill chewisance.
For his sibman wonnyt tharby,
That helpyt him full wilfully.
Barbour, iii. 403, MS.

—He gat speryng that a man
Off Carrik, that was aley and wycht,
And a man als off mekill mycht,
As off the men off that cuntre
Wes to the King Robert maist priue;
As he that wes his sibman ner,
And quhen he wald, for owtyen danger,
Mycht to the Kingis presence ga.
Ibid., v. 495, MS.

SIBNES, SIBNESS, s. 1. Propinquity of blood, S.

"The like is to be said, gif she be separate fra him, for parentage, and sibnes of blude (within degrees defended and forbiddin)." Reg. Maj. B. ii. c. 16 § 74.

2. Relation; used in a metaph. sense, S.

"A man sometimes will see ugly sights of sin in this case, and is sharp-sighted to reckon a sibness to every sin." Guthrie's Trial, p. 86.

SIBBENS, s. A disease of the human body. V. SIVVENS.

SIC, SICK, SIK, adj. Such, S. A. Bor. sike, id.

The flour skonnys war set in by and by,
With vthir meissia sic as was reidy.

Doug. Virgil, 208, 42.

V. SWILK.

Sike is used by Ben Jonson, as a provincial term of the North country, in his Sad Shepherd.

And here he comes, new claited, like a prince
Of swine'ards! sike he seems!

SICCAN, SICKIN, SIKKIN, adj. Such, such like, such kind of, S.

"And so, as morning, siccan a fright as I got! Twa unlucky red-coats were up for black-fishing, or some siccan ploy—for the neb o' them's never out of mischief,—and they just got a gliak o' his honour as he gaed into the wood, and banged aff a gun at him." Waverley, iii. 238.

"I scared them wi' our wild tenantry, and the Mac-Ivors—till they durst na on any errand whatsoever gang owre the door-stane after gloaming, for fear John Heather-blutter, or some siccan dare-the-deil should tak a bawf at them." Ibid. p. 355.

The wemen als, that on hir rydis,
Thay man be buskit up lyk brydis,
Thair heidis heisit with sickin saillis.

Maitland Poems, p. 185.

Thus as he musis, stude in sickin dout,
Ane of the eldest heris—
Sic answere galf, and plane declaris it.

Doug. Virgil, 151, 22.

From sic, such, and kind, or A.-S. cynn. [Dan. sikken, such one, such an one.]

SICLIKE, SICKLIKE, adj. Of the same kind, similar, S.

SICLIKE, SICKLIKE, adv. In the same manner, similarly.

"Sicklike, his instructions carried him to the removal of the high commission," &c. Baillie's Lett., i. 92.

SIC and SICLIKE. A phrase very commonly used to express strict resemblance; but generally in a bad sense, S.

If a person has been speaking unfavourably of one of a family, profession, &c., and if the question be asked, "what sort of fouk are the rest of them?" The answer will probably be: "They're just sic and sicklike; there's no ane o' them to mend anither."

This nearly resembles the A.-S. idiom; Swilce—swilce; talis—qualis. Swilcum and swilcum, ex his et talibus. The only difference is that we add the particle noting resemblance to the last word.

SICWYSE, adv. On such wise.

And as thay flokkit about Enee als tyte,
Sicwyse untill thaym carpit Sibylla.

Doug. Virgil, 188, 30.

[To SICH, v. n. To sigh, S. Barbour, iii. 350.]

[SICHIN, SICHAN, s. and adj. Sighing, S.]

[SICHIN-LIKE, adj. Like one in sorrow or trouble; as, "Dinna sit there, as gin ye were some puir, sichin-like body," Clydes.]

SICHT, SYCHT, s. 1. Sight, S.

2. Regard, respect.

"The pepill (that fled to kirkis and sanctuaries) wer slane but only sycht to God." Bellend. Cron., B. vii., c. 11.

3. A station on the bank of a river, or elsewhere, whence those fishers called sightmen observe the motion of salmon in the river, S.

That the fishers used sights, during the fishing season, upon Fraserfield's grounds, on the north of the river, and west of the bridge: that the westmost sight was above the Fluicky-shot, the next above the Ford-shot," &c. Leslie of Powis, &c. v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 66.

4. A great number of objects seen at once; as "What a sicht of cows,—of sheep," &c., S. [It also implies quantity, as, a wee sicht mair, i.e., a little more, Clydes.]

The term is frequently used by Bellenden in this sense; and corresponds to Belg. aan-zien, op-zigt, in-zigt, Sw. an-seende, an-sichte, Lat. respectus, from re and aspicio.

SICHT of the Ee. [1. Pupil of the eye.] V. SHEEN.[2. Range of the eye, anywhere; as, "The brawest lass within sicht o' yer ee." Clydes., Banffs.]To SICHT, SIGHT, v. a. 1. To view narrowly, to inspect, S.; from the E. s.

To sicht the ones it will but vex his brane.

Lament. L. Scotland, Dedic.

"The moderator craved that these books might be sighted by Argyle, Lauderdale, and Southesk." Bailie's Lett., i. 103.

"At this assembly Dr. Sibbald late minister of Aberdeen, his papers which were taken frae him were revised and sighted; some whereof smelled of Arminianism, as they thought, and whilk they kept." Spalding, i. 315.

2. To spy from the station the movements of the fish in the river, in order to direct the casting of the net, S. B.

"Being asked, Whether the Seaton side in general is not the best side for sighting fish? depones, that it is so, and is most used." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1895, p. 123.

SICHTER (gutt.), s. A great quantity of small objects seen at once; as, a sichter of birds,—of motes, &c., Upp. Lanarks.

This seems merely a derivative from SYCHT, s. 3, used in the same sense.

[SICHTLY, adj. Fair, seemly, comely, Clydes.]SICHTMAN, SIGHTMAN, s. One employed, in a salmon-fishery, for observing the approach of the fishes, S.

"They are also with propriety called sightmen; because, from habit and attention, they become wonderfully quick-sighted in discerning the motion and approach of one or more salmon, under the water, even when ruffled by the wind, and deepened by the flowing tide." P. Ecclesraig, Kincardine, Statist. Acc., xi. 93.

SICHTY, adj. Striking to the sight.

"The Romanis dressit furth this play in the maist solemn manner,—to mak it the mair sichty and glorious to the pepill." Bellenden's T. Livius, p. 18. Claram spectatamque.

O. E. "Sightly. Visibilia. Sightly or staring or glaring. Rutilans." Prompt. Parv.

SICK, s. Sickness, a fit of sickness; as, The sick's na aff him, S. B.

Moes.-G. sauhts, Su.-G. siuk-a, Germ. seuche, id. Sikes colde, cold fits of sickness, Chaucer, Knights T.

—For sike unnethes might they stond.

Wyf of Bathes Protr., ver. 5976.

SICK-LAITH, adj. Extremely unwilling to do any thing; as, "I'll be sick-laith to do't," Roxb.

In the West of S. Sick-sorry is used in the same sense; q. loth or sorry even to sickness.

* SICKNESS, s. A disease in sheep, the most fatal to which they are liable, called Braxy, S.

"Sickness or Braxy. Rev. Mr. Singers, Mr. J. Hog," &c. Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 362.

SICK-SAIR'D, part. adj. Satiated to loathing, q. served so as to be sick of any thing, Aberd., Ang.

At last, sick-sair'd o' cards an' drink,—
We judged it time to tak a wink.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 16.

SICK-TIR'D, adj. Fatigued to nausea; generally expressive of mental rather than of bodily feeling, S.SICKRIFE, adj. Sickly, having a slight degree of sickness, S.; used improperly, for the sense attached to it does not correspond to the force of the adj. rife. V. SICK.SICKER, SIKKER, SIKKIR, SIKKAR, SEKER, adj. 1. Secure, firm, S.

"For quhat vithir thing is Baptyme, bot ane faithful cunnand and sicker band of amitie maid be God to man, and be man to God?" Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 126, a.

Fraunces conjoins this term with Safe. "Safe and syker. Salvus." Prompt. Parv. Syker is also given as the translation of Securus; Ort. Vocab.

2. Free from care.

Tho, quod bys fader Anchises, Al yone be Thay saulis—
Quhilk drynkis younder, or thay may eschape
At yone ruer, and the fude Lethee,
The sikkir watter but curis, traistis me,
Quharby oblivius becum thay als tyte,
Foryetting pane bypast, and langsum syte.

Doug. Virgil, 190, 21.

i.e., the water free from cares.

3. Certain; as denoting assurance of mind.

"Thow suld be sikkar that the cause or matter quhilk thow confermes with ane eith is trew." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 31, a.

4. Certain ; as denoting the effect.

Our thourch his rybbis a sicker straik drew he,
 Qubill leuir and lounngis men mycht all redy se.
Wallace, ii. 407, MS.

—Thy groans in dowy dens
 The yerd-fast stanes do thirle :
 And on that sleeth Ulysses head
 Bad curses down does bicker ;
 If there be gods aboon, I'm seer
 He'll get them leel and sicker.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 6.

In this sense, we often speak of a sicker straik, a stroke that does not miss, that comes with all the force intended.

5. Cautious in mercantile transactions, or in the management of one's business, in whatever way, S. He, who is tenacious of his own rights or property, is said to be a sicker man.

There counthie, and pensie, and sicker,
 Woun'd honest young Hab o' the Heuch.

This at least seems the sense, as it is afterwards said ;

And Habbie was nae gien to proticks,
 But guidit it weel eneuch.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 292, 293.

Isl. seigr, is used in a similar manner. Seigr a sitt mal, causam suam obstinate persequens ; Verel.

6. Possessing a good understanding, to be depended on as to soundness of judgment, S.B.

Says Collin, for he was a sicker boy,
 Neiper, I fear this is a little ploy.

Ross's Helenore, p. 89.

7. Applied to language. He speaks very sickier, he expresses himself in a precise and accurate manner, including also, in some degree, the idea of determination, S.

It is also used in O. E.

Siker was tho the Emperour, he ne leuede nogt by hynda.
R. Glouc., p. 55.

Chancer, id.

Budd, derives it from Lat. secur-us. But as Su.-G. scher, siker, Isl. seigr, Alem. sichurir, Germ. sicher, Belg. seker, and C. B. sicer, have all the same sense ; this word is probably as ancient as the Lat. Both may be from the same Scythian stock.

SICKER, adv. Surely, certainly, Aberd.

Teut. scher, certè.

To SICKER, v. a. To make certain, to secure.

"Fix there, for its the main business ; and sicker what you will, if the main chance be not sickered, I'll not give a gray goat for you, and your religion both." Mich. Bruce's Lectures, &c., p. 40.

"O. E. Sikeryn, or make sure. Asscuro. Securo." Prompt. Parv.

Teut. scher-en, certum et securum reddere, Kilian ; Su.-G. foer-saekr-a, to assure, to warrant.

SICKERLY, adv. 1. Surely, certainly, S. A. Bor.

—"We ar sikerly enformit that a reverend fader in Christ Bischoop and the kirk of Aberdeen wes of ald tym and is in possession of the tende peny of all wardis, relevis," &c. Lett. Ja. II. Chart. Aberd., Fol. 62.

"That thou may be sickerly groundit in the trew faith of this sacrament,—dout nocht bot that our saluour Jesus Christ is baith man and God." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 142, b.

2. Smartly, earnestly, severely ; in relation to a stroke, S.

"Who spoke against conclusions, got usually so sickerly on the fingers that they had better been silent." Baillie's Lett., i. 384.

SICKERNES, s. Security, S. B. Baron Lawes.

It is used by R. Brunne, p. 147.

The kyng of France & he, at the riuer of S. Rymay,
 Held a parlement, gode sikernes to make,
 That bothe with on assent the way suld vndertake.
 Ilkon sikered other with scrite & seale therby.

It also occurs in Wicliff's Wicket.

"Now therefore pray we—that we may knowe which is the wil of God to serue him in sickernes and holines, in dread of God that we may find by him the waie of blesse everlasting. So be it." P. 18.

Sickernes is improperly expl. truth, on the margin. In the Gloss. to Wicliff's New Testament, it is rightly rendered "security." Here there is a reference to Luke, i. 74 ; sickernes corresponding to "without fear" in our version.

[SID, s. A side, Barbour, ii. 74.]

[SID-FAST, s. Sit-fast, a plant ; the Ononis arvensis or Rest-harrow, Moray.]

SIDE, SYDE, adj. 1. Long, hanging low ; applied to garments, S.

There was also the priest and menstrale sle,
 Orpheus of Trace, in syde rob harpand he.

Doug. Virgil, 187, 34.

Syde was hys habyt, round, and closit mete,
 That strekit to the ground down ouer his fete.

Ibid., 450, 35.

This idea is sometimes expressed by the phrase fute syde.

Than he that was chefe duke or counsellere,
 In rob rial vestit, that hate Quirine,—
 Gird in ane garmont semelle and fute syde,
 Their yettis suld vp opin and warp wyde.

Ibid., 229, 35.

Hence the title of one of Lyndsay's Poems, In contempt of Syde Tailis ; a satire not unnecessary for the ladies of this age, who subject themselves to the awkward and incommodious task of being their own train bearers. The very term foet-sith occurs in A.-S., rendered by Lye, chlamys.

Side, A. Bor. id. My coat is very side, i.e., very long, Grose's Prov. Gl.

Falsgrave explains syde by longe ; B. iii. F. 95, a.

It is used in a very emphatical S. Prov., borrowed from the use of long garments—expressive of the folly of going to an extreme even in what is commendable ; "It's gude to be syde, but no to be trailing." This evidently alludes to the primary sense of the term, as regarding vesture.

2. Applied to other objects hanging low ; as hair, military habiliments, &c.

"He had nothing on his head, but syde red yellow hair behind, and on his haffits, which wan down to his shoulders ; but his forehead was bald and bare." Pit-scottie's Hist., p. 111.

"The armour wherewith they cover their bodies,—is an yron bonnet, and an habbergione, syde almost even to their heels." Descr. of the Kingdome of Scotlande.

3. Side upon, metaph. used as signifying, dealing hardly or severely with, distressful to, Aberd.; like a garment, which is too long, becoming cumbersome and entangling to the wearer.

Su.-G. sid, Isl. sidr, demissus, A.-S. side, sid, longus, amplius, spatiosus. Su.-G. sida klader, vestes prolixae, Ibre, side claise, S. Isl. side-kegyr, one who has a side beard. A.-S. sidfæred, qui comam prolixam alit; sid-reaf, toga talaris. This sense is retained in P. Ploughman.

He was bittlebrowed, and baberylpped also,
Wyth two blered eyen, as a blinde lagge,
And as a lethren purse, lolled his chekes,
Well syder then his chyn, they sheuered for olde.

Fol. 23, a. b.

The term was used by E. writers at least as late as the reign of Elizabeth. In the account of the Queen's entertainment at Killingworth, we are informed that one appeared in the dress of an ancient minstrel. He had "a side gown of Kendale green, after the freshness of the year now.—His gown had side sleeves down to mid-leg, slit from the shoulder to the hand." V. Essay on Anc. E. Minstrels, Percy's Reliques, i. xvi.

4. Late. One who comes to a place too late, or who passes the time appointed, is said to be syde, S. B.

Ibre views this as the primary sense, giving sid, inferior, and demissus, only a secondary place. The idea seems well-founded. For Moes.-G. seitho signifies sero. Seitho warth; It was late. In like manner it is said of a traveller, who is so late that he must necessarily be overtaken on his journey by the night; He'll be syde. S. B. Junius derives the Goth. word from sailua, occasus, the setting of the sun.

The A.-S. word occurs in this sense, in the superl. Sidesta, serissime, which may be from sith, post; like sithed, postremus. The compar. is found in Alem. sidor, later; from sid, postquam. Isl. sijdl, sero, sydre, posterior. Fyr oc sijdlur, first and last, G. Andr., Su.-G. sid um aptan, late in the evening, corresponds to Moes.-G. seitho, and to our use of the term. Su.-G. sid is used, not only as an adj., sero, but as an adj., serus. Sida hoesten, autumnus extremo.

- * SIDE-DISH, s. A cant term for a person who is invited to an entertainment, that he may play off his humour at the expense of one or more of the company, S.

"The principal amusement of the company consists in the wit of some practised punster, who has been invited chiefly, with an eye to this sort of exhibition, from which circumstance he derives his own nickname of a side-dish." Peter's Lett., iii. 241.

SIDE-FOR-SIDE, adv. Along-side, in the same line. To gae side for side, (Sidie for sidie, Dumfr.) to walk with another pari passu; synonym. Cheek-for-chow. V. CHOL.

SIDE-ILL, s. A disease of sheep.

"I'll cut the craig o' the ewe,
That had amaist died of the side-ill."

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 313.

V. SETHILL.

To SIDE-LANGEL, v. a. To tie the fore and hind foot of a horse together on one side, Ettr. For. V. LANGEL, v.

VOL. IV.

SIDELING, adj. 1. Having a declivity, S.

2. Oblique, applied to a discourse, S.

For Norv's sake, this sideling hint him gae,
To brak her piece and piece her Lindy frae.

Ross's Helenore, p. 105.

This is also used as a s. The sidelins (sidlings) of a hill, S. i.e., the declivity, q. along the side.

SIDELINS, SYDLINGIS, adv. 1. Side by side.

The wallis ane hundreth fute of hicht,
Na wonder was, thocht they wer wicht:
Sic breid abuse the wallis thair was,
Thre cartis nicht sydlingis on them pas.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 77.

2. Obliquely, not directly, having one side to any object, S. Sidelong, E. is now used in the same sense; but sideling is the ancient term.

"They had chosen a strong grounde somewhat sideling on the side of a hill." Hollingshed's Chron. V. Gl. R. Brunne, p. 647.

It is also written sidelin, Galloway.

The foe advances, mutt'ring blood and death,
Their eyes flash fury; sidelin to the fight
They both come on; and, groaning in their might,
Make san' an' pebbles, frae the hollow earth
Fly whizzing in the air.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 45.

SIDE-STAP, s. [A false step which wrenches the limb; the step having been too much aside or too side, i.e., too low, Clydes.]

To SIDLE, v. n. To move in an oblique sort of way, like one who feels sheepish or abashed, S.

"The moment they were gone, and the door shut, our hero siddled up to the little prim physician." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 11.

SIDY-FOR-SIDY, adv. On a footing with, in a line of equality; Side for side, Ayrs.

"Thus has our parish walked sidy for sidy with all the national improvements." Annals of the Parish, p. 339.

SIDS, SUDS, s. pl. The same with Shillin-seeds, Sowen-sids; Aberd. The rind or integument of the kernels of grain, detached from the kernel; Nairn, Moray.

"The rind in this detached form, is denominated the sides, corruptly pronounced sids.—The price of a quantity of bran is equal to the price of half the same quantity of meal, such a considerable proportion of the meal adheres to the bran or sids." Agr. Surv. Nairn and Moray, p. 184.

But Sids seems merely a corr. of Seeds.

[SIE, s. The sie o' a gown, &c. V. SEY.]

[To SIE, v. a. To see, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 30.]

[SIE, s. A strip of tarred cloth placed between the overlaps of a clinker-built boat, Shetl. Dan. seig, Sw. seg, adhesive, causing to stick.]

[SIELACK, s. A sow having young, Shetl.]

D 2

SIERGE, s. A taper. V. SERGE.

• SIEVE, s. To milk one's cow in a sieve, to lose one's labour, to return re infecta, a proverbial phrase, S.

He ance thoct o' turnin', tho' sair it might grieve,
But that wad been milkin' his cow in a sieve.
Picken's Poems, ii. 135.

SIEVE and SHEERS. A mode of divination. V. RIDDLE.

[SIGG, s. A hard piece of the skin, like a wart, Shetl. Isl. segi, a slice, bit, clot.]

SIGH (gutt.), s. A seer, one who pretends to predict future events, Roxb.

It is said to occur in this sense in a MS. of the reign of James V. in the Advocates' Library.

It seems to be Celtic; Gael. Ir. sighe, a fairy or hobgoblin; leannan sighe, a familiar spirit; sigh, spiritual, belonging to spirits.

• To SIGHT, v. a. To inspect accurately, to scrutinize, S.

[SIGNATOUR, s. A draft of a royal grant bearing the sign-manual of the king, which thus became the warrant of the charter; also, a writ under the sign-manual, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 2, 65. Dickson.]

[SIGNETE, SINGNET, s. A signet or private seal; the seal affixed to the king's letters.

"This seal was affixed to the king's letters to his officers or messengers-at-arms, commanding them to summon parties before his Court, and to carry its sentences into legal effect; clerks of the singnet, scritaris of the singnet, were originally clerks in the office of the Secretary, whose duty it was to prepare all writs passing the king's signet." Gl. Accts. L. H. Treas., Vol. i.]

[To SIGNET, v. a. To affix the king's signet, ibid., i. 321.]

SIGNIFERE, s. The Zodiac, Lat. signifer.

— I come vnto the circle clere
Of Signifere, quhare fair brycht and schere
The signis schone.

King's Quair, iii. 3.

SIGONALE, s. "A small parcel or quantity," Sibb. Gl.

This word appears in Houlate, iii. 16.

Syne for a signale of frutt thai stroue in the stede.

But in MS. it is supona, perhaps a plate, or basket; from Lat. supponere, to place under.

[SIK, adj. Such. V. SIC.]

SIKE, SYK, SYK, s. 1. A rill or rivulet, one that is usually dry in summer, S.; strype, synonym.

Bedowin in donkis depe was enery sike.
Doug. Virgil, 201, 10.

Nocht lang senyue, besyl ane syik,
Upoun the sonny syd of ane dyk,
I slew with my rycht hand
Ane thowsand.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 11.

2. A marshy bottom with a small stream in it. This sense of syke is still retained, S. B.

The swankies lap thro' mire and syke.
Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 123.

A. Bor. sick, sike, a small stream, or rill.
Lancash. sikr, a gutter.

A.-S. sic, sich, sulcus aquarius, lacuna, fossa; Isl. sijk, sijke, rivulus aquae. Ihre mentions the S. term as synonym., vo. Siga, dolabi, which he assigns as the root. V. SEO, v.

Mr. Macpherson expl. syk, as used, Wyntown, viii. 27. 122, "marshy bottom, with a small stream in it."

Bot thai consydryd noucht the plas;
For a gret syk betwene thame was,
On ilke syd brays stay:
At that gret syke assemblyd thai.

It indeed seems to be used in the same sense, Ibid. 36, 57, &c.

Bot thare was nere hym in that stede
A depe syk, and on fute wes he;
Thare owre he stert wyth his menyhè,
And a-bule at the sikis bra.
The Inglis, als hard as hors mycht ga,
Come on, that syk as [thai] noucht had sene:
Thai went, that all playne feld had bene.
Thare at the assemblyd thai
In the syk to the gyrrhyn lay.

It is used in the same sense by Barbour, xi. 300.

And the sykis alwa that ar thar doun,
Sall put thaim to confusioun.

SIKIE, adj. Full of rills, commonly dry in summer, Clydes.

To SIKE, v. a. Prob., to sigh.

Giff ye be warldly wight, that dooth me sike,
Quhy lest God mak you so, my derest hert,
To do a sely prisoner thus smert?

King's Quair, ii. 25.

Mr. Tytler thinks it not improbable, that, as sile signifies grief, syke is used mètri causa. Perhaps it rather refers to sighing. V. next word.

SIKING, s. Sighing.

Hit yaules, hit yamers, with waymyng wete
And seid, with siking sare,
"I ban the body me bare!"

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 7.

A.-S. sic-an, sicelle-an, Su.-G. suck-a, anc. suck-a, id. suck, anc. sikt, a sigh; Moes-G. svog-jan, to groan.

[SIKKER, SIKKIR, adj. Sure, certain. V. SICKER.]

SIKKIN, adj. Such kind of. V. under SIC.

SIL, SILI, s. A billet, a piece of wood, a faggot.

Sum vthir presit with schidis and mony ane sill
The fyre bleis about the rufe to fling.

Doug. Virgil, 297, 34.

"He brocht mony huge sillis & treis out of the nixt wod, syne fillit the fowis and triches of the said castel with the samyn." Bolland. Cron. B. viii. c. 19.

A.-S. syl, Teut. suyle, a post, a pillar; A.-S. syltaex, a chip-axe or block-axe. V. SYLL.

SILDER, s. Silver, Ang.

The adj. is pron. in the same manner.

— Phoebe, wi' his gauden beams,
Bang'd in the light of day,
And glittering on the silder streams
That thro' the valleys stray.

A. Nicol's Poems, 1739, p. 72.

Our gudewife was maistly dien',—
Growlin' ay for want o' silder.
Kickin' baith the dogs an' childer.
Duff's Poems, p. 36.

To SILE, SYLE, SYLL, v. a. 1. To cover, or to blindfold. V. SYLD.

Be not thairfor syld as ane bellie blind:
Nor lat thyself be led upone the yce.
Maitland Poems, p. 164.

Yet he, this glasse who hid, their eyes dide sile,
His guiltless blood must needs their hands defile.
More's True Crucifix, p. 62.

Why doe they syle poore mocked people's sight,
Christ's face from viewing in this mirror bright?
Ibid., p. 78.

2. To hide, to conceal.

—Yet and thou syll the veritie,
Then downe thou sall.

Spec. Godly Songs, p. 9.

"Thai offend the Juge, fra quhom thai syle & hyde the veritie." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, 1551, Fol. 70, a.

This seems the same with syld, ouer syld, Doug. Virgil, q. v. But the origin is uncertain. O. E. cyll is used to denote a sort of canopy.

"The chammer was haunged of red and of blew, and in it was a cyll of state of cloth of gold; but the Kyng was not under for that sam day." Marriage of James IV. and Margaret of Engl. Leland's Collect., iv. 295.

3. To ceil, to cover with a ceiling. "To syll the kirk;"—syilled, ceiled; Aberd. Reg.

But most probably it is from Fr. ciler, cill-er, (a term used in hawking,) to sow up the eyelids; O. E. cele. "I cele a hauke or a pigyon, or any other foule or byrde, whan I sowe vp their eyes for caryage or otherwyse; Jo cile." Palagr. B. iii. F. 184, a.

The origin has been supposed to be Ital. cielo, Fr. ciel, in a secondary sense, any high arch, from Lat. coelum.

SILING, SYLING, s. Ceiling.

["Item, to the kervour that tuk in task the siling of the chapel, in part of payment, ij lib. xiiij s." Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 357, Dickson. This was for the Royal Chapel in Stirling, in 1497.

—"The old syling that was once fast joyned together with nailes will begin to cling, and then to gape," &c. Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 612.

To SILE, SYLE, v. a. and n. 1. To strain, to drop, to pass through a strainer; a term pretty general in the south of S., whereas sye is used S.B. Loth., &c.

"The bonny winding and gentle Nith canna call a single fin its ain,—they syle its current through the herring nets 'tween Yule and Yule." Blackw. Mag., May 1820, p. 159.

[2. To sink, drop, flow, rain; also, to cause to sink or settle; pret. silit.

As the seymly sone silit to the rest.

Gawan and Gol., ii. 17.

Syle occurs thus in Morte Arthure, f. 93—

"And thane syglande he sailde with sylande terys."]

A. Bor. to soil milk, to strain it; a sile-dish, a strainer, Ray.

Su.-G. sil-a, colare; sil, a strainer, Isl. saillde, id. cribrum, colum, saeld-a, colare, cribrare.

[SILE, s. The young of the herring, Aberd. Dan. sild, a herring.]

SILE, SYLE, SILL, s. A large beam, one end of which is placed on the wall, and the other pinned or nailed to another beam, of the same description, resting on the opposite wall, for the purpose of supporting the roof. These are denominated a pair o' siles, Aysr., Roxb.

Two transverse beams go from the one sile-blade to the other, to prevent the siles from being pressed down by the superincumbent load, which would soon make the walls skail, that is, jut outwards. The lower beam is called a jeed, or joist; the one above that a hawk; and sometimes a third is added, called a wee-hawk. The operation of joining the beams together, which is a work of considerable nicety, is called knittin' the siles, S. O. Cupples, synon.

"The roof was formed of strong cupples termed syles, set up 8 or 10 feet distant from each other." Agr. Surv. Aysr., p. 114.

When ye the juice o' earth didd tippie,
Ye didna ken but syle o' kippie,
Or stock to some auld wife's lint-ripple,
Might be your fate.

A. Scott's Poems, 1805, p. 22.

SILE-BLADE, s. One of the upright beams of a sile, S. O.

Sile is obviously the same with A.-S. syf, syle, syll, basis, fulcimentum, postis, columna, E. sill. The only sense in which the E. word is used, is as denoting "the timber or stone at the foot of a door," Johns. Su.-G. syll denotes the foundation of any thing; Isl. sill-ur, tigni proceres, latus jungentes; expl. in Dan. "the bauks or beams of a house, which lie along upon the walls;" Haldorson. Isl. sula, signifies a pillar. Seren. views Moes.-G. sul-jan, fundare, as the root. Lat. sol-um is undoubtedly a cognate term.

SILIT, [pret. Sank; silit to the rest, sank to rest.] Gawan and Gol., ii. 17. V. SEIGNITY.

SILIT, part. pa. "At a distance, [fallen behind]. Silit rest, companions at a distance. Teut. schill-en, distare;" Sibb. Gl.

*SILL, s. A beam lying on the ground-floor, Dumfr. Such beams are also called Sleepers, S.

Sill, as used in this sense, is retained in E. groundsel. V. SILE.

[SILL, s. Thin cloth of a gauze-like fabric, Shetl.]

[SILL, s. The milt of a fish, Shetl.]

[SILL-FISH, s. A male fish, a milter, ibid.]

SILLABE, s. A syllable, S.; [to sillabe, to divide into syllables, S.]

"Thankfulness standeth not in the multitude of sillabe and voices, bot—in the dispositioun of the soule." Bruce's Eleven Serms., M. 4, a.

"There is not a worde or a sillabe lost here." Rollocke on the Passion, p. 24.

Ben Johnson writes syllabe.

A.-S. sillabe, syllaba; C. B. silleb, id.

[SILLACK, SILLOCK, s. The fry of a coal-fish, Orkn. and Shetl. V. SILLIK.]

SILLER, SYLOUR, SILOURING, s. A canopy, [ceiling, roof. Other forms, as Sylour, Silouring, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 238, 357.]

The kyng to souper is set, served in halle,
Under a siller of silke, dayntly dight.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., ii. 1.

V. SILK, v.

SILLER, SILDER, s. 1. Silver, S.

Robert the good, by a' the swains rever'd,
Wise are his words, like siller is his beard.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 8.

2. Money in general, S.

"Mony a guid plack hae I gottin o' the Regent's siller for printin' preachins and plots." Mary Stewart, Hist. Drama, p. 44.

"He couldna take care o' the siller when he had gotten it neither, but flang it a' into yon idle quean's lap at Edinburgh—but light come light gane." Waverley, iii. 273.

The word in this form is used by Beaumont and Fletcher; but perhaps merely metri causa, or as a provincial corruption.

He that your writings, pack'd to every pillar,
Promis'd promotion to, and store of siller,
That very man I set before your Grace. P. 2820.

SILLER, adj. Of or belonging to money, S.

"This noble marquis—straitly commanded none of his ground, friends nor followers, men, tenants, and servants, that they should not answer nor obey men or arms, taxations or loans, siller excises, or any other impositions whatsoever." Spald., iii. 150.

"The excavations made in consequence of working the metals, at the southern extremity on the north side of the Leadlaw Hill, are still called by the inhabitants, the siller holes." P. Pennycuik, Loth. Append. Statist. Acc., xvii. 628.

SILLERIE, adj. Rich in money, Lanarks.

SILLERIENESS, s. Richness in regard to money, ib.

SILLERLESS, SILVERLESS, adj. Destitute of money, S.

"A silverless man goes fast through the market," S. Prov. "Because he does not stay to cheapen or buy." Kelly, p. 10.

"Ye maunna gang this wilfu' gate sillerless, come o't what like." Heart M. Loth., iii. 28.

[SILLER-BUCKIE, s. The grey purple-streaked pyramid shell, Trochus cinerareus, Banffs.]

SILLER-MARRIAGE, s. 1. The same with Penny-Brydal, Aberd.

[2. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the wedding day is, in many districts of S., observed as a semi-jubilee, with feasting, rejoicing, and presents of silver to the so-honoured couple; hence, the occasion is called the silver-wedding, S.]

SILLAR SAWNIES. "Periwinkles, common shells on shores;" Gall. Encyc.; apparently so named from their silvery gloss.

SILLAR SHAKLE. The name of a plant, Gall.

The sillar shakle wags its pow
Upon the brae, my deary;
The zephyr, round the wunnelstrae,
Is whistling never weary.

Auld Sang, Gall. Encycl.

Viewed as the Briza media, or Silvery cow-quakes.

SILLIK, SILAK, SELLOK, s. The name given to the fry of the Coal-fish, or Gadus Carbonarius; properly, for the first year, Orkn.; podlie, synonym. Loth.

"There are numbers of small fish, such as coal-fish, and all their fry, of different ages, down to a year old; at which time I have seen them sold at the rate of 6d. the thousand, at the same time that worse fish of the same kind was sold in Edinburgh market at 6d. the dozen, or there about, under the name of podlies. Ours are called silliks." P. Birsay, Orkn. Statist. Acc., xiv. 314. Selloks, ibid. iii. 416.; silaks, vii. 542.

As this name is in Orkney given more laxly to fry of different kinds, it is not improbable that it is from Su.-G. sill, a herring, because the fry thus denominated are nearly of the same size. V. SEATH, and CUTH.

SILLIK, adj. Such, similar, Aberd. Reg.; from sua and like. A.-S. swyle.

SILLIST, adj. Expl. "laying aside work in the meantime," Perth.

Moes.-G. sill-an, notat tranquillum esse. Selle, in some parts of Sweden, denotes the still motion of water when its force is broken by interposing rocks. V. Selle, Ihre.

SILLUB, s. A potion, a decoction of herbs.

—Whom fra sho hes resavit a buike
For ony herb scho likis to luike:
It will instruct her how to tak it;
In sawis and sillubs how to mak it.

Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 321.

This seems originally the same with E. sillabub, concerning the origin of which a variety of conjectures are given by Skinner, but none of them satisfactory.

SILLY, adj. 1. Lean, meagre, S.

2. Weak, as the effect of disease, S.

—We haif sae hecht,
To do the thing we can,
To please baith, and eise baith,
This silly sickly man.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 108.

"A silly bairn is eith to lear," S.; Ferguson's Prov., p. 1, intimating, that weakly children often discover great quickness of apprehension, their minds not being diverted by fondness for play.

3. Expressive of constitutional or accidental debility of body, S.

"The master of Forbes's regiment was—discharged and disbanded by the committee of estates (not without the Earl Marischal's procuring in some measure), because they were but silly poor bodies, burdensome to the country, and not fit for soldiers." Spalding, i. 291. A silly bairn, &c., Lancash. seely, "weak in body;" T. Bobbins.

4. Frail, as being mortal.

"My sillie bodie, wee haue taken much pains to gether for to get a rest which we haue looked long for, but could not find." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1134.

5. In the same sense as E. poor is often used, denoting a state which excites compassion, S.

"The silly stranger in an uncouth country must take with smoky inns, and coarse cheer, and a hard bed, and a barking, ill-tongued host." Rutherford's Lett., P. iii. ep. 9.

6. Timid, spiritless, pusillanimous, S.

"Marischal—commanded the baillies to take out of their town 20 soldiers,—with eight score pounds in money for their forty days of loan; whilk for plain fear they were forced to do, being poor silly bodies." Spal-ling, i. 241.

7. Fatuous, weak-minded approaching to idiocy, S. Lanc. "seely, empty-headed."

"Davie's no sae silly as folks tak him for, Mr. Waverley; he wadna hae brought you here unless he had kend ye was a friend to his honour." Waverley, iii. 237.

"Davie's no just like other folk, puir fallow; but he's no sae silly as folk tak him for." Ibid., iii. 239.

"By reason of the extraordinary loss of blood, and strokes he had got, he did not recover the exercise of his reason fully, but was silly, and next to an idiot." Wodrow, ii. 318.

The term, as thus used, has a much stronger signification than E. silly, foolish. V. SELY.

8. Good, worthy; a sense peculiar to Liddesdale.

[To SILLY, v. a. and refl. To befool, to stultify, to shew one's self to be weak in mind, Banffs.]

SILLY MAN. An expression of kindness and compassion, like E. poor fellow, Roxb. Sairy Man, synonym. V. SARY.

SILLY-WISE, adj. Debilitated in some degree, whether bodily or mentally, S.

"He's no just quite silly-wise,—he just lies there motterin awa." Inheritance, ii. 319.

SILLY WYCHTIS. A name given to the Fairies. V. Seily, under SEILE.

[SILLY-HOW, s. Generally Seely-how, or sely-how, the happy how or hood with which some children are born. V. under How, a coif.]

SILVER-MAILL, s. Rent paid in money. V. MAILL.

To SILVERIZE, v. a. To cover with silver-leaf, S.

SIMILABLE, adj. Like, similar.

"That the said erle sall content & pay to the said abbot and convent the soume of fourty schillingis for a yeris profitis & cornez of the said croft, takin vp & intromettit with be the said erle, as wes in similable wise previt before the lordis." Act. Dom. Conc. A. 1493, p. 305. Id. p. 361, col. 1.

SIMMER, SYMER, s. Summer.

"Than folowit mony incursionis, with gretslauchtir, bath of Romanis & Brittonis, continewing all the symer." Bellead. Cron. Fol. 29. a. b.

Simmer is still the vulgar pronunciation of some counties, S., especially in the west and south.

It's no its loud roar on the wintry win' swellin',
It's no the cauld blast brings the tears i' my e'e;
For, O gin I saw but my bonny Scots callan',
The dark days o' winter war' simmer to me.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 167.

As simmer's morning, wi' the sun,
The Sev'n Trades there
Forgather'd—

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 9.

To SIMMER and WINTER. 1. To harp on the same string; or, to be very minute and prolix in narration, or instruction, S.

"No to summer and winter mare about it, ye'll just make a clean surrender o' the debateable goods over and intil our custody, for fear o' complaints." Rothe-lan, i. 237.

2. To spend much time in forming a plan, to ponder, to ruminate, S.

"Let none think that these are new flights, or flowing from prejudice and passion; but these have been my views and digested thoughts, that I have summer'd and winter'd these many years, according as they have come to pass." Walker's Peden, p. 22.

"We couldna think of a better way to fling the gear in his gate, though we simmer'd it and winter'd it e'er sae lang." Antiquary, iii. 323.

3. Permanently to adhere to.

"They—care not whether Joseph die in the stocks or not, or whether Zion sinke or swimme; because whatever they had of religion, it was never their mind both to summer and winter Jesus Christ." Rutherford's Sermon before H. of Commons, Jan. 1643, printed in London, 1644.

SIMMER-LIFT, s. The summer-sky, Ayrs.

An' if the simmer-lift hands clear,
Gin July I'se be wi' you.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 87.

SIMMERSCALES, s. pl. The scales which rise on the top of beer, in summer, when it begins to grow sour, S.

To SIMMERSCALE, v. n. Applied to beer when it casts up these scales, S.

SIMMER TREIS. May-poles. V. SKAFRIE, and ABBOT of VNRESSOUN.

SIMMER, SYMMER, s. 1. The principal beam, in the roof of a building, S. Summer, E.

2. One of the supports laid across a kiln, formerly made of wood, now generally of iron, with notches in them for receiving the ribs, on which the grain is spread in order to be dried; a hair cloth, or fine covering of wire, being interposed between the ribs and the grain, Loth.

"The whole rooffe and symmers of that said kill wero consumed, and only about 3 bolls oatts saffe, which wero likewise ill spoilt." Lamont's Diary, p. 179.

Trabs summaria, Skinner. V. SHIMNER.

[To SIMMISH, v. a. To astonish, amaze, Shetl.]

SIMMONS, SIMMUNDS, SYMMONS, s. pl.
Ropes made of heath and of Empetrum nigrum, Orkn.; evidently a derivative from Isl. sime, vinculum, funiculus.

"These [the divots] are secured on the houses with ropes made of heath, or straw (provincially simmons)."
Agr. Surv. Caithn., p. 27.

SIMPILL, SYMPILL, SENPILL, SEMPLÉ, adj.
1. Low-born, S.

The sympelast, that is oure ost wyth-in,
Has gret gentilis of hys kyn.

Wyntoun, viii. 16, 179.

Law born he was, and off law simpill blud.

Wallace, vii. 738, MS.

Sexty thay slew, in that hald was no ma,

Bot ane auld preist, and sympill wemen twa.

Ibid. vi. 825, MS.

—To curs and ban the sempill poore man,
That had noght to flee the paine.

Spec. Godly Songs, p. 7.

In the same sense the phrase gentle and semple, is used to denote those of superior and inferior birth, S.

2. Low in present circumstances, without respect to birth.

For he was cummyn of gentil-men.

In sympil state set he was then :

Hys ladyre was a manly knyght ;

Hys modyre was a lady brycht.

Wyntoun, viii. 18. 8.

3. Not possessing strength, from multitude or riches.

Thai war all out to fele to fycht
With few folk, off a symple land.

Barbour, xi. 202, MS.

In the same sense he calls a few men, a sympill company, because they durst not attempt to contend with their enemies.

4. Mean, vulgar.

As I hard say, it was a semple wane
Of fog and fern, full fecklessly was maid.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 146.

Fr. simple, common, ordinary.

5. Used as a term exciting, or expressive of, pity.

—To your magnificens
I me commend, as I haif done befor,
My sempill heart for now and evirmoir.

Scott, Chron. S. P., iii. 164.

Thus the phrase poor heart is sometimes used in E.

6. Mere ; sempill avail, the bare value, excluding the idea of any overplus.

—"That the hail iniureis and attemptatis committit of befor, and specialle sen the conclusioun of the first abstinence to the tyme thairof, suld be reparit to the sempill avail." Acts Ja. VI., 1578, Ed. 1814, p. 113.

It is also used to denote the exclusion of any thing in addition to that which is mentioned.

"And orlanis lettres of hornung vpoun ane semple charge of ten dayes poynding and all vther executioun neidfull the ane bot preiudice of the vther." Acts Ja. VI., 1592. Ibid., p. 594.

Simple is still used in the sense of sole, Dumfr., and simly for solely.

SYMPYLLY, adv. Poorly, meanly, in low and straitened circumstances.

—Sone to Paryss can be ga
And levyt thar full sympylly.

Barbour, i. 331, MS.

To SIMULAT, *v. a. To dissemble, to hide under false pretences ; Lat. simul-are.

"He—ay sensyne hes simulat, hid, concealit the samyn in maist treasounable and secrete maner." Acts Ja. VI., 1584, Ed. 1814, p. 305.

SIMULATE, part. adj. 1. Pretended, fictitious, although having the appearance of legal authority ; Lat. simulat-us.

"The said James maid & constitute the forsailis Maister Jhone Chesholme, &c. his pretendit, feneyit & simulate assignais ;—& causit the forsailis pretendit assignais to renunce the said pretendit, feneyit & simulate assignatiounne, & resing [resign] the samyn," &c. Acts Ja. V. 1539, Ed. 1814, p. 354.

—"Orlanis that the saidis fraudfull and simulat dispositionis of escheatis—sall nocht serue to nurische and sustene the saidis tratouris and rebellis in their contempt and rebelloun." Ibid. A. 1592, p. 575.

2. Dissembling, not sincere.

"But the moderator desired his grace to forbear to dissolve the assembly, in simulate manner, and withal to hear their answers to his protestation, whereof it appears they were well enough acquainted." Spalding, i. 90. This adj. is used by old Bale.

SIMULATLIE, adv. Under false pretences, hypocritically.

"Persons convict or standard rebellis for treasone—commounlie hes the fruitioun of thair guidis :—and that vnder pretenss and cullour of fraudfull dispositionis or assignatiounis made by thame selfis, or giftis of thair escheatis simulatlie purchest," &c. Acts 1592, ubi sup.

"They desire the duke and his brother the earl of Lanerk,—to swear and subscribe the covenant, whilk they both simulately refused." Spalding, ii. 122.

[SIN, SYN, *adv. Since. Used also as a conj., and a prep. S.]

[SIN-SYNE, *adv. Since that time, since then, S.]

SIN, s. The sun, S.

—The Sin frae Thetis' lap,
Out owre the knows is blinkan.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 49.

SINNY, adj. Of, or belonging to the sun, S.

Life's just a wee bit sinny beek
That bright, an' brighter waxes, &c.

Ibid., p. 88.

SINWART, adv. Towards the sun, Ayr.

Near me was plac't a skepp o' bees,—
Wadg't in atween twa willow trees,
An' airtan to the sinwart.

Ibid., p. 125.

SINACLE, s. A sign, a vestige. "A grain, a small quantity," Shirr. Gl. S. B.; used also in metaphor.

I bade you speak, but ye nae answer made,
And syne in haste I lifted up your head ;

But never a sinacle of life was there,
And I was just the neist thing to despair.

Ross's Helenore, p. 16.

A sign, a vestige, appears to be the primary meaning of the term; as it is undoubtedly from Fr. sinacle, a sign, mark, or character, and this again from Lat. signacul-um, a seal, or the mark of a seal. "Never a sinacle of life" must therefore properly mean, "not a sign" or "vestige of life."

SINCERE, adj. Grave, apparently serious, Berwicks.

TO SIND, SYND, SINE, SEIN, v. a. 1. To wash slightly; as, to synd a bowl, to pour a little water into it, and then throw it out again, S.; to synd, to rinse, or wash out, A. Bor.

A well beside a birken bush,
A bush o'er spread wi' buds,
Tent well a lass of beauty flush
There standing out her duds.

Morison's Poems, p. 148.

Wi' nimble hand she sinds her milking pail.
Ibid. p. 185.

And shape it bairn and bairnie-like,
And in twa glazen een ye pit;
Wi' haly water synd it o'er,
And by the haly rood sain it.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball., ii. 184.

O busk yir locks trigly, an' kilt up your coaties,
An' dry up that tearie, and synd yir face clean.

Tarras's Poems, p. 124.

It is always applied to things that are supposed to be nearly clean, as denoting a slight ablution. It seems originally to have denoted moral purifications especially that which was viewed as the consequence of making the sign of the cross.

That this has been the origin of the term, as now applied, appears highly probable, from the mode of consecration observed, in former times at least, in Orkney, by sprinkling with water.

"When the beasts—are sick, they sprinkle them with a water made up by them;—wherewith likeways they sprinkle their boats when they succeed and prosper not in fishing. And especially on Hallow-Even, they use to sein or sign their boats, and put a cross of tar upon them." Brand's Orkney, p. 62.

2. [Metaph. applied to meat and drink; also, to liquor after a meal.] To synd down one's meat, to dilute it, to wash it down, S.

"Ye maun gang ower and meet the carle ministers yonder the morn', for they will want to do your job, and synd it down with usquebaugh doubtless—they seldom mak dry wark in this kintra." Heart M. Loth., iv. 153.

—My graybeard stout—
For syning down, it's unco rare,
The bitter wagang o' ilk care.

Poems, Engl., Scotch, and Latin, p. 101.

In the same sense one is said to Synd one's Mouth, S.

[3. To quench, to quench thirst; generally applied to the use of strong drink, S.]

—That ye may ne'er be scant o' brass,
To synd the spark that's i' yer hause, &c.
To a Blacksmith, Turnbull's Poet. Ess., p. 190.

Hail, happy fraithin! on a day
Whan Phoebus glints sae brisk in May,
Or June, whan cockin o' the hay,
Ye synd the wizen.

Brand's Orkney, p. 136.

"Surely there is nae noble lord that will presume to say, that I, wha hae complied wi' a' compliances, tane all manner of tests, abjured all that was to be abjured, and sworn a' that was to be sworn, for these thirty years bypast—shouldna hae something now and then to synde my mouth wi' after sic drouthly wark." Bride of Lammermoor, i. 136.

4. To sind, or synde up claise, to wash or rinse them in cold water, in order to take out the soap, previously to their being hung up, or spread out to dry, S.

"Ye'll—only hae to carry the tae end o' the handbarrow to the water, wait till I sinde up the sarks, an' help me hame wi' them again." Brownie of Bodsbeck, ii. 161.

It must be observed, however, that Isl. sign-a, consecrate, was probably used among the Goths in the times of heathenism. We read of a vessel signat or consecrated to Thor; Herraud S. Signadi Odni; He consecrated it to Odin; Heimskringla, Hakonar Goda S. c. 18. It is possible, however, that the writers only use the terms which had been adopted after the introduction of that corrupted form of Christianity which they had received. Olaus renders sygn, immunis a culpa, absolutus a crimine, insons; Lex. Run. V. SANE, to bless.

SINE, SYND, SYNE, s. 1. A slight ablution, a rinsing, S.

I never fash to view my face
Reflected in a keeking-glass,
But Sunday morn, when time I find
To gie my face and hands a synd,
I see my face reflected in
The water, kything wan and thin.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 10.

2. Metaph. applied to drink, [when taken along with, or after food, S.]

Weel kens the gudewife that the pleughs require
A heartsome meltith, and refreshing synd
O' nappy liquor, o'er a blazing fire.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 55.

SYNDINGS, s. pl. Slops; properly what has been employed in giving a slight washing to dishes, S.

"Maybe ye think we have the fashion of the table-dot,—where a' the bits of vinegar cruets are put awa' into an awmry, as they tell me, and ilk ane wi' the bit dribbles of syndings in it, and a paper about the neck o't, to shew which of the customers is aught it." St. Ronan, i. 44.

TO SINDER, v. a. To sunder, S.; also, as v. n., to part, to separate.

A.-S. syndr-ian, separate.

[SINDERIN, SINDRIN, s. The act of separating, separation, the point of breaking up, Clydes.]

SINDRY, SYNDRY, adj. 1. Sundry, various; A.-S. sindrig.

Out of the heuin againe from sindry artis,
Out of quiet hurnes the rout vpstertis
Of thay birdis.

Doug. Virgil, 75. 27.

2. Separate, in a state of disjunction, S.

[SINDRY, SYNDRY, SINRY, SINNERY, adv. In pieces, asunder, apart; as, "The thing fell sindry in my han'," Clydes.]

SINDRYLY, SYNDRELY, adv. Severally.

Oure Scottis knychtis syndrely
Be-forsaid in-til armys ran
Til thir gret lordis man for man.

Wyntown, ix. 27. 46.

SINDRYNESS, SYNDRYNES, s. A state of separation or dispersion.

Quha skaylis his thought in syndrynes,
In ilk thyng it is the les.

Wyntown, viii. 16. 37.

SINDILL, adv. Seldom; also SINDLE, adj. V. SEINDLE.

[SINE, adv. Afterwards, Lyndsay, Exper. and Court., l. 634. V. SYNE.]

[SING, s. A sign, Ibid., ibid., l. 1613.]

[SIGNET, s. A signet, private seal; also, the seal affixed to the King's letters.

"Item, the vj Marche, gevin at the Kingis command to the Duk of Ross to by him a signet, iij vnicornis. . . . iij li. xiiijs." Accts. L. H. Treas., l. 199, Dickson.]

* To SING. Neither sing nor say, a proverbial phrase, signifying that the person to whom it is applied is quite unfit for the business which he has undertaken.

Ramsay employs it to express total disqualification for making love, from bluntness and sheepishness.

He faulds his owrlay down his breast with care,
And few gangs trigger to the kirk or fair:
For a' that, he can neither sing nor say,
Except, How d'ye I— or, There's a bonny day.

Gentle Shepherd, Act. I. sc. 2.

It must be of considerable antiquity, as it is used by the Abbot of Corraguell; and, from the mode of its application may be supposed to have had an ecclesiastical origin, as denoting that one was quite unfit for any office in the church, whether as a chorister, or as a preacher.

"And quhen thay have gottin the benefice, gyf thay have ane brother, or ane sone, ye [yea] suppose he can nolder sing nor say, norischeit in vice all his dayis, fra hand he sall be montit on ane mule, with ane syde gown and ane round bonett, and then it is question quibether he or his mule knawis best to do his Office. Perchance Balaames asse knew mair nor thay baith." Comp. Tractiue, Keith's Hist. App., p. 202.

This view of the origin of the phrase is confirmed by a passage in a coeval poetical work, which sets the matter in a still clearer light, as referring to the Are Marias and other services of the church of Rome.

Sum mumlit Aueis, sum raknit creid[is],
Sum makes goddis of their beidis
Quhilk wot not what they sing nor say:
Alace, this is ane wrangous way.

Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 163.

To SING DUMB, v. n. To become totally silent, S.

She's now in her sweet bloom, has blood and charms
Of too much value for a shepherd's arms:

None know'st but me;—and if the morn were come,
I'll tell them tales will gar them all sing dumb.
Ramsay's Gent. Shepherd, A. II. sc. 4.

Young primpin Jean, wi' cuttle speen,
Sings dum' to luke the bannocks.
Tarras's Poems, p. 72.

* "She that undertakes the baking of them must remain speechless till they are finished." N. ibid.

This is an idiom which I have not remarked in any other language. Could it originate from the dumb mummery in the consecration of the mass, when the priest either changes his chant into mere muttering, or becomes entirely silent? Du Cange has observed that L. B. canere is used—de tacita consecratione missae.

As the Swedes use the phrase, tigande maessa, in the sense of missa tacita, vel quae submissa voce recitabatur, Loccenius has observed, that "according to the statutes of the ancient church, it was accounted a profanation to pronounce the words of consecration with an audible voice." Not. ad Leg. Westrogoth. c. 13.

It is by no means unlikely that this absurd mode of worship might give occasion to the phraseology, especially after the dawn of the Reformation. For this dumb shew was a special subject of ridicule with our ancestors. Hence, speaking of the breaaden God, they thus address his votaries:—

Why are ye sa vnnaturall
To take him in your teeth and sla him?
Tripartit and deuided him

At your dumb dresse:

But God knawes how ye gydlit him,
Mumling your Messe.

Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 198.

[To SING SMA', v. n. To become humble, to take a lower position; in whatever manner to own humiliation or defeat, Clydes.]

SINGIN-E'EN, s. The last night of the year, Fife, Angus; elsewhere called Hogmanay.

—We come to Jean,

A lass baith douse an' thrifty
But singin-e'en she's owre aft seen,
She's shakin' bands wi' filty.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 24.

The term seems to have originated from the carols sung on this evening. V. HOGMANAY. It may be observed, however, as many of the superstitious ideas and rites, originally pertaining to Yule, have been transferred to the last day of the year, that some of the vulgar believe that the bees may be heard to sing in their hives on Christmas-eve. V. YULE-E'EN.

To SING, v. a. To singe; part. pa. singit, also, sung; pron. as E. sing, canere.

They have contriv'd rebellious books,
Whose paper well might serve the cooks
To sing their poultry, I dare swear,
A thousand or three hundred year.

Cleland's Poems, p. 19.

Fat are the puddings; heads and feet well sung.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 92.

"He's like the signed [pron. singit] cat, better than he's likely;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 33. Some express it,—"better than he's bonny to."

Under this word we may notice a singular ordinance of the town-council of Aberdeen, evidently intended as a purification from the Pest.

"The bailieis licent hir to returne to hir housis in the towne, quhar sche duellit afor on this conditioun following, that is to say, sche causand sing the said housis with ane 'turf of hedder, and thaireftir keipand hir cloiss thairintill for viij dais thairestir." Aberd. Reg., A. 1543-5, V. 18.

A.-S. saeng-an, Germ. seng-en, Belg. seng-en, id.

SINGIT-LIKE, adj. Puny, shrivelled; as resembling what has been singed, S.

[SINGLAR, adj. V. under SINGLE.]

• SINGLE, adj. 1. Small; as, a single letter, a small, not a capital, letter; [single coins, small coins.]

[2. Weak; as, single ale, weak ale: strong ale being called double ale.

3. Of lowest rank or grade; as, a single soldier, a private; a single sailor, a man before the mast.]

[4. Without any addition or accompaniment]; as, the single catechis, the Shorter Catechism without proofs, as distinguished from one that contains the scripture-proofs extended.

[In the same sense, a single waistcoat is one without lining; a single man is one without arms or means of defence, S.]

SINGLE, adv. [1. One by one, by itself; without aid, addition, or accompaniment; like E. singly.]

2. Seldom. V. SEINDLE.

SINGLE, s. A handful of gleaned corn, S.

Thou lay richt prydes in the peis this sommer,
And fain at evin for to bring hame a single.
Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 53.

Sibb. writes also sindle, making this form of the word the ground of derivation from Su.-G. syn, necessitas, and del, pars, q. poor man's share. But sin, unus, singularis, and del, are perhaps preferable. It may, however, be traced to Lat. singul us, because the ears are gathered singly.

SINGLE-HORSE-TREE, s. A swingle-tree, or stretcher of a plough by which one horse draws, Roxb.; Ae-horse-tree synon., Clydes.

"The plough is drawn by a long stretcher commonly called a two-horse tree, with an iron staple in the middle, and a hook to go into one of the holes of the bridle, and with two iron ends, in each of which there is a hole to receive a smaller hook coming from the middle of two lesser stretchers, or single-horse-trees, to whose extremities the ropes were formerly tied, and now the chains are fastened, which reach from both sides of the collars of two horses placed abreast." Agr. Surv. Roxb., p. 50, 51.

SINGLE-STICK, s. Cudgelling, South and West of S.

—"Why don't you take good cudgels and settle it?"—"We tried that three times already—that's twice on the land and once at Lockerby fair.—But I dinna ken—we're baith gay good at single-stick, and it could na weel be judged." Guy Mannering, ii. 275.

VOL. IV.

SINGLAR, adj. [Without armour. V. SINGLE, s. 4.]

I wald tak weid, suld I fecht with a man,
Bot [for] a dog, that nocht of armys can,
I will haif nawn, bot synylar as I ga.
A gret mantell about his hand can ta,
And his gud suerd; with him he tuk na mar.
Wallace, xi. 241, MS.

[Fr. singulier, single, alone; in this instance, without the weid, i.e., mail, armour.]

SINILE, adv. Seldom, S.O. V. SEINDILL.

He faught, but sinile met wi' scars,
For they were only worly wars.

G. Turnbull's Poet. Essays, p. 200.

• To SINK, v. a. To cut the die used for striking money. Hence, SINK, s. 1. A place where the superabundant moisture stagnates in the ground, Aberd.

"This kind of grain is found to answer very well when there is only a quantity of superabundant moisture, provincially a sink, without any fountain of running water." Agr. Surv. Aberd., p. 426.

Su.-G. sank, paludosus, from sacn-a, mergere.

2. The pit of a mine, S.; [synon. shank.]

"In those ages, when scanty yielding mines could afford a profit, it would appear that gold was searched for in the rivulets of Megget, and that silver was obtained from mines near the village of Linton, where remaining vestiges of old sinks, or pits, still retain the name of Silverholes." Agr. Surv. Peeb., p. 22.

SINKAR, SINKER, s. 1. The person employed in cutting dies.

"His Maiestie ordanis—the generall Mr. cunyeour, sinkar, &c. to proceed in working and sinking of the irnis, and making, forgeing, prenting and outputting of the said money." Acts Ja. VI., 1593, IV. 48, 49.

[2. The weight attached to a fishing line, S.

3. The weight attached to the rope of a horse's stall collar, Clydes., Banffs.]

[To SINK, To SINK AND GRAEM, v. n. To curse, to imprecate, Shetl. A.-S. sencan, to sink, and grim, wrath, fury.

SINKIL, s. [Prob., an errat. for finkil, fennel.]

"I sau sinkil, that slais the virmis of the bellye." Compl. S., p. 104.

Apparently an errat. for finkil, fennel, still sometimes used as an anthelmintic. V. FYNKLE.

[SINNACLE, s. A person of a vicious disposition, Banffs.]

[SINNAN, s. A sinew, Shetl. V. SINNON.]

[SINNA-PEATS, s. pl. Peats full of fibres.]

[SINNET, s. Merry-plait, Banffs.]

[SINNIE, s. Senna; sinnie-tea, decoction of senna, Clydes.]

[SINNIE, s. A small kiln in a barn for drying corn, Shetl.]

E 2

[SINNIE, s. Contr. for Siniva, a female name, ibid.]

SINNIE-FYNNIE, s. The Black Guillemot, Colymbus Grylle, Linn., Mearns.

As this bird "may be seen fishing—even in the very worst weather in winter," (V. Barry's Orkn., p. 303,) it may be named from Gael. sian, storm, and finiche, signifying jet.

SINNON, SINNA, s. A sinew, Lanarks.; [sinnan, Shetl.] V. SENON.

SINSYNE, adv. Since, S.

—Years sinsyne has o'er us run,
Like Logan to the simmer sun.

Burns, iv. 74.

V. SYNE, adv. and SEN.

[SINTER, SINT, s. A small quantity, Shetl.; in West of S., sint and sent; also, a wee sint, a very small quantity.]

To SIPE, SYPE, SEIP, v. n. 1. To ooze, or distil very gently, as liquids do through a cask that is not quite tight, S. A. Bor.

"To sipe, sype, to leak, to pass through in small quantity;" Gl Sibb.

2. To let out any liquid, not to hold in; used of a leaky vessel, S.

"A sinner is like a seiping dish, a dish that runneth out," &c. Memoirs of Magopico.

"She wears her corpse-sheet drawn weel up to hide it, but that canna hinder the bluid seiping through." Heart M. Loth., ii. 116.

Teut. sijp-en, id. stillare, manare, fluere. I need scarcely observe, that this is quite different from sipp-en, pitissare, sorbillare, which corresponds to E. sip.

The diminutives of sijp-en are, Germ. sippeln, zip-peln, Belg. zytel-en, afzytel-en, to drop, zyper-en, leakage. The Teut. word in Germ. also assumes the form of sawf-en; fluere, manare. Wachter marks the affinity between this and Heb. zuph, zoo, fluxit, emanavit; although he seems to view Germ. saw, aqua, as the root of sawf-en.

A-S. sip-an is very nearly allied; expl. by Somner, "marcerare, to soften by steeping in liquor, to soke or wash in water or other liquor, to sappe."

3. As a v. a., to distil, to shed, S. B.

But Tammy Norie thought nae sin
To come o'er him wi' a snype,
Levell'd his nose flat wi' his chin,
And gart his swall'd een sype
Sawt tears that day.

Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 124.

SIPAGE, SEIPAGE, SEIP, s. Leakage, S. B.

SIPE, SYPE, SEIP, s. 1. A slight spring of water, Perth.

2. The moisture which comes from any wet substance.

"Gif thair be ony persounis that settis furth under the yeird the sype of thair bark cobill, the draff of their lit, malt cobill, or lime-pot, or ony sype of kitching, to the King's water or well, throw the quibik the King's lieges may oft-times tak skaith, the perrel not being knawin to thame in dew time." Chalm. Air, Balfour's Pract., p. 588.

3. A dreg of any liquid remaining, Dumfr.
Teut. sype, cloaca. V. SIFE, v.

SIPIN, SEIPIN, part. adj. Very wet, dropping wet, S.

SIPINS, SYPINS, SEIPINS, s. pl. The liquor that has oozed from an insufficient cask, S.

SIPLIN, SIPPLYNE, s. A young tree; as a birk-siplin, a young birch, Selkirks.; corr. from E. sapling.

Doug. uses this word; but it would seem as synon. with bark.

—Skars this sentence prentis in his mynde,
His dochter for to clois wythin the rynde,
And stalwart sipplyne or bark of cork tree.

Virg. 383, 37.

To SIPPLE, v. n. To sip, S.; nearly synon. with E. tipple, and S. sirple.

"The bodie got sic a trick of sippling and tipling wi' the baillies and deacons when they met (which was amaisit ilka night) concerning the common gude o' that burgh, that he couldna weel sleep without it." Anti-quary, i. 201, 202.

Apparently a dimin. from the E. v. to Sip.

SIRDON, SIRDOUN, s. A low, murmuring, or plaintive cry, S.

To SIRDON, SIRDOUN, v. n. To emit a plaintive cry or wail, as some birds do, Renfrews.

SIRDONING, s. A term used to denote the singing of birds.

Their sirdoning the bony birds

In banks they do begin;

With pipes of reeds the jolie birds

Holds up the mirrie din.

A. Hume, Chron. S. P., iii. 390.

Perhaps from Fr. sourdine, a kind of hoarse or low-sounding trumpet; "the little pipe, or tenon put into the mouth of a trumpet, to make it sound low;" Cotgr.

SIR JOHN. A close stool, S.; knight, synon.

This name might perhaps be introduced about the time of the Reformation, from contempt of the priests, or Pope's Knights; especially as John seems to have been a name commonly imposed, in a disrespectful way, on a priest. Hence the contemptuous designation, Mess John, i.e., John who says mass.

Or shall we suppose that the synon., knight, is the more ancient name, conferred on this utensil from the idea of service?

SIRKEN, adj. 1. Tender of one's flesh, afraid of pain, [or cold; applied to one who keeps near the fire,] S.

Belg. sorgh-en, curare?

2. Tender of one's credit; as, "Ye needna be sae sirken to pay just now;" or, "Ye're ay very sirken," Clydes.

[SIRKENTON, s. One who is very careful to avoid pain or cold, or who keeps near the fire, Ayr.]

Gael. seirghe, sickly; perhaps allied to C.B. syrech, desire, affection, love, syrech-a, to fill with desire. Sirke might thus be originally applied to one filled with self-love.

[To SIRP, v. a. To wet overmuch; generally applied to leaven when made too thin for baking, Shetl.]

To SIRPLE, v. a. To sip often, to tipple, S.
Generally used in the first sense, A. Bor.

[SIRPLE, s. A sip, a mouthful, a taste, S.]

Sw. sorpl-a, Germ. schurpf-en, Belg. slurp-en, id., all nearly allied to Lat. sorbill-are.

SIRS, SIRSE, SERSE, interj. 1. A common mode of address to a number of persons, although of both sexes; often pron. q. Sirce, S.

2. O sirs! [O sirse-a-day!] an exclamation expressive of pain, or astonishment, S.

SISE, SYSS, s. 1. Assize, abbrev.

Schir Gilbert Malherbe, and Logy,
And Richard Broune, thir thre planly
War with a syss than ourtane;
Tharfor thai drawyn war ilkane,
And hangyt, and hedyt tharto.

Barbour, xix. 55, MS.

2. Doom, judgment.

Als faith is this sentence, as sharp is thy sise;
Synne duly they deemed what death it should die.

Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 16.

Mortone, sayis he, the lawis hes slaine him,
And Gowrie hes gottin a condigne syse,
Conforming to his interpryse.

Leg. Ep. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 325.

[SISS, s. pl. Times; for sithis, pl. of sith, a time, q.v., Barbour, v. 178, xx. 225.]

To SIST, v. a. and n. 1. To stop, to stay.
To sist procedure, or process, to delay judicial proceeding in a cause, S.; used both in civil and ecclesiastical courts. Lat. sist-ere, to stop.

"In church discipline, a difference is to be made between what is satisfactory unto a church judicatory, so as to admit the defender unto all church privileges, as if the offence had never been; and what may be satisfying, so as to sist procedure for the time." Stewart's Collections, p. 261.

2. To stop, to go no farther, S.

"Then were those who loved peace filled with hope that our troubles were ended; but that was soon ended by an accident which—imported that the covenanters meant not to sist there." Guthrie's Mem., p. 60.

SIST, s. The act of legally staying diligence, or execution on decrees for civil debts; a forensic term, S.

"A sist granted on a bill without passing it, expires also in fourteen days; Act Sederunt, Nov. 9, 1680." Erskine's Instit., B. iv., T. 3, s. 18. V. the v.

To SIST, or SIST one's self, v. a. 1. To cite, to summon; a forensic term, S.

"According to this letter, he [Mr. W. Veitch] was received upon the Borders, and brought prisoner to Edinburgh, and February 22, he was sisted before the committee for publick affairs." Wodrow's Hist., ii. 6.

2. To set, or take a place, as at the bar of a court, where one's cause is to be judicially tried and determined; a term generally used in a religious sense, with respect to one's engagement in the acts of divine worship, in order to express the solemnity of the appearance, S.

"Ordinances are means by which, to use an unclassical, but expressive word, we are sisted more directly in the presence of God." Disquisition on the Observance of the Lord's Supper, p. 45, 46.

"It fell to be argued, where a prisoner in the messenger's hands grants a bond of presentation, with a cautioner, to sist himself such a day, or else pay the debt; if it be sufficient to exoner the cautioner, to alledge that none for the creditor or messenger appeared at the diet prefixed, to accept or require the prisoner," &c. Fountainhall, i. 680.

"The Convention ordanit maissers to passe & charge the said erle of Carnwath to come & sist his persone presentlie with all diligence befor the convention, as he will be answerable." Acts Cha. I., Vol. VI., p. 5.

The term has been probably borrowed from the Roman law. Sist-ere, to set, or be made to stand; also, to have one forthcoming. Sistere vadimonium, to appear to his recognisance; Cic. pro Quint. 8.

[SISTENSTATION, s. The smallest possible quantity, a particle, Shetl.]

SISTER-BAIRN, s. A sister's child; used to denote the relation of a cousin. V. BROTHER-BAIRN.

"I said to the Chancellor, I was a gentleman that had blood relations to his relations, the Earl of Mar's mother and I being sister-bairns." Ja. Skeen's Interrog. Cloud of Witnesses, p. 95, Ed. 1720.

A.S. sweoster-bearn, sororis filius, nepos; Lye. "Sweoster-bearna, nepotes, sororini. Sister's children, nephews or nieces;" Somner.

SISTER-PART, s. The portion of a daughter, Shetl.

"Although the udallers divided their land among all their children, yet the portions were not equal, the son got two merks and the daughter one; hence the sister part, a common proverb in Zetland to this day." Edmonstone's Zetl., i. 129.

[SISTER'S-PART, s. Half of a brother's portion, less than one's right, nothing at all; a proverbial phrase, ibid.]

To SIT, SITT, v. n. 1. To cease growing, to become stunted; applied both to animals and vegetables, S.

2. To shrink, settle, S.

3. To sink, as when a wall sinks or falls down in consequence of the softness of the foundation, S.

This seems merely a peculiar sense of the E. v., as Lat. subsidi-ere, is formed from sed-ere, to sit.

4. To continue to inhabit the same house, possessed for some time before; to sit, not to flit, S.

A.-S. sitt-an, habitare, manere.

- To SIT, SITT, v. a. 1. To grieve, to vex.

And he for wo weyle ner worthit to wiede;
And said, "Sone, thir tithingis sittis me sor,
And be it knawin, thow may tak scaith tharfor."
Wallace, i. 438, MS.

2. [To decline, neglect]; as, to sit an offer, not to accept of it, S.

"It implieth that very few, who sit the offer until then, are honoured with repentance, as he was."
Guthrie's Trial, p. 82, 83.

3. [To disregard]; as, to sit a charge or summons, not to regard it, to disobey it.

"There came orders frae the Green Table about this time to Aberdeen charging them to transport their 12 pieces of ordnance to Montrose, for certain causes, whilk the town thought hardly off;—so they sat this charge, and nothing followed thereupon."
Spalding's Troubles, i. 150; i.e., they did not stir to obey.

- To SIT down. [1. To settle, continue; applied to the weather; as, "Is the frost to sit down, think ye?" S.]

2. To take hold of the lungs; as, a sitten down cauld, a cold or catarrh which cannot easily be removed, S. It is sometimes pron. sutten down.

"It was first a sutten doon cauld, and noo he's fa'n in till a sort o' a dwinin like, an' atweel I dinna think he'll e'er get the better o't." Inheritance, i. 30.

- [To SIT on. To remain, to continue to abide in the same house; same with s. 4 of v. n.; as, "Are ye to sit on the year?" i.e., are you to remain for another year, Clydes.]

- To SIT on ane's ain coat tail. To act in a way prejudicial to one's own interest, S.

Bot als gude he had sittin idle,
As there owre land to leid his brydle,
Considering what reward he gatt,
Still on his owne cott tail he satt.

Leg. Ep. St. Androis, Poems, Sixteenth Cent., p. 329.

- [To SIT on anither's coat tail. To be helped by, or dependent upon, another, S.]

- To SIT still. To continue to reside in the same house, or on the same farm as before.

"Ane tenant beand warnit be his master at Whit-sunday to flit—and thairefter thoillit—to sit still and remane to ane certane day, may lauchfullie be put forth," &c. Balfour's Pract., p. 458.

- To SIT to. 1. To adhere to the pot; [as, "Dinna let the kail sit to,"] S.

2. [To be singed or burned, S.]

The phrase evidently respects its adhesion to the pot. "Pot-sitten. Burnt to. North." Gl. Grose.

- To SIT ill to one's meat. To be ill fed, S.

"Nothing makes a man sooner old like, than sitting ill to his meat," S. Prov.; "To sit ill to one's Meat, in Scotch, is to be ill kept." Kelly, p. 264, 265. The allusion seems to be to one being so ill seated at table, that he cannot reach the food set before him.

- To SIT up. To become careless in regard to one's religious profession or duties, S.

"Even professors sat up, shirped away, and cryned into a shadow, as to all fervour for the cause." M'Ward's Contendings, p. 146. V. UPSITTEN.

- SIT, s. The state of sinking, as applied to a wall, S.

- [SITTEN, adj. Stunted in growth, Clydes., Banffs. V. SIT, v. n., s. 1.]

- [SITTEN down, part. adj. Settled, become calm; applied to the weather, S.]

- SITTEN on, part. adj. Broth or soup, which has been boiled too long, especially when burnt in the pot, is said to be sitten on, Roxb. Also set-on, settin-on.

- SITE, SYTE, s. 1. Sorrow, grief, S.

Stand still thare as thou art with mekle syte;
Preis na forther, for this is the hald rycht
Of Gayatis, Schaddois, Slep, and douerit Nycht.
Doug. Virgil, 177, 13.

In the same sense the term is used, when Gologras proposes to Gawan, who had defeated him, to submit to be carried to the castle, as if he had been his prisoner; that he might not be openly disgraced.

Thus may you saif me fra syte.
As I am cristynit perfite,
I sall thi kyndnes quyte,
And sanf thyn honour.

Gawan and Gol., iv. 8.

False is this world, and full of variance,
Besoucht with syn, and othir sytis mo.
Balade, printed 1508, S. P. R., iii. 128.

2. Anxious care, Duff.

3. Suffering, punishment.

Sic wikkit and condemnit wichtis al tyte,
As thay come in that dolly pyt of syte,
Tisiphone, the wrekar of misdeedis,
With quhip in hand al reddy fast hir spedis
All to assale, to skurge, toir and bet.

Doug. Virgil, 184, 19.

"It is S.—sometimes taken for revenge or punishment, as when they say, I have gotten my heart's site on him, i.e., my heart's desire on him, or all the evil I wish'd him," Rudd. "To dree the syte, to suffer punishment," Shirr. Gl. S.B. V. SITHE, s.

Ross had used this term in his first Edit., though syte was afterwards substituted.

We'll a' be missing, I'll get a' the wyte,
And me my lane be maid to bear the syte. P. 50.

The origin is undoubtedly Isl. syte, to mourn, to lament; whence sut, sorrow, anxiety, syting, sything, care. Sytta, dicitur, qui assiduo luget; G. Andr. Perhaps Su.-G. suid-a, dolere, may be viewed as a cognate; as well as Alem. suid-en, id. also affligere.

- SITFULL, SITEFULL, adj. Sorrowful, causing sorrow.

Compleyne for him in to that sitfull sell is,
Compleyne his payne in dolour thus that duellis.
Wallace, ii. 218, MS.

Rest at all eis, but sair or sitfull schouris ;
Abide in quiet, _____

Palace of Honour, ii. 30.

V. SITR.

SITFULLY, adv. Sorrowfully.

—To Dunbar the twa chystanys couth pass
Fall sitfully, for thair gret contrar caws.

Wallace, vii. 1242, MS.

SITFAST, s. 1. Creeping Crowfoot, Ranunculus Repens, Linn., Lanarks. V. SIT-SICKER.

This name is sometimes applied also to the Rest-harrow, Ononis arvensis.

2. A large stone fast in the earth, Berwicks.

"In many situations of this county improvable land is, or has lately been, much encumbered by such stones. These are sometimes large nodules or irregularly shaped masses, of whin, trap, basalt, or granite, either appearing above the surface or discovered by the plough, and are called sitfasts." Agr. Surv. Berw., p. 380.

"Some are even of many hundred weights, and are called sitfasts." Ibid., p. 35.

[SITH, SYTH, s. Times ; feill sith, many times, Barbour, ix. 737. A.-S. sith, a time.]

SITH, SITHEN, SYTHYN, adv. After, afterwards, then.

The lettir tauld hym all the deid,
And he till his men gert reid,
And sythyn said thaim, "Sekyrlly
"I hop Thomas prophecy
"Of Hersildoune sall weryfyd be."

Barbour, ii. 85, MS, id. Wynt., ix. 5. 36.

It is common in O. E.

Sithen he went to Fraunce, and com vnto Parys. —
Sithen dight him to Scotland, & mykelle folk him wit.

R. Brunne, p. 112, 113.

From the same origin with SEN, q. v.

SITHENS, SYTHENS, SITH, conj. 1. Although.

—"Madame," scho said, "kepe Pitie fast.

Sythens scho ask, no licence to her leue ;

May scho wyn out, scho will play you a cast."

King Hart, i. 44.

V. SITHYN.

2. Since, seeing.

"Now sithens our forefathers, which lived most iust, could not be made iust in the deedes of the lawe ; —of necessitie we are compelled to seeke the iustice of a christian man, without all lawe or workes of the lawe." H. Balnaues's Confession, p. 69.

To SITHE, SYITH, v. a. To make compensation, to satisfy. V. ASSYITH.

SITHE, SYITH, s. 1. Satisfaction ; gratification.

"And that he was tempted hereunto by the devil, promising he should not want any pleasure, and that he should get his heart ['] sythe on all that should do him wrong." Satan's Invisible World, p. 7.

2. Atonement, compensation.

Ye Edomites idoll, with threefall croune,
The crop and rute of pride and tyrannie ;
Ye Ismalites, with scarlet hat and gowne,
Your bludie boist na syth can satisfie.

Psalm, lxxiii. Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 97.

This word had been used in O. E.

"Makyn a sythe. Satisfacio." Prompt. Parv.

SITHEMENT, s. Compensation. V. ASSYTHEMENT.

[SITHE, s. A scythe, S.]

SITHE-SNED, s. The shaft or long pole in which the blade of a scythe is fixed, Loth., Teviotd., Mearns.

"Snedd, smethe, handle, as of a scythe ;" Gl. Sibb.

This is purely an A.-S. word ; snard, falcis ansa, "the handle or staffe of a scythe ;" Soinner. From the signification of all the similar terms, one might rather suppose that it should have denoted the blade, as being that which snids or cuts. Isl. snid signifies obliquitas ; whence, as would seem, snidill, falx putatoria.

SITHE-STRAIK, s. A piece of hard wood overlaid with tallow and flinty sand, for sharpening a scythe, Teviotd.

Named from the act of stroking, A.-S. strac-an.

SIT-HOUSE, s. A place of habitation, as distinguished from a house appropriated to some other purpose ; as a barn, cow-house, &c. ; Loth., Fife.

"What should be the form of a sit-house, barn, bire, stable, with corn and kitchen yards?" Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 437.

From A.-S. sitt-an, habitare, manere, and hus, domus. In the same manner is formed A.-S. burh-sittende, the inhabitant of a burgh ; land-sittende, &c. Sit-house thus seems equivalent to dwelling-house.

SITSICKER, s. Upright Meadow Crowfoot. Ranunculus acris, Upp. Clydes., Mearns. This name is given to the R. arvensis, Stirlings. So named from the difficulty of eradicating it.

"The ranunculus arvensis, crowfoot, or sit-sicker, as it is here called, is very common, very hurtful, and very difficult to extirpate." Ag. Surv. Stirl., p. 131.

[SITTAND, part. pr. Sitting, Barbour, x. 763 ; sittis, sits, ibid., xii. 172 ; sittyn, sat, vii. 269.]

[SITTELL, s. Errat. for Rebell, Barbour, x. 129, Herd's Ed.]

[SITTEN, adj. Stunted, badly shaped, Banffs.]

[SITTEN on, part. pa. Singed, burned, S. V. under SIT, v.]

SITTERING, s. A stone of a citron colour.

"A lingar of a belt of knoppis of sitteringie, containing sex in everie knop, and fiftene in nowmer, with fourtene knoppis of perill betuix everie knop containing foure perill, and perill wanting of the haill." Inventories, A. 1579, p. 290.

This appears to denote a stone of a citron, or pale-yellow colour, Fr. citrin, id. It is evident from the Dict. Trev. that this name is still given in France to certain crystals, perhaps of that straw-colour which we call Cairngorms. Citrin, espèce de cristal qui est ainsi appelé à cause de sa couleur citrine. Crystallus citrina.

SITTIE-FITTIE, s. The sea-bird called Lady-bird, Ettr. For.

[SITTIL, adj. Subtle, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 4179.]

SITTREL, adj. Peevish, discontented, Perth.

SIV, s. The common pronunciation of the E. word Sieve in some parts of S.

O. E. Syffe. "Cribrum. Cribellum." Prompt. Parv.

SIVER, SYVER, s. 1. A covered drain, S. also syre, E. sewer.

"It lies in a swamp, the inconvenience of which the present clergyman has, in some degree, remedied by sivers, as they are here called, and by other methods of draining the water." P. Glasford, Lanarks. Statist. Acc., vii. 145.

2. It sometimes denotes a gutter, S.

"He frequently rode up and down the street as far as the Luckenbooths, and the Abbey's sanctuary giver." R. Gilhaize, i. 183.

Dr. Johns. derives the E. word from Fr. issu-er, q. to issue. Perhaps Teut. syver, mundus, syver-en, mundare, purgare may have some claim of affinity.

[O. Fr. "essiaiver, to flow away; essuier, essuyer, essavrière, seuivière, a conduit, mill leat, drain of a pond," Roquef.]

3. A rumblin or rummlin syver, a drain filled with stones thrown loosely together, so as to leave a passage for the water, S.

"Rummlinsires, small sewers filled with little stones;" Gall. Encycl.

SIVVEN, s. The Raspberry, or the fruit of the Rubus idaeus, Linn. S.

SIVVENS, SIBBINS, s. pl. 1. A disease of the venereal kind, S.

"A loathsome and very infectious disease of the venereal kind, called the Sivvens, has long afflicted the inhabitants of the Highlands, and from thence some parts of the Lowlands in Scotland, even as far as the borders of England. Tradition says that it was introduced by the soldiers of Cromwell garrisoned in the Highlands.—Sometimes a fungus appears in various parts of the body resembling a rasp-berry, in the Erse language called Sivven." Pennant's Tour in S. 1772, p. 447.

The same account is given of the origin of the name by Swediaur.

C'est la ressemblance de ces excroissances avec le fruit d'un framboisier sauvage du pays, nommé, dans la langue Celtique, Siwin, que les habitants ont donné le nom de Sivvin, Sibbin, ou Sibbens, a cette maladie. Maladies Syphilitiques, Tom. ii. 380.

"The disease called Sibbins,—has made its appearance once or twice in this parish." P. Menmuir, Forfars. Statist. Acc., v. 146.

Some view this disease as a combination of the venereal with the itch.

2. The itch, Orkn. pron sibbens.

[SIXAREEN, s. A six-oared Norway skiff, Shetl.]

SKAAB, s. The bottom of the sea, Shetl.

[SKAAG, s. Snuff, ibid.]

[SKAAP, s. A bed of mussels attached to stones, ibid. Goth. and Sib. skapa, to procreate.]

[SKAAR, s. A small quantity of anything, a morsel; also, a candle-snuff, ibid.]

SKABIT, part. pa. [Prob. a corr. of cabit, stolen. V. CAB.]

"That Robert Mure of Rowalan sall content and pay—for the skaith sustenit be hir of a miero and a stag [mare and colt] skabit, quhilk scho gat again, xx s." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1493, p. 300.

SKACLES, s. pl. Expl. "people disguised; maskers." Shetl.

This would seem to be allied to Dan. skalk, a cheat; whence the phrase, at skiule skalken, to hide or conceal; skalekuile, a disguise; Teut. schelckeard, homo callidus.

SKADDERIZ'D, SCADDERIZ'D, adj. Dry, withered; applied to a person, Inverness; Wizzen'd synon. Can this have any reference to what is shrunk by scauding or by scauthering, i.e., by the force of heat?

[SKADDIN, adj. and s. Applied to anything that is dry, shrivelled, lean, or thin; skaddins, dried fish, dried turfs; also, lean, scraggy cattle, Banffs.]

Teut. schadde, cespes, gleba; which may be radically allied to Isl. skavid, disjunction, as being separated from the soil. This again is from skaa, a primitive denoting separation. V. SHACE.

SKADDOW, s. Shadow, Ettr. For.

A.-S. scadu, id. It seems probable that c in this and many other instances was sounded hard by the Anglo-Saxons.

To SKAE, v. a. and *n. [1. To happen, to come or bring about, Shetl.]

2. To give a direction to, to take aim with, S. O.; synon. Ettle.

And we will skae them sure.

Old Song.

[Sw. ske, Dan. skeer, to happen, to take place.]

[To SKAED, v. a. To hurt, damage, injure, Shetl. Sw. skada, Dan. skade, id.]

[SKAED, s. Hurt, damage, ibid.; synon. skait.]

To SKAFF, SKAIFF, *v. a. [1. To provide food, to devise means of obtaining it, S.; synon. skegh.

2. To eat greedily, Shetl.]

3. To sponge, to collect by dishonourable means.

[4. To wander about idly; used as a v. n., Banffs.]

He says, Thou skaffs and begs mair beir and aits, Nor ony cripple in Carrick land about.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 54.

Skaife, Chron. S. P., i. 353.

Amongis the Bischopis of the towne,
He played the beggar vp and downe;
—Ane scaffing warlot, wanting schame;
Thrie of thair haikneis he tuk hame,
He beggit buikis, he beggit bowis;
Tacking in earnest, asking in mowes.

Leg. Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 337.

Su.-G. skaif-a, Dan. skaif-er, to provide food. V. SCAFFAR.

SKAFF, s. 1. Provisions; diversion. V. SCAFF.
[2. The act of roaming about idly; also, a person who roams so, Clydes., Banffs.]

[SKAFFAR, SKAFFER, s. A parasite. V. SCAFFAR.]

SKAFFAY, adj. Applied to the inferior practitioners in courts of law, from their supposed eagerness to provide for themselves.

Bot scaffay clerks, with covetyce inspyred,
Till execute thair office maun be hyred.
Na caus thay call unless they hirelings have;
If not, it sall be laid beneath the lave.

Hume, Chron. S. P., iii. 372.

Afterwards scaffing is used as synonym. p. 373.

Sum Senators, as well as scaffing scribes,
Ar blindit oft with blinding buds and bribes;
And mair respects the person nor the cause,
And finds for divers persons divers laws.

SKAFRIE, SCAFFERIE, s. 1. Extortion, unjust methods of procuring money.

"And gif ony women or vthers about simmer treis singand, makis perturbatioun to the Quenis liegis in the passage throw burrowis and vthers landwart townis, the women perturbatouris for skafrie of money or vtherwyse, salbe takin, handellit, and put vponne the cukstulis of euerie burgh, or towne." Acts Mar. 1555, c. 40, Edit. 1566.

"The Lordes of Secret Counsell, and Session, considering the great extortion used by the Writers and Clerkes of all judicatories within this realme, in extorting from the subjects of the country such unreasonable and exorbitant pryces for their writtes, as ought not to be suffered in a well governed commonwealth: Procuring thereby not only private grudges, but publicke exclamations, against the with-gate and libertie graunted unto such shamefull scafferie and extortion," &c. Acts Ja. VI. 1606. V. Acts, 1621, c. 19, Murray.

2. "The contents of a larder or pantry," Sibb. Gl. Sw. scafferi, cella penuaria.

3. The claim of such perquisites as may be viewed as illegal exaction.

When grain was sold, one of the parties, or his servants, had claimed a right to all the samples, and also to what adhered to the sheets in which it was carried.

"Na skaifry sic as sampill & scheit schakin to be tane tharof." Aberd. Reg., A. 1563.

[SKAFFIN, SKAFFAN, s. 1. The act of roaming about idly, Clydes., Banffs.

2. Eating greedily, Shetl.]

SKAFFE, s. A small boat.

—"The burgh of Kinghorne—is—hellelé trublit, and hurt be the skaifis, skeldrykes," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1600. V. SKELDRYKE.

Lat. scaphi-a, Gr. σκάφη, Armor. scaff, Fr. esquis, Germ. scheff, E. skiff.

SKAFFELL, s. Scaffold.

—"Johnne Bynning, seruand to the said maister Archibald [Dowglas]—also repetit the notoriety of his confessionne the tyme of his accusatiounne, and also wponne the scaffell the tyme of his executiounne." Acts Ja. VI., 1581, Ed. 1814, p. 196, 197.

SKAICHER, s. A term used in addressing a child, implying the idea of a sort of good-humoured reprehension, Ang.

Germ. schecker, a wanton, schecker-n, to wanton; Gael. sgiochair, a jackanapes.

[SKAID, adj. Scald, scabby, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 2489.]

[SKAIG, SKAIGG, s. and v. Same with Skeg, q.v., Banffs.]

[SKAIG, adv. With vigour, violently; also, with long, striding step, ibid.]

To SKAIGH, SKEGH, v. a. 1. To obtain any thing by craft or wiles, Clydes.

2. To obtain by any means, ibid.

3. To steal, to filch. This is the only sense in which it is used in Ettr. For., where it is viewed as a slang word.

Ir. Gael. spagham, signifies to sort, to digest; and scrick, to finish, or bring to an end.

[To SKAIGH, SKEGH, v. n. To roam about idly, but with the expectation of obtaining food somehow, S.]

[SKAIGH, SKEGH, SKAIGHIN, SKEGHIN, s. The act of roaming about as above, S.]

SKAIGHER, s. One who obtains any thing by artful means; nearly the same with E. thief; Clydes.

To SKAIK, v. a. 1. To spread, to separate one part of any thing from another, in an awkward or dirty manner, S. B.

It is properly applied to moist substances. A child is said to skaik his porridge, when instead of supping it equally, he spreads it over the plate with his spoon.

2. To bedaub. Clothes are said to be skaikit with dirt or gutters, especially when streaked with it here and there, S. B.

This seems to be a very ancient word, as intimately allied to Isl. skuck-ur, impar. skecke, dispar facio, G. Andr., p. 209. Skacki, inaequalitas, discrimen; Orkneyinga S., p. 168. V. SHACH and SCALET.

To SKAIL, SKAILL, SKALE, v. a. 1. To disjoin, to separate, to disperse; implying the idea of violence, or of the influence of terror, S.

Bot the Kyng rycht manly
Swne skalyd all that cumpany,
And tuk and slwe.

Wyntown, vii. 7. 210.

Skayle is used as the pret., in relation to the dispersion of a fleet.

Bot a storme awa gret thaym skayle,
That thai war drywyn all away.

Ibid., viii. 42. 96.

2. To dismiss, to cause to depart, S.

"The Schiref sall be him self, his Deputis, or Officiaris, send to thay parteis, and charge them to ceis, and skail thair gadderings, and cum in sober and quyet wyis to the court after the forme of the said act." Acts Ja. III., 1487, c. 123, Ed. 1566.

To skail the byke, a metaph. phrase borrowed from a hive of bees, signifying, to disperse the assembly, S.

3. To scatter, disperse, dissipate.

From thenis fordwarde Vlixes mare and mare
With new crimes begouth to affray me sare,
And dangerous rumours amangis the comouns hedis
Skailit and sew of me in diueres stellis.

Doug. Virgil, 41, 47.

Spargere voces, Virg.

A. Bor. "scale; to spread, as manure, gravel, or other loose materials;" Gl. Grose.

Quha skaylis his thought in syndrynes
In ilk thyng it is the les.

Wyntown, viii. 16. 37.

4. To spill, to shed, to scatter; applied to liquids and solids, You will skail your kail, you will spill your broth, S.

"An old seck is ay skailing." Ray's Scot. Prov., p. 280. Divers. Purley, i. 238. The phrase is elliptical, as referring to what it contains, grain, meal, &c.

Mr. Tooke expl. this, "parting, dividing, separating, breaking." Ibid. p. 240. But it is not the sack itself that is skail'd, but the grain contained in it. This is skail'd or dropt out, by reason of the holes in the sack. In Aberdeens. this term is used of dry substances only, spill being always applied to liquids.

It means also to scatter.

Some o'er the furrow'd field hap hastily,—
An' crowding on the fresh-turn'd hillock, skail
Wi' eager nobis, the dusky frozen turf.

Davidson's Poems, p. 143.

This is mentioned as an established prognostic of an approaching storm.

5. To unrip; Skelt, "having the seams unrip," S. B. Gl. Ross.

To her left shoulder too her keek was worn,
Her gartens tint, her shoon a' skelt and torn.

Ross's Helenore, p. 28.

This sense is merely a particular application of the v. as signifying, to disjoin.

6. [To cross, to pass over]; applied to vessels.

Mony a boat skail'd the ferry,
Mony a boat, mony a ship,—

The Dreg-Song, Herd's Coll., ii. 103.

7. To skale down, to shed, to pour out.

I sail apoun thame ane myrk schoure doun skale
Of weilt and wynd, mydlit with felloun hale.

Doug. Virgil, 103, 52.

Infundam, Virg.

8. To Skail a gun, to empty it of its contents, S.

9. To skail house, to give over keeping house, synon. displenis; or perhaps, as denoting the cause, to waste one's domestic property.

"Were it not that want paineth me, I should have skaild house, and gone a begging long since." Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 124.

"Rebellious and disobedient persounis, inhabitanis of Liddisdail,—daylie murtheris and slayis the trew legeis in the defence of thair awn gudis, in sic sort, that divers gude and profitabill landis are laid waist, and mony honest houshaldaris constrainit to skail thair housis." Proclam. 28 May, 1567, Keith's Hist., p. 395, 6.

10. To Skail a proclamation, to recall it, to discharge from its obligation; an old forensic phrase. It occurs with respect to the King's summons to attend the army.

"Quhilk proclamatioun has the strength of an inhibition, to discharge all jugsis criminal to proceed aganis ony persoun that aucht to keip proclamatioun, the samin standand undischargit or skailit." Balfour's Pract., p. 345.

It is here used as if the negative un in undischargit applied also to skailit.

11. To skale a rig, to plough ground so as to make it fall away from the crown of the ridge, S.

12. To Skail a Sege, to raise a siege, by obliging the besieging army to disperse, or to remove from the place.

"Edward, the new king, hearing of his intent and provision, caused ane armie cum and seidge the castel. The said Captane Bruce—send to the counsall of Scotland desiring them to releive him, or ellis to skail the seidge." Pitcottie's Cron., p. 168.

To Glasg^{ow} past, with mony trapit steid,
Thair skail the seige, releuit the castell sone.

Sege, Edinb. Castel, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 289.

Radd. improperly seeks a Fr. origin. Sibb. has mentioned the true origin, but confounds it with Sa.-G. skala, festinanter currere, which has certainly no connexion. It occurs indeed in almost all the Goth. dialects. Sa.-G. Isl. skil-ia, distinguere, separare, A.-S. scyl-an, Belg. scheel-en, schill-en, Mod. Sax. schal-en, id. Sa.-G. skael, Teut. scheele, discrimen, distinctio. This word also appears in Celt. For secoil-an, and sgaol-am, signify to separate, to scatter.

TO SKAIL, SCALE, SCALE, v. n. 1. To part, to separate, one from another. The kirk is skailing; the people, who have been assembled for worship, are parting from each other, S.

Thai skalyt throw the toun in hy;
And brak wp duris sturdely,
And slew all that thai mycht outtak.

Barbour, v. 93, MS.

Isl. skil-ia, unus ab altero recedere; G. Andr., p. 213.

Scale in this sense is used by Hollingshed. Speaking of the retreat of the Welchmen, during the absence of Richard II., he says; "They would no longer abide, but scaled and departed away." Ap. Divers. Purley, ii. 237.

2. To be diffused; applied to tidings or news.

Bot tithandis, that scalis sone
Off this deid that Douglas has done,
Come to the Clyfurd his ere, in hy.

Barbour, v. 447, MS.

It is also used with respect to an offensive smell.

The stynk scalys off ded bodyis sa wyde,
The Scottis abhorl ner hand for to byld.
Wallace, vii. 467, MS.

3. To depart from a place formerly occupied. Thus it is applied to the sailing of vessels, S.
4. To jut outwards, applied to a wall, S. O. V. SILE, SYLE, p. 385.

• SKAIL, SKALE, SCAIL, SCALE, s. 1. A dispersion or separation; as, the skail of the kirk, the dismissal or separation of those who have been assembled for public worship, S.

2. A scattered party, those who fly from battle.

Schyr Adam of Gordoun, that than
Wes becommyn Scottis man,
Saw thaim dryf sua away thair fe;
And wend thai had bene quhone, for he Saw but the fleeing skail perfay,
And them that seazed on the prey.
—Bot then both forray, and the skail,
Were knit into a sop all hail.

Barbour, xv. 337.

The last four lines are from Edit. 1620.

3. A thin shallow vessel, resembling a saucer, made of tin or wood, for skimming the cream off milk, Teviotd.; synon. Reamin'-dish. V. SKEIL, and SKUL, s.

SKAILER, s. A scatterer, a disperser, Clydes.

SKAILIN, SCAILIN, s. A dispersion, the act of scattering, S.

—It sall soon get a scailin!

His bags sall be mouldie nae mair!

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 153.

"The Earl Marischal having sure intelligence of the scailing of the baron's army,—began hastily to convene forces through Angus and Mearns, and comes to Tollo-hill—with about 800 horse and foot." Spalding's Troubles, i. 155.

SKAILMENT, SCALEMENT, s. The act of dispersing, or of driving away, Ettr. For.

SKAIL-WATER, s. The water that is let off by a sluice before it reaches the mill, as being in too great quantity for the proper motion of the mill, Roxb. V. SKAIL, v.

SKAIL-WIND, s. A dispersion, or that which causes it, S.

—"You shall all be scattered every man to his own, and shall leave me alone yet, for as sicker as you are. You are sure enough now, but beware of the next blast that is to blow, it will make a skailwind among you." Serm. by Mich. Bruce, 4to, 1709, p. 13.

The term seems to have been originally applied to denote the effects of a storm in dispersing ships. V. SKAIL, v. a. sense 1.

SKALIT down, part. adj. In a dishevelled state.

The samyn tyme the Troianis madynnes quhite
With hare down skalit all sorrowful can pas
Vnto the temple of the greuit Pallas.

Doug. Virgil 23, 2.

VOL. IV.

Skail is used, rather anomalously, as the part. pa. And the religious nun with hare down skail,
Thre hundreth goldis with hir mouth rowpit sche.
Doug. Virgil, 117, 53.

SKAILDRAIK, SKELDRAKE, s. The shield-drake or burrough Duck, Anas todarna, Linn.

—"They discharge any persons whatsoever—to sell or buy any—Schidderems, Skaildraik, Herron, Butter, or any sik kynde of fowllea." Acts Ja. VI, 1600, c. 23.

In Orkney it is called "skel-goos;"—sometimes—skelwing-goose or skel-duck; in Shetland scale-drake." Neill's Tour, p. 195, 196.

Perhaps so named from Su.-G. skael, ratio, facultas intelligendi; for the same reason that it is called chenaloyer or the fox-goose, by the ancients, and is still designed the styggoose by the inhabitants of Orkney?

Grose assigns another reason. Explaining A. Bor. sheld, party-coloured, flecked or speckled, he adds: "Hence sheld-drake and sheld-fowl. South."

SKAILLIE, SKAILYIE; s. Blue slate used for covering houses, S. B.

"That the heretors of such houses as are alreadie thaicked with thack and straw (if the same thacke, and straw-roofs shall hereafter at any time become ruinous) shall bee astricted to thaick the same againe with sklaite, or skailie, lead, tyld, or thacke-stone." Acts Ja. VI., 1621, c. 26.

A distinction is here made between skailie and thacke-stone, similar to that which is retained, S. B.; the name skailie being confined to blue slates, while the flat stones, commonly used instead of them, are called brown sklates.

"Narrest the Wolfis iyle layes ane iyllane, callit ane Erische, Leid-Ellan-Belnachua, quhairin ther is fair skailie aneuche." Monroe's Isles, p. 9.

Rudd. writes this skelly, vo. Skellyis.

Skailly is sometimes expressly distinguished from slate.

"Here is to be found marle, and kylestone, free-stone and whinstone, slait and skailly, as good as the kingdom affords." Pennecuik's Tweeddale, p. 5.

The Dutch call those slates, which are taken from the rock in lamina, and used for covering houses, schalie. Moes.-G. skal-jos, tiles, tiling, Luke, v. 19. pl. of skal-ja, a shell, a tile. Hence perhaps the Isl. name for a roof, skali. The origin might seem to be Su.-G. skil-ja, disjungere, from the circumstance of these slates being found in lamina. Ihre, however, directs to a different one. V. SKYLE, v. Hence, SKAILLIE-BURD, SKEILLIE-BROD, s. A writing slate, S.

SKAILLIE-PEN, SKEILLIE-PEN. A sort of pencil of soft slate used for taking memorandums, or writing accounts, on a slate, S.

To SKAIR, v. a. and n. To frighten, to take fright, S. B. V. SKAR.

[SKAIR, SKEER, s. A fright, surprise, ibid.]

[SKAIR-LOOKIN, SKAIR-LEUKIN, SKAIR-LIKE, adj. Having a wild or frightened look, Clydes., Banffs.]

SKAIR, s. 1. A share, Ang. Loth.

The Courteour replyit agane,
Saying, That reassoun is bot vane:

F 2

To say a man may do na mair,
Bot serue a kirk untill his skair.
Diail. Clerk and Courtour, p. 17.
God grant him an unmeasur'd skair,
Of a' that grac'd his great forbeers!
Ramsay's Works, i. 103.

2. One of the parts of a fishing rod; as, the hand-skair, the lowest part, the head-skair, the highest part, S. B.

3. The sliced end of each part, to which that of another part is fastened, S. A.

4. A bare place on the side of a hill. V. SCAR.

[A.-S. scæar, a share]: Su.-G. skær-a, dissecare, dividere; skæra, lut, partes hæreditatis dividere. Dan. skærer, scindere, Isl. sker-a, secare; A.-S. scyr-an, partiri.

[To SKAIR, v. a. To share, divide, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 4391.]

SKAIRS, SKARS, s. pl. Rocks through which there is an opening, S. Some rocks on our coast are thus denominated, which have such an aperture that a ship may sail through it.

Su.-G. skær, a rock, Alem. scorr, O. Belg. schorre, Gr. σκαρος, id. The root is supposed to be Su.-G. skær-a, to cut, to divide; as klipp-a, a rock, from Hipp-a, to cut. These are also called Kairs.

Hence apparently the name of Skerries, given to several broken islands in Shetland. Brand, p. 92. V. SKERRY.

SKAIR FURISDAY. V. SKIRISFURISDAY.

SKAIRGIFNOCK, SKERRIEGIFNOT, SKIRGIFFIN, s. A girl just entering into the state of puberty, a half-grown female; corresponding with Hobble-de-hoy, as applied to a male, Ayrs.

The form of this word indicates a Gothic origin. It may perhaps be resolved q. Isl. skir-gefn, purgare donatus, or datus, as referring to the time of life.

SKAIR-SKON, s. A kind of thin cake, made of milk, meal or flour, eggs beaten up, and sugar, baked and eaten on Fasten's-een or Shrove-Tuesday, Aberd., Mearns. [In West of S. called Kar-Scon.] V. SOOTY-SKON.

[SKAIR-TAFT, s. The farthest aft thoft, Shetl.]

SKAIRTH, SCAIRCH, adj. Scarce.

"Diueris and andrie persones—hes vit all the saidis indirect means in slaying of the saidis wyld foule and bestiall, quhairby this cuntrey—is becum altogidder scairth of sic wairis." Acts Ja. VI., 1600, Ed. 1814, p. 236. Skairch, ibid., p. 180, may have originated from reading t as c; or perhaps the word was then pronounced as if terminated by ch hard.

SKAIRTHIE, s. Scarcity.

"Ane of the greitest occasionis of the skairthie of the saidis partridgis and murefoull, is be ressoun of the greit slauchttis of thair poultis and young anis, quhen as for youth nather ar thai abill to gif pastyme, and for quantitie can nawyis be ane greit refreschment." Acts Ja. VI., 1590, Ed. 1814, p. 181. Scarstie, in the parallel act, ibid., p. 236.

SKAITBIRD, s. The Arctic Gull.

Ignorant elf, ape, owl, irregular,
Skaldit skaitbird and common skandelar.
Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 49.

Here the Poet seems to allude to the Arctic Gull or Dunghunter, Larus Parasiticus, Linn. "All writers that mention it," says Pennant, "agree, that it has the property of pursuing the lesser gulls so long, that they mute for fear, and that it catches up their excrements before they fall into the water; from which the name." Zool., p. 534. Others assert, that it only forces them to vomit up their newly swallowed food, which it devours.

Kennedy seems to have believed that this fowl attacked the bird which it pursued, by pouring forth its excrement. Hence most probably the epithet of skaldit. The name skaitbird, according to this idea, may be from Su.-G. skit-a, cacare; especially as in some places it is called shite-scouter, S. V. AULIN and SCOUTIALLAN.

SKAITH, SCATH, s. 1. Hurt, damage, in whatever way, S.

—Ha, how grete harme, and skaiith for euermare
That child has caught, throw lesing of his moder!
Doug. Virgil, 79, 23.

It is often conjoined with the word Scorn; as denoting blame, or reproach, S.

"One does the scathe, and another gets the scorn;" S. Prov.; "Spoken when one is blam'd for another man's mistake." Kelly, p. 272.

There is another Prov. still more emphatical, used when the same person both suffers the injury and bears the blame of it; "I get baith the skaiith and the scorn," S.

"Foul fa' the randy—to gie me baith the skaiith and the scorn." Saxon and Gael, i. 65. V. RANDY, s.

Scathe is used in the same sense, E. I mention the word in this acceptation, merely to observe that in Aug. it is pron., as would seem, nearly in the Goth. mode, skaid, or q. skaidt. Isl. skade, Su.-G. skada, id. Moes.-G. skath-jan, A.-S. scæth-an, Belg. schaed-en, Germ. schad-en, nocere.

2. Injury supposed to proceed from witchcraft, S. Thus men or cattle are said to have gotten skaiith, when it is believed that the disease, which affects them, proceeds from preternatural influence.

"Superstition yet continues to operate so strongly on some people, that they put a small quantity of salt into the first milk of a cow after calving, that is given any person to drink. This is done with a view to prevent skaiith, if it should happen that the person is not cany [i. canny]. A certain quantity of cow dung is forced into the mouth of a calf, immediately after it is calved, or at least before it receives any meat; owing to this, the vulgar believe that witches and fairies can have no power ever after to injure the calf." P. Kilearn, Stirl. Statist. Acc., xvi. 121, 122.

G. Andr. observes, that Skade is the name of Janthes or Ate in the Edda. Hence, he says, skade, loss, injury, and skad-a, to hurt. I need scarcely add that with the Romans Ate was the goddess of revenge, a principle supposed to be predominant with all witches.

SKAITHLESS, SCAITHLESS, adj. 1. Innocent, without culpability, S.

"It was a true ye tell'd me about Westburnflat; but he's sent back Grace safe and scathless; see there's nae ill happened yet, but what may be suffered and sustained." Black Dwarf, p. 207.

2. Uninjured, without receiving hurt, S.

In this sense Chaucer uses scathelesse.

SKAITHLIE, adj. Injurious, hurtful, Ettr. For.; synonym with E. Scatheful.

Yet wad she clasp thy towzy pow:
Thy greesome grips were never skaithtly.

Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 184.

The term is often used substantively, as a name for a young person who is a complete roimp. It is common to say of such a one, That's Skaithtlie.

A. S. scæthig is the correspondent term. But our word is from skaitth and lic, q. similis noxae; and is more immediately allied to Teut. schaedelick, damnosus, noxius.

SKAITHIE, SKATHIE, s. 1. A fence or shelter occasionally made of those stakes called stuckins and ropes; also of bunches of straw tied with ropes, set on end and pinned to the wall, placed before the outer door, towards the quarter whence the wind comes, Roxb., Banffs.

2. This name is also given to a wall, made of stone and turf, and sometimes of boards, erected on the outside of a door to ward off the wind, ibid.

Su.-G. skydde, protection, from skyld-a, tueri. Teut. schaede and schaeduwe, umbra, seem to claim a common origin with skydde.

SKAIVIE, adj. Harebrained; applied to one who acts as if in a delirium, or on the borders of insanity, S.

"He means mad," said the party alluded to.—"Ye have it—ye have it—that is not clean skirie, but"—Here he stopped," &c. Redgauntlet, ii. 144.

Sibb. writes also schary, rendering it "wode, i.e., mad," and seems to derive it from schaw, a wood.

As the term denotes obliquity of mind, it is evidently from Isl. skeif-r, Sw. skéf, Dan. skiaev, Belg. Germ. schief, obliquus; q. having the mind awry or distorted. A. Bor. scæfe, wild, as, a scæfe lad, a wild youth, (Gl. Grose), may be viewed as originally the same. V. SHACH.

[SKAIVIE, *s. 1. A trick, prank; also, whatever results from a mad prank or folly; hence,

2. Disappointment, affront; as, "He got an unco skavie," Banffs. V. SHAVIE.]

[To SKAIVIE, *v. n. To go about in an idle, silly manner; also, to play pranks: part. pr. skaviein, used also as a s., ibid.]

[TO SKAIVLE, v. a. and *n. 1. To put out of shape, to twist, S. V. SKAVLE.]

2. To walk with a tottering gait, or with some silly affected air, Banffs.]

[SKAIVLIN, SKAIVLAN. 1. As an adj., having a twisted or tottering gait, ibid.

2. As a s., the act of walking as in s. 2 of v., ibid.]

SKALD, s. A scold. V. SCOLD, SCALD.

A skog, a scornar, a skald.

Colkelbie Sow, F. l. v. 99.

SKALDOCKS, s. pl. Apparently the same with SKELLOCHS, q. v.

"Rapistrum arvorum, skaldocks." Wedderb. Vocab., p. 18.

SKALE, SKAIL, s. "A skimming dish, or vessel of that form or size," Gl. Sibb.; generally Reaming-skale, Peebles and Selkirks. [V. under SKAIL, v.]

Gael. scala is expl. "a bowl or bason;" ibid.

SKALIS, s. pl. [Shells, an old form of drinking cup.]

Among articles purchased for the royal household, A. 1511, are—"Item, xij magni cippi vocat. Skalis ad usum aule liberat. ciphariis iij s. vi d."

L. B. ciphus denotes a cup or goblet, the same with scyphus, a name given to the consecrated vessel that contained "the wine which was offered in the sacrifice of the mass." Du Cange.

This is evidently the same with Isl. skiola, vas quo arida vel liquida metiri consueverunt. Verel. Ind.

SKALK, s. A bumper of whiskey taken by the Hebridians, in the morning.

"They are not a drunken race, at least I never was present at much intemperance; but no man is so abstemious as to refuse the morning dram, which they call a skalk." Journey West. Isl., Johnson's Works, viii. 270, 271.

Gael. sgailc, id. But the term was probably left by the Norwegians, as corr. from Dan. Sw. kalk, a cup. V. CAWKER.

SKALL, SKELL, s. A term used to express that one has a right, in grinding, to the next turn of the mill, in preference to another who has come to the place after him, S. B.

This may be traced to the old Isl. auxiliary v. skal, by Halderson rendered Debeo. This Ihere views as the present indicative of Su.-G. skol-a, debere, aliquid praestandum habere. He explains it as analogous to Gr. μᾶλλον.

SKALLAG, SCALLAG, s. A kind of bond-servant, who carries kelp, and does all the hard work; a term used in the Long Island.

"The scallag, whether male or female, is a poor being, who, for mere subsistence, becomes a prelia slave to another, whether a subtenant, a tacksman, or a laird.—Five days in the week he works for his master: the sixth is allowed to himself, for the cultivation of some scrap of land, on the edge of some moss or moor." J. Lane Buchanan's Travels in the W. Hebrides, p. 7.

Gael. scalog, or rather sgallag, a man-servant. The word has undoubtedly been imported into the Western Islands by the Norwegians. Moes.-G. skalk, A.-S. scalc, Su.-G. Isl. skalk, servus; a name given, as Wachter observes, both to slaves and to free servants. Hence Marescalc, the modern Marshal, &c.

SKALRAG, adj. Having a shabby appearance; given as synonym with Disjaskit, Selkirks.

It is most probably compounded of skail, to scatter, and E. rag, as equivalent to tatterdemalion; q. "one who gives his rags to the wind." I prefer this to deriving the term from Isl. skell-a, (pret. skall) quati, and ragr, pavidus, q. to shake from fear.

SKALRAG, s. A tatterdemalion, ibid.

SKALV, s. The straw netting that contains fishing-lines, Shetl.

SKALVE, s. Snow in broad flakes, Shetl.

This seems perfectly synonym with E. flake. For Serenius gives Sw. skal-a, whence skolve, as signifying to flake. It also corresponds, in a general sense, with S. Skolve, q. v.

[SKAM, s. A spot or blemish, Shetl. Dan. and Sw. skam, shame, dishonour. Synon. scam.]

SKAMBLE, SKAMYLL, SKAYMLE, s. 1. A bench, a form.

Thai xxx dayis his band thai durst nocht slaik,
Quhill he was lundyn on a skamyll off ayk,
With ym chenyeis that was bath stark and keyn.
Wallace, xi. 1352, MS.

It occurs in the same sense in a plural form. "Ane skaymlis of tre at the fysche cors for laying of the fische thairupounne." Aberd. Reg., A. 1551, V. 21. A.-S. scaemel, scaemel, scamol, id.

2. Skambles, shambles.

The fleachers' skambles ar gane dry;
The hieland men bringis in na ky.

Mailland Poems, p. 182.

S. B. skemmils denotes the butchers' market; from the tables or benches on which the meat is exposed. Seren. derives the E. word, rather whimsically, from Isl. skemma, domus brevis, skamr, brevis.

SKAMBLER, SKAMLAR, SCAMBLER, s. [A parasite, a meal-time visitor. Synon. scorner, scourger.]

"The les slauchter wes maid, becaus the maist parte of the knichtis and men of armis—war passand like skamlaris throw the cuntre." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 405. Lixae, Lat. scullions, drudges.

Johnson gives Scambler as "Scottish," signifying "a bold intruder upon one's generosity at table."

"It is well ken'd your father's son was never a scambler." "One that goes about among his friends for meat, by the Irish called a Cosharer," N. Kelly, p. 274.

Serenius expl. Scambler by Sw. skamhund, skamgaest, parasitus. Verelius renders Isl. skamhund, impudens canis, equivalent to Sw. skamloes hund, q. "a shameless dog." But it is very questionable, if our term has any affinity to this. It may perhaps be traced to A.-S. scamol, a bench, a stall on which butchers expose their meat; q. one who ranges about in quest of scraps.

To SKANCE. V. SCANCE.

SKANES, s. pl. Scurf of the head appearing among the hair; or, the exfoliation of the cuticle, Roxb.

C. B. yegen, id., morpew, dandriff; yagen-u, to generate scurf or dandriff. Isl. skaeni, membrana, the outer skin or cuticle; skaening-r, crustula membranacea, also furfures, Halderson. Teut. skan, crusta, cortex; Mod.-Sax. schin, furfures capitis, furfuraceae squamulae capitis. Scheene, lamina, lamella, may be viewed as a cognate term.

[SKANS, s. Scandal, obloquy, Shetl. V. SKAM.]

[SKANT, adj. Scanty, scarce, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 753.]

[SKANT, adv. Scarcely, hardly, Barbour, xx. 434, Herd's Ed.]

SKANT, SCANTH, s. Scarcity.

And thus grete skant of time, and besy care,
Has made my werk mare subtil and obscure,
And not so plesand as it aucht to be.

Doug. Virgil, 434, 23.

—The scanth of men ye set nocht by,
And mortall weris contemptis and comptis not.

Ibid. 30, 5.

V. ROOVE, sense 2.

"Scot. they say scanth and want," Rudd.

Rudd., it has been seen, observes that in S. they say "scanth and want." It is used at least more commonly in a different form, by the interposition of the conjunction nor.

"Monro having gotten this strong strength thus beyond his expectation, with so little pains, whilk was neither for scant nor want given over, he returns back again to Strathboggie triumphantly, beginning where he left, to plunder horse and armour, and to fine every gentleman, yeoman, herd and herdsman that had any money, without respect." Spalding, i. 239, 240.

"The Laird in his lifetime maintained a rough and free hospitality; and, as his kindred and acquaintance expected, there was neither scant nor want at his burial." The Entail, i. 66.

It is obviously a pleonasm, signifying that there was abundance.

The term is still used in another proverbial phrase; "Skant o' checks maks a lang nose," S.

Jun. derives E. scant, adj., from Dan. skan-a, skon-a, parcere; but Seren., with greater probability, from Isl. skam-r, brevis, [skemt-a, dividere, proportionari,] as originally signifying that anything is too short for the use for which it was intended.

SKANTACK, s. A set line, with a number of baited hooks on it, used for catching fish by night, in a river, lake, or pond; Moray.

The last syllable is probably tack, as denoting the act of catching fishes. Whether the first has any relation to E. skaine, or S. skeenyie, as signifying that they are caught by a cord or line, I shall not pretend to determine.

SKAP, s. Head, scalp.

To—skonce my skap and shanks frae rain
I bure me to a biel.

Vision, Evergreen, l. 213.

[SKAPELLARYE, SKAPLARIE, s. Scapulary, a vestment worn by friars, Lyndsay, Exper. and Court, l. 5853, Thrie Estaitis, l. 3628.]

SKAPTYNE, s. The practice of extortion.

"The regrating of this burcht, and skaptyne of the parcomentis of the samyne, in selling of deir mot-torne & lamis." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

Skapt seems to have been used as a frequentative from Skaf, v., to collect by dishonourable means.

To SKAR, SKAIR, v. a. and n. 1. To frighten; to take fright, to be affrighted, S.; [part. pa., skard, frightened, Lyndsay.]

Duel no langare, but cum hiddir in haist
Ne skar not at his freyndis face as aue gaist.

Doug. Virgil, 214, 62.

A horse that scars is one that is easily startled, or takes fright at any objects on the road, S.; a skair horse, id., S. B.

Johas, after Skinner, derives E. scare, to affright, from Ital. scarare, consternare: Sibb. thinks that it is "perhaps originally the same with schair," to threaten: But Seren., after referring to the Ital. word, mentions Isl. skora, provocare, scorast, diffugere. But the cognate term is undoubtedly Isl. skiar, vitabundus, Ihre; refugas, Verel. From the former we learn that Su.-G. skyyg, which he makes synonym. with Isl. skiar, is used precisely in the same sense with S. skair, in relation to a horse. Usurpatur frequentissime de equo, qui re quavis territus a via deflectit; Ihre vo. Sky. Skiarrast, pavidissimus, Edd. Saemund. The root is Su.-G. sky, vitare.

SKAR, SCAR, adj. 1. Timorous, easily affrighted or startled, S.; skair, S. B.

The uther sayis, Thocht ye wes skar,
Me think that now ye cum our nar.

Dialog. sine titulo. Reign Q. Mary.

Qahilkis ar nocht skar to bar on far fra bourdis.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 201.

"He began to retract, and to say that the old man was coming to ride on the horse behind him, and the horse being scar, he twice threw him off, and so he broke his neck." Fountainhall's Decisions, i. 59.

A. Bæ. "skare or skair, wild, timid, shy;" Grose.

2. Shy, affectedly modest, S.; skeigh, synonym.

And Bess was a braw thumpin kittie,
For Habbie just feer for feer;
But she was (and wasna't a pity?)
As skittish and scare as a deer.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 294.

And now cam the night o' feet washin',
And Bessie look'd mim and scare.

Ibid., p. 295.

3. Scrupulous in religious matters.

"Ye se thairfoir that ye ar mair skar nor vas S. Hieron, quha vald not separat him self from communion with the kirk of Rome, quhatsumeuer corruption of maneris he did persaeue in sum priuat personis." Nicol Burne, F. 132, a.

SKAR, SKARE, s. 1. A fright; [also, whatever causes fright or fear], S. skair, S. B.

I trow, friend Neil, your heart has got a skare.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 153.

But O the skair I got into the pool!

I thought my heart had coup'd frae its hool.

Ross's Helenore, p. 43.

2. A scarecrow, an object of terror.

Corr. Ar ye not with the King familiar?

O. Couns. That an I not, my lord, full wais me!

Bot lyk ane brybour halden at the bar;

Thay play Bokeik, even as I war a skar.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 148.

[SKAR-CRAW, s. 1. An effigy set in a potato field to scare away the crows, a scarecrow; synonym. tattie-bogle, West of S.

2. A term applied to a ragged, torn down person; to a lean, scraggy creature; also, to any object of disgust or terror, ibid.]

SKAR-GAIT, adj. Easily startled; applied to a horse that skars on the road or gait, Renfr.

SKARALE, s. Squirrel. Ital. sciriuolo, id.

"For a tymmer of skarale, ii. d.; For ane hundreth gragries and skarale, dicht and lade, viii. d.; For ilk otter skin, ane halfpeny." Balfour's Pract., p. 86, Tit. Custumis.

[To SKARE, v. a. To unite two pieces of wood by fitting them to each other and then overlapping them; as in a fishing rod. The juncture is called a skare, so also is each piece, and also the sliced or fitted end of each piece. West of S., Shetl. V. SKAIR.]

SKARES, s. pl. Rocks in the sea, S.

"They are either violently brought back into the sea, by the rage thereof, broken upon rocks, and driven upon skares, or else by the sworle of the seas, sunke in the waves thereof." Descr. of the Kingdom of Scotlande.

This is merely a variety of SKAIRS, q. v.

SKARMUSCHE, s. A skirmish.

"At last, they met togidder at ane skarmusche, in quhilk Remus always wes slane." Bellend., T. Liv., p. 13. Fr. escarmouche, id. V. SCARM, v.

SKARRACH, s. 1. A flying shower, a temporary blast of foul weather; Ang., Fife. skift, flist, synonym.

Isl. skur, pluvia momentanea, Su.-G. id. Dicitur de grandine vel pluvia copiosius et fortius ruente; Ihre. Moes.-G. skura vindis, procella magna venti. Mr. Tooke ingeniously views E. shower, A.-S. scur, as literally meaning, "broken, divided, separated, (subaud. clouds)." Divers. Purley, ii. 172.

2. A considerable quantity of drink, Loth.

This seems merely a metaph. use of the same word; q. as much as to wet one.

SKARSMENT, s. [A projecting or separating line in the roof of a building. V. SCARSEMENT.]

Pinnakillis, fyellis, turnpekkis mony one,
Gilt birneist torris, quhilk like to Phebus schone,
Skarsment, reprise, corbell, and battellingis—
Thair might be sene.

Palice of Honour, iii. 17.

SKART, s. A cormorant. V. SCARTH.

[To SKART, SKRAT, SCRAUT, v. a. and n.
1. To scratch, scrape; also, to scatter, S.
V. SCART.]

2. To collect or gather slowly and carefully, S.

3. To make a scraping or rasping noise, S.]

[SKART, SKRAT, SCRAUT, s. 1. A scratch, scrape, S.

2. A slight tasting, a very small quantity; as, a skart o' saut, i.e., a few grains of salt: just as a large amount is called a claut, as in a claut o' siller, Clydes.

3. A scraping or rasping sound, ibid. V. SCART.]

SKARTFREE, adj. Without injury, S. V. SCART, v.

SKARTH, s. [Cormorant, used as a term of contempt. V. SCART.]

Worlin wanworth, I warn thee it is written,
Thou skyland skarth, thou has the hurle behind.
Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 57.

—Ane scabbitt skarth, ane scorpion, ane scutarde behind.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 48.

To SKASHILE, v. n. To quarrel, to squabble, to wrangle, Aberd. V. SCASH, id.

SKASHILE, s. A squabble, a wrangle, ibid.

To SKAT, SKATT, v. a. To tax, to levy.

This Revin I likin till a fals crownar,
Qubhik hes a porteous of the endytment,
And passis furth befor the justice air,
All misdoaris to bring till jugement:
But luke gif he be of a trow intent,
To skraip out Johne, and wryt in Will of [or] Wale,
—And so a bad at bayth the parteis skat.
Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 113.

“The tounne is haely murmowrit be the landmen, that the wittall byaris of the merkatt scattis thame gryttie in taking of sampillis, scheyt schakkingis, & sic order ewill visit custum,” &c. Aberd. Reg. A. 1541,
V. 17.

A.-S. scat, a part, share, also rent, cess, Su.-G.
skat, Teut. schat, id. Hence it is still said, to pay one's skot, i.e., his share of a reckoning.

[SKATCHES, SKATCHERS, s. pl. Skates; skatcher, skaitcher, a skater, West of S. V. SKETCHERS.]

The forms Skatches and Skaitchers are also used: the ai sounded as in aile.]

SKATE, SKAIT, s. A paper-kite, sometimes called a Dragon, Teviotdale, Renfrs.

Perhaps something that is darted or shot forth;
A.-S. scat, jaculatus est, scyt, jactus.

* SKATE, s. A term of contempt, S. B.

Gin I had here the skypel skate,
Sae weel's I shou'd him bang!
Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 125.
Jog on your gate, ye bladderskate.
Maggie Lauder, Herd's Coll., ii. 72.

It seems prob. that this term originated from the name of the fish thus called; which, by reason of its ungraceful form, is generally held in little estimation.

SKATE, SKAITIE-PURSE, s. The ovarium of the skate, Mearns. Crow-purse, Orkin.

SKATE-RUMPLE, s. A meagre, awkward-looking person, S.; from the supposed resemblance to the hinder part of the fish that bears this name; synon. Skrae.

SKATE-SHEERS, s. pl. The name given by fishermen to the sexual appendages on the body of the male skate, Frith of Forth.

“The male has not only his pectoral fins studded with spines, but he possesses long sharp-edged appendages on the lower part of his body, with which he lays hold of the female; and fishers call these appendages skate-sheers, from their resemblance to the blades of a pair of scissors.” Neill's List of Fishes, p. 27.

SKATHIE, s. A fence. V. SKAITHIE.

SKATIE-GOO, s. The Skua Gull, Larus Cataractes, Linn., Mearns.

To SKATT, SCATT, v. a. To tax. V. SCATT.

SKAU, SKEW, s. A state of ruin, or destruction, Aberd.; from Isl. skag-a, deflection, or its root ska, a primitive particle denoting disjunction. Skae signifies noxa, to which we may trace S. skait, E. scath.

To SKAUD, SKAUDE, SCAUD, v. a. To scald; [to parboil; as, to scaud milk]; pron. skadd, S. V. SCAD.

Cartoun, for dreid thay suld his lippis skande,
Durst neuer twiche this vark for laike of knalage.
Doug. Virgil, Pref., 7. 42.

[I'm sure sma' pleasure it can gie,
Evin to a deil,

To skelp an' scaud poor dogs like me,
An' hear us squeel!

Burns, Address to the Deil, s. 2.]

Fr. exchaud-er, Ital. scald-are, id. Belg. schaud-en, schoud-en, adurere. Hickes derives E. scald from Isl. skald-a, calvum facere, glabrare; A.-S. Gram., p. 229.

To SKAUDE, SKAD, v. n. When any part of the body is galled and inflamed, in consequence of heat, it is said to skad, S.

[SKAUD, SCAD, s. A scald, or the mark of it; also, a galled or inflamed part of the body, Clydes.]

To SKAUM, SCAME, v. a. To scorch, to singe, to burn slightly; applied rather to clothes, &c., than to persons, S.

“M'Donald—wrote to the committee of Murray then sitting in Auldearn a charge, with a fiery cross of timber, whereof every point was scamed and burnt with fire, commanding all manner of men within that country to rise and follow the king's Lieutenant and marquis of Montrose, under the pain of fire and sword.” Spalding, ii. 216.

SKAUM, s. The act of singeing clothes by putting them too near the fire, or by means of a hot iron; also, the appearance produced by this; a slight mark of burning, S.

SKAUMMIT, part. adj. Having a mark produced by fire or a hot iron, S.

Sw. skamm-a, a stain; from Isl. kaam, id. macula, levis contaminatio; kaam-a, maculo, leviter inquino; G. Andr.

SKAUR-WRANG, adj. Quite wrong, totally out of the way; used in a moral sense, Loth.

If not from Sker, Skar, laevus; perhaps the original idea was, "wrong like a horse that starts out of the road." V. SKAR.

[SKAVE, adj.] Oblique, awry, out of shape, Shetl.]

SKAVIE, s. A trick, a prank, Aberd. V. SHAVIE.

[To SKAVIE, v. n.] To play pranks, ibid.]

To SKAVLE, v. a. To put out of shape, Shetl.; synon. with S. Shevel. [V. SKAIVLE.]

Immediately from Dan. skiaev, askew. The cognate terms in the northern languages are given under the v. to Shack.

SKAW, s. A scall of any kind, S.

"Nocht two myllis fra Edinburgh is ane fontane dedicat to Sanct Katrine, quhair sternis of oulie springis ithandle.—This fountane rais throw ane drop of Sanct Katrynis oulie, quhilk was brocht out of Mont Synay fra hir sepulture to Sanct Margaret the blissit queene of Scotland.—This oulie hes ane singulare virtew aganis all maner of cankir and skawis." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 10. Cutis scabrities, Boeth.

[SKAW, s.] A promontory, Shetl. V. SCAW.]

SKAWBERT, SKAWBURN, s. A scabbard.

"Ane Frence repar [rapier] with ane Scottis skawbert thairone, gardit with blak hiltis of the rowand faissoun, and the neif wevpit with black virge thred." Aberd. Reg. A. 1543, V. 18.

"Item—6 quarters of vellous, for covering of a sword.—Item, a pyrn of gold, for a skawburn to the samyn." A. 1474. Borthwick's Brit. Antiq., p. 135.

Merely a corruption. G. Douglas writes scalbert.

SKAYCHT, s. Damage; for Skayth.

"Requyrit hir to borrow in hir cow, & mend the skaycht." Aberd. Reg., A. 1543, V. 18.

SKAYMLIS, s. A bench. V. SKAMYLL.

SKEAN, SKEIN, SKENE, s. A dirk, a short dagger; a knife which serves either for stabbing or carving, S.

"Skene of that ilk in Aberdeenshire, carries gules, three dirks, or skeins, paleways in fesse argent,—supported as by many wolves' heads of the third." Nisbet's Heraldry, i. 324.

The ancient family, here referred to, is supposed to have taken its name from a circumstance connected with the use of this weapon. "The first of this family is said to have been of the family of Macdonald who killed, with a skain, a wolf in presence of one of our kings, from whence he took his surname Skene, and called his lands in Aberdeenshire after his name. John le Skeen was one of the arbitrators at Berwick, between the Bruce and Baliol, as in Prynn's History." Nisbet, ubi sup.

Johnson has given this word, but as Irish and Erse, that is, Gaelic. In both these languages, sgian signifies a knife. He also mentions A.-S. saene, as synonymous. Somner writes it saene, which he expl. "gladius, ensis; a sword, or skeine." He seems to have viewed these words as originally the same. C.B. yagi-en, "a cutter,—a scymeter, a large knife;" yagi-aw, to cut away. Isl. skain-a, to wound.

SKENE-OCCLE, s. A concealed dirk, Highl.

"'Her ain sell,' said Callum, 'could wait for her a wee bit frae the toun, and kittle his quarters wi' her skeno-occle.' 'Skeno-occle? what's that?' Callum unbuttoned his coat, raised his left arm, and with an emphatic nod, pointed to the hilt of a small dirk, snugly deposited under it, in the lining of his jacket." Waverly, ii. 105, 106.

Occle is perhaps formed from ceil-am, to conceal, coighil, coigle, secret; q. "a concealed dirk."

I have heard it derived, however, from asquil or ach-lain, the armpit, because it is concealed under the arm.

[SKEB, s.] A large basket made of straw, used for holding corn; containing about four kishies or cazzies, Shetl. Su.-G. skep, a vessel.]

SKEBEL, s. A mean worthless fellow, Roxb.

"My very bluid began to rise at being chased by twa skebels." Brownie of Bodsb. i. 42. V. SKYBALD.

To SKECK, SKEIK, v. a. "To husband, to guide," Shetl.

Dan. skikt-er, to rate, to order or dispose of a thing; Su.-G. Isl. skick-a, ordinare, sese gerere.

SKEE, s. A small house. V. SKEO.

[SKEE, SKAE, s.] Excrement, Shetl.; skae, liquid excrement, Banffs.]

[To SKEE, v. n.] Cacare, Shetl. Su.-G. skita, Dan. skide, id.]

[SKEEB, s.] A large knife, or other cutting instrument; also, a staff or stick, Banffs.]

[To SKEEB, v. n.] 1. To go about in a silly manner, flourishing a knife or stick, ibid.]

2. To act in a silly, vain, or trifling manner when carrying anything, ibid.]

[SKEEB, adv.] With silly boast or vain parade, ibid.]

[SKEEBIN, SKEEBAN, s.] The act of going about, as given under the v., ibid.]

SKEEBRIE, s. Thin light soil, Ang. scalp, scaup, synon.

Perhaps allied to Su.-G. skofsee, a covering, Teut. schubbe, a scurf, or rather to Ir. scarab. V. next word.

SKEEBROCH, s. Very lean meat, Galloway. Ir. scabar, thin, lean. Kebrach is synonym. Loth.

SKEEG, s. The smallest portion of any thing. No a skeeg to the fore, not a fragment remaining, Ang., Fife.

Isl. skick, indumentum pariale; skiki, pars sequior lacerae vestis; Dan. skik, a shape.

To SKEEG, v. a. To lash, to flog.

Quhan words he found, their elritch sound
Was like the norian blast,
Frae yon deep glack, at Catia's back,
That skeegs the dark-brown waste.

Minstrelsy Scot. Border, iii. 359.

The term literally signifies to lash or scourge, S. B. It may possibly be an oblique use of Skegg, q. to cause to move nimbly. If we may trust Bullet, skig-ia is a Celt. word, signifying, to cut, to slice, to strike. Arm. skai, to knock, to bang. Su.-G. sweg denotes a green bough used as a rod or scourge.

Skeg, id., Aberd., Moray. V. SKEG.

SKEEG, SKEEGIT, s. A stroke on the naked breech, Mearns; [skeegit, a blow, Banffs.]

SKEEG, adv. He played skeeg; a phrase used of one who suddenly becomes bankrupt, Fife.

Allied to the v. Skeeg, to lash, q. "He failed like the smack of a whip;" or to Su.-G. skykg-a, subterfugere.

SKEEGGERS, s. pl. A whip; properly, one made of sedges, used by boys in playing at top, Ang. V. the v.

SKEEL, s. A tub. V. SKEIL, SKEILL.

SKEEL, s. 1. Acquaintance with, knowledge of, S.

"That will be what they ca' the fugie-warrants—I hae some skeel in them." Antiq. iii. 213. V. SKILL.

2. Generally applied to the medical art. To get skeel, to consult a medical gentleman, Roxb.

[To SKEEL, v. a. To prove, to test, Banffs.]

SKEELY, adj. Intelligent, skilful, S. V. SKILLY.

"This auld man, Ochiltree, is very skeely and auld-farrant about mony things, as the diseases of cows and horse, and sic like." Antiquary, iii. 272.

"The Duke of Argyll—is—likewise skeely enow in bestial, whereof he has promised to gie me twa Devonshire kye." Heart M. Loth. iv. 23. V. SKILLY.

SKEELIE-PEN, s. A slate pencil, Roxb. V. SKAILLIE.

SKEELING GOOSE. The name sometimes given to the Shieldrake, Orkn.

Skeeling-goose, de quo fama est, in ejus ventriculo grana piperis reperiri, de quo tamen non constat. Sibb. Scot., p. 21.

Lealey also mentions it in his Scot. Descript., p. 35. V. Neill's Tour, p. 193, 196, and SKAILDRAIK.

SKEENGIE, SKEENYIE, s. Packthread.

This word is more generally pronounced in either of these ways, S. I have formerly given it with the orthography of Skin, q. v.

[SKEER, SKEERIE, adj. 1. Raised, excited; wild with excitement of fear or fun; generally applied to a romp, West of S.

2. Frightened, easily frightened, somewhat restive; applied to an animal, ibid.]

[SKEERIE, RAM-SKEERIE, RUMMIL-SKEERIE, s. A wild, reckless romp, a mad-cap, ibid. V. RUMMILGATRIE.]

SKEETACK, s. The cuttlefish, Shetl.

"Sepia Officinalis, (Lin. Syst.) Skeetack, Cuttlefish." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 319.

Perhaps from Isl. skyt-a, jaculare, because of the dark substance which it ejects from its belly for obscuring the path of its pursuer. [Dan. skyde, to spout out.]

SKEG, s. [Prob. savage, monster; Isl. skegg, a beard, skeggi, shaggy, wild, savage one.]

—A skeg, a scornar, a scald,

A bald strod and a bald—

Colkellie Sow, F. l. v. 99.

Isl. skaekia, and Dan. skioege, signify meretrix; Isl. skakk-r, obliquus, pravus, skekkja, obliquitas, skekk-ja, obliquare, pret. skegdi; A.-S. sceac, piger, sceocca, satanas, diabolus. Whether skeg be allied to any of these terms, must be left to the learned reader to determine for himself.

[SKEG, s. A sail, Shetl.]

To SKEG, v. a. To strike with the open hand, Aberd., Moray. To Skeg, "to flog with the palm of the hand;" Gl. Surv. Moray. In Mearns it is understood as referring to the breech as the recipient.

SKEG, s. A blow with the palm of the hand, ibid. Merely a variety of SKEEG, q. v.

To SKEGH, v. n. To ease nature, Lanarks.

Gael. scag-aim signifies to cleanse. But perhaps skegh is from Lat. cacare, or C.B. cachu, id., with s prefixed, according to the Gothic mode.

To SKEGH, v. a. To filch. V. SKAIGH.

SKEICH, SKEIGH, adj. 1. Timorous, apt to startle, S.

Messapus musing can withdraw on dreich,
Seand his stedis and the horses skeich,

Doug. Virgil, 278, 37.

2. Spirited, mettlesome, skittish, unmanageable; applied to a horse, even when not timorous, S.

Perhaps this is the proper sense in the following passage:—

To hym in fere also has he layd—

—Thymetes, ane man of full grete fors,

Casting from his staffage, skeich, and heide strang hors.

Doug. Virgil, 422, 18.

Casting for Casten, part, pa. cast, thrown.

When thou an' I were young an' skeigh,

Burns, iii. 142.

An' stable-meals at fairs were dreigh,
How thou wad prance, an' snore, an' skreigh !
Burns, lli. 142.

3. Coy, shy; a term frequently applied to women, S.

Shamfu' she was, and skeigh like ony hare,
Nor cou'd she think of sitting langer there.
Ross's Helenore, p. 30.

4. Proud, nice, S., often applied to women, (but in a stronger sense than in that last mentioned) as including the idea of prudery, or expressive of disdain, S.

Maggie coost her head fu' high,
Look'd asklent and unco skeigh,
Gart poor Duncan stand abeigh.
Burns, iv. 26.

"Let gae my hands, I say, be quait ;"
And vow ! gin she was skeigh
And mim that day.
Ramsay's Poems, i. 262.

5. "Fierce-looking;" Gl. Surv. Ayr., p. 693.

Sibb. mentions, although with marks of uncertainty, Sw. sknelg, obliquus, which has no connexion. Rudd. has referred to Skinner, vo. Skittish; and this adj., as deduced from E. skew, to eschew, has evidently the same origin. Germ. scheuch, scheue, shy; Ein scheues pferd, a skeich horse; Belg. schouwich, also schichtig, id., from Alem. schu-an, Germ. scheu-en, Belg. schuuen, to shun, to be shy.

The affinity is still closer with Su.-G. skygg, a term frequently applied to a horse in the same sense. V. SKAB, adj. This is from sky, vitare. I need scarcely add, that there is every reason to believe, that E. skew, eschew, shun, shy, skittish, scare, and S. skeich, skair, skar, skair, scunner, have all one origin.

[SKEICH, SKEIGH, adv. Same senses as the adj., S.]

To SKEICH, v. n. To take fright, to startle.

Of Hippolytus, it is said that he
Sufferit by hys blude and breith
The cruel pany's of his faderis wreith,
As to be harlit with hors that caught affray,
And skeichit at ane mereswyne by the way.

Doug. Virgil, 236, 31.
Su.-G. skygg-a, meticulous recedere. V. the adj.

SKEICHNESS, s. The act or state of being skeich; used in the different senses of the adj., S.

SKEIGH, s. A round movable piece of wood, perforated in the middle, put upon the spindle of the muckle wheel, used for spinning wool, to prevent the worsted from coming off the spindle, Upp. Clydes.

Corr. perhaps from C.B. yogeth, that pushes or repels, yogeth-a, to push, to repulse. Yegau denotes what is hollow; and yageu-aw, to hollow, to scoop. But it is more probably from yagie, guard, safeguard.

SKEIGH, adj., adv., and r. V. SKEICH.

SKEIL, SKEILL, (pron. skeel) s. 1. A tub; properly, one used for washing, S.

Fish wyves cry Fy, and cast down skulls and skells.
Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 59.

This is a provincial E. word.

VOL. IV.

"Skeels—are broad shallow vessels; principally for the use of setting milk in, to stand for cream; made in the tub manner—from eighteen inches to two feet and a half diameter; and from five to seven inches deep." Glocester. Marshall's Rural Econ., p. 269.

"The Yorkshire skeel with one handle is described as a milking pail." Ibid., p. 26. V. SKUL.

[2. A wooden drinking-vessel with a handle; used also as a ladle, Orkn., Shetl. V. SKAIL, s.]

SKEILKIN, s. Loud, wanton laughing, Shetl.

Isl. skelkinn, suggests an idea quite different, pavore percitus, from skell-a, terrere. It certainly resembles Ir. Gael. sgol, sgolghaire, loud laughter.

To SKEILL, v. a. To disperse; a northern variety of Skail. "On force man skeill his hous & familie, & lewe [leave] the toune." Aberd. Reg.

SKEIR, SKEER, SKEERIE, adj. Hare-brained, S.

This may seem to be the same word that is written skire by Rudd., and mentioned under SCHIRE. But I suspect that it is rather from Isl. skiar, pavidus, as properly denoting that delirium which is produced by excessive fear.

It may thus be viewed as equivalent to an E. phrase.

They shew forth a gleam, fraught with malice and ire,
A gleam fraught with horror and cruelty dire,
Like mortals whose senses are scar'd.

Welsh Legends, p. 82.

It is rather against the etymon here given, that in Fife, instead of saying that one is skeir or skeer, the phrase, is skyre-mad, i.e., quite insane. Skeir, however, in other counties, does not admit of so forcible a meaning. This may, however, be q. sheer-mad.

SKEIR, adj. Pure, holy. It is retained, in a corrupted form, in Scarce-Thursday, the name of a fair held at Melrose on the Thursday before Easter.

"This, in the time of popery, was their great fair called Skeir Thursday, or schier, pure, holy." Milne's Descript. of Melrose, p. 44, Ed. 1782. V. SCHIRE adj., also SKIRISFURISDAY.

To SKEITCH, v. n. To slide on skates; skeitcher, one who slides on skates, S.

SKEITCHES, SKEITCHERS, SKYTCHERS, s. pl. Skates, S.

Teut. schatse, Belg. schaatsen, id. Hence,

[SKEITCHIN, SKYTCHIN, s. Skating, the act of skating, S.]

SKELB, SKELF, SKELVE, s. A splinter or flake of wood, S.

—"The quene being in Dumbar, thair came one post to hir, showing hir that the king of France was evill hurt in the face with the skelbe of ane spear, being justing in the time of his triumphant battellis." Pit-scottie's Cron., p. 546. V. SCOB.

Gael. sgyalb, sgolb, id. V. SKELVE.

[To SKELB, SKELF, SKELVE, v. a. and n. To cut, break, or take off in thin flakes or

G 2

alices; also, to break up or separate into the same, S.]

[SKELBY, SKELFY, adj. Full of splinters, tending to form or run into splinters, West of S.]

SKELDOCKS, SKELDICKS, s. pl. Wild mustard. V. SKELLOCH and SCALDRICKS.

SKELDRAKE, s. The Shieldrake. V. SKAILDRAKE.

SKELDROCH (gutt.), s. Hoarfrost, Linlithgows.; synon. Crandroch.

From the termination, apparently of Celt. origin; perhaps q. this frost, from C.B. ygyt, thin, and rheu, frost, Gael. reothadh.

SKELDRYKE, s. A sort of small passage-boat.

"The General Convention of Burrowes, understanding that the burgh of Kinghorne and ferrie thair of being of gret antiquité, the space of thir six hundreth yeris or thairby, is now lailie bellelé trublit and hurt be the skaffis, skeldrykes and yolles of unfrie tounis, of Leith upon the north syde of the brig, and of New bewin," &c. Act. Conv. Royal Bor. Jan. 13, 1600.

This might be viewed as allied to L.B. scal-a.

In Angliam adducitur (classis navium Normannicarum).—submersis aut caesis hominibus omniibus, qui erant in navibus, solis illis exceptis, qui in Scalis vix salvi fuerant fugiendo. Chron. Trivet, ad an. 1293.

But Du Cange views scala as merely a blunder for scapha, a shallop. It is more probable that skeldryke is a corr. of scutler, a cockboat, (if we may suppose the E. word so old); if it was not rather a sailor's cant-word, used to express contempt for so small a boat, as denoting its resemblance of the sea-bird in S. called a Skeldrake.

SKELLET, SCELET, s. Form, appearance.

"The Lords thought this decret had not so much as the visage and scelet of a decret; and that it was given without Sir John Shaw's knowledge, &c. Therefore they turned the decret into a libel." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iv. 673. Fr. scelet, a skeleton, [Sw. skelett, id.]

SKELF, SKELVE, s. [1. A splinter or flake of wood, Clydes., Shetl. V. SKELB.]

2. A shelf, a board fixed to the wall for bearing anything, S.

On skelfs around the sheal the cogs were set,
Ready to ream, and for the cheese be het.

Ross's Helenore, p. 77.

A.-S. scelf, scylf, abacus.

3. Sometimes it denotes a wooden frame containing several shelves, S.; synon. Rack.

"Above it [the ambry], lying against the slaunt of the roof, is the skelf, or frame, containing shelves, with cross bars in front, to prevent the utensils set upon its shelves from tumbling off from its overhanging position." Notes to Pennecuik's Tweed, p. 83.

SKELLAT, s. "An imaginary spirit," Buchan, Gl. Tarr.

Sae aff it fudder't owe the height,
As fleet's a skellat.

Tarras's Poems, p. 9.

If this goblin be any thing like the Skelly-coat of the South of S., the name is perhaps from Dan. skiaellat, crustatus.

SKELLAT, s. 1. A small bell. V. SKELLIE.

Unto no mess pressit this prelat,
For sound of sacring bell nor skellat.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 20.

2. A sort of iron rattle, used for the same purpose as a hand-bell, for making proclamations on the street, (synon. clap, clapper), Loth.

Su.-G. skaella, Isl. skella, nola, tintinnabulum. In Su.-G. that bell which is hung about the necks of animals is called skaella. The same name was anciently given to the bells worn by persons of distinction, that their inferiors might get out of the way. L. B. skella, Ital. squilla, Germ. Belg. schelle, Hisp. esquila. In this sense the word skella is used in the Salic Laws, tit. 29. Si quis skellam de caballis furaverit, &c. It is written scilla by Eadmer, in the life of St. Anselm, Lib. 1. Sumta in manibus chorda pro excitandis fratribus scillam pulsantem. Thus it denoted both the bells hung to the necks of horses, and those small ones used in monasteries. V. Du Cange, vo. Skella. Itho derives the word, from Su.-G. skall, sonitus, whence S. skelloch, E. squeal. V. SCHILL.

O. Fr. eschellette, petite sonnette, crecelle. We learn from Roquefort, that it was used in monasteries for awaking the religious; and also for making proclamations.

SKELLET, adj. 1. Used as synon. with Yettlin, i.e., cast metal, Dumfr.

2. Elsewhere it signifies what is made of white or tinned iron, S.; as "a skellet-pan."

This must be viewed as originally the same with E. skillet, "a small kettle or boiler." Fr. escuellete.

SKELLIE, SKELLY, s. A squint look, S.

A.-S. sceol-eage, scyle-eged, id. q. squint-eye, or eyed; Isl. skialg-ur, Dan. skaelg, Germ. skel, schiel, Belg. scheel, id., all from the word signifying oblique.

There is an O. E. term nearly allied, although, not explained either by Junius or Skinner. This is a skile.

Than Scripture scorned me, & a skile looked,
And lacked me in Latine, & light by me she set;
And said, Multi multa sciunt, et seipso nesciunt.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 53, a.

In Edit. 1561, it is printed as one word, askile.

SKELLIE, SKELLIE-EE'D, adj. Having the eyes placed a little obliquely, Clydes.

This claims the same origin with Skellied; A.-S. sceol-eged, scyle-eged, "strabo; squint-eyed, goggle-eyed;" Somner. Dan. skiel-oeyed; Sw. skeloegd, id. Skellied may be viewed as the same compound abbreviated in the pronunciation; whereas, strictly perhaps, skellie-ee'd is tautological; skellie itself being apparently from the A.-S. adj. sceol-eag, used in the same sense with sceol-eged.

To SKELLIE, SCALIE, v. n. 1. To squint, to have a squint look, S.

"John Balfour; called Burley, aquiline nose, red-haired, five feet eight inches in height."—It is he—it is the very man," said Bothwell, "skellies fearfully with one eye." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 87.

Sae proud was he o' his Maggie,
Though she did baith scalie and squint.

Herd's Coll., ii. 171.

This language is evidently tautological.

2. To work or write off the straight. One who does not write in a straight line, is said to skellie, or to be "a skellying blockhead." The same is said of a ploughman who draws irregular or unequal furrows, Dumfr.

3. To throw, or shoot, aside from the mark, ibid. This is synon. with the phrase "a gley'd gunner," S.

Su.-G. skael-a, torvis oculis intueri, Germ. schiel-en, id. Skinner apprehends that E. scowl, which is probably allied to this, has some affinity to Gr. σκολιός, obliquus.

SKELLIED, SKELLY, adj. Squinting, [squint-eyed; also, off the straight, S.]

There's gentle John, and Jock the storp,
And skellied Jock, and bellied Jock, &c.
Jacobite Relics, ii. 40.

SKELLIE, s. The hand-bell used by public criers, Lanarks. Hence,

SKELLIE-MAN, s. A bellman or public crier, ibid.

Isl. skella, Su.-G. skaella, tintinnabulum. V. SKEL-LATE.

SKELLOCH, SKELDOCK, SKELLIE, s. 1. Wild mustard, generally used in pl. S. synon. runches, S. B. Sinapis arvensis, Linn.

"There are two sorts of wild mustard, the one commonly called Skeldock, the other Runches. Some fields will have plenty of the one, and none of the other, & vice versa. Skeldocks yield yellow, Runches very white honey; meadows make white honey, heath red-dish.—If there is a mixture of either the heath or the skeldocks, the honey will be yellowish, but not so yellow as if there were no Runches." Maxwell's Bee-master, p. 71, 72.

"The corn fields are liable to the common weeds, especially to skelloch, (mostly wild mustard), for which, to sow late after ploughing, when the plant is risen up, and may be destroyed by Harrowing, has been tried with success." P. Nigg, Kincardine Statist. Acc., vii. 197.

Ir. egeallagach, wild mustard; O'Brien. Gael. ageallan, the seeds of mustard. The E. name charlock, has some resemblance. A.-S. certice, id. Somner.

2. The term Skelloch is sometimes applied, in the South of S., to wild radish, raphanus raphanistrum, Linn.

By the more intelligent, however, even among the peasantry, the wild radish is called runches, while the name skelloch is given to wild mustard.

To SKELLOCH, v. n. To cry with a shrill voice, S. B.

This, as well as squeal, sc'awl, E. is nearly allied to Isl. skell-a, clangere, Su.-G. squaal-a, ejulare, plorare. Seren. observes, that as the latter properly denotes the wailing of infants, as the consequence of disease, it may be traced to Isl. quill-a, prae acritudine queri, a deriv. from Sw. quid-a, id. Franc. skell-an, Germ. schall-en, to emit a sound, erschall-en, to ring. Gael. sgal, a shriek, a loud shrill cry; Shaw.

SKELLOCH, s. A shrill cry, a squawl, S. B.

SKELLY, s. The chub, a fish; Cyprinus cephalus, Linn. Roxburghs.

"The fish are, trouts, lampreys, eels, skelly or chub, salmon, grilse, &c." P. Castletown, Statist. Acc., xvi. 75.

Ital. squalio, Lat. squal-us, id. A.-S. scylga denotes a fish of some kind, perhaps a roach; Rocca, Aelfr. Gl., p. 77. Lye renders scelga, rubellio, rocea piscis. The name of skelly is, by the inhabitants of Cumberland, given not only to the Gwiniad, but to the Chub, from its being a scaly fish. V. Penn. Zool., iii. 263, N.

SKELLY, s. A species of slate. V. SKAIL-LIE.

SKELLYIS, s. pl. "Sharp or rugged rocks," Rudd.

—As Sergest with fers mynd al infyrit,
Turnit his stevin toward the rolk ouer nere,
Vntyl ane wikkit place his schip did stene,
Qubil on the blynd craggis myscheuslye,
Fast stikkis scho, choppend hard qulynnis in hye,
And on the scharp skellyis, to hir wanhap,
Smate with sic fard, the airis in fendris lap,
Hyr forschyp hang, and sum dele schorit throw out.
And first Sergest behynd sone left has he,
Wreland on skellyis, and vndeipis of the se.

Doug. Virgil, 134, 26, 51.

The word is certainly of the same meaning with E. shelers, which, I suspect, originally denoted a ridge of low rocks, rather than sand-banks. V. SKELVE, v.

To SKELP, v. n. 1. To beat; applied to the motion of a clock.

Baith night and day my lane I skelp;
Wind up my weights but anes a week,
Without him I can gang and speak.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 557.

2. To beat with velocity and violence. The veins are said to be skelpin, when the pulse beats very quick or hard, as in a strong fever, S. B.

3. To skelp, to skelp it, to move quickly on foot, to trip along; especially applied to one who is barefooted, S.

The well-win thousands of some years
In ae big bargain disappears:
'Tis sair to bide, but wha can help it,
Instead of coach, on foot they skelp it.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 332.

As lightsomely I glow'd abroad,
To see a scene so gay,
Three hizzies, early at the road,
Cam skelpin up the way.

Burns, iii. 29.

Perhaps this use of the term has originated from the sharp noise made by the feet in walking smartly, q. striking or beating the road.

4. Denoting quick motion on horseback, S.

"Aweel, to mak a lang tale short, up cam my young Lord Evandale, skelping as fast as his horse could trot, and twenty red-coats at his back." Tales of my Landlord, iii. 10.

[Tam skelpit on thro' dub and mire,
Despising wind, and rain, and fire.

Burns, Tam o' Shanter.]

[5. To do work with energy and spirit, to hurry; as, "Noo, skelp at it," Clydes., Banffs.]

Su. G. skalf-a, Isl. skialf-a, A.-S. scylf-an, to tremble; Isl. skelf-a, to shake, to cause to tremble; skialft, tremor, iardskialft, an earthquake; Su.-G. skaelfoa, skalfwoot, a fever, q. because of the tremulous motion of the joints, from skulfwa and sof, sickness.

Seren., however, seems to appropriate this name to the ague; and this is exactly analogous to the name by which it is known, S. B. the trembling fevers.

To SKELP, v. a. 1. To strike with the open hand. It properly denotes the chastisement inflicted on the breech, S. scud, scult, synon.

Bat fat's the matter! the chiel says,
He sav't the Grecian ships,
Held aff the Trojans an' the gods,
An' skelpit Hector's hips.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 27.

Sometimes it signifies to flog the buttocks by means of a lash.

He's whirled aff the gude weather's skin,
And wrappit the dandily lady therein;
"I darena pay, you for your gentle kin,
But weel may I skelp my weather's skin."

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 325.

I'm friends with Mause; with very Madge I'm gree'd;
Altho' they skelpit me when woody fleid.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 190.

This may be viewed as an oblique use of the preceding v., as Isl. skaelf-a, Su.-G. skelf-a, also signify, to frighten, terrere, Verel. Isl. skelf-a, however, is occasionally used in the very same sense with our skelp; percello, Kristniasg. Gl.; skell-a, id. Ras-skell-a, podicem manu verberare; Gl. Orkneyinga, S. vo. Skella.

2. To strike, in whatever way, to drub, S.

—Baxter lads has seal'd a vow
To skelp an' clout the guard.

Fergusson's Poems, p. 51.

3. Applied to the strokes of misfortune, S.

—Money a ane aftimes he helpit,
Whan like to be wi' fortune skelpit.

A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 18.

SKELP, s. 1. A stroke, a blow, used in a general sense, S.

Quhen Inglistmen come into this land,
Had I bene thair with my bricht brand,
Withowtyn ony help,
Bot myne allane, on Pynky Craiggis,
I sowld half revin thame all in raggis,
And laid on skelp for skelp.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 11.

The water is said to come with a skelp on a boat, when its shock is sudden and violent, so as to make it give way. The term, in this application, has considerable resemblance to Isl. skialf-a, concutere, quatere, tremere facere.

2. Metaph. for a misfortune, in trade or otherwise, S., as E. blow is frequently used. A sair skelp, a severe blow.

—Quhys loking comfort to resauce,
Quhys loking for a skelp;
Quhys dreiding sche suld me disaue,
Quhys houping for hir help.

Burel's Pilg., Watson's Coll., ii. 48.

V. Mow-BIT.

3. A severe blast, a squall; applied also to a heavy fall of rain, S.

4. A large portion, Ettr. For.

"We had an unco skelp o' wind an' sleet yesternight wi' a nasty plash o' a sea along wi't; bit it looks like to clear up now." St. Kathleen, iii. 98.

[SKELP, adv. Quickly, vigorously; with energy or violence, Banffs.]

SKELPER, s. 1. One who strikes with the open hand, S.

2. [An energetic person]; as, "He's a skelper at gangin';" Clydes.

[SKELPIE, SKELPIE-LIMMER, s. An opprobrious term applied to a female, S.; "a little worth person;" Gl. Picken.

Ye little skelpie-limmer's face,
I daur you try sic sportin,
As seek the foul thief ony place,
For him to spae your fortune.

Burns, iii. 131.

SKELPIN', s. A beating with the open hand, S.

SKELPIN', SKELPING, adj. 1. [Energetic, vigorous, loud]; as, "a skelpin' kiss," a smack, Burns.

2. Clever, agile, active, S.

"In comes one, two, threa, four, or half a dozen of skelping long lads from some foolery or another, misca' me for barring my ain door against them, and eat up half of what my sister's providence—and she is not over bountiful—has provided for my dinner." The Pirate, iii. 53.

SKELP-THE-DUB, adj. A term applied in contempt to one who is accustomed to do low work; as, to act like a foot-boy, Ayrs.

"A skelp-the-dub creature to upbraid me wi' his justly dues!" The Entail, iii. 202.

As denoting that a person throws up the mire in running from one place to another. In the same sense is the cant term Dub-skelper applied in Edinburgh to the youngest clerk in a bank who runs about giving intimation when bills are due, &c.

SKELP, s. 1. A splinter of wood; as, "He's run a skelp into his finger," Loth. Gael. sgealp, a splinter.

The same with SKELB and SKELVE, q. v.

[2. A splash, a quantity of any liquid dashed up or out, Clydes., Banffs.; synon. jaup.]

To SKELP, v. a. and n. 1. To apply splints to a broken limb, Ettr. For.

[2. To run, break, or fall, into splinters, Clydes.

3. To dash; generally applied to liquids, ibid. Banffs.

4. To turn over, or to remove, the surface in large pieces, as in ploughing, planing, &c., ibid.]

SKELT, part. pa. Having the seams unrapt. V. SKAIL, v.

To SKELVE, v. n. To separate in laminae. A stone is said to skelve, when thin layers fall off from it, in consequence of friction, or of exposure to the air, S. B.

Teut. schelfe, squama, mica, schelfer, mica, schelf-fer-en, assulatum frangere, in micis frangere sive frangi. The word appears in a more primitive form in Su.-G. skaell-a, Isl. skel-iaut, in tenues laminas dissillire, from skal, putamen; and this perhaps from skil-ja, separare.

SKELVE, s. A thin slice, lamina, S. B. Teut. schelve, segmen. [V. SKELB, and SKELF.]

SKELVY, adj. 1. A term applied to a rock which appears in a variety of laminae, S. B.

Ilk rib aae bare, a skelvy skair. — Minstreley Border, iii. 358.

2. Applied to rocks which form the bed of a shallow river, S. shelvy, E.

Here, foaming down the skelvy rocks, In twisting strength I rin. Burns, iii. 356.

To SKEMMEL, SKEMBLE, SKAMMEL, v. n. 1.

To throw the limbs out in a loose and awkward manner in walking, Ettr. For., Loth.; [E. shamble.]

2. To climb or walk over slight or loose obstructions, Roxb.

3. To climb over rocks or walls, ibid.

To SKEMMEL, SKAMMEL, v. a. To throw things hither and thither in a slovenly and careless way, ibid.

This seems originally the same with E. scramble, which is defined by Philips, to rove or wander up and down. A scrambling town, a town wherein the houses stand at a great distance from one another. Johns. explains it "to shift awkwardly." Serenius gives as a synonyme the vulgar Sw. v. skaem-a, Isl. skym-a, otiose vagari.

SKEMMIL, adj. Having the feet thrown outwards, Loth.

It is the reverse of E. splayfoot, as expl. by Johns., but exactly agrees with it, according to the definition of Bailey, which seems to be the true one.

SKEMMIL, s. A tall, thin, ungainly person, Upp. Clydes.

SKEMMLING, s. "A foolish way of throwing the legs;" Gall. Enc.; merely a variety in form of E. scrambling.

Prob. the ancient Isl. primitive skaa, denoting disjunction or separation, is the root, whatever intermediate change it may have undergone.

SKEMP, SKEMPY, s. A worthless fellow, Roxb.; the same with Scamp.

[SKENE-OCCLE, s. A concealed dirk, Waverley. V. under SKEAN.]

"Ye're surely some silly skemp of a fellow, to draw out your sword on a pair auld woman." Brownie of Bodebeck, i. 110.

"Out o' her bed, quotha! — Na — there'll nae young skempy among them wile her out o' her bed i' the night-time." Ibid. i. 7.

[SKENGERIN, s. A small quantity, a morsel, Shetl.]

[SKENK, s. A shin of beef, ibid. Dan. and Sw. skank, the hough; Eng. shank.]

[SKENYDOUGER, s. A slight peal of thunder, Shetl. V. SKEYNDOAGER.]

SKEO, SKEE, s. A small hut, built of dry-stone for drying fish without salt, Ork.

"I have observed that in some houses there is little lime, clay, or any such thing for cementing of the building, which renders their dwelling so much the colder, the piercing air passing through between the chinks of the stones. — But some of these houses they may designedly so build, that the wind may have free pass through them, for drying of their fishes, which houses some call skéos." Brand's Zetland, p. 80, 81.

"He would substitute better houses for the skéos, or sheds built of dry stones, in which the inhabitants cured or manufactured their fish." The Pirate, i. 261.

This word is also written skée, and thus defined:

"Skees: These are little houses, built of dry stones without any mortar, that the wind may have free passage through them. In them they dry their fishes and fleshes; and what is so dried is called Blowen Meate." MS. Explic. of Norish Words.

This word is probably corr. from Su.-G. sko, also skof-ve, tegmen, a covering of whatever kind; whence port-skof-ve, a covered place at the entrance of an area or yard, where carts and cattle are placed. Su.-G. and Dan. skiul denotes a shed, a shelter; whence Su.-G. portskiul, used in the very same sense with portskof-ve.

[SKEOMIT, adj. Pale, sickly-coloured; sickly, Shetl.]

SKEP, SKEPP, SKEPPE, SCAPE, s. 1. A case, resembling a basket, made of twisted straw, used as a bee-hive, S.

*Forth of their skeppes sum raging beis
Lyes out, and will not cast;
Sum uther awarnes hyves on the treis
In knotts togidder fast.*

A. Hume, Chron. S. P., iii. 389.

"Bees are so rare there, that a young man, in the end of April, stooped the skép (which a lady had taken hither from Angus) with a piece of a peat. About 8 days thereafter, the Laird going to look after them, found them all dead. His family being convened, he inquired who had done it. The actor did confidently answer, that upon such a day he did it because they were all flying away." Mackail's Relation concerning Orkney, MS. Adv. Libr. V. Barry's Orkney, p. 453.

"Skep, cumera, a great vessel of wickers or of earth to keep corn in;" Cooperi Thesaur.

Ray, among South and East country words, mentions "bee-skip, a bee hive;" Coll., p. 114. Su.-G. biogskepp signifies a bushel of barley, q. a skép of big; hordie modius, LL. Loccen. Lex. Jur. Su.-G., p. 26.

[2. A light basket of wicker-work used for corn and potatoes: called also a maun, West of S.]

3. Used metaph. in relation to industry.

Yit thir, alas ! are antrin sock,
That laid their scapp wi' winter stock.

Fergusson's Poems, II. 81.

Su.-G. skaepp-a, skepp-a, a vessel used by farmers in sowing, for holding the seed; antleskaeppa, q. a seed-skepp. A.-S. sciop, a vessel, a box; Germ. schafu, a wooden concave vessel, Teut. schap, vas, theca, Lat. scappium, L. B. scapp-a, from Gr. skapos, cavitās; Gael. scēip, a bee-hive; Shaw.

E. skep must have been originally the same; expl. "a sort of basket, narrow at the bottom and wide at the top, to fetch corn in." Johns. oddly derives it from scephen, Lower. Sax. to draw.

To SKEP, v. a. To inclose in a bee-hive, S.

To SKEP a bike. To carry off wild bees with their combs from their natural nest, and put them into a hive; a practice common among boys, Aberd.

To SKEP in, v. n. "To get into acquaintance with;" a metaph. borrowed from the conjunction of bees of different swarms in one hive, S. O.

Jo' wad fain skep in wi' me,
Gin the carlin could but mak it;

But can I, see stout an' young,

Wed an auld wife broken-bucket?

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 156.

SKEPPING, s. "The act of putting bees into their houses when they hive," S.; Gall. Enc.

SKEPLET, adj. [Mean, tattered, ragged; another form of skybald, q. v.] Skeplet hat, "a hat out of shape," Aberd.

I'll leave some heirships to my kin;—
A skeplet hat, and plaiden hose.

Jacobite Relics, I. 118.

[Prob. allied to Skarle, to put out of shape, q. v.]

[SKEPSIT, adj. Stretched out, put out of shape, askew, Shetl. Prob. from Sw. skapa, to shape, and sid, wide.]

SKER, SKAR, adj. Left. It occurs in

Prob., this is merely Gael. caerr, id.; which, having been adopted by those of Gothic origin, had s prefixed to it. V. KER, KAR.

[To SKER, v. a. and n. To scare, startle, frighten, Shetl. V. SKEIR.

Also used by Lyndsay in Compl. of Bagsche, l. 116.]

SKER, adj. Scared, frightened, in a state of fear.

Venus that day coniunit with Juppiter,
That day Neptunus hid him like ane sker;
That day Dame Nature, with greit besines,
Furtherit Flora to kith hir craftines.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 190.

Skar, later Edit. It seems used as an adj.; but V. SCAR, s. 2.

SKERIE, adj. [1. Easily frightened or startled]; "somewhat restive," Gall. Enc.

[2. Excited, wild with excitement; also, hare-brained, reckless, Clydes., Perth. V. SKEERIE.]

[SKERIE, RAM-SKERIE, RUMMIL-SKERIE, s. A wild, reckless romp, one mad with fun and frolic, West of S. V. RUMMILGAIRIE.]

[SKERDINS, s. pl. Mice, Shetl.]

SKERR, s. 1. A ridge of rock, Roxb. V. SKERRY and SKAIRS.

2. A bare precipice, ibid. Here used in the same sense with Scar.

SKERRY, s. 1. An insulated rock, Orkn.

"Near this Pentland Skerry, there are two or three other skerries or rocks, on which there is not nourishment for any tame living creature." P. S. Ronaldsay, Statist. Acc., xv. 300.

"There are several which are overflowed at high water, and have scarcely any soil for the production of vegetables;—these—are called Skerries, a name which indicates sharp, ragged rocks." Barry's Orkn., p. 18.

"Our souerane Lord—hes contractit with—Schir Johne Arnot of Berswick knight, &c. for all rycht, title and entres that they or any of thame hes or may pretend to ony landis, annuelrentis, iles, skerreis, holmes, mylnis, multuris, fischingis, and vtheris quhatsumcuiir lyand within the erldome of Orkney and lordschip of Zetland," &c. Acts, IV. p. 481.

"Skerries, ragged rocks." MS. Explication of Norish Words used in Orkney and Shetland.

2. It is sometimes, although perhaps improperly, used in a more limited sense; as appears from the following example.

"The sandy beaches of the two first mentioned extend each a mile in length; that of the last not so much, except at low water of spring tides; and consist partly of skerries, (flat rocks over which the sea flows and ebbs)." P. Stronsay, Orkn., Ibid., p. 388.

Perhaps from Su.-G. Isl. skær, a rock, and ey, an island; although Isl. skær by itself is sometimes rendered, scopulus maris. V. SKAIR.

SKERTER, s. The name for Sea-belts, Orkn. Fucus saccharinus, Linn.; a species of sea-weed burnt for making kelp.

"F. saccharinus, Skserter, Orkney." Neill's Tour, p. 191.

The name seems allied to Sw. ske-oert, scurvy-grass.

SKET, SKETE. Ful sket, full hastily or quickly; i.e., full readily.

The harpoun gan to say,
—"The maistri give I the, Ful sket."

Bifor the kinges kne
Tristrem is cald to set.

Sir Tristrem, p. 34.

A.-S. scyt-an, irruere. It may be added that On scyte wanes is rendered by Lye, in praecipiti erat, was in haste, or rushed headlong; scyte-raese, praecipit ruens. Perhaps, allied to Isl. skiot-ur, celer, pernix; skiotur á foti, swift of foot; whence the Sw. have given the name skiot to a horse, as he is also called haest, from haet-a, festinare.

To SKETCH, SKEYTCH, v. n. To skate, S. SKETCHERS, s. pl. The vulgar name for skates, used on ice, S.; Belg. schaats-en.

SKETCHERS, s. pl. Two wooden legs with a cross-bar, used for supporting a tree during the operation of sawing within doors, Berwicks.

Flandr. schaetse, grallae; Teut. id. cantherii fulcrum, the prop of a joist.

To SKEUCH, (gutt.), [SKEUT, v. a. and n. To twist,] to distort; [also, to walk in a distorted manner;] Skeuch'd, twisted to a side, Aberd., Mearns; [skeut-fittit, having the feet turned outwards or inwards, Banffs. V. SKEW, v.]

SKEUGH, SKEUT, s. A twist, a distortion, ibid. V. SHACH, v.

[To SKEUT, v. a. and n. V. SKEUCH, and SKEW.]

[SKEUT, s. 1. A skate, Clydes.

2. Anything broad, flat, and unshapely; applied to hands, feet, shoes, &c.; what skeuts! Banffs.

3. Applied to an ungainly and untidy female, ibid.]

[To SKEUT, v. a. and n. To cast down flat; to fall down flat; to walk like a flat-footed person, ibid.]

[SKEUT, adv. Flat; with violence; like one with flat-feet, ibid.]

[SKEUT-FITTIT, adj. With broad, flat feet, ibid.]

To SKEVREL, v. n. To move unsteadily in a circular way, Renfr.

This v. obviously claims affinity to Su.-G. skof, Isl. skarf-r, skrif-r, Dan. skiaev, Teut. scheef, whence E. skew, askew, obliquus. From scheef is formed Germ. schief-en, obliquare, to depart from the right line.

To SKEW, v. a. and n. 1. [To twist, turn round]; also to twist one's self in an affected manner, S. [Dan. skiaev, oblique, skiaeve, to slant.]

Contemplating ilk foppish brat,
That's got a sword and cocket hat,
To see them skew and skip about,
Is jeerin' fun.

D. Anderson's Poems, p. 112.

V. SKEUGH.

2. To build in an oblique form, S.

3. To skew a house, to cover the gables of a thatched roof with sods, Tweedl.

4. To skew a shower, to shun, to seek shelter from, rain, Roxb. Synon. with Skug, q. v., and E. Eschev.

SKEW, SKEU, s. [1. A twist, a turn, a movement to one side; as, "Gie the stane a skew this way," Clydes.]

2. That part of a gable which is oblique, from the eaves to the chimney-stalk, S.

The bitter, blindin, whirling drift
Through raggit skew, an' chimlie rift,
The cottage fills.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, l. 45.

This has the same origin with SHACH, q. v.

High on the skientin skew, or thatched eave,
The sparrow, nibbling ravager of garden pride,
Seeks out a dwelling-place.—

Davidson's Seasons, p. 43.

"Spere or skue. Ventifuga." Prompt. Parv.

3. A wooden machine put on the chimney-tops of country houses for preventing smoke, Mearns.

SKEW'D, adj. [1. Twisted, aslant, squint, West of S.; synon.; gley'd.

2. A half-drunk person, when walking zig-zag, is said to be skew'd, ibid.]

3. Demented, acting like one deprived of reason, Perth.

SKEW, s. Skew and reskew, capture and recapture.

Hardy and hat contenyt the fell melië,
Skew and Reskew off Scottis and Ingliss alls:
Sum kerwynt bran in sondyr, sum the hals,
Sum hurt, sum hynt, sum derfly dong to dede.

Wallace, v. 835, MS.

As reskew evidently denotes the deliverance of those who have been taken by an enemy, from O. Fr. rescouer, to take again; skew signifies the state of being seized by the enemy, from secou-er, to move violently: Imprimer à un corps un mouvement qui enbraie toutes ses porties; Dict. Trev. Corr. from Lat. succut-ere, to shake.

The term seems properly to denote that disorder into which part of an army is thrown, in consequence of which some are taken prisoners.

[SKEWES, s. pl. Skiffs, Calderwood; synon., scours.]

To SKEWL, v. a. To distort, to put any thing out of its proper direction; skewled, having an oblique direction, S.B. V. SHOWL.

To SKEY off, v. n. To fly, to remove quickly.

Than Jhon off Lyn was rycht gretly agast;
He saw his folk failye about him fast:
With egypt will he wald haiff beyn away,
Bad wynd the sail in all the haist thai may.
Bot fra the Scottis thay mycht than off skew,
The clyp so sar on athir burd thai wey.

Wallace, x. 8. 73, MS.

In Edit. 1648 and 1673, eskey.

Su.-G. sky, Alem. ski-en, vitare, subterfugere, Sw. af-sky, aversion, abhorrence, Wideg. E. eschew retains more of the Teut. form. V. next word.

SKEYB-IIORNT (ey as Gr. α), adj. Having the horns at a considerable distance from each other, Clydes.

Tent. scheef, obliquus, distortus; or rather, Isl. skif-a, Su.-G. skifw-a, discindere, dissecare.

SKEYF, s. A shrivelled dwarf, Upp. Clydes.

Tent. scheef, tortus, distortus; see cognate words mentioned under SKEVEL, v.

To SKEYG, v. n. To move nimbly in walking, to scud along. Skeyggin awa' on the road, walking stoutly and quickly, S. B.

Moca.-G. skeu-jan, iter facere; or Su.-G. skyyg-a, subterfugere.

SKEYG, s. At the skegg, in a quick motion, in the act of scudding away, Ang.

SKEYLD, s. The surf, Shetl.

Isl. skell-r, ictus cum sonitu; or Dan. skyll-e, eluere?

SKEYNDOAGER, SKENYDOUGER, s. A slight peal of thunder, Shetl.; perhaps originally applied to a flash of lightning, the first syllable being apparently allied to Isl. Su.-G. skin-a, fulgere, splendere.

[To SKEYTCH, v. n. To skate, West of S. V. SKETCH.]

[SKEYTCHER, s. A skater, ibid.]

[SKEYTCHES, SKEYTCHERS, SKEYTS, s. pl. Skates, ibid.]

SKIACH (gutt.), s. The berry of the hawthorn, Moray. Ir. and Gael. sciog, a hawthorn; sgeach, sgeachog, a haw.

SKIB, s. A stroke, Aberd.

But, wae's my heart for Petrie Gib,
The carlie's head 'twas scaw't;
Upo' the crown he got a skib,
That gart him yowll and claw't.

Christmas B'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 128.

Allied perhaps to Germ. schieb-en, to shove, to push, to thrust.

SKIBE, s. A niggardly fellow, West and South of S. V. SKYBALD.

"Skyb, a worthless fellow, Skyball, the same;"
Gall. Encycl.

Skibe is often used, Border, in a general sense, as denoting contempt. The particular application is determined by the epithet conjoined. Thus, a windy skibe denotes a braggart, a neetie skibe, a mean parsimonious fellow.

[SKIBRIE, SKIBBRIE, adj. Worthless; applied to stuff of any kind, Banffs. V. SKEEBRIE.]

SKICHEN (gutt.), SKIKEN, s. A disgust at food from one's being too nice in the taste, Mearns, Banffs.

Gael. sciathaigh-am, to tire; or sceath, vomiting. Su.-G. sky, however, signifies aversion, horror. We may perhaps view Skichen as having a common origin with Skeich.

To SKID, v. n. 1. To slide, Dumfr. V. SKYTE, v.

2. To look obliquely at any object, to look askint, Ang.

The radical term is Isl. skaa, a primitive particle denoting disjunction; whence askavid, disjunctim, separatim; G. Andr. This is the root of a number of S. words bearing this sense; as, Shach, Skaik, Skaivie, Skellie, q. v.

SKIDDIE, adj. Squint, oblique, Ang.; a skiddie-look, a squint look. Synon., Skellie.

To SKIFF, SKIFT, v. a. and n. 1. To move lightly and smoothly along, to move as scarcely touching the ground, S.

Use not to skift athort the gait.

Maitland Poems, p. 329.

High owre my head the sheep in packs,

I see them mice-like skift.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 215.

The dew stood skiunklan on her feet,

As she gaed skiffan owre the green.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 69.

V. MUM CHAIRTIS.

i.e., Let it be your custom to move lightly through the streets.

Kind muse, skiff to the bent away,

To try anes mair the landart lay.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 58.

Ye watchful guardians of the fair,

Who skiff on wings of ambient air.

Ibid., p. 214.

V. BUSTINE.

It may be originally the same with E. skip; Isl. skop-a, discurrere. But Su.-G. skifwa sig is rendered, superbe incedere; and skift seems indeed to include the idea of pride as well as of levity.

2. To glide over, to pass any thing in a slight way, S.B. V. SCOUP, v. 2.

[3. To rain or snow very slightly, S.

4. To do any kind of work in a hasty or careless manner; often followed by the prep. owre or by, Clydes., Banffs.]

5. To cause a flat stone to skip along the surface of a body of water, S. V. SCOUP, v. 2.

[6. To graze or hurt slightly, S.

7. To remove dust or any light substance by a gentle motion or action, S.]

SKIFF, SKIFT, s. [1. A slight movement, action, touch, stroke, or rub, S.]

2. A slight or flying shower, S.B.

The idea seems borrowed from that of sudden change; Su.-G. skifw-a, mutare, skift, intervallum; as a skift is opposed to rain; or as allied to Skift, v.

[3. A skip; also, the act of skipping; as, of a flat stone over the surface of water, S.

4. A slight graze or hurt, S.

5. A slightly whizzing sound; as made by a body skiffing through the air, S.]

6. Art, or facility in doing any thing, S.B.

Probably allied to Moes.-G. ya-skraft, making, from skapan, facere.

[SKIFFTER, s. A very slight shower; used as a dimin. of skift, West of S., Banffs.]

[To SKIFFER, SKIFTER, v. n. To rain, snow, or hail very gently, ibid.]

SKIFFIE, s. A name given to the tub or box used for bringing up coals from the pit, S.

"There were employed at least two men at the windlass, putting up the coals in skiffies, termed hutches." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc., xv. 331. Apparently from E. skiff, as boat is used to signify a tub.

SKIFT, s. A broad ridge of land, as distinguished from Laing, a narrow ridge, Orkn.; from Su.-G. skift, intervallum, a division, skift-a, to divide. Shed is nearly synon.

To SKIG, v. a. To flog; the same with Skeeg and Skeg, Aberd.

SKIG, s. A stroke on the breech, ibid.

SKIGGA, s. The sail of a vessel, Shetl.

To SKIGGLE, v. a. To spill. V. SKINKLE.

[SKIKEN, s. Disgust, Banffs. V. SKICHEN.]

[SKIKEN, adj. Haughty; showing contempt and disgust, ibid.]

[To SKIKEN, v. a. and n. To disgust; to become disgusted, ibid.]

[SKILDERIN, s. A smooth glazed surface, Shetl. Dan. skildrer, to point.]

[To SKILE, SKYLE, v. a. To disperse, Clydes. V. SKAIL.]

[SKILE, s. Dispersion, ibid.]

SKILL, s. Return. [V. SKYLD.]

"I yield me, schir, and do me nocht to smart,—

"I sauf youris, suppois it be no skill."

—Thy waresoun sould be [richt] smal but skill.

King Hart, i. 51. ii. 7.

Isl. skil, redditio, Pinkerton. It is allied to Su.-G. skyll-a, debitum solvere.

SKILL, SKYL, SKYLL, s. 1. Cause, reason.

Bot sen thow spekys sa rudily,
It is gret skyll men chast,
Thai proud wordis, till that thou know
The rycht, and bow it as thou aw.

Barbour, ix. 751, MS.

Reason is substituted, Edit. 1620.

Oft times is better hald nor len,
And this is my skill and resson quhy;
Full evill to knaw ar mony men,
And to be crabbit settis littil by.

Chron., S. P., iii. 225.

VOL. IV.

Skyl occurs in the same sense in True Thomas.

Ffor here no longer may thu dwell,
I shal tel the skyl wherfore.
To morrow on the Hel, a fowle fende,
Among these folke shal chese his fee:
Thou art a fayre man and a hende,
Fful wele I wot he wil chese the.

MS. Cambr. Jamieson's Pop. Ball., ii. 25.

It is written skyle, in MS. Cotton.

And I sal tele ye a skyle, &c.

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 280.

2. Proof, argument.

—Till the knyght the prys gawe thai,
That smate William the Ramsay
Throw-owte the hede, and a skyll
Thai schawyt til enfors thare-til,
And sayd, it wes justyng of were,
And he, that mast engrewyt there,
Suld have the grettast prys, wyth thi
That he engrewyt honestly.

Wyntown, viii. 35. 187.

3. Approbation, or regard. I hae nae skill of him, or it, i.e., no favourable opinion, S.B.

"I have little skill of any of her kind," said Adam, 'and I am sure you cannot help blessing the merciful Providence which hath kept them asunder.—My noble master marry a Papist!'" St. Johnst., ii. 224.

This is merely an oblique use of the term as denoting proof. It had originally been employed to signify that one could not judge of a person or thing, as having had no trial, or opportunity of probation. The Isl. v. is used in a similar manner. Mier skilst, sapio, G. Andr., p. 213.

Su.-G. skael, skil, ratio, probatio; Anfoera, syna skael, to bring forward his reasons; Ihre, Dan. skiel, A.-S. scyle, id. Isl. Su.-G. skil ia, disjungere, separare; primarily applied to external objects, and metaph. to the mind.

SKILLY, SKEELY, adj. 1. Intelligent, skillful in any profession or art, S.; pron. skeely, Aberd.

The king sits in Dumferline town,
Drinking the blude-red wine;
"O whare will I get a skeely skipper,
"To sail this new ship of mine!"

Minstrelsy Border, iii. 64.

Upon your milk your skilly hand you'll try,
And gee's a feast o't, as we're coming by.

Ross's Helenore, p. 95.

2. Having real or supposed skill in curing diseases in man or beast; as, "He's an unco skeely body," S.

3. Endowed with the knowledge which was supposed to enable one to counteract the power of magic, South of S.

"Certain rules and remedies, no less strange than ridiculous, were prescribed by skilly auld wives, whereby the charms of the fairies might be averted." Edin. Mag., April 1820, p. 344.

Su.-G. skaelig, rational; Isl. skialliyr, prudent; skialliyr maðr, homo disertus et consideratus; G. Andr.

SKILLOCKS, s. pl. Wild mustard, Renfrewshire; the same with Skelloch, q. v.

"The weeds which abound in corn fields are,—wild mustard, or skillocks, sinapis arvensis," &c. Wilson's Renfrewshire, p. 137.

H 2

[SKILM, s. The cream and milk adhering to the inside of an unwashed milk-pail, Shetl. Dan. skimmel, mould.]

[SKILMY, adj. Applied to milk tainted by the impurity of the vessel containing it, ibid. Dan. skimle, mouldy.]

To SKILT, v. n. To move quickly and lightly; skelp, synon.

There Pan kept sheep, and there it was
Where the red-hair'd glyed wanton lass
Did skilt through woods, owre banks and braes,
With her blind get, who, Poets sayes,
Could shoot as well as those that sees.

Cleland's Poems, p. 59.

This is used in Ettr. For. as signifying, to skip.
"What gars ye luck sae blae, bairn?—Ye're juste like the lave: ye gang aw skiltin about the streets half naked, an' than ye maun sit an' birsle yoursels afore the fire at hame." Marriage, ii. 131.

As the v. Skult signifies to beat, and is synon. with skelp; the latter being transferred to quick motion, or striking the ground with rapidity; perhaps Skilt is merely a variety of Skult, used in the same secondary sense.

To SKILT, v. n. To drink copiously, to swill, with the prep. at; Gall.

"Wine was dealt roun'; I skilted at it; but had I drunk at it till yet, it wad na hae doitered me." Gall.
Encycl., p. 419.

SKILT, s. A draught. "Skilts, drinks of any thing;" ibid.

SKILTING, s. The act of drinking deeply,
ibid.

This seems merely a provincial variety of S.B. Skolt, expl. by the learned Ruddiman, pocula eximanire, and obviously formed from skol, skul, a drinking vessel.
V. Skul, s., and SKOLE, SKOLT, v., also SCOLD, SCOLL, id. Isl. skol-a and Dan. skyll-er, as most probably having a common origin, signify to wash, eluere, lavare;
at skyle munnen, "to wash the mouth;" Wolff.

To SKIME, SKYME, v. n. To glance or gleam with reflected light, Lanarks. It differs from Skimmer, which seems to have a common origin; as Skimmer is often applied to the luminous object itself.

That sillie May gade linkin' hame
Daft as the lamb on lea—
"An' whar hae ye been, dear dochter mine,
"For joy skimes frae your ee?"

A.-S. scim-an, scim-ian, splendere, fulgere, corruscare, Lye; "to glister, glitter, or shine;" Somner.

SKIME, s. "The glance of reflected light,"
ibid.

His mantle was o' the skime o' licht,
That glints frae the emeraunt green,
An' his bannet blue o' skyan hue
Ontshone the heaven's sheen.

Edin. Mag. Oct. 1818, p. 327.

Licht was her step, as the yauldest dae's
That skiffs the heather-bell;
An' the skime o' her een was the dewy sheen
O' the bonny crystal-well.

Lady Mary o' Craignethan, ibid. July, 1819, p. 525.

A.-S. scima, splendor, fulgor; sunnan scima, solis splendor; aefen-scima, crepusculum, the twilight. Isl.

skima, lux parva, crepera; rima lucifera, q. "a chink that admits the light;" Su.-G. skumm, subobscurus; Germ. schim-en, obscure lucere, whence Mod. Sax.
schimmer, crepusculum.

This term, as respecting light, is very ancient;
Moes.-G. skeima denoting a lantern, Joh. 18, 3.

To SKIMMER, v. n. and a. 1. To flicker, as applied to light, S.

A.-S. scymr-ian, Su.-G. skimr-a, Germ. schimmer-n, radiare.

2. The inconstant motion of the rays of light, when reflected from a liquid surface slightly agitated, Lanarks.

3. To have a flaunting appearance; applied to females when lightly and showily dressed, Ayr., Lanarks.

And quhan she cam into the kirk,
She skimmer'd like the sun;
The belt that was about her waist
Was aw wi' pearls bedone.

Ballad, Sir Thomas and Fair Ann.

The day was sunny, he saw a bonny
Young lass come skimerin' by;
The smirking girl, like glancin' pearl,
Made a' his young heartstrings to dirle.

T. Scott's Poems, p. 358.

[4. To scatter, to dust, lightly or quickly over the surface of anything, Banffs.

5. To fall in a very light drizzling shower, ibid.]

6. To act or walk quickly, Roxb.; perhaps q.
to move with the rapidity of a ray of light.

Wachter views the Germ. word as a frequentative from schim-en, obscure lucere. V. SKIME.

7. To glide lightly and speedily, as one does over boggy ground, Perth.

8. Applied to the flight of a swallow near the surface of smooth water, Fife.

SKIMMER, SKIMMERIN, s. 1. The flickering of the rays of light, Lanarks.

[2. A very light shower; also, a slight sprinkling of any fine powdery substance, Banffs.]

3. A low flight, Fife.

SKIMMERIN, adj. [1. Faint, flickering, unsteady]. A skimmerin look, that peculiar look which characterises an idiot or a lunatic, S.B., as perhaps originally descriptive of the faint glare of the disordered eye.

The application of the Teut. term to the eye, when in a disordered state, corresponds with our use of the term. Schemeringhe in d'ooghe, suffusio; cum nebe-culae muscae, et id genus alia oculis obversantur; Kilian.

[2. Light, drizzling, or powdery, Banffs.]

Germ. schimmer, a dim or faint glare of light; Su.-G.
skymm-a, obumbrare, skumm, obscurus. For lhre justly views A.-S. scymr-ian, in this sense, as radically different from the word of the same form signifying to shine. He concludes that the Scythic root denoted something faintly shining, or in an intermediate state between obscurity and brightness, from the use of Moes.-G. skema, for a lantern, Joh. xviii. 3. A.-S. scymr-ian, "umbrare, inumbrare. To cast a shadow; Belg. schmer-en, whereof our shimering, for an imperfect light, like unto that of the twilight;" Somner.

[SKIMP, s. Good humoured banter, raillery, Shetl. Dan. skiemt, jest, joke, sport.]

[To SKIMP, v. a. To joke, banter, ibid. Dan. skiemte, Isl. skiemtu, id.]

[SKIMPIN, part. adj. Joking, scoffing, reducing, ibid.]

SKIN, s. 1. A particle, a single grain, Aberd.

2. A small quantity, ibid.

In both these senses are the phrases used, "a skin [of] corn," "a skin of sand," "a skin [of] salt," &c.

Perhaps allied to Su.-G. skin, Teut. schijn, Germ. schin, forma, species; Su.-G. skin-a, apparere, speciem præ se ferre; Teut. schyn-en, id.

SKIN, s. A term applied to a person, as expressive of the greatest contempt; as, "Ye're naething but a nasty skin," S.

Perhaps merely a figurative use of the E. word as denoting a husk. Isl. skeni, however, has a similar acceptation; Hoino nauci, Halderson.

[SKIN-CLAES, s. pl. Waterproof overalls, Shetl.]

SKIN-FLINT, s. A covetous wretch, one who, if possible, would take the skin off a flint.

"'It would have been long,' said Oldbuck, — 'ere my womankind could have made such a reasonable bargain with that old skin-flint.'" Antiquary, i. 235.

Both Dr. Johnson and Mr. Todd mention this word, but without any example. Grose indeed gives it as a cant word; "an avaricious man or woman;" Class. Dict.

SKINCHEON o' drink. The same with Skube, Fife; perhaps from the S. v. to skink.

SKINK, s. 1. A shin of beef. In this sense the term is used in Mearns, and perhaps in other northern counties.

This term, although with an improper orthography, occurs in a curious medical prescription.

"The materials of spermatick medicament ingendring seed.—Of living creatures, the brains of sparrows, cocks stoners, bulls pisel, harts pisel, civet, oysters, musk, scinks." St. Germain's Royal Physician, p. 64.

2. Soup made of shins of beef, S.; soup of any kind, West of S.

"Scotch skink, which is a pottage of strong nutriment, is made with the knees and sinews of beef, but long boiled." Bacon's Nat. Hist., ap. Johns.

Guid harley broth and skink came next,
Wi' raisins and plundamis mixt.

Shirref's Poems, p. 210

Su.-G. skinka, Belg. Germ. schinok, A.-S. sceanc, a gammon. A.-S. scenc, however, signifies drink, potus.

SKINK-BROTH, s. The same with Skink, soup made of shins of beef, S.B.

SKINK-HOUGH, s. The leg-joint or shin of beef used in making the soup called skink, S.

SKINK-PLAIT, s. A plate for holding soup.

"The air sall haue—an butter plait, ane skink-plait, ane beif plait, ane luggit disch," &c. Balfour's Practicks, p. 235.

SKINK, SKYNK, s. 1. Drink, in a general sense, S.

"The wine!—there was hardly half a mutchkin, and pair, thin, fasionless skink it was." St. Ronan, iii. 155. A.-S. scenc, potus; calix, poculum; Teut. schenck-wijn, vinum donativum.

[2. A draught, drink; also, a drinking bout, a booze, Clydes.]

To SKINK, SKYNK, v. a. and n. 1. To pour out liquor of any kind for drinking.

And for thir tithingis in flakoun and in skull
Thay skynk the wyne, and wauchtis cowpys full.
Doug. Virgil, 210, 6.

The v. is still used in this sense, Ianarks., often as synon. with E. to Decant.

This seems the primary sense; Su.-G. skaenk-a, Franc. skenk-en, Dan. skenk-er, Germ. schenk-en, potum infundere. Hence Franc. skinko, Alem. scenke, Germ. schenk, pincerna, a butler; synon. with A.-S. byrle; Germ. erz-schenk, the chief butler who presented the cup to the Emperor at the feast on occasion of his coronation; erb-schenk, a hereditary butler; from A.-S. scenc, drink.

2. To make a libation, to pour out in making an offering to the gods. [In modern times to fill glasses and drink healths, S.]

Now skynk and offer Jupiter cowpis full,
And in your prayeris and orisonis in fere
Do call apoun Anchises my fader dere.

Doug. Virgil, 209, 33.

Pateris libate Jovi, Virg.

3. To serve drink; a sense still retained in E.

Call on our patroun, common God diuyn is,
And with gude will do skynk and birrl the wynis.
Doug. Virgil, 250, 49.

4. [To drink in company, to share one's liquor]. To skink over, to drink together, in order to settle or confirm and formally to renounce; as in the case of a vender drinking the health of a buyer, by way of confirming the bargain, and wishing him enjoyment of what he has purchased, S.

"If this had not been, I should have skinked over and foregone my part of paradise and salvation, for a breakfast of dead moth-eaten earth." Rutherford's Lett., P. i., ep. 88.

[To SKINK, v. a. and n. 1. To scatter, disperse; split, separate; as, "Noo, we man skink awa' hame," Clydes.]

2. "To break in pieces by weight or pressure;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

3. "To crush the sides of any thing, as of an egg, together;" ibid.

[Sw. skingra, to disperse, scatter, break up. The v. skink, is still used; as in the common advice given to one making gruel—skink it weel, i.e., while stirring it with the spoon, frequently lift a spoonful and pour it back again, in order to break the gruel thoroughly and prevent it sitting to the bottom of the vessel, S.]

2. A small portion or fragment; a chip, shred, tatter; also, a small quantity; as, "Gane a' skink," gone to shreds or tatters; a skink o' saut, a small quantity of salt, Lanarks.

3. A crush or smash; also, the sudden pressure, stroke, or blow by which it is produced; as "He brak it wi' a skink o' his heel," Clydes.]

[SKINKLE, SKINKLIN, SKINKLING, s. 1. A sprinkling or scattering in small quantities, as of salt, sugar, etc.; also, a sprinkling or spilling, as of water, ibid.]

2. A very small portion or quantity, ibid., Gl. Burns.

Fraunces gives O.E. "Scantlyon, or skanklyone," rendering it Equissium, a word I can find in no other Dictionary.

To SKINKLE, v. a. and n. To sprinkle, to scatter, to spill in small quantities, Clydes., Mearns, Edin.; sometimes pron. skiggle; synon. scuttle.

SKINKLING, adj. Applied to meat that is tainted or out of season, and ungrateful to the palate, Mearns.

To SKINKLE, v. n. 1. To sparkle, to shine, S. [part. pr. skinklin, skinklan, skinkland.]

The cleadng that fair Annet had on,
It skinkled in their een.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 190.

—The gay mantel

Was skinkland in the sone.

Janieson's Popular Ball., i. 345.

Squire Pope but busks his skinklin patches,
O' heathen tatters.

Burns, iv. 360.

2. To make a showy appearance, S.O.

—There, midst lang yellow ranks
O' gowans on sweet Cartha's banks,
Row't in a skinklan plaid,
Souns' loud the Scottish Muse's horn,—

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 505.

Evidently a frequentative from Moes-G. skein-an, Su.-G. skin-a, A.-S. scin-an, fulgere.

SKINKLE, s. [Gleam, glancing.] "Lustre, shining;" Gl. Surv. Ayr., p. 693.

SKINKLIN, s. The sparkling of a bright irradiation, Ayr.

SKINY, s. "Packthread," S. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 127.

He derives it from σκούρος. It is pron. q. skeenye, E. skain of thread is probably allied.

SKIO, s. A hut in which fish are dried, Shetl.

"The same domestic—had observed—a deserted skio, or fisherman's hut, and suggested that they should occupy it for the night." The Pirate, iii. 41.

V. SKZO, which seems the established orthography.

[To SKIONE, v. a. To ascertain (by a method well known to fowl-keepers) whether a hen is about to lay an egg, Shetl. Dan. skionne, Swed. skönja, to ascertain.]

* To SKIP, v. a. To make a thin stone skim along the surface of water, Berwicks.; synon. Skiff and Squirr, q. v.

SKIP, s. The person who, in Curling, plays the last of his party; and who is also the judge or director as to the mode of playing the game to all on his side, Dumfr., Gall.

"It adds not a little to the honour of the Kirkpatrickians, that one of the rinks, headed on the part of Wamphray by Mr. H. Currie, was never before conquered on any ice since he became skip—an honour which he has long and very deservedly held." Caledon. Mercury, Feb. 8, 1823.

Su.-G. Isl. skip-a, ordinare, constituere, skipalag, jus dicere; Tent. schepen, senator, decuria, judex.

SKIP, term. Denoting state or condition, as in foreskip, herrieskip, hissieskip, nouriskip, &c.

This term corresponds to Su.-G. skap, Belg. schap, Germ. schaft, A.-S. scipe, E. ship; all from the v. denoting action or constitution, Su.-G. skap-a, creare, &c.

SKIPPARE, SKIPPER, s. 1. A shipmaster; but now generally appropriated to the master of a sloop, barge, or passage-boat, S.

Himself as skippare hynt the stero on hand,
Himself as maister gan marynaris command.

Doug. Virgil, 133, 23.

The skiper had gar land thee at the Bass.

Everyreen, ii. 71.

"Some of Kirkaldy skippers, Crouner Hamilton also, would have been at the trying of their fire works on the King's ships." Baillie's Lett., i. 167. V. SKILLY.

It is still sometimes applied, but rather in a familiar way, to shipmasters of a higher order, S.

Su.-G. skippare, anc. skipare, A.-S. scipar, Belg. schipper, Germ. schiffer.

2. In the fisheries, it is used in a sense still lower, as denoting one of the men who superintends other four, having the charge of a coble, S.

"These [cables] are used only in the herring fishing, each carrying 4 men and a skipper, with 8 nets." P. Oldhamstocks, Statist. Acc., vii. 407.

"The skippers, or men who have the charge of the boats, and give directions when to draw the nets, have for their wages during the fishing season 6l. with 4 bolls of oatmeal, &c." Ibid., xi. 93.

SKIRDOCH, adj. 1. Flirting; an epithet applied to a coxcomb, or a coquette, Fife.

Allied perhaps to Dan. skierts, a jest, raillery; skierts-er, to jeer, to banter; skerter, a jeerer.

2. Easily scared or frightened, ibid. Skeigh, synon.

SKIRE, SKYRE, adj. Pure, mere; as, "a skire fool;" S.B., Rudd. V. SCHIRE.

To SKIRGE, v. a. To pour a liquid forcibly backwards and forwards from one vessel to another, in order to mellow it; applied to fermented liquors; Fife.

SKIRGE, s. A flash or dash of water; as, "I gat my kutes brunt wi' a skirge out o' the kail-pat;" ibid.; synon. Jilp and Jilt.

Fr. escourrouer is "the dale of a (ships) pompe, whereby the water is passed out;" Cotgr. Gael. sciord-am, however, also squird-am, to spirt, to squirt, is probably the origin; whence sciordlain and squirlain, a squirt. O'Reilly gives these words as having the same meaning in Irish, although overlooked in both forms by O'Brien.

SKIRGIFFIN, s. A half-grown female. V. SKAIRGIFFNOCK.

SKIRISFURISDAY, SKYIRTHURISDAYE, s. The Thursday before Good-Friday.

"Item, fourty drying clathis of all sortes—Deliverit xii in the chalmor on Skiris-furisdag at the wesching of the pure folkis fete." Inventories, A. 1561, p. 156.

—"Togidder with ane ouklike mercate on Settenlaye, and thrie yeirlike faires, viz. the first thairroff yeirlike vpon Skyirthurisdag, the second thairroff at Lambes, the third thairroff at the feast of Martimes in winter." Acts Ja. VI., 1621, Ed. 1814, p. 642.

"Item be the Quenis grace precept to Mr. John Balfour for the service to be done on Skyristhurisdag nixtocum in Falkland, to xix virginis xxxiiij elnis of bolane clath the elne x s. . . xvij li." Pub. Rec.

It occurs repeatedly in the Treasurer's Accounts, in the reigns of James IV. and V.

Su.-G. skiertoraday, id. Ihre says that it is thus denominated, "either because the church prepares herself for a more solemn celebration of the day of our Lord's passion by greater purity of life; or because it was anciently the custom to wash the feet of the poor who were assembled on this day; or because christians then purified themselves from earthly things, a cineribus purgant, as on this day they sprinkled their heads with ashes." It still retains this name in Sweden. It is from Su.-G. skier-a, purgare. In Isl. skyr-dag and skirdaggr, or Purification-day, from skyr-a, id.

Furisdag is the vulgar name of Thursday in S. V. FURSDAY. This day is in England called Maundy-Thurs-day, or, according to the orthography preferred by Phillips, Mandy-Thurs-day. He gives a reason for this name, corresponding with one of those assigned by Ihre, as well as with the extract in our old Inventory quoted above.—"The Thursday before Easter, so call'd as it were Dies Mandati, i.e., the day of the Mandate or command, upon account of the charge which our blessed Lord and Saviour gave his disciples, concerning the observation of his supper. On that day the Kings and Queens of England have long practised the custom of washing the feet of poor men, in number equal to the years of their reign, and giving them a dole of money, cloth, shooes and stockings in imitation of Christ, who the night before he ordain'd the blessed sacrament, wash'd his disciples feet, telling them that they must do the like one to another."

A name for this day of the same import with ours, was in former times not unknown in E. Hence Cotgr. explains Fr. Jeduy absolu not only Maundy Thursday, but Sheere-Thurslay; from F. sheere, A.-S. scir, clean, pure.

In O.E. it is also written Shere-Thursday, and Shier Thurslay. In an old homily, a singular reason is given for the name. Shere-Thursday is said to be so called "for that in old Fathers days the people would that day shere theyr heedes and clipp theyr berdes, and pool [poll] theyr heedes, and so make them honest ayenst Easter day." V. Brand's Pop. Antiq., i. 124.

In the Records of the society of Masons, Newcastle, 1630, mention is made of "Skin-Thurs-day, being our Lady-Day in Lent." Brand's Hist. Newc., ii. 343, apparently for Skirs-Thurslay.

Ihre adds, that "the whole of this week is by the Germans called charwoche; to which, if s be prefixed, it will appear nearly allied to the Su.-G. term." This there is considerable reason to doubt; especially as in our old language we have Care-Sunday, denoting the Sunday before Easter, as well as Skyris-furisdag in the same week. For the conjectures as to the origin of the term Care, V. CARE SUNDAY. See also SKEIR.

To SKIRL, SKIRLE, v. n. 1. To shriek, to cry with a shrill voice, S.

And fouk wad threap, that she did green
For what wad gar her skirle
And skreigh some day.

Ramsay's Poems, l. 262.

V. SKREED, v.

Skirles is evidently used per metath. for skirls.

—Gawayn bi the coler kepiss the knight;
Then his leman on loft skirles and skrik.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gail., ii. 22

Skrik, i.e., shrieked.

"They fired the pleasant park of Feteresso, some trees burnt, others being green could not burn, but the hart, the hind, the deer and the roe, skirled at the sight of fire, but they were all tane and slain." Spalding, ii. 285.

[2. To sing with a loud or discordant voice.]

Mak' haste an' turn king David owre,

An' lilt wi' holy clangor:

O' double verse come gie us four,

An' skirl up the Bangor.

Burns, The Ordination, s. 3.]

Sibb. derives it from skri-a, vociferari. But although this be the remote source, it is immediately allied to Su.-G. skrael-a, id. Dan. skræld-e, Isl. skiall-a, sonum strennum edere. Hence skiol, vociferatio, Su.-G. skoert, Dan. skraal, skrald, id. This seems to be the origin of E. shrill.

This conjecture is confirmed by the ancient mode of writing and pronouncing the E. word. "Shyrle, as one's voyse is, [Fr.] trenchant;" Palsgr. B. iii. F. 95, a.

SKIRL, s. 1. A shriek, a shrill cry, S.

With skirllis and with skrekis sche thus beris,

Filling the hous with murning and salt teris,

V. the v.

Doug. Virgil, 61, 36.

"Ye have gi'en baith the sound thump, and the loud skirl;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 82.

2. A blast of wind accompanied by rain or snow; as, "a skirl o' snaw," Aberd.

Isl. skialtr, sonorus; skiall-a, sonitum attractu edere.

3. A stroke which makes the object struck to quiver, S. a dunt, which occurs a few lines before.

At length, however, o'er his mind

Love took a dunsy swirl,

An' the fu' pow'r o' Elspeth's charms

Gied his poor saul a skirl.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 63.

SKIRL-CRAKE, s. The Sand-piper, a bird, Shetl.

"Tringa Interpres, (Lin. Sya.) Skirl-crake, Turnstone, Sea Dotterel, or Hebridial Sandpiper." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 240.

SKIRL-NAKED, adj. Stark naked, Roxb.; synon. Mother-naked, S.

It has been conjectured that this term might originate from the circumstance of a child generally skirling or crying as soon as born.

SKIRL-IN-THE-PAN. 1. The noise made by a frying pan, when the butter is put in which prepares it for receiving the meat, S.

2. Transferred to the dish that is prepared in this manner, S.

It is commonly said to a stranger, who has arrived at a late hour, or where there is no regular dinner, and who may be supposed anxious to get what can be soonest made ready; "Ye've get a skirl i' the pan."

"Muckle gude may it do ye, my bonny man. I trow ye didna get sic a skirl-in-the-pan at Niel Blane's. His wife was a canny body, and could dress things very weel for ane in her line o' business, but no like a gentleman's housekeeper, to be sure." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 107.

3. A sort of drink, called also Merry-meat, made of oatmeal, whisky, and ale, mixed and heated in a pan, and given to the gossips at inlyings, Mearns.

This is generally traced to skirl, as denoting a shriek, in reference to the noise made in frying hastily. But it may be connected with [Sw. skrälla, Dan. skralde, signifying to crack, crackle.]

[SKIRLIE-WEEACK, s. A shrill cry; also a little person with a shrill voice, Banffs.]

[To SKIRLIE-WEEACK, v. n. To cry with a shrill voice; part. pa. skirlie-weeackin, used also as a s., and as an adj. ibid.]

[SKIRP, s. 1. A small drop, a splash, a clot; as of mud or paint, Banffs.

2. A slight shower of rain, ibid; synon. skiff.]

To SKIRP, v. a. and n. [To spot, spatter, splash; also, to rain very slightly, ibid.] Aberd. Su.-G. skrefu-a, divaricare; or skrap-a, to scrape.

To SKIRP, v. a. To mock. V. SCORP.

SKIRPIN, s. The gore, or strip of thin cloth, in the hinder part of breeches, Ayrs.; said to be more properly kirpin.

According to the correction, it must be the same with carpin. V. CURPON.

To SKIRR, v. a. To scour, [to move about quickly, Ayrs.]

"Two dragoons, who had been skirring the country, like blood-hounds, in pursuit of Mr. Cargill, came in and sat themselves down by the fire." R. Gilhaize, iii. 154.

To SKIRRIVAIG, v. n. To run about in an unsettled way, Ayrs. V. SCURYVAGE.

[To SKIRT, v. a. and n. 1. To run away, to run quickly; often followed by the adv. aff, or awa, Clydes., Banffs.

2. To elude, to get beyond the reach of a pursuer, Clydes.]

[*SKIRT, s. A riding petticoat, Fife.]

SKIST, s. Chest, box; for kist, Gl. Sibb.

SKIST, s. [Prob. an errat. for Skift, skill, ability.]

Bot scoup, or skist, his craft is all to scayth.

King Hart, ii. 54.

V. SCUP.

To SKIT, v. n. 1. To flounce, to caper, like a skittish horse, S.

Yet soon's she hears me mention Muirland Willie,
She skits and flings like ony towmont filly.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 12.

To shaw we're gentle, when we wauk on fit,

In passin' poor fouk, how we'll faught and skit.

Ibid. p. 20.

- [2. To joke, jeer, taunt, or play tricks of a mean or mischievous kind, S.]

Perhaps the true origin of this, as well as of the noun, is Isl. skiogt-a, circumcursare. In this language a horse itself is denominated skiott; but apparently on account of the fleetness of its motion, from skiot-r, celer, citus.

SKIT, s. [1. Applied to a young capering or restive horse, S.]

- [2. A contemptuous name for a female of a light, frivolous, or immoral character;] as, dancing skit, a female dancer on the stage.

"For incontinent upon sight of him come to hir remembrance that heinous offence that without greit propitiatiounis culd not be purgeit, forsuith that the Quene had not dancit at the wedding feist of Sebastian the Minstrell and vyle jester, that scho sat be her husband quha had not yet fully recouert his deith, that at the banquet of hir domestical parasite scho had not played the dancing skit." Buchanan's Detect. Sign., D. 7, a. Histrionicam non egerit, Lat.

Skit is still used for a vain, empty creature; sometimes, proud skit, S.

3. A piece of silly ostentation, an action that displays much emptiness of mind, S.

The term may allude to the motion of a skittish horse, which frequently starts aside. Isl. ski, convitium, may also be allied to Su.-G. sky, vitare, anferere, whence E. sky. Ski is conjoined with skripi, our skrip, mock, taunt, ski ok skripi; Hervararsag., p. 176.

4. An oblique taunt, a sarcasm, S. Squib is not quite synon., as it does not imply that the reflection is indirect.

Su.-G. skiut-a, to throw.

5. A kind of humbug, nearly allied to the modern cant term Quizz, S.

"But if he really shot young Hazlewood. But I canna think it, Mr. Glossin: this will be some o' your skits now—I canna think it o' sae douce a lad; na, na, this is just some o' your auld skits." Guy Mannering, ii. 175, 176.

6. A kind of satire, something tending to expose one to ridicule, S.

"I was recommended to you as a good hand for writing me a skit."—"O a satire, a lampoon—is that what you mean?"—"Aye, just a bit skit, ye ken." Caled. Merc., 11 Nov. 1822.

This term is used in E., although overlooked in Dictionaries. "A skit," Mr. Tooke says, "the past participle of scit-an, means (subaud. something) cast or thrown. The word is now used for jeer or jibe, or covered imputation thrown or cast upon any one." Divers. Purley, ii. 144.

- To SKITE, SKYTE, v. a. 1. To eject any liquid forcibly; properly, liquidum excrementum jaculare, S.

Isl. skrett-a, id. Sw. skijt-a, exonerare ventrem. Hence the designation for a diarrhoea.

2. To squirt, to throw the spittle forcibly through the teeth, S.

Su.-G. squaett-a, liquida effundere.

- To SKITE, SKYT, v. n. 1. To glide swiftly, to skate, to shoot, S.

Here coachmen, grooms, or pavement trotter
Glitter'd a while, then turn'd to snorter;
Like a shot starn, that thro' the air
Skyls east or west with unco glare,
But found neist day on hillock side,
Na better seems nor paddock ride.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 334.

2. To "fly out hastily;" Gl. Shirr. [To fall or be driven forcibly in a slanting direction, as rain by wind, Clydes.]

"Skyte, to fly against any thing, to strike;" Gl. Picken's Poems, 1788.

3. To rebound in a slanting direction, in consequence of a smart stroke; applied to small objects, as hail, pebbles, &c., Lanarks.

Su.-G. skiut-a, id. Neutraliter usurpatum notat, id., quod cum impetu prorumpit; Ihre.

- [4. To slip or slide suddenly as in walking; as, "My feet skitit on the plainstane," Clydes.]

SKITE, SKYTE, s. 1. [A dash, a sudden fall]; as, a skite o' rain, a flying shower; S. B. Renfr.; the same with SKIFT, q. v.

2. The dung of a fowl, S. B. V. the v.

Perhaps immediately allied to Isl. skiot-a, pret. skyt, jaculari; cito vehere; q. what is sent forth, or passes quickly.

3. The act of squirting, or throwing saliva forcibly through the teeth, S.

4. A squirt or syringe, Aberd., Mearns; as, a humlock-skite, a squirt made from the hollow stalk of hemlock, ibid.

- [5. A skate; pl. skites, skates; also, the act of skating, a turn or time of skating, Clydes.]

6. A smart and sudden blow, so as to make what strikes rebound in a slanting direction from that which is struck, Lanarks., Ayr., Aberd.

7. The act of slipping or sliding in walking, Loth.

8. A trick; as, "He's played me an ill skite," Buchan.

He play'd my dochter Meg a skyte,
Which weel has coft the gibbet.
Tarras's Poems, p. 60.

—Something hin' her wi' a skyte,
Gat up, an' gied a fuff.

Ibid., p. 67.

This in Gl. is expl. "mischance." But as the term more properly signifies a trick, this sense agrees much better with this passage.

SKITER, SKYTER, s. 1. A squirt, a syringe, Aberd.; [skooter, Clydes.]

- [2. A skater, Clydes.]

- [3. The Cow-Parsley or Hemlock from which squirts are made, Aberd.]

4. A low term for a sea-bather, Banffs.]

SKITIE, SKYTIE, s. A slight transient shower; a dimin. from Skyte, Aberd.

SKITTER, s. 1. Liquidum excrementum, S.

It occurs in a Proverb very coarse indeed, but thus meant to express the greater abhorrence of falsehood. "I wish the lyar's mouth kiss a stone kneed [r. knee] deep of skitter." Kelly, p. 399.

2. Applied metaph. to any thing impure or incongruous, which, when mixed with what is valuable, renders the whole mass useless, S.

It occurs in this sense in another coarse, but very expressive S. Prov. "A spoonful of skitter will spoil a potful of skink;" "An ill mixture will spoil a good composition." Kelly, p. 16.

3. With the article the prefixed, it denotes the diarrhoea, S.

The O. E. name bears a close resemblance. "Skytte or flyx. Fluxus. Lienteria. Dissenteria. Dyaria."

Prompt. Parv. The latter term, Flyr, is expl. by Lat. "Flixus, Diaseuterics." Ibid.

Isl. skitr is given, as a different word from skit, both signifying sordes ventris; as if it were pronounced like S. skitter, Haldorson.

To SKITTER, v. n. Liquidum excrementum ejicere, S.

"A skittering cow in the loan would have as many marrows;" "Spoken when ill people pretend that others are as bad as themselves." Kelly, p. 20.

The word in this form is obviously a frequentative, or diminutive, from Isl. Su.-G. skyt-a, cacare. Perhaps the term is radically from skint-a, jaculare, as denoting forcible ejection.

SKITTERFUL, adj. Under the influence of a diarrhœa.

"If you was as skitterful as you are scornful, you would file the whole house," S. Prov. "A bitter return to those who are too liberal of their taunts." Kelly, p. 176.

[SKIUMPACK, s.] A large unshapely piece of turf, Shetl.]

To SKIVE, v. u. To cut longitudinally into equal slices; applied to the modern plan of slitting leather, S.

SKIVERS, SKEEVERS, s. pl. A kind of leather much used for binding and lining, S.

This is only one half of the thickness of the skin, which is sliced into two; the other half being reserved for making gloves.

Su.-G. skifra, a slice, pl. skifrar; skuera i skifrar, to cut into slices.

SKIVET, s. A sharp blow, Ettr. For.

A.-S. scife, scyfe, praecipitatio; impulsus; trusio, detrusio; scyt-an, peller. [Sw. kif, strike, kifras, to contest, quarrel.] Isl. skef-ia, signifies to quarrel, to contend; velitari.

SKIVET, s. An instrument for mending the fire in a smith's forge, Roxb. Expl. a fire-shovel used in forges, Ettr. For.

[Sw. skuffel, an iron shovel, skufra, to push or shove.]

SKIVIE, adj. Hairbrained. V. SKAIVIE.

[SKLAFF, SKLAFFER, s., v., and adv.] V. under SCLAFF and SCLAFFER.]

[SKLAFFS, SKLAFFERS, s. pl.] Thin light shoes; also, old and much worn slippers, Clydes., Banffs.; synon. bauchles.]

[SKLAFFER, SKLAFFIR, SKLAFFIRT, s., v., and adv.] A group of words with same meanings as sklaff, but more intensive, ibid. V. SCLAFFER.

[SKLAFFIN, s.] The act of walking in a slovenly manner with loose-fitting shoes or slippers, ibid.]

[SKLAFFIRT, s.] A rock lying horizontally in thin beds, Banffs. V. SCLAFFER.]

SKLAFFORD HOLES. The apertures in the walls of a barn, for the admission of air, Ang.

SKLAIF, s. A slave.

Ane evill wyfe is the werst aucht,
That ony man can haif;
For he may never sit in saucht,
Unless he be hir sklaif.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 179.

V. SCLAVE.

To SKLAIK, v. a. To bedaub, to besmear, Aberd.

SKLAIK, s. A quantity of any smeary substance, ibid.

SKLAIKIE, adj. Smeary, ibid.

Sklaik might, at first view, seem merely to be a provincial variety of Slaik; but it may be derived from Claik, v., also signifying to bedaub; with this difference, that Sklaik bears a more forcible meaning. Claik, we may reasonably trace to Germ. kleck, macula, kleck-en, maculare, probro afficere. As the Germ. v. bears not only a literal but a moral signification, it is most probable that we ought to view Isl. klæk-r, Su.-G. klock, opprobrium, crimen, infamia, as a cognate term. Perhaps the radical word is Su.-G. lack, vitium, defectus, also vituperium; whence belack-a, calumniari.

SKLAIT, s. Slate, S. V. SCLAIT.

[To SKLAMMER, v. n.] 1. To scramble; also, to clamber, Clydes.

2. To wander about in idleness, Banffs.
Evidently a corr. of E. clamber.]

SKLANDYR, s. Slander. V. SCLANDYR.

[SKLAP, s.] A blow; properly, a blow with the open hand, or with anything flat, West of S., Banffs.]

[To SKLAP, v. a.] To strike with severity, to dash; properly, to beat with the open hand, ibid. Synon., skelp; dimin., sklaff: in some of its uses it is like E. clap.

Sw. klappa, Dan. klappe, to beat, to drub.]

[SKLAPDUNT, s.] A severe blow, Banffs.]

[SKLASH, s.] 1. A violent dash, a loud crashing noise, Clydes., Banffs.

2. A quantity of any liquid or semi-liquid substance dashed with violence, ibid.

3. The act of walking violently through mud or water; also, the sound made by so doing, ibid.]

[To SKLASH, v. a. and n.] 1. To dash or throw mud or water; also, to bespatter, as in walking rapidly through mud or water, ibid.

2. To walk rapidly on a wet or muddy road; implying both the action and the noise, ibid.]

[SKLATCH, s. 1. V. meanings under SCLATCH.

2. A mass or clot of mud or filth, Clydes., Banffs.

3. A fall or dash of mud or filth; also, the sound made by it, ibid.

4. A large spot or mark on the skin, ibid.]

[To SKLATCH, v. a. and n. To dash violently; to fall heavily, Banffs. For other meanings, V. under SCLATCH.]

[SKLATCH, adv. Heavily, violently; with heavy, lumbering step, ibid.

Sclatch is properly a dimin. of Sclash, but in use they are often confounded.]

[SKLATE, s. and adj. Slate. V. SCLAITHE.]

SKLATER, s. A slater, S.

"And also in—behalf of the hail cowperis, glassin-wrichtis, boweris, sklatteris," &c. Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 540.

"I paid Deacon Paul—thirteen shillings, a groat, and a bawbee, for the count o' his sklater that pointed the skews of the house at Martinmas." The Entail, ii. 119.

To SKLAVE, v. a. and n. To calumniate, to utter slander, Aberd.

Su.-G. klaff-a, calumniare, obrectare, (the servile letter s being prefixed.) Hence klaffare, calumniator. Ihre remarks that it primarily denotes the troublesome noise and barking of dogs; Germ. klaff-en, latrare.

SKLEET, adj. Smooth, sleek, Aberd.

Su.-G. slæet, laevis, politus, with k inserted; Germ. schlecht, id.; A.-S. slæet-an, laevigare.

[To SKLEET, v. a. and n. To slide or slip smoothly or rapidly, Clydes.]

[To SKLEET-SKLITE, v. n. To slide or tumble out in a mass, as in emptying a bucket, ibid., Banffs.]

SKLEFF, adj. 1. Shallow.

"Like a skimming dish, or skel," Gl. Sibb. But the resemblance is far-fetched. It seems radically the same with E. shelley.

2. Thin and flat; as, "a skleff cheese," one that is not thick; "a skleff piece of wood," &c., Berwicks. Used to denote vessels which have little depth, Ettr. For.

3. Applied to one who is not round in the shape of the body, Roxb.

4. Plain-soled, Renfr. Skleff-pittit, id., Roxb.

Allied perhaps to Teut. steuor, tenuis, exilis; if not to Germ. schlecht, planus.

The term, as expl. shallow, has evidently the same general signification. Sibbald defines it, "ebb, shallow, like a skimming dish, or skel;" apparently viewing it as allied to the latter word. But the definition shews that skleff denotes in general something that is flat, as not possessing depth in proportion to its breadth.

VOL. IV.

SKLEFFERIE, SKLIFFERIE, adj. Separated into laminae, Upp. Clydes.

This has the same signification, and the same general origin, with Skeleg. V. SKELVE, v. But it is more immediately allied to Teut. schelffer, schelver, segmen; assula; and schelffer-en, assulatum frangere; Germ. schelffer-n, to flake; Belg. schilferen, to scale off, schilfer, a scale, schilferig, scaly.

SKLENDRY, SKLENDERYE, adj. 1. Thin, slender, lank; as, "a sklenderie lad;" Ettr. For.

"Ye're ravin, Maron—ye're gaun daft—a bit sklendry lassie o' aughteen kill sae mony armed Highlanders?" Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 15.

2. Faint, slight, ibid.; like E. slender, ibid.

"I—begoude to keep sklenderye houpees of winning out of myne ravelled fank unsperkyt with schame or disgrace." Hogg's Wint. Tales, ii. 41.

SKLENIE, adj. Thin, slender; applied to the form or shape; Fife.

This may have been originally the same with Isl. sláni, longurio imbecillis, expl. in Dan. en lang rackel, "a lang rickle," S. Shunni, piger homuncio; Halderson.

To SKLENT, SKLINT, SKLENT doun, v. a.

To tear, rend, split, splinter, Aberd.

In Sw. West. Goth. slant, signifies a rag, veteramentum, which Ihre derives from slit-a, rumpere. The term may, however, have had its origin from a thing being torn aslant. V. SCLINT, v.

To SKLENT, SKLINT, v. n. V. SCLINT.

It may be added, that to sklent sometimes signifies, to deviate from the truth, to fib, S.

[SKLETASKRAE, s. The Dunlin (Tringa alpina). These birds frequent rocky shores, generally in large flocks, Shetl.]

[SKLEUSH, s., v., and adj. A group of words like Sklush, with same meanings, but implying a softer substance and sound, Banffs. V. SKLUSH.

Sklensh, as a s., means also a mis-shapen shoe; and is sometimes applied to an untidy, slatternly female.]

[SKLEUSHAN, SKLEUSHIN. 1. As a s., the act of walking with a dirty, trailing step; also, the sound made by so doing, Banffs.

2. As an adj., having the habit of walking as above; slatternly, ibid.]

[SKLEUT, s. 1. Same as SKLUTE, q. v. Banffs.

2. A semi-liquid mass; the fall of such a mass; also, the sound made by it, ibid.

3. A sudden fall, ibid.]

[SKLEUT, v. and adv. V. SKLUTE.]

[SKLEUTCH. 1. As a v., to work or walk in a slovenly untidy manner, Banffs.

2. As a s., an untidy, slatternly female, ibid.]

[SKLEUTER, s., v., and adv. V. SKLUTER.]

[SKLEUTERAN, SKLEUTERIE, SKLEUTERIN. V. under SKLUTE.]

To SKLEY, v. n. To slide, Selkirks. V. SKLOY.

To SKLICE, SKLINE, v. a. 1. To slice, S.

An' kebbocks auld, in monie a whang,

By jock-ta-legs are skliced.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, l. 26.

2. Metaph., used to denote the abbreviation of time.

"By years, dayes, and houres, our life is continually skliced away." Z. Boyd's L. Battell, p. 1016.

SKLICE, s. A slice, S.

SKLIDDER, s. A place on the side of a hill where a number of small stones are collected; expl. as synon. with Scaur, Ettr. For. V. SCLITHERS.

Scaur, however, does not necessarily convey the idea of the existence of loose stones.

[SKIFF, s., v., and adv. V. SKLUFE.]

[SKLINNER. V. under SKLINT.]

To SKLINT, v. a. To dart askance. V. SCLINT.

To SKLINTER, SKLINNER, v. n. To splinter, to break off in laminae, Ayrs.; [sklinner, Banffs.]

"Wha made me familiar wi' her,—was na it my Lord himsel, at last Marymas, when he sent for me to mak a hoop to mend her leg that sklintered aff as they were dressing her for the show?" R. Gilhaize, i. 156.

SKLINTER, SKLINNER, s. A splinter, ibid.

—"Nature had, of her own accord, worked out the root of the evil in the shape of a sklinter of bone." R. Gilhaize, ii. 87.

[SKLINNER, adv. In splinters, with speed, ibid.]

[SKLONE, s. 1. A mass of any soft, plastic substance, Banffs.

2. A soft, easy person, ibid.]

[To SKLONE, v. a. To squeeze flat; implying a soft substance.]

[SKLOUFF, s., v., and adv. V. SKLUFE.]

SKLOUT, SKLOUTER, s. Cow dung in a thin state, Fife.

Gael. acloid, filth.

SKLOY, s. and v. Same with SKLY, q. v.

Sibb. writes it skly, and views it as from the same origin with slut, slippery. But it more nearly resembles Fr. escoul-er, to slide.

"Scloy, to slide; scloying, sliding; the same with scyling;" Gall. Enc. "Scloy or scy, a slide;" ibid.

To SKLUFE, SKLOOF, SKLIFF, v. a. and n.

1. To trail the shoes along the ground in walking, Ettr. For., Clydes. Banffs.; synon. Sklute.

[2. To walk with a dull, heavy, careless step, ibid.

3. To strike with a flat surface sideways in passing, to rub against, Clydes.]

Isl. slíofya, hebetare. V. SCLAFF, v.

[SKLUFE, SKLOOF, SKLIFF, s. 1. The act of trailing the shoes along the ground in walking, Clydes., Banffs.

2. The act of walking as in s. 2 of v., ibid.

3. A stroke or rub with a flat surface sideways or in passing, ibid.

4. The noise made by trailing, walking, striking, or rubbing as in s. 1, 2, 3, ibid.

5. An old broken shoe or slipper; generally used in pl. sklufes, ibid.

6. An untidy, slatternly person, ibid.]

[SKLUFE, SKLOOF, SKLIFF, adv. With a trailing, shuffling motion, ibid.

Skli or Sklufe, Sklaff, and Sklouff, with their several groups of derivations have the same meanings, but imply different degrees of action and sound. Skli implies a light, gentle act and sound; Sklaff, a firmer, louder, and more decided; while Sklouff implies a dull, heavy, lazy act and sound.

Skli, Sklaff, and Sklouff, are frequentatives of Skli, Sklaff, and Sklouff: all these forms are used adv., and their part. pr. as nouns.]

[SKLUSH, s., v., and adv. Same with SKLEUSH, but implying sharper sound and greater force, Clydes., Banffs.]

SKLUTE, SKLEUT, s. 1. Used in pl. to denote large clumsy feet, S. B. V. SKLENT.

Probably from klute, S. the hoof of cattle.

2. A lout, an awkward clumsy fellow, S. B.

Gael. acloid, a silly fellow.

To SKLUTE, SKLENT, v. a. and n. [To trail the shoes in walking, Ettr. For., Banffs.]

2. To set down the feet clumsily, S.

[3. To fall down flat, Clydes., Banffs.

4. To pour out a soft or semi-liquid mass; as, to empty a bucket, Banffs.]

To SKLY, SKLOY, SKLYDE, SKLYRE, v. n. To slide, S. A.

"Skly, to slide, (as upon the ice);" Gl. Sibb.

SKLY, SKLOY, SKLYDE, SKLYRE, s. The place on which one slides, a place used for sliding, Dumfr.; the act of sliding itself being denominated Sklyre, q. v.

To SKLYDE, v. n. V. SKLY.

[SKLYPACH, s., v., and adv. Same with Sklype, but implying greater force, Banffs.]

[SKLYPE, s. 1. A large, thin piece of anything, Banffs.

2. A large spot, mark, or clot, ibid.

3. In pl., large, clumsy hands, feet, shoes, &c., ibid.

4. A severe blow with the hand, or with anything having a flat surface; also, a heavy fall, ibid.

5. The noise made by such a blow or fall, ibid.

6. A person of a dirty, slatternly disposition, ibid.]

[To SKLYPE, v. a. and n. 1. To tear, rend, or strip off, in thin shreds or flakes; synon. fype, Banffs.

2. To dash, fall, or walk with heavy or violent action, ibid.]

[SKLYPE, adv. With force, ibid.]

[SKLYPIN, adj. With a heavy step in walking, ibid.]

To SKLYRE, v. n. To slide, Dumfr. Loth.

Shurl, to slide, as upon ice, A. Bor. (Grose), has most probably a common origin. V. SKLY.

[SKLYTE, s., v., and adv. Same with SKLENTE, SKLENT, but implying a sharper sound and greater force, Clydes., Banffs.]

[SKLYTER, SKLYTACH, s., v., and adv. Intensive and frequentative forms of SKLYTE, ibid. Skütter is another form used in the West of S.]

SKLYTES, s. pl. Old worn-out shoes, S.

His hose hing down, an twa auhl sklytes o' sheen
Are on his feet, an's breeks unbutton'd hing.

Tarras's Poems, p. 3.

V. SCLOTS.

[SKOAGIES, s. A fishing-line with two hooks and tomes, Shetl.]

SKODGE, SKODGIE, SKUDGY, s. A boy or girl, who is employed as a drudge, or to do the meanest work of the kitchen, such as to clean shoes, &c.

"Though I wadna count any thing done to you or the bairns a trouble, I wadna like to be scogie to Miss Clarinda." Glenfergus, iii. 249.

Perhaps corr. from Su.-G. skostcen, the person who in ancient times put on the shoes of a prince; q. a shor-servant. Hence,

To SKODGE, SKODGIE, SKUDGY, v. n. To act as drudge, S.

To SKOIT, v. n. To peep, to reconnoitre, Shetl.

Dan. skotte, to ogle; skotten, an ogling. Su.-G. skaut-a, skod-a, videre. V. SKID, v., of which this is merely a variety.

2. A piece of wood set up in the bows of a boat as a dummy watch: an old custom of Shetl. fishermen.]

SKOLDIRT, SKOWDERT, part. pa. Scorched. V. SCOWDER.

To SKOLE, SKOLT, v. n. To drink hard, S. B.

"From skull [for a bowl] may have come the Scot. Bor. to skole, or skolt, pocula exinanire; and the E. to drink heller skeller, cuppa potare magistra, Horat." Rudd. V. SKUL.

SKOMER, s. V. SCOMER.

SKOMIT, adj. Pale and sickly-coloured, Shetl.

This seems originally the same word with Sholmit, q. v.

SKON, SCONE, SCOAN, s. 1. A thin cake of wheat or barley-meal, S. "Bread baked over the fire, thinner and broader than a bannock," Shirr. Gl.

The flour skonnys war set in by and by,
With vthir messia sic as was reddy.

Doug., 208, 41.

Adorea liba, Virg.

2. Any thing that is round and flat, or resembling a cake, S.

"Take twenty ounces of good salt butter, and wash out the salt; then drive it in a broad scoon, and lay it in cold water to stiffen; then take two pound of fine flour, and with cold water make it into a stiff dough; knead it well,—and drive it in thin scoons, some inches broader than the butter scoon." Receipts in Cookery, p. 4.

The application of the term to butter, as well as to dough, shews with what latitude it is used.

[3. A blow with the open hand, or with anything having a flat surface, Banffs.]

4. Metaph., as denoting any thing of a particular kind, considered as a specimen, S.

"A scone of the baking is enough;" S. Prov. Rudd. It is thus expl. by Kelly; "It is unreasonable to expect two gratuities out of one thing." P. 273.

Sibb. derives it from Sw. skon-a, parcere. It would be more natural to deduce it from Isl. skonar, abundance; whence the phrase, All skonar ur, exuberans annona. But our sense of the word may be only secondary. It is perhaps from Isl. skunn, what we call the brat of milk, after it has cooled: Cortex lactis calidi effringentis. It is also used metaph., myke skunn, a cake of hardened dung, from myke, muck, and skunn; fimi portio indurata, G. Andr. p. 210. The word skone is used in this very sense, S. for a hardened cake of cows' dung. The same writer renders skiaene, omentum ventriculo subindutum.

[To SKON, v. a. To strike or beat with the open hand, &c., Banffs.; part. pr. sconnin, used also as a s., ibid.]

To SKONCE, v. a. 1. To cover, to guard.

To—skonce my scalp, and shanks frae rain,
I burs me to a beil.
Vision, Evergreen, l. 213.

[2. To take up a place or position, S.]

Evidently allied to E. sconce, a fort, a bulwark.
Su.-G. skans-a, Teut. schant-en, to fortify, munire.

SKONCE, s. A thin partition, any wall meant to defend from the wind; a shed for hewing stones, &c.; it is also used instead of Hallan. Applied to a partition, it often signifies one that is wattled.

Teut. schantae, sepimentum militare ex viminibus, virgultis, fascibus, ramis arborum, &c., Kilian.

[SKOOB, s. The portion of a fishing-line drawn into the boat to keep the hooks clear of the bottom, Shetl.; Goth. skopa, discurrere.]

SKOODRA, s. The ling, a fish, Shetl.

SKOOI, s. A species of Gull, Shetl.

"Larus Cataractes, (Lin. syst.) Skooi, Bonzie, Skua Gull." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 283. V. SHOOL.

To SKOOK, SKUIK, v. a. and n. 1. To conceal; [also, to hide one's self, S. V. COOK.]

The bodom o' the glass, alas!
Is unca blae an' drumlie;
See may ye skook yir brow an' skool,
An' flypin, hing yir head ay, &c.

Tarras's Poems, p. 71.

[2. To look from under the eyebrows, as if ashamed or angry; to scowl, Banffs.]

[SKOOK, SKUIK, s. 1. A shade, shelter, protection, Banffs.

2. A frown, a scowl; also, a sour, gloomy aspect, ibid.]

[SKOOK, adv. 1. In a hidden manner, ibid.

2. With gloomy, scowling look, ibid.]

SKOOKIN, SKOOKIN-LIKE, SKOOKIN-LEUKIN, adj. [Sour, sulky, ill-looking.] "A skookin-like loon," an ill-looking fellow, one who has a bad appearance, ibid.

Perhaps originally the same with E. sculk, or Su.-G. skolk-a, latebras quaerere.

[To SKOOM, v. a. To skim, Shetl.; part. pa. skoomed.

[SKOOPACKS, s. pl. Sheep, Shetl.]

[SKOOR, s. and v. Shower, Banffs. V. SKOUR.]

SKOORIE, s. The Coal-fish, full grown, Shetl.

To SKOOT, SCOUT, v. a. and n. 1. To squirt any liquid, or throw it forth forcibly from a tube, S. [V. SKITE.]

2. To throw off excrement in a liquid state, S.

SKOOT, SKOOTER, s. A squirt, a syringe; especially applied to the tube used by mischievous boys for squirting water, S.

Su.-G. skut-a, impellere; also jaculari. Dan. skyt-e, to shoot, part. pa. skult; Teut. schutt-en, propellere.

SKORD, SKORE, s. 1. A line drawn, as marking the goal, or end of a race.

—Had he anis won mare rounne, tho in hy,
He suld ful some half skippit furth before,
And left in dout, quha come first to the skore.

Doug. Virgil, 138, 31.

The term is used in the same sense S. at a variety of games; "but most," says Rudd., "at the long Bowls, [or throwing off leaden bullets], which are sometimes Scot. Bor. called the Scores, because they make draughts or impressions in the ground where they are to begin and leave off."

[2. A deep indentation in the top of a hill, at right angles to its ridge, Shetl. Isl. skard, a notch, chink.]

[To SKORDER, v. a. To singe, Shetl. V. SCOUTHER.]

SKORIT, part. pa. Wrecked; applied to a ship; literally signifying, broken.

—"That Johnie of Borthwick, &c., sail content & pay to Wegeant Multere, Duchman, the somme of twa hundredth crownis vsuale money of Scotland for a schip of the said Wegeantis skorit in the port & havyn of the Ely at the Erlys fery, be the occasioun & causing of the saidis personis, & compelling of the said Wegeantis scrutouris to wey thair ankeris," &c. Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1492, p. 245.

Su.-G. skuer-a, rumpere, diffringere.

Tu skippi af them tha skoerde.

Duo navigia diffringebantur.

Chron. Rhythmi. ap. Ibhe.

Teut. schor-en; Belg. scheur-en, rumpere; A.-S. scyr-an, sear-an, partiri, separare; part. pa. scoren. Hence scoren clif, abrupta rupes, S. Skar, Scar, Skair, id. and Skerry, an insulated rock, have all the same general origin with skorit; being formed from A.-S. sear-an, Su.-G. skuer-a, caedere, scindere, as exhibiting an abrupt or broken appearance.

SKORPER, s. That round kind of bread which in S. is called a cookie, Shetl.

Su.-G. skorpa, pl. skorper, biscuits; apparently from skorpa, crust.

[SKOUP, s. A scoop; also, a spoonful; as, a skoup o' parritch, Clydes.]

[To SKOUP, v. a. To scoop; to sup, ibid. V. SCOUP.]

SKOUPER, s. A light unsettled person. V. SCUPPAR.

SKOUR, SKOOR, s. A slight shower, Dumfr., Skift, synonym. S. B.; also Skarrach, q. v.

SKOUR of wind. Mentioned as a S. phrase, by Callander, MS. Notes on Ihre, vo. Skur. He gives it as synonym with Moes.-G. skura windis, procella venti. V. SCOWRY.

SKOURDABOGGIE, s. The youngest of a family, Shetl.

From Dan. skur-er, to cleanse, and bug, the belly. Da is used in Shetl. for the article; corresponding with Dan. de, the. V. POCK-SHAKINGS.

SKOURICK, s. A thing of no value; as, "I care nae a skourick," Dumfr.

C.B. yagur, a splinter?

[SKOURIES, s. pl. The swathes or ridges into which the scythe lays grass, Shetl. Sw. skörda, to reap, skära, to cut; Dan. skiaere.]

SKOURIOUR, s. A scout. V. SCURROUR.

SKOUT, s. The Guillemote, Orkn.

"Guillem, Guillemot, Colymbus Troile, Lin. Syst. Orc. skout." Low's Faun. Orcad., p. 104.

[SKOUTHER, s. and r. Singe, Clydes. V. SCOWDER.]

SKOUTT, s. A small boat, a yawl.

What plesour wer to walk and see,
Enlangu a river cleir,—
The salmon out of cruives and creills,
Uphailed into skoutts.

A. Hume, Cron. S. P., iii. 391.

Su.-G. Isl. skuta, Belg. schuyt, Ir. scud, linter, celox.

SKOW, s. 1. A small boat made of willows, &c. covered with skins, Moray.

Shall we view the term, in this sense, as connected with Gael. sciath, (pron. skia) a twig-basket?

2. A flat-bottomed boat, employed as a lighter in narrow rivers or canals, Lanarks.

Belg. schour, "ferry-boat, a flat-bottom'd boat, a ponton;" Sewel.

SKOW, pl. SKOWS, SKOWIS. [Outside boards of trees, Shetl.; thin planks from which barrel-staves are made, staves; also, the fragments cut from planks, West of S.]

"Girchtstingis & skowis," Aberl. Reg. 1538, V. 16.

"Ane thousand skowis." Ibid. Cent. 16.

"Aykin and fyr tymmer skowis and steingis." Ib.

"Tymmer skowis Sualene buirdis, guirdstingis and boddummis." Ibid. A. 1543, V. 18.

"Aucht hunder skowis." Ibid.

It is undoubtedly used in the same sense in the following passage:—

"It was also enacted, that plank, board, knapple, skows, hoops, nets, and all other materials, to be imported for the trade of fishing, shall be free of custom." Agr. Surv. Shetl., App. p. 51.

[Allied perhaps to Gael. sgolh, splinter, a split, sgoilh, to split.] But perhaps it may denote the branches of trees in their natural state. Norv. skog, expl. det grenede af træerne; Hallager. Dan. skov sometimes signifies underwood.

[To SKOW, r. a. 1. To knock in staves; to smash in pieces, Shetl.; to ding in skows, Ayrs.

2. To trim, to cut off rags or tatters, Ayrs.; synonym., cow, q. v.]

[To SKOWEL, v. a. To twist, distort, Ang. V. SHOWL.]

[SKOWNRAND, part. pr. Feeling afraid, shivering with fear: lit. loathing, and generally applied to food; synonym. gruein. V. SCUNNER.]

And thai in hy assemblyt then,
Passand, I weyne, a thousand men;
And askyt awisement thaim anang,
Qubethir that thai suld duell or gang;
Bot thai war skownrand wondir sar,
Sa fer in to Scotland for to far.

Barbour, v. 201, MS.

[All editions of the Dict. give Skownrand, while the text has Skownrand, the correct reading. It is the frequentative form of shu-ning; A.-S. scunian, to shun. [V. Prof. Skeat's, Barbour, p. 780.]

SKOWTHER, s. A slight shower, Loth., the same with Skour.

[SKRAE, s. A multitude, a swarm, Shetl.; same with skrou, q. v.]

SKRAE, s. A scarce made of wire for cleansing grain, Loth.; synonym. harp.

It is principally used in a mill, for separating the dust and seeds from the shelling.

Norv. skrre, "to separate oat-meal with a skin at the mill;" Hallager.

SKRAE, s. A thin meagre person, S. scrag, E.

But gin scho say, "Lie still, ye skrae," &c.

Minstrelsy Border, iii. 263.

"What?" roars Macdonald,—"yon poor shaglin' in-kneel scrag of a thing!" Reg. Dalton, iii. 119.

Isl. skraef-a, homuncio; Haklorsen. Norv. skrae has precisely the same meaning with our word, denoting a dry and withered man; Et fortoerret og ulidelens menneske; Hallager.

SKRAE-FISH, SCRAE-FISH, s. pl. Fish dried in the sun, without being salted, Orkn.

"The gables of the cottages here were, at this season, hung round with hundreds of small coal-fish, called pillocks, strung upon spits, and exposed to dry, without salt. The fishes dried in this manner are called scrae-fish." Neill's Tour, p. 78.

Evidently allied to Isl. skraef-a, to dry, to dry up with heat, torreo, torresco, skraef-a, torridum prae ariditate sonum edo attractum.

SKRAE-SHANKIT, adj. Having long slender limbs, Ettr. For.

"You shall hae—the grimy Pottle, and the skrae-shankit Laidlaws: and you shall form my flying party." Perils of Man, ii. 232.

Su.-G. and Dan. skral, lean, scanty; Belg. schrael, gracilis, tenuis, Kilian.

To SKRAIGH, SCRAIGH, SKRAIK, r. n. 1. To screech; properly used to denote the cry of a fowl when displeased, S.

Hid 'mang the grass, the pairrick sat,
Hearse-skraighin on his absent mate.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 84.

2. To cry with importunity and in a discontented tone, commonly applied to children, S.

Su.-G. skrik-a, vociferari, a frequentative from stri-a, id. Isl. skraek-a, Dan. skryg-er, E. scream.

- SKRAIGH, SKRAIK, SCRAIK, s. 1. A screech, the screaming of fowls, S.; also skraich.

And throw the skyis wyth mony ane scraik and pyk,
Samy in ane sop, thik as ane clud, but baide,
Thar fa thay did assailye and invade.

Doug. Virgil, 417, 13.

2. A loud or shrill sound, caused by musical instruments.

Let beir the skraichs of deadly clarions,
And syne let of a volie of cannons.

Hume, Chron. S. P., iii. 380.

- [3. A person of small stature and shrill voice, S.]

Isl. skraek-r, clamor, ploratus; Verel.

- SKRAN, s. 1. A promiscuous collection of eatables, however collected; [also, a school-boy's term for sweet-meats, holiday or picnic provisions, S.]

Now ilka ane took up a cutty,
To prie gin aunty's skran was lucky.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 6.

Isl. skran, supellex leviusculus; G. Andr., p. 215.

2. The offals or refuse of human food, thrown to dogs, Loth.

Su.-G. skraede, signifies refuse, from skrael-a, to cut; also, to bolt, to sift.

3. Used in Fife in the sense of daily bread.

4. Energy, power, or means for accomplishing any purpose, Roxb.

I'd blow them south, as far as Fife,
If I had skran.

Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 45.

- To SKRAN, v. a. To get hold of; to collect in whatever way, either by fair or by foul means, S.

- To SKRAN, v. n. To gang to skran, or to be awa' skranning, phrases used by boys when they go to spend money on sweet-meats, &c., in which others expect to be partakers, Loth.

- SKRAN-POCK, s. 1. A beggar's wallet for receiving the scraps given to him, Loth.

2. A bag for receiving the spoil or plunder of those who have fallen in battle, carried by women who follow an army, S.O.

The term was thus explained, at the time of the trial of the Radicals at Falkirk, A. 1819.

- SKRANK, SKRANKY, adj. 1. Lank, lean, slender, ill-formed, S.; [used also as a s.]

- [2. Thin, scrawling; applied to writing, S.]

3. Applied to an empty purse; q. having a lank appearance.

—Ye—did lament,
Your purses being skranky.

Ramsay's Poems, l. 359.

This seems the same with skrinkie, skrinkit, "as if shrunk, too little, contracted," Sibb. Gl.

Germ. schrunk-en, to confine, to stint; A.-S. scrunc-en, contracted, for-scrinc-an, marcescere, to dry up, to shrink together; Alem. skrenk-en, vincire, clathrare, Schilter.

Skrunty, Fife, synonym. is perhaps radically different.

- [To SKRANK, v. a. and n. To make ill-formed scrawling letters, to write in a scrawling hand, S.; skranks, thin, badly-formed letters.]

- SKRANKY, s. A coarse-featured person, S.A.

- SKRAPIT, pret. Mocked. V. SCORP.

- To SKRAUGH, v. n. To bawl, to cry: to speak very loud, Selkirks.

This may be viewed as radically the same with Screigh, skreigh, although there is a slight variation, both in the pronunciation and in the signification.

- [To SKRAVI, v. n. To grope in a scratching manner, Shetl.]

- SKREA, s. A post or prop used in forming a clay-wall or one of wattles.

"There were no more than some tenu or twelve people dwelling in cottages patched up with skreas & wattles." Mem. of Dr. Spottiswood, p. 66.

Teut. schræghen canterii, i. e., rafts or props for supporting vines; schrægh-en, fulcire.

- SKREE, s. A searce. V. SKRÆ.

- [SKREE, SKROO, s. A small stack of corn, Shetl. Dan. skrue, a pile.]

- To SKREED, v. a. and n. [1. To unrol, to give or draw off; to repeat from memory, S. V. SCREED.]

2. To invent a story, to lie; especially as denoting that sort of falsehood which consists in fabrication, or magnifying in narration, S.

Su.-G. skryt-a, jactare, ostentare, Isl. skreit-a, fingere; skreit-in, figmentum. The Su.-G. and Isl. terms are nearly akin to ours in signification. But it seems rather from Isl. skraut, ostentatio, pompa.

- SKREED, s. [1. A great length or extent of anything, a long story, S.]

2. A long list or catalogue, S.

I here might gie a skreed of names,
Dawties of Heliconian dames.

The foremost place Gavin Douglas claims,
That pawky priest.

Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore, vii.

This, perhaps, is rather in a secondary sense of Skreed, a rent; in allusion to a long strip of cloth torn off.

3. A lie, a fabrication, S.

[SKREEF, s. A surface, film; a covering, as of grass, &c. Banffs.; skruf, Clydes.; scurf, E.]

[To SKREEF, v. a. and n. 1. To be covered by a film, Banffs.; skruf, Clydes.]

2. To take off the surface, Banffs.]

[To SKREEK, v. n. V. SKREIGH.]

SKREEK, SCREAM, SKREIGH, of day. Break of day, the dawn, S. B.; also skrieh.

"If I had anes something to eat, for I havena had a morsel down my throat this day, I wad streek mysel down for twa three hours aside the beast, and be on and awa' to Mucklestane wi' the first skreigh o' morning." Tales of my Landlord, i. 200, 201.

—Ilka morning by the sreak o' day
They're set to wark.—

Ross's Helenore, p. 51.

The page he look'd at the skrieh of day,
But nothing, I wist, he saw.

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 363.

Strike o' day, id. Lancash. Gl. T. Bobbin.

This might seem related to Teut. schrick-en, gradi, dissilire, prosilire, which O. E. skruke resembles.

Now skruketh rose and lylie flour.

Harl. MS. before 1200, Warton's Hist., E. P., i. 30.

i.e., Rose and lily break forth.

The term, however, is more analogous to Teut. kricke, aurora rutilans. V. CREEK. S may have been prefixed, in some counties; this being common with the Gothic nations.

[SKREEMAGE, s., v., and adv. Same with Skrimmage, but implying a deeper sound and slower motion, Banffs.]

To SKREENGE, v. a. [1. To work or rub with energy, Banffs.]

2. To scourge, to flog, a term pretty generally used in S.; to squeeze, Westmorel.

3. To search for eagerly, to glean, Clydes.

The v. in the latter sense might seem to have a common origin with Gael. cruinnigh-am, to glean.

[4. To wander about idly, Banffs.]

SKREENGE, SKREENGIN, s. [1. A rub, rubbing; the act of doing work with energy, ibid.]

2. A lash, a stroke, a severe beating, Fife, Banffs.

[3. A thorough search, a gleanings, ibid., Clydes.]

4. A loose woman, Renfr., Ayr.

[SKREENGER, s. One who works as in each sense of the v., ibid.]

SKREENGIN, s. [1. The act of doing as in each sense of the v., Banffs.]

2. A mode of fishing with small nets during the night, without the aid of torches, on the coast of Argyleshire.

This mode of fishing, is simply scourging the water.

3. In pl. skreengins, gleanings, Clydes.

To SKREID, v. n. To be covered with vermin, Shetl.

Isl. skrid-a, serpere, repero, skrid, reptatio; q. "all creeping," as it is said in the same sense, in vulgar S. aw crawlin'. From the Isl. r. is formed skridnaikinde, reptilia.

SKREIGH, s. 1. A shrill cry, a shriek, S.

2. An urgent and irresistible call.

"I'ee ne'er be the ill bird, and foul my nest, set apart strong necessity, and the skreigh of duty, which no man should hear and be inobedient." Rob Roy, ii. 208. V. SKREIGH, v.

SKREIGH, s. A cant term for usquebaugh, Loth.

Wi' guid plain fare we'll leuk fu' skeigh,
And ay the tither blaw o' skreigh
To fleg awa' the cauld.—

Picken's Poems, i. 153.

SKREIGH of day. V. SKREEK.

[To SKREIM, v. n. To peer, to look earnestly with half-closed eyes, Shetl. Goth. skruma, to vibrate, glimmer.]

SKREW, s. A stack of corn or hay, Shetl.

[To SKRIEVE, v. n. V. SCRIEVE.]

[SKRIFF, SKRIFFIN, s. and v. Same with SKREEF, but implying a thinner substance and lighter action, S.]

[SKRIFT, s. A thin person or thing, Shetl.]

To SKRIFT, SKRIFT, v. a. and n. 1. To rehearse from memory, Ang.

Perhaps allied to Su.-G. skrift-a, to confess, shrive, E., as in this act the penitent enumerates, from recollection, his various transgressions.

2. To magnify in narration, to fabricate, to fib, S.

Isl. skraf-a, fabulari, nugari, skraef, nugae. V. SKRIFT.

SKRIFT, s. 1. A recital; properly, of something from memory, S.

—Yet he can pray, and tell long skrifts of Greek,—
And broken smatters of the Hebrew speak.

A. Nicol's Poems, 1739, p. 109.

V. SCRIEVE, v. 3.

2. A fabrication, a falsehood, S.

SKRILLES, s. pl. Shrieks. V. SKIRL, v.

To SKRIM, v. a. and n. 1. To rub, strike, or beat vigorously; part. pr. skrimmin, used also as a s., S. V. SCRIM.

2. To bustle about, turn over, search diligently, Clydes., Banffs.

3. To work with energy and success, ibid.
 4. To scrim along the sea, to scud, to move quickly, S. perhaps corr. from E. skim, as used in the same sense.

SKRIMMAGE, s. 1. The act of rubbing, striking, &c., as given under SKRIM, v., S.
 2. A quarrel, row, riot; also, a scramble, S.

This term is now almost limited in its application to 2, and to a vigorous search accompanied with noise and bustle.

[To SKRIMMAGE, v. a. and n. 1. Same with to skim, but implying more energy, bustle and noise, S.

2. To scramble, quarrel, riot, S.

In both senses, the part. pr. is used as a s. V. under SKRIM.]

[To SKRIMP, v. a. To straiten, &c. V. SCRIMP.]

SKRINE, s. Unboiled sowens, or flummery, Ang.

"In place of milk, they were necessitated to have recourse to the wretched substitute of skrine, or unboiled flummery, prepared from the refuse of oatmeal soaked in water." P. Ruthven, Forfars. Statist. Acc., xii. 302.

Su.-G. skrin, exsuccus, might seem allied, as it is applied to grain; skrin saed, frumentum gracile. But there is greater connexion, in the sense, with Teut. krinse, acus, purgamentum frumenti; krins-en, purgare frumentum; as flummery is made of the seeds of oatmeal, hence called sowen-seeds, when used for this purpose.

[To SKRINGE, v. a. V. SKREENGE.]

SKRINKIE, SKRINKYT, adj. 1. Lank, slender. V. SKRANKIE.

2. Wrinkled, shrivelled; Skrinkie-faced, having the face covered with wrinkles, Teviotd.

"Skrinkyt, Skrinkie, as if shrunk, too little, contracted;" Gl. Sibb.

Evidently the same with Su.-G. skrynk-a, contrahi, skrynka, ruga; A.-S. scrinc-an, arescere, primarily respecting what is shrivelled by heat.

[To SKRIT, v. a. To tear, rend, Shetl. Isl. rista, to slice, slash.]

[SKRIT, s. A tear or rent, ibid.]

SKROPIT, pret. v. Mocked. V. SCORP.

SKROTTA, SKROTTIE, SKROTTYEE, s. Dark purple Dyer's lichen, the Lichen omphalodes, Linn. Shetl.; called Cudbear in S., also Staneraw.

This name has some affinity to that which is given to it in the Highlands, Crottel. V. vo. CUDBEAR.

[SKRÖVLIN, adj. Rustling, as a stiff garment, Shetl.]

SKROW, s. A scroll, a scrap. V. SCROW.

[SKROW, s. A number, Clydes. V. SCROW.]

SKROW, s. A slight shower, S. B.; Isl. skur. V. SKARRACH.

SKROW, s. The shrew-mouse; also pronounced Skrew, S.

Pennant gives Munneskier as the Dan. name for Shrewmouse, i.e., "the cutting mouse;" from its severe bite, it may be supposed.

E. Shrewmouse is undoubtedly from A.-S. screeva id., mus araneus. But the origin of this seems unknown. As all writers, from Pliny downwards, have considered the bite of this animal as very venomous, some degree of magical influence has latterly been ascribed to it. Dr. Johns. has remarked, that "vulgar tradition assigns such malignity" to this animal, "that she is said to lame the foot over which she runs;" adding that "our ancestors looked on her with such terror, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew."

But, according to Serenius, E. shrew, as thus used, seems rather allied to Su.-G. skraefica, nugas effutire. Isl. skraefia, signifies mulier cyclopica, from skra, horrendum quid, and ceifa, mulier.

VOL. IV.

SKRYMMORIE, adj. and s. [Frightful and terrific.]

Pluck at the craw thay cryit, deplome the ruik,
Pulland my hair, with blek my face they bruik.
Skrymmorie Fery game me mony a clowre.
For Chyppynutie ful oft my chaftis quik.

Palice of Honour, l. 58.

In the Perth Edit. of this poem, fery is expl. fairy; and these are said to be "vulgar names of mischievous spirits." Fery is printed with a capital letter, Edit. 1579.

Skrymmorie is certainly a designation of Goth. origin. Sibb. renders it "frightful, filling with terror," viewing it as an adj. But it seems rather an appellative, allied to Su.-G. skruem-a, to frighten, and a variety of other terms. Skrymma is a v. used to denote the appearance of spectres. Hence, skrymsl signifies both a spectre, and an idol. Liop th is allir upp, oc luto thui skrimali; They all rose (loutit) up, and did honour by bowing (loeting) to the idol; Heims Kring. ap. Ihre. Spokeri oc dieffuls skrymmet; spectres and other tricks of the devil; Ibid. Belg. schroomsel, a bug-bear, from schroom-en, to fear, to be filled with horror.

Chyppynutie, viewed as a mischievous spirit, might be one of those who fatally wounded the cattle that were believed to be elf-shol, from Su.-G. kaep, a roil, Moes.-G. kaupat-jan, to strike, and not, naut, an ox.

This Fairy has most probably been denominated from its mischievous tricks, especially from its severe tugs; Isl. skrumari, nugator, jactabundus; expl. by Dan. storpruler, a braggart, a bully; Haldorson. Or it may be from O.Fr. escrimour, qui fait bien des armes, bon tireur, q. one who plucks or tugs well.

K 2

The term in Shetl. properly denotes the leader of a band of maskers.

"Such a party is known by the appellation of Ouzardis.—The person who directs their movements is called the skuller, and he is always the best dressed of the party." Edmonstone's Zettl, ii. 64.

Su.-G. skutul, Isl. skutell, skotel, a table; originally a plate for the table; hence skutill-servain, Su.-G. skutul-serv, he who ministered at the king's table, and placed his mess before each guest. L. B. scutellar-ius, O. Fr. sculier, one who had charge of the plates, vessels, &c. This was a high office in the royal palace.

"In case ye go to this work again,—making God's glory, the cause of his Kirk, of your King and Common weill, to be but pretences and scuggs,—the Lord shall curse the work," &c. Mr. Ja. Melvill's MS. Mem., p. 122.

[6. A frown, a gloom; also, a gloomy countenance, Banffs.]

7. Metaph. applied to ghosts, as corresponding to Lat. umbræ, in the following passage:

Bot for an thraw desyre I to lest here,
Turnus slaughter and deith with me to here,

As glaid thythingis vnto my child and barme,
Amang the goistis law and skuggis derne.

Ibid., 367, 13.

Skuggin, however, is not synon. with goistis, but only denotes the place of their residence. This appears from the epithet derne being conjoined. The phrase is the same with that quoted above, sense 2.

Su.-G. skugga, umbra. Skuggd, tegmen, defensio, is a derivative from this, although immediately from the v. Isl. skuga, skugge, id. which G. Andr. derives from sky, skyyg, to overshadow. A.-S. scua, id.; Seren. (vo. Shade) from sky, nebula.

Rudd. thinks that E. sculk, may be traced to Isl. skugge, A.-S. scua. It is evidently the same with Su.-G. skiolk-a, latebras quaerere, from Isl. skiol, Su.-G. skiol, latibulum.

3. To flee for shelter, to secrete one's self. To skeog a shower, an anomalous phrase, signifying, to seek shelter from it, S. B.

[4. To frown, to gloom; to walk in a down-cast and stealthy manner, Banffs.]

He's skuggin, a phrase used concerning one who tries to avoid his pursuers, who wish to arrest him for debt, or for some alleged crime, S. B.

To SKUIK, v. n. To hide one's self, S. B. V. SKOOK.

[SKUIL, SCUIL, s. A school.]

SKUL, SKULL, SKOLL, s. 1. A goblet or large bowl, for containing liquor of any kind.

The Troiane women stude with hare down schaik,
About the bere weping with mony allake;
And on we kest of warme milk mony a skul,
And of the blude of sacrifice coupis ful;
The saule we bery in sepulture on this wyse,
The lattir halesing syne lowl schoutit thrys.

Doug. Virgil, 69, 20.

As copsis corresponds to patras in the original, skul is used for cymbia, which Douglas elsewhere renders in this manner;

Tua siluer coppis schapin like ane bote.

Ibid. 136, 35.

We are not, however, hence to conclude that the word skull necessarily denoted a vessel of this form. For he elsewhere uses it, conjoined with flagon, in rendering crateras.

For loy thay pingil than for till renew
Thare bankettis with al obseruance dew;
And, for this titlingis, in skoun and in skull.
They skynk the wyne, and wauchtis cowpys full.

Ibid. 210, 5.

2. The term has been metonymically used to denote the salutation of one who is present, or the respect paid to an absent person, by expressing a wish for his health; while he who does so at the same time partakes of the drink that is used by the company, in token of his cordiality.

This is what is now called "drinking one's health." In this sense it occurs in the Account of Gowrie's Conspiracy published by royal authority. "The kinge called for drinke, and in a merry and homely manner sayde to the earle, that although the earle had seen the fashion of entayments in other countries, yet hee would teach him the Scottish fashion, seeing he was a Scottish man: and therefore, since he had forgotten to drinke to his Majestie, or sit with his guests and enter-tayne them, his Majestie would drinke to him his owne welcome, desiring him to take it forth and drink to the rest of the company, and in his Majestie's name to make them welcome."

"When they had near hand dined, the Earl of Gowrie came from his Majestie's chamber, to drink his scoll to my lord duke, and the rest of the company, which he did. And immediately after the scoll had past about, this deponent raise from the table, to have waited upon his Majestie, conform to his former direction," &c. P. 196—227. Perth edition, 1774. In Cromarty's account, there is the following note:—"Scoll, the word used then for drinking a health." The passage itself is also differently expressed in this work.—"The earl of Gowrie came from his Majesty's chamber, to the hall, and call'd for wine; and said that he was directed from his Majesty's chamber, to drink his scoll to my Lord Duke," &c. Historical Account, p. 40.

Before particularly considering this passage, another one may be quoted in which the term has the same signification.

"Shee that but pitissat, sippes before the sober, can skip at the scots with her commers, till shee bee sicke with healths." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 340.

As it is said, that "Gowrie came from his Majes-tie's chamber, to drink his scoll to my Lord Duke," it has been supposed that the king desired them to drink his health in his absence; Gl. Sibb. vo. Scoll.

But, even supposing that the writer means to say that Gowrie drank the king's scoll, all that we can conclude from it is, that, "after the Scottish fashion," he welcomed the guests to his house;—with this peculiarity, indeed, that he did so by drinking to them in the king's name. But this is very different from drinking the king's health. It is probable, however, that in paying their respects to their host, when "the scoll passed about," they at the same time expressed their wishes for the health of his master. Thus they might reckon themselves bound to do, from the peculiar manner in which Gowrie had expressed their welcome.

"Upon the xv day of Maij (1587) the king maid the banket to all his nobilitie, at evin in halyrould-house, quhair the king maid thame efter drinking of many scollis ane to ane vther, and maid thame efter supper, quho urtherwayes had beine at great fead, tak twa and twa be handles, and pas from halyrouldhouse to the mercat croce of Edl, q' the provest and bailies had prepared ane table and desert for his Ma^{ty}, at the q^{ue}n there was great mirth and joy, with sick great number of pepill as the lyk had not beine seene of be-foir." Bel. MS. Ja. VI., fo. 35, v.

Thus it appears that the term, primarily denoting a vessel for containing liquor, was, in consequence of the customs connected with drinking, at length used to signify the mutual expressions of regard employed by those engaged in comotation, or their united wishes for the health and prosperity of one individual, distinguished in rank, or peculiarly endeared to them all, whether he were present or absent. For example, after the bridge of Berwick had been re-built, in the year 1621, "Sir William Beyer, mayor of the town, stayed the taking away of the centries, and putting in the key-stone, till the king's skole were drunk at that part of the bridge." Calderwood's Hist., p. 787. But the expression, although equivalent to what is now called drinking the king's health, seems strictly to signify, drinking the king's cup, or a cup in honour of the king. For, the word skoll has no primary or proper relation to health or prosperity; and this will appear indisputable, from a comparison of our term with its cognates in the other Northern languages.

Isl. skál, skanl, skyllti, Alem. skala, Germ. schale, Su.-G. and Dan. skaal, (pron. skol), all signify a cup, a bowl, a drinking vessel. From the Gothic nations, this word seems to have passed to the Celtic. For, in the Cornish, skala has the same meaning, being rendered by Lhuyd patara; Gael. sgath, a bowl, Shaw. Rudd., in his Glossary to Douglas's Virgil, mentions the verb, to skole, or skoll, as used Scot. Bor. in the sense of pocula exinanire. This verb has undoubtedly been formed from the noun. In the North of Scotland, also, skiel still denotes a tub. Thus a washing-tub is called a washing-skiel. The tubs used by brewers, for cooling their wort, are, in like manner, called skiele. It affords a strong presumption that this is originally the same word with skoll, skull, immediately under consideration, that the goblet employed by the inhabitants of the North, for preparing their ale for immediate use, is called kalskaul. This seems to intimate, that our use of the term, with respect to the operation of brewing, contains an allusion to its more ancient appropriation. Kalskaul, eodem tropo illis quo Suenobus est patara, in qua frigidus cerevisiae potus in acetate, et calidus in hyeme fieri solet. Loccenii Antiq. Suco-Goth., p. 96.

It may be added, that skiel is still used in Orkney as the name of a flagon, or wooden drinking vessel with a handle.

Skull is a term of general use in Scotland for a basket of a semi-circular form. It was used in this sense so early as the time of Dunbar.

Fish wyves cry Fy, and cast down skulls and skjels.
Evergreen, ii. 59, st. 23.

It is probable that skjel was used by him as if it had been synon., because of the alliteration. Or, from the resemblance with respect to form, it may actually have been used in the same sense in his time. E. skilet, a small kettle or boiler, might appear, at first view, to have some affinity. But it seems immediately formed from Fr. escuellete, a porringer; and this again from Ital. scudella, used in the same sense. This is derived from Lat. scutula, which was a kind of concave vessel, a saucer.

It is highly probable, that a cup or bowl received this name from the barbarous custom, which prevailed among several ancient nations, of drinking out of the skulls of their enemies. Warnefrid, in his work, De Gestis Longobard., says; "Albin slew Cunimund, and having carried away his head, converted it into a drinking vessel; which kind of cup is with us called schala, but in the Latin language it has the name of patena." Lib. i. c. 27. The same thing is asserted of the Boii, by Livy, Lib. xxiii. c. 24; of the Scythians, by Herodotus, Lib. ix.; of their descendants, the Scordisci, by Rufus Festus, in Breviario; of the Gauls, by Diodorus Siculus, Lib. v.; of the Celts, by Silius Italicus, Lib. xiv.

At Celtæ vacui capitis circumdare gaudet.
 Ossa, nefas! auro, et mensis ea pocula servant.

Vid. Keyser Antiq. Septentr., p. 363.

Hence Ragnar Lothbrok, in his Death-Song, consoles himself with this reflection; "I shall soon drink beer from hollowed cups made of skulls." St. 25. Wormii Literatura Dan., p. 203.

The same word in Su.-G. signifies both a skull, (cranium), and a drinking vessel. This observation is equally applicable to Germ. schale. But Ihre is so unfavourable to this derivation, principally, as would appear, from its exhibiting our Gothic ancestors as so extremely barbarous, that he considers the human skull as receiving the name of skaal from its resemblance to the patena, or bowl. This is surely to invert the natural order. Although the Northern nations were greatly addicted to inebriety, yet we can scarcely suppose, that they found it necessary to borrow a name for their skulls from their drinking vessels. The skull itself seems to have received this designation from its resemblance of a shell; in A.-S. scæla, scala; Belg. schæle; Germ. schele; Isl. skæl; Su.-G. and Dan. skal. Added to this is Moes-G. skaljos, the tiling of a roof.

Perhaps Gael. agalga, a bowl, is from Dan. skaal, or kalk, id. as having been imported into the Western Islands by the Norwegians.

Not only is the meaning of this term, as it occurs in other Northern languages, preserved in ours; but the figurative sense is also the same. As it has been seen that the earl of Gowrie "drunk his skoll to my lord duke," and that "the king's skole" was drunk at the bridge of Berwick; we learn from Læccenius that this very phrase is used in the languages of the North. "Illud nomen in his Septentrionalibus locis adhuc ita remanet, ut drička skala, i. e., bibere pateram, metonymice dicatur, quando bibitur alicujus honori et memorie, quod ex hoc vasculo quondam frequentius fieri aeternum, notio vocis indicat," Antiq. Sueo-Goth., p. 96. "In computations," says Ihre, "the name of Skaal is given to the memory of the absent, or the salutation of those who are present, which goes round in the time of drinking;" or more fully, "drička ens skaal." As Dan. skaal, signifies a bowl, or drinking vessel; ut drička ens skaal, is to drink one's health; voc. Skaal. In Isidore, we find the phrase, Calices et scælae, poculorum genera. Origin. Lib. xx. c. 5.

In the same manner did the ancient Goths express their regard to their sovereigns. They drunk the king's skoll. Hence Warnefrid relates that, when Grimoald, king of the Lombards had determined to kill Bertaridus, after he was overpowered with wine, the ministers of the palace being ordered to bring to him liquors, with dishes of various kinds, asked of him, in the king's name, to drink a full bowl in honour of him. But he, suspecting the snare, secretly procured that it should be filled with water. Immediately, promising that he would drink it off in honour of the king, he made a libation, by pouring out a little of the water. De Gestis Longobard. Lib. v. These skolls, in honour of the king, as we learn from Læccenius, they used also to drink standing. Ubi sup.

Sturleson gives a particular account of this custom, when describing the manners of the Scandinavians before the introduction of Christianity. From this it appears, that it had been originally an act of worship to their false gods. The passage presents so minute a picture of the rites of the ancient Goths, that I shall be excused for giving it at large.

"It was a received custom with the ancients," he says, "that, when the sacrifices were to be offered, the people gathered together in great multitudes, every one bringing with him food and those things which were necessary during the continuance of their festivals. Every one also brought ale with him, to be used during the feast. For this purpose, all kinds of cattle, and horses also, were slaughtered. All the blood of these victims was called Hlant; and the vessels in which the blood was received and preserved were denominated Hlant-bollar. They gave the name of Hlant-tynar to those utensils which were employed for sprinkling with this blood all the altars and footstools of their gods, the walls of the temple, both within and without, and also the worshippers. The flesh was boiled, that it might be more grateful food to man.

"In the midst of the pavement of the temple fires were kindled, over which the kettles were suspended; and cups filled with drink were made to pass through the midst of the flames. It belonged to him who presided at the feast, to consecrate the cups and all the food used at the sacrifices. Fyrst Odins full, first, a cup consecrated to Odin must be drunk off, for procuring victory to the king, and felicity to the kingdom. Then, another in honour of Njörd and Freyr, for a good harvest and peace. This being done, it was usual to drink the cup called Brage-full, in memory of the heroes and princes slain in battle. Nor was it thought decorous to neglect the drinking of a cup in honour of their deceased relations, of those especially who had been interred in the tumuli: and this was called Minne." Heimskringla, Hakonar Goda S. c. 16. It may be observed, that, what in the Isl. is called Odins full, is, in the Dutch version, rendered Odens skaal. In the same manner, Njardhar full, and Freyrs full are translated Njords skaal and Freyrs skaal.

The old S. phrase of invitation, Tak off your horn, being equivalent to the modern one, Drink your glass; it may deserve notice that drinking a full, or the contents of a cup, and drinking off a horn, are used as synon. by Sturleson. "When the first cup was handed," he says, "Earl Sigurd, having consecrated it to Olin, drack off hornino til kongis, drank off the horn to the king;" in this manner inviting him to follow his example. Ibid., c. 18.

As it appears that the custom of giving toasts, to use the modern phrase, originated in the rites of our ancestors, while in a heathen state; it deserves notice, that this custom has, from its very introduction, been abused to intemperance. The idea entertained by many in our own times, that it is a token of disrespect to the person whose health is drunk, if the glass be not filled to the brim, and then emptied, may be traced to the same source. Even at their solemn sacrifices, the ancient Scandinavians, as Ihre has observed, placed some degree of sanctity, in scyphis strenue evacuandis, or, as we would say, in hard drinking. This custom, as it originated in the idolatrous worship of Thor and Odin, was continued after the introduction of Christianity. The names were changed; but the rites, and the morals of the people, were, in a great measure, the same. Presuming to invoke the true God, or the Saviour, the pretended worshipper reckoned himself bound to empty a full cup. The like honour was done to the Virgin Mary. Then, in a similar manner they expressed their veneration for the Saints, and for the particular Patrons of the place. Needs it seem surprising, that such acts of religion, like various convivial and friendly meetings in later times, where similar ceremonies have been enforced, frequently terminated in tumults and in blood? V. Ol. Tryggvason S. c. 38, and lhre, vo. Minne.

There is a striking similarity between these customs of the barbarous Scandinavians, and those of the ancient nations that have been called civilized. The Romans, at their feasts, not only made a libation to their gods, by pouring out part of the cup before they drank of it, but emptied it in honour of them. "It was customary," says Potter, speaking of the Greeks and Romans, "to drink to persons absent. First the gods were remembered, then their friends; and at every name one or more cups of wine, unmixed with water, were drunk off.—It was their custom to drink unmixed wine as often as they named the gods or their friends. They did also, κρατεω τινος, pour forth some of the wine upon the earth, as often as they mentioned any person's name;—which being the manner of offering libations, it seems to have been a form of adoration, when any of the gods were named, and of prayer for their friends, when they mentioned them. Amongst their friends they most commonly named their mistresses. Examples of this custom are very common. Thus, in Tibullus:

*Sed bene Messalam sua quisque ad pocula dicit,
Nomen et absentis singula verba sonent.*"

Potter's Archæol. Græcæ, iii. 394.

Sometimes the number of cups equalled that of the letters in the name of the person whose health was drunk.

Narcia sex cyathis, septem Justina bibatur.

Martial.

Of this custom we find some of the more enlightened heathen complaining, as what necessarily led to the vilest intemperance. It was particularly reprobated by Seneca and Juvenal. V. Rosin. Antiq. Rom., p. 357, a.

The custom of saluting, first the gods, and then their friends by name, the Romans called "drinking after the Grecian manner;" as they had borrowed it from the Greeks. They seem to have had at least three cups, to which they ascribed a peculiar solemnity. They are indeed differently reckoned by different writers. According to some, the first was drunk in honour of Jupiter Olympius, the second in honour of the Heroes, and the third to Jupiter Soter, or the Saviour; who, it is said, was so called on this occasion, because it was supposed that this third cup might be taken without any disorder of mind, or injury to the health. Others mention the cup of Mercury, of Jupiter Charisius, and of Good Genius, by which designation some understand Apollo as meant and others Bacchus. V. Rosin., p. 359, 390; Potter, ii. 398, 399.

Both as to the number and the names of these cups, we may observe a striking analogy in the skolls of our Northern ancestors. From Snorro we learn, that, at all their great conventions, three cups were especially accounted sacred. No constraint was put on any to exceed this number. But it was reckoned necessary that they should go thus far. One was dedicated to Odin, who was not less honoured by the Northern nations, that was Jupiter by the Greeks. The Braga-bikar corresponded to the Grecian cup in honour of the Heroes; and we have seen that as the Greeks paid their respects to the Good Genius, the Scandinavians also dedicated a cup to the Patrons, or Guardians, of the place where they were assembled.

The learned Keyser has observed, that the Apostle Paul is to be understood as referring to these cups, when he says, (1 Cor. x. 21), "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils," or "of demons," i.e., the cup drunk in honour of departed men, who have been deified by their deluded votaries. Keyser also refers to the language of the prophet, as containing the same allusion: "Ye are they—that prepare a table for that troop, Gad; and that furnish the drink offering unto that number, Meni;" Isa. lxx. 11. V. Antiq. Septent., p. 352. As both these are unquestionably proper names, a sanguine etymologist might view both as of Northern origin. For as Minne was the name of one of the cups employed in the drink-offerings of the heathen, Isl. Gaud was the designation of the object of their worship. Numen Ethnicum, Christianis execratum, hodie pro re abjectissima et nauci usurpatur; G. Andr. Lex. But Gad, it would seem, in the passage referred to, denotes the Sun; and Meni the Moon. We must, therefore, be satisfied with the analogy, as it respects the drink-offerings.

SKUL, s. A scullion.

—"Bothwell and Huntley,—hearing how things went on the Queen's side, would have made resistance, by the help of the under officers of court, butlers, cooks, skuls, and suchlike, with spits and staves." Hume's Hist. Doug., p. 200.

Ir. muille, id. Su.-G. skoel-ju, Sax. schoel-en, Dan. skil-er, eluere; from Isl. skol-a, ablucere, skol, eluvium. Hence, according to lhre, E. scullion and scullery. Su.-G. skul-wattn, the water in which dishes are washed.

SKULE, s. An inflammatory disease affecting the palate of a horse, S.

Teut. schuyt, morbus quo palatum et gingivæ equorum præ nimio sanguine intumescunt; Kilian. Su.-G. skalla, munnsalla, an inflammation of the mouth, from skall-a, glabrare.

[SKULE, SCULE, SKULL, s. A great number of individuals; generally applied to fishes, and equivalent to E. shoal.

Its banks along, quibk hazels thrang,
Quhare sweet-sair'd hawthorns blow
I love to stray, and view the play
Of flickit scules below.

Minstrelsy, Border, iii. 356.

The word was common in O.E. A scoll of fish; Jul. Barnes; and, in Troil. and Creseide, Chaucer has scated sculs.

A.-S. scoule, "coetus magnus, multitudo; a great company, a multitude, a shole;" Somner. But this is from scylun, Su.-G. skilia, to separate; a skule being properly one company separated from others.]

SKULES, s. pl. Stalls where cattle are fed, S.B.

Isl. skiol, Su.-G. skiul, a covert, a lurking-place from skyl-a, tegere. Teut. schuytinghe, latibulum, latebra; from schuyt-en, latere.

SKULL, s. A shallow basket; properly one of a semi-circular or oval form, S.

Fish wyves cry Fy, and cast down skulls and skeils.
Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 59, st. 23.

V. SKUL.

[The fisherman's skull is generally of an oval form, deep at one end for the line, and shallow at the other for the baited hooks.]

It may be added, that, according to Seren., the name E. scu'll, given to a cockboat, (linter) seems to be transferred from (Goth. skiola, Sw. skyfa, vas quoddam, from skoel-ja, perfundere, eluere. Verel. defines Isl. skiola, vas quo arida vel liquida metiri consueverunt; giving Sw. bylle as synonym, whence E. butt.

[SKULP, s. The sea-jelly (A. calephae); called also whale-blubs, Shetl. Dan. skulpe, to shake, to agitate.]

To SKULT, v. a. To beat with the palms of the hands, S. synonym. skelp, scoue.

Isl. skell-a, skellde, diverbero palmis, the precise sense of the S. word; skell-r, a stroke; ras-skellr, the sound made by a fan, or by the palm of the hand; G. Andr.

[SKULTIE, adj. Naked, in a state of nudity, Clydes.; prob. from Sw. skala, to peel, strip; skal, shell, skin, covering. V. SKUDDIE.]

[To SKUNDG, v. n. To gallop, run quickly; synonym. spunder, Shetl.]

To SKUNFIS, SKUMFIS, v. a. Expl. "to disgust; applied especially to smells;" Aberd.

Evidently the same with SCOMFICE.

SKUNIE, s. A large knife, Shetl. V. SKEAN.

[To SKUNIE, v. a. To open, or cut open, with a knife; to skunie bait, to open shell-fish and take out the bait with a small knife. Shetl.]

[To SKUNKLE, v. n. 1. To glitter, Clydes. V. SKINKLE.

2. Used in the form of an oath in Shetl., as, skunkle me, similar to blast my eyes in vulgar, E.]

[SKUNNER, s. and v. V. SCUNNER.]

[SKUNNYRIT, pret. Retreated, gave way, Barbour, xvii., 651, Skeat's Ed.]

SKUR, SKURR, s. 1. Apparently corr. from scurf. "Free of scab and scurr," Mearns. A.-S. scurf, id.

2. The term is applied, by masons, to the rough surface of a stone, Ang.

Su.-G. skeer-a, rampere.

3. A small patch of fishing ground, Shetl.

4. Small horns, not fixed to the skull of an ox or cow, but hanging by the skin only, are called skurs, Ang.

[SKURM, s. The shell of an egg; skurmack, an egg, Shetl.]

SKURRIE, s. A cow with skurs, or small horns, Aberd.

[SKURLIE-WHIETER, s. An insignificant boy or lad, Shetl. one who is continually whining. V. SKIRL.]

[SKURM, SKURMACK. V. under SKUR.]

[To SKURR, SKURRIE, v. n. To go about from place to place, to wander about idly and lazily, S.]

SKURRIEMAN, s. A wandering fellow, Ayr. V. SKURYVAGE.

SKURRIOUR, s. A scout; also, an idle vagrant. V. SCURROUR.

SKURROCK, SKURROCH, s. Cash; a cant term, Loth.

[To SKURRYVARG, v. n. To live in idleness and dissipation, S.]

SKURRYVAG, SKURYVAGE, SCURRIVAIG, s. 1. A dissipated fellow, a lecher.

Sweyngeouris and skurryagis, swankys and cwanys

Genis na cure to cun craft, nor couptis for na cryme.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 23.

2. A vagabond, Loth. In Roxb. it conveys the idea of a ragged vagrant, or of an idle, ill-dressed, dirty, unsettled person. It is often used as signifying a scullion; synonym. Scuddieraig, Roxb. The latter is formed from the v. to Scud, to pass quickly.

"Aye ye may hide the vile scurrieraig, it ye may, an' hiddle an' smiddle the deeds o' darkness!" Saint Patrick, iii. 305.

[3. A course of dissipation; synonym., the spree, West of S.]

O. Fr. ecourre, aller et venir, se dissiper, secouer, agiter; Roquefort.

Lat. scurra and cay-or. Scurra, qui aliquem sequitur, qui etiam dicitur asseccla, irrisor, vaniloquus, parasitus, sive leccator. Du Cange.

[SKURT, s. The bosom within the folded arms, the lap, Shetl.; properly, the fold or front of the short-gown worn by women. In Clydes. the short-gown is often called a skirt. Dan. skiort, a petticoat, Sw. skort, a skirt.]

SKUTE, SKOOT, s. Sour or dead liquor, Aberd.; synonym. Jute.

Su.-G. squaett-a, liquida effundere; squaett, a small quantity of any liquor; Wideg.

[SKUTE, s. and v. V. SKOOT.]

To SKUTE, SCUIT, v. n. To walk awkwardly in consequence of having flat soles, and thus the feet turned considerably out, Roxb.;

the same with Scute, Skute, more generally used.

Isl. skut-a, prominere; or Su.-G. skiut-a, trudere.

[SKUTOCK, SKUTIE, s. The foolish Guille-mot, S.]

[SKUVE, s. The tail of an animal, but generally applied to fish, Shetl.]

SKUWES, s. pl. Groves, shaws.

Thei durken the dere, in the dyme skuwes,
That, for drede of the deth, droupis the do.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 5.

This word, as it occurs in a poem which has more of the O.E. than S. dialect, proclaims its immediate connexion with A.-S. scwa, umbra. V. SCHAW.

SKY, s. A small board, about four inches in depth, used in the construction of the Shetland plough, in place of a mould-board. An old barrel-stave is generally used for this purpose.

"A square hole is cut through the lower end of the beam, and the mercal, a piece of oak about 22 inches long introduced, which, at the other end, holds the sock and sky." P. Aithating, Statist. Acc., vii. 555.

It also forms part of the Orcadian plough; jutting out obliquely backwards on the right side immediately behind the share. Hence, SKY-EAR, s. A part of the plough jutting out obliquely backwards, on the right side, a little above the sky, Orkn.

There are two skies-ear, which, with the sky, supply the place of the mould-board in ploughs of a better construction.

Norw. ski is expl. a piece of wood; Hallager.

SKY, s. Shadow, cloud.

My fader than lukand furth throw the sky,
Cryis on me fast, Fle son, fle son, in hye.

Doug. Virgil, 63, 12.

"Fr. Junius with little ground renders it umbra, because Virgil has it so. And it would seem as if he had designed to derive the word from Gr. σκια;" Rudd. Junius, [or, as appears, Lye] is certainly right, not only as he has Virgil on his side, but because skye is an O. E. word, used in this sense by Gower:

And with that worle, all sodenly
She passeth, as it were a skye.

Conf. Am. Lib. iv. Fol. 71, a.

Warton has adopted the same idea. "A shadow, scia, umbra." It is more immediately connected with Belg. scheye, (Kilian, vo. Schaede) with Su.-G. sky, nubes, nebula, or even with skugga, id., whence skyggja-a, obumbrare. Seren. derives skugga from sky, nebula, vo. Shade. Isl. skjat veder, coelum nubibus obductum, sed tamen sine pluvia.

It occurs also in an ancient O. E. MS. poem in the possession of William Hamper, Esq., of Birmingham, thus:

And thus good sayth is turned upsylde down,
And true meaning derked with a skye
That we in englysche callen flatterye.

It may be questioned, however, whether both in this passage, and in that quoted from Gower, the term does not properly denote a cloud. That it was used in this sense in O. E. is unquestionable. "Skye. Nubes. Nubila." Prompt. Parv.

Certainly skye denotes clouds in the following passage:

Thik drumly skuggis dirkinmit so the henin,
Dym skye oft furth warpit ferful leuin,
Flaggis of fyre, and mony felloun flaw, &c.

Doug. Virg., Irol. 200, 53.

This is the primary and strict signification of Isl. and Su.-G. sky. But the transition from the one sense to the other is very natural; a cloud throwing a shadow on that portion of the earth over which it passes.

SKY, s. The sky of a hill, the ridge or summit, Aberd.

It has been also defined, the highest part of a hill that is seen by a person standing at its base, Aberd. All below this is viewed as individual property; all above it, as common. V. Case, Hill of Fair.

This phrase may signify that nothing but sky is seen beyond the point referred to. According to the first definition, however, it might seem allied to Isl. skyf-a, sciudere, to divide.

• SKY, s. 1. Twilight; the red light on the clouds in the east before sunrise, or in the west after sunset. Thus, "Was ye up afore the sun the day?" "Aye, afore the sky," S. "The sky wiinna set this hour yet," S.B.

This seems originally the same with Su.-G. sky, as signifying aether, which here derives with considerable plausibility from sky-a, to cover.

2. Between the sun and the sky, the interval between day-break and sunrise, Ang.

This portion of time, in the calendar of superstition, has some special connexion with the efficacy of incantation. Accordingly, we have the following account from Angus, of the means used, only six years ago, "for delivering a boat from the necromantic power of Janet Kindy, who was supposed to render it unfortunate.

"It was agreed that the boat should be exorcised, and that Janet was the spirit which tormented it. The ceremony of exorcism was performed as follows:—

In each boat there is a cavity called the tap-hole; on this occasion the hollow was filled with a particular kind of water furnished by the mistress of the boat; a straw effigy of poor Janet was placed over it.—The boat was then rowed out to sea before sun rise, and, to use the technical expression, the figure was burnt between the sun and the sky, i.e., after daylight appeared, but before the sun rose above the horizon, while the master called aloud, 'Avoid ye, Satan!' The boat was then brought home, and since that time has been as fortunate as any belonging to the village." Edin. Mag., Feb. 1818, p. 116.

3. To look, or to see an object, between the sun and the sky, to bow down the body, bringing the eye as much as possible along the horizon, S.B.

When there is a dark ground behind, an object is in this way seen far more distinctly, than when viewed by one standing upright. The idea seems borrowed from the circumstance of anything being thus seen, after sun-set, by the light that is reflected from the sun on the lower part of the sky.

To SKY, v. n. [To skim along the horizon.]

"The ships come tilting over the waves,—while the maws fly skying by the sounding shore, and the raven seems to rejoice in the coming storm." Gall. Encycl., p. 431.

Su.-G. sky, vitare, subterfugere. Or perhaps synon. with Scovv, q. v.

To SKY UP, v. n. To clear up; a phrase used concerning the atmosphere, when the rain seems to go off. It's like to sky up, Ettr. For. It is used impersonally, S.B. It's skyin', the sky is appearing.

This may be merely from E. sky, as denoting the atmosphere; and so signifying that it is clearing up, or that the azure is becoming visible. But as Isl. sky is a cloud, and sky-a means to cover with clouds; to sky up may be from the same origin, as intimating the disappearance of the clouds.

SKY-GOAT, s. A name given in the Highlands of S. to the bittern.

"The Highlanders call the bittern the sky-goat, from some fancied resemblance in the scream of both animals." Saxon and Gael, i. 169.

This bird has received many metaphorical designations. V. Mire-Bumper. In Gael, the snipe is gob-har hoidche, "the goat of the night."

SKYBALD, [SKYBIE, SKYPEL], adj. 1. Mean, low; synon., scabby.

Blied babling bystour-barl obey;
Learn, skybald knave, to know thy sell.
Potswart, Watson's Coll., lii. 6.

2. Tattered, ragged, Clydes.

SKYBALD, SKYPE, SKYPEL, s. 1. "Tatterdemallion," Rams. Gl. S. Skeibalt, "mean worthless fellow," Sibb. Gl.

"The said Laird perceaving men to faint and begyne to recoule, said, Fy, lat us nevir leive efter this day, that we sall recoule for Frenche skybaldis." Knox's Hist., p. 202.

Poor skybalds! cursed with more o' wealth than wit,
Blyth of a gratis gaudemus, sit
With look attentive, ready all about
To give the laugh when his dull joke comes out.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 353.

The skybald, by his ain ill conscience chas't,
Did see the kintra, and ne'er kent the gude o't.
The Ghaist, p. 6.

2. A worn out horse, or one that is lazy, Ayr., pron. skybil.

3. A gelded goat, Renfr.

Dan. skabhals (skabbals, Sibb.) denotes a rogue, a rascal, a base man; allied perhaps to Isl. skrifr, the rabble, skipe, a low fellow, Border. O. Fr. scybele is used by Rabelais, in the sense of merde endurcie, a term undoubtedly expressive of the greatest contempt possible.

SKYBRIE, SKIBRIE, s. Thin light soil, Aberd.; the same with Skeebrie, Ang.

SKYBRIE, SKIBRIE, adj. [Thin and light]; skybrie stuff, bad grain, Aberd.

SKYLD, s. A species of tax, or land rent, Orkn.

"The small part held upon feudal terms was subjected to the payment of a skyld or land rent in addition to the scat and tithe." Agr. Surv. Orkn., p. 30.

Dan. skyld, landskyld, merces praediorum, synon. with landkille, Baden; "quit-rent, rent-service, farm-rent, the lord of the manor's fees;" Wolff. Su.-G. skuld, also skyld, 1. a debt, 2. rent, cess, tanquam debitum alteri solvendum; Ihre. Skuld also occurs in the laws of the Ostrogoths. For Paskaskuld signifies tributum Paschale.

SKYLE, s. Dispersion, Renfr. V. SKAIL.

I'll neer forget you dreadsfu' morn,
That maist had prov'd our ruin;—
Waves dashing down wi' blatt'rin skyle,
Win's roarin'—sailors flyin'.
A Wilson's Poems, p. 87.

[SKYLE-A-LUM, s. A wooden cover for a chimney, used for the prevention of smoke, Shetl.]

SKYLAND, part. adj. [Dropping, scattering. V. SKILE, s.]

Thou skyland skarth, thou has the hurle behind.
Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 57.

The connexion shews that this term conveys a dirty idea; Dan. skyll-a, Isl. skol-ia, eluere.

To SKYLE, v. a. To hide, to conceal.

Yet nertheless within mine orature
I stode, quhan Titan had his beinis brycht
Withdrawn down, and skylid under cure,
And faire Venus, the beaute of the nycht, Upraise.

Henryson's Test. Crescide Chron. S.P., i. 157.

Skyled, Chaucer's Works, Fol. 182, col. i. "Closed," Gl. Skyled under cure, "hid under cover."

Su.-G. skyl-a, occultare; Isl. skiol-a, Dan. skyl-er, Belg. schuyt-en, latitare. Ihre views sky-a, celare, tegere, as the origin. Hence, according to this learned etymologist, skoeld, a shield, as being a covering for the body in war; and skiul, tectum, the covering of a house. But it is singular, that Heb. shilte, signifies shields.

[To SKYNK, v. a. and n. To pour out liquor, to drink, &c. V. SKINK.]

[To SKYOW, SKYOWL, v. a. and n. 1. To twist, distort; also, to walk in a distorted or affected manner, Banffs.

2. To deflect from the plumb-line, to slant, ibid.]

[SKYOW, SKYOWL, s. A twist, ibid.]

[SKYOWIN, SKYOWLIN, s. and adj. Applied in both senses of the v.; as an adj. it generally means waddling, having the feet twisted, showlie, ibid.]

[SKYOWT, SKYOWLT, adj. Twisted, distorted, not plumb, ibid.

SKYOW and SKYOWL are evidently the Banffs. forms of SKEW and SKEWL, q.v.]

SKYPE, SKYPEL, s. A low worthless fellow; a term of contempt; the same with Skibe, Ettr. For. [V. SKYBALD.]

"Him! he speak of me! If he durst, I would claw the puppy-hide of him! He is as great a skype as I know of." Hogg's Winter Tales, i. 249.

It is sometimes pronounced Squeef, Roxb.

[To SKYPE, v. n. To go about like an idle lazy person, Banffs. Part. pr. used as an adj.]

SKYPEL, adj. [Mean, ragged; bare, scanty.]
Skypel skate, expl. "ugly fellow."

Gin I had here the skypel skate,
Sae weel's I should him bang.
Christmas Basing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 125.

To SKYRE, v. n. 1. To be shy, to startle, Ettr. For.; the same with Skar, Skair.

"But scho skyril to knuife lowly, or siccarlie on thilke sauchning." Hogg's Winter Tales, ii. 41.
Apparently a variety from Skar, Skair, q. v.

[2. To look amazed or silly; also, to make a vain or silly display, Banffs.]

[SKYRE-LEUKIN, adj. Having a scared, vac-cant, or silly look; also, gaudy, tawdry, as applied to dress, ibid.]

SKYRIT, pret. Startled, sheered off.

—Tak Schairp and Leslie tua vyse men veill inspyrit.
Leslie to cum from lauis to you he fyrit,
Schairp from you, vent to the lauis for neid;
As he vas vyse, the vther planelie skyril.
N. Burne's Admonition.

SKYRE, s. A schirrous substance.

Fy, skowdert skyn, thou art but skyre and skrumple.
Dunbar, Evergreen, li. 54.

Fr. scyre, "a hard and almost insensible swelling or kernell, bred between the flesh and skin, by cold, or of thick and clammy phlegm;" Cotgr. Lat., schirr-us.

SKYRIN, part. pr. 1. Shining, S.B.

Simmer on' winter on it kyths,
And mony a bonny town;
An' a' the skyrin brins o' light
That blink the poles anour.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 29.

2. Making a great show, in what way soever,
S.

But had you seen the philibegs,
And skyrin tartan trews man.

Burns, iv. 363.

A.-S. scir, scyr, Alem. scieri, Su.-G. skir, clear, shining; skir-a, Isl. skyr-a, to make luminous, Mocs.-G.
ga-skir-an, to illustrate. Ihere views these terms as derived from the old Goth. word skir, or skior, fire.

To SKYRME, v. n. To skirmish; or perhaps to make a feint.

Sum skirp ine with scorn, and sum skyrme at myn e.
Houlate, i. 6.

Printed skyrine; but it is skyrme in the MS. V.
SCRYM, v. The origin is most probably retained in
Isl. skrum-a, fingo; q., to feign a fight.

[To SKYTCH, r. n. To skate, Clydes. V.
SKETCH, SKITE.]

SKYTCHERS, s. pl. Skates, Renfr.

—Oure the loch's clear frozen face
On skytchers thrang, in airy chace,
Flew mony a cheery chiel.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 196.

V. SKETCHERS.

VOL. IV.

To SKYTE, v. a. and n. [1. To toss, to throw, to squirt, Clydes., Aberd.]

2. To slide, to slip; as on a smooth street or road, S. V. SKITE.

It seems an oblique sense of A.-S. scyt-an, Su.-G.
skint-a, ejaculari; q. to be thrown out; and is perhaps originally the same with Skut, id. Dumfr., Clydes.

[SKYTER, SKYTIE. V. under SKITE.]

SKYTE, SKITE, s. 1. A nasty person, S.B. either from the v. in the Goth. sense, or allied to Dan. skyden, sordidus.

2. A meagre person, one who has the appearance of starvation, Loth.

3. A strange-looking ugly person, Aberd.

To SKYTLE, v. n. To move from side to side; applied to any liquid in a vessel that is shaken in being carried, Upp. Clydes.

Dan. skull-er, to shake, to agitate. V. the etymon of SCUTLE, which seems radically the same.

[SKYVE, SKYVER. V. under SKIVE.]

To SLA, v. a. 1. To strike, conjoined with fyre. V. SLEW FYR.

2. To slay, to kill.

To sla he sparyd noucht Inglis men.

Wyntown, viii. 13, 117.

Pret. slouch, Wynt. Wall. Mocs.-G. slahan, pret. slah; Su.-G. Isl. slaa, Belg. sla, sloug, Germ. slagh-en, to strike, to beat, which, as Mr. Macpherson has observed, is the primary sense of the word. Ihere makes the same remark. V. SLEW FYRE.

To SLAB, SLAB up, v. a. To sup greedily and ungracefully, Banffs.

Lang may ye blaw the reamin ale —
While I slab up my bareft kail.

Taylor's Scots Poems, p. 173.

Teut. slabb-en, lambere; sorbere et devorare.

SLABBER, s. A slovenly fellow, Dumf.

This is certainly from the same source with the E.
v. slabber; Teut. slabb-en, slabber-en, id.

O. E. "Slabbard. Tardus. Morosus." Prompt.
Parv. Thus it has been used also to denote that reluctance which indicates moroseness of temper.

SLABBERGAUCIE, s. A slovenly drivelling fellow, Banffs.; [slabbergash, Clydes.]

Perhaps from Teut. slabber-en, to slabber, and gheus, a beggar, a mean fellow. Or it might be viewed as an Isl. compound, from slaf-r-a, nugari, and gar, anser, q.
"a foolish goose."

[SLABBERY, adj. Applied to rainy, windy weather, Shetl., Clydes. In the latter district it is applied also to the state of the roads in such weather, like E. sloppy.

[SLACHT, s. Race, family, descent, Shetl.
Du. slacht, id.]

* SLACK, s. 1. An opening between hills.
V. SLAK.

2. "A hollow," Ettr. For. V. SLAK, 2.
 * SLACK, adj. 1. Slow, S.B.
 2. Transferred to money, when merchants find difficulty in getting payment of the sums owing them.
 "Siller's slack, money is ill to raise," Shirr. Gl. S.B.
 3. Not employed, or having little to do, S.
 4. Thinly occupied; applied to a place of worship, when it is not well filled, The kirk was slack, S.
 5. In a moral sense applied to one whose promise is not to be trusted, or whose conduct is loose, S.
 6. In relation to mercantile concerns; He's a slack chap, i.e., one who does not pay well, S.
 A.-S. slac, Su.-G. slak, remissus.

SLACK-EWE, SLACK YOW, s. A ewe which has given over bearing, South of S. Crok, Crock, synon.

"The superannuated breeding ewes are either sold fat, at Martinmas, when they are called Slack Ewes, or Crocks; or with lamb, in March, at the Peebles fair, &c. when they are called Great Ewes." Pennicuik's Descr. Tweedd., Ed. 1815, p. 52.

"The cast off breeding ewes, when sold at Martinmas, are designed slack-ewes, or crocks; when sold heavy with lamb in March, they are designed great ewes." Agr. Surv. Peeb., p. 69.

Teut. slack, slack, laxus, remissus; q. remissus utero, not distended in the belly, like a great [grit] or pregnant ewe. Isl. slaku-a, detumescere. V. CROK.

SLACK JAW, s. Frivolous talk, trifling conversation, Aberd., Roxb.; sometimes implying loose, idle, or coarse raillery. V. JAW.

To SLACK, v. n. To cease to be distended, to become flaccid, Loth. In this sense a tumour is said to slack.

Teut. slack-en, laxari, solvi.

SLACKIE, s. A kind of sling used by school-boys, Loth., Fife.

It occurs in the ludicrous account which Rabelais gives of the shepherds of Gargantua assaulting the cake-bakers of Lerne.

"The other shepherds and shepherdesses hearing the lamentable shout of Forgier, came with their slings and slackies following them, and throwing great stones at them as thick as if it had been hail." Urquhart's Rabelais, p. 117.

The word used in the original is brassieres. According to Cotgr. brassier signifies both a sling, and a short cudgel. Urquhart, probably on this authority, elsewhere explains his own term, but improperly, it would seem, as denoting a short cudgel.

"He—found by true information, that his men had taken violently some cakes from Picrocholes people, and that Marquets head was broken with a slackie or short cudgel." Rabelais, p. 144.

Tribard is the word used by Rabelais, i. 32.

"Slackies. I know not what slacky means; I suppose it may be a Scotch word for something like a sling; for that's what Rabelais means by the word brassier." Ozell, N. B. I., c. 25.

The slackie, it is believed, is that kind of sling, which is made of an elastic rod, or piece of wood, split at one end, for receiving the stone.

The word may be allied to Teut. slack-en, laxare, liberare. The synon. term in Belg. is applied to shooting; Ennen koegel slaaken, to shoot a bullet; Sewel.

The author of that very ancient and singular work, the Speculum Regale, supposed to have been written in the twelfth century, describes two kinds of slings as used in his time; the one denominated stafsluung, or the staff-sling, the other handsluung, i.e., the hand-sling. It is scarcely necessary to observe, that the former was a sling affixed to a rod. It is the same weapon that Vegetius calls Fustiballus, (De Re Milit., iii. 14) a sling affixed to a staff four feet long. The slackie may perhaps be viewed as retaining some resemblance of this.

To SLACK the fire. To cover it up with dross; or, as it is otherwise expressed, to rest it for the night, Perth.

This v. is evidently from the F. s. Sluck, small coal. Dr. Johns. gives no etymon of the term. But it is undoubtedly from the same origin with Slag, the dross of metals. Teut. stleck, Germ. schlack, scoriae, which Wachter deduces from schlag-en, ejicere, as being the refuse. Ihre derives Su.-G. slagg, dross, from slaa, which denotes the chips of iron that fly from the anvil in beating. The latter is probably from slaa, to strike.

SLADE, SLAID, s. A valley, a den.

—Hys daughter, amang buskis ronk,
 In derne sladis and mony sloggy slouk,
 Wyth milk he nurist of the beistis wilde.

Doug. Virgil, 384, 23.

Baith erbe and froyte, busk and bewis, braid
 Haboundandlye in euery slouk and slaid.

Wallace, iii. 4. MS.

Brail seems a v. signifying, spread themselves out, expanded themselves.

Evin to the castell he raid,
 Hewit in ane dern slaid.

Garcen and Göl., lii. 15.

Huvi, Ed. 1508.

Slaid, S. B. still denotes a hollow between rising grounds, especially one that has a rivulet of water running through it. Isl. slaid, vallis; A.-S. slued, slede, via in montium convallibus, Lye. But Sommer expl. the A.-S. term, "a valley, a slade." Germ. schlechte, planities. We find the same term used by R. Glouc.

The erle Roberd of Gloucestre, as man withoute fere,
 The strong castel of Brystow, that he let hym self rere,
 Astored wel ynou, & also the slade,
 And held hem bothe age the kyng, to thenche on kunhede. P. 447.

"Slade, valley," Gl. Hearne.

This is a very ancient word; being the same with Sw. slät, a plain. Est autem Vitesleth, velut alii scribunt, Widasleth, nihil aliud quam lata planities, aut Vitarum vel Jutarum planities; Loccenii Hist. Suecana, Lib. i. c. 7.

This was the ancient name of Zealand and some of the neighbouring isles in the Baltic, and has been viewed as the designation of an early settlement of the Picts. V. Pinkerton's Enquiry, i. 182.

Perhaps all these terms may be traced to Su.-G. Dan. slæt, Isl. slött-r, Alem. slät, Germ. schlecht, planus.

SLADGE, SLUDGE, s. A sloven, one who abuses his clothes with mire or dirt, in working or walking; also, "a dirty coarse woman," Clydes., S.A. [Synon. slaister.]

Teut. sladde, slets, sletae, slodde, are used in the same sense as applicable to a woman; Sordida et inculta mulier, ambubaia; Kilian. Isl. sladde, vir habitu ac moribus madidus; G. Andr., p. 216. This resembles the S. phrase applied to one given to drunkenness, a wat lad.

To SLADGE, SLUDGE, v. n. 1. To go with a lounging gait through every puddle that comes in the way, S.A.

2. To work in so slovenly a way as to bedaub one's self with mire, ibid.; [synon. slairy, slaister.]

SLAE, SLA, s. The sloe, S.; a term applied both to the tree and the fruit.

"Prunus spinosa The Black-Thorn or Sloe-tree, Anglis. The Slae, Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 255.

Below to I saw to.
Ane buss of bitter slaes.

Cherrie and Slae; Evergreen, ii. 113.

A.-S. sla, Belg. slee, Germ. schleh, prunum sylvestre. Lancash. slaigh, slawayh, "the black thorn berry;" T. Bobbins.

SLAE-BLACK, adj. Black as a sloe; Tarras, Gl. Shirr.

SLAEIE, adj. Abounding with sloes, or sloe-bushes, Clydes.

[SLAG, SLAGGIE, adj. Soft, moist, wet, S.; also in a state of thaw], as, "a slag day,—a day on which the ice is thawing;" Gall. Enc. The land, or ice after a thaw, is said to be slaggie, ib.

O.E. "Slag or fowle wey. Lubricus. Limosus." Prompt. Parv.

SLAG, [SLAIG, SLOG], s. 1. A lump, portion, or quantity of any soft substance, as, a slag of partridge, a large spoonful, S.

2. A sudden gust or blast, synon. flann.

For of hie landis thair may cum sloggis,
At Saint Tabbis Heid, and Buchan Nes,
And ryve your foir-saill all in raggis.
—Sic slags may fall, suppois a hundir
War yow to help, thai have no hands.

Schaw, Maitland Poems, p. 133, 134.

Su.-G. Slagg, mixta nive pluvia, intemperies; Teut. slegghe, nebula, glacialis pluvia. There is no reason for supposing with Sibb., Gl. vo. Slogg, that it is perhaps erroneously for Flaggs.

To SLAG, SLAGG, [SLAIG, SLOG], v. a. 1. To soften, moisten, to besmear, S.; [synon. slaik.]

"An' bony lass," says he, "ye'll gee's a kiss,
An' I sall sett ye right on, hit or miss."
"A hit or miss I'll get, but help o' you, Kiss ye slate stanes, that winna slagg your mou'."

Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 53.

In Edit. second, weet your mou'.

Probably allied to Teut. slegghe, mador, tenuis pluvia; Isl. slagi, humiditas; whence slagn-a, mollescere, humescere; Haldorson.

2. To Slag, Slaiy, or Slyaug up [to lift in slags or large spoonfuls; hence], to gobble up voraciously, Aberd., Clydes.

Su.-G. stek-a, lambere.

[To SLAGGER, SLAIGER, SLAIG, v. a. and n.

1. To besmear with mud, to bespatter, Clydes.]; "to waddle in the mud;" Gl. Sibb.

This seems radically the same with Laggery, Laggerit, q. v., although Sibb. views it as allied to Slairy. Teut. sleggerigh, udus, madidus; Isl. slagi, humiditas.

[2. To beslabber; to take food in a dirty, slatternly, or gwigling manner, Clydes. Banffs.] To take meat in a slow and careless way; generally said of dogs, Ettr. For. V. SLAG up, v.

3. To walk slowly and carelessly; used contemptuously, Ettr. For.

SLAGGER, SLAGGIE, SLAIGER, s. 1. A small portion of any soft substance, Kinross; a dimin. from SLAG, id., q. v.

[2. An unseemly mass or mixture of anything wet or soft; food mixed up in a dirty manner, Clydes., Banffs.]

3. Slatternly work; also, the act of working in a slatternly manner: the part. pr. is also used in the latter sense, ibid.]

[SLAICH, SLAIGH, s. Slime; anything wet and muddy, or soft and disgusting, Clydes., Banffs. V. SLAG and SLAIC.]

[To SLAICH, SLAIGH, v. a. and n. 1. To bedaub, smear; to paint, &c., in a careless or slovenly manner, ibid.

2. To spit mucus in a dirty, offensive manner, ibid.

3. To partake of liquid or semi-liquid food in a dabbling, disgusting manner; also, to wash or scour in a slatternly manner, ibid.]

[SLAICHIE, SLAIGHIE, adj. Slimy; wet, moist, and disgusting, ibid.]

SLAID, s. A valley. V. SLADE.

[SLAID, pret. Slid; passed swiftly, Barbour, iii. 701, x. 700; walked with long strides, Banffs.]

SLAID, SLADE, s. An indolent, slovenly person, one given to procrastination, Upp. Lanarks.

Isl. sladd-a, squalide grassari; slot-a, remittere, slot, remissio, relaxation. V. SLAIT.

SLAID, adj. Slovenly and dirty, disagreeable, ibid. V. SLAIT, adj.

[To SLAIGER, v. a. and n. V. under SLAG.]

SLAIGER, s. 1. The act of bedaubing, [of working in mud or in a slatternly manner, Clydes.]

2. A quantity of some soft muddy substance, such especially as excites disgust; as, "a slaiger o' dirt," "a slaiger o' cauld parritch," ibid.

SLAIGERER, s. One who bedaubes; a dirty walker, ibid.

SLAIGERIN', s. A bedaubing, beslobbering, bespattering, ibid.

[SLAIGERIN, SLAIGERSOM, adj. Dirty or slovenly in walking, working, or eating, Clydes.]

To SLAIK, SLAKE, v. a. and n. 1. To bedaub, [smear, streak], S.

"I wonder what ye would ha' said, if ye had seen the minister's yetes, the day after they were painted, slaked and blackit a' owre wi' dirt, by the laddies frae the schule." Cottagers of Glenburnie, p. 182.

[2. To wash, scrub, or wipe up in a slatternly manner, Clydes.]

3. To lick or kiss in a slabbering manner, S.

*Slip down thy hoiss, me think the carle is glaikit,
Sett thou not by howheid sche kist and slaikkit,
Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 73.*

4. To hang about or lounge like a dog that is content to feed on offals, S.

—An' like a spaniel lick his dishes,
An' come an' gang just to his wishes.
I ne'er as yet hae found a' Patron,
For scorn be till't! I hate a flatt'rin;
Besides, I never had an itchin'
To slake about a great man's kitchen.
Tannahill's Poems, p. 106.

It is exactly synon. with Germ. schleck-en, ligurire, suavia et dulcia appetere. This Wachter derives from Gr. γλῦν, dulcia, the sibilant being prefixed. But both the Germ. v. and Teut. lick-en, vorare; lurcare, ligurire; must be viewed as properly signifying to lick; analogous to Su.-G. slak-a, lick-a, Isl. slak-ia, lambere, q. to lick one's fingers, as is said of one who has this propensity. A person of this description is called in Germ. schlecker, and lecker-maul, os cibi laetioris appetens, Wachter. Su.-G. slikiare, in like manner, signifies a smell-feast, also, a flatterer, a parasite; from leck-en, Moes.-G. laigo-an, A.-S. liccan, &c. to lick.

5. To carry off and eat any thing clandestinely, applied especially to confections, sweetmeats, &c., S.

SLAIK, SLAKE, s. 1. [Any thing soft, unctuous, or fluid that slaiks or snears, Clydes.]

2. A small quantity of anything soft or unctuous, applied to something else, S.

But now, slake! wi' time and toil,
Hath frailty on me seiz'd;

*Altho' wi' soupling stakes of oil,
Right aft my flank ye've greaz'd.
Smith and Bellows, A. Scott's Poems*, p. 145.

3. A slight daub, [smear, or streak], S.

"That makes nae difference man,—the dress, the light, the confusion, and maybe a touch o' a blackit cork, or a slake o' paint," &c. Heart M. Loth., ii. 109.
In this sense it is nearly synon. with E. lick; and like the v. claims affinity with Germ. schleck-en, to lick.

[4. A slatternly wash, scrub, or wipe up; as, "She jist gied the floor a slaik. Oh! she's deed lazy," Clydes.]

5. The act of bedaubing or besmearing, as with butter, &c.

6. A slabbering lick or kiss, S. B.

—I mann kiss her, 'cause I was the woo'r
My father briskly loot me see the gate—
But frae my father mony a slaik she gat,
An' I, just like to spue, like blunty sat.
Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 30.

In Edit. second, changed to E. smack.

7. A small portion of any thing laid hold of clandestinely, S.

8. A low, mean, sneaking fellow, Roxb.

Teut. sliek, stock, helluo, vorax, sliek-en, stock-en, vorare.

SLAIKER, SLAIKIE, s. One who bedaubes, &c., S.; [also, same with Slake, s. 8, Clydes.]

SLAIK, s. A stroke, a slap, Renfr., Ayrs.

"Ye ken,—ye struck him first wi' the stick, and he gied you but a gentle slaik wi's paw." Sir A. Wylie, i. 37.

"Ye might lay yourself out for a bit slaik o' its paw." The Entail, ii. 148. V. SLAKE.

Teut. slagh, Su.-G. slag, ictus; from slaeghen and slaa, percudere.

SLAIN, SLANE, s. A wooded cleugh or precipice, Roxb.

Isl. slind is expl. Latus planum in corpore oblongo, Verel. Ind.; and Germ. slonde signifies hiatus terrae, abyssus, chasma.

SLAINES, SLAYANS. Letters of Slaines, letters subscribed, in case of slaughter, by the wife or executors of the deceased, acknowledging that satisfaction had been given, or otherwise soliciting for the pardon of the offender; Erskine's Instit., B. iv., Tit. 4, s. 105.

"His Hienesse—sall close his handes, and cease fra granting onie respites or remissions, for ony maner of slaughter,—except the said respite or remission sall be craved to the offender, be the wife, bairnes or nearest friends, of the person that has received the offense: Or that a sufficient letter of slaines, seene and perfitely considered be his Hienes councell," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1592, c. 155.

"He obtained easily a letter of Slayans from the party." Baillie's Lett., i. 307.

A.-S. slaegen, slain; q. letters concerning one slain, or the act of slaying.

Robertson, in his Hist. of Charles V., has shewn that this custom is perfectly analogous to the feudal laws which existed on the continent. Vol. I., 302, N. xxiii.

SLAINGE, s. One who clandestinely carries off any thing that seems palatable; Selkirks. "a slaiking creature," synon.

This seems radically the same with Sleenge, and Slinge, v.

SLAIPIE, SLAPIE, s. A mean fellow, a plate-licker, Roxb.

Isl. slap-r, homuncio sordidus. It is perhaps originally the same with SLAUPIE, q. v.

[To SLAIR, SLAIRP, SLAIRT, v. a. and n. To lick up in a slatternly manner; to eat greedily and with noise, to gobble food; hence, to outstrip in eating, West of S. V. SLERK.]

SLAIRG, SLAIRK, SLERG, s. A quantity of any substance in a semi-fluid state; as, a slaigr or slerg o' parritch, a large spoonful of porridge, S.; q. as much as one can swallow. V. SLAK.

Dan. slurk, "a sup." This word sup seems to correspond with our soup.

To SLAIRG, v. a. To bedaub, &c. [V. SLAGGER and SLAIRY.]

"Slaigr, slerg, to bedaub;" Gl. Sibb.

—Brodie soon slaigr'd his beard

Wi' bra' creeshie platefu's of gravy.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1816, p. 17.

SLAIRGIE, SLARGIE, adj. Unctuous, adhesive, S.

"Slargie stuff, matter of a gluey nature;" Gall. Encl.

[SLAIRT, SLAIRP, adj. Slovenly, handless, S. V. SLERP.]

SLAIRT, s. A silly dastardly fellow; a term used by the fishers of Buckhaven, synon. with Coof, Cufe.

Isl. sliar, hebes; or slor, sordes, also ignavia.

To SLAIRT about. To go about in a sluggish manner, S. B.

Teut. sloordigh, sordidus, incultus, incomtus. V. SLAIRY.

To SLAIRT, v. a. and n. To outstrip, [in eating. V. SLAIR, SLERK.]

To SLAIRY, SLARY, v. a. To bedaub, S. B. It properly denotes the effect of carelessness.

We must view as nearly allied to this, O. E. "Slor or soor, [slor?] or clay," i.e., clay. "Cenum. Limus.—Sloryed. Cenosus. Cenolentus. Lutulentus." Prompt, Parv.

Sibb. writes slaigr, slerg, deriving the term from Teut. slijck, coenum. But it must rather be deduced from sloore, sordida ancilla, serva vilis, ignava; Belg. slorig, sordidus. Kilian refers to E. slorie, sordidare, mentioned by Junius, which is evidently the same word. The latter refers to Dan. slor, colluvies hominum, the dregs of the people. Lye properly adds, that Isl. slor, the filth of fishes, (piscium sordes), appears to be the common origin. Sw. slarfe-a, to be careless in doing anything; Wideg. V. SLERG.

SLAIRY, SLARIE, s. A small portion of any thing, especially food, taken in a dirty way, so as to bedaub one's clothes, &c. S.

To SLAISTER, SLESTER, SLYSTER, v. a. and n. 1. To work in any thing moist or unctuous, S.

2. To move clumsily through a miry road, S.

"There was he wading up to the kutes in glaur, slaisterin' through the deepest part of the road."

Slaister may be viewed as allied to SLUSH, q. v.

3. To do anything in an awkward and dirty way; especially applied to working in any thing moist or unctuous, S.

"Ye'll be for your breakfast, I'se warrant? hae there's a soup partridge for you—it will set ye better to be slaistering at them and the lapper-milk than middling wi' Mr. Lovel's head." Antiquary, i. 229.

4. To bedaub, S. nearly synon. with E. plaister.

Look at his head, and think of there
The pomet slaister'd up his hair!

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 96.

SLAISTER, SLESTER, SLYSTER, s. [1. A wet, liquid, or unctuous, dirty mass; also, the act of working in such, S.]

2. A heterogeneous composition, a wet or liquid mass producing nausea, S. synon. soos.

Ye lowns that troke in doctor's stuff,
You'll now hae unco slaisters.

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 64.

"The wine!—if ever we were to get good o't, it was by taking it naked, and no wi' your sugar and your slaisters—I wish for aye, I had ne'er kend the sour smack o't." St. Ronan, iii. 155.

3. The act of bedaubing, [or of working, with anything wet and dirty], S.

"Are ye at the painting trade yet?" said Meg; "an unco slaister ye used to make with it lang syne." St. Ronan, i. 41.

4. A dirty slut, Ettr. For.

SLAISTER-KYTE, s. A foul-feeder, a gormandizer, a bellygod, Teviotdale. V. SLAISTER, v., and KYTE, the belly.

SLAISTERS, s. A slovenly person, q. one who bedaubes himself, Roxb.

SLAISTERY, SLAISTRY, SLESTRY, adj. 1. Applied to what is wet, unctuous, or defiling; as, "That's slaistry wark ye're at," S.

2. The weather is said to be slaistry, when one is exposed to a good deal of rain, or has one's dress soiled by the miriness of the roads, S.

- SLAISTERY, SLESTRY, s. 1. Dirty work, S.
2. The offals of a kitchen, including the mixed refuse of solids and fluids, S.

"'O! we're just used to it,' said Mrs. MacClarty, 'and we never mind it. We cou'dna be fash'd to gang sae far wi' a' the slaistery.'" Glenburnie, p. 149.

SLAIT, pret. Slitted, cut.

Duke Hannibal, as mony authors wrait,—
Brak down his walls, and heist mountains slait.
Vertue and Vyce, Evergreen, i. 45.

To SLAIT, v. a. 1. Literally, to level.

Su.-G. slact-a, slaett-a, laevigare, to level, Seren. from slact, planus, aequus; Belg. slecht-en, id.

2. Metaph. to depreciate. A slaitin tongue, a tongue that depreciates others, W. Loth.
3. Expl. "to abuse in the worst manner."

"It is much to be lamented, that people professing his name, should be so slaited and enslaved by transgression as many are." Guthrie's Trial, p. 143, 144.

4. It seems used, in an oblique sense, as signifying to wipe.

Now he has drawn his trusty brand,
And slaited on the strae;
And thro' Gill Morice's fair body
He's gart cauld iron gae.

Russon's S. Songs, ii. 163.

In Pink. Select Ball. i. 40, it is slaided: He expl. slaid, "to move speedily."

I suspect that this, as used in the passage quoted, should rather be rendered, to whet. He slaited his sword on the strae, i.e., he drew it once and again across the straw, with the intention of giving it a keen edge, before using; from Su.-G. slact-a, to smooth, to remove inequalities. Slite is used in this sense in Lanarks. and also in Loth.

SLAIT, s. The track of cattle among standing corn, Ettr. For.

This might seem to indicate a common source with E. slot, "the track of a deer." But the E. word more nearly resembles Isl. slod, the track of wild beasts in snow, vestigia ferarum in nive, (Seren.); whereas our slait has greater likeness to A.-S. slacting, id. V. SLEUTH-HUND.

SLAIT, adj. Slovenly and dirty, Roxb.

Su.-G. slact, rudis, inartificiosus; Teut. slodde, sordida et inculta mulier; Kilian.

SLAITIT, part. pa. Exhausted or worn out with fatigue.

Therefore had bound thoct scho be found,
Or dreid thy dogs be slaitit.

Balnevis, Evergreen, ii. 201.

In allusion to hunting; perhaps from Teut. slcte, tritus, slct-en, terere, atterere. Mocs.-G. ga-sleith-an, to lose. Slate, however, is expl. by Sibb., "to set loose (spoken of hounds);" and it is undoubtedly used in this sense. V. SLATE, v.

SLAK, SLACK, SLAKE, s. 1. An opening in the higher part of the same hill or mountain, where it becomes less steep, and forms a sort of pass, S.

This in sense resembles glack, S. and Gael., to which Mr. Macpherson refers. But it conveys a different idea; as the latter more properly signifies a dell or larger opening between distinct mountains. Nor is slayre exactly synon. It denotes a hollow that is not so deep as the slack.

He tuk with him a gud mengue,
On hors ane hundre thair mycht be;
And to the bill thair tuk thair way;
And in a slak thaim enbuschyt thair.

Barbour, xiv. 536, MS.

Himself asendis the hie band of the hill,
By wentis strate, and passage scharp and wil.—
Tharfor ane prattik of were deuyse wyl I,
And ly at wate in quyet embuschment
At athir pethis hele or secret went,
In the how slake be younder woddis syde
Full dern I sall my men of armes hyde.

Doug. Virgil, 382, 10.

Red Ringan spel, and the spearmen led,
Up Goranberry slack.

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 366.

2. A gap or narrow pass between two hills or mountains. "Slack, a valley or small shallow dell;" A. Bor.

Sir J. Sinclair defines it, "a narrow pass between two hills;" Observ., p. 193.

Fra slak til hyll, oure holme and hycht,
He trawalyd all day.

Wyntown, vi. 16, 17.

Here it seems to denote an opening between distinct hills, or as rendered, Gl. Wynt., "a deep narrow valley."

Thus it is used by Doug. as synon. with vail, i.e., vale.

Not fer from thens Rome cieté ekit he,
Quhar by ane new inuention wounder sle,
Sittand into ane holl vail or slak,
Within the listis for the triumphe mak,
War Sabyne virginis reuist by Romanis.

Doug. Virgil, 266. 8.

In a slake thou shal be slayne.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 23.

3. The slack of the hass, the narrowest part of the throat; a metaph. borrowed from a hill, Loth.

4. A morass, Liddisdale.

"Between the farm-house and the hill pasture was a deep morass, termed in that country a slack." Guy Mannering, ii. 49.

Rudd. certainly refers with propriety to Belg. slack, laxus, remissus. For the term seems properly to signify that the ground slackens in its steepness. Su.-G. slak, id. is usual metaph. to denote the hollow of the side, or that part in animals which intervenes between the ribs and loins. This is called slakidan, q. the slak of the side, in the same manner in which we speak of the slot of the breast, S.

[SLAKE, s. and v. V. SLAIK.]

SLAKE, s. Expl. a "blow on the chops."

"I'll give you a gob slake," S. Prov., Kelly, p. 396.
A.-S. slaege, Su.-G. Belg. slag, Germ. schlay, ictus, a stroke; from slaege-an, slaa, &c., ferire, percutere.

SLAKE, SLAIK, SLEEGH, SLOKE, s. 1. The oozy vegetable substance in the bed of rivers, S.B. pron. q. slauk.

"This ware is of three kinds, obtained at different seasons. The first is the green slake, which grows in the river, is washed down by the summer floods, and is brought ashore at the harbour-mouth." P. Nigg, Aberd. Statist. Acc., vii. 201.

"Some trials of sleech [for manure] from the shore have been made, but it did not seem to answer." P. Dornock, Sutherland, Ibid. ii. 19.

2. A kind of reddish sea-weed, S.B.; Navel laver, Ulva umbilicalis, Linn. In some places the term slake is also applied to the Ulva compressa, and Conferva bullosa. The latter abounds in all stagnate ponds.

"Ulva umbilicalis, Navel Laver, Anglis. Sloke or Slake, Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 967.

"Scot. Bor. call a kind of sea-weed, very soft and slippery, slake, which they also eat;" Rudd. vo. Slike. This, I am informed, when boiled, forming a jelly, is eaten by some of the poor people in Angus, on bread, instead of butter.

Green Sloke, Ulva lactuca, Linn. "Lettuce-Laver, or Oyster-Green, Anglis. Green Sloke, Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 970.

Rudd. views this as derived from slike, slime. But it seems rather denominated from Su.-G. slak, &c. laxus, remissus, because of its being soft and flaccid to the touch or taste. V. SLAUKIE. It may be added that Fucus vesiculosus is in some parts of Sweden called slake; Linn. Fl. Suec. N. 1145.

To SLALK, v. n. To slack or slacken, metri causa.

On othir thing he maid his witt to walk,
Presand gif he mycht off that languor slalk.
Wallace, v. 656, MS.

SLAM, SLAMMACH, s. A share, or the possession, of any thing, implying the idea of some degree of violence or trick in the acquisition, S.B. It is often applied to food.

Su.-G. slam-a, congerere, coacervare. This word is sometimes used as synonym with slagga, per fas et nefas corrudere, Ihre. Slem also denotes cunning, dishonest gain; Teut. sluy-men, furtim, clanculum, et tecte propere; slamm-en, comessari, graecari.

To SLAMMACH, v. a. To lay hold of any thing by means not entirely fair or honourable, S.B.

[SLAMBER, SLAMBERY, adj. Slim, slender, Shetl. Dan. and Sw. slem, bad, evil, &c., Isl. slæmr, vile, bad.]

To SLAMMACH, SLAMACH, v. n. To slabber, S.B. synonym. slash.

For gin ye're but ae day anissing,
And nae ay slamaching and kissing,
Your conduct's deem'd sae wondrous fau'ty,
It's ten to aye ye're nae their dawty.

Shirref's Poems, p. 333.

Su.-G. slem, slime, slennig, slimy; suggesting the same dirty idea with E. slubber and slabby.

SLANMACH, SLAWMACH, (gutt.) s. A large quantity of soft food, swallowed hastily and in a slovenly manner, Mearns. V. SLAMMACH, v.

SLAMMACHIS, s. pl. The gossamer, Aberd.

Prob., from Ir. and Gael. slamhagan, locks of wool or hair, which the fine threads of the gossamer may be supposed to resemble.

SLAMMIKIN, s. A drab, a slovenly woman, Loth. Slamkin, id., Grose's Class. Dict.

Su.-G. slem, turpis, obscenus; slem, eluvies, faex, Germ. schlam, schlem, id.

SLAMP, adj. Pliant, flexible, supple, Moray.

"The elf-bull is small—short in the legs; long, round, and slamp in the body, like a wild animal." Northern Antiq., p. 405.

Germ. schlumpich signifies loose, and Dan. slamp, negligent. But neither seems allied. Perhaps from Su.-G. slapp, laxus, remissus, with the insertion of m.

SLANE IN THE SELF. Carrying in it the proof of its own invalidity.

"Gif ony tenent clamis a sett of landis to joise peiceablie for certane termis, of Lord or Lady, and thay termis be run and fulfillit, and he alledgis na impediment within the saidis termis maid, it is slane in the self; for quhy, gif ony lauchfull distribulance had bene maid to the tenent within his termis, the tenent aucht—to have tane lauchfull witnessis, and to have kend the partic befor aye judge—within fortie dayis efter that he was distribulat, and then tane ane instrument and uther sufficient witnessis; that beand done, that he might protest to re-enter to his tak of new agane; for his naikit say is not aneuch in that matter." Balfour's Pract., p. 208.

Prob., formed in resemblance of the Lat. one, Flo de se; q. "the very complaint destroys itself."

SLANG, s. "A species of cannon coinciding with the culverine, as the name does, which signifies a serpent. Half-slangis, a smaller species;" Gl. Compl.

"Mak redde your cannons,—slangis, and half slangis, quartar slangis," &c. Compl. S., p. 64.
Teut. slanghe, serpens, anguis, coluber: Bombarda longior, vulgo serpentina; Kilian.

To SLANGER, v. n. To linger, Berwicks.

Teut. slingh-en, slingher-en, serpere; Su.-G. slingr-a, repere (Seren. vo. Slender); q. to creep in action or motion.

SLANK, adj. Thin, lank, Fife.

Isl. slak-r, remissus, whence slækia, longurio; slani, longurio imbecillis. Junius, however, vo. Lank, E. gives Belg. slanck as synonym with lank; and Su.-G. slankig signifies laxus, remissus, which Ihre deduces from slinka, vacillare, pendulum esse.

[SLANYS, s. Same with Slaines, q. v.]

SLAP, s. 1. "A gap or narrow pass between two hills," Shirr. Gl. S. B. V. SLAK.

Look up to Pentland's towring tap,
Buried beneath great wreaths of snaw,
O'er ilka clengh, ilk scar and slap,
As high as ony Roman wa'.

Herd's Coll., ii. 227.

"Slap, a gap in a fence: Milking-slap, the place where cows are milked;" Gall. Enc.

"The water of Lync hath its spring near the Cald-stane slap, at the foot of Easter Cairnhiill, and runneth large ten miles through the parishes of Lintoun, Newlands, and Lyne." Pennecuik's Descr. Tweed., Ed. 1815, p. 141.

"Cauldstane slap, or rather slack, is a much frequented pass, through which the periodical droves of black cattle are transported into England." Coupan. to Armstrong's Map of Tweeddale, p. 58.

In this use of the term, we may perceive an analogy to that of Slak, synon. For Su.-G. slapp, like slak, signifies remissus.

2. A breach in a wall, a gap in a hedge or fence; a slap in a dike, S.

"The use the fishers made of the last-mentioned dike,—was for the men to pass up and down at hauling up their cobbles, and felling their shots; and when a slap broke out in it, it was mended by the fishers." State, Leslie of Powis, &c., 1805, p. 120.

Not from Teut. slap, victus, fluidus, withered, decayed; but Su.-G. slapp, which is not only rendered remissus, but vacuus. Now what is a slap, but a vacancy? It may be from this source that Belg. slop, is used to denote an alley. V. SLOR, s. 1.

To SLAP, v. a. To break into gaps, S.

"Before the erection of the dyke last mentioned, there was the remains of an old dyke, or bulwark, much slapped and broken, that lay from Seaton's grounds,—where the new dyke was built." State, Fraser of Fraserfield, 1805, p. 216.

To SLAP, v. a. To separate grain that is thrashed, from the broken straw and coarser chaff, by means of a riddle, before it be winnowed, S. B.

Su.-G. slapp-a, to permit any person or thing to escape; Teut. slapp-en, laxare.

SLAP, s. A riddle for separating grain from the broken straw, &c. V. the v.

[SLAP, s. A large portion, quantity, amount, or share, Clydes.; intens. of slip, a small piece or portion; Isl. slappa, to slip.]

[To SLAP, v. a. To exceed, excel, beat; as, "Weel, that slaps a'!" ibid.]

SLAPPER, s. Any large object; as a big salmon, Roxb.

SLAPPIN, adj. A slappin chiel, a tall fellow; synon. with Strapping, Roxb.

[SLARG, s. and v. Same with Slairst, q. v.]

SLARGIE, adj. Unctuous. V. under SLAIRT.

SLASH, s. [1. A large splash or quantity of anything soft, sticky, or dirty; as, a slash o' glaur, Clydes.]

2. A great quantity of broth, or any other sorbillaceous food, Loth., Clydes.

[3. A sloven, a slattern, Clydes. V. SLATCH.]

To SLASH, v. n. To work in what is wet, or flaccid; Slashin' awa', working in this manner, Lanarks. V. SLASHY.

SLASHY, adj. Applied to work that is both wet and dirty, S. [Used also as a s., and applied to a slatternly female, Clydes.]

Sw. slask, wet; slask i rum som skuras, wet and filth in rooms that are scouring; slask waeder, wet weather, dirty weather; slaska i watter, to dabble in water; Wideg.

To SLASH, v. n. A low word used to denote a fond and slubbing mode of kissing; sometimes conjoined with the E. word, To slash and kiss, S. synon. slammach.

Isl. slafs-a, allambo, alligurio; apparently from slafa, saliva; G. Andr., p. 217.

To SLATCH, v. n. 1. To dabble among mire, Ettr. For.; a variety of Slash.

2. To move heavily, as in a deep road. Hence the phrase, a slatchin day, i.e., a day when one has to drag the legs through mire; ibid.

This seems originally the same with SCLATCH, v. n. It is evidently allied to Su.-G. slask, humor quicunque, sordidus; slask-a, humorem sordidum effundere. Thet slaskur, imbres cadunt; Ihre. Wideg. renders slask-a to dash with water; slaska i watter, to dabble in water; slaskigt waeder, rainy weather. Isl. slautl-a, Dan. slask-e, squalide grassare.

SLATCH, SLATCH, SLODGE, s. A sloven, a slattern, Ettr. For.

Slatch seems to have more certain marks of affinity to Teut. slatse, mulier ignava; Isl. slot-a, remittere, demittere. Sloett-r is expl., Corpus rude, magnae molis.

SLATE, s. A person who is slovenly and dirty, Loth. Border; slaid, Clydes, id.

"Had aff," quoth she, "ye filthy slate."

Ramsay's Poems, l. 262.

I wadna spare his rumple banes;

For either him or me sud hae't:

The blether-lipped drunken slate!

Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 74.

V. SLAIT, adj.

Isl. O. Su.-G. sladde, vir habitu et moribus incorus; Seren. vo. Slattern, which is evidently from the same source.

To SLATE, v. a. To let loose; a term used concerning dogs in hunting.

Speaking of Acteon, transformed by Diana into a hart, the poet says;

I saw alace! his houndis at him slatit.

Palace of Honour, l. 22.

"To slate the dog at any one;" A. Bor. Gl. Grose.

V. SLOTH-HOUND.

I know not if this has any connection with Isl. slaed-a, incertus vagari; slaed-a upp, investigare.

SLATE-BAND, s. Schistus, Gall., Clydes.

"Under this name he includes the proper schistus, the schiefer of the Germans, called by English miners shiver, and in Galloway slate-band." Agr. Surv. Gall., p. 20, 21. The Scottish form would be Sclute-ban.

[SLAUGHTIR, SLAUGHTRE, s. Slaughter, Barbour, xix. 567.]

SLAUGHT BOME. A bar used in fortification.

"The first night we quartered at Rottenburg,—accessible onely by one narrow causay which leads through the marsh to the castell, which is well fenced on both sides with moates, drawbridges, and slaught bomes without all." Monro's Exped., p. 7.

Belg. slagboom, a bar, a winding-post.

SLAUKIE, adj. 1. Loose, flaccid, flabby, unctuous; a term used as descriptive of soft flesh, such as young veal, especially when boiled, S. B., from the same origin with SLAKE, q. v.

2. Slimy, covered with slake, S.
3. Slow, inactive; applied both to speech and motion. One, who speaks in a slow and drawling manner, is said to be slaukie-spoken, Ang.

In sense 3, it is probably allied to Isl. slaeki, tuemina piger, slaekia, longurio, slackin, deses, piger, slaekni, desidia, slack-ia, promissis vestibus tardi incedere; Halderson. C. B. yslac, slack, loose, and yslac-ia, to loosen, acknowledge a common source.

SLAUPIE, adj. Indolent and slovenly, S. B. A slaupie queyn, a slow dirty woman.

Teut. slap, latus, remissus, languidus; Belg. slap, slow; Ben slappe rrow, a slow woman; Teut. slappe, a woman who creeps along in her pace or work; slapheyd, laxitas, et ignavia; Kilian. Su.-G. slapp-a, to creep on the ground, to do anything with great difficulty, to trail; Eiertelen slappar, the gown sweeps the ground; slapp, trouble; slapp-a, to relax, slapp remiss; Isl. slappa, vestis promissa et laxa; slappe, traho, tractito laxo tractu, G. Andr. Teut. slapf, adj. lentus; a homo sordido cultu, ignavus. Germ. schlaf, torpor; schlaf-en, torpere, must be viewed as radically allied; as Franc. slaf is rendered both remissio and ignavia, slap-en, torpeant, Gl. Pez. and Alem. slaffii, desidia, Gl. Keron. We may add Ir. slapog, a slut or dirty woman.

C. B. yslabi, a maulkin, a slattern; yslebaug, gawky, also a slattern.

SLAVERMAGULLION, s. A contemptuous term for a foolish lubberly fellow, Ayrs.

Perhaps from E. slaver, or S. slabber, and Gullion, q. v.

SLAW, adj. Slow, S. B.

Quhairfore than suld we be at sik a stryfe
So spedelie our selfis for to withdraw
Even from the tyme, quhilk is no wayis slaw
To fle from us, suppois we fled it nocht?

K. James VI. Chron., S. P., iii. 489.
"Slaw at meat, slaw at work;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 62.

O. E. "slawce in meunyng [moving]. Tardus. Piger. Torpidus." Prompt. Parv.

SLAWLIE, adv. Slowly, Clydes.

SLAWNES, Slowness, ibid.

SLAWK, s. "A slimy plant, which grows in burns and springs;" Gall. Encycl. V. SLAKE.

SLAWMIN, s. Slabbering, Aberd.

Now Zephyr slee blaws frae the south,
Wi' gales smooth as a butter ba';
But wow! he has a dreadsu' drouth,
Whilk slawmin canna put awa'.

Taylor's S. Poems, p. 99.

Teut. slenn-en, grecari, pergrecari, Su.-G. slenn-a, id. Isl. slacmi, the computation on the morning after a wedding, G. Andr.

VOL. IV.

* To SLAY, v. a. To pulverize too much by harrowing, and thus to render ground unfit for vegetation; Upp. Lanarks.

If not a peculiar use of Teut. sla-en, percutere, q. to beat down, allied perhaps to Isl. slif-ga, herbetare; Su.-G. Dan. slav-er, "to blunt or dull a thing;" Su.-G. slöe, dull. The latter is used concerning grain that is unproductive; slöe soed, frumentum cui parum bonae frugis inest.

[SLAYD, pret. Slid, passed swiftly, Barbour, iii. 701.]

[SLAYNES, SLANYS, SLAYANS, s. V. SLAINES.]

SLAYWORM, s. The slow-worm, or blind-worm, Galloway.

Tho' slayworms and adders be coiled by thy rills,
The brooks of the Minnock, and the inks of the Cree,
Will still in remembrance be hallowed by me.
Ayr and Wigton Courier, 22d Mar. 1821.

A.-S. slaw-wyrm, id. It seems to have its name from slaw, tardus, piger, because of the slowness of its motion; although the occasional orthography is slöe-worm. Fris. slöeuw is slow; Teut. slöe, blunt, stupid.

SLE, SLEE, SLEY, adj. 1. Sly, crafty, S. slee.

Among all vtheris samin thidder spedis
That schrew prouokare of all wikkit dedis
Eolus neuo, cursit Vlyxes sle.

Doug. Virgil, 182, 34.

But little did her minny ken
What thir slee twa together were saying.
Gaberlunzie Man, Herd's Coll., ii. 49.

Auld birkies, innocently slee,
Wi' cap and stoup,
Were een as blithe as blithe could be,
A' fit to loup.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 38.

V. SLE.

2. Skilful, dexterous, expert.

And fele, that now of wer ar sley,
In till the lang trew[is] sall dey.

Barbour, xix. 179, MS.

In Edit. Pink. sley.

Off that labour as than he was nocht sle.
Wallace, i. 375, MS.

Of Crete as to hir kynrent borne was sche,
And in the craft of weuing wonder sle.

Doug. Virgil, 137, 12.

3. Ingenious; applied to mental exertions.

Weil at ane blenk sle poetry not tane is.
Doug. Virgil, 5, 2.

Sle is also used subst. like fire, bright, &c.
On the fyllat full sternly straik that sle,
Persyt the bak, in the bowalys him bar.

Wallace, x. 352, MS.

Su.-G. slorg, Isl. slaeg-r, id. Wachter derives Germ. verschlag-en, callidus, from schlag-en, literally to turn, metaph. to turn in one's mind, versare animo, ver prefixed denoting pravity. He gives it as synon. with Isl. slaeg-ur.

[SLEAR, SLEAST, adj. Comp. and super. of sle, Barbour, xvii. 244, 435.]

SLEELIE, SLELY, adv. Slily, S.

SLEENESS, s. Slyness, S.

M 2

[SLEB, s. The underlip when projected; to set the sleb, to pout as when sulky, Shetl.]

SLED, A-SLED, adv. Aslant, Ettr. For.

This is obviously the same with O. E., "Sleet or aslete. Oblique, adverbium." Prompt. Parv. As Seren. deduces Aslant and Sw. Slant, id. from slint-a, to slide (lapsare), it is highly probable that sled is from A.-S. aslid-an, labi, aslad, labat. Su.-G. sluet, however, signifies politus, smooth; suggesting an idea nearly allied to that of slippery. V. SLYPE.

SLED-SADDLE, s. That which is borne by a horse yoked in a cart, S. from sled, synon. with sledge.

SLEDDER, s. One who drives goods on a sled, or carriage without wheels.

"Haveing agriet with maissons, quarriouris, and sledderis, hes now compleit mor nor the half of the said building.—Sir Vmphra—hes stopped the cairteris from leiding, and the maissons from hewing," &c. Acta Cha. II., Ed. 1814, VI. 482.

Sledderis is equivalent to cairteris, i.e., carters.

SLEDERIE, adj. Slippery. V. SLIDDERY.

To SLEE, v. a. 1. To slip; to slee the head, to slip the head out of the noose which confines cattle in the stall, Lanarks.

2. To escape from a task, ibid.

Su.-G. slaa, to slip.

3. To slee awa, to carry off anything in a crafty way; as, "What's come o' the buke I gae you?" "Tam has sleed it awa frae me;" Banffs. V. SLY, v.

SLEEBAND, s. A band of iron which goes round the beam of a plough, for the purpose of strengthening it at the place where the coulter is inserted, Lanarks.

"Sleeband, the ancient muzzle of the plough;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

The first syllable seems the same with Dan. slaa, a bolt, Isl. slaa, sublica, seu assula teres; Su.-G. slaa, lamina ferrea aut lignea, quae vel rhedis suppingitur, vel aliis instrumentis ligneis in firmamentum subditur, Ihre. The use of bund, in addition, indicates that the slee was used for strengthening.

To SLEECH, v. n. To coax, to cajole.

The silly frier behuift to sleech

For almous that he askis.

Hay Trix, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 193.

Germ. schleich-en, reptare, sese insinuare. This Ihre with good reason views as allied to Su.-G. stek-a, slek-a, lambere; Isl. stek-ia, whence stek, homo blandus, qui suis blanditiis alios captat, S. "a sleekit fallow," also slekiare, parasitus, q. a plate-licker; for the E. v. to lick, and Su.-G. slek-a, have a common fountain. Dan. sleek-er, to wheedle, to cajole; slede-ber, a wheedler. V. SLEEKIT.

SLEECH, s. Slime, S. V. SLIK.

SLEEK, s. Snow and rain mixed, sleet, Fife.

This nearly resembles Sax. slakke, Belg. slegge, Su.-G. slagg, id. The root may perhaps be Su.-G. slak, flaccid, remiss, loose, q. denoting that state of the air when it is neither properly frost nor thaw. By looking into Wachter, I find this idea confirmed. For Germ. schlack wetter is defined, Tempestas remissa, et in pluviam soluta.

SLEEKIE, adj. Of or belonging to sleet; as, a sleeky day, a day in which there falls a considerable quantity of rain mixed with snow, Fife.

SLEEK, SLIECK, s. A measure of fruits, or roots, &c., containing forty pounds; as, a sleek of apples, onions, &c., S.

"Customs of the Burgh of Rutherglen. Each load of fruit, 4d. Each sleek of fruit, 3d." Ure's Hist. Rutherglen, p. 45.

SLEEK, s. Mire, slime, miry clay in the bed of a river, or on the sea-shore, S. V. SLIK.

To SLEEK, v. a. [1. To smooth, smooth out, stretch; as, "Noo, sleek the stimpert," i.e., smooth or level the grain in the measure; to sleek the skins, to smooth and stretch them out with the sleeker, Clydes.

2. To lay out carefully, to slip neatly under cover, ibid.]

A' tramp their feckfu' jerkin fu',
To sleek aneath the bowster.

Tarras's Poems, p. 74.

"The bannocks are equally divided at parting, when they place part of them beneath the pillow to dream on." N. Ibid.

[To SLEEK, v. n. To walk or work in a sly, wheedling manner, Banffs.]

SLEEK, s. In measuring grain, a term synon. with strait, q.v., S.

This is probably a word left on the Border by the Danes; slick-er, slikk-er, Su.-G. slick-a, slek-a, Isl. sleik-ia, lambere, to lick. As all the other dialects leave out the Gothic s, and slick-a and E. lick are thus radically the same; perhaps the lick of good will, claimed as a perquisite at milns, has some affinity to sleek.

[SLEEKER, s. An instrument for sleeking, i.e., smoothing and stretching the skins in leather-making, Clydes.]

SLEEKIE, adj. [Smooth and sly]; fawning and deceitful, S.; Sleekit, synon.

"Sleeky Tam possesses both his own and his neighbour's farm at this day." Perils of Man, ii. 314.

And gane he has with the sleeky auld carle,

Around the hill sae steep;

Until they came to the auld castle

Which hings owre Dee sae deep.

Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 187.

[SLEEKIE, s. A person of sly, fawning disposition, Clydes., Banffs.]

SLEEKIT, SLEKIT, adj. 1. Smooth and shining, as applied to the face or skin, S.; sleek, E.

2. Smooth and sly; parasitical in manner and design; flattering, deceitful, S.

Now him withhaldis the Phinitiane Dido,
And culyeis him with slekit wordis sle.
Doug. Virgil, 34, 22.

Apon Ancaneus feil wounder was,
The schining vissage of the god Cupide,
And his dissimillit slekit wourdes quhyte.
Ibid., 35, 43.

Slicked is the same word, with a different orthography.

"A slicked tongue and a slacke hand keepe other companie." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 952.

Either from Su.-G. slik-a, repere, q. to creep into one's good graces, or slek-a, lambers, Gerin. schleichen, to insinuate one's self.

Su.-G. sleker, homo blandus, qui suis blanditiis alios captat; Isl. slikiare, parasitus. Ihre seems uncertain whether to derive these terms from sleka, lambers, or slika, repere. The last is most probable, if we regard analogy. For Teut. sleyck-en signifies repere, reapture, serpere humi; to creep on the ground. Hence sleyker, a fox.

SLEEKIT-GABBIT, adj. Smooth-tongued, S.

And syne some sleekit-gabbit wife
Declares, she never liket strife,
For she was ay for a quiet life.

The Harst Rig, st. iii.

[SLEEKIT-LIKE, adj. Sly, cunning: used also as an adv., Clydes., Banffs.]

SLEEKITLY, adv. Artfully, in a cajoling manner, S.

"When they saw that apen force wad do nae guid, St. Patrick advised tae come about them sleeketty."
Saint Patrick, i. 76.

SLEEKITNESS, s. Wheedling, fair appearance, S.

To SLEENGE, v. n. The same with Slounge, v. Upp. Lanarks.

Isl. slenia, socordia, ignavum otium; slena-a, ignavo otio frui.

SLENGER, s. A lounge, ibid.

SLEENIE, s. [A misprint in Currie's ed. of Burns, ii. 154, for Steinies, q. v.]

• To SLEEP, v. n. A top is said to sleep, when it spins so smoothly as to appear motionless, Roxb.

SLEEP-DRINK, s. A soporific potion.

"That sleep-drink of this Antichristian intoxicating toleration was then brewed in hell." Society Contendings, p. 308.

SLEEPER, s. The Dunlin, a bird, Shetl.

"Tringa Alpina, (Lin. Syst.) Sleeper, Dunlin.—This bird frequents the more rocky shores, and is seen to be very busy feeding when the water begins to fall. On other occasions it appears dull and heavy." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 239.

SLEEPERY, adj. Sleepy. V. SLIPPERY.

SLEEPIES, s. pl. Field Brome grass, S. Bromus secalinus, Linn. It is also called Goose-corn, S.

It is asserted, that meal, among which a considerable quantity of this weed is mixed, has a soporific influence, and sometimes produces a temporary delirium. For the same reason, it receives similar designations in other languages. In Su.-G. it is denominated swindel or swingel, from swindel, vertigo, because, according to Ihre, "the vulgar believe that bread made of this spurious grain intoxicates, or rather produces a vertigo." Dan. swingel, from swingel, giddiness; Belg. droncaerd; Fr. ivroye, from ivre, inebriated.

[SLEEPY-DOSE, s. Ragwort, (Senecis Jacobaea, Linn.) a plant, Banffs.]

SLEEPY-MAGGY, s. A sort of rude humming-top, Aberd.

• SLEEPERS, s. pl. The beams, resting on the ground, which support the first floor of a house, S. [Norweg. sleep, a smooth piece of wood.]

"When the floor is entirely of wood, the space between the sleepers upon which the boards are laid, should be entirely filled with washed gravel well beat down, an operation, which, when properly done, will effectually prevent the entrance of either rats or mice." Agr. Surv. E. Loth., p. 40.

SLEETCH, s. A kind of fat mud, taken from shores to manure land; Gall. Enc. V. SLAKE, SLIK, and SLETC.

SLEETII, s. A sloven, a sluggard, Aberd.

O Jove! the cause we here do plead,
An' unco great's the stak;
But sall that sleeth Vlysses now
Be said to be my maik?

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 1.

"Be mute," says Watt, 'ye men-eless tyke,
I canna thole to hear ye:'"
"Ye sanna hinder me to speak,
Ye sleeth, I dinna fear ye."

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 135.

Sleeth, evidently the same word, is defined, perhaps not quite accurately, "an aukward fellow, an idiot;" Gl. Tarras.

Isl. slidr, hebes, slidra, torpor; sleita, torpor animi. From A.-S. slaeceth, sloth, Su.-G. slä, slow. It might, however, be deduced from Su.-G. slaet, mean, sorry, vile.

To SLEIF, v. n. To slip or glide.

Ye did greit mis, fayr Conscience, be your leif,
Gif that ye war of kyn and blude to me,
That sleuthfullie suld lat your tyme our sleif,
And come thus lait.

King Hart, ii. 24.

Alem. slaf-an, to glide; or Su.-G. slæpa, to drag on the ground, Germ. schleiff-en, id.

[SLEIFE, s. A sleeve, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 4560.]

SLEITCHOCK, s. A flattering woman, Perth. Gael. slaodag, I am informed, is synon. V. SLEECH, r.

SLEKIT, adj. Deceitful. V. SLEEKIT.

SLENK, s. A piece of low craft, synon. with E. sleight.

He attel'd with a slenk haf slayn him in slight;
The swent swapp'd on his swange, and on the mayle slik.

Sir Gawen and Sir Gal., ii. 22.

Teut. slincke, sinistrè, obliq; Germ. schlank, flexuosus, mobilis, schlaenke, obliquitates, allegorice doli, fallacie, pravitates; Wachter, vo. Schlingen, p. 1433. Perhaps Isl. slungin, crafty, is allied.

[To SLEPE, v. n. To sleep: pret. slepit, Barbour, vii. 188; part. pr. slepan, ibid. V. 83.]

[SLEPE, s. Sleep; on slepe, asleep, ibid., vii. 192.]

SLEPERYE, adj. Sleepy, causing sleep, Doug. Virg., 117, 6. V. SLIPPERY.

To SLERG, v. a. "To bedaub or plaister," Loth. V. SLAIRY.

"Come, fa' to wark as I ha'e done,
And eat the ither half as soon,
Ye've save ye'r part." "Content," quoth Rab,
And slery'd the rest o't in his gab.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 532.

To SLERK, v. a. To lick up greedily and with noise, Dumfr.

This is evidently allied to Dan. slurk-er, to sip, to sup up, to swallow; and originally the same with Slerg, v., although the latter is expl. "to bedaub."

SLERP, s. A slovenly female, Fife.

Su.-G. slarf, homo nanci, proprie pannis obsitus; slurfwig, incuriosus, sordidus, slurfw-a, negligenter negotium aliquod perficere.

[To SLESTIR, v. n. To work in a dirty, puddling manner; to bespatter with filth, to befoul, Clydes., Shetl. Dan. slaste, to dabble, paddle.]

[SLESTIR, s. 1. Wet, dirty work; work slovenly done, Clydes.

2. A slovenly, untidy worker, ibid.]

[SLESTERIN, SLESTRY, adj. Wet and dirty; untidy, careless as to personal appearance, ibid., Shetl. Dan. slustevorn, slovenly.]

SLETCHE, SLEECH, s. Slime, as in the beds of rivers, or on the sea-shore, S.

"What number of acres may this plough manage, and after what manner; sea-sleche, clay and lime, being within a mile and a quarter of it?" Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 43, 44.

"They chuse to have mud with the sand, and this they call sleche." Ibid., p. 125. V. SLICK, s.

2. "One not good looking;" ibid.

Dan. slug, a glutton, slughals, id.; or Su.-G. slug, Isl. slaegr, callidus, vafer.

[SLEUMIN, s. A hint, rumour, report, Banffs. V. SLOOM.]

[SLEUTCHER, s. A lounger, a lazy fellow, Lyndsay, Thrie Estaitis, l. 2615.]

SLEUTH, s. Sloth; A.-S. sleoth.

Than na delay of sleuth, nor fere, nor boist,
Withheld Turnus.

Doug. Virgil, 326, 31.

*SLEUTH, SLUETH, adj. Slothful.

Quhen pleisit God, so send yow Scottis,
The same to further, at deith he was not sleuth.

Diall. Honour, Gude Fame, &c., p. 3.

Syne in their office be not sleuth.

Spec. Gotly Sangs, p. 11.

Mr. Tooke seems justly to view E. sloth as the third pers. sing. of A.-S. slaw-ian, q. that which sloweth, or maketh one slow. Divers. Purley, ii. 414.

To SLEUTH, SLOTH, v. a. and n. 1. To neglect; or, to do work carelessly and insufficiently, S.B. sloth.

Fra tyme be past, to call it bakwart syne
Is bot in vaine: therefor men sould be warr
To sleuth the tyme that flees fra them so farr.

K. James VI. Chron., S. P., iii. 438, 439.

"But seeing all was sleuthed, there was no mischief could befall our king, but was delivered unto us." Pitcottie, p. 61.

"What shall we do then! Sloth our callings, &c.? No, neither will we bid you do that, therefore do not reproach us. I do not bid you cast away your callings, nor sloth them neither." Michael Bruce's Lectures, &c., p. 13.

2. To linger, to delay.

And many wayis himself he accusit,
That he sa lang had sleuthit and refusit
To resait glaidlie the Troiane Ence.

Doug. Virgil, 330, 11.

O. E. "Sluthyn or sluggyn. Torpeo. Terpesco. [r. Torpesco.] Prompt. Parv.

This might seem allied to Moe.-G. af-slauthn-an, obstupescere; for, as Junius remarks, men, who are astonished at any thing, generally continue for some time motionless, as if reduced to a state of torpor by sloth, Gl. Goth.

SLEUTHAN, SLEUTHUN, s. A lazy good-for-nothing person, Clydes.; viewed as a corr. of Sleuth-hund, q. a slow hound; synon. Slughan, Roxb.

[SLEUTHFUL, adj. Slothful, lazy, Lyndsay, The Dreame, l. 890.]

SLEUTH, s. The slot or track of man or beast, as known by the scent.

Bot Ik haiff herd oftymys say,
That quha enlang a wattir ay
Wald waid a bow draucht, he sult ger
Bathe the slouth hund, and his leder,
Tyne the sleuth men gret hym ta.

Barbour, vii. 21, MS.

Gret is evidently for gert, made, caused. Flench is the word used in Ed. Pink., by an error of the transcriber. In other editions, it is sent or scent. V. next word.

SLEUTH-HUND, SLEWTH-HUND, SLOUTH-HUND, SLOITH-HUND, SLOTH-BRACHE, SLOUGH-DOG, s. A blood-hound, Canis sagax, Linn.

A slouth hund had he thar alua,
Sa gud that wald chang for nathing.
Barbour, vi. 484, MS.

"Na man sould perturbe or slay ane slouth-hound, or men passand with him, to follow thieues, or to take malefactors." Reg. Maj. B. iv. c. 32, s. 1. Also c.
33, s. 1.

Thai maid a priue assemblie
Of weile twa hundir men, and ma,
And slouth-hundis with thaim gan ta.
Barbour, vi. 36, MS.

For slouth hund V. Slouth, s.

—Thair slouth hund the graith gait till him yeld.
Wallace, v. 135, MS.

Bot this slouth brache, quhill [quhill] sekry was and keyne,
On Wallace fute folowit so fellounes fast,
Quhill in thair sicht thai prochit at the last.
Ibid., ver. 96.

In one place, the term slouth is used singly.

The slouth stoppyt, at Fawldoun still scho stude,
No forthir scho wald, fra tyme scho fand the blud.
Ibid., ver. 137.

This has been improperly written slough, and outhound.

"The inhabitants of the marches were obliged to keep such a number of slough dogs, or what we call blood-hounds: for example, 'in those parts beyond the Esk, by the inhabitants there were to be kept above the foot of Sark, 1 dog. Item, by the inhabitants of the insyde of Esk, to Richmond Clugh, to be kept at the Moot, 1 dog. Item, by the inhabitants of the parish of Arthuret, above Richmond Clugh, to be kept at the Barley-head, 1 dog; and so on throughout the border.' Nicolson's Border Laws, p. 127.—Persons who were aggrieved, or had lost any thing, were allowed to pursue the hot trode with hound and horn, with hue and cry, and all other accustomed manner of hot pursuit." Pennant's Tour in Scot., A. 1772, p.
77, 78.

"Lewis, in his History of Great Britain, Lond., 1729, fol. p. 56, says, 'In the south of Scotland, especially in the countries adjoining to England, there is another dog of a marvellous nature, called southounds, (that is south hounds, true hounds) because, when their masters are robbed, if they tell whether it be horse, sheep, or neat, that is stolen from them, immediately they pursue the scent of the thief, following him or them through all sorts of ground, and water, till they find him out and seize him; by the benefit whereof the goods are often recovered again. But now of late' (a mistake) 'they have given this beast the name of slouth-hound, because the people living in sloth and idleness, neither by themselves, or by good herdmen, or by the strength of a house, do preserve their goods from incursions of thieves and robbers, then have they recourse to their dog for the reparation of their sloth.'" Maitland Poems, Note, p. 423.

The idea, that this hound derives its name from sloth, is not much more natural than the other.

According to Sibb., it is from "Teut. slock, canis vorax et rapax; in its primary sense, gula, gorges, vorago, helluo;" Gl. But there is no foundation for this idea. The term, although somewhat disguised by a capricious and variable orthography, is undoubtedly the same with E. slot, "the tract of deer," or, more strictly of a hart. For the treading of a buck, and all other fallow deer, is called the vice; Manwood's Forrest Laws, Fol. 27, b. The identity appears by the use of slouth, by itself, for tract or scent. The origin may be Isl. slod, callis, semita, vestigia; G. Andr.

Via in nive complanata; vestigia ferarum, in nive in- dagatarum; Verel. This learned writer gives diur- sporr as the Sw. synonyme. Jonacus derives slod, tractus, vestigia, from slodt-a, spargere; Gl. Orkney-inga S. Ir. slocht, a tract or impression, has undoubtedly a common origin; as well as Gael. slaodan, id.

We may add, as a synonyme, Lancash. slood, "the path of care [car] wheels;" T. Bobbins.

The only word in A.-S., which seems to have any relation, is slattinge, vestigia ferarum, Lye. But Mr.
Tooke very ingeniously derives E. slot from A.-S. slit- an, findere, q. the mark of a cloven hoof. Divers.
Purley, ii. 147. For the same reason for which a blood-hound is called slouth-hund, S., in Belg. it is denominated spour-hond, Germ. spur hund, from Belg.
spour-en, na-spur-en, to trace out, Germ. nach-spur-en.
Thus spour-hond is literally a tract-hound. V. SPERE.

In the Lat. of Reg. Maj. the term used is Canis trassans, which Du Cange renders, vestigium prosequens, adding: Tracer enim, est perquirere vestigia insistendo: trace, seu trasse, vestigium.

Mr. Pinkerton says: "They were of a Gelder-breed, as Blind Harry hints,

'A slouth hound is of Gelderland,' b. 5."

The passage referred to, I suppose, as the foundation of this assertion, adopted by Sibb., is that in Edit
1648, 1758, &c.

In Gelder-land there was that bratchel bred.

B. v. 25.

But it is otherwise in MS.

In Gyllisland thar was that brachell brede,
Sekry off sent to folow thaim at fiede;
So was scho vryt on Esk and on Ledaill,
Quhill scho gat blude no fleying mycht awaill.

Gilceland, in the North of England, seems to be meant. This appears from the circumstance mentioned in connection, that the hound had been accustomed to the pursuit on Eskdale and Liddale. This seems to be the only proof that our blood-hounds were of a Gelderland breed.

Both Boece and Lesley describe these dogs in their histories. But neither insinuates that they are a foreign breed. Lesley speaks of a shaggy species of dog imported from Germany. He distinguishes this, however, from those which he calls odorisegui. V.

gait, Banffs.]

SLEWIE. 1. As a s., the act of walking with a heavy, swinging gait, ibid.

2. As an adv. with a heavy, swinging gait,
ibid.

[SLEWIEAN, SLEWIEIN. 1. As a s., the same with Slewie, ibid.

2. As an adj. having such a gait, ibid.]

SLEW, pret. Struck; slew fyr, struck fire.

Men harl noucht bot grany; and dintis
That slew fyr, as men slayis on flyntis.

Barbour, xiii. 36, MS.

Fleic, flayis, Edit. Pink.

This is the only passage in which I have observed the pres. ind. used in this sense.

Thai slew the wethir that thai bar,
And slew fyr for to rost their mete;
And askyt the King gif he wald etc.

Ibid. vii. 153, MS.

Strak, Edit. Pink. as in Edit. 1620.

A.-S. slae-an, slē-an, percutere; collidere. But we observe a greater similarity, as to the peculiar phrase, in Teut. vier-sla-en, excudere, sive excutere ignem. "Hence probably S.B. lightning is called Fire-slaughter;" Rudd. in. vo. Sw. slaa eld, to strike fire.

Hewe fire was used as synonym. O.E.

And hewe fire at the flynt foure hundred wynter,
But thou haue towe to take it, with tunder or broches,
All thy labour is loste, and thy longe trauayle;
For may no fyre flame make, fayte it his kinde.

SLEW-FIRE, s. Lightning.

"Fyr-flawcht, lightning; also termed slew-fire."
Leyden's Gl. Compl. S., p. 337.

SLEWIT, part. pa. Having sleeves, q. sleeved.

"Ane lang lows gowne of qubite champit chalmillet [camblet] of silk with twa pasmentis of gold slewit."
Inventories, A. 1578, p. 219.

[SLEWTH-HUND, s. V. SLEUTH-HUND.]

SLEWYT, pret. [Cast, threw, flung.]

The knyght went in, and wald na langar stand;
A rynnand cowl that slewyt our his hed,
Hard to the bawk, and hangyt him to ded.

Wallace, vii. 207, MS.

It is slipped, Edit. 1648, and 1673. V. SLIK.

Slewyt, however, might be viewed as allied to Su.-G. slaa, jacere, jactare, mittere, as signifying, that they cast the cord over his head. The same v. slaa is also used in another sense which has great affinity. Sensum connectendi habet, uti—slaa knut, nodum nectere, (Ihre); to run a knot, as we use to express it.

SLIB, SLIBBIE, adj. Slippery, Loth.

[Dan. slibe, to make smooth, slibrig, slippery.]

[SLIBBER, s. Slipperiness; also, that which makes slippery, as, the wet or mud on a pavement, often called slabber in Clydes.]

SLIBRIKIN, adj. A fondling term; analogous, perhaps, to E. sleek or glossy.

And how do you do, my little wee Nan,
My lamb and slibrikin mouse!

Herd's Coll., ii. 218.

Teut. slibberigh, lubricus.

[SLICHT, SLYCHT, SLIGHT, s. 1. Sleight, guile, craft, trick, Barbour, v. 105, 488; deceit, i. 528.]

[2. Skill, ability, mastery; as, "I hae the slicht o't noo, Clydes. Synon. cast, hilt.]

Isl. slaegd, fraus, dolus; Su.-G. sloeg, artificiosus, sloegd-a, opera fabrilla exercere. [Sw. slög, handy, dexterous.]

SLICHT, SLIGHT, adj. 1. [Light, trivial; little worth], worthless, when applied to character, S.

"Some slight lowns, followers of the Clanchattan, were execute." Spalding's Troubles, i. 5. V. SAD, sense 6.

A metaph. sense of E. slight, corresponding to the use of Su.-G. slact. En slact karl, homo flocci, Ihre; a man of no estimation. Teut. schlecht, planus; metaph. used as signifying, ignobilis, plebeius, vilis, tenuis; [Dan. slæt, Sw. slätt.]

[2. Smooth, unruffled; applied to the sea, and to surfaces in general, Shetl.]

To SLICHT, (gutt.), v. a. [To slight, to esteem of little value, to despise; also, to forsake], to jilt; applied to a man's conduct towards a female whom he has courted, S.

SLICHT, SLYCHT, s. [Slight, the act of slighting, etc., see v. To gie one the slicht; to jilt one, S.

SLICK-WORM, s. A species of worm bred in the oozy bed of rivers, S.

"This brook has a rich muddy bottom, in which there is plenty of slick-worm, a species of food on which the trout particularly delight." P. Kinloch, Perthshire. Statist. Acc., xvii. 469. V. SLIK.

SLID, SLYD, SLIDE, adj. 1. Slippery, glib, S.

"He has a slid grip that has an eel by the tail;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 31.

Sum tyme in hyr hedelace, for to knyt hyr hare.

Ful slid sche slyppys hyr membrs ouer alquhare.

Doug. Virgil, 218, 54.

Slid ice, ice that is glib, S.

2. Mutable, uncertain; as E. slippery, metaph. signifies.

Behald, said scho, and se this warldis gloir,
Maist inconstant, maist slid, and transiour.

Palace of Honour, iii. 78.

The slide inconstant destenie, or chance,
Unequallie dois hing in thair balance.

Ibid., i. 55.

3. Cajoling, smooth, wheedling, S.

Ye have sae saft a voice, and slid a tongue,
You are the darling baith of auld and young.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 66.

"Smooth, cunning;—as, "he's a slid loon," Gl. Sleek, synon.

A.-S. slith, sliddery, Su.-G. slact, laevis, politus.

SLIDDER, adj. 1. Uncertain, unstable, [Lyndsay, Papyngo, l. 352.]

[2. Disinclined, unwilling; hence, slow, lazy.]

This cummis not, as we considler,
That men to travel now ar slidder;
For mony now so bissie ar,
Quhider ye travell neir or far,
Go befor, or hyde behind,
Ye sall thame aye in your gat find.

Maitland Poems, p. 183.

Not "more sly," as Mr. Pinkerton renders it; but either, in the positive, slow, lazy, or used comparatively, in the same sense, from Teut. slæt, mulier ignava, E. a slut, or slodder, sordidus, negligens, slodder-en, flaccessere. For it is evidently opposed to bissie, i.e., active.

- SLIDNESS, s. 1. Slipperiness, glibness, deceit, S.
2. Smoothness of versification, metaph. used.

You—blythly can, when ye think fit,
Enjoy your friend, and judge the wit
And slidness of a sang.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 452.

- SLIDDER, s. 1. Slipperiness.

—Thay na grippis thair nicht hald for slidder.
Palice of Honour, iii. 55.

- [2. Uncertainty, vanity.]

Bot in thy minde thou may consider,
How warldlie power bene bot slidder:
For all thir greit impiyris ar gane.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 106.

- To SLIDDER, v. a. and n. 1. To pronounce indistinctly in consequence of speaking with rapidity, to slur, S.

Teut. slidder-en, prolabi; et celeriter tendere. Isl. slodr-ar, balbutio.

2. To delay, defer, [put off], Mearns.

Teut. slidder-en, serpere.

- SLIDDIRNESS, SLIDERNES, s. Slipperiness.

For slidernes scant might he hald his fete.
Henryson's Tristie Orpheus, Elin. 1508.

- SLIDDERY, SLIDDRY, SLEDERIE, adj. 1. Slippery, S. "not affording firm footing."

He slaid and stumnerit on the slidry ground,
And fell at erd grufelingis amid the fen.
Doug. Virgil, 133, 41.

2. Hard to hold, escaping one's grasp, S.

"The secund thing that we mone do in our battell aganis our concupiscence, is to mak resistance to our foule lustis and desyria in the beginning of thame.—Thai ar lyk to ane slederie eil, that may be haldin be the heid, & nocht be the tail." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 76, a.

3. Loose and flaccid; a term applied to food S. B. slauky, synonym.

Teut. slodder-en, flaccescere; slodder, laxus.

4. Deceitful, [not to be relied on.] A slidderly fallow, one who is not to be trusted. V. preceding word.

5. Uncertain, changeful; used in a moral sense.

"There's a slidry stone before the Hall door [great man's house," N.] S. Prov. "A slippery stone may make one fall; signifying the uncertainty of court favour, and the promises of great men." Kelly, p. 305.

- * To SLIDE, v. n. Metaph. to fib, to deviate from the truth, S.; [part. slidin, given to fibbing, Banffs.]

[SLIDE, s. A fib, a bounce, Aberd., Banffs.]

SLIDE-THRIFT, s. A species of Draughts in which the victor is he who first gets his men off the board; also called Shovel-groat and Shool-the-board; Roxb.

Pins, S. preens, are sometimes used in the place of men. A lays down one pin, and B another. These are pushed about the table or board, till one happens to cross the other, called riding; and he in consequence of whose push or pop this takes place, gains the stakes. This is most probably the game denominated in the same manner by Strutt, also Shore-groat, and Slyp-groat, though differently played. V. Sports and Pastimes, p. 225, 226.

- SLIDLING, adv. Secretly.

Teu pundis slidling furth he tuikie,
And knit it in a neapkin nuikie.

Legend Ep. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 334.

An errat. either for siddling, or for hulling.

- SLIECK, s. A measure of fruits or roots. V. SLEEK.

[SLIETH, s. Sloth. V. SLEETH.]

SLIETH-LIKE, adj. "Idiot-like, sottish," Buchan.

Some sumph gets up, scull proud o' pence,
An' slieeth-like bids me couch.

Tarras's Poems, p. 19.

- SLIEVE-FISH, s. The cuttle-fish, Frith of Forth.

"I have found these crabs, we call Keavies, eating the Slieve-fish greedily." Sibb. Fife, p. 140.

- SLIGGY, adj. Loquacious, Roxb.

But soon the serpent's sliggy tongue,
Turn'd by infernal wile,
Did blast primæval pleasure young,
When he did Eve beguile.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 83.

Sliggy may be allied to Isl. slik-ia, polire, as we say, "He has a very polist tongue," S.; or to sliek-ia, lambere; q. a sleek or glib tongue. But perhaps it is merely a variety of Sleekie, q. v.

- * SLIGHT, adj. Worthless. V. SLICHT, adj.

To SLIGHT, v. a. To dismantle, to demolish.

"The 2d deed is the slighting the house of Airlie, and burning of Forthar in Glenyla. 'Tis answered, those houses were kept out in opposition to the Committee of Estates, and so might be slighted and destroyed: which is clear by Acts of Parliament yet in force." Inform. for Marq. Argyle, Wodrow's Hist., i. 48.

"At their first meeting July 13th, they order the citadels built by the English to be demolished: and the Earl of Murray is appointed to slight and demolish that of Inverness, the Earl of Eglintoun that of Air," &c. Ibid., p. 107.

Teut. slicht-en, slecht-en, Germ. schlicht-en, in planitiem redigere, sternere, aquare, solo aquare, diruere; Teut. slicht, slecht, Su.-G. sluett, planus, æquus, i.e., level. Hence the Belg. phrase, Een staet slechten, to throw down a town; Wachter. Het kasteel wierdt tot den grond toe geslecht; The castle was levelled with the ground, or demolished; Sewel.

- SLIK, SLIKE, SLIEK, s. 1. Slime, mud, S. sleek, sleeck.

Endlang the watty than yeid he
Ou athyr syd a gret quantetie,
And saw the brayis ley standand,
The watty holl throw sliek rymand.

Barbour, vi. 78, MS.

Fra thine strekis the way profound anone,
Depe vnto hellis flue of Acherone, —
Populand and boukand furth of athir hand,
Vnto Cocytus al his slike and sand.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 40.

The soyl was nocht bot marres slyke and sand.
Palace of Honour, i. 4.

Perhaps marres is here used as an adj., q. marshy.
But Lancash. slutch, mud, (T. Bobb.) is more obviously allied.

2. The slimy shore.

We ar defendit to herby on the sand,
Prookit eik to battall, and driuen to land
By force of storme, the slike thay vs deny.

Doug. Virgil, 30, 4.

This is also written sleech.

"Sleech, or sea sand, is used as a substitute for lime, by those nearest the shore." P. Caerlaverock, Dumfr. Statist. Acc., vi. 24. See also ii. 19.

Teut. slyck, coenum, lutum, Germ. schlick, which Wächter inclines to view as the same with A.-S. sleg, E. slough.

SLIK, adj. Smooth, [polished]; E. sleek.

The swerd swappd on his swange, and on the mayle slik.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal., ii. 22.

Teut. sleyck, planus et aequus. It may, however, be viewed as a v. in the pret. q. slipped, slid; as in the same st. strik, lik, skrik, are all verbs.

[SLIKE, adj. Quickly, rapidly, "slick," Barbour, vi. 78.]

SLIM, adj. 1. Slight, not sufficient; applied to workmanship, S.

2. In a moral sense, transferred to character, naughty, worthless. A slim fellow, a man of a very indifferent character, S.; "wicked, mischievous, perverse;" A. Bor.

For now when I mind me, I met Maggie Grim, —
She was never ca'd chancy, but canny and slim,
And see it has fared with my spinning o't.

Ross's Helenore, p. 134.

Germ. schlimm, denotes what is oblique; metaph., what is bad. But we receive more light from the Goth. dialects. Sw. slēm, signifies refuse; Isl. slaem-r, villis, invalidus. Ad slaem-a til, opus aliquod leviter et invalidè attricare. In the very same sense we say, To slim o'er, to do one's work in a careless and insufficient way, S. Perhaps E. slim, slender, thin of shape, has the same origin; although Lye could find no etymon, but by supposing that it had been formed from Belg. slinder, slender? Addit. Jun. Etym.

To SLIM O'ER, v. a. To do or work carelessly, S. V. the adj.

[SLIM-O'ER, s. Work done carelessly; also, the act of working carelessly, S.; slimmanour, Banffs.]

SLIMMER, adj. [Slender], delicate, easily hurt, Ayr.

"Being a gentlewoman both by blood and education, she's a very slimmer affair to handle in a doing of this kind." Ayr. Legatees, p. 59.

Germ. schlimmer, sorry, paltry, wretched.

* To SLING, v. n. To walk with a long step, S.; [slung, Banffs.]

"Weel, I slings aye on wi' a gay lang step." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 37.

This seems merely an oblique sense of the E. v. sling, Sa.-G. slaeng-a, jactare, valid movere, q. to throw one's self forward.

SLING, s. A long, [striding step or pace], Loth.

To SLINGE, v. n. To sneak, to slink away, Lanarks. [V. SLOUNGE.]

Allied to Isl. sling-ur, crafty, callidus, versutus, slinginn, slunginn, id.; especially as one who sneaks away is generally viewed as using artful means for taking himself off, and the act is often an indication of craft.

To SLINGER, v. n. To move unequally, to reel, to be in danger of being overset, Aberd.

As ships, that bear more sail than ballast,
Slinger before the very smallest
Unequal blast, so is he driven
Jolting and jumbling up to heaven.

Meston's Poems, p. 129.

Dan. slingre, "to reel, to stagger, to totter, to joggle;" Wolff. Belg. slinger-en, to swing, to toss. Het schip slingerde byster, the ship was tossed exceedingly, Sewel; apparently from slinger, a sling.

SLINK, s. 1. The flesh of an animal, most commonly of a calf that has been cast by its dam before the time; properly, one calved before the hair is grown, S.

Perhaps more strictly slink denotes that sort of veal that has never been calved.

When this is palmed on an ignorant purchaser for veal, it is called slink.

It is sometimes used adjectively.

"There are besides these, a good many small and slink kid, and mert lamb-skins dressed here, which are got from the north-west of Scotland." P. Perth, Statist. Acc., xviii. 250. For mert, l. mort, as it is afterwards printed.

2. Transferred to ill-fed veal in general, S.

3. A tall limber person, generally preceded by the adj. Lang, and expressive of contempt; as, "Ah! ye lang slink," S.

O! tho' ye were an unco slink,
I'm sad without ye.

Gall. Encycl., p. 398.

4. Metaph. a worthless character, S.; borrowed from butchery.

—"Said Mrs. Heukbane, Pride will hae a fa'—he hanna settled his account wi' my gudeman, the deacon, for this twalmonth—he's but slink, I doubt." Anti-quary, i. 319.

5. A greedy starveling, one that would slyly purloin, and devour every thing, Dumfr. V. adj.

Sw. slin-a, carion, Seren. Or it may be denominated from its flaccid quality; Teut. slank, tenuis, gracilis; vacuus, solutus. Or from Germ. schlenk-en, abjicere; as the phrase used to denote such an abortion is synon., a cow being said to cast her calf, S.

SLINK, s. Lank, slender, South of S.

"Where is the poney you rode to Glasgow upon?"
"I sell't it, sir. It was a slink beast, and wad hae eaten its head off standing at Luckie Flyter's at livery." Rob Roy, ii. 305.

SLINKIE, adj. Tall and slender, lank, S. A person of this form is called a slinkie, a slunkie.

Dan. slunken, thin, lank, scraggy; Teut. slank. Germ. schlank, id. Teut. lanck, seems the more simple form, which is mentioned by Kilian as synonym. with langh, long.

To SLINK, v. a. To gull, cheat, deceive, Fife., [Clydes., Banffs.]

Su.-G. slinck-a, clanculum et furtim abire. Teut. slinck, sinister, Isl. sling-r, callidus, Dan. slink, id.

[SLINK, SLINKIE, s. A person of a sly, crafty disposition, ibid.; slinkie, is generally applied to children.]

SLINKIN, s. [Low cunning], deceit, Fife., Clydes.

I'm no sae foolish as aver,—
That they alike disposed are,
To flatter and to slinkin.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 78.

Slinkin, as a part. or adj. is expl. in Gl. "cheating, deceitful." This is nearly allied to the E. v. from A.-S. slinck-an, to creep. V. SLINK, s.

SLIP, s. A certain quantity of yarn, as it comes from the reel; containing twelve cuts, S. V. CUT.

"120 Threads = 1 Cut;
2 Cuts = 1 Heer;
6 Heer = 1 Slip;
4 Slips = 1 Spindle."

Gray's Intro. to Arithm. Edin. 1797, p. 12.

This sense, I find, Mr. Todd has added from Barret's Alvearie.

SLIP, s. 1. [A piece of female under-dress]; also, an upper petticoat, Loth.

2. A sort of loose frock, worn by a child, especially for protecting the more valuable parts of dress, S.

3. A wooden frame set on the top of a cart, for enlarging its size, when the draught consists of corn, hay, or wood for fuel, S.B.

4. Metaph., a girl in her teens; "She's but a mere slip of a girl," Roxb.

[From the same source as E. slip. See a very interesting analysis of this word in Prof. Skeat's Etym. Dict.]

SLIP-AIRN, s. An oval ring which connects the plough and the swing-le-trees, Clydes.

Teut. slippe, crena, incisura.

[SLIP-BY, s. A mere pretence of performance; as, "That's no half done: ye've jist gien't a slip-by," Clydes.]

[SLIP-MA-LAWBER. 1. As an adj., carelessly done, Banffs.

2. As a s., a lazy, careless worker, ibid. In Shetl. called slip-me-laav, or slip-me-lauber. Dan. laban, a lout.]

VOL. IV.

SLIP-ON, s. A great-coat; so named from the manner in which it is worn, being thrown over the shoulders loosely like a cloak, W. Highlands.

"Hugh flung his slip-on around him; for the Highlanders of the Isles and West Highlands wear their upper garments exactly in the good easy way of their brethren in Ireland, the sleeves dangling over the back." Clan-Albyn, i. 178.

A.-S. slip-an on, induere; E. to Slip on. V. Todd's Johns.

SLIP-SHOD, adj. Having shoes on the feet, but no stockings, Ettr. For.

[To SLIP-THE-GIRR, SLIP-THE-GIRTH. To have a child before or out of wedlock, Ayrs.

The metaph. is apt. When a tub has slipped its hoops, there is a breakdown.]

[To SLIP-THE-GRIP, v. n. To die, S.; synonym. slip-the-cable.]

To SLIPE, v. n. To move freely, as any weighty body which is dragged through a mire, Ettr. For. [V. SLYP, SLYPE.]

Teut. slipp-en, Sa.-G. slipp-a, elabi.

SLIPPAR, SLIPPER, adj. Slippery; used metaph. as signifying deceitful.

Say weill is slippar, and makes mony wyles;
Do weill is seemly, without any gyles.

Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 195.

Sa.-G. slipper, lubricus.

[SLIPPER, s. Slippery ice, Banffs.]

[SLIPPIT, part. pa. Broken through all restraint, Shetl.]

SLIPPERY, SLEPERYE, SLEEPERY, adj. 1. Causing sleep.

—To the walkryf dragoun mete gaif sche,— Strynkland to him the wak honey swete,
And sleperye cheabowe sede to walkin his sprete.

Doug. Virgil, 117, 7.

Soporiferum, Virg.

2. Sleepy, overpowered with sleep, S.

Sleep'ry Sim of the Lamb-hill,
And snoring Jock of Suport-mill,
Ye are baith right het and fou'.

Minstrelsy Border, l. 207.

"A slipperie bodie, be he pastor, be he anie of the people, he knowes not there is a diuell, a tempter.—Of all sorts of men in the world a slipperie pastor, a careless man in the ministrie is the worst, he loses both himselfe and manie others." Rollock, 1 Thes., p. 126.

Teut. slaeperigh, somnolentus, somniculosus.

To SLITE, SLYTE, v. a. To rip up any thing that is sewed, Roxb.; a slight variety from E. to Slit.

SLITE, SLYTE, s. The act of ripping up, ibid.

SLIVER, s. "Sliver, in Scotland, still denotes a slice cut off; as, He took a large sliver of the beef;" Johns. It is very commonly used, Berwicks.

Tyrwhitt expl. it, as used by Chancer, "a small slice or piece." In E. it signifies "a branch torn off." O.E. "Slywa or rywa asunder. Findo. Slugunge or cutting away. Aulsio. Abecisio." Prompt. Parv. from A.-S. slif-an, findere.

[SLIVER, s. Saliva drivelling from the mouth, slaver, Banffs.]

[To SLIVER, SLIVVER, v. a. and n. 1. To slaver, to bedaub with saliva, ibid.

2. To kiss in a slabbering manner, ibid.

3. To take food in a dirty slabbering manner.

The part. pr. sliverin, sliverin, is used as a s. in each of these senses, and also as an adj. in the first sense. In Clydes. sliverin is still used.]

SLIVERY, adj. Slavering, Buchan. V. SAUCHIN.

To SLO, v. a. To slay, poetically.

Ye are so fair be not my fo!
Ye sall have syn and ye me slo
Thus throw aye suddan aycht.

Maitland Poems, p. 209.

[SLO, s. The porous bone inside the horns of cattle, Shetl. Dan. slö, id.]

SLOAN, s. A rallying or scolding match, Roxb.

"If she disliked what the sailor calls the cut of their jib—or if, above all, they were critical about their accommodations, none so likely as Meg to give them what in her country is called a sloan." St. Roman, i. 28.

Supposed to be corr. from Slogan, q. v. There are, however, several northern words which might seem allied: Teut. slon-en, slenn-en, to prune, which might, like Snib, be used metaph. to denote reprehension; Belg. slons, a slut, a slattern; Su.-G. sluna, a trull; Isl. slane, the designation given to a servant, from sla, to strike.

SLOAN, s. A covetous person; often, "a greedy sloan," Berwicks.; perhaps a variety of Slughan, or allied to Teut. slond-en, vorare, from slonde, fauces, vorago, abyssus.

SLOAP, s. A lazy, and at the same time a tawdry, person; a term generally applied to a female; Stirlings. V. SLAUPIE, which is radically the same.

SLOAT, s. A voracious fellow, one who swallows every thing that comes in his way, Roxb.

SLOATCH, SLOTCH, s. An idle lazy sloven; generally applied to males, Roxb., Ettr. For.

Teut. slot, fossa palustris.

Johnson observes that slouch, "in Scotland," signifies "an ungainly gait, as also the person whose gait it is."

To SLOATCH, v. n. To go about in a lazy and slovenly manner, ibid.

This term seems to have the same origin with Slatch, s., q. v.

To SLOCH over, (gutt.), v. a. To do any thing carelessly, Fife. Synon. Sloth, Sleuth.

This may be allied to the O.E. v. "Sluggyn. De-sideo. Torpeo. Pigritor." Prompt. Parv.

SLOCHAN, (gutt.), s. A lubberly sort of fellow, Roxb. V. SLUGHAN.

SLOCHER, s. "A person careless in dress, particularly about the feet;" Gall. Enc.

Su.-G. slak, ignavus, slak-a, pendulum esse. V. SLOGGER, s.

[SLOCH, SLAIGH, SLAUGH, s. 1. Slime, mucus, phlegm, Clydes., Banffs.

2. The act of expectorating, ibid.

3. The act of taking soft or sloppy food in a slovenly manner; also, the act of working with any viscid substance in a dirty or careless manner, ibid.]

[To SLOCH, SLAIGH, SLAUGH, r. a. and n. 1. To work with any viscid or slimy substance in a slovenly manner, ibid.

2. To expectorate, ibid.

3. To take food in a disgusting manner, ibid.

The part. pr. is used also as a s., in each of these senses, ibid.]

[SLOCHIE, SLAIGHIE, SLAUGHIE, adj. Slimy, dirty and disgusting, ibid.]

[To SLOCHER, SLOCKER, v. n. 1. To take liquid food in a slabbering manner, ibid.

2. To be labouring under asthma, cold, or consumption, ibid.]

2. The noise made by breathing through mucus; also, difficulty in breathing on account of asthma, &c., ibid.

3. One who has difficulty in breathing on account of asthma, or who is slabberly in taking food, ibid.]

[SLOCHERIN, SLOCKERIN, part. pr. Used also as a s. in each of the senses of the v.; and as an adj., having difficulty in breathing on account of bronchial mucus, &c., ibid.]

SLOCK, s. Drink, intoxicating liquor, Buchan.

Was't wine, the stock o' feckless Fights?

Tarras's Poems, p. 135.

—I was clankit at your ingle

Whare heady stock's, an' glorious fendin, &c.

Ibid., p. 28.

i.e., where there is intoxicating drink. [V. SLOKE.]

SLODGE, s. A sloven. V. SLOTCH.

SLOGAN, s. 1. The war-cry, or gathering word, of a clan, South of S.

Then raise the slogan with ane schout,
"Fy, Tindall to it! Jailbrugh's here!"
Raid of Reidsnoir, Minstrelsy Border, l. 118.
Our slogan is their lyke-wake dirge,
Our moat the grave where they shall lie.
Lay of the Last Minstrel, c. iv. 23.

Corr. from slughorne, q. v.

"The Mackenzies have for their slughorn, Tulloch Ard, which is the place at which this clan does meet; and the name of Hume have for their slughorn (or slogan, as our Southern shires term it) a Hume, a Hume." Mackenzie's Heraldry, p. 97.

2. A kind of by-name or sobriquet denoting an individual, used to distinguish him from others of the same name, Fife; pron. slugon.

Ir. Gael. sludhach (pron. sluach) sludhacan, a horn, as the instrument that might be used for assembling a tribe; especially as it would seem that each distinguished leader had his distinguishing blast.

"The Bishop of Toulouse instantly recognised the trumpets of the Count de Montfort; for in those days, as it is said, every one of high distinction had a blast or note sounded peculiar to themselves [himself], and which was well known to hearers even at a remote distance." Maturin's Albigenes, iii. 109.

This etymon receives confirmation by what Barbour has narrated.

The king then blew his horn in by;
And gert the men that wer him by,
Hald thaim still, and all priw;
And syne agayn his horn blew he.
James of Dowglas herd him blaw,
And at the last alsone gan knaw;
And said: "Sothly yon is the king:
"I knaw lang quhill syne his blawing."
The thrid tyme thar with all he blew,
And then Schyr Robert Boild it knew;
And said: "Yon is the king but dreid;
"Go we furth till him bettir speid."

The Bruce, iv. 496, &c., MS.

SLOGG, SLAGG, s. A slough, a quagmire; Gl. Sibb.

SLOGGER, s. One who is slovenly and dirty, particularly in the under garments, his stockings often hanging down about his ancles, Upp. Clydes.

Sw. slugger, homo sordidus et negligens, sluggig, sordidus; Seren. Hence,

To SLOGGER, v. n. 1. To go about in a slovenly way, ibid.

2. To sup, or swallow food taken with a spoon, in a dirty and voracious manner, Fife.

Sicambr. slocke, gula, slokerigh, gulosus; Isl. slok-a, deglutire, slokari, lurco; Dan. slug-er, to eat greedily, slug, a glutton.

SLOGGERIN, part. adj. Slovenly, as above described; as, "a sloggerin hash," Clydes. Roxb.

SLOGGY, adj. Slimy, [damp and dirty]; marshy.

—Hys douchter, amang buskis ronk,
In derne sladis and mony sloggy slonk,
Wyth milk be narist of the beistis wilde.

Doug. Virgil, 384, 23.

Budd. refers to A.-S. slog, concavuni.

SLOGGIS, s. pl. Blasts. V. SLAG.

SLOGIE, s. A loose bed-gown, hanging down as far as to the knees, Selkirks.

If we suppose that it has been denominated from the looseness of its form, the term may be allied to Isl. slag-a, vagum ferri, slak-r, remissus, or Su.-G. slok-a, pendulum esse.

SLOGY RIDDLE. A very wide riddle, such as is used for riddling onions, potatoes, or any large kind of produce; sometimes simply called Slogy; Roxb.

"Then there's the gos-hawk, and the slogy riddle, and the tyrant an' his lang neb." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 143.

Perhaps allied to Germ. schlacke, dross, as used for throwing out the refuse; Su.-G. slaggy, scoria, E. slag. Isl. slog, however, denotes the intestines of fishes.

[SLOINDIE, s. A mob, multitude, rabble, Shetl.]

SLOIT, SLOTT, s. A lazy, stupid, and dirty fellow, a sloven, Renfrews.; synon. Sluiter.

Isl. sloft-r, corpus rude, magnae molis. V. SLUTE, adj.

To SLOIT AWA', v. n. To pass on in a careless manner, Ang.

Allied to Isl. sloft-a, remittere, or sloft-r-a, aegre iter emetiri. Teut. slodde, sordida et inculta mulier, whence E. slut, evidently claims a common origin.

To SLOITER, SLOTTTER, v. n. 1. To be engaged in any wet and dirty kind of work: "A sloiterin' creature," one who takes pleasure in work of this description; Lanarks.

[2. To take food, or to do any kind of wet work in a noisy, slatternly manner, ibid., Banffs.

3. To breathe through mucus or snot, ibid.]

Teut. slodder-en, flaccere, flaccescere, slodder, homo sordidus.

SLOITER, s. 1. A sloven; [also, one who is dirty in person or at food], applied either to man or woman, Lanarks. V. SLUITER.

[2. The act of taking food, or of doing any kind of work, in a noisy and disgusting manner, ibid., Banffs.

3. A disgusting or filthy mass, snot, ibid.]

SLOITH, s. A blood-hound. V. SLEUTH-HUND.

SLOKE, s. Ulva umbilicalis. V. SLAKE.

To SLOKIN, SLOKE, v. a. 1. To quench; used with respect to fire, S. A. Bor.; slake, E.; part. pa. sloknit.

—We than all in were

—Schupe with watir to slokin the haly fyre.

Doug. Virgil, 61, 49.

2. To allay thirst; sometimes with the s., often, in vulgar use, without it, S.

That bottell sweet—served at the first
To keep the life, but not to slooken thirst.
Hudson's Judith, p. 87.

- [3. To slake lime, Clydes., Banffs.]

4. Metaph., to assuage the heat of passion.

The sweet savour of the swairle, and singing of fewlis,
Micht comfort any creature of the kyn of Adam,
And kynlil agane his curage, tho it war canld sloknit.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 64.

5. Used in a juridical sense, as signifying to extinguish the claims of an opponent.

"The persewar sould strenthen and fortifie his cause and clame; the defendar sould extenuat, mak less, or slokin and tak away the petition or complaint of his adversar, with relevant exceptionis." Balfour's Pract.,
p. 411.

- [SLOKIN, SLOKNIN, s. 1. The act of quenching thirst, Clydes., Banffs.]

2. A thorough drenching or soaking, ibid.]

O.E. "Slokkyn," given as the same with "Slekkn."
Extinguo. — Slockenyng or quenchinge. Extincio." Prompt. Parv.

This word is purely Gothic. Su.-G. sloekn-a, extinguere, an inceptive v., says Ihre, from slueck-a, id.
Isl. sloek-a, slauk-va.

- SLOMIE, adj. Flaccid, blown up, Gall.

"An ox is said to be slomie, when it has on a false appearance of flesh;" Gall. Enc.
Gael. slom, sleek. But this is probably the same with Sloomie. [V. under SLOOM, v.]

- SLONG, SLOUNG, SLUNG, s. A sling; slung, S. B.

"Efter thaym followit men with licht harness, and schot incredibill nowmer of stanis & ganyeis with corbowis and slongis." Bellend. Cron. B. vi., c. 13.

With dartis thay assale the ciete fast,
And they defend with slungis and stane cast.
Doug. Virgil, 318, 15.

Like a slung stane, a metaph. phrase, proverbially used in reference to a person who is treated with disregard, S. B.

Tho' I'm amang you cast like a slung stane,
I was like ither fouk at hame, ye ken.
Ross's Helenore, p. 84.

Isl. slunga, sloengwa, Su.-G. slunga, id.

- SLONK, s. A mire, a ditch, a slough.

Baith erbe and froyte, busk and bewis braid
Haboundandlye in euery slonk and slaid.
Wallace, iii. 4, MS. Doug., id.

V. SLOOGY.

Sibb. properly refers to Belg. sleyncke, lacuna, fovea.

- To SLONK, SLUNK, v. n. "To wade through a mire," S.

But feckfu' folks can front the bauldest wind,
And slunk thro' moors, and never fash their mind.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 393.

- SLOK, SLOKING, s. "The noise our feet make when sinking in a miry bog; also, when walking with shoes full of water;" Gall. Enc. V. SLOK, v.

- [SLOO, s. 1. A thin covering; a layer, as of manure spread over land, Shetl.]

2. A tall, spare person, a lean animal, ibid.

3. A lazy fellow, a sloven, ibid.

Isl. slief, Dan. sloev, Sw. slö, dull, slow, inactive.]

- [To SLOO, v. a. To spread one substance over another in layers, ibid.; slooin a midden, making a compost by placing alternate layers of byre-manure, earth, and sea-weed, ibid.]

- To SLOOM, SLOUM, v. n. 1. To slumber, S. B.

I seemit to sloom, quhan throw the gloom
I saw the river shake.
Minstrelsy Border, iii. 357.

I laid my haffet on Elfer Hill,
Saft slooming clos'd my ee.
Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 125.

An' thus whiles slouming, whiles starting wi' her fright,
She maks a shift to wear awa' the night.
Ross's Helenore, First Edit., p. 58.

2. To become powerless; applied to the human body, Ettr. For.

"Scho—sett up sic ane yirlich skrighe that my verie sennyns sloomyt and myne teeth chackyt in myne heid."
Wint. Even. Tales, ii. 42.

3. To become flaccid; applied to flowers and plants touched by the frost, ibid.

4. To waste or decay, Ettr. For.

It is only said of such plants as abound with sap and become glutinous in rotting. "No other spot over their whole pasture offered as much verdure at this time as these seemingly sloomed places." Remarks on Capt.
Napier's Essay on Store-farming; Farmer's Magazine.

- [5. To move stealthily, to slink away, Shetl.]

Isl. slum-a, vultum simul et animum demittere.

- SLOOM, SLOUM, s. A slumber, an unsettled sleep, S. B.

Teut. sluym-en, dormire; leviter dormire. A.
Bor. "sloum, slaum, a gentle sleep or slumber;" Gl.
Grose.

- SLOOMIE, SLOOMY, adj. 1. Relaxed, enfeebled; used in relation of animals, Ettr. For.

- [2. Weak, thin, ill-filled]; as, sloomy corn, applied to grain when it is not well filled, S.

Callander, (MS. Notes on Ihre, vo. Strid), derives it from Su.-G. sloo, exilis. Strid, robustus, is opposed to it. Perhaps the term is metaph. q. sleepy; as we speak of dead corn, a dead pickle, &c. V. SLOOM, v.

3. Damp, and in an incipient state of putrefaction; applied to vegetables, S.

- [SLOOMIN, adj. 1. Slinking, sneaking; also, hanging the head, &c., in the pet, Orkn.]

2. Back-biting, raising reports; fond of hearing or talking about one's neighbours, Aberd., Banffs.]

[SLOOMIN, s. A faint rumour or report, a hearsay, ibid.]

[SLOOMIT, part. and adj. Sneaked, slunk; sullen, ill-looking, wily, sly, Shetl.]

SLOON, s. A contr. for Sloomin, q. v., Banffs.]

To SLOOP down. To descend in an oblique way, Roxb.

This is undoubtedly from the same origin with E. slope; Sw. slop-a, oblique et indirecté ferri.

[SLOOS, s. 1. A sluice, Clydes.

2. The flow of water from a sluice, ibid.; a dash of water, Shetl.]

SLOOT, s. A sloven; a low fellow, Dumfr. V. SLOIT, and SLUTE.

SLOP, s. A breach, a gap, S. slap.

Bot slopps in the way left he,
Sa large, and off sic quantité,
That v. c. mycht samyn rid
In at the slopps, sid be sid.

Barbour, viii. 179. 182, MS.

—The hard burulis he hakkis,
And throw the yet ane large windo makkis:
By the quhilk slop the place within apperis.

Doug. Virgil, 55, 8.

V. SLAP, s. l.

To SLOP, v. a. 1. To make a gap or breach.

—The army of the Troyanis side
Was thynnest skatterit on the wallis wyde,
And bricht arrayit company of the men
War diuidit or sloppit.

Doug. Virgil, 295, 14.

2. Metaph., to hew down.

The quhilk Turnus, as in his speddy chare
The myd routis went sloppand here and there,
Beheld his feris debatying wyth Pallas.

Doug. Virgil, 332, 25.

3. To slop throw, to pierce, to stab.

"Many of thaim sloppit throw the body fel downe aboue thair slaaris." Bellend. Cron., B. iv., c. 16.
Confossi, Boeth. q. having slops made through their bodies. V. SLAP, v.

SLOP, s. [Errat. for Sop, a compact band or body of men, a division. Isl. soppr, a ball; svöppr, a sponge, a ball.]

Patrik and Beik away with Bruce thair ryd
V thousand held in till a slop away
Till Noram House, in all the haist thair may.

Wallace, viii. 383, MS.

In to a slop, is the reading of Edit. 1648, and 1758.
The term may signify a compact body. Barbour and Doug. use sop, as denoting a crowd.

[In Herd's edit. of Barbour, viii. 326, the same mistake is made, sloppes for sloppis.]

[SLOP, s. A slap, blow, Banffs.]

[To SLOP, v. a. To slap, beat, strike, ibid.; part. pr. sloppin, used also as a s., ibid.]

SLOPED GAW. An open drain, Renfr. V. GAW.

[SLORACH, s. and v. Same with Slairg, and Slairy, q. v., Banffs.]

[SLORACHIN, s. and part. A disgusting viscid mass; also, a daub, bedaubing; the act of expectorating, or of doing any kind of wet work in a dirty manner, ibid.]

To SLORK, SLORG, v. n. 1. To make a disagreeable noise in eating, to eat up in large mouthfuls, Ettr. For.; Slorp synon.

Isl. slurk-a, deglutire; Dan. slurk-e, to swallow, to gulp.

2. To walk with wide or wet shoes, as through snow in a state of dissolution, Nithsdale. It respects the sound made by the regorging of the water in one's shoes.

To SLORP, v. a. and n. 1. To swallow any thing ungracefully, by making a noise with the mouth or throat, S.; synon. slubber.

Slorpe is O.E., although used in a more general sense. "Slorpe or make fowle, sordido, eleo; Hulock." V. also Higgins.

O. Teut. slorpe signifies vorago, gorges; and indeed the mouth and throat, in the ungraceful sorbition referred to, in some degree resemble the action and the sound of a whirlpool.

Sibb. renders it merely, "to sup greedily," from Teut. slorp-en, sorbeo.

2. To slorp and greet, to cry bitterly, and so as to draw in the breath, and almost to swallow the tears as they fall, Roxb.

Teut. slorp-en, ligurire; q. "to slabber up one's tears."

[3. To do anything in a noisy, slatternly manner; to bungle, S.]

SLORP, s. 1. A sop, as much as one swallows at once of food which is taken with a spoon, Selkirks.

2. A spoonful taken hastily and ungracefully into the mouth, Roxb.

3. A sloven, Ettr. For.; perhaps originally applied to one who takes food in a dirty way.

There's gentle John, and Jock the slorp,
And skellied Jock, and bellied Jock,
And curly Jock, and burly Jock,
And lying Jock himsel.

Jacobite Relics, ii. 40.

SLORPIE, SLORPING, adj. Slovenly, tawdry, S. "Slorping hussie, a girl who is sluggishly dressed;" Gl. Sibb.

Ye're gaun withouten shoon or boots,
But slorpin loags about your coots.

Hogg's Scot. Pastorals, p. 17.

Allied to Su.-G. slurficig, dirty, one who does his business carelessly; incuriosus, sordidus; slurfio-a, negligenter negotium aliquod perficere.

To SLOT, v. a. To bolt, to fasten by a bolt, S.

"Scot. to slot, claudere, pèssulum obdere;" Rudd.

—"Utheris your scoleris—mair cruelie bcs in thare imaginatioun cloisit up, slotit and neidnalit the samin yettis of our heretage—quhill the latter day of all." N. Winyet's Fouracoir Thre Questionis, Keith's Hist. App., p. 255. V. the passage more fully, vo. NEIDNAIL. "To slot a door, to shut it, Lincoln." Ray. Belg. sluyt-en, id. Su.-G. slut-a, claudere; Alem. bislozen, clausus; Teut. ver-sluyt-en, obstipare. Hence slays, E. sluice, properly, that which shuts up a body of water.

SLOT, s. 1. A bar, a bolt, S.

Grete lokkis, slotis, massy bandis square,
Dartis and scheildis hyngis here and there.

Doug. Virgil, 211, 34.

Teut. slot, Belg. sluyt, aera, obex, peasulus.

"Pessulus, a slot, girdle or bar." Wedderburn's Vocab., p. 12. In a later Ed. grindile is substituted for girdle. O.E. "Slot or shetil of speryng. Pessulum." Prompt. Parv. "Slotte of a dore, [Fr.] locquet;" Palagr. B. iii.]

2. Metaph. applied to the mind.

"He has means in his hand to open all the slots and bars that Satan draws over the door." Rutherford's Lett., P. iii. ep. 22.

3. The cross-spars which fasten what are called the bulls of a harrow, passing through them, are denominated slots, Ang.

This word is of pretty general use in S.

4. Slots in a cart are not only the long cross spars, as in a harrow, but also the short upright bars which support the Shelments, and to which the boards, called the Cleeding, are nailed. They are distinguished from Rungs, as being square, whereas rungs are round; Lanarks.

SLOT, s. 1. The slot of a hill, a hollow in a hill, or between two ridges, S.

2. Slot of the breast, the pit of the stomach; where the breast-bone slopes away on each side, leaving a hollow, resembling that between two ridges, S.

3. The hollow in the throat above the breast-bone, Ettr. For.

Isl. slod-r, res humilis et depressa. V. SCHLUCHTEN.

SLOT, s. [Errat. for slot, a fleet. A.-S. flōta, a ship.]

And syne Lawyne, and all his slot,
Disputisly discumfyt he.

Barbour, iii. 456, MS.

In the MS., however, the first letter seems rather to be f. In this case it must signify fleet; and Egrymor, the town referred to, must have been a seaport.

SLOT, s. A sum of money, S. B.

[SLOT, s. A preparation of the roe and liver of fish mixed with meal, Shetl. Isl. slog, the eatable intestines (liver, &c.), of a fish.]

[SLOTCH, s. A lazy, slouching fellow, Clydes. Isl. slokr, id.]

To SLOTH, v. a. To neglect. V. SLEUTH, v.

To SLOTTER, v. n. To pass the time idly or sluggishly, to slumber, S.

Slotterin, slutterin, acting in a slovenly manner, Loth.

Thou and hazard leichoure, fy for schame,
That slotteris furth euernare in sluggardry.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 96, 27.

Tent. slodder-en, flaccescere, slodder, homo sordidus; Isl. O. Sw. sladd-r, vir habitu et moribus indecorus. E. slattern and slut, are from the same fountain.

Isl. sloddr-a, aegre iter emetiri. Mr. Todd gives to slatter as an E. v., on the authority of Ray, who uses the phrase "a sluttering woman," in explaining Dawgosa.

SLOTTRY, adj. Slumbering, drowsy, inactive, Loth.

There was also the laithly Indigence,—
The slottry Slepe, Dedis couing of kynd.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 172, 52.

To SLOTTER, v. n. To make a noise in swallowing food, a duck gobbling; like to slabber up, Roxb., Berwicks.; also, to eat in a beastly manner, like a sow, Teviotd. Sludder, synon.; also Slorp.

O. E. "Sloteryng or done fowly [foully]. Deturpe." Prompt. Parv. "Slotter, nastiness. Exmore;" Grose. Corn. "Slotteree, rainy weather, foul and dirty;" Fryce. Hence, he says, Slattern. V. SLUDDER, v.

SLOTTER, SLOITER, s. 1. The noise made in this operation, ib.

[2. A filthy, disgusting mass, snot. Clydes., Banffs.

3. The act of walking, working, or eating in a dirty, slatternly manner, ibid. In this sense slotterin is also used.]

SLOTTERHODGE, s. A nasty beastly fellow, regardless of his appearance, and taking pleasure in feeding in a filthy way, Roxb.

Hodge is the vulgar E. abbreviation of Roger, used as a cant term for a country booby. This indeed resembles a very old E. term. "Slotirbugge. Cenu-lentus. Mabrus." Prompt. Parv. Teut. slodder, homo sordidus. Isl. sloddr-r, corpus rude magnae molis. Su.-G. slodder, faex populi.

SLOUAN, SLUAN, s. "Abbrev. of Sleugh-hound, blood-hound;" Gl. Sibb., Roxb. V. SLOUN, s.

SLOUCH, (gutt.), s. A deep ravine or gully, Mearns. A.-S. slog, locus concavus; Ir. slochd, Gael. sloc, a pit, a hollow.

SLOUCHED, part. pa. "Drenched;" Gall. Enc. "Slouching, a wetting;" ibid. vo. Slonk.

Perhaps allied to E. sludge, mire, from A.-S. sloy, a slough. Serenius views Ir. slug-am, Su.-G. sluk-am, ingurgitare, as the origin. V. SLOUGH, SLUGH.

[SLOUG, s. A slow, idle, lounging person, S.]

[To SLOUG, v. n. To be idle, to lounge, Lyndsay, The Dreame, l. 890. Dan. slug, from sluk, drooping, hanging; Sw. sloka, to droop, hang down.

Spenser has "To slug in slouth," F. Q. II., l. 23. "I slodge, I waxe slowe, or draw behind," Palsgrave.]

* SLOUGH, (gutt.), s. A husk, S.; A. Bor. In the north of E. it is, however, pron. sluffe.

SLOUGH, SLUGH, (gutt.), s. 1. A voracious eater and drinker, Upp. Clydes.

Either from slough, a deep miry place, as swallowing up everything, or from a common fountain. Seren., as has been already observed, derives A.-S. sloy from Ir. slug-am, and Sw. sluk-a, devorare, ingurgitare. And it would seem, indeed, that there had been an original connexion of the two ideas; or that a miry place had received its designation from its tendency to swallow up. For as Ir. and Gael. slug-am signifies to swallow, slugaid, apparently a derivative from it, is a slough, a deep miry place, and slughan, a whirlpool. According to the same analogy, Teut. slock, signifies not only gula, fauces, but barathrum, vorago, gurgles. Isl. slok-r, and Dan. slug, denote a glutton, from slok-a and slug-er, to devour, to eat greedily.

2. A person of mean character, who would do any thing for his own interest; pron. Slugh, Dunfr.

SLOUM, s. The green scum that gathers on stagnant pools, Roxb.

Teut. sluyme, cortex, siliqua.

SLOUN, s. An indolent person. The term at the same time conveys the idea of worthlessness, Upp. Clydes.; perhaps merely a shorter mode of pronouncing Slughan, or Slouan, a slow-hound. But V. SLOAN.

To SLOUN, v. a. To idle away one's time, ibid.

SLOUNG, s. A sling. V. SLONG.

To SLOUNGE, v. n. 1. To go about, in an indolent way, from place to place; especially as catering for a dinner, S. Sleenge, id., Upp. Lanarks.

2. To hang the ears; to look sour, Ettr. For.

Allied to Dan. sleng-er, "to saunter, to loiter, to linger, to go idling or trifling about;" Wolff; from Isl. slen, torpor, languor, or perhaps slangi, serpens, q. the slow, creeping motion of a snake. We may add Germ. schlungel, a sloven, a loiterer; schlungel-n, to saunter about.

E. slounge seems originally the same.

SLOUNGE, SLUNGE, (pron. slounge), s. 1. "A greedy slounge," a phrase applied to a dog, that goes about hanging his ears, and prying into every corner for food, Roxb.

2. A sneaking fellow, S.

"Now Finally the slunge had taken care never to let on of the messages, black or white." Saxon and Gael, ii. 75.

3. A skulking vagabond, Roxb.

Isl. slungiinn, astutus.

4. A glutton; as, "He's a great slounge for his guts," ibid.

In this sense it would seem allied to Dan. slug-er, to devour, to eat greedily, slughale, a glutton.

5. A stupid, dull-looking fellow, Ettr. For. V. SLUNG, which is nearly synon.

SLOUNGER, s. An indolent fellow; a plate-licker, S.

SLOUNGIN-LIKE, adj. Having a downcast look; or moving like one much fatigued, S.

To SLOUNGE, v. n. [To plunge]; to make a noise in falling, or being thrown, into water, Upp. Lanarks. It differs from Slunk, which denotes the sound made by a small body passing quickly into water.

Allied to Germ. schlund, vorago; Teut. slonde, the upper part of the throat, and secondly, a whirlpool, sloud-en, vorare; or Germ. schling-en, glutire, verschling-en, deglutire; as alluding to the noise made in swallowing.

SLOUNGE, s. 1. [A plunge]; the sound made by a large heavy body falling into water, expressive of the splash, Clydes.

2. A great fall of rain; a slounge o' weet, ibid. Blad o' weet, synon.; [plash o' weet.]

3. The state of being completely drenched; applied both to persons and things, ibid.

SLOUPE, s. "A stupid silly fellow," S.A. Gl. Compl. S. vo. Slop. It is there supposed to be derived from Belg. slap, laxus, remissus.

Probably the same with Slyp, Slype, Aberl., q. v.

SLOUPER, s. A sloven, implying the idea of knavishness, Clydes.

SLOUSTER, s. 1. Food ill prepared, Ettr. For.; the same with Slaister, Slyster, q. v.

2. A sloven, ibid.

To SLOUSTER awca, v. n. The same with Slaister, Fife.

[To SLOUTH, v. a. and n. To neglect, to idle, Loth., Clydes. A.-S. slaeweth, sloth.]

[SLOUTHFUL, adj. Slothful, inactive, idle, ibid.]

SLOUTH-HUND, s. A blood-hound. V. SLEUTH-HUND.

SLOWAN, s. A sloven, Roxb. This seems merely a secondary sense of Slouan.

SLOW-THUMBS, s. A person who goes on slowly with work, Teviotd.

[SLUB, s. Slime, sludge, Shetl. Belg. stob, sleb, wet mire; A.-S. slype, a viscid substance.]

[SLUBIE, adj. Slimy, slippery, viscous, ibid.]

To SLUBBER, v. a. 1. To swallow any thing hastily, so as to make a noise with the throat; applied to substances that are soft and pulpy, S.; slopp, synon.

The v. was used in a similar sense in O. E. "I slubber, I fyle a thyng, or beray it. Je barbouille. Fye how you have slubbed your geare for one dayes wear-ynge." Palagr. F. 364, a. The mod. E. word is slabber.

Isl. slupr-a, mollia ingurgitare, Haldorson; Dan. slub-er, to suck up.

2. Metaph., to do any thing carelessly; slubbert, part. pa.

"My custome ener was to post ouer my sinnes in the lump, with a generall slubbert confession." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 332. V. Errata, preceding, p. 748.

Sa.-G. slabbr-a, avidè deglutire; Teut. slabber-en, ligurire jus tepidum; Belg. slubber-en, to sup up.

SLUBBER, s. 1. The act of swallowing as described above, S.

2. Food over-boiled, particularly that of a flaccid nature, Upp. Clydes.

SLUBBERY, adj. A term applied to that loose or flaccid kind of food, in swallowing which a noise is made by the throat, S.

SLUBBER, SLOBBER, s. Half-twined, or ill-twined woollen thread, Teviotdale.

Teut. slubber-en, laxum sive flaccidum esse.

[To SLUCK, SLUCKS, v. a. and n. To gulp in drinking, to drink in greedily and with noise, Shetl. Sw. sluka, to swallow or drink greedily, Dan. slukke, to quench thirst.]

[SLUD, s. An interval between squally showers, Shetl. Sw. slut, end, interval.]

To SLUDDER, (pron. sluther), v. a. 1. To swallow one's food with a noise in the throat, S.; synon. slubber.

2. To sludder one's words, to pronounce indistinctly, S.B.; E. slur. V. SLIDDER.

Teut. slodder-en, flaccescere.

SLUG, s. A loose wrapper, or upper covering, worn for dirty work, either by males or females, Fife; defined, "a short gown or wrapper worn by women." Jupe synon. Upp. Clydes.

This is merely a variety of Slogie, used in the same sense.

SLUG, SLUG-ROAD, s. A road passing through a narrow defile between two hills, Mearns.

For the origin, V. SLOUCH, s.

SLUGGIED, pret. v. Swallowed greedily, Moray.

The cathel cam in in a bicker,
Wi' cutties they sluggied it roun'.
Jameson's Popul. Ball., i. 296.

Sicamb. stocke, gula, Teut. stock-en, vorare, glutire; Sa.-G. sluk-a, deglutire. V. SLAG.

SLUGH, s. A mean fellow. V. SLOUGH.

SLUGHAN (gutt.), s. A lazy good-for-nothing person, Roxb. V. SLEUTHUN, *synon.

As the latter is from sleuth-hund, slughan, retains more of another form of the word, i.e., Slough-hund.

SLUGHORNE, SLOGGORNE, s. 1. The watchword used by troops in the field, by which friends are distinguished from enemies, S.

The draught trumpet blawis the brag of were;
The slughorne, ensenye, or the wache cry
Went for the battall all suld be reddy.

Doug. Virgil, 230, 36.

It may be subjoined, that A.-S. sla, slug, is given by Somner as signifying "Bellicum; an alarum to war, a warning or signal to battle, by sounding of a trumpet, beating of a drumme, or such like." This may be traced to slay-an, slé-an, to strike; as, sléan-lacen, facere signum ictu. Teut. slaen de trompet, canere tuba. V. SLOGAN.

2. Hereditary designation, appellation.

"The pepill dwellyng in the hie land and ilis thair-of, at electioun of thair capitane, haldis vp thair hand-is to be leil and trew to hym. And als sone as the capitane is chosyn, thay past to the nyxt mote, and defendis vnder pane of deid, that nane of thaym name their capitane with ony vthir sluggorne, but with the auld name of that tribe." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 20. a.
b. Trito vetustoque tribus rectoris nomine deinceps appellat; Boeth.

"Probably from A.-S. slége, clades, sléy-an, interficere, sléthe, pugna, q. cornu bellicum;" Rudd. Perhaps from Ir. sluagh, an army, and corn, a horn, in composition gorn.

Rudd., however, has observed that this word is "sometimes used figuratively for a peculiar property or quality that seems inherent in those of one family or race." It may be connected with Ir. Gael. slíocht, a tribe, a race.

SLUIP, SLYPE, s. A lazy, clumsy fellow; synon. Slute, Fife.

Teut. slorf, lentus, ignavus, sordidus, squalidus; homo incultus vestibus et moribus, homo nihili; Kilian. Isl. sloepug-r, squalidus; slíov-r, slíof, hebes.

SLUIST, s. A large heavy person, Teviotd.

Su.-G. sluskig, inelegans, may be allied; and Teut. ver-sloos-en, ignavia et negligentia deterere et deturpare.

SLUIT, SLUTE, (like Guid, good), SLUITER, s. 1. A term denoting a big, clumsy, indolent fellow; always applied to a male; Fife.

2. A glutton, Lanarks.

Isl. slút-a, prominere. Hann let slúta hottinn, capitulum demisit; slót-a, remittere; slót-ra, aegre iter emetiri, q. to move heavily along; Hæklorsón.

As E. slut, seems to be from Teut. slodde, sordida et inculca mulier; sluiter immediately resembles slodder, homo sordidus. This slu views as allied to Su.-G. slodder, faex populi. This is probably an ancient Belgic word, transmitted through many generations.

To SLUMMISH, v. n. To trifle away one's time, Upp. Clydes.

This must be viewed as radically the same with sloom, S. B., to slumber; Teut. sluym-en, dormitare. Isl. slum-a, vultum simul et animum demittere; Hæklorsón.

SLUMP, s. 1. A large quantity of any thing, Aberd.; synonym. Slumpert.

2. By slump, altogether, not separately.

"The brae farms and the pasture land, are let by slump; it is impossible to say what they rent per acre." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc., xv. 344.

3. A remnant. A silly slump, a petty fragment, S. B.

Sw. slump, that which is left, the remainder, Widge.

SLUMPERT, s. A large quantity; [the whole mass or lot]; properly, what is not measured, S. B., Ayrs.

[SLUMP-WISE, adv. In the slump or mass, without measure, Clydes.]

Su.-G. slump, massa informis, totum aliquod, nondum in ordinem redactum. Koepa slumpicis, to buy all together, without selection; as is said, S., coft by slump.

The term is also used as an adj. Slump wark, work taken in the lump, S.

"The slump number he has taken, as the list is ill printed, from the Scots Mist." Wodrow's Hist. ii. 215.

SLUMP, s. 1. A marsh, a swamp, Berw., Ettr. For.

2. A dull obtuse noise produced by an object falling into a hole, Roxb.

Germ. schlamme, a mire; schlump-icht, lutulentus. The v., in its second sense, might seem allied to Isl. slump-az, slomb-az, inopino jactu ferri.

To SLUMP, v. n. 1. To sink in a mire, ibid.

"This same day, nae farther gane, at ae step up in the Gait-cleugh, I slumpit into the neck." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 312.

2. To go down as a person through ice, or in a bog, Roxb., Clydes.

VOL. IV.

"To slump, to slip, or fall plump down in any wet or dirty place, North." Grose.

3. To stick in the mire, Clydes.

SLUMPIE, adj. Marshy, swampy, ibid.

SLUNEOCH (gutt.), s. "A person of a brutish disposition, who would do all the harm he could, if he had the ability to project;" Gall. Enc.

Isl. slundi, servus infidus, slundr, perfidia; or slunginn, callidus, astutus. But V. SLUNG, below.

SLUNG, s. 1. A tall lank booby, Aberd. Defined by a north-country man, "a lang teem [tume] haivrelly kind o' a chiel." [V. SLUNK.]

2. Also expl. a low fellow, Aberd.

And Kate says, See, ye stupid slung,
Fat way ye've fyld my curch.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 33.

Isl. slani, longurio imbecillis; slinni, homo enervia, nauci; Hæklorsón. Dan. sleng-er, to saunter, to loiter.

SLUNG, s. A sling, S. B. V. SLONG.

[To SLUNG, v. a. and n. 1. To sling, swing, or drive out with force, Ayrs.

2. To walk with long strides and a swinging slouching gait, ibid., Banffs. V. SLING.]

SLUNGE, s. and v. V. SLOUNGE.

SLUNK, s. 1. The veal of a calf cut out of the mother, Teviotdale. V. SLINK, s.

2. A tall awkward fellow, Shetl. V. SLUNKEN.

SLUNKEN, SLUCKEN, part. adj. Having a very lank and empty appearance, like a horse tired, ill-fed, Teviotd.

This is merely the old Dan. word retained; Slunken, lank, scraggy.

SLUNKIE, s. A tall thin person. V. SLINKIE.

SLUNK, s. A slough, a quagmire, Ettr. For. V. SLONK.

SLUPE, s. A male sloven, Fife. V. SLUIP.

To SLURE, v. a. To swallow ungracefully, Mearns; synonym. Slorp.

SLURICH (gutt.), s. Flaccid food, in swallowing which a noise is made by the throat, ibid.; [synonym., slubber.]

Isl. slor, piscium sordes; Su.-G. slurfe-a, negligenter negotium aliquod perficere. Teut. slorigh, sordidus. Dan. slurk-er, to sip up, to swallow, assumes the form of a frequentative.

SLUSCH, SLUSH, SLUDGE, s. 1. A pool, flashy ground, S. Rudd. "A dirty plash;" Gl. Sibb.

[2. Thin mud, mire; also, any dirty liquid, dregs, &c., Clydes.

O 2

This term is common in the Northern and Midland counties of England. It is found in the Gl. of East York., East Norfolk, and of Leicest., Warwick., &c. &c. with the meanings, mud, mire.

3. Snow in a state of liquefaction, S.; synon. glush.

"It sometimes happens that a fall of snow in the night-time will cover the deep water where the feiths are, with a scurf of snow and slush, that prevents the fishers from going to their feiths by water, in order to draw them out." State, Leslie of Powis, &c., 1805, p. 120.

"A rush of water, and a rush of slush in a thaw, are common expressions for a torrent of water, a torrent of half-melted snow." Gl. Compl.

4. A person kept about farm-houses to do all the dirty, disagreeable work, S.

Rudd. derives the term in sense 1, from Belg. sluys, a sluice, Teut. schleuss, cataract, emissarium; Sibb. in sense 2, with still less probability, from Teut. sljck.

In both, it seems deducible from Su.-G. slask, humor quicunque sordidus; slusk-a, humorem vel sordidum vel ingratum effundere; Thet slaskar, imbres cadunt, Ibres. V. SLASHY. It may, however, be merely a corr. pron. of E. sludge, "mire, dirt mixed with water."

Dan. slask-er, to paddle, to puddle.

SLUSHIE, adj. Abounding with snow in a state of liquefaction; as, "The streets are very slushie," S. V. SLUSCH, SLUSH.

SLUST, s. A sluggish person, S.A. V. SLUIST.

* SLUT, s. A dirty, low, worthless woman; a worthless character, S. This term has a much stronger sense in S., than in E.

SLUTE, s. A slow, lazy animal; applied both to man and beast; Loth.

SLUTE, [SLUTIE, SLUTRIE], adj. Slovenly; E. sluttish.

Mony slute daw, and slepy duddroun,
Him servit ay with sounyie.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 29.

Teut. slodde, sordida et inculta mulier.

Or perhaps merely A.-S. slæth, (whence E. sloth) which Mr. Tooke ingeniously considers as the 3d pers. indic. of the A.-S. v. slæno-ian. In O.E., however, we meet with "Slut, cenosus," and "Slutty, cenulentus." Prompt. Parv.

SLUTCH, s. A hanger on, a parasite, Roxb.; apparently from the same origin with SLOATCH.

To SLUTCH, v. n. To move heavily, as in a deep road, Fife. V. SLATCH, v.

SLUTHER, s. 1. A quagmire, S.

[2. Any dirty, slatternly work, Clydes. V. SLUTTER.]

To SLUTHER, v. a. To walk or work in a careless and slovenly manner, S.

Teut. slodder, homo sordidus, negligens.

To SLUTTER, v. n. To spill or slabber in cooking or eating victuals, Dumfr. This seems merely a variety of SLUDDER, v.

SLUTTERIN, part. pr. [1. Slabbering; doing any thing in a dirty, slovenly manner, S.]

2. Making an interrupted kind of noise through the nostrils, when one is half asleep, Perth. This seems nearly allied to SLOTTER, v.

[3. Used also as a s. in both senses.]

SLUTTRIE, adj. Slovenly, Loth. V. SLOTT-TRY.

[SLY, s. Green slime, as on stagnant pools; slippery ooze, as on rocks at low tide, Shetl. Isl. slig, id.]

To SLY, v. a. and n. 1. To go or approach silently and sily, Aberd.

2. To look in a sly manner; with the prep. at added, ibid.

3. To place or remove sily, ibid. Slee, Banffs., q. v.

[4. To sly away, to slip away secretly, Shetl. Isl. slæyr, Dan. slug, slu, Sw. slug, sly, cunning.]

SLY-GOONE, s. 1. The Shieldrake, Anas Tadorna, Linn., Orkn.

"The wild fowls of these islands are very numerous. Among these we may reckon—the dunter or eider duck, the sly goone, the awk, the lyre and the tyste." P. Kirkwall, Orkn. Statist. Acc., vii. 546.

"When a person attempts to take their young, the old birds shew great address in diverting his attention from the brood: they will fly along the ground as if wounded, till the former are got into a place of security, and then return and collect them together. From this instinctive cunning, Turner, with good reason, imagines them to be the chenalopez, or fox-goose of the ancients: the natives of the Orkneys to this day call them the slygoose, from an attribute of that quadruped." Penn. Zool., p. 590.

[2. A coarse, cunning fellow, Aberd.]

[SLYCHT, s. Sleight, Barbour, i. 112; deceit, i. 528. V. SLICHT.]

[To SLYCHT, v. a. V. SLICHT.]

[To SLYD, SLYDE, v. a. and n. To slide, slide down, descend, Barbour, iii. 707; part. pa. slyddin, slidden, slid.]

[SLYDDER, adj. Slippery, Lyndsay, Exper. and Court., l. 3708.]

SLYIRES, Acts, Ja. VI. 1621, Ed. 1814, p. 626; the same with Slyres, q. v.

[SLYK, s. Slime, wet mud, Barbour, xiii. 352, Du. slijk, id. V. SLIK.]

SLYP, SLYPE, s. 1. A kind of low draught carriage or dray without wheels, Clydes., Loth.

To the next wode, wyth Dycson, syn he socht,
Graithyt him a draucht on a braid slyp and law,
Changyt a horse, and to the house can caw.
—The yet yeik up, Dicson gat in but mar,
A thourtour bande, that all the drawcht wpar,
He cuttyt it, to ground the slyp can ga,
Cumryt the yet, stekyng thai mycht not ma.
Wallace, ix. 1622. 1630, MS.

It is not long since the slype was used in Loth. for carrying hay out of the field.

This term is still used in Upp Lanarks., and in Ettr. For., for a sort of box, without shafts, made of bars, drawn by a horse, like a sledge, for carrying peats or hay; pron. slype.

Belg. sleep-en, to draw in a sledge; sleepen, one who carries goods on a sledge.

Germ. schleife, id. (traha), from schleifen, to draw, so denominated because dragged on the ground; as a dragg-net is called Teut. sleep-net. Perhaps the origin is Su.-G. sleep-a, to creep on the ground, reptare humi; also, to drag something lying on the ground, aliquid humi reptans trahere; Ihre.

To SLYPE, v. a. and n. 1. To strip off; as the feathery part of a quill, a twig from a tree, &c., Roxb. V. FLYPE.

"To Slype, to peel the skin off the flesh;" Gall. Enc.

This is also A. Bor. "To slype off, to strip off the skin or bark of any thing, North." Grose.

Slype has also a neuter sense, as applied to the skin when it peels off of itself; and as allied to Isl. stef-a, used to denote what is pendulous or hangs down;—scilicet pendulum,—fila tenuia; slap-a, flaccere, pendere.

2. To press gently downward; as, "to slype a leech," to make it part with the blood, Roxb.

In this sense it would seem rather allied to Isl. slip-a, extenuare, slipp-r, nudus.

3. "To fall over, as a wet furrow from the plough;" Gl. Burns.

—Pretty knowes wad rair't and risket,
An' slypet owre.

Burns, lii. 143.

This seems to have a common origin with E. slip. Germ. schlip-fen, in lubrico decurrere. Ihre views slap, remissus, as the root.

SLYP, s. A sneak; a contemptuous designation. V. HANYIEL SLYP.

Syne Francie Winsy steppit in,

A sauchin slivery slype.

Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 124.

M'Taggart gives as in many other instances, a singular definition of this term; "Slype, a fellow who runs much after the female creation, yet has not the boldness, though the willingness, to seduce any of them."

Isl. slap-r, slapi, homuncio sordidus. Perhaps Teut. sleeppe gives the primary sense: Mulier segniter et testudineo gradu propens, tardigrava, ignava, Kilian; q. "a female who creeps onward like a tortoise."

SLYPE, A-SLYPE, adv. Aslant. When a sheep, or any other object, is marked by a line being drawn across it, the operator is said to come a-slype over it, Ettr. For. A-sled is given as synonym.

A-slype must be viewed as from the same source with E. aslope, id.; Sw. slæp-a, oblique et indirecte ferri; Seren.

SLYPER, s. 1. One who appears to wish to sneak away, from fear of detection, Lanarks. Slouper is used in a sense nearly connected, ibid.

2. One who is tawdry and slovenly in dress, Dumfr. V. SLYP, SLYPE, s.

SLYPER, s. Sword slyper, a cutler, one whose principal work was to whet swords.

"James M'Kie, sword slyper." Acts Ja. VI. 1585, Ed. 1814, p. 394.

Teut. slipp-en, acuere, exterere aciem ferri, atterere gladium cote; Belg. slyper, a whetter.

SLYPPIES, s. pl. Roasted pease, eaten with butter, Roxb.: most probably a cant term.

SLYRE, s. Some kind of fine lawn, forbidden to any but the royal family.

"And that no person whatsoever weare upon their bodies, tiffinies, cobwebbe-lanues, or slyres, under the payne of one hundreth poundes." Acts Ja. VI., 1621, c. 25.

The manufacture may have been denominated from Germ. schleyer, Belg. slyer, a scarf, a veil; (Sw. slorja, id.) as being chiefly appropriated to this use.

SLYRELAND, s. Same with Slyre, a species of lawn, q. slyre-lawn.

"Slyreland, ilk hundreth elis, three ounces." Acts Cha. II., Ed. 1814, VII. 254.

To SLYSTER. V. SLAISTER.

To SLYTE, v. a. and n. 1. To move easily or smoothly, Loth.; probably an oblique sense of the n. SLAIT, q. v.

2. To sharpen an edged tool, Lanarks., Loth. V. SLAIT, v. sense 4.

[SLYTE, s. V. under SLITE.]

SMA, adj. 1. Small, [little, weak], S.

2. Not grown up, in a state of childhood, S.

—"If I wouldna agree to it, they would be ruined, and they had sma' families." Petticoat Tales, i. 210. "Sma' Family, a family of young children;" Gall. Enc.

This conveys an idea directly the reverse of what would be suggested by the phraseology, to the mind of a Southron. Were this used in an afflictive case as an argument for active sympathy, "Ha!" would he most probably reply, "you say he has got only a sma' family. He is then the less to be pitied, as he must be able the more easily to support them." But even where a family of children is numerous, it is said to be sma'; as intimating that they are all so young as to be unable to do any thing themselves.

Alem. sma, Su.-G. smaat, tenuis. Hence smack-a, to lessen, to diminish.

SMA'-DRINK. [1. Beer of the weakest quality. V. under SMALL DRINK.]

2. Nae sma' drink, not to be despised, no mean person: often used of one who has a high estimation of himself, S.

—"Mungo Braidfoot, of Divot-ha, esquire, was, as his mother used to boast, nae sma' drink. He was proprietor of a considerable estate, wealthy, and in no way given to needless expense." Glenfergus, iii. 327.

"So you see, cousin, we are nae sma' drink now a days." Saxon and Gael, iii. 75.

"The very foremost-men have their silken scarfs. I have seen many a lady wear a warse, and think hersel nae sma' drink." The Pirate, ii. 97.

This evidently alludes to the low account made of beer of the weakest description.

[SMA'-EVENS, s. A very small quantity, Shetl.]

SMA'-FAIRNS, s. pl. The guts, South of S.

"I durstna grip him, for fear he had run his bit spit through my sma' fairns i' the struggle, for it was as sharp as a lance." Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 43.

Corr. from A.-S. thærm, or E. tharm, the intestines.

SMA'-FOLK, SMALE-FOLK. People of the lower class.

In England syne that made a rade
Wyth the smale folk, that that hade.

Wyntoun, viii. 30. 118.

Isl. smelinge, a derivative from smac, parvus, is used in a similar manner; ē plebe humili, tenuis pauper.

SMA' STILL, s. A name for whisky, supposed to be of superior quality, because the produce of a small still, S.

"Taste the whisky, Mr. Gordon—it is sma' still, and will do harm to no man." Lights and Shadows, p. 382.

[SMA'-WATERS, s. pl. A term used when two or three small lochs lie near each other, Shetl.]

[SMACHER, SMACHIR, SMACHRIE,] SMACHRY, s. [1. A large number, a crowd, or a mass of small objects, Banffs., Clydes.

2. Mixture, confusion, mess, ibid.]

3. Trash; a hodge-podge, or farrago, of whatever kind, S. B.

"They sent in some smachry or ither to me, an' a pint o' their scuds." Journal from London, p. 9.

As this generally denotes a dish of various materials, it may be from Su.-G. smack-a, to diminish, from smac, little, q. to mince, to make an olio. Isl. smaelke, minute quaequae, ut paleae ramenta.

[Prob. only a corr. of Smatter, q. v.]

[To SMACHER, v. n. To collect into a crowd, to crowd, Banffs.]

SMACK, s. A smart stroke, S.

Teut. smacke, collisio, concussus, jactus, plaga, &c. smacken, collidere, concutere, jactare, cum vi aut sonitu impingere, &c. Here we have also the origin of Smack as signifying "a loud kiss;" analogous to the v. smack-muglen, diducta labiorum sonum edere; also, basiare, affigere osculum.

SMACLE, s. As much, Roxb.; evidently corr. from as mickle.

To SMAD, SMUD, v. a. To stain, to discolour; smaddit, blackened.

The bard, smaddit lyke a smaik smokit in a smiddle,
Ran fast to the dur, and gait a grit raire.

Houlate, iii. 15, MS.

Mr. Pinkerton inadvertently renders this maddened. But the word is still in common use, especially S.B.

Belg. smett-en, to stain, to soil, Isl. Su.-G. smet-a, Germ. schmitz-en, A.-S. smit-an, id. Perhaps Moes.-G. ga-smit-an, to anoint, may be the original word. V. Smot.

SMAD, SMUD, s. A stain of any kind, S.B.

Belg. smette, A.-S. smitta, Dan. smitt, id. Teut. smadde, convitium, q. a moral stain. If I mistake not, our word is sometimes used in the same sense.

[SMAG, s. A small piece, a dainty; anything small and nice, Banffs., Clydes. Sw. smak, id.]

[SMAGRIE, SMAGRY, s. 1. A large number, quantity, or crowd of small objects; implying confusion also, ibid.

2. A dainty, a dainty-mess or mixture, ibid., Perth.]

SMAICHER, (gutt.) s. A fondling term addressed to a child, S.B.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. smek-r-a, blandiri, which is derived by Ihre from smac, parvus, Teut. smuck-er, adulator; or A.-S. smicer, tenuis. Isl. smock-r, pulcher, formosus; hilaris.

To SMAICHER, v. n. To eat in small pieces, or in a clandestine manner, something that is agreeable to the palate, Aug.

[Sw. smaka, to have a taste of smeka, to relish.]

[SMAICHERY, s. A lot of nice things; confectionery, Aberd.]

SMAIK, s. A silly mean fellow, a minion.

Quoth he, Quhair ar yon hangit smaikis
Rycht now wald slane my bruder?

Chr. Kirk, st. 23.

Quod I, Smaik, lat me slepe; sym skynnair the hing.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, a. 38.

Rudd. thinks that it may be from Teut. schmach, contumelia. If so, Isl. smac, to contemn, may be viewed as the root. Or it may be more immediately allied to Su.-G. smack-a, to diminish, a derivative from smac, little. Hence, Magnus Ericson, king of Sweden, was contemptuously denominated Smack, as being a weak, contemptible prince, who suffered the Danes to deprive him of the province of Scania. Loccenii Hist. Suet., p. 106. Ihre, however, says that he was denominated Smackeer. Su.-G. smac, also signifies, vilis; Alem. smah, Germ. schmach, id.

Isl. smavick, opella, little labour. V. Smeik-r, pusillanimitas; Halderson, p. 301.

SMAIK, adj. 1. Small, puny.

—The smy on me smirks with his smaik smollat.

Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 49.

V. the s.

2. Contemptible, despicable.

"Than war the wordes, 'Smaik carll, I sell lay vpoun thi lypis.'" Aberd. Reg. 1525, V. 15, p. 613.

SMAIKRIE, s. 1. Pusillanimity, conduct characterizing a poltroon.

Smaikis had the wyte: I say the hous wes suir,
Had thay bene gracious with aue gollie quarrel.—

Thair fehill smaikrie I think ill to tell,
With luik lyke lyounes, and aa lytill done.
Fy drukin dastartis! ye haue schamit your sell.
That said na weill, and syne gaue our sa sone.
Scots Edinb. Castel, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 293.

2. Roguery.

Bot how this discharge was gotten,
When Holieglass is deid and rotten,
His smaikrie sall not be forgett.

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 315.

To SMAIR, SMAIRG, SMAIRIE, v. a. To bedaub, besmear, S. V. SMERG.

Teut. smear-en, &c., linere, ungere.

V. SMEAR-DOKEN.

From Teut. smær, Isl. smyr, unguentum. For in former times, in our country, this species of dock was much used for making a healing ointment.

SMAL, SMALE, SMALL, adj. [1. Small, little, humble]; low in rank, inferior in station;
contrasted with greit. [V. SMA']

[2. Weak, little worth, applied to liquor; as, small drink, beer of the weakest quality.
V. SMALL-DRINK.

3. Fine, as applied to cloth; as, smale Holland clath, Accts. L. H. Treas. i. 13, Dickson.

4. Narrow, as applied to ribbons; as, "xxj elne of smal ribbanis," &c. Ibid., i. 27.]

[SMALE-FOLK. People of the lower class,
Wyntown. V. under SMA']

SMALIE, adj. Little, puny, S. B.

Isl. smalig, Germ. smalih, id.

"On the swaird before the mansion, two smally dry-haired ponies were feeding." Glenfergus, ii. 267.

"The quenis grace—hauand respect to the greit and exhorbitant derth ryasin in this realme of victuallis,— and vnderstandand that the occasioun thair of is because of the superfluous cheir vit commonlie in this realme alaweill amangis small as greit men, &c. And gif ony vther small persoun or persounis wald presume to brek this present act, &c." Acts Mary 1551, Ed.
1814, p. 488.

The phrase smal' fock is still used in the same sense,
S.

SMALL DRINK. Beer of the weakest quality,
S. [V. under SMA']

"Gif ony person, or personis,—sall commit the fylthie sin of fornicatioun,—for the first fault, asweil the man, as the woman, sall pay the sowme of fourtie pundis. Or than baith be, and scho salbe imprisonit for the space of sucht dayis, thair fude to be breid and small drink, &c. For the secund fault; thair imprisonment salbe doublit, thair fude to be breid and watter allanerlie. Acts Ja. VI., 1567, Ed. 1814, p. 25.

Watter allanerlie, I need scarcely add, is opposed to small drink, as being a higher degree of penance.

SMALLIS, s. pl. In Smallis, in small quantities;
in smaus, S.

"Off the custome and exsyiss, of the soume of four pundis usual money of Scotland, of ilk tune of wyn to be topit, ventit, and sauld in smallis within the said burgh. Acts Ja. VI., 1621, Ed. 1814, p. 669.

"Ane propyne to my lord of Angus of ane pontiounne of wyne; and amangis all vther in smallis ane pon-tiounne of wyne." Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16; i.e., "besides many small articles;" or perhaps, "wine given in small quantities."

"Selling of his merchandis & gair in landwart in smallis, quhilk he promiseist to sell to nychtbouris in this toun in grytis," i.e., in wholesale. Ibid., V. 16.

[To SMARRICH, v. n. 1. To crowd together in a secret underhand manner; to talk, work, or eat in a hidling, clandestine manner, Banffs.

2. To work in a weak, unskilful manner, ibid.]

[SMARRICH, s. 1. A group of persons engaged in some underhand or secret talk or work, ibid.

2. The act of working or eating clandestinely, ibid.

3. Weak, unskilful work; also, the act of doing it, ibid.]

[SMARRICHIN, adj. 1. Weak or unskilful at work, ibid.

2. Fond of dainties, ibid.]

*To SMASH, r. a. 1. To break to shivers, S.

This is also used as a cant E. word.

"The deil's i' his face an' his heart yet for that black deed! I've mickle hopes he'll be hangit, or get his head smash'd for't yet." Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 28.

"Here, Geordy, tak haud of this kist—and see that ye dinna smash it amang the stanes, for it wiinna be an easy matter graping along the auld pier in the dark an' wi' sic a sea on." St. Kathleen, iii. 111.

2. To hew down, in battle, S.

You'll hear of us far better news,
When we attack like Highland trews,
To hash and slash, and smash and bruise.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 71.

And thro' they dash'd, and hew'd and smash'd,
Till fey men died awa, man.

Burns, iv. 363.

3. To beat severely, S.

"Let our faes only come on, I've smash haill dozens o' them.—I've shake them, I've pelt them," &c. Card.
Beaton, p. 119.

Germ. schmeiss-en, to smite, to beat; [Sw. dial.
smaske, from smake, to smack.]

SMASH, s. 1. The state of being broken to pieces, S. Dunt a-smash, broken in shivers.

"I wou'd na gang into the coach agen, for fear I shou'd hae—some o' my banes broken or dung a-smash." Journal from London, p. 6.

2. The shreds, fragments, or separate pieces of anything broken, S.

3. The sound of breaking, a crash, S.

Germ. schmeiss, a stroke. Gael. smuais, in pieces, broken in shivers.

SMASHING, adj. Large; as, "a smashin' chield," a strapping fellow, Ettr. For. V.

SMASH, v.

[SMAT, pret. Smote, Barbour, vi. 136.]

SMATCHET, SMATCHED, s. 1. A name given to a child, expressive of contempt and displeasure, S.; perhaps from small and chit.

It generally implies that the child is mischievous or ill-conditioned.

As offered thay that undought fra one to another :
Where that smatched had suked, sa sair it was to shed it,
But believe it began to buckle the brother.

Montgomery, Watson's Coll., iii. 21.

2. An opprobrious designation for a man, equivalent to Scurvy fellow.

Galloway with no mater mield him,
Except necessitie compeld him ;
Taking the world as God wald send it,
Having ane noble hart to spend it,
Bot ay the mair this smatcher gettis,
The closer garris he keep the yettis.

Leg. Ep. St. Andrews, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 340.

[SMATHIR, s. and v. Banffs. form of Smatter, q. v.]

SMATTER, s. 1. A heap of small objects in motion, or confusion, Fife; synon. Howdle.

[2. Confusion; also, the act of doing anything in an awkward or confused manner, Clydes., Banffs.]

3. A little person, weak and unskilful at work, Banffs.]

4. Smatters, trifles, things of little value; also, small sums, S.

To SMATTER, v. a. and n. [1. To huddle, to crowd or move confusedly; applied to children and small objects, S.]

2. To be busily engaged about trivial matters; or, to smatter about, to go about, under a pretence of work, doing very little, S.

3. To deal in small wares, S.

4. To smatter awa', to spend in a trifling way, [to waste], to expend on a variety of articles of little value, S.

5. To smatter awa', to consume victuals, by eating often, and little at a time, S.

[6. To work or speak in a weak, silly, or confused manner, Banffs.]

Su.-G. smaa, Isl. smaa, smatt, small.
Teut. smedder-en, ligurire, comessari.

[SMATTERIN. 1. As a s., the act of crowding or working in a confused manner, Banffs.]

2. As an adj., confused, weak, unskilful, ibid.]

SMATTIS, s. pl. "Small beer," Pinkerton; "probably the same with swatts, new ale," Sibb.

The lairils that drank guil wyn, and ail,
Ar now faine to drink smattis ;
They top the beir, and cheips the meil,
The lallie sawis the aitil.

Maidland Poems, p. 189.

The second is the most probable sense; from Teut. smeta, praedulcis, mulseus; nauseam provocans nimia dulcedine; as Sibb. has observed. We may add Isl. smellia, nauseabilis sapor, G. Andr.

* To SMEAR, v. a. To smear sheep, to apply a liniment of tar and grease, sometimes of butter or palm-oil, to the skins of sheep, to protect them from the cold in winter.

The sheep are all smear'd, or salved, at Martinmas with a mixture of tar and butter, S.

A.-S. smear-an, Isl. smyr-la, illiniire, ungere.

SMEAR, s. The mixture used in smearing, S.

"Mr. Loch of Rachan observes, that a smear, which shall, at once shoot the rain, kill vermin, and defend the wool from the withering effect of weather, without discolouring it, seems to be, hitherto, a desideratum in sheep-farming. He proposes a smear composed of butter, train oil, and turpentine." Agr. Surv. Peeb., p. 190.

SMEAR-DOKEN, s. An herb; named from a salve or ointment being obtained from it, S. B.

"Linn. informs us that, in Sweden, an ointment is made of the roots of the curled dock, for removing the itch or other cutaneous diseases. Flor. Succ., No. 314.

Under the word Docken, I have said, according to the best of my information in Angus, that this is "the common dock, so denominated, because an ointment was anciently made of it." But an intelligent friend inquires, if this be not rather the English Mercury or Allgood, Chenopodium bonus Henricus, Linn., and not the common Duck, Rumex? From the following quotation, he adds, it would appear that it is the former:

"Rub the person over with the juice of All-good, (called in Latin Bonus Henricus, others call it the Smear-docken) mixt with vinegar." Tippernalluch's Receipts, Ed. 1775, p. 12.

In Mearns this is called Mercury-doken.

SMEARING, s. The act of anointing sheep, S.

"Smearing is judged farther necessary to keep the wool in better quality, and in greater quantity; as, also, for a defence against cold and wet." Agr. Surv. Peeb., ibid.

SMEARING-HOUSE, s. The hut in which sheep are smear'd, S. A.

"He entered the hovel, which seemed to be intended for what is called, in the pastoral counties of Scotland, a smearing-house." Waverley, ii. 337.

SMEARING-STOOL, s. A stool with a spoked bottom, so as to admit the legs of sheep, to keep them steady during the operation of smearing, South of S.

SMEARY, s. 1. A sheep that has been smear'd or salved, Ettr. For.

"How could we turn our hand wi' our pickle hoggs i' winter, if their bit foggage war a' riven up by the auld raikin hypalts ere ever a smear's clute clattered on't?" Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 139.

2. "A person all besmeared," ibid.

[3. As an adj., applied to any viscid or greasy substance, Clydes.]

SMEDDUM, SMEADUM, s. pl. 1. The powder or finest part of ground malt; also called malt smeddum, Ang.

2. Powder, of whatever kind, S. O.

O for some rank, mercurial rozet,
Or fell, red smeddum!
Burns, iii. 229.

3. Sagacity, quickness of apprehension, S.

Wa wi' your stuff, he has nae smecalum;
He publish! — —
Morison's Poems, p. 114.

4. Metaph. used to denote spirit, mettle, liveliness, S.

A kindly lass she is, I'm seer,
Has fowth o' sense and smeddum in her,
And nae a swankie far nor near,
But tries wi' a' his might to win her.
Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 156.

5. "Smeddum,—good sense and spirit united;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

6. Vigour and liveliness as an author.

"He published—a volume of Moral Essays;—and they were greatly creditable to his pen, though lacking somewhat of that birr and smeddum, that is the juice and flavour of books of that sort." Ann. of the Par., p. 260.

A.-S. smelma, smedema, "farina, similago, pollen; meale, fine flower;" Sommer. Expl. by Lye as also signifying amyllum, "a kinde of medicine or meate, made of wheate three monthes old;" Cooper's Thesaur. Sir T. Elyot gives an account of the mode of preparation, in his Bibliotheca in vo. This, as being the finest part of the grain, would come at length metaph. to denote substance or sagacity, in relation to the mind.

SMEDIE, SMEDY, SMIDDY, s. A smithy, a smith's shop, S. smiddie. Smedy coill, the small kind of coal used by smiths, S.

—"Sindrie actis of parliament—daylie ar contravenit, and cheiffie [be] the transporting of—the said salt and grite [great] coillis vudir cullour of smely coill," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1487, Ed. 1814, p. 427.

SMEEG, s. A kiss, Roxb.; synon. Gaherosie.

Isl. smeck-r, gustus; Dan. smag, a taste; analogous to the S. phrase to prece the mou. Or, see what is said, vo. Smack.

To SMEEK, SMEIK, SMEAK, v. a. 1. To smoke, S.

But thof this town be smeekeit sair,
—Than ours there's nae mair fat an' fair.
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 114.

"A young woman being asked how she came to be so dun, her reply was, 'Wi' beaking ourselves in the sun a' summer, and smeeeking our heads o'er the fire a' winter, we country lasses never come to our right colours.'" Notes to Pennecuik's Tweeddale.

[2. To expose to the smoke of peat, straw, or green wood, in order to cure; as, to smeeek fish, i.e. to cure them. Also, to expose to the fumes of sulphur, chloride of lime, &c.,

&c. for various purposes; as, to smeeek yarn, to smeeek the room, &c., &c. West of S. V. REIST.]

3. To kill by smoke, S.

"He had clagg'd up the hives, as if the pair things had had the pestilence, and my bees were as dead as if they had been smeeeked." Pirate, iii. 170.

SMEEK, SMEIK, s. 1. Smoke; fumes, S.

I sat and ey'd the spewing reek,
That fill'd, wi' hoast—provoking smeeek,
The auld clay biggin.
Burns, iii. 100.

Hout, stop, my frien', an' fling yir een
To yon ascenlin' smeeek.
Tarraz's Poems, p. 144.

[2. A pungent or foul smell; close, foul atmosphere; as, "I canna bide the smeeek o't," Clydes.]

SMEEKY, adj. Smoky, S.B., also South of S.

—Oliver and Willy Buck
Sit o'er the lugs in smeecky muck.
Jacobite Relics, i. 119.
Thro' smeeekie flame they him adrest.
A Scott's Poems, p. 144.

SMEERIKIN, s. V. SMIRIKIN.

* SMEERLESS, adj. Pithless; silly, insipid. V. under SMERGH.

SMEETH, adj. Smooth, S. B. A.-S. smethe. Smeeeth in the mou, a phrase applied to a horse that has lost mark of mouth. Wyntown uses smeth.

SMEETHLY, SMETHELY, adv. Smoothly, S. B.

And he, as burland, sayd smethely,
"Man, will thou have of me justyng?"
Wyntown, viii. 35. 162.

SMEETHINESS, s. Smoothness, Clydes.

[SMEIK, s. and v. V. SMEEK.]

SMELT, s. 1. A name sometimes given to the fry of salmon. In E. it denotes the Salmo eperlanus, our Spirling, or Sperlin. V. SMOLT.

[2. A contemptuous name applied to a child, Banffs.]

To SMERG, SMAIRG, v. a. To bedaub or smear in whatever way; often applied to the salving of sheep, Roxb. [V. SMAIR, SMAIRG.]

SMERGH, s. 1. Marrow, pith, S. B.

2. Vigour of body, in general; also, vigour of mind, S. B.

Our sells are neiper-like, I warran,
For sense and smersh;
In kittle times, when faes are yarring,
We're no thought ergh.
Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore, st. 8.
Yet, gin I thought that ye were fit,
Or that ye had ha' smersh or wit—
Shirreff's Poems, xx.

A.-S. meary, Su.-G. merg, Teut. merghe, modulla, with the sibilant prefixed. It would appear that Isl. smior, Germ. schmer, &c., omnis generis pinguedo, as extended to butter, ointments, &c., have been, in the same manner, formed from this root; as marrow would be the first fat substance known.

SMERGHLESS, SMEERLESS, SMEARLESS, adj.

1. Pithless, unhandy, S. B.

Gin he 'bout Nory lesser fyke had made,
He had na been aae smearless at the trade.

Ross's Helenore, p. 17.

2. Insipid, languid; respecting manner, S. B.

"The uther wis a haave colour'd smearless tapie, wi' a great hassick o' hair hangin in twa-pennerts [penny-worths] about her haffata." Journal from London, p. 7.

It is transferred to the mind and its actings.

For they had gien him sic a fleg,
He look'd as he'd been doited; —
Syne wi' my targe I cover'd him,
Fan on the yerd he lies,
And sav'd his smearless saul; I think
Tis little to my praise.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 8, 9.

My smearless sangs hae ne'er had hap
Her notice to engage.

Skirref's Poems, p. 352.

3. Senseless, incapable of reflection, S. B.

But fat use will they be to him,
Wha in hudge-mudge wi' wile,
Without a gully in his hand,
The smearless fae beguiles!

Ibid., p. 11.

SMER-KERIEN, s. The spinal marrow, Fife. Merkerin, Angus.

The first part of the word, as pron. in Fife, is Smergh, marrow, q. v. For the latter part, see MERKERIN. It may be observed, however, that Isl. kiarni signifies medulla, nucleus, vis, cremor; Dan. kiaerne, Su.-G. kerne, id., whence A.-S. kynel, E. kernel of fruit.

[SMERT, adj. 1. Smart, quick, nimble, S.

2. Sharp, keen, quick-witted, ready in answer, S.

3. Sore, severe; as, a smert lickin, a severe beating, Clydes.

4. Well formed, good-looking, well dressed, trig; as, a smert wee leddie, ibid.]

[To SMERT, v. a. and n. 1. To smart, feel sore, suffer.

2. To smarten, urge on; to punish, Clydes.]

[SMERTLY, adv. Quickly, soon, Barbour, v. 596.]

[SMERTNESS, s. Used in each of the senses of the adj., S.]

SMERVY, adj. Savoury, S. B.

Nae henny beik that I did ever pree,
Did taste aae sweet and smervy unto me.

Ross's Helenore, p. 103.

Perhaps from Isl. smior. V. SMERGH.

The priest said grace, and a' the thrang fell tee,
And ply'd their cutties at the smervy bree.

Ross's Helenore, p. 116.

Smervy, however, retains the form of Dan. marv, marrow, with the letter s prefixed, which is common in words of Gothic origin.

SMETH, adj. "Smooth. Sax. smeth, aequus planus;" S.O. Wyntown uses smeth in this sense.

SMETH, s. A smith.

Amang thame self thay grisly smethis grete
With mekle force did forge, peyne, and bete, &c.
Doug. Virgil, 258, 23.

SMEUCH (gutt.), s. 1. Fume, smoke, smell, Aberd.

[2. Thick, drizzling rain, Banffs.]

Germ. schmauch, id. This has been traced to Gr. σμύχ-ew, cremare, because smoke is an exhalation from something that is burnt.

[To SMEUCH, v. n. 1. To smoke, fume; to burn slowly, causing much smoke, Banffs.

2. To drizzle very thickly, ibid.]

[SMEUCHIE, SMEUCHIN, adj. Very smoky, emitting much smoke; drizzly, ibid.]

[To SMEUCHTER, v. n. To burn slowly with much smoke: to drizzle slowly, ibid.; part. pr. smeachterin is used also as an adj.

[SMEUCHTER, s. A slowly burning, much smoking fire; also, a slight drizzling rain, ibid.]

SMEWY, adj. Savoury, S. B. Gl. Shirr.

This seems allied, as Sibb. observes, to Teut. smackelick, grati saporis.

SMICK, s. 1. Expl. "a shot, a tincture;" S.B., Gl. Tarras. Shot seems an error for spot.

Germ. schmach, nota, contumelia, ignominia; as an adj., vilis; Franc. schmach-en, vilescere: vilipendere.

[2. Anything small, dainty, faint, or worthless, Banffs.]

To SMIDDLE, v. a. and n. 1. To conceal, to smuggle, work by stealth, Ayrs.

"Aye ye may hide the vile scurrivaig,—an' hiddle an' smiddle the deeds o' darkness." St. Patrick, iii. 305.

Formed as if a frequentative from Su.-G. smyg-a, Isl. smjag-a, sensim penetrare; whence E. smuggle.

SMIDDY, s. A smith's workshop, S. Rudd.

"Some of the monks and friars, belonging to the different convents, were sure to come to the smiddy to converse with their grooms and to hear the news." R. Gilhaize, i. 4.

"Scot. smithy or smiddy, a smith's work-house;" Rudd. Gl. But smiddy is the general pronunciation. Smithy may nearly express that of Aberdeenshire.

—Sae I joined the smiddy thrang,
On hearth to ease my sockets.

A. Scott's Poems, 1805, p. 64.

Sw. smedia, id. A.-S. smiththe, fabrice; from Su.-G. smid-a, A.-S. smith-ian, cudere, to strike. Junius (Gl. Goth.) derives the v. from smith, planus; because one part of a smith's work is, by beating or otherwise, to make things smooth.

SMIETH, s. A bird.

"Besides here are—Geese, Gossander, Duck, and Malarl, Teal, Smieth, Widgeon," &c. Franck's Northern Memoirs, p. 181.

This, I suppose, is an errat. for Snyth, q. v.

To SMIKKER, v. n. "To smile in a seducing manner," Sibb. Gl. Dan. smigre, to flatter, to wheedle, to fondle, &c. Wolff.

Teut. smeeck-en, blandiri; whence smeecker, adulator, blandiloquens. Sw. smikk-a, blandiri, Seren. A.-S. smere-ian, may be different in form, merely from transposition. Although this word is not mentioned by Johns., Bailey and Seren. give it as E.

[SMILL, s. In smill, in small pieces, Shetl. Dan. smule, a small piece.]SMIOK, s. "A dish of good food;" Gall. Enc.To SMIOK, v. n. "To feast on the best;" ibid.

Allied most probably to Teut. smarcken, sapere, gustare, and its cognates, as Isl. smockun, gustatio.

SMIRCELIN, s. The Mya Truncata, a shell-fish, Shetl.

"M. Truncata, Smircelin;—is found in considerable quantities on sandy beaches, at low water." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 321.

To SMIRD, v. a. To gibe, Ayrs.

Isl. smá, parvus, and ord, verbum; q. to use small or contemptuous language. Su.-G. gifca ord signifies opprobrio lacerare.

SMIRIKIN, SMEERIKIN, s. A hearty kiss, S. smurachin, Fife. Perhaps from Su.-G. smirk-a, to caress.To SMIRK, v. a. To beat, to swinge, Aberd. To SMIRK, v. n. [To smile]. "To look affectedly soft or kind;" Johns.

The term in S. properly signifies to smile, strictly retaining the sense of A.-S. smere-ian, subridere.

SMIRK, SMIRKLE, SMIRTLE, s. A smile, a suppressed laugh, S.

[Smirkle, Smirtle, properly signify a gentle or suppressed smile, but are applied very generally to faint or suppressed laughter.]

Tis night—an' the moon's blushing smirckles appear,
Thro' the trees, sprinkling gowd on the lawn.

Donald and Flora, p. 116.

SMIRKIE, SMIRKIE-FACED, adj. Having a blithe, good-natured, smiling countenance, S.A.To SMIRKLE, SMIRTLE, SMURTLE, v. n. To laugh in a suppressed way, S.

"As this was said, Lethingtoun smirklit, and spack secretlie to the Quene in hir ear, quhat it was the Tabill hard not." Knox's Hist., p. 342.

Experience then smyrklyng myld,
We are na bairns to be begyld,
Quod he, and schuke his heid.

Cherrie and Stae, st. 77.

Away they went, then Wallace did revive,
And leugh, and smirtl'd at them in his sleeve.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 12.

And now I think I may be cocky,
Since fortune has smurtl'd on me.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 144.

Smirkle is most commonly used; smirtle is merely a corr.

SMIRKLE, SMIRTLE, SMURTLE, s. A smile, Aberd.

At last an' lang came ben the mutton,
When ilka face a smirtle put on.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 8.

SMIRL, SMURL, s. [1. A mocking smile, sneering laugh, Loth., Clydes.2. A roguish or mischievous trick; as, "I'll play him a smirl for that yet," Teviotd. This is nearly synon. with Pliskie.

He reaves his wife o' cash, an' claes,
Then takes leg-bale, an' aff he gaes,
An' in some distant place, wi' ease
Plays the same smirl.

T. Scott's Poems, p. 387.

A dimin. from Germ. schmier-en, illudere, risu notare, aut alia quacunq; contumelia verballi afficere; A.-S. bi-smere-ian "illudere, irridere, subsannare, dehonore, —to mock, to scoffe at, to taunt, to scorne, to dishonour or disgrace;" Somner. Hence bismieriend, illuser, a mocker, bismor, opprobrium, &c. As smere-an, and bismere-ian also signify illinere, polluere, to stain, to bedaub. Wachter justly views the term as extended to derision; "because scoffers resemble those who throw dirt at others," in order to bedaub them.

[To SMIRL, SMURL, v. n. To smirk, smile, or laugh in a mocking or mischievous spirit, Loth., Clydes.]SMIRR, s. Butter, Shetl.

Isl. Su.-G. and Dan. smioer, butyrum. But this seems merely a secondary sense; A.-S. smero, smern, denoting fat, grease; and the Isl. and Su.-G. terms. also Teut. smeer, and Germ. schmer, having the same general signification.

The root is probably meurg, medulla. V. SMEERGH.

[SMIRSIT, adj. Having white round the mouth; applied to sheep, Shetl.][SMIRTLE, s. V. SMIRKLE.]SMIT, s. A clashing noise, from E. smite.

—She heard a smit o' bridle reins,
She wish'd might be for good.

Lord William, Minstrelsy Border, iii. 265.

To SMIT, SMYT, v. a. 1. To stain, to pollute, to contaminate.

—Bot Memprys

Smytlyd wes wytht mony wys.

Wyntown, iii. 3. 124.

i.e., stained with many a vice.

Of Edw. I., in reference to his false conduct in pretending to act as arbiter in choosing a king for Scotland, it is said:—

Thare he heycht thame, wyth lawte,
Thare cas to ger decleryt be.
Hys lytil lawte nevyrtheles
He smytlyd thare in his process.

Ibid., viii. 5. 92.

2. To infect, as with a contagious disorder.

"That the Bischopis, Officialis, and Denis inquire diligentlie in thair visitatioun of ilk parochie kirk, gif ony be smittit with lipper." Acts Ja. I. 1527, c. 118. Ed. 1568.

A.-S. smit-an, Su.-G. smitt-a, Belg. smett-en, polluer, inquinare. The original idea is to besmear, Moes.-G. bismail, inquinat. Su.-G. smitt-a, also signifies to infect. Hence smittosam, contagious, A.-S. smitting, id.

SMIT, SMYT, SMYTE, s. 1. A stain literally used.

Thair men also mon be bot smyt or smoit.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 142.
Small sweet amaraigle, swelling but smit of smot.
Ibid., p. 202.

2. A stain, in a moral sense.

Bot quhat at sal be put in write
Of falsheid sall bere nakyn smyte.
Wynetown, ix. 20. 54.
A.-S. smitta, Belg. smette, macula. V. SMOT.

SMITCH, s. 1. A stain, a speck, Clydes., Etr. For.

2. Used also in a moral sense, a slur; ibid.

From the same origin with Smit, or immediately from Su.-G. smuts-a, contaminare.

SMITTIN', adj. Same with Smittle, Aberd.

SMITTLE, adj. Infectious, contagious, S.; smittin, Aberd.

The covetous infatuation
Was smittle out o'er all the nation.
Ramsay's Poems, i. 331.

Belg. smettelick, id. A. Bor. smittleish.

When Monseir gaid vnto his mess,
Into ane gallerie neir besyde,
Thair wald this halie bischope byde,
Saying, forsuith, it was not smittel.

Leg. Ep. St. Andros, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 333.
"To smittle, to infect;" Ray.

SMITTLENESS, s. Infectiousness, S.

SMITTRAL, adj. Same with Smittle, Fife.

SMITCHCOCK, s. A grilled or broiled chicken, Aberd.

From Germ. schmitz-en, to soil or smut, q. a cock discoloured with the smoke in broiling; unless it be from Teut. smets-en, smetsch-en, to feast, epulari, figurare, Kilian. It may, however, be a ludicrous designation, as containing a play on the Germ. word smutzcock, a paltry or dirty cook.

* SMITH, s. A blacksmith, S.

"About this time he came to Garfield, in the parish of Mauchlin, to the House of Matthew Hog, a smith to his trade." Walker's Feden, p. 67.

TO SMIT THOUMS. To form a contract by each party wetting the fore-part of his thumb with the point of his tongue, and then smiting or pressing the thumbs together, which confirms the bargain. "Weet (i.e., wet) thumbs," is also used S.

SMIT-THUMBS, s. An ancient pledge for the fulfilment of a bargain, ibid.

This is obviously the same with THUMB-LICKING, q. v. Smit is not to be viewed, I apprehend, as synon. with E. smite, q. strike hands; but to be traced to Su.-G. smitt-a, Isl. smet-a, Moes.-G. smait-an, illinere; q. anoint or besmear thumbs.

To this expression another is added; "Now, keep your day, or I'll drap a bone in the wall," i.e., drop a bone in the well. When the person, who gave his right hand as pledging himself for the fulfilment of his paction, failed to do so; he who was disappointed, took a bone, and having spit upon it in token of his giving over the other party to all the direful consequences of breach of faith, dropt the bone into the deepest draw-well in the neighbourhood, there to remain and rot. As this bone decayed, it was superstitiously believed that the hand pledged would, in similar gradation, shrink, and decay, and ultimately drop off.

[Another form of thumb-pledging is still used, in which the pledger simply presents the thumb of the right hand and says "There's my thoom, I'll ne'er beguile ye."]

SMLEFANGER, s. [Errat. for Smel-fanger, fry-catcher, Orkn. Dan. smule, small thing; fange, to catch. V. SMILL.]

Avis anate domestica minor, piscibus victitans. Smlefanger dicta est, dorso nigricante. Sibb. Scot., p. 22.

Like Holland's description of the Scarth :

—The Scarth a fysh-fangar,
And that a perfyte.

Houdate, i. 14.

SMOCH, (gutt.), s. The stifling smoke that comes from the burning of wet rotten wood, especially when newly put on the fire, Roxb.

TO SMOCH, v. n. To burn and smoke like wood of this description, ibid.

From the guttural pronunciation, this term would seem to retain the sound of Dan. smoeg-er, to smoke.

TO SMOCHER, (gutt.), v. n. To breathe with difficulty; as, "Smocherin wi' the cauld," having a great struggle in breathing in consequence of a severe cold, Aberd.; synon. Smore, S.

Perhaps merely a change of Smore by the insertion of the guttural.

[SMOD, SMUD, s. A dirty speck or mark, Shetl. Dan. smuds, Sw. smuts, id.; E. smut.]

SMOGHIE, (gutt.), adj. Close, implying the idea both of mist and of sultriness, Fife.

This seems originally the same with E. Moky, Muggy. Isl. mugga, aer succidus et nubilo humidus; G. Andr., p. 181.

[SMOIRD, part. pa. Smothered, Lyndsay, Thrie Estatics, l. 3224.]

SMOIT, s. Expl. as denoting one who talks obscenely, Gall. Encycl.; evidently allied to E. smutty.

[SMOITY, s. A woollen night-cap, Shetl.]

SMOKE, s. A beautiful figure used, in some Northern counties, to denote an inhabited house, S.

"In 1680,—so many families perished for want, that, for 6 miles in a well inhabited extent, within the year there was not a smoke remaining." P. Duthil, Morays. Invern. Statist. Acc., iv. 316.

The idiom, is Gael., but it is also used in Su.-G. Rock not only denotes smoke, but a dwelling. Notat domicilium, focum; unde betula fuer huarie rock, pro quavis domo vel familia vectigal pendere; Ihre.

SMOLT, SMOUT, adj. Fair, clear, mild, applied to the weather.

—Mirrie madinis, think not lang;

The wedder is fair and smolt.

Pebbis to the Play, st. 6.

Syne gyf brycht Titan list to schaw his face,—

Makand the heuinys fare, clere and schene,—

The weddir smout, the fyrmament serene.—

Doug. Virgil, 472, 28.

A.-S. smolt, serenus, placidus; smolt weeder. Teut. smoel weeder, aura tepida. Belg. smout, blandus.

SMOLT, SMELT, SMOLTE, s. 1. The term used to denote the fry of salmon, S. smout.

"His Grace—ratifies and apprieves the former actes maid for punishing of slayers of read fish, smoltes, and frye of all fishes in forbidden time." Acts James VI., 1597, c. 261.

"They [salmon fry] are called samlets, and sometimes smelts, but are generally known among our country people by the name of salmon smouts." Dr. Walker, Prize Essays Highland Society for S., ii. 351.

Is not this learned naturalist mistaken in applying to them the name smolet, which properly denotes a distinct species? V. PAR.

Perhaps from [Dan. smule, Sw. smula, a small thing, a crumb], because of the smallness of their size.

2. Metaph. used to denote a child, S.

To SMOO, v. n. To smile in a placid or benignant manner, Fife; Smue, Loth.

SMOO, s. A smile of this description, ibid.

The idea is not very distant from that of Germ. schmecken, blandiri; Dan. smj-er, id. V. SMUE.

[SMOOCHTER, s. and v. V. SMEUCHTER.]

To SMOOK, SMUIK, v. a. To suffocate by means of sulphur; a term applied to the barbarous mode of destroying bees in order to gain their honey; or, as it is expressed, to put them down, Teviotd. V. SMEEK.

Teut. smoock-en, smuyck-en, fumare; Germ. schmuck-en, fumo necare, Wachter.

[To SMOOK, v. a. and n. 1. To put away, to hide, to conceal, West of S.

2. To fit or draw on, as a glove or stocking, Shetl.]

3. To smook about, to go about clandestinely, seeking to pilfer any thing that is exposed, S.

SMOOKIE, adj. Pilfering, addicted to petty thieving, ibid.

[SMOOKIT, adj. Sly, cunning, artful, Shetl.]

Su.-G. smug-a, sensim penetrare, reptando se penetrare; Isl. smjugg-a, penetrare, repero; furtim perrepere; Verel. Ind.: smugga, rima, a chink, a place which can be entered by creeping. A.-S. smug-an, exactly corresponds; "serpere, to creep by little and little," Somner. Belg. smugg-en, "to do underhand," Sewel. Hence E. smuggle. Ihre views smua, little, as the origin; Wachter prefers Isl. miuk, humilis, of mygia, humiliare.

To SMOOL, SMYLE, v. a. To secure by underhand means, to filch, Ettr. For.

A.-S. sméal, subtilis; or a dimin. from smug an, serpere, reptare, whence smuggela, rabbits. Belg. smuylen, to smoke hiddenly, is used in a sense nearly allied. Daar smuult iets quads; There's a contriving underhand of some evil design; Sewel.

To SMOOST, v. n. To burn gradually away, without blazing, Roxb. V. SMUIST.

[To SMOOT, v. a. To hide stealthily, Shetl. V. SMOOK.]

[SMOOTERIN, SMOUTERIN, part. adj. Concealing a thing in order to gain some private end, ibid.]

SMOOTRIKIN, adj. Tiny and active; a fondling epithet.

My little wee smootrikin mous.

Old Song.

[Used also as a s., a puny person or animal, Banffs.]

[SMORA, s. Clover, Shetl. Dan. smor, butter: probably because clover enriches the milk of cows fed on it.]

To SMORE, SMURE, SMOIR, v. a. 1. To smother, to suffocate with smoke, S. Smoar, Westmorel.; smoore, Lancash.

"He was sae browden'd upon't [his pipe], that he was like to smore us a' in the coach wi' the very ewder o't." Journal from London, p. 21.

O. E. id. "I smore, I strangle one, or stop his brethe. Je suffoque. I was almoste smored in my bedde to nyght." Palsgr. B. iii. F. 365, a.

2. To suffocate, to choke, to suppress.

"The carefulness of this world, and the desaitfulness of riches, smoris the world that it beris na frute." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 72, b. By this term he renders suffocat in the Vulgate.

3. To extinguish. Smure the candle, put it out, Aberd.

4. To conceal, to hide, S.

—I sal help to smore your falt, leif brother.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 272, 37.

Therefor gif thou has ene, behald

How they wald smoir thy fame.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 42.

5. Applied to the prevention of legal prosecution or punishment. To smoir the law.

—"That thay sall tak na bud nor money for judgment to be done, or not to be done, throw the quhilk the law may be smoirit, or justice remane unexecuted." Balfour's Pract., p. 547, 548.

A.-S. smor-an, Teut. smoor-en, suffocare, extinguere.

To SMORE, SMURE, v. n. To suffocate. I was like to smore: I was in danger of being suffocated, S.

He suld hane place amangis the laif,
That his hie honour suld not smure,
Considering what he did indure.

Lyndsay's Squier Meldrum, 1594, A. II. b.

[SMQRE, SMURE, SMOIR, s. 1. A stifling smoke or atmosphere, Loth., Clydes., Banffs.

2. Snow falling or drifting in a close stifling manner, ibid.

3. A close drizzling mist: clouds of mist or of dust in motion, ibid.]

4. A smore of rain, close small rain, without wind, Fife; the same with Smurr, q. v. Hence, SMORIE, adj. A smorie day, a day distinguished by close small rain without wind, a close atmosphere, Fife.

SMOR'D THOW. V. THOW.

SMOT, SMOTE, SMOIT, s. 1. A stain, in a general sense, synon. smad, S. B.

Their men also mon be bot smyt or smoit.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 142.

"Smot, corruption occasioned by mildew;" Lord Hailes. But this sense seems too much limited, as the term is here used. The phrase appears to have been proverbial, denoting pollution of any kind.

2. Apparently, the mouldiness which gathers on what is kept in a damp place. V. SMIT, s.

3. The distinguishing mark put on sheep, by means of ruddle or otherwise, S. A.

4. A certain number of sheep marked in one way is called a smot.

5. Moral pollution; a stain affecting the character.

—"Our souerane Lord, and his noble progenitouris kingis of Scotland, & liegis of the samin, has bene first or at the leist with the first that euire acceptit the cristin faith, and bene maist obedient sonnias to ouris haly faderis the papis of Rome, and the auctorite apostolik, without ony manere of smot, violaciaune, or defectione," &c. Acts Ja. V. 1535, Ed. 1814, p. 335.

"We maist humelic and earnestlie besekis thy Majestie—to luke in the mirrour underwryttin set up be the finger of God,—quhairin every stait may see his smot." Winyet's First Tractat, Keith's Hist. App. 209.

Lancash. "smit, smut, a black spot;" Gl.

Su.-G. smuts, Germ. schmutz, macula, sordes. V. SMAD.

To SNOT, SMOTT, v. a. 1. To stain, in whatever way.

—Behald thame smottit quite
Of his rede blude, and harneys theron out smyte.

Doug. Virgil, 141, 23.

—Luvaris suld be leill and trew;
And ladeis suld all thingis eschew,
That ma thair honor smot.

Scott, Chron. S. P., iii. 154.

2. To mark with ruddle, tar, &c., S. V. SMAD, v.

SMOTTRIT, part. pa. Besmeared.

His smottrit habit ouer his schulderis lidden,

Hang peugely knyt with ane knot togidder.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 47.

Sordidus, Virg. V. BESMOTTRIT.

SMOUPSIE, s. A stripling, a youth, one not fully grown, S. B.

To SMOUSTER, v. n. To eat clandestinely, Fife.

Germ. smauss-en, compotare; or Teut. smuyster-en, given as synon. with smeer-en, which signifies primarily to anoint, and secondarily to play the glutton, q. to grease the entrails.

SMOUT, adj. Fair, clear, mild; applied to the weather. V. SMOLT.

SMOUT, s. 1. The fry of salmon. V. SMOLT, s.

2. A small trout of the speckled kind, Fife.

3. Any creature small in size, often used for a diminutive person, S.

[SMOUTERIN, part. adj. V. under SMOOT.]

To SMOUTTER, v. n. To eat often, although little at a time, S. B.

Su.-G. smult-a, pitissare, to taste by little and little. There derives the v. from smac, parvus; "for what," says he, "is it to sip, but by small though frequent tastings to prolong the pleasures of the appetite?"

[SMUCK, s. 1. A woollen shoe, made of several folds of cloth quilted together, Shetl.

2. A contemptible person, ibid.; smuggart, Banffs.]

SMUDDOCH, s. "A bad burning fire—more smoke than blaze;" Gall. Enc. Gael. smud, vapour, smoke; smuid-am, to smoke.

[SMUE, s. Thick, stifling smoke; close, drizzling rain, Banffs.]

[To SMUE, v. n. To smoke; to drizzle, ibid.]

[SMUEIE, adj. Close and drizzling, ibid.]

To SMUE, SMUDGE, SMUGG, v. a. and n. [1. To squeeze through a narrow place, Shetl.

2. To strip off, to pull off, ibid.

3. To slip away stealthily, ibid.]

4. To laugh in one's sleeve, to laugh in a clandestine way, Loth. Dumf. Roxb.

Scowldroupe cam to our dwellin',
And, wi' serious smudgin' leuk,
Spier'd at Auntie, gin the Callan
Wanted either cleps or crook.
Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 104.

Then with new keenness wad they caper,
He sliely smudg'd to see them vaper,
And, if some glakit girl should snapper,
He'd gi' a wink, &c.
Poetical Museum, p. 61.

It is frequently conjoined with the v. to Launch. It is understood as often used to denote an attempt to suppress risibility; or at least to guard it from the observation of others, Ettr. For.

"Na, ye needna smudgye and laugh at me now, Janet; for its true." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 312.

To "smudgye, to try to suppress smiles, or laughing;" Gall. Enc.

SMUDGE, SMUG, s. A suppressed laugh, Loth., Roxb., Clydes.; often "a smudge o' a laugh."

Germ. schmuts-en, subridere, blande et placide ridere. Wachter seeks a Gr. origin; μειδίασθαι, id. But it is undoubtedly allied to Su.-G. smys-tr-a, renidere, subridere. The radical term seems to be mys-a, id.

To SMUG, v. n. Expl. "to toy amorously; to embrace, as if smuggling enjoyment;" Picken's Gl., Ayrs.

We'll cuddle baith amang the fug,
An' while we hug, an' kiss, an' smug,
I'll haud thee firm by ilka lug,
An' ca' thee my ain Davy.

Picken's Poems, i. 176.

A.-S. smug-an, serpere, "to creep by little and little;" Isl. smug-a, id. Su.-G. smyg-a, sensim penetrare, reptando se insinuat. Ihre views the E. term smuggle as allied.

SMUGLY, adj. "Amorous, sly, being at the same time well dressed;" Sibb. Gl.

He refers to Teut. smeeckelick, blandus. *From the latter idea, however, it might seem allied to Su.-G. smuck-a, ornare, Belg. smuyck-en, Germ. schmuck-en; Su.-G. smuch, Alem. smug, Isl. smock-r, pulcher, elegans, E. smug.

[SMUGGAR, SMUGGART, s. 1. An eel, Shetl.

2. A little person with a disagreeable temper, Banffs. V. SMUE, v.]

To SMUIL, v. n. To sneak; to smuil awa', to sneak away, Loth.

Isl. smug-a, Su.-G. smyg-a, to sneak into corners, Seren; A.-S. smig-an, serpere, whence smygela, cuniculi.

[SMUILTER, s. V. SMOILTER.]

[SMULTIE, s. A lot of odds and ends or small things; also, the rabble, Shetl.

Dan. smaa, little, small, mean.]

[SMUIN, part. adj. Sly, sneaking, Orkn. V. SMUE.]

To SMUIST, SMOOST, v. n. 1. To be in a smouldering state; as, "to smuist and burn," Clydes., Ettr. For.

For, if they raise the taxes higher,
They'll set alunt that smoostin' fire.

Hogg's Scot. Pastorals, p. 16.

2. To emit smoke; "Smuisted, smoked;" Gall. Enc.

Ir. smuid-im, to smoke.

SMUIST, SMOOST, s. 1. The act of burning in this way, Roxb.

2. A smouldering smell, Clydes.

3. It gives the idea of a smell that threatens suffocation, as of smoke in a kiln, of sulphur, &c., Roxb.

4. Also applied to smoke; "Smuist, disagreeable smoke;" Gall. Enc.

This must be radically the same with Smush, s. 1. Fife, and Smudgye, A. Bor. Ir. Gael. smuid, vapour, smoke.

To SMUISTER, v. a. To smother; applied to air, Clydes.

Nae sun shines there, the nochie air
Wi' smuisteran' rowks stinks vylid.

Ballad, Edin. Mag., Oct. 1818, p. 328.

Undoubtedly a derivative from Smuist.

To SMUKE, SMUIK, v. a. and n. To smoke, Roxb.; as, "to smuik bees." V. SMOOK, v.

SMUKE, s. Smoke, ibid.

[SMULE, SMUIL, SMILL, s. The small pieces, fragments, leavings; state of disintegration; in smill, in pieces, Shetl. Dan. smule, a small particle.]

[To SMULE, SMUIL, SMILL, v. n. 1. To crumble, fall in pieces, Clydes., Orkn.

2. To slip through one's fingers, to slip away, ibid.

3. To smuil awa', to sneak away, to slip away stealthily, Loth.]

4. To smule in, to use wheedling or cajoling means. One who curries favour with another, is said to smule in wi' him, S.

SMULACHIN, adj. Puny, looking poorly, S. B.

Perhaps from Su.-G. smola, a crumb, the smallest part of any thing, Dan. smule, Isl. mole, id. from mol-a, contundere, confringere; whence our mulin, a crumb. Gael. smeilag, however, is expl. "a pale puny female."

To smule in with one, S. is to be in a state of intimacy, literally, to crumble into the same dish with one. As Su.-G. smul-a, signifies to crumble, the phrase might seem originally the same. Wideg. renders Sw. smil-a, to curry favour; to fawn, to cringe. Germ. schmeichl-en, blandiri, blande dictis mulcere. Mit smehlichen, blandum, Willeram; ersmiel-en, blandiri.

To SMULT, v. a. To crop very short; as, "to smult a tree," to cut off the branches above the cleft; "to smult the head of a bairn," to cut its hair too close, Ayrs.

Su.-G. smol-a, comminuere; smola, smula, pars rei minima. This has been viewed as formed from smo, pavus, and mola, fragmentum, q. what remains after grinding. I can scarcely view smult as allied to O. Fr. esmould-re, to whet, to make sharp.

SMURACHIN, s. A stolen kiss, Fife. V. SMIRIKIN.

[SMURACK and SMURAGH, V. under SMURE.]

To SMURE, v. a. To smother. V. SMORE.

SMURACK, SMURAGH, s. [1. A slight smoke, a puff o' reek, Ayrs.]

2. A slight drizzle, a summer shower of rain, Mearns; a dimin. from Smurr, q. v.

3. Peat dust, S.

At first view this might seem formed from Teut. smour-en, smoor-en, to smoke, to emit vapour; whence smoor, smoke, vapour. But it seems more immediately allied to the Celtic. For Ir. smur, smurach, are expl. "dust, dross;" O'Reilly. The Teut. and Celt. terms seem, however, to be radically the same.

SMURR, s. A drizzling rain, Ayrs.

"Smurr, light rain, rather heavier than dew;" Gall. Enc.

This term is equivalent to Daggy, denoting such rain as scarcely exceeds mist. Used also Perth. and Renfrew.

It's SMURRIN, v. impers. It rains slightly, Ayrs., Renfr.

Teut. smoor, fumus, vapor; smoor-en, vaporare.

[To SMURL, v. n. 1. To eat little and slowly; to nibble in secret, Banffs.]

2. To waste imperceptibly, ibid.]

[SMURLIN. 1. As an adj., fond of dainties; given to eating in secret, ibid.

2. As a s., the act of eating or nibbling in secret; the act of wasting imperceptibly, ibid.]

SMURLIN, s. A species of shell-fish, Shetland.

"The smurlin or smuthlin is the Mya truncata, remarkable for a shrivelled leathery process at one end." Neill's Tour, p. 93.

[SMURR, s. A drizzling rain, Ayrs. V. under SMURE.]

To SMURTLE, v. n. To smirk. V. SMIRTLE.

SMUSH, s. 1. A disagreeable sulphurous smell, occasioned by smoke and dust, Fife. Smudje, a suffocating smell, A. Bor. Gl. Grose.

2. Dirt, filth, Aberd.

Yer face is barked o'er wi' smush;
Gae wash yersel, an' get a brush.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 5.

[SMUSH, SMUSHY, adj. Dirty, foul, stinking.]

SMUSHAGH, s. A suffocating smell arising from a smothered fire, Ang.; same with Smush. Stushach, synon.

It nearly resembles Germ. schmutz, Su.-G. smuts, sordes, filth, schmutz-en, to defile. If this be the origin, there is merely a transition from external pollution to what is offensive to the olfactory nerves.

To SMUSH, v. a. and n. 1. To bruise, to reduce to small particles, to grind to powder, Roxb.; synon. with Smash, q. v.

2. To eat bit by bit and secretly anything got in an improper manner, S.

[3. To waste or decay slowly, Banffs., Clydes.]

Although this might seem originally the same with Smash, it more nearly resembles Gael. smuais, broken in shivers; [but the term is prob. of Scand. origin, and allied to Sw. dial. smaske, from smake, to smack. V. under SMASH, Skeat's Etym. Dict.]

SMUSH, s. [1. A bruised, broken, or crumbled state.] Gane to smush, reduced to a friable or crumbled state, like potatoes too much boiled, &c., Roxb.

2. A slight drizzling rain, Ayrs.

This is evidently of Dan. origin; smusk-er, "to drizzle, to fall in small and slow drops; smusk, thin small rain;" Wolff.

[3. Fragments, leavings, a lot of scraps, Ayrs.]

"He seeth him gaping for lyfe lyke a hungry dogge gaping for a smush bone." Z. Boyd's Balme of Gilead, p. 107.

[SMUSHACH, s. Anything small, or broken into small pieces, Banffs.]

2. Applied to a dainty, spruce person of small stature, ibid.]

[SMUSHLACH, s. Same with Smush, s. 1 and 3, Perth.]

[SMUSHLE, s. 1. A lot of tit bits; a dainty meal or mouthful; applied to any nice thing eaten in secret, also, to the act of eating in secret, Perth., Banffs.]

2. Applied to one who is fond of dainties, or who nibbles in secret, Banffs.]

To SMUSHLE, v. n. [1. Same with Smush, s. 2 and 3, ibid.]

2. To drizzle, Ayrs.

Obviously a diminutive from Smush, s., drizzling rain, q. v.

SMUSTER, s. A large cluster of things, Fife; synon. Muther.

SMUTCHACK, s. A term for a child; apparently synon. with Smatchet, Aberd.

An', Tibby, bring him ben some meat,
Ye senseless smutchack.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 4.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. smuts-a, inquare, q.
"dirty little creature."

SMY, s. [A mean person.] "Pitiful fellow," Pinkerton.

—The sm on me smirks with his smak smollat.
Dunbar, Mailland Poems, p. 43.

—Thou subteil sm—
Quhat wenis thow to degraill my hie estait,
Me to decline as judge, curst creature!
Palace of Honour, l. 64.

The lown may lick his vomit, and deny
His shameless sawse, like Satan slavish sm;
Whose manners with his mismaile members here
Doth correspond, as plainly doth appear.

Poloart, Watson's Coll., iii. 23.

Su.-G. smyg-a, reptando se insinuare, Germ. schmiegen, to creep; also, to humble one's self, to present an humble petition. Dan. sm-er, to fawn, to flatter; Isl. sming-a, to insinuate gradually by artful means. Ibre views smaa, parvus, as the origin; sese exiguum veluti facere.

[SMYLLEACH, s. A gun, fowling-piece,
Shetl.]

To SMYSLE. v. a. To sear, Upp. Clydes.
V. SMERGH.

Allied perhaps to Isl. smialla-a, fabrefacio, as referring to the work of the smithy; or a diminutive, from Su.-G. smuts-a, or Germ. schmitz-en, pollucere, inquinare.

[To SMYSTER, v. n. To be idle or idling, to work in a lazy, listless, dreaming manner; also, to talk or laugh to one's self, as in a day dream, Clydes., Banffs.]

[SMYSTER, s. 1. An idle, listless, or dreamy state, ibid.

2. The act of working in such a state, ibid.

3. A person given to idling or listlessness, or one who is listless in work, ibid.]

SMYSTERIN', part. adj. [Idling, dreaming, working listlessly.] To sit smysterin', to sit beside the fire, brooding over it idly or triflingly, Clydes. "What are ye sittin' smysterin' at?" Smuisterin', Roxb.

[Prob. allied to Sw. smygga, to sneak, to slink.]

[SMYTCH, SMYTCHER, s. V. under SMYTE.]

SMYTE, s. 1. A small bit, a particle, a jot, a grain, Moray, S.

[2. A puny, insignificant person, Clydes., Banffs.]

Hence Smytrie, q. v. Smatt is the neut. of the Isl. adj. signifying small. Germ. schmitz has been referred to, by an ingenious correspondent, as signifying a cut or portion. But this must surely be an error for schnitz.

SMYTCH, SMYTCHER, s. A little impudent person; a contemptuous name for a child, S.; synon. Smatcher, Smatchet.

"I ken vera well that ye dinna like to hae sic a wee smytch o' a partner as me." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 108.

"Did I think, when I used to send the impudent smytcher, wi' my haining o' twa three pounds to the bank, that he was contriving to commit sic a highway robbery on me at last?" The Entail, iii. 100. V. SMATCHET.

Su.-G. smaket signifies contemptus.

SMYTRIE, [SMYTRAL, SMYTERAL], s. A numerous collection of small individuals, Ayr.

Himself, a wife, he thus sustains,
A smytzie o' wee dudlie weans,
An' nought but his han' darg, to keep Them right and tight in thak an' rape.

Burns, iii. 4.

Nearly allied to smutters, and from the same source.

[SMYTUM, SMYTEM, s. A small hole wrought in a sail for a reef-point, Shetl.]

[To SNAAR, v. a. To catch, sieze; to snaar a tide, to catch a tide at a particular stage of it, Shetl., Goth.; snara, to pass quickly, run fast.]

[SNAAR, s. 1. The turn of the tide, the slack between the ebb and flood, ibid.

2. The loop of cord forming the fulcrum of a bismar, which is shifted along the graduated lever in the process of weighing, ibid.

3. A snare, a noose, a gin, ibid.]

[SNAARA-PIN, s. A primitive contrivance for catching fish before hooks were introduced into Shetl.

[The snaara-pin consisted of a wooden pin attached to the line with the bait on it. When the fish swallowed the bait, the pin came across its mouth, and the line was pulled smartly. Dan. snare, a noose, a gin.]

SNAB, s. 1. The projecting part of a rock or hill, a rough point; a term used both in the North and South of S.

"There is a tradition universally prevalent through this part of the country that formerly the river Tay occupied a very different bed from what it does at present;—that at the Snabs of Drimmie, it sent off a portion of its waters, which entered this parish between the hills of Forgan and Dron." P. Longforgan, Perth. Statist. Acc., xix. 554.

Then knees an' elbows like a crab,

Spraul up yoursel yon dizzy snab.

A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 122.

2. The bank, rock, or hill itself, which projects.

This has been defined, I believe very accurately, "the brow of the steep ascent."

Perhaps from Belg. snabbe, snebbe, a beak or snout, Isl. snoppa, id.; just as Su.-G. nabb, a promontory, is from nacbb, a beak.

SNAB, s. 1. A cant term for a shoemaker's or cobbler's boy, S. A. snob, S. B. allied perhaps to Teut. snipp-en, to cut.

2. A cant term for a shoemaker, S.

To flame as an author our snab was sae bent,
He ne'er blinn'd a styme till he gat it in prent.
Picken's Poems, ii. 132.

SNACHEL, (gutt.), s. The same with Snaggerel, q. v., Dumfr. V. SNAUCHLE, s. sense 2.

SNACK, adj. 1. Clever, alert, quick in action. Be snack, be quick, do not lose time, S.

In grit affairs ye had not bein sae snack,
About the ruleing of the common-weil.
Sample, Evergreen, i. 77.

"Ye're very snack, i.e., very nimble, ready, quick, Scot." Rudd. vo. Snak.

By this time Lindy is right well shot out;—
Nae bursen bailch, nae wandought or misgown,
And snack, and plump, and like an apple round.
Ross's Helenore, p. 16.

Snack is evidently opposed to bursen bailch, q. one who is so lusty as to be unfit for exertion.

The term is radically the same with Isl. snoggy, celer, citus; whence snoggy, cito. This seems formed from anu-a, verti, which Ibre views as including the idea of celerity, and as allied to A.-S. snude, celeriter, snell, citus; Mod. Sax. sneidig, celer, Isl. snudur, snottur, id. Sw. sno, cito auferre, snugg-a, clanculum subducere, snafu-a, praepropere eundo titubare, &c. V. Ibre, vo. Snabb.

2. Acute, quick of apprehension, S.

The knack I learned frae an auld aunty,
The snackest of a' my kin.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 238.

3. [Clever]; applied to the product of genius, but improperly.

These keep my fancy on the wing,
Something that's blyth and snack to sing,
And smooth the runkled brow.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 452.

[SNACK, s. A person of keen, active disposition; a close-fisted person in bargaining, S. Snackit is also used.]

SNACKIE, adj. [Expert in bargaining.] "Full of tricks and quirks."

This seems to be nearly peculiar to Moray.

Tam Tod was an auld-farran birkie,
Weel versed i' the gawds o' the sex;
Slee, snackie, and willie, and quirkie,
And famous for pliskies and tricks.
Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 297.

This seems merely a dimin. from SNACK.

SNACKLY, adv. 1. Cleverly, adroitly, S.

2. With intelligence, S.

How snackly cou'd he gi'e a fool reproof,
E'en wi' a canty tale he'd tell aff loof!
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 14.

SNACKUS, s. A flip, Mearns.

Probably from the same origin with Snack, q. v., as denoting what is done with celerity: or as Dan. knepp-er signifies both to crack, and to fillip, perhaps from knack-er, Teut. knack-en, to crack, with the sibilant prefixed, as expressive of the sharp noise made by a fillip.

To SNACK, v. n. "To snap or bite suddenly, as a dog," Gl. Sibb. V. SNAK.

SNACK, s. A morsel swallowed hastily, a slight repast, S. Provinc. E.

Ramsay speaks of them—

—that drink and dinna pay,
But tak' a snack and run away.
Poems, i. 302.

"And so, my young friend, we'll have a snack here at the Hawes, which is a very decent sort of a place." Antiquary, i. 21.

[SNACLET, adj. Light coloured in body, with a white face; applied to sheep, Shetl.]

[To SNAF, v. n. To sniff in a noisy, surly, or angry manner, like a vicious dog; also, to find fault in surly manner, Clydes.

Intermediate between sniff and snuff. V. under SNAP in Skeat's Etym. Dict.

To SNAG, v. a. To cut off branches with an axe or bill, Dumfr. V. SNECK, SNEG, v.

SNAG, s. 1. A branch or broken bough of a tree, S.; aik-snag, an oak bough.

For even Roy, the chieftain's man,
Who wins within the hazy glen,—
Well mounted on his wall-eyed mare,
As lantern as the lankest hare,
Without a lash, without a snag,
Or even saddle on the nag,
Both rock and dhallop gallops o'er
To meet the mourners gone before.
Train's Mountain Muse, p. 65, 66.

"He'll glowr at an auld warld barkit aik-snag as if it were a queez-maddam in full bearing." Rob Roy, ii. 158. V. BARKIT.

[2. A tit-bit, a dainty, a small piece cut off, Banffs.

3. Snags, shares, equal cuts; metaph., fair play, Clydes.]

SNAGGEREL, s. A puny contemptible bantling; synon. Snackel, Dumfr.; a dimin. from Snag, a broken branch. V. SNACHEL.

SNAGGER-SNEE, s. "A large knife, first introduced from Germany;" Gall. Enc.

The first part of the word must be from S. sneeg, to cut; and snee, from Teut. snyle, or sneid, acies cultris, Belg. snee; q. "a knife with a sharp edge." This term may be viewed as allied to E. Snick and snee, "a combat with knives."

To SNAG, v. a. and n. 1. To snarl, to banter, Fife.

Teut. snack-en, latrare, gannire, garrire. Isl. snacke, ringere, to grin, to shew the teeth, as a dog doth.

2. To chide in a taunting way, to reprehend both with severity and scorn, Ang.

[SNAG, s. A growl, snarl, taunt, gibe; also, a snap, Clydes.]

To SNAGGER, v. n. 1. To snarl, or grin like a dog; [to attempt to bite, Banffs.]

[2. To snore with a harsh, grunting sound, Banffs.]

[SNAGGER, s. 1. A snarl, an attempt to bite, a snap, Banffs.

2. A grunting snore; also, the act of snoring, ibid.]

SNAOGIN, s. "Biting, railleury."

Sic hablin' an' gablin',
Ye never heard nor saw;
Sic snaggin an' braggin',
An' randy-beggar-jaw.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 121.

Sw. snackare, Germ. schnak, gerro, a droll, a buffoon; schnak-en, jocularia loqui.

SNAGGY, adj. Sarcastical, Fife., used as an adv.; [snappish, Clydes.]

Quo' Maggy fell snaggy,
"Ye lie, you loun, an' joke."

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 130.

Snaggy, testy, peevish, A. Bor. Gl. Grose.

SNAIG, s. 1. An old flash word, used to denote the obtaining of money, whether by fair or by foul means, as by cheating or stealing, Fife.

2. A worthless fellow, ibid.

In came a snaig she lo'ed na weil
For his disloyal clavers,
Wha aft wad scaff at priest and de'il,
An' ca't a' auld wives' havers.

MS. Poem.

Su.-G. snack-a, nugari; Teut. snigge, a snail; or perhaps allied to E. sneak, v., q. a sneak or sneaking fellow.

[To SNAIK, v. n. 1. To sneak, in walking, working, or speaking, S. E. sneak.

2. To walk or work in an indolent manner, S.]

[SNAIK, SNAIKER, s. An indolent person, S.]

[SNAIKIN. 1. As a s., the act of sneaking; walking or working indolently, S.

2. As an adj., given to sneaking; slow, indolent, S.]

SNAK, s. [1. Same with Snack, q. v.

2. A small portion, a tit-bit; also, a person of small stature, a wee bodie, S.]

3. The gnashing of a dog's teeth together, when he aims at his prey, S.

Bot than the swypper tuskand hound assayis
And neris fast, ay redly hym to hynt,—
Wyth hys wyde chafitis at hym makis ane snak.

Doug. Virgil, 439, 33.

"Belg. snack, a gasp; or rather, q. d. a snatch, or aim to snatch;" Rudd. Teut. snack-en, capture, captitare, hianti ore capture, Kilian. Isl. snoggy, celer, citus.

VOL. IV.

[4. Snaks, same with snags, shares, halves, i.e., equal division of the spoil; as, "I'll gae snaks wi' ye," Clydes.]

To SNAM, r. n. "To snap at any thing greedily;" Gall. Enc.

Moea. -G. snium-jan, properare, snium-jando, velociter. Alem. snimor, celerius, Isl. snemma, cito. Prob. from Goth. sno, snu-o, properare. Sw. sno, sno aet sig, cito auferre.

To SNANG, v. n. To twang?

"The runt [of a scythe] must be siccald in the den, that the blade may have a snanging sound;" Gall. Enc., vo. Sned.

*To SNAP, v. a. and n. [1. To make a sudden bite, to gnash the teeth, S.

2. To catch, seize, lay hold of suddenly; hence, to seize an opportunity, to attempt, to try, S.]

If some auld swinger snap to speak
Of pink-ey'd queans, he gives a squeek.

A. Nicol's Poems, p. 22.

3. To snap up, [to seize and carry off]; also, to eat hastily, to devour, S.; as, "He snapt up his parritch."

"The people carried all out of his way; stragglers were snapped up; the hills made many both horse and man sicken and die." Baillie's Lett., ii. 382.

[Sw. snappa, to snatch, snap.]

Belg. snapp-en, to catch hastily, to seize with violence; op snappen, to devour.

SNAP, adj. 1. Quick, smart, eager to find fault; [short-tempered, surly], S.

But a lang tryppall there was snap,

Cam on him wi' a bend,

Gart him, ere ever he wist, cry clap

Upon his nether end,

An' there he lay.

Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 126.

[2. Brittle, short-grained, crisp, West of S.]

SNAP, s. [1. A sudden bite, grip, or seizure of any kind, S.]

2. [Instant, clap]; in a snap, in a moment, immediately, S. B.

3. A small brittle cake of gingerbread, S.: so called from its being crisp or easily snapped.

"Snap, a little cake;" Gall. Encycl.

"I might shut up house—if it was the thing I lived be—me, that has seen a' our gentle-folks bairns, and gien them snaps and sugar-biscuit maist of them wi' my ain hand." St. Ronan, i. 48.

[4. A small piece of anything eatable, Clydes., Banffs.]

And now the feed is soften'd, and along
They march, and mix themselves among the thrang.
The face of things is alter'd in a snap.

Ross's Helenore, p. 123.

V. the v.

Belg. met een snip, in a moment; in a crack, synonym.

Q 2

SNAP DYKE, s. A species of inclosure, S. O.

"A kind of stone fence, called Snap-dykes, peculiar to Carrick and the north parts of Galloway, is admirably fitted for sheep parks; being from 4 to 6 feet in height, strong and firmly locked together at the top." P. Kirkmichael, Ayr. Stat. Acc., vi. 104.

Teut. snap, interceptio, snapp-en, interciperere; q. a fence that checks the sheep.

SNAP-GUN, s. Apparently a gun or firelock that snaps, as opposed to one with a matchlock.

"Their foote men haveing snap gunnes and suordis shall have the pay of foote souldiers." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, VI. 65. V. SNAP-WORK.

SNAP-HAUNCE, s. A firelock; the same with Snappgun.

"Let me see those pistols." "Ye are not so unwise as to meddle with such snap-haunces, Baby Charles," said James." Nigel, ii. 93.

O. E. "snap-haunce, a firelock, a gun that strikes fire without a match;" Phillips. This is from Belg. snaphaan, id. q. a cock that snaps.

SNAP-WORK, SNAPWARK, s. A firelock.

But those who were their chief commanders —
Were right well mounted of their gear; —
With durk, and snap-work, and snuff-mill,
A bagg which they with onions fill.

Cleland's Poems, p. 12.

Some were chasing hens and cocks,
Some were loosing horse from yocks,
Some with snap-warks, some with bowes,
Were charging reers of toops and ewes.

Ibid., 34.

SNAPLY, adv. Hastily, quickly, S. B.

When he's ca'd hame, they shot him in before
In a black hole, and snapply lock'd the door.

Ross's Helenore, p. 47.

—Ilka morning by the screak o' day,
They're set to wark, and snapply ca'd away.

Ibid., p. 51.

Teut. snap, raptus. V. SNAP UP.

SNAPPER, SNAPPERT, adj. Tart, hasty. A snappert answer, a tart reply, S. B.

Snapper also denotes a person who is foolish and impudent; who makes no account of what he says. Teut. snapper, garrulus, loquax.

To SNAPPER, v. n. 1. To stumble, to trip slightly, S.

"A horse with four feet may snapper by a time;" 8. Prov. Kelly, p. 26.

It had been used in the same sense in O. E. "I snapper as a horse dothe that tryppeth. Je trippette. My horse dyd nat stumble, he dyd but snapper a lytell." Palagr. F. 365, a.

2. To err in conduct, to get into a scrape, S.

Neidful it is thairfoir to gang warlie,
That rakeslie thow snapper nocht nor slyd —
He reulis weil that weil in court can guide.

Maitland Poems, p. 277.

SNAPPER, s. 1. A stumble, S.

2. A failure as to moral conduct, S.

"Quhat is thy parte in thir slippes and snappers? — Sleepe not there quhere thou hes fallen." Bruce's Eleven Sermon, O. 8. a.

"I am not like these sinners which but trip and stumble, and rise again after a snapper, my fall is with my full weight." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 190.

3. A perplexity, an entanglement, a snare, S.

—"That body's mad! He'll lead us into some ill-fair'd snapper. Diuna be ower rash, callans. Just look afore ye." Perils of Man, ii. 42.

Q. such a situation as one is often brought into in consequence of tripping.

4. "An unforeseen accident; a misfortune;" Gall. Encycl.

SNAPPY, adj. Hasty in temper, testy, S. the same with E. snappish.

SNAPPY, adj. Keen in business, disposed to take the advantage of another, Aug.

SNAPSY, adj. Tart, surly, S. B. snappish, E.

The snapsy karles grain in ease;

They sleep and eat when e'er they please.

A. Nicol's Poems, p. 22.

SNARE, adj. Prudent and diligent; as, "a snare wife," a good housewife, one who manages her family well, Dumfr.

Perhaps this ought to be viewed as another sense of Snarre, S. B., tart, severe; as it seems to claim the same origin.

[To SNARK, v. n. 1. To make a snoring noise, Shetl.

2. To fret, grumble, or find fault with one, Ayr.

Sw. snarka, to snore.]

SNARRE, adj. 1. Tart, severe. A snarre mistress, a mistress who is severe to her servants, S. B.

2. Rigid, firm to the grasp; as, snarre corn, grain that feels firm and hard, when pressed in the hand, S. B.

3. Applied to one who is so sharp in his dealings as to indicate a disposition to overreach others, Ayr.; written Snaur.

This term, in the first sense, seems to have a very extensive affinity. Isl. snar, celox, acer; whence snar-a, celeriter auferre; snerra, snæra, fight, snær-umz, I fight, Snerrir, or Snorri, a man's name denoting one addicted to fighting. Gunnlaug. S. Snarlind-r, sharp-witted; Su.-G. snar, quick; Belg. snar, snappish, snarling; Teut. snarr-en, jurgare, fremere.

SNAR-GAB, s. Acrimonious prating, abusive language; or, as some understand it, rather the mouth from which it is emitted; as, "Haud your snar-gab," Lanarks.; (synon. Snashgab,) from Snarre, tart, severe.

To SNASH, v. n. To talk saucily, to bandy insolent language, S. V. SNISTY.

This may be allied to Su.-G. snack-a, nugari, to talk in a trifling manner, q. snacks-a; snack, nugae, frivolous discourse.

SNASH, s. "Abuse, Billingsgate," Gl. Burns; pert or snarling language.

I've notic'd, on our Laird's court-day,
An' mony a time my heart's been wae,
Poor tenant bodies, scant o' cash,
How they maun thole a factor's snash,
He'll stamp an' threaten, curse an' swear,
He'll apprehend them, poid their gear.

Burns, iii. 5.

SNASH, adj. Pert, saucy, S.

The tane crys, "Gie me't, mind I brought the cash;"
The tither says, "I'll hae't," and that right snash.

Morison's Poems, p. 189.

It is here used as an adv.

SNASH-GAB, s. 1. Prating, petulant talking, S.

2. A prattling forward boy or girl, S.; called also Nashgab, and by inversion Gabnash.

SNASHTER, s. Trifles, Ayrs.

Tout, snocder, the green bark covering the shell of a nut, a husk; perhaps rather from Snash, v.

SNASTRY, s. "Low chat;" Gall. Encycl.

SNATCH, s. A hasty repast, S.

"Our kind host and hostess would not let us go without taking a snatch, as they called it; which was in truth a very good dinner." Boswell's Journ., p. 326. V. SNACK, s.

To SNAUCHLE, (gutt.), v. n. To walk in a slow and lingering mode, to saunter, Lanarks.

SNAUCHLE, s. 1. A term used to denote one of a weak habit of body, ibid.

Isl. snigill denotes a snail; Dan. snegel, A.-S. snægl, id., deduced from snic-an, to creep, whence E. to Sneak.

2. A dwarf; synon. Nauchle, ibid., Dumfr.

SNAW, s. Snow, S. snawu, S. B. A. Bor. id.

The red that's on my true love's cheek,
Is like blood drops on the snaw.

Minstrelsy Border, ii. 7.

V. SNYP.

The ground fadit, and fauch wox al the feildis,
Mountane toppis slekit with snaw ouer heildis.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 200, 43.

V. SNYP, v.

A.-S. snaw, Moes.-G. snaios, Belg. snecuw. Hence,

To SNAW, v. n. To snow, S.; pron. q. Snawu, S. B. "Snaw, to snow;" Gl. Picken. This is properly used as an impersonal v.; It's snawin'.

SNAW-BIRD, s. The same with Snaw-fowl.

"Snaw-burds, birds which visit us in winter;" Gall. Encycl.

SNAW-BRACK, s. "A thaw, which frequently raises rivers, and does great damage;" Gall. Encycl.

SNAW-BRUE, SNAW-BRU, SNAW-BROO, s. Snow in a dissolved state, S.

"Snaw-broe, melted snow;" Gall. Enc. V. BREE.

"Fishermen observe, and I think justly, that they (salmon) do not like to leave the estuaries or mouths of rivers, until the melted snow (snaw bru) is out of the water." Prize Essays, Highland Society of S., ii. 400.

In mony a torrent down the snaw-broo rowes.

Burns, iii. 66.

This in Norw. is denominated sole-brae, i.e., snow melted by the heat of the sun; from sole, the sun, and brae-e, to melt. Can this be the origin of our Bree, S. B. Bree, q. what is dissolved? Or shall we prefer that given under BREE, from Germ. bräu-en, &c., to boil.

SNAW-FLAIGH, SNAW-FLECK, s. The same with Snow-flake, the Snow-bunting, Aberd.

The sun wis scanty beetle-height,
An' snaw-flaighs teuk their hamewarld flight.

Turris's Poems, p. 51.

V. SNOW-FLAKE.

SNAW-FOWL, s. The Snow-bunting, Shetl.

"Emberiza Nivalis, (Lin. syst.) Snaw-Fowl, Snow-Bunting, or Snow-Flake." Edmonstone's Zetl., ii. 268. Norw. snæfugl, id.

SNAW-POWTHY, s. "Fine snow;" Gall. Enc.

SNAW-WRIDE, s. V. WREATH.

SNAWIE, adj. Snowy, S.

—Thy snawie bosom sun-ward spread,
Thou lift'st thy unassuming head.

Burns, iii. 202.

SNAWDOUNE HARRAT, SNOWDOUN HERALD. "Alex'. Guthrie Snawdoune Harrat;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1545.

"The heralds, being six in number, have their precedence according to the dates of their creations. Their names of addition are altogether local, and are very ancient. Snowdown is named from Snowdown castle in the shire of Ross, and the residence of our ancient Scots kings. Albany is named from the whole realm, which, by the ancients, was called Alba, and by our Highlanders—Albanach. This herald was in use mostly to attend upon the Dukes of Albany. Ross herald, so named from the county of Ross, which was of old an appendage of the Crown. Rothsay has his name and title from the castle of Rothsay, or Rossay, an ancient residence of our Scots kings in the isle of Bute. Marchmont derives his title from the castle of Marchmont, so named in our ancient histories, now called Roxburgh castle. Hay herald has his denomination from an island in the west seas.

"As for pursuivants, they are also for most part locally denominated (Unicorn only excepted) viz. Carrick, Kintyre, Ormond, and Bute." Nisbet's Heraldry, P. iii., p. 166.

The orthography differs, in some instances, in our records. Jacobus, &c. dilectis nostris Leoni regi armorum, Hay, Albanie, Ross, Rothsay, Snawdoune, Merchmond, heraldis;—Ormond, Bute, Unicorn, Carrick, signiferis. Act. Ja. VI., 1581, vol. iii. 207.

"Snawdon [Barb., p. 70.]—a part of the castle of Kildrumny, probably appropriated to the knightly ceremonies grafted on the legends of K. Arthur's round table, and apparently the same which is now called the Snaw tower. There was also a Snawdown in Strive-line; and there are many places of the same name in various parts of Scotland." D. Macpherson's Geogr. Illustr.

The passage, to which this ingenious writer refers, is the following :

—And intill schort tyme has done,
That all a quartir off Snowdown,
Rycht till the erd thair tummyllyt down.

The Bruce, p. 70, Ed. 1820.

As Snowdown was either a part of the castle of Kildrumny, or in its immediate vicinity, it has been improperly placed in Ross; for Kildrumny was in the Garioch.

To SNEAR, v. n. 1. To emit a hissing sound, Clydes.

Syne a snearin snake she twin'd round his arm,
An' ower his bosom slide.

Mary o' Craignethan, Ed. Mag., July 1819.

2. It is also expl. to snort, Ayr. V. SNEER.

To SNECK, SNICK, SNEG, v. a. 1. To cut with a sudden stroke of a sharp instrument, S.

—Some aft, their leaful lane,
Bring to the world the luckless wean,
And sneeg its infant thrapple.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 360.

"Do the folk think I hae another thrapple in my pouch after John Hielandman's sneekit this ane wi' his jockaleg?" Rob. Roy, iii. 140.

2. [To cut off, to terminate, to cut short]; to sneeg off at the web's end, to cut off one's hopes, S.; in allusion perhaps to the cutting of a web out of the loom.

Kind Jove has play'd a parent's part,
Wha did this prize to Pallas send,
While we're sneeg'd off at the web's end.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 465.

Teut. sneock-en, Germ. schneck-en, scindere. Wachter mentions as synonym. A.-S. threo-snaerce, triauleus; Isl. maugv klæde, vestes laceratae. Hence perhaps the E. phrase, to go snacks, to have a share or portion, from the idea of the article being previously divided by cutting.

[3. To cut into, to make incisions, to indent, to scollop; as, "She sneekit it wi' the shears a' rounn," Clydes.]

[4. To set or fix into an incision for the purpose of shutting or keeping closed; as, to sneek the lid o' a box, to sneek the door; hence, to shut, shut up], to secure by a latch or bolt, S.

"To sneek the door; to latch, or shut, the door;" Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 19.

Sae out she slips, and sneeks the door behin'.

Ross's Helenore, p. 42.

"The secrets of grit folk," said Ochiltree within himsel, 'are just like the wild beasts that are shut up in cages. Keep them hard and fast sneeked up, and it's a' very weel or better—but anes let them out, they will turn and rend you.'" Antiquary, ii. 334.

5. [To close, fill up, or stop an incision or gap]; as, to sneek wi' lime, to make indentations in a wall, filling the blanks with lime; or, in building, to insert a small quantity between the stones in the outer side, Aberd. synonym. to teeth with lime, S. V. STOB-THACKIT.

SNECK, SNICK, SNEG, s. 1. A cut suddenly given, a small incision or notch, S.

Gin we the gully guide na now with can,
Tiney chance to gee's a sneek into the hand.

Ross's Helenore, p. 89.

Sneek is often used to denote a stroke of the scissors, S.

"I give your honour leave to hang Shemus, if there's a pair of sheers in the Highlands that has a baulder sneek than hers ain at the—shape of the trows." Waverley, ii. 273.

2. The latch of a door, S. Provinc. E. denominated perhaps from the notch by which it is fastened.

The door's wide open, nae sneek ye hae to draw.

Ross's Helenore, p. 77.

—Click! the string the sneek did draw:

And jee! the door gaed to the wa'.

Burns, iii. 101.

Swith, sneek and bar and bowt she drew.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 234.

[Wi' the door haufins up, an' the sneek in his han',
He faintly enquired—wad they lodge a pair man?]

A. Laing,]

This word has also been used in O. E. as synonym. with Latch. "Lache or snecke. Pessulum. Clitorium." Afterwards, "Sneek or lache. Clitorium. Pessulum." Prompt. Parv. "Pessulum, dicitur sera lignea qua hostium pellitur cum seratur. Dicitur a pello, pellis. Anglice, a lyteke, a lache, or a snecke, or a barre of a dore." Ort. Vocab.

"Lache, or snecke of a dore, Fr. locquet." Palsgr., B. iii. F. 43, b.

3. Also used for a small bolt.

4. A portion of a wall built with single stones, or stones which go from side to side, Gallo-way.

"Besides the improvement of locked tops, he (John Macadam of Craigengullen) invented also snecks or hudds, i.e., spaces built single at short intervals, a very useful contrivance, for if any accident happen to a part of the dyke, these snecks prevent the evil from spreading far." Agr. Surv. Gall., p. 86. V. THROUGH-BAND.

SNECK-DRAWER, SNICK-DRAWER, s. An auld sneek-drawer, one who, from long experience, has acquired a great degree of facility in accomplishing any artful purpose, S.

And mony a lie was there,—

Whan the titlin aul sneek-drawers fell to,

And they wi' the creature were flush.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 295.

"A aly, cunning person, that can remove locks and bolts, and raise latches, without being heard;" Gl. ibid.

"And so gudeman," said she,—"ye hae had that auld sneek-drawer, Keelivin, wi' you?" The Entail, ii. 22.

The allusion is evidently to the practice of one who makes way for himself into any place that is shut up and secured, by forcing the bolt.

It has been observed, that S. parky corresponds to Lat. astutus, q. arte tutus, Fest., and that the stronger term callulus, may be fitly rendered, an auld sneek-drawer.

SNECK-DRAWIN, adj. Crafty, trick-contriving, S.

Then you, ye auld sneek-drawing dog!
Ye came to Paradise incog.

Burns, iii. 74.

"I am sure I aye took your part when folk misca'd ye, and said ye were this, that, and the other thing, and little better than an auld sneck-drawing loon, Mr. Bindloose." St. Ronan, ii. 24.

SNECKER, s. A sharper, Roxb.

[SNECK-PIN, s. The pin or latch of a sneck, S.]

To SNECK-PIN, v. a. To put in small stones between the larger ones in a wall, and to daub the seams with lime, S. B., Aberd.; synon. Sneck, v. sense 3.

"The walls of these houses shall be built of stone and lime, or stone and mortar, outer course laid and sneck-pined with lime." Agr. Surv. Aberd., p. 199.

To SNED, v. a. 1. To cut, to prune; applied especially to trees, shrubs, &c., S. snath, S. Bor., id. Rudd. vo. Sneith.

I hae a wife and twa wee laddies,—
But I'll sned besons—thraw saugh woodies,
Before they want.

Burns, li. 271.

"If it be a forest, he [the donatar] cannot otherwise cut it than the heritor was in use to do, or for the use of the ground, to repair tenants' houses, &c. or to sned them." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iii. 286.

2. To lop off, in a general sense, S.

Clap in his walle nieve a blade,
He'll mak it whistle,
An' legs, an' arms, an' heads will sned,
Like taps o' thrisle.

Burns, iii. 220.

3. To hew or polish stones with a chisel, S.

4. To remove excrescences; used in a moral sense.

"It is good that God snedde the vnfruitfull and rotten branches of our life." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 218.

"We wrote a free admonition to the Parliament, of their jealousies and divisions; which, although it took not away the root, yet did it sned many of the branches of the evils complained of." Baillie's Lett., ii. 94.

5. To emasculate, S. Teut. snijd-en, castrare, evirare.

[6. To fit a shaft in a scythe, S. V. SNED, s.]

One sense of Teut. snijd-en is nearly allied to this; scalpere, caclare; and snijde, also snede, denotes the edge of a knife.

The primary sense of this very v., as given by Kilian, is, to prune; putare, secare. This corresponds to the sense of Germ. schneid-en, A.-S. Franc. Alem. snid-an, Belg. snijd-en. Gl. Keron. abscind-an, amputare. Isl. eg sned, secare. Hence, SNOD, q. v.

SNED, s. 1. A branch pruned off, Lanarks.

2. Scythe-sned, the shaft or pole of a scythe, S.

"Sned, the long pole a scythe is fitted into, for the purpose of mowing with it;" Gall. Enc.

"Snathe, the handle of a scythe. South." Grose. V. SITHE-SNED.

SNEDDER, s. A pruner, one who lops off branches, ibid.

SNEDDINS, s. pl. The prunings, or twigs, lopped off from trees, S.

Germ. abgeschittene, id. Teut. snede, Belg. sned, a cut, a slice.

SNED-KAIL, s. Coleworts or cabbages, the old stalks of which, after they have begun to sprout, are cut off and left in the earth for future product. The cutting is supposed to prevent their going to seed, S. B.

Isl. snidkael, brassica praescissilis, Dan. snitkael, id.

SNED, SNEED, s. 1. The link of hair to which a hook is tied, that is fastened to a cord-line, or set line. Snood, synon.

[2. The piece of twine that fastens a cork-float to the head-back of a herring net, Banffs.]

[To SNED, v. a. To fit a link of hair to a fishing-hook, S.; also, to fasten a cork-float to a herring net, Banffs.]

Isl. snua, to turn, twist; Dan. snoc, Sw. sno, to twist, twine; E. snood.]

[To SNEEG, v. n. To neigh, Shetl.; to snirt, snigger, Clydes.; sneeger is also used.]

To SNEEL, v. n. [1. To be lazy; to do anything in a lazy, trifling manner, Banffs.]

2. To snivel, to speak through the nose, Gall. Encycl.

[SNEEL, s. 1. The act of doing anything lazily, Banffs.]

2. A person of indolent habits, ibid.]

[SNEELIN, adj. Indolent, lazy, loitering; also, snivelling, ibid.]

SNEEP, s. The glitter of a white colour. V. SNIP.

To SNEER, v. n. 1. To inhale by the nostrils, Fife.

2. To snort, snore, Ayrs.

3. To hiss; the term used in Clydes. to denote the hissing of the adder. V. SNEAR.

[Isl. snerra, to sneeze, snerra, a sneeze.]

Under the E. r. sneer, Scen. mentions as the probable root, Goth. snirre (snerra, Verel.) sternutatio. The act of sneezing, indeed, approaches very near to that referred to in sense 2. This r. gives us the original sense of E. sneer, as signifying, to show contempt.

As signifying to hiss, it might seem allied to Su.-G. snorra, snurrare; Teut. snarr-en, fremere, strepere, murmurare.

SNEER, s. 1. The act of inhalation or inspiration by the nostrils, Fife.

2. A snort, S. V. NICHER, s.

3. The act of a horse, when colded, in throwing the mucus from his nostrils, S.

4. The hiss of an adder, Clydes.

SNEESHIN, SNEEZIN, s. 1. The vulgar name for snuff, S.

—"Whence the S. sneezing, or snuff, because it makes one to sneeze;" Rudd. vo. Neis.

—A mill of good sneezing to pria.
Ritson's S. Songs, l. 212.

It was early called meesing powder.

"The wyne pynt and Tobacco pype, with meesing powder prouoking sneuell, were his heartes delight. His life hath bene a stumbling blocke vnto manie." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1195.

2. A pinch of snuff; S.

—Or else they are not worth a snishen.
Meston's Poems, p. 25.

SNEESHIN-HORN, s. A horn used for holding snuff; synon. a Snuff-mill, S.

Lancash. "sneeze-horn, a snuff-box made of the tip of a horn;" T. Bobbins.

SNEESHINIE, adj. Snuffy, S.B.

In Ir. and Gael. snaoisin signifies snuff. But it has undoubtedly been borrowed from the S. or E., as there is no correspondent term in C.B., nor any verb in Celt. resembling Sneeze.

The Sw. name for snuff has a similar origin; snus, from sneys-a, to sneeze. Hence snuslösa, a snuff-box.

SNEESHIN-MILL, SNISHIN-BOX, s. A snuff-box, S. Shirr. Gl.

And there his sneezing milne and box lyes.
Colvil's Mock Poem, ii. 9.

The luntin pipe, an' sneeshin mill,
Are handed round wi' right guid will.
Burns, iii. 7.

His fishing-wand, his snishin box,
A fowling-piece to shoot muir-cocks,—
This was his game.

Forbes's Dominie Depos'd, p. 20.

Called a mill: because, being anciently of a cylindrical form, it was not only used for holding the snuff, but the tobacco, after being dried at the fire, was bruised or ground in it. V. preceding word.

[SNEESHIN-PEN, s. A small spoon or quill used in taking snuff, S.; hence, a pen-fu'o' snuff.]

To SNEEST, SNEYST, v. n. To treat contemptuously by word or action. He sneystit at it, Loth. V. SNISTY.

Ne'er let her slights thy courage spill,
Nor gie a sob, although she sneest;
She's sairest paid that gets her will.

Herd's Coll., ii. 45.

Isl. sneesa is expl. by Haldorson, irritare, contemptum tractare.

SNEEST, s. "An air of disdain;" Gl. Herd. Impertinence, Ettr. For.

This seems the same with Sneist, q. v.

[To SNEET, SNEETER, v. n. To loiter, to be lazy; to do any thing in a lazy, sleepy, or stupid manner, Banffs.]

[SNEET, SNEETER, s. 1. The act of loitering, lazying, or of doing any thing in a lazy or stupid manner, ibid.

2. A person of a lazy, trifling, or stupid disposition, ibid.]

[SNEETIN, SNEETERIN, adj. Indolent, awkward, stupid, ibid.

Evidently allied to E. sneak, S. snail, q. v.]

[SNEEVE, SNEE, SNAE, v. a. and n. To cut with a sharp instrument, Shetl. Goth. sneida, id.]

[SNEEVELACK, s. A snuff-box, Shetl. Sw. and Dan. snabel, beak, snout, proboscis.]

To SNEG, v. a. 1. To cut. V. SNECK.

2. To interrupt, to check, &c., Gall. Enc. This seems to be the same with Snag, Ang.

3. To invite a broil, ibid. This appears to correspond with Snag, as signifying to snarl, to banter.

SNEG, s. A low term for gain, Fife; apparently parallel to the E. phrase, to go snacks, to get a share, or half.

Allied to the v. Sneck, Sneg, to cut, q. v.

SNEILL, s. An indolent inactive person, Aberd.; perhaps merely the northern pron. of Snool. [V. SNEEL.]

To SNEIR, [Prob., to speed, waft, or steer.]

This year bayth blythnes and abundance brings,
Naveis of schippis outthrocht the sea to sneir
With riches raymentis, and all royall thingis.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 200, st. 24.

"Probably an error in MS. for sneir, steer," Note, ibid. But it may very naturally signify, to move swiftly; Isl. snar-a, celeriter auferre, snar, celet, citus. V. SNEER, v.

SNEIRLY, adv. In derision.

Seueirly, not sneirly,
To you I make it plain.

Burel's Pilg., Watson's Coll., ii. 31.

i. e., I tell you this seriously, not in derision or in a sneer.

SNEIST, s. A gibe, a taunt, Loth.; synon., snipe.

I carena by their base ill names,
Their sneists an' sneers, an fy-for-shames.
Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 48.

SNEISTY, adj. Sneering, Loth. V. SNISTY.

SNEITH, adj. Smooth, polished; [comely]. Not sneith, metaph. applied to language that is tart and somewhat acrimonious, S.

This put the dame in perfect wrath,
Her words they werena sneith.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 16.

This prince himself, fra that he did behald
The snaw quhite visage of this Pallas baird,—
And eik the gapand dedely wound has sene,
Maid by the speris hede Rutuliane,
Amyd his sneith, and fare slekit breist bane,
With teris bristand from hys ene thus plenit.

Doug. Virgil, 360, 55.

Isl. snig-ug is rendered elegans, Haldorson. But Sneith seems to be merely a variety of A. Bor. Snathe, which signifies "to prune trees; to cut off the boughs of ash or other timber trees, of which the wood is used, as prune is of fruit-trees;" Grose. Isl. sneid-a, secare. V. SNED. Perhaps this is the proper meaning of Sneith, as used by G. Douglas.

SNELL, adj. 1. Keen, sharp, severe; as a snell straik, S. It is used in this sense adverbially by Blind Harry.

This man went down, and sodanlye he saw,
As to hys sycht, dede had him swappyt snell;
Syn said to thaim, He has payit at he aw.

Wallace, ii. 249, MS.

It often denotes bodily pain. Thus the adj. is used for the adv.

Now Bruntie's ee's tied in a clout,
I wat he fan't right snell.

Cock's Simple Strains, p. 137.

2. Sharp, piercing; applied to the temperature of the air, S.

The schote I closit, and drew inwart in hy,
Cheuraud for cald, the sessoun was sa snell,
Schupe with hait flambs to steme the fresing fell.

Doug. Virgil, Frol. 202, 34.

Thus we still say, A snell day, a snell blast, a snell wind, S.

Its better to sit still than rise and fa':
On Tintoc tap the snellest drift-showers blaw.

Falls of Clyde, p. 174.

3. Severe, sarcastic; transferred to language. A snell body, one who is tart in conversation: A snell answer, &c.

Sir Davil's satyres help'd our nation
To carry on the Reformation;
And gave the scarlet whore a box
Mair snell than all the pelts of Knox.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 442.

Wha coming gatewards to me do I see,
But this snell lass, that came the day with me?

Ross's Helenore, p. 88.

4. Firm, determined, S.

—That in ilk action, wise and snell,
You may shaw manly fire.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 49.

5. Acute; used in relation to mind, S.

Europe had nane mair snack or snell
At verse or prose.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 331.

—Fu' o' good nature, sharp and snell witha'.

Ross's Helenore, p. 16.

In O.E. it signifies, keen, sharp.

He hasted him to the Swin with sergantes snell,
To mete with the Normandes that fals war and fell.

Minot's Poems, p. 19.

6. Applied to losses in trade, S.

"It may be a dead loss!—whate'er ane o' your Lombard-street goldsmiths may say to it, its a snell ane in the Sautmarket o' Glasgow." Rob Roy, ii. 239.

A.-S. Alem. Su.-G. Teut. snell, Isl. sniall-ur, Germ. schuell, celer, acer, alacer, expeditus; Ital.
snell-o. The Isl. word is also expl. animis acer; and Su.-G. snell is rendered ingeniosus; Ihre, vo. Snille.

Snellich, quickly, occurs in a satire written soon after the Conquest, ap. Hickes. V. Warton's Hist. E. Poet.,
i. 11. He calls it a Gallo-Frankish word.

The primary sense is celer; and in this sense it occurs in Launfal.

And when the day was ycome,
That the justes were yn ynoine,
They ryde out also snell.

Ritson's E.M.R., i. 188.

Ihre derives it from Isl. snna-a, to make haste. V.
SNACK, adj.

[SNELL, adv. Very, exceedingly, Shetl.]

Chaucer uses it as an adv. in its original sense; quickly.

—The burgeyse sat hym somewhat nere,
And preyd hym, of his gentilnes, his name for to tell,
His contrey, and his lynnage; and he answer'd snell;
Berinus I am ynamid.

And all was doon to bring him yn, as ye shul her sncl.
History of Beryn, Urry, p. 603.

SNELLY, adv. 1. Sharply, severely, S.

—How was the billy pleas'd?

Nae well, I wat, to be sae snelly us'd.

Shirref's Poems, p. 35.

2. Keenly; applied to the weather, S.

Not Boreas, that sae snelly blows,
Dare here pap in his angry nose.

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 93.

To SNERE, SNEER, v. a. To snore, to breathe forth, Rudd. V. SNEER.

Ane rial chare richely arrayit he sent,
With twa sterne stedis therin yokit yfere,
Cummin of the kynd of heuinlye hors were,
At thare neis thyrls the fyre fast snering out.

Doug. Virgil, 215, 32.

SNEER, s. The act of snorting, S. V. NICHER.

SNET, Barbour, xiii. 32. Leg. Suet, q. v.

[SNEUKIT, adj. 1. Plausible, insidious, artful, Shetl.]

2. Ill-sneukit, cross-grained, ill-natured, ibid.

Dan. snu, artful; snige, to sneak.]

[SNEUT, SNEUTER, s. and v. Same with SNEET, SNEETER.]

SNEYCHT, part. adj. Apparently smoothed. "To by thair hyddis roche or sneycht." Aberd. Reg., A. 1541, V. 17, i.e., "To buy their skins, whether rough or smooth."

Isl. snoegg-r, snegg-ri, Su.-G. snugg, glaber, depilis Verel. renders snogg-r, Pilis brevibus et curtis. Sw.
snugg-a, to dress, to clean, Wideg.

[SNEYD, s. A horse with a white nose, Shetl. Sw. smyte, a snout.]

To SNEYSTER, v. a. To sear, to scorch, Aysr.; Synon. Scaum.

[SNIAAG, s. Very small or insignificant things, Shetl.]

Allied to Dan. sniknak, Sw. snicksnack, nonsense, fiddle-fiddle.]

To SNIAUVE, v. n. To snow, Buchan. V. the letter W.

To SNIB, v. a. and n. [1. To cut clean and quickly; hence, to separate, cut short, bring to an end, make an end of, S.; synon. sneck, snick, q. v.

2. To cut into, cut out of; to geld or castrate, synon. to lib, S.; also, to shape or point, as, to snib a pen, Clydes.

3. To set or fix in an incision, for the purpose of shutting or fastening; as, to snib a door, S.

4. To check, arrest, hinder; hence, to find fault with, to rebuke, humble, S.]

When hee was borne, nane did him snib
To lye right law intil ane criebe.

Poems of the Sixteenth Century, p. 71.

Given in Gloss. as not understood. But it is merely the E. r. used in the sense of check. "No one, to prevent him from lying in a manger, objected to this as inconsistent with his glory."

To SNIB a candle. To snuff it, Loth.

Either as allied to E. snib, Su.-G. snubb-a, from nas-bb, nasus, rostrum; q. take the nib from it; or to snopp-a, emungere, de candela; which Ihre derives from Belg. schneppe, the nostrils, as containing an allusion to the wiping of the nose.

To SNIB a door. To fasten it with a small bolt, S. synon. Slot.

Perhaps an oblique use of E. and S. snib, q. to put a check on it, to prevent it from being opened.

[To SNIB a pen. To make or mend a quill-pen, to point it, S.]

SNIB, s. 1. A cut; a smart stroke; Gl. Tarras, Buchan.

2. [A button, Shetl.; a hook or catch;] a small bolt for fastening a door, S.

This is quite different from the Sneck, which, in a lock of the wooden fashion, is the substitute for a latch, and is turned round by the handle of the lock; whereas the snib is the small bolt placed under the latch, and fastening the door so that it cannot be opened from without.

[SNIBBERT, s. A person of sharp, hard features, and weak spirit, Banffs.]

[To SNIBBERT, v. n. To loiter in work, to hinder it by one's weakness or laziness, ibid.]

[SNIBBIT, adj. Curtailed of its proper proportions, Clydes., Shetl.]

SNIBBIT, SNIBBLE, SNIBBELT, s. A small piece of wood at one end of a rope, which goes into an eye at the other end, for fastening it; used for retaining a tether, Roxb.

"Snibble, a small piece of wood put through the end of a rope, so that it may be fixed into an eye in the other end." Gall. Enc.

Perhaps from S. Snib, to fasten, or Teut. snebbe, a beak, and bit, ghe-bit; because it acts as a check or bit to the animal that wears it.

SNIBLICH, (gutt.), s. A sort of collar made of plaited rushes, by which in former times a cow was bound to the stake, Roxb. V. BAIKIE.

This is probably allied to Teut. snebel, Dan. snabel, Germ. schnabel, a beak, transferred to the nose; as perhaps originally denoting some kind of bridle or branks.

To SNICHER (gutt.), v. n. To titter, to laugh in one's sleeve; also pron. as in E. snicker, Aberd.

[To SNIER, v. n. To cut, Shetl. V. SNEEVE.]

[To SNIET, v. n. To blow the nose, Shetl. Isl. snita, Dan. snyde, id.]

[SNIETIN the nose. Blowing the nose, ibid.]

To SNIFFLE, v. n. To trifle, to be slow in motion or action, S. Sniffin, trifling, S. snaffin, sauntering, Cumb.

Belg. sniefel-en, Dan. snubb-er, Su.-G. snafw-a, to hesitate.

SNIFFLER, SNIFFLE, s. A trifler, a driveller, Lanarks.

SNIFFLES, s. pl. That difficulty of breathing through the nostrils, which is caused by cold in the head, Selkirks.; synon. Snifters.

Teut. snoffel-en, snuffel-en, naribus spirare.

SNIFTER, s. 1. A severe blast, as including the idea of its being in one's face, S.

—Wi' weat and wind sae tyte into my teeth -
I gat na sic a teazle this seven year,
And ye maun gie your answer just perqueer;
I maun na ilka day be coming here
To get sic snifters: courting's nae a jest,
Another day like this'll be my priest.

Ross's Helenore, p. 38.

V. TAISSLE.

[2. A snort, the act of snorting, Banffs.]

Isl. snæfur, austerus. This word is used in the same sense with ours. De ventis etiam dicunt snæfurt redur, impetuosus ventus, Ol. Lex. Run.

3. Any sudden [stroke, blow, difficulty], or reverse of fortune; as, a defeat in battle, or pursuit in consequence of it, S.

But, Monseer, ye'll better no come here awa,
Least ye meet with a snifter ye'll no like ava.
Jo. Hogg's Poems, p. 112.

4. A cutting repartee, S. B. V. SNISTY.

5. Metaph. used like Heesie, to denote the effect of a strong purgative potion, S. B.

To SNIFTER, v. n. To draw up the breath frequently and audibly by the nose; to sniff, S.; as generally implying that it is stopped by mucus, or from cold; [also, to snort, snore, Banffs.]

"To sniffer, to snuff at the nose; Lancash." T. Bobbins.

"Haith, an' I'm sair haddin to my wark! Cardinal an' captain, principal and prior, poor student and college-beathel, a' now i' their beds, snifferin', snocherin', an' aleepin' like taps," &c. Cardinal Beaton, p. 89.

Gin I can sniffer thro' mundungus,
Wi' boots and belt on,
I hope to see you at St. Mungo's,
Atween and Beltan.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 342.

Su.-G. sniff-a, id. anhelitum per nares crebro reducere.

SNIFTERS, s. pl. A stoppage of the nostrils from cold, which occasions frequent sniffing, S.

[To SNIGGER, v. n. To nicher, neigh; also, to giggle, Shetl.]

[SNIGGER, s. A suppressed laugh, a snort, a giggle, ibid.]

[SNIGGIN, part. pr. Neighing; giggling; also, the act of so doing, ibid.]

SNIGGERT, s. One who is chargeable with guileful malversation, Ayr.

It may be allied to Isl. snik-ia, parasitari; or Su.-G. snugg-a, clanculum subducere; or A.-S. snic an, repere, E. to sneak. V. ART, ARD, term.

[SNIÖG, s. The shoulder or slope of a hill, Shetl. Norse, snevey, id.]

To SNIP, v. n. To stumble slightly, Loth. This term seems to be used in a less forcible sense than Snapper, q.v.

SNIP, SNEEP, s. 1. The glitter or dazzling of a white colour, such as snow, Gall. Encycl.

2. A white streak or stripe running down the face of a horse, Ang.

"Stolen—a brown conp-hundred, [qu. crop-hurried?] switch-tailed horse with a snip in his forehead." Aberd. Journal, Dec. 27th, 1820. V. SNIPPIT.

SNIP, SNEEP, SNEEP-WHITE, adj. Possessing a pure or bright white colour, South and West of S.

Our guidwife coft a snip white coat
Wi' monie a weel hained butter-groat;
But it's a wadset i' the town.

Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 90.

The twosome pied down on the cauld sneep snaw,
Wi' the sorry hauf striffen'd e'e.

Gall. Encycl., p. 412.

— Gurly norlan' blasts wad blaw,
And swurl in sneep white wrides the snaw.

Ibid., p. 352.

SNIPPIT, adj. A snippit horse, one that has a streak or stripe of white running down its face, S.B.

To SNIPE, v. a. To check, to reprimand, to snib, Aberd.; nearly the same with the E. v. in another form, to Sneap, properly traced by Mr. Todd to Isl. sneip-a, contumelia afficere.

SNIPE, s. A rub, a sarcasm, Loth.

Isl. sneipa, contumelia, convitium; sneip-a, contumelia afficere, Su.-G. snypb-a, verbis increpare.

[SNIPPERIT, adj. Sharp, thin, peaked up, Shetl.]

SNIPPERT, SNIPPY, adj. Tart in language or mode of speaking, S.

[SNIPPERT, adj. A very small piece, a crumb, Banffs.]

SNIPPY, s. One who, in cutting with the scissors, gives too short measure, Ang.

Teut. snipp-en, secare.

SNIPIE-NEBBIT, adj. Having a nose resembling a snipe's neb or bill, which is long, and sharp, and slightly bent, Roxb.

SNIPPI-TIN', part. adj. Snooking, smelling.

"Poor shilly shally shurf!—You haud a pleugh! ye maun eat a bowe o' meal an' lick a peck o' ashes first! d—I haet e'er I saw ye gude for yet, but rinnin snippit after the bits o' weuches." Hogg's Tales, i. 5, 6.

Perhaps smelling like a dog, S. Snooking. Dan. Teut. snabel, a beak, a snout; Belg. snuffel-en, to search.

SNIPPIT, adj. [1. Scant, scanty; hence niggardly, S.

2. Snub;] as, a snippit niz, a snub nose, Ang.

Isl. snoppa, rostrum; Su.-G. snibb, quicquid in acumen desinit; or allied to E. snub, a jag, a snag.

[SNIPPOCK, s. A snipe, (Scolopæc gallinago), Shetl., Dan. sneppe, Sw. snäppa, id.]

To SNIRK, v. n. To draw up the nose hastily, as an expression of contempt or displeasure, S.

"Snirk, to give the nose a smart draw up with the membranes of itself;" Gall. Encycl.

This is undoubtedly allied to Teut. snorck-en, Su.-G. snark-a, Dan. snork-er, to snore, to rout. In O. E. snorke was used in the same sense. But Snirk is more closely connected with some terms, from a common origin, which are used with a variation of the sense, as more immediately expressing the action of the membranes. These are Isl. snark-ia, denoting a grin or distortion of the mouth, ringi, os distorquere; and Su.-G. snork-a, which has a different signification from the cognate snarka. Ihre explains the latter, naribus follicare, stertere; but of snark-a he says; Apud nos de fremitu minas spirantis tantum adhibetur, unde dicimus mel snork och pock, per minas et ronchos; vo. Snarka.

[SNIRKAM, SNIRKUM, s. A name given to strong liquor; liter., mouth-twister, Shetl.]

To SNIRL, v. n. 1. To sneeze, Roxb.

2. To laugh in an involuntary and suppressed way; synon. with Snirk. This is the more general sense, ibid.

"Snurles, nostrils, North." Grose.

In both senses the word must be viewed as having a common origin with Snirk, Snirt, and Snork. It must be undoubtedly the same with Isl. snoert, ronchus, gutturi stridor; snoert-a, ducero ronchos; 2. extremam vocem laesi gutturi emittere; Haldorson. The s is probably from Goth. snirre, sternutatio, to which Serenius traces E. Sneer.

To SNIRT, v. n. 1. To breathe sharply, in a jerking sort of way, through the nostrils, Roxb. Dumfr.

She gecks as gif I meant her ill,
When she gliks paughty in her brows;
Now let her snirt and lyke her fill, &c.
Herd's Coll., ii. 45.

When weavels snirtit frae the dykes,
Or fumerts frae the braes an' sykes,
He cock'd his tail, and geel his head;
O' scores o' them he was the dead.
Hogg's Scot. Pastorals, p. 22.

V. SNIRT, s.

2. To breathe strongly through the nostrils, as expressive of displeasure or indignation, Loth.

3. To burst out into a laugh, notwithstanding one's attempts to suppress it, S.

This might seem to be a frequentative from the E. v. Sneer, the immediate origin of which is obscure.

SNIRT, s. A suppressed laugh, issuing with a snorting noise from the nostrils, ibid.

A smile, it has been observed, is in the lips; whereas a snirt, proceeds from the nose.

Snicker or Snigger, v. E., expresses the same idea. Snert, North. is expl. "an ineffectual effort to stifle a laugh," Grose; and perhaps this explanation gives the proper idea. Under the E. to Sneer, Serenius refers to Goth. snirre, sternutatio.

SNIRT, s. An insignificant diminutive person; generally applied to children, Clydes.; [snit, Shetl., q. v.]

Su.-G. snert, gracilis; Isl. snirt, comptus, nitidus.

SNISH, s. Snuff, Gl. Shirr. V. SNEESHIN.

"Snush or sneezing-powder;" Kersey. [Sw. snus, id.]

SNISTER, s. A severe blast in the face, Ang.; synon. snifter. V. SNISTY.

It is pronounced Sneyster, Fife; and expl. as properly denoting a severe blast, in a cold day, which makes the nose to run; whereas Snifter is, in that county, always applied to a storm of snow, when it is drifted. It has been supposed, that as a sneyster makes the mucus to flow from the nose, by a snifter such a blast is denoted as stops the nostrils. The one is viewed as expressive of a similar effect with sneezing; the other, with snifing.

SNISTY, adj. Saucy in language or demeanour. A snisty answer, an uncivil reply, given with an air of haughtiness or scorn, S. B.

From Su.-G. snoes-a, Isl. snefs-a, to chide with severity; unless it be rather allied to Su.-G. snysf-a, to draw the breath frequently through the nose, to sniff, which is often an expression of contempt.

It is observable, indeed, that many of the terms denoting displeasure, are borrowed from the nose. E. and S. snib, snub, Su.-G. snubb-a, from nabb, S. neb, the nose; Isl. snæf-ur, austere, from nef, nasus; Su.-G. snaes-a, to chide, from nasa; Germ. anschnautz-en, to snub, to grumble, from schnautze, the beak; S. snifter, a cutting repartee. This analogy may be remarked in the same term, as denoting a severe blast, especially in relation to one whose face is exposed to it. This also may be from Isl. nef, nasus.

Thre, vo. Snæna, makes a curious conjecture as to the reason of this derivation. This has been mentioned under SNASH, v. He adds another, which has greater probability; that birds express displeasure by pecking with their beaks.

To SNITE, v. a. This is used, not only like the v. in E., in relation to the nose, but also as to a candle, S. Snite the candle, snuff it.

Su.-G. snyt-a, emungere; snyta liuset, emungere lucernam; Germ. das licht schnetz-en, id. A.-S. candelantels, emunctorium.

[SNITE, SNIT, s. Any thing small or insignificant; generally applied contemptuously to diminutive persons, Shetl. V. SNOIT.]

• To SNIVEL, v. n. 1. To breathe hard through the nose, S.

2. To speak through the nose, S. A. Bor.; used in the same sense with E. to Snuffle.

Teut. snoffel-en, snuffel-en, naribus spirare

To SNOCKER, v. n. To snort, to breathe high through the nostrils, S.; properly, to throw out the breath, or respire violently.

And aye quhan the caryl gave a yowle,
Or snockerit with belsche and braye,
Then all the rokis playit clatter agayne,
And nicherit for mylis away.

Grousome Caryl, Blackw. Mag., Jan. 1825, p. 79.

— "It may signify, smells or snuffs, by sucking in the breath at the nose; which Scot. also we call snottering, or snokering." Rudd. vo. Snokis.

Syne thrice he shook his fearsum honk,

And thrice he snockerit loud. —
Minstrelsy Border, iii. 358.

Dan. snorck-er, Belg. snork-en, id.

SNOCKER, s. A snort; also, the act of snorting, S.

SNOCKERS, s. pl. A stoppage of the nostrils from cold; in consequence of which one cannot breathe through them, or cannot do so without making a snorting noise, S.; synon. Snifters.

SNOD, adj. 1. Lopped, pruned, having all excrescences removed, S.

On stake and ryce he knits the crooked vines,
And snoddles their bowes. —

Hudson's Judith, p. 53.

Syne chargit all thare cabillis vp belive,
His awin hede warpit with ane snod olive.

Doug. Virgil, 153, 53.

A piece of wood is said to be snod, when it is smoothed. This is merely the part. pa. of the v. Sned, q. v.

2. Neat; as applied to the appearance or shape.

And snod and sleikit worth thir beistis skinnis.
Doug. Virgil, Prol., 402, 26.
 A black-a-vic'd, snod, dapper fellow.
Ramsay's Poems, li. 362.

V. BLACK-A-VIC'D.

3. Trim, neat, S.; synonym. trig.

His coat was made of hoddin gray,
 His bannet blue, and braid that day:
 His plaiding hose were snod and clean.
R. Gallaway's Poems, p. 131.

—A person is said to be snod, when plainly, but neatly, dressed; simplex munditiis, Hor. To snod one's self up, id.

A. Bor. snod, neat, handsome; Ray, Marshall.

4. Transferred to literary compositions.

Your snod remarks, and pointed stile,
 Would gar a dorty body smile.
R. Gallaway's Poems, p. 163.

Su.-G. snod, Isl. snud-ur, naked, bare, would almost seem to have the same origin. Hence,

To SNOD, SNODDE, v. a. 1. To prune, to lop, S.; [to castrate, Banffs.]

2. To put in order, S.

Ye saw yoursel how weel his mailin thrave,
 Ay better faugh'd an' snodit than the lave.
Ferguson's Poems, li. 7.

SNODDIE, s. A neatly dressed person; almost invariably applied to a female, Clydes.

SNODLY, adv. Neatly, trimly, S.

"Mrs. M'Coul was—in the weeds of a widow, with a clean cambric handkerchief very snodly prined over her breast." R. Gilhaize, iii. 104.

Lang winnow't she, an' fast, I wyte,
 An' snodly clean't the stuff.

SNODDIE, s. A thick cake or bannock baked among hot ashes, Orkn.

Isl. snad, cibus, food, snard-a, cibum capere, snard-ing-r, epulae; snada, prandium, Olav. Lex. Run. The term seems, in modern times, to have been transferred from its general sense, as denoting any kind of food, to one species of it. Ir. snath-aim, to sup.

SNODDIE, s. An ignorant stupid fellow, a ninny, Roxb.

Teut. snood, vilis, turpis; Germ. schnod, schnoele, vanus, despicatus. Wachtel views it as the same with Isl. snud-ur, nudus, egenus.

To SNODGE, v. n. To walk deliberately, Roxb.

Dan. snige sig, "to sneak, to slink, to creep, to tread easily, to go softly," Wolff. Sw. snugg-a, clanculum subducere; Ibre, vo. Snabb. E. Sneak, and Saudge, perhaps acknowledge a common fountain.

To SNOG, v. a. To jeer, to taunt, to gibe, to flout, Aberd.

This nearly resembles Isl. snugg-a, increpare. V. SNAO, v.

[SNOG, adj. Snug, Mearns.]

SNOICK, adj. 1. In a virgin-state; applied to young women, as expressive of their supposed purity; South of S.

2. Used by sailors to denote what is water-tight, ibid.

The most probable origin seems to be Su.-G. snugg, concinnus, elegans. En snugg pigga, a neat girl. Old Dan. snog occurs in the same sense. It is viewed as an oblique sense of Isl. snorgg-r, depilis, smooth, not hairy; perhaps from a common origin with Teut. snock-en, scindere, as primarily applied to the hair when cut short. Gael. snoghte, hewn, chipped, corresponds; signifying also, pleasant, decent; from snogh-am, to hew, to chip.

To SNOIF, v. a. To twist. To snioif the spindyl, to whirl or turn it round in spinning.

—And eik hir pure damesellis, as sche may,
 Naithly exercis, for to wirk the lyne,
 To snioif the spinlyl, and lang threides twyne.
Doug. Virgil, 236, 52.

Su.-G. sno, contorquere; to twist, to twine. Gael. snioh-am, pron. snior-am, to spin, to twist, is evidently from a common root. Hence beansnìomh, a spinster, q. a spinning woman. V. SNOOVE.

[SNOILTIT, adj. Abruptly cut short, truncated, Shetl.]

SNOIT, s. A young conceited person who speaks little, S.

Allied to Isl. snót, foemina lepida, sapiens; snót-r, sapiens, also vafer, Haldorson? G. Andr. gives the additional sense of modestus, which perhaps more nearly approaches the interpretation of Snoit; and snotra, mulier à compositis moribus. We must view A.-S. snót-er, snyt-er, wise, prudent, as the same word. Its most ancient form is in Moe.-G. snutra, sapiens.

SNOIT, s. The mucus that comes from the nose.

This term is used for some disorder, perhaps a running of the nose.

—The Snuffe and the Snoit, &c.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 13.

V. CLEIKS.

A.-S. snote, ge-snote, "a rheum falling down into the nose," Somner. Teut. snót, id. Snuffe and snoit seem synonym.

To SNOIT, v. a. To blow one's nose with the finger and thumb instead of a handkerchief, S.; Johns. gives Snite, v., as simply signifying "to blow the nose."

A.-S. snyt-an, emungere.

To SNOITER, v. n. To breathe high through the nose. He's ay snoiterin and sleepin, Ang.; a phrase used of an old or infirm person, who begins to dote. V. SNOTTER.

[SNOITERY, SNOITRY, SNOITY, adj. Breathing through mucus, breathing loudly through the nose, S.]

[SNOITY, adj. Foul with mucus, S.]

To SNOKE, SNOOK, SNOWK, v. n. 1. To smell at objects like a dog, S.

Bot sche at the last with lang fard fare and wele
 Crepis among the veschell and coupis all,
 The drink, and eik the offerandis grete and small,
Snokis and likis.
Doug. Virgil, 130, 25.

"Wonderful were the preservations of the persecuted about this time. The soldiers—would have gone by the mouths of the caves and dens in which they were lurking, and the dogs would snook and smell about the stones under which they were hid, and yet they remained undiscovered." Wodrow, ii. 449.

Nae doubt but they were fain o' ither,—
Wi' social nose whyles snuff'd and snockit,
Whyles mice an' mouldiworts they howkit.

Burns, iii. 2.

Lancash. "to snook, to smell;" Gl. Yorks. "Snook, to smell in a snuffing manner, as a hound;" Marshall. "Snook, to smell, to pry about curiously, to look closely at any thing;" Brocket.

2. To go about from place to place, prying into every corner, S.; a term applied to those who manifest a jealous curiosity.

Not, as Sibb. says, from Teut. snuff-en, to snuff; but from Su.-G. snok-a, which conveys the very idea expressed by this word as metaph. used; insidious scrutari, Ibre. Snoka efter en, to dog one, Seren. Hence, Ibre remarks, the lowest sort of custom-house officers, who are still prying into the repositories of passengers, are contemptuously called Tull-snokar, from the v., conjoined with tull, custom, duty.

SNOKER, s. 1. One who smells at objects like a dog, S.

2. Often used in a very bad sense, as denoting a rake, Roxb.

See what has been said above as to the use of this noun in its compound form, Tullsnoker, a low custom-house officer, who is still snoking about to see if he can lay hold on any thing on which tribute or toll may be exacted.

[To SNOKER, v. n. To breathe loud and rapidly through the nose; to snifter; part. pr. snokerin, is used also as a s. and as an adj., S. V. SNOCKER.]

SNOOD, SNOID, SNUDE, s. 1. A short hair-line, to which a fishing-hook is tied, S.

"The quantity of line found sufficient for a man to manage at sea and shore, contains 36 scores, 720 hooks, (in summer a few more), one yard distant from each other, on snoods of horse hair, value 15s." P. Nigg. Aberd. Statist. Acc., vii. 204. V. FLAUCHTBRED.

Su.-G. snod, a small rope, funiculus, Ibre; Isl. snæde, id. Perhaps from Su.-G. snø, to twist, to twine; snodt, twisted; as, snodt garn, twisted yarn.

2. A head-band, a fillet or ribbon with which the hair of a woman's head is bound up, S.

"The single women wear only a ribband round about their head, which they call a snood." Pennant's Tour in S., 1769, p. 212.

To SNOOD, SNUDE, SNAID, v. a. [1. To tie the snood or hair line on a fishing-hook, S.]

2. To bind up the hair with a fillet, S.

"At home they [the young women] went bare-headed, with their hair snooded back on the crown of their head, with a woollen string, in the form of a garter." P. Tongland, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc., ix. 325.

The prep. up is most commonly added.

"The elder maid-servant wore a good stuff gown—the younger snooded up her hair," &c. St. Ronan, iii. 19.

[Her cockernony snooded up fu' sleek
Her haffet-locks hang waving on her cheek.

Ramsay's Gentle Shepherd, Act I. s. 1.]

C. B. gnod-enu, to fillet, to bind with a lace or ribband.

To TYNE one's SNUDE. A phrase applied to a young woman who has lost her virginity, S.

Coming through the muir, my dearie,
The lassie lost her silken snude,
That cost her mony a blirt and bleirie.

Old Song, Coming through the Muir, &c.

"A snude, vitta; Northumb." Ray, p. 149. This word had been also known to the Celts. C. B. gnoden, "a fillet, band, ribband or lace; a head-band, a hair-lace;" Owen. Corn. snod, id. Lhuyd, Pryce. Perhaps Ir. Gael. snath, thread, line, and Ir. snadm, a band, a braid, are allied.

The snood, or ribband with which a Scottish lass braided her hair, had an emblematical signification, and was applied to her maiden character. It was exchanged for the curch, toy, or coif, when she passed, by marriage, into the maternal state. But if the damsel was so unfortunate as to lose pretensions to the name of maiden, without gaining a right to that of matron, she was neither permitted to use the snood, nor advanced to the graver dignity of the curch. In old Scottish songs, there occur many sly allusions to such misfortune, as in the words quoted above.

It is singular that the ancient Romans had the same figure. Mitram solvere, metaphorice significabat cum virgine concumbere. For, with the Greeks, the mitra anciently denoted a ribbon, or fillet. Montfaucon, L'antiquité expliquée, T. iii. p. 44. In some parts of the country, it is said, where the snude was commonly worn by young women, if any one dared to assume it, who was known to have made a foux pas, it would have been torn from her head with indignation.

SNOOFMADRONE, s. A lazy or inactive person, Fife.

Perhaps from the S. v. Snooce, and E. Drone.

To SNOOK, v. n. To smell at. V. SNOKE.

To SNOOL, v. a. To subjugate or govern by authority, to keep under by tyrannical means; pron. snule, S.

Our dotard dads, snood'd wi' their wives,
To girn and scart out wretched lives.—

Ramsay's Poems, l. 157.

Dan. snovl-er, to snub, to snuffle at, to give a tart or crabbed answer, might seem the origin. But this is only the v. signifying to speak through the nose, used metaph.

To SNOOL, v. n. 1. To submit tamely, S.

Is there a whim-inspired fool,—
Owre blate to seek, owre proud to snool?
Let him draw near.

Burns, iii. 344.

Never snool beneath the frown
Of any selfish rogue.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 174.

2. To act in a mean and spiritless manner, in whatever respect, S. O.

"Sackless callant!—snooling amang rags and ram horns, with a horde of deaving gypsies." Blackw. Mag., June 1820, p. 281.

To GAE about SNOOLIN. To go from place to place, with an abject and depressed appearance, S.

SNOOL, s. One who meanly subjects himself to the authority of another; "one whose spirit is broken by oppressive slavery;" Gl. Burns.

Thus a henpecked husband is said to be a mere snule.

"Ye'll wind a pirn! ye silly snool,
Was worth ye're drunken saul;
Quoth she, and lap out o'er a stool,
And caught him by the spaul.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 277.

How shall I be sad when a husband I hae,
That has better sense than ony o' thae
Sour, weak, silly fellows, that study, like fools,
To sink their ain joy, and make their wives snools?
Ibid., ii. 80.

To SNOOVE, (pron. snuve), v. n. 1. To move smoothly and constantly.

A boy's top is said to snuve, when it whirls round with great velocity, preserving at the same time an equal motion, S.; to spin, synonym. V. SNOIF.

2. To walk with an equal and steady course, S.

The steyst brae, thou wad hae fact' it;
Thou never lap, and stent' and breastit,
Then stood to blaw;
But just thy step a wee thing hastit,
Thou snove'st awa.

Burns, iii. 144.

3. To snuve awa', to withdraw one's self in a clandestine sort of way, to sneak off, S.

4. To walk with the head bent downwards towards the earth; to walk carelessly or in a slovenly manner, Roxb.; to walk without any certain object, with the hands hanging down towards the ground, Clydes.

Moes.-G. snue-a, ire, venire. Su.-G. sno implies the idea of celerity, celeritate uti inter agendum vel eundum; sno sig, festinare, Ibre. It is also used in sense 3. Han snodde sig undan; He withdrew himself clandestinely. Isl. snue-a admits a signification allied to this; to turn back; reverti, terga dare, Ibre; snua aptur, retroverti, G. Andr. vo. Aptan; snue-ast a flotta, in fungam verti. Perhaps Su.-G. snop-a is allied; re infecta, cum pudore abire. Junius mentions Ir. snoinham, nere, torquere, which corresponds to sense 1. V. SNACK, and SNOIF.

To SNOOZE, v. n. To sleep, S.

Allied probably to Teut. snuyv-en, Su.-G. snyst-a, naribus spirare, from the high breathing in sleep.

To SNORK, v. n. 1. To snort, Roxb., Dumfr.

The ducks they whackit, the dogs they howled,
The herons they shriekit most piteously,
The horses they snorkit for miles around,
While the priest an' the pedlar together might be.

Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 20.

2. A person is said to snork, when he attempts to clear away any huskiness in the throat, Dumfr. According to this interpretation, it is used as synonym with Hawgh, E. to hawk.

This is obviously the same with Dan. snork-er, Belg. snork-er, to snore, to snort; Germ. schnarch-en, to snore; Su.-G. snark-a, to snort.

SNORK, s. "The snort of an affrighted horse;" Gall. Enc.

SNORL, s. A snare, a difficulty, a scrape, S.B.

Probably a dimin. from Su.-G. snocere, Teut. snocer, funis, chorda; q. a gin.

SNORT of Thread. A hank of entangled thread, Aberd.; Isl. snurda, ruga, also inaequalitas; snurd-a, signifies to ravel. The root seems to be snur, Dan. snor, a line, a thread. V. SNURL, v.

[SNORY-BANE, SNORICK, s. The leg-bone of a pig with a double string attached to the middle, leaving two ends, which when drawn produces a droning sound, Shetl. Dan. snor, a string, snurre, to drone, murmur.]

SNOSH, SNUSH, adj. Fat and contented; applied to a thriving chubby child, Dumfr.

Ir. masach is neat, elegant; and Sw. snack, "any thing that is sweet and delicious;" Wideg. But the original term is most probably Dan. snodsk, "pleasant, merry, jocund," &c. Wolff.

• SNOT, SNOTTIE, s. [1. A foul-nosed person; also, a person of slovenly, dirty habits, S.]

2. A dunce, a booby, a dolt, Roxb.; synonym. Dulbert.

A.-S. snote, Teut. snot, mucus; whence E. snotty-nosed, applied to a sloven. But V. SNODDIE.

To SNOTTER, v. n. 1. To breathe through an obstruction in the nostrils. Rudd. vo. Snokis.

When thou shouldst be kind,
Thou turns sleepy and blind,
And snotters and snores far frae me.

Sleepy Body, Herd's Coll., ii. 98.

"Ou, 'deed my Leddy, he's just quite silly-wise,—he just lies there snottering awa', pointing to the bed." Inheritance, ii. 319.

Close by the fire his easy chair too stands,
In which all day he snotters, nods, and yawns.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 96.

V. SNOCKER.

2. To snotter, to blubber, S.

"To snotter and snivel, to blubber and snuffle;" Gl. Antiq. "To snotter, to sob or cry; North." Grose.

3. To snotter and laugh, to snicker and laugh in a good-natured way, Fife.

SNOTTER, s. 1. The snot that hangs from a child's nose, S.

"Snotters, snots; the mucous, viscous matter of the nose;" Gall. Enc.

2. "The proboscis of a turkey-cock;" Gl. Antiq., S.

"Snoterjob, the red part of a turkey's head. North." Grose. This corresponds with the S. designation Bubble-jock.

3. A snickering laugh, Fife.

4. Metaph. used to denote any thing that has no weight or value.

Hence I infer, through I'm no plotter,
No help nor gloss can weigh a snorter.
Cleland's Poems, p. 109.

Teut. snot, defluxio capitis et nares; Fland. snorter, snorteringe, rheuma, catarrhus, Kilian.

- SNOTTER-BOX, s. "A cant term for the nose;" Gl. Shirr., Aberd.

- SNOTTER-CAP, s. A dull, stupid, boorish fellow, Roxb.

A combination, like many of our national terms, strongly expressive of contempt; q. a cap or bowl, filled only with snorter, or the mucus proceeding from the nose.

- SNOUT, s. 1. Used metaph. for impudence.

Now wae and wonder on your snout
Wad ye hae bonny Nansy?
Wad ye compare yourself to me,
A docken to a tansy?

Scots' Nansy, Herd's Coll., ii. 80.

In allusion, perhaps, to a sow pushing forward its snout into a place where it has no right to come.

2. This term had been formerly used in S. to denote the stem of a ship.

"Rostra, the snout of a ship." Wedderb. Voc., p. 22.

Teut. snuyte, rostrum, rostra; para navis primore in prora exporrectior et acutior; Kilian.

- SNOUTHIE, adj. Drizzly, dark, and rainy, Tweedd.

Perhaps originally applied to sleety weather, and allied to Isl. snuff-a, to snow, pret. Snyde, or Gael. snachda, snowy. Snidhe, however, in the language last mentioned, signifies drops of rain through the roof of a house. Snidh-am, to drop, distil; and snodhach, sap, moisture.

- SNOW-FLAKE, SNOW-FLIGHT, SNOW-FOWL, s. The Snow-bunting, S. Orkn.; Emberiza nivalis, Linn.

"The migratory birds are—the swallow, mountain-finch, or snow-flake, and sometimes the Bohemian chatterer." P. Dingwall, Ross, Statist. Acc. iii. 6. Snow-flight, P. Hamilton, Lanarks. ibid. ii. 210.

"Snow-fowl—Snow-bunting.—It is the snee-fugt of Norway." Neill's Tour, p. 204.

Sw. snöparf, q. snow-sparrow; Isl. snee-kok.

- To SNOWK, v. n. To smell about, Clydes. Ettr. For.

This is merely a variety of SNOKE, q. v.

- SNOWK, s. A smell; used in a ludicrous way, ib.

- [SNUAIN, SNUAN, s. A sea-weed, Orkn.]

- SNUBBERT, s. 1. A loose knot or lump, Ab.

2. The nose, in contempt; the snout, ibid.

The latter seems to be the primary sense; O. Teut. snabbe, Fris. snebbe, rostrum avis.

- SNUD, SNUDE, s. A line; a fillet. V. SNOOD, s.

- SNUFFE, SNUFF, s. 1. A disorder in the nostrils.

—The Snuffe and the Snoit, &c.

Montgomerye, Watson's Coll., iii. 13.

V. CLEIKS.

Most probably a superabundant discharge of mucus; Teut. snof, snuff, rheuma, defluxio capitis ad nares, Kilian; to which A.-S. snofel, defined precisely in this manner by Somner, is allied.

- [2. A short, quick breath through the nostrils, an expression of sulky displeasure or contempt; as, "It's jist a snuff or a growl at everything," Clydes.]

- [To SNUFF, v. n. To express displeasure or contempt by a short, quick breath through the nostrils, ibid.]

- SNUFFIE, adj. Sulky, displeased; often Snuffie-like, Clydes.

- SNUFFILIE, adv. In a sulky manner, ibid.

- SNUFFINESS, s. Sulkiness, ibid.

The idea expressed by these terms seems to be borrowed from the powerful use of the nostrils, when one's anger is excited. Thus Germ. schnauf-en, or schnaub-en, primarily signifies, per nares spirare, and secondarily, fremere. V. Wachter. Teut. snuff-en, snof-en, naribus spirare, folium more reciproco spiritu nares agitare.

- To SNUG, v. a. 1. To strike, to push; applied to an ox or cow that strikes with the horn, or pushes with the head, Ang.

2. To chide, to reprimand with severity, Ang.

The latter is perhaps the primary sense; from Isl. snægg-ia, duris et asperis verbis aliquem excipere, Verel.

- SNUG, s. A stroke, a push, Ang.

- [SNUGAMULYA, s. and adv. A complete smash; broken in pieces, Shetl. V. SMILL.]

- SNUGS, s. pl. Small branches lopped off from a tree, S.B. V. SNECK, SNEG, v.

- SNUIFIE, adj. Sheepish, awkward, Berwicks.

Isl. snæf-ur, austerus; or from snuff-a, castigo acriter, q. one who is depressed by continual snubbing.

- [To SNUILT, v. a. To shorten, stunt, Shetl.]

- [SNUILT, s. A thick stump, ibid.]

- [SNUILTIT, adj. Stumpy, stunted, ibid.]

- To SNUIST, v. n. To sniff, S.

"An' what—are ye aye doin' hniuslin' an' snuistlin' wi' the nose o' yo' i' the yird, like a brute beast, every ither day, can ye tell me?" St. Patrick, ii. 266.

Su.-G. snuffel-a, anhelitum per nares crebro reducere; Dan. snus-er, odorari.

To SNUISTER, or SNUITTER, v. n. To laugh in a suppressed or clandestine way, through the nostrils, Fife. V. SNOTTER, r.

This term has obviously the same common origin with Snifter, Snider, Snidy, &c., q. v.

SNUISTER, SNUITTER, s. A laugh of this description, ibid.

To SNUIT (like Gr. v.), v. n. To move in a careless, inactive manner, conjoined with the appearance of stupor; as, "He was gaun snuittin down the street," "He cam snuittin in;" Fife.

The original idea may be that of one trudging along, with his snout pushed out, which is often the gait of a lubberly fellow; Teut. snuyte, nasus, proboscis. Or it may be borrowed from the habits of a dog, that ranges about snokiny, or smelling out objects; Isl. snudd, exploratio canina, snudd-a, canum more explorare.

SNUITTIT, part. adj. Having the foolish and glimmering look of one who is half-drunk, Loth.

This may be allied to Dan. snotted, snotty, or to snudded, snouted, beaked, pointed, Wolff; because of the singular change produced on the features by intoxicating liquor.

SNUK, SNUKE, SNWK, s. A small cape or promontory. [V. NUK, NUKE.]

Before the ost full ferlly furth thai fle
Till Dwnottar, a snuke within the se;
Na ferrar thai nicht wyn out off the land.
Wallace, vii. 1043, MS.

Snuk, Perth Ed. Former editors, not understanding the term, have substituted strength.

The same word is used in The Bruce.

To Scotland went he than in hy,
And all the land gan occupy;
Sa hale that bath castell and toune
War in till his possessione,
Fra Weik anent Orkenay,
To Mullyr snuk in Gallaway.

Barbour, i. 183, MS.

And gif he seis we land may ta,
On Turnberys Snuke he may
Mak a fyr, on a certane day,
That mak takynnyng till ws, that we May thar arywe in sawfte.

Ibid., iv. 556, MS.

In Edit. Pink. Turnberys Inuke, from an error of the copyist, who read (long) f for I. Turnberysc-nuke, Edit. 1620.

Isl. nuk-r, vulgo knuk-r, signifies a little mountain, a higher kind of rock, G. Andr. The s may have been prefixed, as in many words of Goth. origin. Teut. snocka, nasutus, q. a little nose. I need scarcely observe, that nuk, synon with snuke, has a common origin. Isl. snok-ur, is rendered exprorectus scopus, G. Andr.; q. a mark stretched out.

In Bleau's Map of Lindisfarne or Holy Island, the isthmus which projects toward the mainland is designated "The Snekke or Conny-warren."

To SNURKLE, v. n. To run into knots, as a hard-twisted thread, Ettr. For.; immediately allied to Isl. snerk-ia, ringi, snerk-iur, s. pl. rugae, and snorkinn, rugosus.

To SNURI, r. a. and n. 1. "To ruffle or wrinkle;" Gl. Rams.

Northern blasts the ocean snuri,
And gars the heights and hows look gurl.
Ramsay's Poems, li. 349.

2. To be entangled, ravelled; applied to thread, ropes, &c., Roxb. E. to snarl.

"Snaryn, or snarlym. Illaqueo." Prompt. Parv.,
"Thread which is overtwisted, and runs into kinks, is said to run into snocknarls. North." Grose.
Isl. snurd-a is used precisely in the same sense. V.
SNORT of Thread.

SNURLIE, adj. Knotty, S. B.

Perhaps allied to Su.-G. snore, Teut. moer, a cord.

[To SNURT, v. n. To snort, Shetl.]

[SNURT, s. Snot from the nose, ibid.

Goth. snerru, Dan. snore, to blow through the nose;
Goth. snerru, a sneezing.]

[To SNUSH, v. n. To sniff at with a snorting or snoring sound, Shetl. Dan. snuse, id.]

SNUSH, s. 1. Snuff, a term still used by old people, Aberd.; also Sneesh.

Bebau'd with soot, and snush and bubbings,
Her grandchild found these following scribblings.
Meston's Poems, p. 82.

[2. A wooden instrument armed with spikes, which is fastened on the head of a calf to prevent the mother from suckling it, Shetl.]

SNUSH, adj. Fat and contented. V. SNOSH.

To SNUVE, v. n. V. SNOOVE.

[To SNY, v. a. To cut, to sever, Shetl. Du. sný-den, id.]

To SNYP, r. a. and n. To nip.

Dym skyls oft furth warpit fereful leuin,
Flaggis of fyre and mony felloun flaw,
Scharp soppis of sleit, and of the snypand snaw.
Dong. Virgil, 200, 55.

Belg. snipp-en can koude, to nip with cold. Teut.
snapp-en, urere frigore, snappen de wind, aura gelidus.

SNYPE, s. 1. A smart blow; [metaph., misfortune, loss, Aberd., Bauffs.]

But Tammy Norrie thought nae sin
To come o'er him wi' a snype,
Levell'd his nose flat wi' his chin. —
Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 124.

2. A fillip, Roxb.

[3. A cheat, a fraudulent person, Clydes. Bauffs.]

To SNYPE, v. a. 1. To give a smart stroke or blow; [metaph., to bring loss upon a person]; as, "I think I've snypit ye," Aberd. Bauffs.

2. To fillip, Roxb.

[3. To cheat, defraud, Bauffs.]

SNYST, s. Perhaps the same with Sneest.

"Ye wad—blaw i' the lug o' Sathan,—an' haud him up in snysts an' birles till the maw o' him's as fu's a cout among clover." Saint Patrick, ii. 191.

Does this signify taunts? V. SNEEST, SNEYST.

SNYTE, s. A smart blow, Ettr. For.

Isl. mid-a, secare.

To SNYTE, SNYTER, v. n. To walk feebly, Aberd., Banffs.

He's friendly an' kindly,
To chear a carking hour;
Whan dytin, an' anylin,
A word frae him's a cure.

Tarras's Poems, p. 109.

"Walking crazily;" Gl. ibid., p. 67.

[Snyte and Snyter with their derivatives have the same meanings as Sneut and Sneuter, but imply greater stpidity, and more impatience.]

SNYTH, s. The Coot, Fulica atra, Linn.

"The Coot, (Fulica atra, Lin. Syst.), which we call the Snyth, remains with us the whole year, and is found in several places." Barry's Orkn., p. 300.

It most probably receives this name from its bare or bald head, (Su.-G. snord, Isl. snaut-ur, nulus), in the same manner as, on this account, it is called, Sw. blaes-klacka, from blaes, white, *blaes*a, white forehead; Germ. weisblaessig wasserhuhn, q. the white-headed water-hen; S. beld kyte, i.e., bald coot.

To SO, v. a. To smooth the water by oily substances, in order to facilitate the raising of the small fishes to the surface, Shetl.

I see no affinity, unless perhaps to Su.-G. soefw-a, to lull asleep, or Isl. soo-a, extenuare, G. Andr.; diminuer, Verel. Haklorsen gives soy-a, so-a, as signifying, pecuniam profundere, projicere.

SOAKIE, adj. Plump, in full habit, Loth.

The pron. of Clydes. is Sukie or Sookie. "A sookie lassie," a plump sweet girl. That of Roxb. is Soakie. "A sookie lassie," a weighty female child, Roxb.

SOAKIE, s. A ludicrous designation for a lusty female, Loth.

Perhaps from E. soak, A.-S. soe-ian, to macerate; or allied to C.B. soeyen, a swaggy female, from soeg-i, to puff up with moisture. The sound given to the alj. in Clydes. renders it probable that it is an ancient Strathclyde term.

SOAM. "Herring soam, the fat of herrings. Young girls throw this against a wall; and if it adheres to it in an upright manner,—the husband they will get will also be so; if crooked, he will be crooked." Gall. Enc.

This is originally the same with E. seam, lard; C.B. saim, grease.

SOAM, s. The rope or chain by which a plough is drawn. V. SOWME.

SOAPER, s. A soap-boiler, Aberd.

This may have been borrowed from O.E. "Sopar, marchant or chapman. Saponarius." Prompt. l'arv.

SOAPERIE, s. A place where soap is made, S.

"Here [in Berwie] is also a soaperie." Agr. Surv. Kincard., p. 411.

To SOB, v. n. Applied to the palpitating motion of green wood, or of any moist body, in the fire, S. Perhaps it also includes the sound emitted.

Birk will burn, if it was burn-drawn,
Saugh will sob if it was sommer-sawn.

S. Prov. Kelly, p. 76.

i.e., Birch will burn although dragged through a rivulet: but the willow will heave in the fire, although it has all the benefit of summer-drought.

It is also applied to the burning of nuts.

Nell had the fause-house in her min',
She pits hersel an' Robin;
In loving bleeze they sweetly join,
Till white in ase they re sobbin.

Burns, ill. 129.

SOB, s. A gale of wind, a land-storm, S. B. V. SUMMER-SOB.

SOBIR, SOBYR, SOBER, adj. 1. Poor, mean, S.

—From distructionoun delyuer and out scrape
The sobir trumpis, and meyne graith of Troyanis.

Doug. Virgil, 150, 55.

"Oftimes we fynd innocent pepyll and passeriges murdryst be the theus for sobir geir in thair vaiaige." Bellend. Cron., B. xiii., c. 4. Ob pauculam rem. Boeth.

Thyself appleis with sobir rent.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 186.

Thus sobir diet denotes mean fare.

"By the present system, it requires the utmost exertion of his industry, and an almost uninterrupted succession of crops, to pay his rent and servants, and afford a maintenance, very sobir indeed, to his family." P. Killearnan, Ross, Statist. Acc., xvii. 313.

[Fr. sobre, "sober," Cotgr.; Lat. sobrius, id.]

2. Applied to money, it denotes what is low in price.

And be Ju las that fals traitour,
That Lambe for sobir summe was sauld.

Poems of the Sixteenth Century, p. 41.

We read of "sobirar prices;" Aberd. Reg., A. 1551, V. 21.

3. Little, small, S.

"If he had not respect to himselfe & his Christ, if we tooke neuer so great paines, we would find but a sobir success." Rollocke on the Passion, p. 482, id. 483.

Sobre is used in this sense by an O.E. writer.

"But, heraulde, say to the Gouvernour,—that we—ar here now but with a sobre cumpanie, & they a greate number, & yf they will mete vs in felds they shalbe satisfied with fightynge ynough." Patten's Expedition D. of Somerset, p. 50.

It is expl. however, on the margin, as a S. word.

"Sober is the proper terme whearby the Scottes doo signifie smal, litle, easy, or slender."

4. Weak, feeble.

Allace! so sobir is the micht
Of women for to mak delait,
Incontrair menis subtell slicht,
Qahilk ar fullillit with dissait.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 156.

5. Ailing, in a poor state of health, S.

Very sobir, ailing a good deal.

6. Sometimes used as denoting a moderate state of health, S.

7. Denoting any thing not good of its kind ; or applied to a person who does not merit commendation, S.

A sober servant, a very indifferent one.

This is evidently the E. word, although used in a variety of peculiar senses.

- To SOBER, SOBYR, v. a. and n. 1. To compose, to keep under, S.

Bathe ire and luff him set in till a rage ;
Bot nocht for thi he soberyt his curage.

Wallace, v. 682, MS.

Sobyrit, Edit. Perth.

2. To become less boisterous, to grow more calm, Aberd.

SOBERLY, adv. Sparingly, frugally, S.

SOBERSIDES, s. "A creature of sober habits ;" Gall. Encycl.

SOC, SOCK, SOK, s. The right of a baron to hold a court within his own domains, S. V. SAK.

SOCOMAN, SOCKMAN, s. 1. One who holds lands by socage, or on condition of performing certain inferior services in husbandry ; E. socman.

"Gif ane man deceissis, leaucand behind him moe sonnes nor ane, ane distinction is to be observed, quhither the father was ane Knicht, haucand lands balden be knichts service,—or ane Socco-man." Reg. Maj. B. ii., c. 27, s. 1.

2. A tenant of a particular district, subjected by his lease to certain restrictions, and bound to perform certain services, Aberd.

"The parish is accommodated with seven corn-mills, to some one of which the tenants of a certain district, called the sockcom, or sockmen, or sucken, are astricted." P. Turriff, Aberd. Statist. Acc., xvii. 407.

A.-S. soc, jurisdiction. V. SAK.

To SOCHER (gutt.), v. n. To make much of one's self, to be careful of one's health to an extreme, particularly by the use of warm potions, palatable draughts, &c. S.

SOCHER, adj. Lazy, effeminate, inactive from delicate living, North of S.

SOCHT, pret. and part. pa. [1. Sought, i.e., went, Barbour, vi. 625 ; attacked, xii. 390.]

2. Exhausted, wasted, drained, S.

Thai landis ar with south sa socht,
To extreme povertie ar brocht,
Thai wicked schrowis,
Has laid the plowis,
That nane, or few, is
That ar left ocht.

Aganis the Thievis of Liddisdaill, Maill. Poems, p. 332.

One is said to be sair socht, who is much wasted by debauchery, by disease, or by searching medicines.

SOCK, SOK, s. A ploughshare, S. A. Bor.

I saw Duke Sangor thair, with mony a knob
Six hundreth men slew with ane plenchis sock.
Pulice of Honour, iii. 26.

VOL. IV.

Peace to the husbandman and a' his tribe,
Whase care sells a' our wants frae year to year!
Lang may his sock and counter turn the gleyh!
And bauks o' corn bend down wi' laden ear!

Ferguson's Poems, ii. 59.

Fr. soc, id. voimer. This has been derived from Lat. sulc-us, a furrow, because this is the effect of the former. In Dict. Trev., however, it is said that soc is an old Celt. word, which has passed into Fr. from the Bas Bretagne.

O.E. socke, id. "Socke of a plough, [Fr.] soc de la cherue;" Falsgr. B. iii. F. 63, a.

SOCK-MANDRILL, s. A fac simile of a plough-head cast in metal, S.

Since the introduction of metal heads to ploughs, in place of wooden ones, commonly called sheths or sheaths, it has been found necessary, for the better fitting on of the sock, to have such a cast of the head lodged with the smith, as to prevent the inconvenience of having to send the plough itself to the smithy when a new sock is required.

[To SOCK, v. n. To sink, to sink in ; part. pa. socked, sunk, Shetl. Sw. sōka, to seek for or after ; Gotl. sauka, to sink.]

SOCKIN-HOUR, s. The portion of time between daylight and candle-light ; [also, time for ceasing work, resting time, S. V. SOKE, v.]

Denoting that short space which servants had a right to claim as a relaxation from labour? This is also called Gloamin-shot. Or, as it seems from time immemorial, both in town and country, to have been the season especially chosen for meeting together for a little gossip.

[SOCKIN-O'-THE-TIDE. The last of a tide, either of the ebb or of the flood, Shetl.]

SOCY, s. "A person who walks with a manly air ;" Gall. Encycl.

Su.-G. scass-a, to walk loftily. V. SWASH.

SOD, adj. 1. Firm, steady. To lay sod, to make secure ; to lie sod, to lie secure, or on a solid foundation, S.]

2. As applied to the mind or conduct, synon. with Douce and Canny, ibid.

This seems to be merely a provincial variety of Sud, q. v.

SOD, s. 1. A species of earthen fuel, used for the back of a fire on the hearth, S.

The word is used in Yorks. in the same sense ; and is properly distinguished by Thoresby from a turf, although Dr. Johns. explains the E. term by this. "A turf is thin and round or oval, taken from the surface of the earth ; a sod thick and square, or oblong mostly." Ray's Lett., p. 337.

It denotes a turf much thicker and weightier than what is called a Direct.

2. Used to signify, a heavy person, or any dead weight, Roxb.

SOD, adj. "Singular, odd, unaccountable, strange ;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

[SODDIE, s. A seat of sods or turf in cottars' houses, Shetl.]

S 2

SODICK, s. A dull, clumsy, heavy woman, Shetl. S. SODDIE, s.

Isl. sodi, homo sortidus; sod-az, sordere.

[SOD-LIKE, SOD-LEUKIN, adj. Heavy, odd, strange looking, Banffs.]

SOD, s. A species of bread, Ayr.

Thick nevelt scones, beer meal, or pease,—
I'd rather hae, an', gin ye please
A butter sod,

Than a' their fine blaw-flumis o' teas,
That grow abroad.

Picken's Poems, 1788, p. 63.

Isl. and Su.-G. sod denotes pottage, jus, jusculum, from sind-a, coquere.

SODDIS, SODDS, s. pl. A sort of saddle used by the lower classes in the country, made of cloth stuffed, S.; synon. sonks, sunks.

For that, that had gude hors and geir,
Hes skantlie now ane crukit meir :
And for their sadils that have soddis.

Mailland Poems, p. 322.

Next, like Don Quixot, some suppose,
He had a lady Del to Bae,
Who never buded from his side,
Upon a pair of soddis a-trie.

Colvil's Mock Poem, l. 17.

The generality of farmers, little more than half a century ago, used soddis for riding. Many of the pendiclers, who keep only one horse, still have no better equipage.

They were also used, in some of the southern counties at least, for supporting the loads on the backs of horses.

Allied perhaps to A.-S. seod, pl. seodas, a sack, satchel, or budget.

"A. Bor. sods, a canvas pack-saddle stuffed with straw;" Grose.

[SODGER, SODIOUR, s. A soldier, S.]

[To SODGER, v. n. Applied to turnips when the leaves become red, and the plant ceases to grow, Banffs.]

To SODGERIZE, v. n. To act as soldiers, to be drilled, Dumfr.

The fouk were in a perfect fever—
Marching wi' drums and fies for ever,
A' sodgerizing.

Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 11.

This is a local and a cant sort of term. Sodgering is used in the same sense in other counties.

SODGER-THEE'D, part. adj. Having little or no money in one's pocket; q. having the thigh of a soldier.

SODIOUR, s. [V. SODGER.]

SODROUN, SUDROUN, SOTHROUN, s. 1. Used as a collective name, equivalent to Englishmen.

He saw the Sothroun multipland mayr,
And to hym self oft wald he mak his mayne.
Wallace, i. 188, MS.

2. The English language, as distinguished from the Scottish.

—Forsoith I set my beay pane
(As that I couth) to make it brade and plane,

Kepand na sodroun, bot oure awin langage,
And spek as I lerned quhen I wes ane page :
Na yit so elene all sodroun I refuse,
Bot sum worle I prounce as nychboure dois.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 5. 5. 7.

It is merely southern, A.-S. sutherne, Su.-G. soeder, Isl. sudur.

SODROUN, SOTHROUN, adj. Of or belonging to England, S.

—Full gret frendschipe thai fand
With Sothroun folk : for scho was of Ingland.
Wallace, B. I. v. 284.

[SOE, s. Limpets, or other shell-fish, crushed and scattered in the sea to collect fish, Shetl. Isl. soa, to scatter.]

* SOFT, adj. 1. Wet, rainy; a soft day, a rainy day, South of S., Loth.

Junius traces A.-S. and E. soft to Su.-G. saft, succus. This use of the term in S. corresponds with his deduction.

[2. Kindly, benign, Barbour, iv. 697.]

To SOFT, v. a. To assuage.

"Thay nicht—be participant in all riches and felicitatis—providing so thay wald soft the indignacioun of their mindis." Bellenden's T. Livius, p. 19. Mollirent, Lat.

To SOILYE, v. a. To solve, to resolve.

"To soilye this questioun, ane law was promulgat in comites, centuriat, quhatsumevir consultacioun wes maid be the tribunis of small pepil, the samin sall have strenth of ane law." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 284.

From Lat. solv-ere, or O.Fr. sol-er, used in the same sense; as assoil-er is from absolv-ere.

SOILYIE, s. Soil. V. SULYE.

SOIND, s. A court of law, Shetl. V. SHYND.

[SOIND-BILL, s. V. SHUNDBILL.]

To SOIORNE, SOIOURNE, v. a. and n. [1.] To dwell, stay, remain, Barbour, iii. 323.]

2. To quarter, to lodge forcibly.

This is merely the term Sorn in its more primitive form. The old Fr. v. was also used actively. Metre des chevaux, à l'ecurie pour les rafraichir et les faire reposer; Roquefort.

"The Parliament statutis, and the King forbididis : that na companies pass in the countrie, to ly vpon ony the Kingis leigis : or thig or soiorne hors outhen on kirkmen or husbandis of the land." Acts James I., 1424, c. 7, Edit. 1566.

[SOIORNE, s. Sojourn, dwelling, Barbour ix. 369.]

[SOIORNYNG, s. Dwelling, delay, Ibid. i. 76.]

To SOIR, v. n. To complain.

—He that cryis most & roris,
Ourthrowin, schent, & most soiris.

Colkelbie Sow, F. i. v. 140.

Su.-G. soer-ja, dolere.

SOIT, SOYT, s. 1. An assize.

"Gif ane man mutilats ane other, or wounds, or beates him, be forthocht felonie : and the partie grieved persewes him before ane judge, either be soyt (be an assise) or be complaint; sic forme and order of proces salbe ledde,—as is ordained agains ane manslayer." Stat. Rob. II. c. 11, s. 1.

2. Attendance on an overlord by his vassals, in the court held by him.

"He quha is oblished to giue soyte in the courte of his over-lord, suld doe the samin, conforme to the tenour of his infestment, and na vther waies." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Sok. L.B. secta, secta curriae; Fr. suile, i.e., sequela.

SOYTOUR, SOYTER, s. 1. Any person appearing in a court of law, as the vassal of another.

"The soytes suld be first called, with their lords and maisters; for albeit the soytouris compeir, nevertheless their lords and maisters, likewise are oblished to compeir, and to giue presence to the Iustice, in his air." Skene, Crimes, Tit. ix., c. 28.

2. A person employed by another to manage his business in court, and regularly admitted by the court as an agent.

"Ilk soytour, before he is admitted and received be the judge, should be examinat in thrie courts, gif he can make recorde of the court," &c. Quon. Attach., c. 36, s. 3.

3. Sometimes equivalent to Dempster, because it was part of the office of a Suitor to pronounce the judgment of court.

"The suitor, or dempstar of court sould sweir, that he sall mak leill and trew record in that court, and sall gif and pronounce lauchful and trew dome, efter the knowlege gevin to him be God." Balfour's Pract., p. 275.

"Bot gif ane dome pronounced, and againe-said in the schirif court, is falsified before the Justitiar in his court; ilke soytour before the Schirif, pronouncers of the said dome, sall be vnlawed before the Justitiar in ten poundes." Quon. Attach., c. 13, § 8.

The terms are sometimes conjoined in old acts.

"That the dome gevin in the schirif court of Drumfress—be the mounthe of Nichole Thomsons dempstare & soytoure of the said court—was weile gevin & evil again callit." Acts Ja. III., A. 1469, Ed. 1814, p. 94.

L.-B. sectator is used in the second sense; Sectatores litium; negotiorum forensium Sectatores; Du Cange. Skene expl. it in sense first. "Hee quha is infest with sok (quhilk now we call soyte, from the Frenche worde suile, i.e., sequela) hes power and libertie to halde courtes;—in the quhilk courtes homines sui, or his vassales, suld giue soyte, and sende for them ane quha is called soytor, or sectator, a sequendo, because hee suld follow the courte, in the quhilk hee suld appeare." Vo. Sok. This denomination seems rather to have been given from his following or pursuing the cause in court.

It seems nearly allied to Su.-G. sork-a, quærero, metaph. used to denote violent invasion; whence hem-socka, our haimsucken, and Isl. atsokn, impetus bellicus.

SOITH, s. Truth.

King Priamus son made answer; Soith is it,
Na thing, my dere frende, did thou pretermyt.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 47.

For thoch scho spayit the soith, and maid na bounrl,
Quhat euer scho said, Troians trowit not ane wourl.

Ibid., 47, 6.

A.-S. soth, veritas.

SOITHFAST, adj. True, certain. V. SUTHFAST.

To SOKE, v. n. "To slacken," Pink.

Ryse, fresch Delyte, lat nocht this mater sok.
King Hart, i. 20.

Let it not rest, or be delayed. It may be only a metaph. use of E. soak, because things are said to soak, when allowed to remain a considerable time in a moist state. Or perhaps from Teut. swijk-en, to subside, to fall.

 SOLACE, s. Sport, recreation.

—Or with loud cry folowand the chace
Efter the fony bare, in thare solace.

Doug. Virgil, 23, 10.

SOLACIOUS, SOLACIUS, s. Cheerful, gay.

In company solacious
He was; and tharwith amorous.

Barbour, x. 290, MS.

i.e., he was a cheerful and loving companion. For amorous seems simply to signify affectionate; as it immediately follows;

And gud knychtis he luffyt ay.

SOLAND, SOLAND GOOSE, s. The Gannet, Pelecanus Bassanus, Linn.; S. pron. solan.

It receives its trivial name from the Bass isle, where it incubates every year, as it does also on Ailsa rock.

Syne all the lentreu but les, and the lang reule,
And als in the alvent,
The Soland stewart was sent;
For he coud fra the firmament
Fang the fische deid.

Houlate, iii. 5.

"In it ar incredible noumer of soland geis, nocht vnlik to thir fowlis that Plinius callis ser ernis." Bellend. Descr. Alb., c. 9.

Martin observes, that "some derive the name of this bird from the Irish word Son'ler, corrupted and adapted to the Scottish language;" as denoting its remarkable power of vision, in spying its prey from a great distance. Voyage to St. Kilda, p. 27. This species of goose, according to Shaw, is in Gael. called Suilair.

Sibb. derives the name "from Sw. solande, lingering, loitering, sottish; part of the verb sola, procrastinare." There is, however, a bird that breeds in the Feroe islands, which is called Sula, and which may be the same with this. V. Encyclop. Britann. vo. Pelicanus.

According to Pennant, this is the same bird which the Norw. call Sule, Hav-Sul. He also views it as the Sula of Clusius, in his Exot.; Zool., p. 612.

"Gannets—breed chiefly on the Stack of Suliskerry. Sule is the Norwegian name for a gannet, and skerry means rock." Neill's Tour, p. 199, 200.

To SOLD, v. a. To solder.

"It is ordanit, that the said gold or siluer salbe ressaift be all his liegis, sa that it keip all the wecht, and be gude trew mettell, suppois it be with crak or flaw, or sollit." Acts Ja. IV., 1489, c. 34. Edit. 1566. In Edit. 1814, souldit, p. 222.

Fr. soud-er, Ital. sold-are. Arm. sout-er, id. from Lat. solid-are.

SOLD, s. 1 "A weight, ingot, Scot. sowd, as a sowd of money, i.e., a great sum," Rudd.

With ane grete sold of gold fey Priamus
Secretly vanquihle send this Poldorus,

Quhill was his son, to Polymnestor king
Of Trace, to keip and haue in nurissing.
Doug. Virgil, 68, 41.

2. Money in general.

O der Wallace, wmqhill was stark and stur,
Thow most o neikle in presoun till endur.
Thi worthi kyri may nocht the saiff for sold.
Wallace, ii. 208, MS.

According to Rudd., from Tent. soll, soud, Fr. sold, stipendium, merces; L.B. sold-us, sold-um, from sold-us, the chief gold coin used in the Roman empire. Hence Fr. sollut, E. soldier, i.e., one who serves for pay, miles stipendiarius. It may be observed, however, that A.-S. seol signifies not only a sack, but a box, a purse. Hence cyninga seol, the royal treasury. Su.-G. sud, siod, Isl. siod-ur, crumena, pera, marcupium; Ol. Lex. Kun.

As Isl. soel denotes a pension, a gift, pl. soel-ur, from Su.-G. soel-ia, to deliver, to pay, Ihre supposes that Lat. salaria, used to signify the stipend both of magistrates and soldiers, has been borrowed by the Romans from the Scythians, to whom they were indebted for a variety of other military terms.

SOLDATISTA, s. Soldier: Ital. soldatesca, soldato, L.B. soldates, a soldier.

"Desires that in testimony of their bonaccord with the soldatista that had come so far a march for their safeties,—they may be pleased out of their accustomed generosity and present thankfulness to the soldatista for keeping good order, and eschewing of plundering, to provide for them 1200 pairs of shoes," &c. Spall. ing. i. 215.

SOLE, s. A potatoe basket, Liddesdale; pronounced like E. soul.

Flandr. seule, suele, suyle, situla; modiolus; a bucket; also, a small bushel or corn measure.

[SOLE-BUIRD, s. The plank next the hassins in a boat; the one adjoining is called the upper sole-buir, Shetl. Dan. soale, sole or bottom.]

SOLEFLEUK, s. The sole, a sea-fish, Dumfr.

"By this means they catch fleuks, solefleuks, tur-bets, and severall other fish." Symson's Descr. Gall, p. 43.

SOLE-TREE, SOAL-TREE, s. A large beam reaching from the one wall of a cow-house to the other, into which the under end of each stake or post is mortised; and which, resting on the ground, forms the crib or manger, Teviotdale; q. forming the sole.

SOLE-CLOUT, s. A thick plate of cast metal attached to that part of the plough which runs on the ground, for saving the wooden heel from being worn, Roxb.

"O, to see the sock, and the heel, and the sole-clout of a real steady Scottish plough, with a chield like a Samson between the stils, laying a weight on them would keep down a mountain." The Pirate, ii. 28.

A.-S. sul denotes a plough.

SOLE-SHOE, SOLE-SHUE, s. 1. Same with Sole-clout, Clydes.

2. A piece of iron fitted on the head of a plough, i.e., the part on which the sock or share is fixed. The two pieces of iron below the sock are called plaitings, Fife.

Su.-G. ske denotes whatever strengthens the extremity of any thing; often applied to points of iron.

[SOLICIT, adj. V. under SOLIST.]

* SOLID, SOLIDE, adj. Sane, in full possession of one's mental faculties; used in a negative form, as, "He's no very solid," He is not quite sound in his mind, S.

"Bot the said erle and the said maistres Agnes continuing a certane space togidder, scho tuk occasioun be his infirmite and waik judgement, he being than nocht so solide as wes necessair for the weil of his estait, to invent and devyse mony fraudful meanis in the hurte and prejudice of the airis and successouris of the first marriage, in thair successioun to the said erle-dome of Erroll," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1606, Ed. 1814, p. 317.

SOLIST, adj. Careful, anxious, eager. Lat. solicit-us.

"Riche kyng Amphion was verray solist to keip his scheip, and at enyn quhen thai past to there faldis, scheip cottis and ludgens, he playt befor them on his harpe." Compl. S., p. 67.

"Be not solist for any thing, but in euery thing let thy requests be shoven forth to God." Rollock on 2 Thes., p. 114.

To SOLIST, v. a. To solicit, to persuade, Doug.

SOLISTARE, s. A solicitor, an agent in a court of law.

"His liegis hes bene greittie hurt in tymes bygane be jugis, haith spiritual and temporall, quha hes not bene allanerlie jugis, bot plane solistaris, partiall counsallouris, assistaris and part takaris with sum of the parteis, and he tane greit geir and proffit." Acts Ja. V., 1540, c. 84, Edit. 1566.

SOLISTATIOUN, c. Legal prosecution, management in courts of law.

"That the alderman, bailyeis, &c. of Abirdlene sall content and pay to Schir Johne Ruthirfurd of Terlane knycht the soume of fiftj merkis—aucht to him be the said alderman, &c. for solistatioun of thar errandis the tyme he wes alderman of the said toun." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1492, p. 250.

Solistatioun of thar errandis, i.e., "legal management of their business."

Hence L. B. solicitor, qui causas alienas apud Jurisconsultos sollicitat, id est, exponit, promovet, subsequitur; Du Cange.

SOLLICIT, SOLICIT, adj. Solicitous.

"The common brute is, that the Freuche have in hand sune hastie and sune greate enterprise, and the rumor lacketh not appearance, for they have shipped much ordinance, and are not verie sollit to reenfort the ruptures and daylie decays of Lythe." Knox's Lett., Sadler's Papers, i. 662.

"Being cairfull and sollit for renewing, strenthning, and confirming the antient alliance betuix the king-dome," &c. Acts. Cha. I., Ed. 1814, VI. 60. V. SOLIST.

[SOLOMON'S-AVON (Even). November 3rd; a superstition of ill-omen connected with this day, Shetl.]

SOLUTE, adj. General, not close, declamatory, Lat. solutus.

—"You floor it to fall on some, whom you mind to hit right or wrong, in a solute and lax discourse, substitute instead of argument." M'Ward's Con- tendings, p. 177.

SOLUTIONNE, s. Payment; Fr. solution.

—"Anent the recuperatione and optening of annualis rentis in burgh, in falt of solutionne and payment of the annualis to the lardis, awnaris, and proprietaris of the said annualez," &c. Acts Ja. IV., 1489, Ed. 1814, p. 222.

"The strength of the presumption—was totally elided by proving a positive way—how the right came into the debtor's hands; it neither being by solution, nor other transaction, importing the consent of the creditor thereto." Fount. Dec. Suppl., iii. 280.

[SOLVE, s. That member of college that exacts the fines, Aberd. Lat. solvo, pay.]

SOLVENDI, adj. 1. Sufficient to pay one's debts, solvent, Ang. Lat. Solvend-us. Solvendo is also used, Aberd.

2. Worthy of trust, to be depended on, Aberd.; changed to Sevendle or Sevennil; Roxb.

3. Firm, strong; denoting sufficiency for the purpose to which any thing is applied; as, "That dore's no very solvendie," Ang., Aberd.

Solvendier in the comparative, and solvendiest, are used, Aberd.

SOLVENDINESS, s. A state of trust-worthiness, ib.

SOLYEING, s. The act of solving.

Than to his lords cum is this nobil king,
Desyrand for to wit the solyeing
Of this question, this problem, and this dout.
Priests of Peblis, S. P. R., i. 11.

SOME. A termination of adjectives. V. under SUM.

SOME, adv. 1. In some degree, somewhat as, "I'm some hurt." S.

—The sun was set,
An' fields wi' falling dew some wet.
Piper of Peebles, p. 9.

2. And some, a phrase denoting pre-eminence above that which has been mentioned before.

May we not think our pains well wair'd,
When our young Nory's gotten a lair?
Jean says, I thought ay guesel of her wad come,
For she was with the foremost up and some.

Ross's Helenore, p. 117, 3d Edit.

This language has been thus expl. to me by an intelligent correspondent in Aberdeenshire.

"Wi' the foremost up [i.e., up with the foremost] and some, is a common phrase, which means, 'Equal to the best of them, and a good deal more than equal; not merely equal, but superior' to others in any respect. Thus, also, 'She's as bonny as you, and some;' she is as pretty as you are, and much more so.—'He'll sing wi' her, and some;' He sings as well as she does, and a great deal better."

The use of this term, as signifying somewhat, corresponds nearly with the use of Moes.-G. and A.-S. sum, signifying aliquid, aliquantum. But, and some is evidently an elliptical phrase, denoting somewhat in addition to what has been said before.

[SOME-DELE, SOMDEILL, adv. V. SUMDELL.]

SOMEGATE, adv. Somehow, in some way, S. [Some-way is now more common.]

"To speak truth, and shame the de'il, though Elshie's a real honest fellow, yet somagate I would rather take daylight wi' me when I gang to visit him." Tales of my Landlord, i. 101.

SOMMAR, adj. Summary; Fr. sommaire.

"To tak sommar tryall and cognition of the offence." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, vol. V. 258.

SON, SONE, s. The sun.

And in the lift tua sonny's schinnand clere,
The ciété of Thebes can double to him appere.
Doug. Virgil, 116, 23.

Germ. sonne, Belg. son, sol; hence used by ancient writers as denoting the Supreme Being, from the worship given to the sun. V. Wachter.

SONDAY, s. The old orthography of Sunday.

"That sick persones be present the next Sonday for sermone befoirnone, in the place to be appointed to thame to accept that charge." Election, &c. of Superintendants, Knox's Hist., p. 268.

Sunday more nearly resembles the A.-S. Sunna-dæy, Solis dies; Sunday.—Teut. Son-dagh, Su.-G. Soendag, id. Ihre observes, however, that anciently it was Sundag. He views the word Sun or Sonne, as formed from Sol, by a change of the letter l into n. Vo. Sol.

SONE PLEUCHT. A ploughgate or division of land exposed to the solar rays. "The haill sonie pleucht," &c. Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

SONIE HALF. That part or division of lands which lies to the south, or is exposed to the sun; Sunny side, synon. This is opposed to the Schaddow half, or the division that lies away from the sun, S.

"Confermis—the schaddow half of the town and landis of Drumdurrocht;—all and haill the schuddow quarter of the sonie half landis of Eister Creuchie;—the quarter of the sonie half landis of Creichnaleid," &c. Acts Ja. VI., 1581, Ed. 1814, p. 372.

SON-AFORE-THE-FATHER, s. Common Coltsfoot, Tussilago farfara, Linn., S. Called in botanical Latin, Filius-aute-pater.

[SONCE, s. Property. V. SONS.]

[SONE, adv. Soon, Lyndsay, Sq. Meldrum, l. 1484.]

SONELIE, adj. Filial.

"We, movit of sonelic lufe aucht to our derrest morders the quene; And attour of equite having consideracioun how Archibald erle of Angus bes wrang-ualis takin up the malis and proffettis of diuors hire

p. 327.

The same beautiful epithet remains in Sw. sonlig, and Dan. soenlig, id.

To SONK, SUNK, v. n. Apparently, to drivel, to loiter; or to be in a low or dejected state.

—There's no glee to give delight,
And warl frae spken the langsome night.
For which they'll now have nae relief,
But sonk at hame, and cleck mischief.

Ramsay's Poems, i. Life xlv.

If not from E. sink, Su.-G. sinnk-a, q. depressed;
perhaps allied to sink-a, retardare; sinka sig, tempus terere. Ei laenger saenken; Diutius non tardate; Hist. Alex. Magn. ap. Ihre. Isl. sinnk-a, id. from sen, tardus, seruus.

[To SONKER, v. n. To simmer, to boil slightly,
Shetl.]

SONK, s. 1. A seat of that form and quality that it may be used as a couch.

Thus Doug. uses the term as corresponding to torus in Virg., to denote that kind of couches on which the ancients reclined during their meals.

Syne eftir endlangis the sey coistis bray,

Vp sonkis set and desis did array,

To meit we satt with haboundance of clere.

Virgil, 75, 12.

This seems the primary sense; not only from the use of the word by this venerable writer, but from its affinity to A.-S. song, Su.-G. saeng, siang, Isl. saeng, seng; a bed, a couch; also, a pillow. G. Andr., renders the Isl. word by culcitra. Both Lye, (Add.
Jun. Etym.), and Ihre have remarked the affinity between these terms and S. sonk.

2. A green turf, or seat made of it, S.

Tho gan the grane Aceste with wordes chyd
Entellus, sat on the grene sonk him besyde.

Doug. Virgil, 140, 31.

The term has most probably come to be applied to a green turf, or grassy seat, because of its softness, and consequent fitness for being used as a couch or place of rest. This idea receives confirmation from the following passage:—

Eneas and vtheris chiftanis glorius—
Vnder the branschis of ane semelie tre
Gan lenyng down, and rest thare bolys fre:
And to thare dinnare did thame al aildres

3. "A wreath of straw, used as a cushion, or a load saddle," Gl. Evergreen.

Godscroft has preserved part of a satirical rhyme, on the defeat of Argyle by the Kerrs, A. 1528, in which the term occurs in this sense:—

The Earle of Argyle is bound to ride
From the border of Edg-bucklin bray,
And all his Habergeons him beside;

Each man upon a sonke of stray.—

They made their vow that they would slay, &c.

Hist. Doug., p. 260.

This name, in the pl., is still given to the cushion, or substitute for a saddle, used by some of the lower classes in S.

"Towards the beginning of November this year, a party of soldiers apprehended about twelve persons in that parish, most of them merely for not keeping the church, and carried them prisoners to Hamilton.—To morrow being to be carried in to Edinburgh, some horses were provided for them, and a guard of dragoons.
The horses had all sunk laid on them when brought;
but the commander, Boushaw, caused remove them, and two men were put upon each of the dragoons' lean horses, without any thing under them; yea, the men were first tied one to another by their arms, and then had their legs twisted with cords, cross the horses' belly, so hard, that their ancles were galled to the effusion of their blood," &c. Wodrow, ii. 391.

The whole passage would deserve to be transcribed, to give a taste of the tender mercies of that period.

Saecking being the term which occurs in the A.-S. version, Mark vi. 55. for a couch, Ihre thinks that Su.-G. saeng may be traced to this as its origin. Here he seems mistaken. But he subjoins an observation, which may assist us in discovering the reason of this name being giving to the sort of saddle used by the poor in this country:—

"The ancients had for their beds, or cushions and pillows, sacks stuffed with straw." This is just the description of that kind of saddle now called sonks, synon. noddies. It is a piece of strong sacking cloth, stuffed with straw, wool, or some substance of this kind.

We find the Dan. term seng applied exactly in the same manner; straaseng, "a pad of straw;" Wolff.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 44.

Sonce fa' me, witty, Wanton Willy,
Gin blyth I was na as a filly—

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 323.

2. It seems to be used, as Mr. Ellis con-jectures, in that old Ballad on the death of Alexander III., preserved by Wyntown, as signifying abundance.

Quhen Alysandyr our kyng wes dede,
That Scotland led in luwe and le,
Away wes sons of ale and brede,
Of wyne and wax, of gamyn and gle.

Wyntown, vii. 10, 527.

Prob. allied to Gael. Ir. sonna, prosperity, happiness; Ir. sonos, chance, fortune; sona, prosperous, blessed, happy; sonsa, in favour, Bullet. Teut. sanse, augmentum, prosperitas, seems radically the same. Kilian refers to deghe, salus, sanitas, vigor, as synonym.

SONSY, SONSE, adj. 1. Lucky, fortunate, happy, (canny, synonym.) as opposed to what is accounted ominous or ill-boding, S.B.

This seems to be the primary sense, as it is the only one in which the term is used by our old writers.

Gif thow be gude, or evill, I cannot tell;
Thay ar not sonsy that so dois ruse thame sell.

Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 15.

To SOOCH, (gutt.) v. n. To swill, [to keep in a state of intoxication]; to swallow.

drink in large draughts, [to drink off at once], S.

It seems originally the same with E. srip, which, as Lye (Add. Jun.) supposes, may be derived either from Isl. siug-a, sorbeo, or as nearly of the same signification with scill, from A.-S. scilg-an. Seren. prefers the former etymon.

SOOKIN' TURKEY. A vulgar name for a fool or ninny, Roxb.

Applied, perhaps, to the person described, from the absurdity of the idea; as Shakespeare uses the phrase, "a sucking dove," in a similar sense.

"But I will aggravate my will so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an' 'twere any nightingale." Midsum. Night's Dream.

SOORLONG, s. A noted liar, Shetl.

The last syllable is evidently from Dan. loyn, a lie, or contr. from logner, a liar. The first may be from Su.-G. soaar, gravis. soara, valde, used intensively, q. a great liar, a very liar; or from soere, an oath, q. one who has perjured himself, or who has been proved a liar by the deposition of witnesses.

SOOTY-SKON, s. A cake baked with soot to be eaten on Fastern's-e'en, S.B.

A more correct account of this singular custom has been communicated by a friend on whose accuracy I can depend.

In the shires of Mearns and Aberleene, among the many superstitious ceremonies that are performed on Fastern's-een, by the younger people of both sexes, that of the sooty-scone holds a distinguished place. It is the usual custom on that evening to make skair-scones, which are composed of milk, meal, (or flour), and eggs beaten up and sweetened with sugar, mixed to a thin consistence. When a sufficient quantity of skair-scones is prepared, (which are made more for a treat than for any magical virtue they are considered to possess), as much of the substance is left,—into which a quantity of soot is stirred, and a marriage ring is put,—as will make a large and thick scone, which is called the sooty-scone, and in which all the magic is believed to consist.—She, who prepares the sooty-scone, must keep a strict silence whilst it is baking, for if she speak, all its virtues are lost; and when it is baked, it is divided into as many portions as there are unmarried guests, each of whom, blind-folded, draws a part. The person who is so fortunate as to draw the piece containing the ring, is assured of being the first married of the company; and to know who their intended partner will be, the piece of cake is dreamt on, i.e., placed under the pillow in the left foot stocking, and whatsoever person is dreamt of, he or she is viewed as the future husband or wife of the dreamer. This power of looking into futurity, however, is not confined to the person who obtained the ring, but, by the mystical virtues of the sooty-scone, is alike equal to all who partook of it; the ring only conferring the privilege of being the first married of the company.

SOP, s. A slight meal, a hasty refreshment; [also, a sup, a small quantity], S.

The Scottis men, quhen it wes day,
Thair mes devoutly gert thai say.
Syne tuk a sop; and maid thaim yar.

Barbour, xii. 409, MS.

Mr. Pinkerton conjectures that this slight meal might be "of Scottish pottage, oatmeal and water boiled." Ibid., N.

This most probably refers to sorbile food, what is vulgarly called spoon-meat, S. One is said, in relation to this, to tak a soup, [i.e., a small quantity], a very slight repast. V. SOUP.

Sir Gaucan and Sir Gal., ii. 11.

This seems to have been three sops of some favourite cordial; denominated perhaps from the idea of its strength or powerful effects. V. MANE.

SORDES, s. Filth, S.B. V. SUDDILL, adj.

"It ought and should be found and declared that the said Alexander Fraser, or any person deriving right from him, have no right or title, by means of any operations or manufactures on the banks of the river, to throw or convey into the said river, corrupted water, the filth, sordes, dregs, or refuse of a distillery or manufactory, or any other substance of a nauseous quality." State, Leslie of Powis v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 36.

Lat. sordes, id. This term might be introduced by the monks or clergy in their charters. Isl. saur, however, signifies filth, and sauri-a, to defile; Verel. Ind., p. 217. Thus the Lat. word might itself have a Gothic origin. The term is also used in E.

SORD, s. A cross bar in a Liggat or reclining gate. "The long bar which crosses the others obliquely is the sord;" Gall. Enc., p. 316.

SORDANE, adj. Prob., secret.

—Thai suld exmple tak of hir sordane teiching.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 63.

This might be understood of secret instruction; Fr. a la sourdine, privately. But it is sovraue, in Edit. 1508.

SORDID, pret. [Errat. for Fordid, did for, spoil, destroyed.]

SORIT, adj. Of a sorrel colour; as, "a sorit horse," Clydes.

Fr. seure, of a sorrel colour, saur-ir to turn into a sorrel colour. This is traced to Lat. sal-ire, to salt; Dict. Trev.

SORING, part. pr. Bewailing.

I in my mynd againe did pance,—

Deploing, and soring,

Their ignorant estaitis.

Burel's Pilg., Watson's Coll., ii. 46.

A.-S. sorg-ian, lugere, tristare.

To SORN, SORNE, v. n. 1. To obtrude one's self on another for bed and board, S.

"Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt, called in the lowlands gilivittis, and lived on free quarters; so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to sorn or be a sorner." Macbean, Johns. Dict., vo. Sorehon.

2. Used, in an improper sense, to denote the depredations made by an invading army.

All things perplexed were, the Baliol proud,
With English forces both by land and flood
In Scotland came, arrived at Kinghorne,
And through the country mightily did sorne.

Muse's Threnodie, p. 96.

Sibb. properly enough refers to Fr. sejourn-er, commorari. For the S. word is merely the E. one, according to the old mode of writing it. It would appear that the j was sounded as i.

For thought me tharfor worthit dey,
I mon soiourne, quhair euyr it be.

Barbour, iii. 323, MS.

Wallace than said, We will not soiourne her.

Wallace, iii. 79, MS.

It is also used actively, with respect to the practice of sorning.

The only hesitation I have, as to the etymon given above, arises from the use of the word Sorehon (also written Sorehen) in Ireland, which is viewed by Dr. Johnson as the same with our Sorn.

"They—take and exact upon them, as upon their first demeanes all those kinde of services, yea and the very wilde exactions, Coignie, Livery, Sorehon, and such like, by which they pole and utterly undoe the poore tennants and frecholders unto them." Spencer's State of Ireland, Works, viii. 485.

Sorehon is said, by Sir James Ware, to be "a tax imposed four times a year on all Frank-Tennants, or such who held lands descendible to their heirs, for the maintenance, entertainment and pay of "the Lord's horsemen and foot soldiers. I take the name," he adds, "to come from the word Srone, which was a measure of oat-meal containing three pottles, and that Sorehon was a charge of a certain quantity of oat-meal for the maintenance of so many Gallovglasses as were stipulated for between landlord and tenant, three pottles for each head, and that seldomer or oftener according to the terms of the tenure." Antiq. of Ireland, i. 74.

Besides the Sorehon, the Irish lords, at least in the time of Elizabeth, subjected their tenants to a pretty severe visitation which they called Coshering. Fynes Moryson gives a strange account of their manners, in a passage in which he mentions this custom.

They "sleepe," he says, "vnder the canopy of heauen, or in a poore house of clay, or in a cabbin made of the boughs of trees, and couered with turffe, for such are the dwellings of the very Lords among them. And in such places, they make a fier in the midst of the roume; and round about it they sleepe vpon the ground, without straw or other thing vnder them, lying all in a circle round about the fier, with their feete towards it. And their bodies being naked, they couer their heads and vpper parts with their mantels, which they first make very wet, steeping them in water of purpose, for they finde that when their bodies haue once warmed the wet mantels, the smoake of them keeps their bodies in temperate heate all the night following. And this manner of lodging, not onely the meere Irish Lords, and their followers use, but euen some of the English Irish Lords and their followers, when after the old but tyrannicall and prohibited manner vulgarly called Coshering, they goe (as it were) on progresse, to liue vpon their tenants, til they haue consumed al the victuals that the poore men haue or can get." Itinerary, P. III., p. 164.

SORNARE, SORNER, s. One who takes free quarters, S.

"Quhair euer sornaris be ouertane in tyme to cum, that thay be deliuerit to the Kingis Schireffis, and that furthwith the Kingis justice do law vppone thame as vppone a thief or reuar." Acts James II., 1455, c. 49, Edit. 1566. V. the v.

This severe act was put in force, about fifty or sixty years ago, upon two brothers of the name of M'Farlane, who were executed at Forfar; if I remember right, by the sentence of the sheriff. They were kabli and repute notorious thieves; but nothing could be proved against them. The cruel expedient was therefore fallen upon, of trying and condemning them on the Sornare Act. They broke prison, and escaped, a day or two before that appointed for execution; but, the country being raised, they were captured in the entry to the Highlands, making crowdie in their bonnets at the side of a brook; carried back, and executed.

SORNING, s. The act of exacting free lodgings, S. "Sorning, spunging, and playing the unwelcome guest;" Gl. Antiq.

SORNE, part. pa. Sworn, Aberd. Reg.

To SORPLE, v. a. To scrub with soap and water, Roxb.

Tent. schraffel-en, corrader; or Su.-G. sorp-a, to moisten.

SORPLINS, s. pl. Soap-suds; or the liquid in which clothes have been washed, ibid.

* SORROW, s. 1. A term vulgarly used in imprecations, or strong asseverations, S.

Alice, the porter is foryett,
But sorrow mair the men mycht gett.

Legend Ep. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 384.

"No," Gl. But this is by no means a simple negative. It is often used, although by some perhaps ignorantly, yet in the same unlawful way as sent, i.e., fend, de'ill, &c., when meant to express a strong negation; and, in imprecation, like, E. pox, plague, deuce, &c. The term would seem indeed sometimes to denote a personification; as the vulgar speak of the muckle Sorrow, in the same manner as they speak of the devil.

"The sorrow tak him, and a' his crew o' rotten Bishops thegither." Tenant's Card. Beaton, p. 25.

[2. Applied also to a troublesome child, S.]

MUCKLE SORROW. The devil, S.

—An' rogues o' Jews, they are nae arrow
Wi' tricks fu' sly,
Wad pest the very muckle sorrow
To trock or buy.

D. Anderson's Poems, p. 116.

SORROW-RAPE, s. A rope or strap slung across the shoulders of persons carrying a handbarrow, and attached to the steels or trams of it, to relieve the arms of those who carry the load, Teviotd.

[A.-S. sweora, swira, swora], swura, the neck, because it is hung near it.

To SORT, v. n. To depart, to go forth; Fr. sort-ir.

"At efter none there sortit out of the town the lordis Hereis, Lochinwar, and Fernihurst, at the wast port about 200 hors," &c. Bannatyne's Journal, p. 155.

"They of Edinburgh come furth hors and fute;—and they of Leyth also sorted," &c. Ibid., p. 248.

"They sorted from Hamilton upon the 13th day of May, to pass toward Dunbarton." Keith's Hist., p. 477.

* SORT, s. A term applied to persons or things, when the number is rather small, Roxb., Berwicks. S. Wheen seems nearly synonym.; as, "Was there mony fook at the kirk the day?" "Ou, there was a' sort at it;" S. A.

"Sort, a lot, a parcel, or number;" A. Bor., Gl. Brocket. It has, however, no immediate connexion with Fr. sort, as signifying a lot; but is perhaps allied to L. B. sort-um, denoting a measure of land, q. a portion.

* To SORT, v. a. and n. 1. To supply or furnish to one's satisfaction, to fit, to suit; as, "I can sort ye wi' a knife, now," I can now supply you with a knife to your mind; "That knife 'll sort ye;" That knife will please you; "Sort yoursel," Take what, or whichever you please, S.; [also, to satisfy the female with the male, Banffs.]

This is used in the sense of O. E. Assort. Fr. assort-ir, to suit, to furnish, &c. Sortir also signifies "to assort, to furnish or fit with;" Cotgr.

2. To agree, to come to a bargain; [to live in harmony], S.

"He's the easiest merchant ever the people of God yoked with; if ye be pleased with the wares, what of his graces makes best for you, he and ye will soon sort on the price." Walker's Peden, p. 56.

3. To chastise, to correct by stripes, S.; q. to put one to sorts.

"May neer be in my fingers, if I dinna sort ye baith for it." Monastery, i. 140.

SORTING, s. Correction, punishment, whether with the hand or the tongue, S. [Sorts is also used, Clydes.]

"See if I dinna gie a proper sorting to yon twa silly jauds, that gar'd me mak a bogle of you, and a fule of mysell—Ghaists! my certie, I sall ghaist them." St. Ronan, iii. 34.

SORTS, s. pl. 1. That's your sorts! an exclamation used when one is highly pleased with an action or thing, Aberd.

[2. Payment, reward, retribution, S.]

SORY. Wallace, iv. 671, Edit. Perth.

The sory sone raiss, the bauld Loran was dede. Leg. scry, (clamor), as in MS.

SOSH, adj. 1. Addicted to company and to the bottle. A sosh companion, expl. "social and sappy," South of S.

Abbreviated from Lat. soc-ius, and equivalent to E. social; or allied to Germ. naus, noise, especially that of drinkers.

2. Frank, conversible, free, Loth.; canny, sober, quiet, cheerful, S.

3. Snug, comfortable; as applied to the external situation; synonym. Cosh; Ayrs. Gl. Surv. Ayrs., p. 693.

4. Lazy, indolent, Lanarks., Ayrs.; plump, broadfaced, Loth.

In the latter sense it seems nearly allied to S. Swash, "of a full habit," q. v. The latter term also signifies fuddled, swollen with drink.

SOSHERIE, s. Social intercourse, Ayrs.

"The next witness was Mr Mordecai Saxbeere, preses and founder of that renowned focus of sosherie, the yarn-club, which hold its periodical libations in the buxom widow Sheid's tavern." The Entail, ii. 176.

"The persecutions which from that day the monks waged, in their conclaves of sloth and sosherie, against the children of the town,—only served to make their young spirits burn fiercer." R. Gilhaize, i. 9.

SOSS, s. 1. A mixture of incongruous kinds of food, or any heterogeneous mass, S. "a mucky puddle," A. Bor. Ray.

Teut. sause, condimentum, saus-en, condire, the idea being borrowed from the variety of ingredients often mingled in sauces.

O. E. "Sos, houndis mete. Cantabrum." Prompt. Parv. This is expl. "branne of corne, for houndes;" Ort. Vocab. Hence perhaps A. Bor. soss, "to lap like a dog;" Gl. Brocket.

[2. A state of wet, dirt, and disorder; applied to children's clothes, Aberd., Banffs., Clydes.

3. A state of being drenched with water, Shetl.]

To Soss, v. a. and n. 1. To mix in a strange manner; or, v. n. to make use of incongruous aliments or medicines mixed together, S. V. the s.

[2. To work in a dirty, disorderly manner, Banffs.

3. To nurse over-tenderly; used in contempt, ibid.

4. To live in idleness, ibid.]

[SOSSIN, SOSSING, s. The act of mixing up in an incongruous way; S.; [used also in s. 2, 3, and 4 of v., Banffs.]

"A wheen cork-headed, barmy-brained gowks! that wunna let pur folk as muckle as die in quiet, wi' their sossings and their soopings." St. Ronan, iii. 164.

[SOSSIN, adj. Dirty, unskilful, lazy, Banffs.]

SOSS-POKE, s. A low word used to denote the stomach, Fife. V. Soss, s. 1.

SOSS, s. Properly, the flat sound caused by a heavy but soft body, when it comes hastily to the ground, or squats down, S.

And wi' a soss aboon the claiths,
Ilk ane their gifts down flang.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 271.

—Providence oft gets into one scale,
To keep the proper poise; when easfu' bliss
Into the other sosses, overpond'rous.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 100.

"Soss, a heavy, clumsy, fall; the sound caused by the act of falling;" A. Bor., Gl. Brocket.

This intelligent writer has thrown out the most probable conjecture I have yet met with concerning the origin of E. souse, of which he is disposed to consider the term as a variation,—that it is from O. Fr. sus, above or upon, of which deus is in part compounded. We may perhaps need to go no farther than Ir. and Gael. sios, down, downwards.

To Soss, v. n. To fall down as a dead weight, to come to the ground as it were all in a piece, S.

SOT, s. A fool, S.

"The Scots use sot, as the French do un sot, not for a tippler, but a fool." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 128.

SOTHROWN, s. A collective term used to denote Englishmen. V. SODROUN.

To SOTTER, v. a. and n. 1. To boil or cook slowly, to simmer, S., evidently a deriv. from A.-S. seoth-an, Su.-G. siud-a, Isl. siod-a, to boil.

Sotter, sotter, my wee pan,
To the spirit gin ye can.
When the scum turns blue,
And the blood bells through,

There's something aneath that will change the man.

Perils of Man, ii. 44.

"Sotter, to make a noise in boiling, as any thick substance does. North." Grose.

2. To burn slightly; as, to sotter the fingers by touching hot embers, S.

3. To scorch any part of the body, or any fleshy substance before the fire, S.

"The trees of the wood were blasted, and burnt, on which were stuck the sottered legs and thighs of the woman;—and on the top of a fir-tree, skathed almost to charcoal, was stuck the ghastly head." Edin. Mag., July 1809, p. 19.

[4. To bubble, sputter, or crackle, as in boiling, roasting, frying, &c.; applied also to the sounds made when one is working in wet clay, mud, &c., S.

5. Same with Soss, s. 2, 3, and 4, Banffs.]

SOTTER, s. 1. The act of boiling, [roasting, or frying] slowly, S.

2. The sputtering or bubbling noise of any semi-liquid substance, when boiling.

3. The bubbling, crackling, or sputtering noise made by any thing in boiling or cooking, S.

[4. A slight scorch or burn, S.; also, a festering sore, any disgusting mass, Banffs.

5. Dirty, disorderly work; also, a person who does such work, ibid.

6. The act of over-nursing or idling, ibid.]

[SOTTERIN, part. pr. Used also as a s., and as an adj. in each sense of the v.]

SOTTER, s. An indefinite number of insects, or other small animals, collected together; as, "a great sotter," Roxb.

Isl. síot, multitudo, sveit, satellitium; Su.-G. sveit, conglobatio, comitatus; A.-S. sweot, turba, multitudo. In pl. Isl. sveitar, comites, sveitar höfðingjar, majorum ordinum ductores; Verel. Ind. Ihre views the term as of foreign origin, and most probably from Fr. suite, a retinue.

To SOTTER, v. n. To cluster closely, as the small-pox, or any cutaneous eruption, Roxb.

A' sotterin is a phrase very commonly used in this sense; q. "all in a cluster."

To SOTTER, v. a. Expl. "to saturate;" Gall. Encycl.

To SOTTLE, v. n. A term expressive of the sound emitted by any soft substance, as porridge, broth, &c., when boiling, Ayr. From the same origin with SOTTER, v.

To SOUCH, SOUGH, SWOUCH, (pron. sooch gutt.) v. n. 1. To emit a rushing or whistling sound. It properly denotes those low melancholy tones of the wind, which precede and prognosticate rain, S.

The watter lynnys rowtis, and every lynd,
Quhislit and brayit of the souchand wynd.
Doug. Virgil, 201, 24.

Vpraxit him he has amyd the place,
Als big as Athon, the hie mont in Trace,—
Or than the fader of hillis in Italy,
Clepit mont Appenninus, quhen that he Dois souch or bray with rocky quhyunis hie.

Ibid., 437, 7.

—See the royal Bowmen strive,
Wha far the feather'd arrows drive,
All sooghing thro' the sky.

Ramsay's Works, i. 123.

2. To breathe long as one does in sleep, S. also sauf, q. v.

Syne down on a green baw, I trow,
I took a nap,
And soucht a' night baillilow,
As sound's a tap.

Ramsay's Works, i. 219.

Jhone keikit up at screik o' day,
And fand her souchand sound,
Jamieson's Popul. Ball., i. 285.

I hear your mither souch and snore.
Ibid., ii. 338.

To SOUCH, SOUGH, v. a. To con over a tune. S. A. synon. souf.

—I, 'mang many merry fouk,
Can draw my fiddle frae the pock,
An' sough a tune, an' crack a' jock.—
Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 133.

A.-S. sveag-an, sveog-an, sonare, tinnire; part. pr. swogend, S. souchand. This word is often used to denote the noise made by the wind. Sveogthe wind, cum strepitu irruit ventus; S. the wind souch't. It denotes the noise which is made when the ears ring. IC thone sveog, on earum hæfste; sonum in auribus habui; Lye. S. I had a sougning in my lugs. It also signifies the sound of trees moved by the wind. Tha wudubemas sveogton; sylvae arbores sonuerunt; S. the trees were souchin.

The word, as it occurs in Prophecia Thome de Ersel-down, retains more of its A.-S. form.

Ther the space of dayes thre
He herd the sveghynge of the fode.
M.S. Lincoln. Jamieson's Pop. Ball., ii. 19.
He herde but sveoging of a fode.
M.S. Cotton. Minstrelsy Border, ii. 278.

To SOUGH out, v. a. To utter in a whining tone, S.

"See to him wi' his badge," they said; "he hears one of the king's Presbyterian chaplains sough out a sermon on the morning of every birth-day, and now he would pass himsel' for ane o' the Episcopal church." Antiquary, ii. 309.

SOUCH, SOUGH, SOWCH, SUGH, SWOUCH, s.

1. A rushing or whistling sound, S.; Sough o' the sea, "the sound of the sea,—as the sea begins to speak before the sky. When the sea thus doth growl, farewell to fair weather for a while;" Gall. Enc.

Ilk souch of wynd, and every quhisper now,
And alkin sterge affrayit, and causit grow.
Doug. Virgil, 63, 6.

November chill blaws loud wi' angry sugh;
The short'ning winter day is near a close.
Burns, iii. 174.

Ane sound or souch I had thare at the last,
Lyke quhen the fire be felloun wyndis blast,
Is driven amyl the flat of cornes rank,
Or quhen the burne on spait hurls down the bank.
Doug. Virgil, 49, 14.

2. The sound emitted by one during profound sleep; also, a deep sigh, S.

Ouer all the landis war at rest ilkane,
The profound souch of slepe had thame onertane.
Doug. Virgil, 240, b. 30.

I saw the battle sair and tough,
And reekin-red ran mony a shengh,
My heart for fear gae sough for sough.
Burns, iv. 362.

3. A cant or whining mode of speaking, especially in preaching or praying. S. Auld soogh. When a person or thing retains the same character, temper, or mode, without variation, it is said,—He, or It, has aye the auld soogh yet, S.

Give them the souch, they can dispense
With either scant or want of sense.
Meston's Poems, p. 15.

"The sough, as it is called, the whine, is unmanly, and much beneath the dignity of their subject. I have heard of one minister, so great a proficient in this sough, and his notes so remarkably flat and productive of horror, that a master of music set them to his fiddle; and the wag used to say, that in the most jovial company, after he had played his tune but once over, there was no more mirth among them all the rest of that evening, than if they were just come out of the cave of Triphonius [r. Trophonius]." Burt's Letters, i. 207.

"Sough,—the chaunt or recitative peculiar to the old Presbyterians in Scotland, and to certain extrareligious casts in all countries;" Gl. Antiq.

4. A flying report, a vague rumour, S.

"I dread that the sough that gaed through o' his having deserted, had some truth in't." Cottagers of Glenburnie, p. 266.

"Sough—any rumour that engages general attention;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

"I hae heard a sough," said Annie Winnie, "as if Lady Ashton was nae canny body." Bride of Lammermoor, iii. 97.

"Little Scott, (who may truly be called sharp-eared rumour, she has at least as many tongues,) has already sent a sugh through the gude town, that Angus wears her chains." Saxon and Gael, i. 83.

5. Keep a calm souch, be silent, S. A.-S. sucig, silentium. V. the v.

"Thir kittle times will drive the wisest o' us daft," said Neil Blane, the prudent host of the Howff, "but I'se aye keep a calm sough." Tales of my Landlord, iii. 147.

"Hout tout, man!" answered Jasper, "keep a calm sough; better to fleech a fool than fight with him." Monastery, ii. 38.

"Mind the Clachan of Aberfoil.—But keep a calm sough till we meet again." Rob Roy, ii. 261.

Robbin sat still, and keep'd a calm sough,
Than happ'd out when he was fu'.

Gall. Encycl., p. 413.

Chaucer used sough for sound, noise, from A.-S. sweeg, swege, sonus, clangor; strepitus flammorum. Hence swege denotes any kind of musical instrument, as a trumpet, an organ.

SOUCH, adj. Silent, quiet, tranquil, S. To keep souch, to be silent. He grew quite souch; he became entirely calm, so as to make no disturbance.

Alem. suiig-en, Germ. schweig-en, to be silent, still or quiet; A.-S. swig-an, swug-an, swu-ian, swig-an, id. Ne swugu thu; Be not silent. Belg. zwigg, silent; zwijgt, silence, verzwijgen, to conceal; Sw. swyght, hush, Gr. σάλα, silere.

[SOUCHIN, SOUNHIN. 1. As a s., used in each sense of the v., S.

2. As an adj., sounding, in each sense of Souch, s., S.]

SOUCH, pret. v. [Errat. for Sought, sought, searched.]

Thair gudis haiff thair leyst all;
And souch the housis euirlikane.

Barbour, x. 759, MS.

[This passage is very corrupt: leyst should be seest; souch should be soucht; and houss, housis. See Skeat's Ed., p. 254.]

SOUGHT, pret. Attacked in a hostile manner, assailed by arms.

Had thair bene warnyt wele, I wate,
Thair sould haiff sould thair dedis der;
For thair war gud men; and thair wer
Fer ma than thair war that thaim soucht.
Bot thair war scalyt that thair moucht
On na maner assemblyt be.

Barbour, xvii. 117, MS.

This is a Su.-G. idiom. Soek-a, Ihre observes, usurpatur de voilentia invasione. Nu soekir man hem til annan; Si quis in alterius aedes impetum fecerit. This he views as the origin of Hemsoekn, our Hame-sucken. For hemsoek-a properly signifies, to invade the house of another with violence. He also derives ransak-a, to ransack, from ran, a house, and saek-a. Isl. adoka, atsoka, a warlike assault; sokn itself signifying a battle, praelium; G. Andr.

SOUCYE, s. The old name in S. for the herb helytropium. V. APPIN.

SOUD, s. A quantity.

"The tradesmen are paid for the piece, or with a certain sum or quantity of victual annually agreed on, called soud." P. Daviot, Moray, Statist. Acc., xiv. 74, N. V. SOLD.

To SOUDER, v. a. and n. 1. To solder; S. Souther.

Teut. souder-en, ferruminare, consolidare metalla.

2. To unite, to combine, S.

Look laughing frae thy sky, and with thy heat,
Temper the scatter'd clouds, and souder all
Into the perfect year. Davidson's Seasons, p. 8.

"Others also, with whom we must likewise souder, have been encouraged to repeat, and rush upon the same disloyal practices." M'Ward, p. 4.

3. To make up a variance, or to unite those who have been alienated, S.

"You will roll all this hereby over upon the party opposing the indulgence, and the course you take to souder us into a sameness with them." M'Ward's Contend., p. 222.

SOUDERING, s. An act of union.

"This healing and union must have stretched the length of a soudering with these men, who have really, and upon the matter, settled the usurper of the great all he hath, in his height of wickedness, and heat of violence, robbed from the anointed of God." M'Ward, p. 4.

SOUDIE, SOUDY, s. 1. A gross heavy person, one who is big and clumsy; a term generally used as to women, S.

2. A dirty woman, partaking much of the nature of a sow, Gall. Enc. V. SODICK.

3. A heterogeneous mixture, a hodge-podge.

Where will ye see such, or find such a soudy?
Bannocks of bearmal, cakes of croudy.

Jacobite Relics, l. 20.

Perhaps allied to Su.-G. sod, sold, an animal, any individual of the large kind of cattle; sometimes, a sow.

This word is perhaps part of that term used, Evergreen, ii. 20. Soudy-moudy. The latter part may be merely alliterative; or from Teut. moede, muede, wearied, fatigued; [or, moewdie, a mole.]

SOUDLY, adj. Soiled, dirty.

A roussat gown of hir awn scho him gair
Apon his weyd, at court all the layff,
A soudly courche our hed and nek leit fall.
Wallace, l. 241, MS.

In Edit. 1648, suddled, synon. V. SUDDLE.

SOUDLAND, s. One who comes from the south country, S. B.

SOUDOUN LAND. The land of the Soldan or Sultan.

Sé ye not quha is cum now,——
A sargeand out of Soudoun land.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 173.

To SOUF, SOUFF, v. n. 1. To slumber, to sleep in a disturbed manner, S. B.

Su.-G. sofw-a, Isl. sof-a, Dan. sof-er, A.-S. swef-an, id. Geuwerf-od, consopitus, laid asleep; Isl. sof-r, sleep. Junius thinks that the v. may be traced to Moes.-G. swaif, cessavit. Lat. sop-ir, to set at rest or asleep, seems to have had the same origin. Belg. suff-en, to dote. V. SVOUFF.

2. To breathe high in sleep; properly, as the effect of disease, S. B.

I sheuk mysel', an' souff't to fleg the fear;
But yet my heart foretold some sorrow near.

Tarras's Poems, p. 116.

i.e., "whistled to fright fear away."
This is the more common sense.

3. To whistle in a low tone; also, to sing, S.

I sigh at hame, a-field am dowie too,
To souf a tune I'll never crook my mou.
Ferguson's Poems, ii. 1.

May virtue glad baith you an' me,
To souf our sang still merrilie,
While yet we may.

A. Scott's Poems, 1811, p. 117.

4. "To con over a tune on an instrument."

Thus I—
Bang'd up my blyth auld-fashion'd whistle,
To souf ye o'er a short epistle.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 360.

SOUFF, SOUFF, s. 1. A slumber, a disturbed sleep, S. B.

2. High breathing in sleep, especially that of a sick person; expressive of the sound emitted, S. B.

3. "Low whistle," Shirr. Gl.

4. Corresponding to E. strain; as, we'll hear his souff, we will learn what strain he is on, what humour he is in, what terms he has to propose, S.

To SOUFF, v. a. "To quaff;" Gl. Surv. Moray.

It seems the same with Teut. soeff-en, soff-en, sor-bere, sorbillare, Su.-G. sup-a, also signifying to quaff.

[SOUFF, s. A draught, Banffs.]

To SOUFF, v. n. To strike. One stone is said to souff on another, when dashed upon it, S. B.

Teut. sweep-en, flagellare.

SOUFF, SOWFF, s. A stroke, S. B.

He jee'd na out o' that an inch,
Afore a menseless man
Came a' at anes athort his hinch
A souff, and part him prann
His bum that day.

Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 129.

Su.-G. svepa, Isl. svepa, scutica, a scourge; sveip-a, percutere.

SOUFLET, s. "A stroke, a blow;" Buchan. Fr. soufflet, "a box, cuffe, or whirret on the ear;" Cotgr.

SOUFFLE, SOUFF, s. A stupid, silly person, a lazy, idle, drunken fellow, Mearns.

Teut. suff-en, delirare, hallucinare; Isl. sveift-a, agitare; gyrare.

SOUFFT, part. pa. Exhausted, Loth., Border.

This seems merely a corr. of the ancient part. Sopit. V. SOPE, v.

SOUGH, s. A stroke, a blow; [also, the sound made by it, S.]

This may be a variety of Souff, q. v.

To SOUGH, v. n. To emit a rushing sound, &c. V. SOUCH.

To SOUK, SOOK, v. a. 1. To suck, S.; as a soukin bairn, a sucking child; pron. as oo in E.

2. Figuratively used, to denote the power of wheedling or flattery, in the old S. Prov.; "He has a tongue in his head that could souk the laverocks out of the lift."

This evidently refers to the vulgar opinion, that some serpents have such a fascinating influence in their eye, or so powerful a suction in their breath, that, if a bird pass over them, they can arrest it in its flight, and make it drop down into their jaws.

"To come now unto the Basiliske," says Pliny, "whom all other serpents doe fie from and are afraid of; albeit he killeth them with his very breath and smell that passeth from him; yea, and (by report) if he do but set his eye on a man, it is enough to take away his life." Hist. B. xxix. c. 4.

Jerome, on Isa. xiv. 29, "Out of the serpent's root shall come forth a cockatrice, and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent," renders the words; "From the root of the serpent shall spring forth a prince, and his seed shall suck up the bird." For he accommodates the words to the history of the basilisk, as given by Solinus: "It even corrupts the air, so that no bird can pass over it with impunity, as it is infected with its pestiferous breath."

Isidorus gives a similar account: "At the sight of it no bird on the wing can pass over it uninjured; for, although at a distance, consumed by its breath it is devoured." Alkazuin, an Arabian writer, says: "If a bird flies above it, it falls down upon it." V. Bochart, Hierozoic. L. iii. c. 10.

"The basilisk," says Vitringa, "is a noxious kind of serpent, which kills other living creatures, not by its bite, but by its hissing and breath." In loc.

SOUKIT, part. adj. Fatigued, exhausted, Fife.

Teut. swac, infirmus, enervus, languidus; swack-en, debilitare, deficere; Dan. svakk-er, to waste.

SOUKKYR, SUCCUR, s. Sugar; Aberd. Reg.

SOUKS, s. pl. The name given to the flower of red clover, S. also suckies, from being sucked by children because of their sweetness.

"His mete was hony soukes, and hony of the wode," Wiclif, Matt. iii.

SOULE, SOLE, s. A swivel, Gl. Sibb. V. CULPIT.

SOUN, SOWME, s. A term expressing the relative proportion of cattle or sheep to pasture, or vice versa, S.

1. A soum of sheep, five sheep; or in other places, ten.

"There are 36 freeholders in the burgh, whose freeholds at present are reckoned, at an average, at 50s. yearly, with a privilege of pasturage for 72 soums of sheep upon the common, 5 sheep being reckoned to the soum." P. Monkton, Ayra. Statist. Acc., xii. 396.

"One cow makes a soum, a horse two; ten sheep (and in some places fewer) are considered as a soum." P. Sattel, Argyles. Ibid. p. 477. N.

It appears that this denomination has been formerly lower, as to the number of sheep.

"If the tenant is to hire his grazing in the hills, he takes it by soumes. A soume is as much grass as will maintain four sheep; eight sheep are equal to a cow and a half, or forty goats.—The reason of this disproportion between the goats and sheep is, that after the sheep eat the pasture bare, the herbs, as thyme, &c. that are left behind, are of little or no value, except for the browsing of goats." Letters from a Gentleman in the North of S., ii. 155.

2. A soum of grass, as much as will pasture one cow, or five sheep, S.

"It is statute and ordeined, that in all tyme coming, there be designed to the Minister serving at the cure of aik Kirks where there is na arrable land adjacent thereto, foure soumes grasse for ilk aiker of the saids foure aiker of gleib land, extending in the bail to sextene soumes, for the saids foure aikers." Acts James VI. 1606, c. 7. Murray.

"The glebe—is supposed to be legal as to extent, with 4 soums grass, in common with the cattle of the farm." P. Kilmartin, Argyles. Statist. Acc., viii. 104.

Sw. sum is equivalent to tal, number. V. soume, number; as this is evidently the same word used as also denoting quantity.

To Soum land, to calculate and fix what number of cattle or sheep it can properly support, S.

"Where there are several small tenants upon one farm, the farm is (what they call) soumed; which means, that the number of cattle it can properly maintain or pasture, is ascertained, that none of the tenants may exceed his just proportion, nor over-stock his farm." P. Balquhider, Perth. Statist. Acc., vi. 93.

To Soum and Roum. [To pasture and fodder.]

"It seems probable, that the land outfield, in many places, was occupied in common, each proprietor or tenant, in a certain district, parish, or estate having been thereby entitled to soum or pasture on the outfield land in summer, in proportion to the number and kinds of cattle he was thus able to roum or fodder in winter, by means of his share of infield land." P. Bedrule, Roxburgh, Statist. Acc., xv. 473, N.

"The action by which these proportions are to be ascertained is called an action of souming and rouming, two old words denoting the form of law by which the number of cattle that each proprietor may put on the common is fixed, according to the different kinds of cattle that are to pasture upon it." Ersk. Inst. B. ii. Tit. ix. sec. 15.

Stair does not expl. the v. to Roum, as regarding the ability of foddering the cattle in winter, by means of infield, according to the view given in the quotation from the Stat. Acc.; but as expressive of the relative size of each roum or farm, to which the right of pasturing is annexed. "Where divers heritors have a common pasturage in one commonie, no part whereof is ever plowed, the said common pasturage may be Soumed and Roumed, that all the soums the whole commonie can hold, may be determined and proportioned to each roum having the common pasturage, according to the holding of that roum." Decisions, Jan. 23, 1679, Dunlop.

To roum, to find place for. V. Rowme, v.

To Soum, v. a. To surmise, Aberd.

To Soume, v. n. To swim; pron. q. Soom, S.; [part. pr. soumand, swimming.]

"Many of thame culd nocht soume, and war sa hevychargit with thare harnes and habirjonis of maleyeis, that thay sank down and perist in the depo bullerand streemes." Bellend. T. Liv., p. 457. V. Soom.

SOUME, s. A load. V. SOWME.

SOUMS, s. pl. The sounds of the cod dried for food, Shetland. V. SOUNDS.

SOUN, s. Son. "His soun & apperand air;" Aberd. Reg.

SOUN', SOUND, adj. 1. Smooth, level, [unbroken]; a soun' road, a smooth road; a soun' stane, a smooth stone, &c., S. Soun' is pron. like E. soon.

This seems merely an arbitrary use of E. Sound, adj.

[2. Without any flaw, defect, or disease; perfect; as, hale an' soun', as soun's a bell, Clydes.]

To SOUND, v. a. and n. 1. To spin a top, Aberd.

2. To spin as a top, ibid.

[As sound as a tap is a common phrase applied to a person in a deep sleep, Clydes.]

3. To swoon, S.

—"The said Thomas, with his whinger, gave him again two great wounds, and left him sounding in his blood." Justiciary Record, Sharpe's Pref. to Law's Memorials, lix.

SOUND, s. A swoon, a faint, Loth.

[A.-S. swoogan, to move or sweep along noisily; allied to the base swag, to sway. V. under Swoon, Prof. Skeat's Etym. Dict.]

SOUNDS (of a fish), s. pl. The swimming bladder, S.; [soonds, Shetl.]

"The greatest part of the cod's sounds, in this parish, are permitted to remain and rot on the sea beach, or are cast into the dunghill, though the use and value of them as an article of food and delicacy at table have been known here for many years." P. Peterhead, Aberd. Statist. Acc., xvi. 549.

[SOUP-THE-CAUSEY, s. A scrub, one who does the meanest kind of work, S.]

SOUP, SUP, s. 1. A spoonful, a small quantity of any food that requires the use of a spoon; also, a small draught, or mouthful of any liquid, S. sup, E.

Thai twa, out of ane scopin stoup,
Thai drank thre quartis soup and soup.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 114.

—"Ye may gang your ways to bed, and leave us to our soup wine and our ain cracks." St. Johnstoun, i. 36.

2. A considerable quantity of drink, or of any liquid food; as, a soup milk, a soup broth, a soup drink, a considerable quantity of any intoxicating liquor, S.

Was worth that weary sup o' drink
He lik'd so weel,
He drank it a', left not a clink,
His throat to sweet.
Forbes's Dominic Depos'd, p. 27.

Here it is printed like the E. word.

"I wish you had drank water, when you drank that soup drink;" S. Prov., "Spoken when people say something out of the way, upon a jocular supposition that they are drunk, or they would not say so;" Kelly, p. 179.

"I dare say he wad gar them keep hands aff me—and he wad gar them gie me my soup partridge and bit meat." Antiquary, i. 261.

3. A bite and a soup, slender support both as to meat and drink, S.

"Ye mauna speak o' the young gentleman hauding the plough; there's poor distressed whigs enow about the country will be glad to do that for a bite and a soup—it sets them far better than the like o' him." Tales of my Landlord, ii. 138.

"You are as white as a loan soup," S. Prov.; "spoken to flatterers who speak you fair, whom the Scots call White Folk." Kelly, p. 371. Loan soup is expl., "Milk given to strangers when they come where they are a milking," N. ibid.

Isl. sope, a draught, saup, pottage or any spoon-meat; sofe, as much of this kind of food as the mouth receives at once. E. sup is used as in sense 2. But we extend the signification. For notwithstanding the general prejudice, which prevails among our southern neighbours as to the poverty of our country, we have, in the use of food, a greater variety of gratification than themselves. They eat all, or drink all; whereas we not only eat and drink, but sup.

[To SOUP, v. n. To soak, drench. V. SOWP.]

To SOUP, v. n. "To sob, to weep with convulsive heaves;" Gl. Lynds.

This retains a good deal of the form of A.-S. soefian, dolere, lugere. Wachter views Alcm. suft-en, gemere, as a frequentative from this, remarking the affinity of Heb. safhad, planxit, luxit.

SOUPAND, part. pr. Sobbing, or groaning, complaining.

The tane to the tother cold complains;
Sichand, and soupand, can scho say,
'This lang Lentrune hes maid me lene.'
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 113.

SOUPLE, adj. 1. Flexible, as E. Supple, S.

"Souple, swack, pliant, yielding readily, possessing great agility;" Gl. Shirr.

2. "Cunning;" ibid. S.

This is written and pron. precisely as Fr. souple, id.

SOUPLE, s. 1. The lower part of a flail, which strikes the grain; the upper being called the handstaff, S.

The hollin souples, that were sae snell,
His back they loundert, mell for mell.
Jamieson's Popular Ball., ii. 238.

—In stack-yards some Industriously pick up the scatter'd ears
That frae the swingin' supple spread afar.
Davidson's Seasons, p. 143.

2. A stout piece of wood, used as a cudgel, South of S.

"If you and I were at the Withershins Latch wi' ilka ane a gude oak souple in his hand, we wald not turn back." Mannering, ii. 51.

"Get awa hame, for if I tak my souple t'ye, I'll gar ye find the road faster than ye wad like." Bride of Lammermoor, iii. 97.

Probably from Fr. souple, E. supple, because of its flexibility; if not rather from Isl. noipa, Su.-G. soep-a, a scourge, scutica, flagrum; from the idea of beating; as thrash is used metaph. to denote beating with a scourge or otherwise. This in Su.-G. is called slagwal and drapical.

SOUPLE-TAM. A child's toy, which, being pulled by a string, shakes and seems to dance, S.

- SOUR, SOURE, SOOR, adj. 1. Used in the sense of bitter, pungent, S.

"It is a soure reek, where the good wife dings the good man," S. Prov. "A man—coming out of his house with tears on his cheeks, was ask'd the occasion; he said, 'There was a soure reek in the house.'—Upon enquiry it was found that his wife had beaten him." Kelly, p. 186.

Soure is expl. "bitter," N. Ibid.

2. Cold and wet; applied to soil, S.

"The term sour is, in Scotland, usually applied to a cold and wet soil; and conveys the idea of viscosity, which, in some cases, is a concomitant of fermentation." Ure's Hist. of Rutherglen, p. 180.

3. Used as a s., denoting any thing acid in a metaph. sense.

"My Master will put in mercy and truth in all his dispensations towards me, and then these will sweeten all my soures." Mich. Bruce's Lectures, p. 45.

[SOUR BREAD, s. A kind of oaten cakes baked of sour leaven at Christmas, Banffs.]

SOUR CAKES. A kind of cakes baked in the burgh of Rutherglen for St. Luke's Fair. This began on the 3rd Monday of October, O. S.

"Another ancient custom, for the observance of which Rutherglen has been long famous, is the baking of sour cakes. Some peculiar circumstances, attending the operation, render an account of the manner in which it is done, not altogether unnecessary. About eight or ten days before St. Luke's fair, (for they are baked at no other time of the year), a certain quantity of oat-meal is made into dough, with warm water, and laid up in a vessel to ferment. Being brought to a proper degree of fermentation and consistency, it is rolled up into balls, proportionable to the intended largeness of the cakes. With the dough is commonly mixed a small quantity of sugar, and a little anise seed, or cinnamon. The baking is executed by women only, and they seldom begin their work till after sunset, and a night or two before the fair.

"A large space of the house, chosen for the purpose, is marked out by a line drawn upon it; the area within is considered as consecrated ground, and is not, by any of the bystanders, to be touched with impunity. A transgression incurs a small fine, which is always laid out on drink for the use of the company. This hallowed spot is occupied by six or eight women, all of whom, except the toaster, seat themselves on the ground, in a circular figure, having their feet turned towards the fire. Each of them is provided with a bake-board, about two feet square, which they hold on their knees. The woman who toasts the cakes, which is done on a girdle suspended over the fire, is called the queen or bride, and the rest are called her maidens. These are distinguished from one another by names given them for the occasion. She who sits next the fire, towards the East, is called the Todler; her companion on the left hand is called the Hodler;* and the rest have arbitrary names given them by the bride, as Mrs. baker, beat and worst maids, &c. The operation is begun by the todler, who takes a ball of the dough, forms it into a small cake, and then casts it on the bake-board of the hodler, who beats it out a little thinner. This being done, she on her turn throws it on the board of her neighbour; and thus it goes round from east to west, in the direction of the course of the sun, until it comes to the toaster, by which time it is as thin and smooth as a sheet of paper. The first that is cast on the girdle is usually named as a gift to some well known cuckold, from a superstitious opinion, that thereby the rest will be preserved from mischance. Sometimes the cake is so thin as to be carried, by the current of the air, up into the chimney.

"As the baking is wholly performed by the hand, a great deal of noise is the consequence. The beats, however, are not irregular, nor destitute of an agreeable harmony, especially when they are accompanied with vocal music, which is frequently the case. Great dexterity is necessary, not only to beat out the cakes, with no other instrument than the hand, so that no part of them shall be thicker than another; but especially to cast them from one board to another, without ruffling or breaking them. The toasting requires considerable skill; for which reason the most experienced person in the company is chosen for that part of the work. One cake is sent round in quick succession to another, so that none of the company is suffered to be idle. The whole is a scene of activity, mirth, and diversion; and might afford an excellent subject for a picture.

"As there is no account, even by tradition itself, concerning the origin of this custom, it must be very ancient. The bread thus baked was, doubtless, never intended for common use. It is not easy to conceive why mankind, especially in a rude age, would strictly observe so many ceremonies, and be at so great pains in making a cake, which, when folled together, makes but a scanty mouthful. Besides, it is always given away in presents to strangers, who frequent the fair. The custom seems to have been originally derived from Paganism, and to contain not a few of the sacred rites peculiar to that impure religion: as the leavened dough, and the mixing it with sugar and spices, the consecrated ground, &c., &c. But the particular deity, for whose honour these cakes were at first made, is not, perhaps, easy to determine. Probably it was no other than the one known in Scripture, Jer. vii. 18, by the name of the 'queen of heaven,' and to whom cakes were likewise kneaded by women." Ure's Hist. of Rutherglen, p. 94—97.

* "These names are descriptive of the manner in which the women so called perform their part of the work. To Todle is to walk or move slowly like a child. To Hodle is to move or walk more quickly."

SOOR-DOOCK, s. Buttermilk, Loth.

I can form no idea of the origin of doock, unless it be allied to Su.-G. dargg-ia, to give milk.

[SOOR-FACED, adj. Of a sulky countenance, S.]

[SOOR FISH. Fish kept till they have acquired a game flavour, Shetl.]

SOUR GRASS. Sedge grass, a species of Carex, Lanarks., Ayr. V. BLUE-GRASS.

"—Thai maid grit cheir of euyrie sort of mylk bayth of ky mylk & youe mylk, sueit mylk and sour mylk, curdia and quahaye, sourkittis." Compl. S., p. 66.

"Kit, cap, and can," as Dr. Leyden observes, "is a phrase used to express all kinds of meat and drink," S. He defines kit, which is indeed a term also used in E., "a small kind of wooden vessel hooped and staved. A cap," he adds, "is turned out of one piece of wood. Can is a wooden decanter." Gl. Compl., p. 373.

SOUR LAND, s. Land which, when left untilled, either becomes swardless from too much moisture, or produces nothing but sedge-grasses and other worthless aquatic plants, S. O.

"Lime sometimes contains a portion of magnesia, which is unfavourable to vegetation. Lime of that kind ought to be applied to damp, or what is denominated in the county of Ayr, sour land; as the acid in the soil will convert the magnesia into Epsom salt, which, in small quantities, is not injurious to vegetation." Agr. Surv. Ayr., p. 329, 330.

SOUR MILK, s. Buttermilk, S. A. Bor.

Sw. sur mioelk, id., Wideg.

"These vats—you ought to keep full of butter-milk, or sour milk, as it is commonly called." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 347.

In Sw. a man who sells buttermilk is called a sur mioelkekerll; Verel. Ind. vo. Skyrker.

SOUR-MOU'D, adj. Having a sulky look, q. a sour mouth, Aberd. Teut. suert-muyl, homo tetricus, acerbum os.

"Gang the gait thysel, Girzy Hypel—and no fash me with thy clishmaclavers." Heh, gudeman!

but ye has been eating sourrocks instead o' langkail.'" The Entail, i. 295.

A very expressive proverbial phrase, commonly applied, as would seem, in the West of S., to those who are in a bad humour.

In O. E. this was denominated Sowre dokke; "Sowre dokke herbe. Surella. Acedula. Solatrum." Prompt. Parv.

SOUR SKON, s. A thin cake baked of oatmeal steeped in water till it become sour; more especially used at Yule, Moray.

SOURCEANCE, s. Cessation.

"A desyre of sourceance of armes may be had on both sydes, so the same may be beneficiall to the kingis partie." Bannatyne's Journal, p. 233.

Fr. sourceance, surecance, "a sur-ceasing or giving over; a pause, intermission, delay;" Cotgr.

SOURD, s. Sword, Aberd. Reg.

To SOURCE, v. n. To rise.

SOUSE, s. A French sol, E. sous.

He counted us not worth a souse.
Battle, Reidsquair, Evergreen, ii. 225.

O. Fr. solz, id. Thierry.

The origin of Fr. solz, sous, is Lat. solidus, a Roman brass coin, containing twelve small pieces. This appears from the form which the term assumes, in its intermediate state, in Ital. soldo, the denomination for the same coin.

SOUST FEET. Cow-heel, S.

But a' their een were chiefly fixt,
Upo' soust feet.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 210.

Originally the same with E. souse, v.

SOUT, s. The start or bounce of a plough when it meets with a stone, Galloway; Fr. sault, saut, a leap, bound, skip.

SOUTAR, SOUTER, s. A shoemaker, [a cobbler], one who makes brogues or shoes of horse-leather, Ang.

Yone are soutars that thou seis,
Kneiland full lawly on their kneis.

Evergreen, i. 118.

In the South of S., as in Selkirks., the term is used to distinguish one who makes what are called outsteek or singlesol'd shoes.

"A singular custom is observed at conferring the freedom of the burgh of Selkirks. Four or five bristles, such as are used by shoemakers, are attached to the seal of the burgess ticket. These the new-made burgesses must dip in his wine, in token of respect for the "Souters of Selkirk." This ceremony is on no account dispensed with. The ancient and received tradition affirms, that the souters of Selkirk distinguished themselves in the battle of Flodden, eighty in number, and, headed by their town clerk, they joined their monarch on his entrance into England. James, pleased with the appearance of this gallant troop, knighted the leader, William Brydone, upon the field of battle, from which few of the men of Selkirk were destined to return. They distinguished themselves in the conflict, and were almost all slain. The few survivors, on their return home, found, by the side of Ladywood Edge, the corpse of a female, wife to one of their fellow comrades, with a child sucking at her breast. "In memory of this latter event," continues the tradition, "the present arms of the burgh bear a female holding a child in her arms, and seated on a sarcophagus, decorated with the Scottish lion." Caled. Merc. Nov. 1824.

A.-S. sutere, Isl. sutar, Lat. sutor, from su-o, to sew or stitch.

And instrumentis for to myne.

Barbour, xvii. 597, MS.

Mr. Pinkerton, in his Notes on K. Hart., p. 377, says: "They shattered the walls with sows or battering rams.—The sows were arietes." In his note on this passage of The Bruce, he throws out a different idea; "A sow was a military engine resembling the testudo of the Romans." But neither of these descriptions is accurate. It is evident that the sow was not a battering ram. For it was not employed for battering down walls, but for covering those who were employed to undermine them. Hence, Barbour says, it had stalwart heikdyne, or covering above.

Such is the account given by William of Malmesbury, Hist. L. iv. Unum fuit machinamentum, quod nostri Suem, veteres Vineam vocant, quod machina levibus lignis colligata, tecto, tabulis, cratibusque contexto, lateribus crudis coriis communitis, protegit in se subsidentes, qui quasi more avis ad murorum suffodienda penetrant fundamenta. He here assigns as likely a reason for the name as we can find. It was thus denominated, because it protected those who sat in it, who after the manner of a swine, dug under the walls. This account exactly corresponds with that given by Barbour in the passage quoted. The armed men, which it contained, were employed for the purpose of mining. Other authors are quoted by Du Cange, who give the same description of the instrument, and the same origin of the name.

The word is used in this sense by R. Glouc., p. 410.

A gyn, that me clupeth sowe, hil made ek wel strong,
Muche folc inne vor to be, bothe wyde & long.

This agrees with the account given by William of Malmesbury. No notice is taken of this term in the GL. to R. Glouc.

Fordun calls the sow, ingentem testudinem, a large testudo or tortoise; Scotichron. L. xiii. c. 40. But he uses the term improperly. For the sow differs also from the testudo. For this although distinguished by Vegetius from the Aries, and different in its construction, was also meant for battering down walls. According to him, it received this name, because it resembled the tortoise: and as this animal now draws back its head, and then pushes it forward, this instrument was so contrived, that the beam, intended for battering, was sometimes drawn back, and sometimes thrust forward that it might strike with the greater force. Testudo autem a similitudine verae testudinis vocabulum sumpsit, quia sicut illa modo reducit, modo praefert caput, ita machinamentum interdum reducit trahem, interdum exerit, ut fortius caedat. De Re Militar. Lib. iv. cap. 14.

As William of Malmesbury says, that the sow was the same instrument which the ancients called Vinea, he describes it almost in the same words which are used by Vegetius concerning the latter. E lignis levioribus machina colligatur, alta pedibus octo, lata pedibus septem, longa pedibus sexdecim. Hujus tectum munitione duplici, tabulatis, cratibusque contextitur.—Istae, cum plures factae fuerint, junguntur in ordinem, sub quibus subsidentes tuti ad subruenda murorum penetrant fundamenta. De Re Mil. lib. iv. cap. 15. It seems to have been called vinea, from the resemblance which a number of these joined together bore to a vineyard. This machine was also in Latin denominated scrofa, scrophæ. V. Du Cange. The French gave it the name of truie, truie, (Du Cange, vo. Troia), which, according to Cotgr. signifies, "a sow"; also, a warlike engine used in old times for the beating down of walls." This last word had still the same meaning. For Pomponius Sabinus observes on the Aeneid, that a sow is in Latin called Troia. Hence Teut. truie; sus, scrophæ, troia apud veteres: ita Troiani Troiam, id est, scropham, in sua moneta dicuntur habuisse expressam; Kilian.

On this head the learned Camden observes; "As the ancient Romans had their Crates, Vineae, Plutei, and such like to make their approaches; so had the English in this age their Cat-house and Sow for the same purpose. This Cat-house, answerable to the Callus mentioned by Vegetius, was used in the siege of Bedford Castle, in the time of King Henry the Third. The Sow is yet usual in Ireland, and was in the time of King Edward the Third used at the siege of Dunbar, which when the Countess, who defended the castle, saw, she said merrily, That unless the Englishmen kept their sow the better, she would make her to cast her pigs." Remains, p. 266, 267.

The history of this engine supplies us indeed with a sample of the wit that prevailed among our warlike ancestors. At the siege referred to by Camden, where the Countess, commonly called Black Agnes, displayed such undaunted courage in defending the castle, when the Earl of Salisbury brought up the sow, with many armed men and warlike instruments within it, to batter the walls; she cried to him;

O Montagow, Montagow,
Be war, for ferry sall thi sow.

And her prediction was not false. For immediately she caused a huge stone to be thrown aloft from a machine ingeniously constructed within the castle, which, falling from a great height on the sow, shattered it to pieces, and so stupified many of those that were within, that with difficulty they escaped with their lives. Fordun, Scotichron. L. xiii. c. 39. But it would seem that this witticism of the Black Countess, like many smart sayings of later times, was not original. She had most probably heard of its being used at the siege of Berwick, in the reign of R. Bruce. For Barbour, when giving an account of the sow prepar'd by the English, says;

Thai pressyt the sow toward the wall;
And has hyr set tharto gentilly.
The gynour than gert bend in hy
The gyne, and wappyt out the stane,
That awyn toward the lyft is gane,
And with gret wecht syne duschit doun
Rycht be the wall, in a randoun;
And hyt the sow in sic maner,
That it that was the mast sower,
And starkast for to stynt a strak,
In sundre with that dusche it brak.
The men than owt in full gret hy.
And on the wallis thai gan cry,
That thair sow was feryt thar.

Barbour, xvii. 688, MS.

The sow is distinguished both from our awblasters, and from the battering ram, in an elegant Norwegian work, believed to have been written in the 12th century. "If the awblasters cannot overturn or strike a wall, it is necessary to bring on these machines; a Ram having its front covered with iron, the force of which walls can seldom resist: but if the walls are not overthrown, tha ma Graf-suin til thessarur relar leida; you may bring forward the Sow. Spec. Regal., p. 410—412. The awblaster or catapulta, is called Isl. val-slaungur, from val, Su.-G. wal, apparatus bellicus, and slaenga, jactare, q. the weapon-thrower. The Ram is denominated vedur, or the wedder; and the name graf-suin seems literally to signify the digging sow, from its use already mentioned, as meant to cover those who dug under the wall: from graf-a, fodio, whence E. grave.

Grose thinks that "it derived its name from the soldiers under it lying close together, like pigs under a sow."—"Two machines, the one called the boar, the other the sow, were employed by the parliamentarians in the siege of Corse castle, Dorsetshire." Milit. Antiq., p. 387, 388.

I may add, that Gael. muc, which signifies a sow, is also expl., "an instrument of war, whereby besiegers were secured in approaching a wall, like the pluteus of the Romans, covered over with twigs, hair-cloth, raw hides, and moving on three wheels;" Shaw. This writer does not seem to have observed, that the instrument referred to was in E. denominated a sow.

Sir W. Scott has justly remarked that the memory of the sow is preserved in Scotland "in the sports of children." They—"play at a game, with cherry stones, placing a small heap on the ground, which they term a sowie, endeavouring to hit it, by throwing single cherry-stones, as the sow was formerly battered from the walls of the besieged fortress. My companions, at the High School of Edinburgh, will remember what was meant by herrying a sovie." Minstrelsy Border, iii. 28.

This is one proof, among many, that we have had occasion to mention, of ancient customs, of which even the memory is lost among adults, being retained, or alluded to, in the sports of children.

SOW, SOW-IN-THE-KIRK, s. A game played by young people in Lothian, in which a pretty large hole is made in the ground, surrounded by smaller ones according to the number of the company, every one of whom has a shintie. The middle hole is called the Kirk. He who takes the lead in the game, is designed the Sow-driver. His object is to drive a small piece of wood or bone, called the Sow, into the large hole or kirk, while that of his opponents, every one of whom keeps his shintie in one of the smaller holes, is to frustrate his exertions, by driving back the sow. If he succeeds, either in knocking it into the kirk, or in clapping his shintie into one of the small holes, while one of his antagonists is in the act of striking back the sow, he is released from the drudgery of being driver. In the latter case, the person whose vacancy he has occupied, takes the servile station which he formerly held. [V. KIRK THE GUSSIE.]

This is said to be the same game with Church and Mice, Fife.

SOW, HAY-SOW, s. A large stack of hay erected in an oblong form, S.; pron. soo.

"In Scotland a long hay-stack is termed a sow; probably from a traditional remembrance of the war-like engine, which went under that name; hence we may have a distinct notion of the figure of that engine." Annals Scot., ii. 89.

The term is allied perhaps to Teut. soewo, soye, which signifies the ground on which a heap or pile of any kind is erected; gleba qua agger conficitur, Kilian. Hence,

To Sow, Soo, v. a. To stack, S.

SOW, s. 1. A term applied to one who makes a very dirty appearance, S. B.

Perhaps a figurative sense of the E. term. Teut. sovice, soye, however, signifies a common shore.

A. Bur. "sow, an inelegant female, a dirty wench;" Gl. Brocket.

In senses second and third, it is perhaps originally the same with Belg. sionio, a troublesome work or business; Sewel. In the first, it might seem akin to Isl. sog, effluvium lacus, or C. B. sog, wallowing. Dan. soe, a sow, however, is allied. En skiden soe, "a nasty, greasy, stinking jade;" Wolff. Skiden corresponds to S. Shitten, q. v.

2. Any thing in a state of disorder; as, a ravelled sow, something that cannot be easily extricated, S. B.

3. A great cluster of objects, properly in a disordered state, S.

To SOW, Soo, v. a. To pierce, to gall; applied to the act of pouring in arrows upon an enemy.

—And than thai suld schut hardely
Amang thair fayis, and sow thaim sar
Quhill that he throw thaim passyt war.

Barbour, xvi. 391, MS.

The sense is changed in Edit. 1620, p. 303. Saile them sar, i. e., assail.

Sow sar, or sare, seems to have been a common phrase; as it is also used by Wyntown, viii. 40, 174, but apparently in a neut. sense.

It occurs in O. E. as synon. with smert.

When he saild in the Swin it sowed him sare;
Sare it thaim smerted, that ferd out of France.

Minot's Poems, p. 18.

To Sow, Soo, v. n. To smart, tingle, to feel acute or tingling pain, S. gell synon.

Quhen he a qwhile had prekyd thare,
And sum of thame had gert sow sare,
He to the battaylis rade agayne.

Wynlow, ut sup.

It occurs in the same sense in Maitland Poems, p. 201.

Scho gars me murne, I bid nocht seyn,
And with sair straiks scho gars me sow.

It properly denotes a continued smart or acute pain, as distinguished from Goup, which respects the pain occasioned by the beating of a pulse connected with a suppuration or sore.

The term is most nearly allied to Dan. swi-cr, to smart, swie, a smart. V. SWEE, v. 2.

Allied perhaps to A.-S. æ-on, effervescere; Teut. soye, soeue, fervor; or Sw. svind-a, to smart; Saret-sneider, the sore smarts, Wideg. Hence, SOWING, SOOIN, s. The act, or effect, of piercing or galling, S. sooin, tingling pain.

And thai, that at the fyrst meting,

Feld off the speris sa sar sowing,

Wandyst, and wald haiff bene away.

Barbour, xvi. 623. MS.

SOW-BACK, s. A cap or head-dress worn by old women, Ang. V. FROWDIE, 2.

SOW-BROCK, s. The badger, Fife.

By the Swedes this animal is denominated græf-swin, q. "the swine that digs or burrows in the ground."

SOWCE, s. "Flummery; such as brose, sowens, or oat-meal pottage;" Gl. Sibb., Roxb., Berw. [V. SOSS.]

What meat sall we set them befor?

To Jock service loud can they cry;

Serve them with sowce and soddin corn,

Till a' their wyms do stand awry.

Country Wedding, Herd's Coll., ii. 90.

SOWCHT, s. The South, Aberd. Reg.

SOW-DAY, s. The name given to the 17th of December, in Sandwick, Orkney, from the custom of killing a sow in every family on that day. V. YULE, § III.

"In a part of the parish of Sandwick, every family that has a herd of swine, kills a sow on the 17th day of December, and thence it is called Sowday. There is no tradition as to the origin of this practice." Stat. Acc., xvi. 460. V. YULE, sec. ii. col. 2.

There seems to be no reason to doubt, that this custom is a relique of pagan superstition. We learn from Rudbeck, that the ancient Goths were wont to sacrifice a boar-pig to the sun at the new moon. This, he says, was only made of meal; as Cato, de Re Rustica, mentions the dedication of a boar-pig of silver or of gold to Ceres. V. Atlant., ii. 545, 546. The sacrifice of the sow, or pig, according to Verelius, was made in the feast of Yule. He asserts, also, that a real pig was sacrificed, besides the one of bread." Notes to Hervarar Saga, p. 130.

The reason assigned for this honour being given to so foul an animal, is said to be, that whereas other nations viewed the chariot of the sun as drawn by horses, the Scandinavians yoked a boar-pig to it, under the name of Gullenbuste, i.e., "golden bristles;" affirming that Frey, or the sun, had given to the young boar a swifter motion than to horses, and that he dispelled the darkness by the rays which darted forth from his bristles. V. Keysler, Antiqu., p. 158.

SOWDEN, s. The South, Shetl.; Isl. sud-r, Su.-G. soed-r; Dan. sud, syden, also, soenden, id.

[SOWDIAN, s. A tall stout person; also, a native of the south, Shetl.]

SOWE, s. A winding-sheet.

"In some short time thereafter, the same girl died of a fever, and as there was no linen in the place but what was unbleached, it was made use of for her sowe, which answered the representation exhibited to her mistress and the declarant." Treatise, Second Sight, p. 18.

This refers to a phrase preceding;—"a shroud of a darkish colour."

SOWEN, s. That kind of paste employed by weavers for stiffening their yarn in working, S.

Wha cares for a' their cresshy duds,

And a' Kilmarnock sowen suds?

Jacobite Relics, i. 122.

Hence the low contemptuous term used for a weaver, Ang. Sowenie-mug, in allusion to the pot which contains their paste.

A.-S. seawe, "glew, paste, a clammy matter;" Somner. Belg. sogh.

SOWENS, s. pl. Flummery, made of the dust of oatmeal remaining among the seeds, steeped and soured, S.; sowings, sewings, id. A. Bor.

The diet of the labouring people here—is—sowens, (that is, a kind of flummery, made of oat-meal somewhat soured), with milk or beer, to dinner." P. Speymouth, Moray Statist. Acc., xiv. 401. [Sometimes, for want of milk or beer, raw-sowens is used; this is called suppin' sowens wi' sowens, Mearns.]

In Gael. swan signifies raw sowens or flummery. V. SOWEN.

"Mucilago furfuracea, sowens." Wedderburn's Vocab., V. 15.

SOWEN-BOAT, s. A small barrel used for preparing flummery, S.

She has eaten up a' the bit cheese;

O' the bannocks she's no left a mote;

She has dung the hen aff her eggs;

And she's drown'd in the sowen-boat.

Herd's Coll., ii. 214.

SOWEN-BOWIE, s. 1. A vessel in which flummery is made, Ang.

2. Deil's Sowen-bowie, the name of a play among children, ibid.

SOWEN-KIT, s. The same with Sowen-tub, S.

She's dung down the bit skate on the brace,

And 'tis fa'en in the sowen-kit;

'Tis out o' the sowen-kit,

And 'tis into the maister-can.

Herd's Coll., ii. 139.

SOWEN-MUG, s. A dish for holding sowens when made ready.

My daddy left me gear enough,—

An auld patt, that wants the lug,

A spurtle and a sowen-mug.

Willie Winkie's Testament, Herd's Coll., ii. 143.

SOWEN-SEEDS, s. pl. V. SEIDIS.

SOWEN-TUB, s. A tub or cask in which sowens are prepared before being cooked, S. O.

"On larger farms, another apartment, of nearly the same dimensions, and which entered through the incoat, was called the spence, in which were stored the meal-chest, [r. meal-kist] sowen-tub, some beds, a cask into which the urine was collected, known by the name of the wash-tub, spinning-wheels and reel, when not used, and the good-wife's press, if she had one." Agr. Surv. Ayr., p. 114.

"Sowen tub," Clydes.

SOWENS-PORRIDGE, s. A dish of pottage, made of skrine or cold sowens, by mixing meal with the sowens, while on the fire, Ang.

BLEARED SOWENS. Sowens that are made too thin, S.

SOWING-BROD, s. The board employed by weavers for laying their sowen, or dressing, on the web, S. V. SOWEN.

He at the sowing-brod was bred,
An' wrought gude serge an' tyken.
A. Wilson's Poems, 1790, p. 199.

[SOWER, s. Errat. for Summer, a great beam; the mast summer, the chief or strongest beam, Barbour, xvii. 696. V. Skeat's Ed., p. 603.]

SOWER-BREAD, s. Expl. "a flitch of bacon;" Dumfr.

Kilian expl. seughen-brood, cyclamen, panis porcinus, rapum porcinum. This is the herb called in E. sow-bread, in Sw. swin-broed. The name has been, in some former age, ludicrously transferred to bacon.

SOWERIT, part. pa. Assured, having no dread.

The hardy Scottis, that wald na langar duell,
Set on the laiff with strakis sad and sar,
Of thaim thar our, as than sowerit thair war.
Wallace, vii. 1187, MS.

i.e., They knew that they had nothing to fear from those who were on the other side of the river.

SOWFF, s. A stroke, a blow, Aberd. V. SOUFF.

[SOWING, SooIN, s. Tingling pain, S.; pricking with spear-points, Barbour, xvi. 628. V. Sow, v.]

To SOWK, v. a. To drench, Ettr. For.; the same with E. soak. Isl. soeck-va, demergi.

SOW-KILL, s. A kiln dug out of the earth, in which lime is burnt, Fife.

SOW-LIBBER, s. A sow-gelder. V. LIB, v.

SOWLIS, pl. Swivels. V. CULPIT.

SOWLLIT, pret. v. [Swelled; disfigured.]

Ane poysonit woll to drink, quhat docht it?
Infekit watter sowllit thame, cheik and chin.

See Edinb. Castel, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 290.

"Swelled," Gl.; perhaps rather "sullied," q. disfigured, as Sule (q. v.) signifies.

SOWLPIT, part. pa. Drenched. V. SOWP.

SOWLOCHING, part. pr. "Wallowing in mire like a sow;" Gall. Enc. Probably referring to "the sow loch or puddle?"

To SOWME, v. n. To swim, S. used metaph.

Gif I had weyt my gravitie and age,—
I had not sowmit in sik unkynllie rage,
For to disgrace mine honour and estait.
Philotus, S. P. R., iii. 60.

SOWME, s. 1. Number, E. sum, applied to men.

—Of hys folk war mony slayne,
That in that place nere samyn lay,
(The sowme of thame I can noucht say).

W'ynlowen, ix. 2. 36.

It is used in the same sense, Barbour, xvii. 67.

2. A load, that which is laid on a horse.

The hors thair tuk for awentur mycht befall,
Laid on thair sowme, syne furth the way couth call.
Thair tyrt sowmir so left thair in to playne.

Wallace, iv. 52, MS.

"For ane horse sowme of the said fish, or dry hering, at the furth-passing, 1 ob." Balfour's Practicks, Customis, p. 87.

A.-S. scōm, Fr. somme, onus, sarcina. Su.-G. some, not only denotes a burden, but, by a very natural transition, a pack-saddle, or that on which a horse-load is borne. As the A.-S. word is also written scām, the origin is undoubtedly sem-an, sym-an, onerare. Symath coure assan; Load your asses; Gen. xlv. 17.

SOWMIR, s. A sumpter-horse. V. SOWME, s. 2.

Fr. sommier, Ital. somaro, E. a sumpter-horse.

SOWME, SOYME, SOWMP, s. 1. The rope or chain that passes between the horses or oxen, by which the plough is drawn, S., pron. soam.

Al instrumentis of pleuch graith irnit and stelit,
As culturis, sokkys, and the sowmes grete
With sythis and al hukis that scheris quhete,
War thidder brocht, and tholis tempyr new.

Doug. Virgil, 230, 28.

It has been also applied to the traces used for dragging ordnance.

"Item, twa hundreth sowmes of cordis for drawing of artillerycarie." Inventories, A. 1566, p. 169.

But wif his sword he cut the foremost's soam
In two; and drove baith pleughis and pleughmen home.

"Soam means the iron links which fasten a yoke of oxen to the plough." Minstrelsy Border, I. Intro., lxxix. N.

2. The rope by which hay is fastened on a cart.

—Than hastily
He suld stryk with the ax in twa
The soyme; and than in hy suld tha,
That war with in the wayne, cum out.

Barbour, x. 180, MS.

FOOT-SOAM, s. An iron chain of eight or ten feet long, extending from the muzzle of the plough, and fixed to the yoke of the oxen next the plough, Loth., Roxb.

FROCK-SOAM, s. A chain fixed to the yoke of the hindermost oxen, and reaching to that of the oxen before them, Loth., Roxb.

Su.-G. soem, any thing which conjoins two bodies. Proprie notat commissuram, vel id, quod duo corpora conjungit. It also signifies a nail. Hence soem-a, to connect. Allied to these are Isl. saum-r, a nail, saum-a, conjugere; Fr. sommiers, pieces of timber fitted to each other.

SOWMONDS, s. A summons, LL. pass.

—"And in special the sowmonds of Falkland coal-houges and offices," &c. Stewart's Ind. to Scots Acts, p. 10.

Fr. semonce, id., semond-re, to summon.

SOWMPES, s. pl. [Traces. V. SOWME.]

"Sex scoir tuell sowmpes for drawing of cannonis, gros culveringis, and battardis. Ane greit part of the saidis sowmpes of na service, thairfor must be providit of utheris new." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 256.

[SOWNE, s. A sound, a loud cry, Barbour, x. 411.]

SOWNIS, s. [Bran; seeds for making sowens.]

—"Actis maid anent the pryceis of sownis and englishe beir to be putt to executione." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, vol. V. 182.

As conjoined with beir or barley, this may denote bran; Fr. son, id.

SOWP, s. [A quantity of any liquid; a sapple, a gaith, q. v.]

"When washing, she gives the clothes her first soup, and then again her second soup; which means, first and second washes;" Gall. Enc.

To SOWP, v. a. 1. To soak, to drench, to moisten; sowpit, drenched, S.

Be than the suld Menet ouer schipburd slyde,

Or clip, wi' care, the silken soy
For ladies' braws.

Mayne's Glasgow, p. 10.

SOYME, s. A rope. V. SOWME.

[SOYN, adv. Soon, Barbour, iv. 126.]

To SOYNDA, v. a. To see, Shetl.

This may seem immediately derived from Dan. syn-e, to appear, or from Su.-G. syn, Isl. sion, the power of vision.

SOYNDECK, SOYNDICK, s. The eye, Shetl.

SOYNE, s. A son; Aberd. Reg.

[SOYTOUR, SOYTER, SUITER, s. A person appearing in a court of law, as the vassal of another. V. under SOIT.]

SPAAD, s. A spade, Aberd. Dan. spaad, A.-S. spad, id.

[SPAARL, s. The rectum intestinum, Shetl.]

SPACE, s. Kind, species. Fr. espece, id.

"Considering the greit skayth and inconvenient quhilk his Maiestie—sustenis—throw the diversitie and chois of sindry space of money current, &c. Proceeding, as weill appearis, of a certane presumption and libertie ascrivit be sum particular personis in ressaung and geving furth at all tymes all spaces of gold and siluer, vpoun sic heich pryces as may best tend to their awin commoditie," &c. Acts Jas. VI. 1501, Ed. 1814, p. 526.

To SPACE, SPACER, SPACEIR, v. a. and n.
1. To measure by paces, S.

2. To pace, to stride, as one does when the mind is deeply engaged.

"The said Mr. George [Wisheart] spacit up and down behind the hie alter mair than half an hour, his verie countenance and visage declarit the greif and alteration of his mind." Knox's Hist. p. 48, (erron. 52.)

[3. To keep walking up and down.]

"Of this sort I did spaceir vp and doune but sleipe, the maist part of the myrk nycht." Compl. S., p. 58. Lat. spatior, Belg. spacier-en, id. Ital. spacciare, to walk very fast.

SPACE, s. A pace, a step including three feet, S.B.

"The biggest leauws there for felling that does not exceed one space and one half in breadth from the declivity of the brae to the margin of the water; but they extend several paces in length along the margin of it." State, Leslie of Powis, &c., p. 102.

[SPAEE, s. V. SPAIR.]

To SPAEE, SPAY, v. n. 1. To foretell, to divine, to foretolden, S.

For thoeh scho spayit the soith, and maid na bourd,
Quhat euer scho said, Trojanis trowit not ane wound.
Doug. Virgil, 47, 6.

He may, if wyly, spae a fortune right.
Shirref's Poems, p. 122.

— The Harpie Celeno
Spais vnto vs ane fereful takin of wo.
Doug. Virgil, 80, 26.

"This woman, if she be a witch, being the Fowde's friend and near kinswoman, it will be ill ta'en if we haena our fortunes spaced like a' the rest of them." The Pirate, ii. 182.

2. To bode, to forebode.

"Spae well, and hae well;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 63. Kelly expl. it by "Eng. Hope well, and have well. That is, hope and expect good things, and it will fall out accordingly." P. 290.

My ingenious namesake is entirely mistaken, in asserting that spell "is the real word, which, in Scotland, has now taken the form of spae." Popul. Ball., ii. 27, N. He also expl. spae-man by spell-man; Ibid., i. 235. It is perfectly obvious, that these are from different origina. The words allied to spell, in various dialects, all simply signified, to declare, to narrate, without the slightest reference to prophecy. But spae is evidently the same with Isl. ek spae, I foretell, Dan. spaa-er, to foretell. Alem. spach-en, when applied to the mind, primarily signifies to consider; then, to investigate; and last of all, to divine. V. Wachter. As the word originally means, to see with the bodily eye, he views this as the radical idea; referring, in confirmation of his opinion, to the scriptural designation of seer as given to a prophet, because he sees future events, in dreams and visions, as in a mirror.

Hence the Voluspæ, an ancient work containing the Scandinavian mythology, received its name; from cola, art, and spæ, a poem or speech; or, according to others, Vola, Sibylla, and spæ, vaticinium. Hence also Alem. spacher, Isl. spæk-r, Su.-G. spak, a wise man; the name originating from a supposed knowledge of future events.

SPAEE-BOOK, s. A book of necromancy.

The black spae-book from his breast he took,
Impressed with many a warlock spell;
And the book it was wrote by Michael Scott,
Who held in awe the fiends of hell.

Mindrelsy Border, ii. 374.

SPAEE-CRAFT, s. The act of foretelling, S.

Suthe I forsie, if spae-craft had,
Frae hethir-muiris sall ryse a laal,
Aftir twa centries pas, sall he
Revive our fame and memorie.

Ramsay, Evergreen, i. 135.

If spae-craft had, i.e., if it hold.

SPAER, s. A fortune-teller, S.

"Poor Kate Marshall—no sae low as to make verses, but a seller o' horn spoons, and a spier o' poor folks fortunes." Blackw. Mag., May 1820, p. 161.

SPAEEING, s. Act of prophesying.

"When king James is dead ye'll wear the crown; but I wish ye meikle gude o't, for ye have na pay't me yet for that grand spaeing." Spawife, i. 230.

SPAEE-WARK, s. Prognostication, S.

"There was some spae-wark gaed on—I aye heard that; but as for his vanishing, I held the stirrup mysell when he gaed away, and he gied me a round half-crown." Guy Mannering, i. 185.

SPAEMAN, SPAYMAN, SPAMAN, s. 1. A prophet, a diviner, a soothsayer.

The ferefull spaymen therof prognosticate
Schrewit chances to betide, and bad estate.

Doug. Virgil, 145, 14.

"The spaymen said, thir prodigies signifyit gret damage apperyng to Romanis." Bellend. Cron., Fol. 40, a.

Henryson says, that Theseus—

—Quhill he lyvit sett his entencion

To fynd the craft of divinacioun,

And lerit it unto the spamen all,

To tell before sik thingis as wald fall;

Quhat lyfe, quhat deile, quhat destynny and werde

Previdit were to ewery man in erde.

Traitie of Orpheus Kyng, Moralitas, Edin. 1508.

2. In vulgar language, a male fortune-teller, S. Thus it is expl. by Kelly, p. 125.

Isl. spamadr; Dan. spamand, vates.

SPAEEWIFE, SPAYWIFE, s. A female fortune-teller, S.

—An' spae-wives fenyng to be dumb.—

Fergusson's Poems.

V. LAND-LOUPER.

"Many remembered that Annapple Bailyou wandered through the country as a beggar and fortune-teller, or spae-wife." Heart M. Loth., iv. 313.

VOL. IV.

This corresponds to Isl. spakona, Sw. spauwinna, Dan. spakone, q. a spay-quean.

SPAIG, SPAEG, s. 1. A skeleton, Clydes.

Teut. spooncke, spoke, Su.-G. spok, spectrum, phantasma; supposed to be formed from Isl. puke, diabolium phantasma.

2. A tall, lank person; also Spaigin; Upp. Lanarks.

[SPAIGIE, SPAEGIE, s. Tired feeling in the legs from walking, Shetl.]

Spaig is expl. by Mactaggart, "A person with long ill-shaped legs." Thus the sense of the word in Galloway may be viewed as the same.

Gael. and Ir. spaig, "a lame leg," Shaw. C. B. yepaiç, armi, brachia. Boxhorn gives it in the form of yapayau.

SPAIK, SPAKE, s. 1. The spoke of a wheel, S.; [spyauck, Aberd.]

On quhelis spakis speldit vtheris hing.
Doug. Virgil, 186, 14.

"It is the best spake in your wheel;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 47.

2. A bar (or lever) of wood.

"That na merchandis gudis be ruin nor spilt with vnreasonabill stollin as with spakis." Acts, Ja. III., 1466, c. 17, Ed. 1566, i.e., as being driven close together by means of wooden levers.

Teut. specke, spaecke, vectis; also radius rotac.

3. The wooden bars, on which a dead body is carried to the grave, are called spais, S.

"The marquis son Adam was at his head,—the earl of Murray on the right spais,"—Sir Robert Gordon on the fourth spais." Spalding's Troubles, i. 53.

This is sometimes called a Hand-spais.

"When our friends gathered the heads, hands, and other parts of our Martyrs' bodies, off public Ports, to the Magdalene-Chapple, the Magistrates threatened them; and Presbyterian Ministers, who had accepted the Duke of York's Popish Toleration, and who were then ministers in the meeting-houses of Edinburgh, such as Mr. D. W. and H. K. frown'd upon them, saying, 'Will ye never be quiet?' And for that, friends would not suffer them to put their hands to a hand-spais, tho' they offered." Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 140.

"If at a funeral one at the hand-spais misses his foot, and falls beneath the bier, he will soon be in a coffin himself." Gall. Encycl. vo. Freets.

4. [Metaph. applied to classes, professions, &c.]

I dreid ye spais of Spiritualitie
Sall rew that ever I came in this cuntry.
Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 207.

The term is still used in a similar sense. One who has been hurtful to another by his company or counsel, is said to have been an ill spais to him; perhaps as pretending to give support, in allusion to the bar of a wheel, or as we speak of a limb of the church, law, &c. As, however, it is perhaps as frequently pron. spoke, there may possibly be an allusion to one's being haunted by an evil spirit; Teut. spoock, a ghost, a hobgoblin.

SPAIL, s. Gawan and Gol. iii., 26. V. SPALE.

[SPAIL, s. 1. Amount, quantity, extent; as, a spail o' wark, Banffs.; E. spell.

2. The act of urging with energy and speed, ibid.]

[To SPAIL, v. n. To walk or work with energy and speed, ibid.]

To SPAIN, SPANE, SPEAN, v. a. To wean, S. To spane a child, to wean it, A. Bor.

"Upon the said shore towards the west, lyes Ellan-Nanaun, that is the Lambes Ile, wherein all the lambes of that end of the country uses to be fed, and spained fra the yowis." Monroe's Isles, p. 38.

Germ. spen-en, Belg. spen-en, id. ablucere lac, ablactare; Een kind spenen, to wean a child; Isl. spen-a, admoveo uberi; from Teut. spen, Germ. spene, Isl. spena, spine, a teat, the nipple.

Spanna, I am informed, in Gael. signifies to wean; but it is most probably of Gothic origin. Hence, SPAINING, s. The act of weaning; also, the time when a child has been weaned, S.

O. E. "Spanynge or weynynge of children. Ablactatio.—Spanyn or wanyyn chylder. Ablacto." Prompt. Parv.

SPAINING-BRASH, s. That disorder with which children are often affected, in consequence of being weaned, S.

SPAINYIE, s. A West Indian cane used for the reeds of bagpipes, hautboys, and other wind instruments. Weavers' reeds are also made of it; Aberd., Lanarks.

Named, prob., from its being brought at first from the Spanish (S. Spainyie) West India islands. Teut. spanghe, however, signifies lamina. Thus the name might refer to the thinness of the wood used for the purposes mentioned above.

SPAINYIE-FLEES. Spanish flies, cantharides, S. V. SPAINYIE.

[SPAINYIE-FLEE-PLAISTER. A fly-blister; cantharides plaster, S.]

[SPAIR, SPARE, s. The opening in a gown, petticoat, skirt, &c., S.; pron. spae in Clydes.]

To SPAIRGE, v. a. 1. To dash; as, to spairge water, S.

2. To bespatter by dashing any liquid, S.

3. Metaph. to sully by reproach, S.

An' Will's a true guid fallow's get,
A name not envy spairges.

Burns, iii. 95.

4. To cast a wall with lime.

"A pairt of the house at Lundy was pounted [pointed] by David Broune, sclater.—Att this time also, the forepairt of the house was spargied, with the tower-head." Lamont's Diary, p. 156.

Fr. asperg-er, to besprinkle; whence asperges, a holy water stick or sprinkle. Lat. sparg-o, asperg-o.

SPAIRGE, s. 1. A sprinkling; or the liquid that is sprinkled or squirted, S.

2. A dash of contumely, S.

SPAIT, SPATE, SPEAT, s. 1. A flood, an inundation, S.

—The burne on spait hurls doun the bank,
Vthir throw ane wattir brek, or spait of flude,
Ryland vp rede erl, as it war wol.
Doug. Virgil, 49, 17.

I now behall, and Tybris the grete flude
For grete haboundance of blude on spate wox rede.
Ibid. 185, 47.

Wyntown applies the term to the universal deluge.
In this chapitire rede, and se
The arke and the spate of Noe.
Cron. i. Rubr. c. 6.

Mr. Macpherson is certainly right in his conjecture, that spate vii. 5. 171, should be read as spat (spot). Sense cannot otherwise be made of the passage. For the shallowness of the river must have been removed by a spate.

The term occurs in a mode of expression analogous to the E. one, a flood of tears.

And doun the water wi' speed she rins,
While tears in spais fa' fast frae her e'e.
Mindrelsy Border, l. 174.

It is also written Speat.

—"Through a great speat of the water of Dee, occasioned by the extraordinary rain, thir haill four ships brake loose," &c. Spalding, i. 59, 60.

2. A great fall of rain; "a spait o' rain."

"Spait, spate, a torrent of rain;" Gl. Sibb. Mod. Sax. speyte, siphon, siphon.

A. Bor. "spait, or spyet, a great fall of rain," also "a torrent;" Gl. Brocket.

3. Metaph. used for any thing that hurries men away like a flood.

God proves them, who transported with this spate
Of madnesse, basely doe crouch down before
The craftsmans worke, which ought to have no more
Respect, than as much mettell, timber, stone,
Appointed for the basest use, or none.

More's True Crucifixe, p. 91.

"Ye know that youth is a folly, and I acknowledge that in my younger years I was much carried down with the spate of it." Hackstoun of Rathillet, Cloud of Witn.

4. Also used metaph. for fluency of speech, S.

"Eodem sensu—Cic. dixit, Aumen ingenii; Juvonal, ingenii fons; nos, a spate of language." Rudd. vo. Plum.

[Sw. speta, to distend, spread out.]
Gael. speid, "a great river-flood;" Shaw. But prob. it has been borrowed from the low country.

[To SPAIVE, SPEAVE, v. a. and n. V. SPAVE.]

[SPAIVER, s. V. under SPARE, s., s. 2.]

SPALD, SPAULD, SPAWL, s. 1. The shoulder. Hence S. the spule-bane, the shoulder-blade.

The remanent of the rowaris euery wicht,
In popill tre branchis dycht at poynt,
With spaldis nakit schene of oile anoint,

Apoun thare setes and colstis al atany
Thare placis hint, arrayit for the nanys.

Doug. Virgil, 132, 3.

Nudatosque humeros—Virg. v. 135.

Thou puts the spaven in the selder spauld,
That useth in the hinder-hogh to be.

Polewart, Watson's Coll., iii. 28.

2. Any joint or member; [pl. spalds, long bare legs.]

Sum vthir perordour calldrouis gan vpsset,—
Vnder the spelis awakkis the roste in thre,
The raw spudlis ordanit for the mulle mete.

Doug. Virgil, 130, 47.

Viscera torrent. Virg. v. 103.

Syne soon and safe, baith lith and spaul,
Bring hame the tae half o' my soul.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 201.

Thus we vulgarly speak of lang spauls, S. strictly referring to the limbs.

Fr. espaule, C. B. ypolide, the shoulder. L. B. spall-a, armus, quasi lamella humeri. Thre views Fr. espaule as radically allied to Su.-G. spiaell, segmentum. It sometimes denotes a small portion of ground; segmentum vel portiuencula agri, a corpore suo separati; from spiaell-a, dividere.

"Reading the spal or spule bane" of a leg of mutton well scraped, as Sibb. observes, was "anciently a common mode of divination." It most generally prevailed in the Highlands, and it is not yet extinct. After the bone is thoroughly scraped, they hold it between them and the light; and looking through it, pretend to have a representation of future events, as of the arrival of strangers, battles, &c. This species of divination the Highlanders call Sleinanachd. V. Pennant's Tour in S., 1769, p. 198.

It is understood, that this must be the bone of a sheep newly killed. One special object of intelligence is the future state of one's flocks and herds, Clydes.

It is singular, that this childish superstition should be observed in Afghanistan, a country with which Scotland never had the slightest connexion. V. Elphinstone's Travels in Cabul.

BLACK SPAULD, a disease of cattle, S. synon.

Quarter-ill, q. v.

"Mr. J. Hog says,—that it [the sickness] is the same disease with the Black Spauld, which prevails among the young cattle in the West of Scotland, when the grasses fail, and they begin to feed on fodder and dry herbage." Prize Essays Highl. Soc. S.

[To SPALD, SPAULD, v. a. To split, lay open; a spaldin' knife, one used for splitting fish, S.]

[To SPALDER, v. a. and n. V. SPELDER.]

SPALDING, s. A small fish split and dried, S.

And there will be partans and buckies,
And whytens and spaldings enew.

Elythsome Bridal, Herd's Coll., ii. 25.

V. SPELDING.

SPALE, SPAIL, SPEAL, s. 1. A lath or thin plank used in wooden houses for filling up the interstices betwixt the beams, S. B.

Allied to Su.-G. spiaell, segmentum, lamina; from spiala, to cleave, whence Teut. spalt-en, has been formed, and Dan. spalt-er, id.

2. A splinter or chip, also, a shaving of wood. S. Spales, spalls, chips, A. Bor.

Sum stikkit throw the coist with the spalis of tre
Lay gaspand.—
Doug. Virgil, 2nd, 40.

V. SPAIL.

"He that hews above his head, may have the speal fall in his eye;" S. Prov. "He that aims at things above his power, may be ruined by his project." Kelly, p. 128.

It is thus expressed in D. Ferguson's Prov.—

He that hews over his,
The spail will fall into his eye.

It occurs in another S. Prov.; "He is not the best wright that hews maist speals." Ibid., p. 14.

It is sometimes applied to metallic substances, as denoting the splinters which fly from them, when struck.

The spalis, and the sparkis, spedely out sprang.
Gaean and Gcl., ii. 25.

Schir Wawine, wourthy in wail,
Half ane span at ane spail,
Qubare his harnes wes hail,
He hewit attanis.

Ibid., iii. 28.

Expl., "blow." Gl. Sw. spiaela, a splinter.

Spells O.E. is used for splinters.

There men might see spears fly in spells,
And tall men tumbling on the soil.

Battle Flodden, st. 91.

Fr. spolla denotes the shavings of wood.

SPALE-HORN'T, adj. Having the horns thin and broad, Clydes.

Su.-G. spiaell, lamina. V. SPALE, s.

SPALEN, Man of spalen. [Prob., defender, second.]

"Mar becomes 'man of spalen, duelling, and renews' to Murdac, excepting allegiance to the king." Nov. 1420; Sir Ja' Balfour's Papers, MSS. Harl. Pinkerton's Hist. Scot., i. 102, V.

Prob., "man of defence" from L. B. spalion, a kind of gallery, woven with twigs in the form of a roof, and made so solid as to repel every weapon that falls on it. V. Du Cange. Thus, "man of spalen and duelling," would denote one bound both to shield his superior, and to fight for him.

To SPALLER, v. n. To sprawl, Berwicks.

Su.-G. sprall-a, id. Perhaps by transposition.

SPALLIEL, s. A disease of cattle, Lanarks.

"The Spalliel, in young cattle, is sometimes cured by opening a communication between two incisions made, one on each side of the part affected, and filling it up with a mixture of black soap, salt-petre, and bruised garlic." Ure's Hist. Rutherglen, p. 191.

Qu. if the same with the Black spauld, q. Spauld-ill?

To SPAN, v. a. To put horses before a wagon or any sort of carriage; a Belg. term, Sewel.

"—We made a bridge of our small cannon with their carriage, being placed two and two alongst the river at an equall distance of eight foote asunder, where we layd over deales betwixt the cannon passing over our own infantry alongst the bridge; which being passed, and the deales taken off, the horses spanned before the cannon, led them away before the army." Monro's Exped. P. II., p. 176.

SPAN, SPANN, s. A dry measure in Orkney.

"Southweidfuird iij d. terre uthale land an' in butter scat j span."—"In butter scat uther half span." Rentall Book of Orkney, p. 4. A. 1502.

"Tankarnes xij d. terre uthall land an' in butter scat xj spann."—& it suld be j leisp. [leispund] upoun ilk span, becaus it payis nather malt scat nor butter scat we ken nocht quhy." Ibid., p. 6. V. LESH FUND.

Su.-G. spann, mensura aridorum, continens dimidiam tonnae partem. In Scania the term signifies a pail in which water is carried; Dan. spand, a pail or bucket.

To SPAN, v. a. To grasp. V. SPAYN.

To SPANG, v. n. 1. To leap with elastic force, to spring, S.; spang o'er, overleap, S.

Sum presis thik the wyld fyre in to slyng.
The arrowis flaw spangand fra euey stryng.

Doug. Virgil, 318, 17.

Fan I came to him, wi' sad wound
He had nae maughts to gang;
But fan he saw that he was safe,
Right souple cou'd he spang.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 9.

But when they spang o'er reason's fence,
We smart for't at our ain expence.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 386.

"To spang one's gates, is to make haste;" Clav. Yorks. This must be traced to the same origin.

A. Bor. "Spang, to leap with elastic force, to spring;" Gl. Brocket.

2. In an active sense, to cause to spring.

—Hys swyft stedis huffis, quhare thay went,
Spangit vp the blindy sparkis ouer the bent.

Doug. Virgil, 421, 15.

Rudd. derives this word from span, or Ital. spingere, violenter impellere. But he has not observed, that Isl. spenn-a, Germ. spannen, signify, to extend; spannende, elasticity; spangen, the clasps of a book, because they extend from one side of it to another. The latter is nearly allied to the most common use of the S. word, a definite intermediate space being generally mentioned in connexion with it; as, He spang'd o'er the burn; he leaped from one side of the rivulet to the other, i.e., he included the rivulet within his leap. Wachter derives spanne, a span, in measurement, from the v.

To SPANG, v. a. 1. To grasp with both hands put together, to enclose, S. V. SPAYN, SPAN, v., id.

[2. To span, to measure by spanning, Clydes.]

SPANG, s. 1. The act of springing with elastic force; a leap, S.

And netheles to schute he was begun,
And threw ane arrow in the are on lycht,—
That lousit of the takill with ane spang.

Doug. Virgil, 145, 10.

2. [A smart blow, Clydes.] "Scot. also we use the word for a fillip," Rudd. V. the v.

3. The act of grasping with both hands; [a grasp, a span, S.]

SPANGIE, s. 1. A game played by boys with marbles or halfpence. A marble or halfpenny is struck against the wall. If the second player can bring his so near that of his antagonist, as to include both within a span, he claims both as his. [Spawnie, Banffs.]

This in E. is called Boss out, or Boss and Span. V. Strutt's Sports, p. 287. Perhaps the E. game span.

counter, or span-farthing, was originally the same, although described differently. V. Johns. Dict.

2. "An animal fond of leaping;" Gall. Enc.

SPANGIE-HEWIT, s. V. under YELDRING.

SPANG-TADE, s. A cruel sport among children, Gall.; Spangie-hewit, synon.

"Spang-tade, a deadly trick played on the poor toad; a small board is laid over a stone, on the one end of which is put the reptile; the other end is then struck by a hard blow, which drives the toad into the air, and when it falls it is generally quite dead." Gall. Enc.

Mr. Brocket gives an account of a similar barbarous sport in the north of E.; Gl. vo. Spangheue.

To SPANHEW, v. a. To place any thing on one end of a board, the middle of which rests on a wall, and strike the other end with something heavy, so as to make it start suddenly up, and fling what is upon it violently aloft, Ettr. For. V. SPANGIE-HEWIT.

SPANGIS, s. pl. Spangles.

—And on hir hede a chaplet fresch of hewe,
Of plumys partit rede, and quhite, and blew: :
Full of quaking spangis brycht as gold.

King's Quair, ii. 27, 28.

Teut. spanghe, Isl. spaung, lamina. Germ. spange, a bracelet or locket.

SPANG-NEW, adj. Applied to "any thing quite new; spang-fire-new, the same." Gall. Enc.

"Spang-new, quite new. North." Grose.

This appears to exhibit a more ancient form of the term than E. Span-new. V. under Split-new.

[SPANHEW. V. under SPANG, v.]

* To SPANK, v. n. 1. To move with quickness and elasticity, to take long steps with apparent agility; to spank off, to set off in this manner. A spanking horse, one that moves in this manner, S.

"Will you see how they're spankin' along the side o' that green upwith?" Saint Patrick, ii. 91.

I cockit you upo' my brow,
An' spankit off.

Tarras's Poems, p. 38.

C. B. ysponc-law, to bound sharply.

It seems to be a frequentative from Spang, v. q. v. or allied to Isl. spink-a, decursitare.

2. "To sparkle or shine. Teut. spange, lamina;" Sibb. Gl.

[SPANK, s. A leap, bound; also, a smart blow, Clydes.]

SPANKER, SPANKIE, s. 1. One who walks in a quick and elastic way; also, a fleet horse, S.

"I was bred a horse-couper, Sir; and if I might live to see you at Whitson-tryst, or at Stagshaw-bank, or the winter fair at Hawick, and ye wanted a spanker that would lead the field, I'se be caution I would serve ye easy, for Jamie Jinker was ne'er the lad to impose on a gentleman." Waverley, ii. 245, 246.

Mr. Todd has adopted this as a word used in the north of E., properly rendering it, "A person who takes long steps with agility."

2. "Spanker, a tall well-made woman;" Gall. Enc.

3. Spankers, long and thin legs, S. V. the r.

SPANKERING, SPANKING, adj. Nimble, agile. A "spankering hizzie, a tall, nimble girl;" Encycl. Gall.

SPANKY, adj. 1. Sprightly, frisking, S.

The spanky heifers, breathing balmy round,
Egg on their fury, and their rage provoke.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 45.

2. Dashing, gaudy, S.

Up cam twa spanky countra lairds
Upo their fillies mounted.

Ibid., p. 75.

SPANKER-NEW, adj. Quite new, never before used, Teviotd.; evidently from a common source with Spang-neue.

SPANYIE, s. Spain.

"Basilides and Martialis bischopis of Spanyie being deposed, maid thair appellations to Stephanus than bischop of Rome, and desyrit to be restored be him." Nicol Burne, F. 86, b.

SPANYE, adj. Spanish, of or belonging to Spain, S. V. SPAINYIE.

"Item, twa spanye cloikis of blak freis with ane braid pasment of gold and silvir." Inventories, A. 1539, p. 38.

That is, cloaks or mantles made after the Spanish fashion. The term is still used.

SPANYEART, s. A spaniel.

The cur or mastis be haldis at smale anale,
And culyeis spanyeartis, to chace partrik or quale.

Doug. Virgil, 272, 2.

This has the same origin with the E. designation; as the dog is originally of Spanish breed. V. Jun. Etym.

To SPANYS, v. n. To blow fully, applied to a flower.

I seek the sawoure of that ros,
That spanysys, spredys, and evyre spryngis
In plesans of the Kyng of Kyngis.

Wyntoun, i. Prol. 127.

Chauc. spannishing, Fr. espanouisement, the full blow of a flower, Tyrwhitt. Ihre views the Fr. v. espanouir as allied to Su.-G. spann-a, to extend.

*To SPAR, SPER, v. a. To shut, to fasten a door, by means of a bar of wood called a bolt, S. [A.-S. sparrian, id.]

O. E. Speryn or shyttyn, claudo.—Speryn or closyn within. Include.—Speryn or shettyn with lokkys. Sero. Obsero." Prompt. Parv. Hence "Sperell or closell in shetting. Firmaculum." Ibid.

A-SPAR, A-SPAR-WAIES, adv. In a state of opposition, against, S. B. To set one's foot a-spar, to oppose any thing, S. B.

Quo' Jeany, I think, 'oman, ye're in the right ;
Set your feet ay a spar to the spinning o't.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 135.

"He that would stand to the end, must haue his feet set a spar-waice, he must not stand on a slippery place, nor on one foote only, but he must haue a sure ground, and must stand on both his feet, and euery foot must haue the own ground-stone to stand on, and the first ground is the gospel of Jesus Christ." Rollock on 2 Thea., p. 115.

Perhaps from Germ. gesperre, straddling; or from E. spar, to close, to shut, because denoting opposition; q. using one's foot as a spar, or bar, in the way of another.

SPARE, s. 1. An opening in a gown or petticoat.

"That parte of weemens claitis, sik as of their gowns, or petticoat, quihilk under the belt, and before is open, commonly is called the spar." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Bastardus.

Allied to Su.-G. sparr-a, to open, to expand; Teut. sperr-en.

2. The slit or opening, formerly used in the forepart of breeches, S. spaiver, S. B.

O. E. "Speyre of a garment. Cluniculum. Manubium. Manulia." Prompt. Parv. Cluniculum is expl. "a spayre of a woman's kyrtell;" Ort. Vocab.

* SPARE, adj. 1. "Barren," Gl.

The tothir drew hym on dreigh in derne to the dure;
Hys hym hard throu the hall to his haiknay,
And sped hym on spedely, on the spar mure.

Gaioun and Gol., l. 9.

It might, however, signify wide, extensive; from Germ. sperr-en, extendere, whence sparrweit, late patens.

2. This term is still used to denote what is lean or meagre.

A mair mou'd maiden jimp an' spar,
Mistook a fit for a' her care.

Morison's Poems, p. 25.

To SPARGE, v. a. To dash, &c. V. SPAIRGE.

To SPARGEON, v. a. To plaister.

"Bot the prophetis of it spargeonit thaim with untemperit mortar, seing vaniteis, and prophecying leis unto thaim, sayand, The Lord hes said this, quhen the Lord bes not spokin." Winyet's First Tractat. Keith's Hist., p. 209, App. Plaister'd, or did over. Marg.

Perhaps formed from Fr. aspersion, or Ital. aspersione, This v. had the form of Sparjet in O. E. "Spargetys or peinctyne. Gipso. Limo." Prompt. Parv. "Sparjettinge of wallis, Litura." Ibid.

SPARGINER, SPARGITER, s. A plasterer.

"Conteaning the privilegedes—of—taking in wnder thair libertie the hail friemen of masonis, boweris, cowparis, glassinwrychtis, stockeris of gunnes, spargineris, painteris, &c., in the—burgh of the Cannogait." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, V. 651.

* SPARK, s. 1. [A spark in the hause, used metaph. for a thirst, desire, or liking for strong drink, S.]

It is used in this sense in the S. Prov., "The smith has ay a spark in his haise [r hawse]." Kelly, p. 334; a mode of accounting for want of sobriety from the nature of a man's occupation.

Of a woman addicted to intemperance it is said, "She's the smith's dochter, she has a spark in her throat;" Loth.

Hence the phrase, applied to a smith, to synd the spark that's in his hause.

That ye may ne'er be scant o' brass,
To synd the spark that's i' yer hause;
That, as ye blaw your smithy fire,
Apollo may your wit inspire, &c.

G. Turnbull's Poet. Essays, p. 190.

2. A clear spark on the wick of a candle is supposed to signify the speedy arrival of a letter to the person to whom it points, Teviotd.

Sparks from the fire are viewed as foreboding a vexatious controversy to the person on whom they alight. They are called sharp words, Teviotd.

3. A very small diamond, ruby, or other precious stone is called a spark; whether from its shining quality, or from its minuteness, seems doubtful, S.

"Ane litle targett on his Majesties bonatt that was sent to him be the Quene of England, sett with litle diamantis and sparkis of rubyis." Inventories, A. 1584, p. 315.

4. A spirt, a jet; as, "a spark o' dirt;" also, the spot on clothes produced by mud, &c., S.

5. A small particle of any thing, S.; applied also to liquids of any kind, S.

It occurs in this sense in a poem more than two centuries old.

And syne he het the milk our het,
And sorrow a spark of it would yyrne.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 217, st. 9.

Hence, probably, A. Bor. "Sparkey or sparkled, spotted, sprinkled: a sparkey cow. He sparkled the water all over me." Grose.

[Allied to spurge, to scatter; but the primary sense is obtained from the crackling of a fire-brand, which throws out sparks; Isl. spraka, Dan. sprage, to crackle; hence, to scatter, to throw about. Then, sparks being small portions of the thing burning gives the secondary sense of a particle, a spot, a speck; for a spark very soon becomes a speck of dust. This sense is common in S.; for we have a spark o' fire, a spark o' dirt, a spark o' drink, a spark o' sense; and it exists in E. in 'a spark of courage.']

To SPARK, v. a. and n. 1. To bespatter, S.

So large feild his gousty body tuke,
That fer on brede oner spred was al the plane,
His armour sparkit with his blude and brane.

Doug. Virg., 305, 13.

He also uses it with the prefix.

—The slayne bodyis away with thame did cary—
With blude bysparkit visage, hede, and hals.

Ibid., 228, 1.

2. To soil by throwing up small spots of mire; as, "You're sparkin' a' your white stockings," S.

3. To scatter thinly; often applied to seeds, as, "Shall I spark in some of thai grass seeds?" Moray.

The r. seems to have had the same signification in O. E. "Sparkyn. Dispergo." Prompt. Parv.

Yorks. "to sparkle away, to disperse, spend, waste," supplies us with a dimin. from this v. V. Ray's Lett., p. 337. O. E. "Sparkelinge abroad. Dispersio." Prompt. Parv.

Perhaps we discover a vestige of the origin of this r. in lal. spreka, macula. Lat. sparg-ere has undoubtedly had a common origin. Shall we view the term as having any affinity to Sw. spark-a, to kick, q. to throw up the mud?

It's SPARKIN, v. impers. It rains slightly, S.; synon. with It's spitterin.

[SPARKIT, part. adj. Bespattered, spotted, S.]

SPARKLE, s. A spark.

"We doe often feeble the sparkles of the fire upon our own bodies." Exhortation, Kirks of Christ in S. to their Sister Kirk in Edinburgh, 1624, p. 1.

SPARKLIT, part. adj. Speckled, S.; sparkled, A. Bor. id. V. SPRECKLED.

SPARLING, SPIRLING, s. A smelt, S. A. Bor. It is sometimes called spurling, E. Salmo eperlanus, Linn.

"The smelt or spurling, a very rare fish, is also found in the Cree. It is found only in one other river in Scotland, viz. the Forth at Stirling." P. Minnigaff, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc., vii. 54.

"Spirinchus Schoufeldii, Eperlanus Rondeletii, Nostratibus a Spirling, Anglia a Smelt." Sibb. Fife, p. 125.

"They have a very particular scent, from whence is derived one of their English names Smelt, i.e., smell it. That of Spurling, which is used in Wales, and the North of England, is taken from the French Eperlan." Penn. Zool., iii. 265.

The etymon here given of smelt seems fanciful. For its A.-S. name is the same. Seren. derives it from Su.-G. smaa, smal, parvus, exilis. The Germ. name is spiering, spierling; Lat. eperlan-us.

[SPARLS, s. pl. The coarse parts of beef sewed up in one of the intestines, a sausage, Shetl.]

To SPARPALL, SPARPELL, SPERPLE, v. a. To disperse, to scatter.

The thickest sop or rout of all the preys,
Thare as maist tary was, or he wald ceis,
This Lausus all to sparpellit and inuadit.

Doug. Virgil, 331, 45.

—He his lyfe has sperpelit in the are.

Ibid. 336, 23.

V. also Acts Ja. VI. 1537, c. 100, Skene,

Fr. esarpill-er, id. Wicklif uses disperplid, disparpoilid, in the same sense.

"If an hous be disparpoilid on it self thilke house mai not stonde." Mark iii.

Spurple here and there, Segrego, sejungo, spargo; Hulocet. V. SPERFLE.

SPARROW-BLASTET, part. pa.

"'Eh! Megsty me! I'm sparrow-blastet!' exclaimed the Liddy,—lifting up both her hands and eyes in wonderment." The Entail, iii. 25.

SPARROW-DRIFT, s. The smallest kind of shot, used in shooting small birds, Roxb.; q. "what men let drive at sparrows."

SPARROW-GRASS, s. A plant; the common corruption of the proper name asparagus, S.

To SPARS, v. a. To spread, to propagate.

—"Amongis quhome was Johnne Roger, a Black Frier, godlie, leirnit, and ane that fruitfullie preichit Christ Jesus, to the comfort of many in Angus and Mearnis, quhome that bloodie man [Cardinal Beaton] had causit murther in the ground of the Sey Tour of St. Androis, and then causit to cast him over the craige, sparsing a fals bruit, that the said Johnne, seiking to fie, had brokin his awin craige." Knox's Hist., p. 40, 41.

Lat. sparg-o, spars-um, id.

SPARS, SPARSE, adj. Widely spread; as, "Sparse writing" is wide open writing, occupying a large space, S. V. the v.

To SPARTLE, v. n. 1. To move with velocity and inconstancy, S.B. V. SPRINKIL.

Ducks a padlock-hunting scour the bog,
And powheads spartle in the oozy slosh.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 12.

2. To leap, spring; to splutter, kick, Gall.

—On the bank

The yellow captive's flung, a spartlin sight.

Ibid., p. 30.

"Spartle, to kick with the feet, to paw;" Mac-taggart.

Teut. spertel-en, agitare sive mortare manus pedesque; et palpitare; Belg. spartel-en, "to shake one's legs to and fro, to kick to and fro," Sewel; Su.-G. sprattl-a, palpitare, lhre; to sprawl, Seren.

SPARWORT, s. Cloth for covering spars.

"Item, for 4 elne and ane halve of tartane, for a sparcort aboun his [my Lorde Prince's] credill, price elne 10s. 2 5 0." Borthwick's Brit. Antiq., p. 142.

This evidently means cloth for covering the spars of a cradle. There is probably an error in orthography. —Wort may be corr. from Teut. waerde, a guard, or Su.-G. ward (pron. wörd) a hedge. It seems to be formed like cod-warr, i.e., that which wards or covers a pillow.

SPASH, s. The foot, S. B.

But wauk'nin, than my spash I lifted,
Frae place to place for him I sifted.

Taylor's Poems, p. 181.

SPAT, s. Spot, place, S.

Far up in the air, abune their heads,
A spat in the lift sae blue,
The laviorie chirlit his cantie sanz.

Ballad, Edin. Mag., Oct. 1818, p. 327.

SPATCH, s. A large spot; a patch or plaister, S.; same with E. patch.

SPATE, s. A flood, an inundation. V. SPAIT.

SPATTLE, s. Apparently, a slight inundation, q. a little spait, Dumfr.

"The coal or dam of Bankend Mill pens the water 5 feet 6 inches; consequently, if this were removed, and the channel above widened and deepened, and the loops cut off when necessary, the water might be reduced in dry seasons 4 feet within bank, which would render the meadows more firm and dry, and carry off small spittles of rain, without damaging the crops." Agr. Surv. Dumfr., p. 496.

SPATHIE, s. A spotted river-trout, Perth., Kinross; S. spat, Teut. spotte, macula, spott-en, aspergere maculis.

SPATRILS, s. 1. Gaiters, or spatterdashes, Roxb.

2. Applied to the notes used in music, ibid.

Thy flats, and sharps, and rests, and nat'rals,
Wi' figures, dots, and mystic spatrils,
Tho' some fu' tight their bow o'er a' trails,
And hit them fair,
I ken the notes wi' tails and nae tails,
But little mair.

A. Scott's Poems, To his Fiddle, p. 22.

SPATS, s. pl. 1. Abbrev. of the E. spatterdashes, S.

2. Black spats, a cant term for irons on the legs, Ang.

"Gin he hidna the black spats on, I sid apen the door a wee thing cannier." St. Kathleen, iv. iii.

SPATTILL, s. Spittle.

"Oyle, salt, spattill, and sic lyke in baptisme ar bot mennis inuentiounis." Acts Mary, 1560, Ed. 1814, p. 533.

A.-S. spathl, spall, saliva, sputum; spad-an, spuere, spall-ian, pitissare.

[SPATTLE, s. Dimin. of spate, q. v.]

To SPAVE, SPAIVE, SPEAVE, v. a. and n.
To spay, Galloway; applied, like the E. term, only to female animals, as queys, or she-pigs.

"When cut, or spaved, they then with us obtain the name of heifers." P. Twyneholm, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc., xv. 85.

A. Bor. speave, id. E. spay, Lat. spail-o, Gael. spoth-am.

2. To bear the operation of spaying, Gall.

"A young cow with calf, that is to say, an open quey, will not speave; neither will a cow that has had a calf, nor twin female calves." Gall. Encycl., p. 432.

SPAYER, SPAIVER, s. 1. One who spays animals, S.

"Spaivers, persons who spaive cattle;" Gall. Enc.

[2. The flap or opening of trousers, S.]

SPAUL, s. 1. A limb. V. SPALD.

2. A feeble stretching of the limbs, Clydes.

To SPAUL, v. n. To push out the limbs feebly, as a dying animal. V. SPELD.

SPAWLDROCHIE, adj. "Long-legged;" Gall. Encycl.

A wee tact o' gool was no to be seen,
Nor ane spawldrochy lang-legged flea.

Ibid., p. 412.

To SPAYN, SPAN, v. a. To grasp.

—Newys that stalwart war and squar,
That wout to spayn gret speris war,

Swa spaynyt aris, that men mycht se
Full oft the hyde love on the tru.

Barbour, iii. 582, MS.

i.e., grasped oars. Doug. uses it in the same sense; q. to inclose in the span.

• To SPEAK. 1. To speak in, to make a short call for one in passing; as, "I spak in, and saw them, as I can by," S.

[2. To speak to, to rebuke, chastise; as, "My lad, I'll speak to ye for that," Clydes.]

3. To speak wi' or with, to meet in a hostile manner, to give battle to.

"Montrose—considered, that if he suffered himself to be attacked both before and behind, he might run a risque; therefore, instead of marching forward, he turned about, and went to speak with Argyle." Guthry's Mem., p. 178.

This bears some resemblance to the Hebrew idiom, when those who met with a hostile intention were said to "look one another in the face," 2 Kings xiv. 8, 11.

4. Speak, equivalent to attend, hearken; q. give me speech with you, S.

SPEAK-A-WORD-ROOM, s. A parlour, S.

SPEAKABLE, adj. Affable, courteous, S.

SPEAL, SPEL, s. Play, game, S.A.

Then tye your crampets, Glenbuck cries,
Prepare ye for the speal.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 163.

V. BONSPÉL.

SPEANLIE, adv. [Openly, boldly.]

The Paip wyislie, I wis, of wirschip the well,
Gawe him his braid bennessoun, and baldlie him bade,
That he suld speanlie speik, and spair nocht to spell.

Houlate, l. 3, MS.

Germ. spaan-en, span-en, Su.-G. spann-a, to extend. The term speanle occurs ibid. st. 11.

Syne belyve send the lettres into sere landis,
With the Swallow so swift in speanle expremit.

Here it may signify Spanish, as denoting that the letters were expressed or written in that language; from Fr. espagnole, id.

SPEARMINT, SPEARMENT, s. Peppermint, S.

SPEAT, s. A flood. V. SPAIT.

[SPEAVIE, s. The spavin, Shetl.]

SPECIALL, s. A particular or principle person.

"Montrose—goes to Birkenbog, a main covenanter, where he and some specialls were quartered." Spalding, ii. 301.

SPECIALTIE, SPECIALTE', s. Favour, partiality.

"Our sonerane lord sall with the auise of his counsall see, and limmit to the parteis contendand a competent Juge quhilk sall minister justice to all parteis but specialtie." Acts Ja. IV., 1493, IV. 233.

L.B. specialit-as, amitie particuliere; Du Cange.

Fr. specialité, particular expression.

SPECK, s. Blubber; the fat of whales, S.

Su.-G. spack, id. arvina, lardum; A.-S. spio, "lardum, bacon," Somner; Teut. speck, id.; Belg. walvisch.

spek, blubber; Isl. spik, pinguicula vel lardum balenarum; Verel.

SPECKS, SPECTS, s. pl. Vulgar abbrev. of Spectacles.

When ilka ane took it, an' ilka ane lookit,
An' ilka ane ca'd it a conical hane;
To the miller it goes, wha, wi' spects on his nose,
To hae an' to view it was wonderous fain.

Hogg's Mountain Bard, p. 22.

SPECTACLES (of a fowl), s. pl. The merry thought, S. V. BRIL.

Every one is acquainted with the playful use of the merry-thought among young people, under the pretence of learning, by the share that falls to each of those who break it between them, which of the two shall be first married. This is a vestige of an ancient mode of divination, practised by the Scandinavians.

Rudbeck informs us that the Earth was worshipped by having geese sacrificed to her; and that the ancient northern nations were wont, in the beginning of winter, not only to sacrifice the goose, but by means of the cartilaginous substance on its breast, to divine whether they were to have a severe or a mild winter; "which species of divination," he adds, "although without any mixture of superstition, is notwithstanding still most vainly followed by the vulgar of our country." Atlant., ii. 546.

[SPEDDART, s. V. SPEEDART.]

SPEDDIS, s. pl. Spades.

"Item, certane auld speddis nochit schod." Inventories, A. 1568, p. 170.

SPEDE, s. and v. Speed, to speed. To cum spede, to have success. To spede hand, to make haste, to dispatch.

To spede hand, to make haste, to dispatch.

I sall the lerne in quhat wourdis, quhat way
Thou may cum spede, and haue the hale ouerhand,
Twiching this instant mater now at hand.

Doug. Virgil, 241, 22.

—The Rutulianis all fall glaid and gay—

Syne speil thare hand, and maile thame for the fycht.

Doug. Virgil, 417, 24.

Speid hand, man, with thy clitter clattar.

Lyndsay, S. P. Repr., ii. 187.

A.-S. spéd, Belg. spoed, [haste], expedition. Seren. derives it from Goth. spo sij, festinare.

To cum spede, to have success, S.

SPEDLIN, s. Applied to a child beginning to walk, Dumfr.

[Dimin. of speedy, which is the name given when the child can run alone; speedy is prob. a contr. for speedy, fit, which is also used.]

SPEEDART, SPEEDARD, SPEDDART, s. A spider; speddart, a tough old creature, tight as a wire; Gall. Encyl.

The wasp, the speedard, and the geel
Are greedy curses. Gall. Enc.

Teut. spieder, be-spieder, speculator?

To SPEEL, v. n. [1. To climb. V. SPELE.]

2. To sport, play, take amusement, S.

Teut. speel-en, spel-en, Germ. spil-en, ludere. These verbs are applied to every species of sport, to running, hunting, dice, &c.

VOL. IV.

[SPEEN, s. A spoon, Aberd., Banffs.]

SPEEN-DRIFT, SPINDRIFT, s. 1. Driving snow, Aberd.; spray, [spume of the sea, S.] Aysr., Gall.

"At the last—came up twa three swankies riding at the hand-gallop, garring the dubs flee about them like speen-drift." Journal from London, p. 5.

"A tempestuous showre and drow—carried us back almost to the May, with such a how wa, [hollow wave] and spin drift, that the boat being open he looked for great danger, if the stormy showre had continued." Melville's MS., p. 115.

"The thought of his children—scattered these subsiding feelings like the blast that brushes the waves of the ocean into spindrifft." The Entail, ii. 9.

"Spindrifft, the spume of the sea; the spray;" Gall. Encycl.

It is probably allied to C.B. yspone, "a jerk, a jet, a spirt;" Owen.

[Speendrifft is just spoon-drift as pron. in the N.E. counties of S., and spindrifft, as pron. in the W. and S. counties.]

To SPEER, v. a. and n. To inquire. V. SPEKE.

[To SPEER, v. a. To spirt or squirt as with a syringe, Aberd.]

SPEER-WUNDIT, part. pa. Quite overcome with exertion, so as to be out of breath, Loth., Fife.

Perhaps q. spire-winded, as originally applied to one who is nearly choked by the spire or spray. V. SPIRE, also SPIREWIND.

SPEERE, s. Expl. "a hole in the wall of a house through which the family received and answered the enquiries of strangers, without being under the necessity of opening the door or window;" Gl. Rits.

And when he came to John o' the Scales,

Up at the speere then looked he;

There sate three lords at the lories end,

Were drinking of the wine so free.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 136.

From the use of this aperture, the term might seem derived from the v. spere, spere, to inquire. Whatever be the origin, it is apparently the same with SPIRE, q. v.

SPEG, s. A pin or peg of wood, Loth.

Dan. spiger, a nail; A.-S. spicyng, Su.-G. spik, id.; speck-a, acuminare.

SPEICE, s. Pride.

In mekle speice is part of vanity.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 96.

"Thus a spicy man is still used for one self-conceited and proud," Lord Hailes. The metaph. is evidently founded on the stimulating effects of strong spices.

SPEIDFUL, adj. Proper, expedient.

—Giff that it speidfull be,

I will send a man in Carrik,

To spy and speir our kynrik.

Barbour, iv. 551, MS.

Him thoet noch speidfull for till far,

Till assaile him in the hycht.

Ibid., v. 496, MS.

"It is sene speilfull, that gif ony schipman of Scotland passis with letters of the Kingis Depute in Ireland, that he ressaue na man into his schip to bring with him to the realme of Scotland, bot gif that man haue ane letter or certanetie of the Lord of that land, quhair he schippis, for quhat cause he cummis in this realme." Acts Ja. I., 1525, c. 69, Ed. 1566. V. SPEDE.

SPEIK, s. Speech. V. SPEK.

SPEIKINTARE, s. A bird, supposed to be the Sea Swallow, Sterna hirundo, Linn. Perhaps a corr. of its vulgar name PIC-TARNIE, q. v.

—"There is moss and green plots, in which ducks, teals, and speikintares, (which last are like sea gulls, but of a smaller size), hatch their young." P. Fearn, Ross Statist. Acc., iv. 289.

To SPELD, v. a. To spread out, to expand.

And as he blent besyde hym on the bent,
He saw speldit a wondir wofull wicht,
Nailit full fast, and Theseus he bicht.
Henryson's Traitie of Orpheus Kyng, Edit. 1508.

"Scot.—they say, He spelded himself on the ice ; and, a spelded herring." Rudd.

Germ. spell-en, spalt-en, to cleave, to divide ; from Su.-G. spial-a, id. Gael. spealt-a, to split.

To SPELDER, v. a. 1. To split, to spread open ; as, to spelder a fish, to open it up for being dried.

2. To toss the legs awkwardly in running.

3. To rack the limbs in striding, S.

[SPELDER, s.] A fall backwards, as on ice, in which the body is spread out, Clydes.]

SPELDING, SPELDIN, SPELDEN, SPELDRIN, s.
A split haddock, or other small fish, dried in the sun, S.

[SPELING, s. V. under SPELL.]

To SPELK, v. a. To splint, to support by splinters, S.

"Ho is content ye lay broken arms and legs on his knee, that he may spelk them." Rutherford's Lett., P. i. ep. 15.

"Many broken legs since Adam's days hath he spelked." Ibid. ep. 103.

A.-S. spelc-ean, Teut. spalck-en, Su.-G. spialck-a, to apply splints to broken limbs ; A.-S. spelc, Teut. spalcke, a splint used for this purpose. A. Bor. spelks, small sticks to fix on thatch with ; also, splinters.

SPELK, s. A splint of wood applied to a fracture ; also, a splinter of iron, S.

Ray gives Spelk as a Yorks. word, signifying, "a wooden splinter tied on to keep a broken bone from bending or unsettling again." Lett., p. 338.

"Spelks, sharp—splinters of iron, starting off from the mass it belongs to ;" Gall. Encycl.

SPELKED, part. adj. A term applied to ragged wood, ibid.

SPELL, SPELLE, s. Speech, narrative, history.

The geaunt gerd that spelle,
For thi him was full wa.

Sir Tristrem, p. 162.

Wyntoun, i. 13. 79.

[A.-S. spell], a speech, a discourse ; a history ; hence, [godspell], the gospel.

To SPELL, v. a. and n. 1. To tell, inform, narrate, discourse, instruct, S.

If thou wil spell, or talys telle,

Thomas, thu shal never make lye :

Wher so ever thou goo, to frith, or felle,

I pray the spake never non ille of me.

True Thomas, Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 27.

It sall be done as ye deme, drede ye rycht nocht ;

I consent in this cais to your counsell,

Sen myself for your sake hiddir hes socht.

Ye sall be specialye sped, or I mair spell.

Houlate, iii. 19, MS.

V. SPEANLIE.

A.-S. spell-ian, Moes.-G. spill-an, Su.-G. Lsl. spial-a, loqui, narrare.

2. To asseverate falsely, Roxb.

Allied perhaps to Teut. spel-en, ludere, q. to amuse one's self by false representation, in order to laugh at another's credulity.

SPELLING, SPELING, s. Instruction.

These arn the graceful giftes of the Holy Goste,
That enspires iche sprete, withoute speling.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal., i. 20.

[To SPELSH, v. a. and n. 1. To dash, splash, bespatter, in or with any soft or liquid substance, Banffs.]

2. To walk through or fall into mud or water, ibid.]

[SPELSH, s. 1. A dash or splash of mud, water, &c., ibid.

2. A fall into mud, water, &c., ibid.; also the noise made by it, ibid.]

[SPENCE, s. V. SPENS.]

[SPENCIE, s. The stormy petrel, Shetl.]

To SPEND, v. n. 1. To spring; to gallop, Loth.; spang, stend, synon.

[2. To stretch out, strive or strain for, weary.]

Robene, that warld is quite away,
And quyt brocht till ane end;—
For of my pane thou maide a play,
And all in vane I spend:
As thou has done, sa sall I say,
Murne on, I think to mend.
Bann. Poems, p. 101, Robene and Makyne.

SPEND, s. A spring, a bound, an elastic motion, S.

Dan. spænd-er, to extend, to strain, to spread, to stretch out; A.-S. spann-an, intendere, extendere.

SPENDRIFE, adj. Prodigal, extravagant, Clydes.

SPENDRIFE, s. A spendthrift, ibid.

From Spend v., and Rife, abundant.

To SPENN, v. a. To button, or to lace one's clothes; as, to spenn the waistcoat, to button it, Fife.

Germ. spange, a clasp or hook, fibula. Isl. spenna, balla; also, fibula metallica. The original idea is probably found in Teut. spann-en, to stretch, as in Belg. Het touw span niet genoeg, "The cord is not stretched stiff enough;" Sewel. Su.-G. spaenn-a, constringere, fibula connectere; Ibre. A.-S. spann-en, id. The use of this term was most probably introduced before that of buttons, when hooks were employed for the same purpose; or cords, or pins, which are still used by some old or penurious people for fastening their seckets or under waistcoats.

SPENS, SPENCE, s. 1. A larder, the place where provisions are kept, S. A. Bor.

—Their herboury was tane,
Intill a spence, wher vittell was plenty,
Baith cheis and butter on lang skelfs richt hie.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 149.

Fr. despence, id. Skinner gives this as an E. word; and it is used by Chaucer in sense 1.

O.E. "Spence. Celarium. Promptuarium." Prompt. Parv.

2. The interior apartment of a country-house, although not appropriated as a larder; ben-house, synon. It bears this sense, Lanarks.

"They groped their way to the spens, or inner apartment, which was nearly of the same size as the kitchen." Cottagers of Glenburnie, p. 153.

3. The place where the family sit and eat, S. B.

"The spence, or dispensary, in which the family sit and eat, is commonly of the length of the distance between the gable-end, on the partition-wall against which the fire burns, and the first couple, at which commences the partition called the hallan, which divides the fire-place from the door." Gl. Jamieson's Popul. Ball. vo. Spire.

SPENS, SPENSAR, SPENSERE, s. The steward, the clerk of a kitchen.

The spens came on them with keis in his hand.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 150.

The spensar had nae laisar lang to byde.

Ibid., st. 21.

Bot prewaly owt of the thrang

Wyth slycht he gat; and the Spensere

A lafe hym gawe til hys supere.

Wyntoun, vi. 18. 141.

Abbrev. from Fr. despensier.

SPENSE-DOOR, s. The door between the kitchen and the spence, or apartment which enters from the kitchen, S. O.

SPENTACLES, SPENCTACLES, s. pl. The vulgar name of Spectacles, S.

It occurs in the following passage, though with an unnatural orthography—

'Tis said the court of Antiquarians
Has split on some great point o' variance,
For yin has got, in gouden box,
The spenctacles of auld John Knox, &c.

Tannahill's Poems.

I got my staff, put on my bonnet braid;—

A saxpence too, to let me in bedeen,

And thir auld spenctacles to help my een.

A. Wilson's Poems, 1816, p. 39.

[SPEOCHAN, SPEUCHAN, s. A tobacco-pouch, Clydes., Shetl. Gael. spleuchan, id.]

[SPEOLK, s. A splint. Shetl. V. SPELK.]

To SPERE, SPEIR, SPYRE, v. a. and n. 1. To trace or search out, applied to a way.

Off rapys a leddre to me mad I;
And thar with our the wall slaid I.
A strait roid, that I spereit had,
In till the crage, syne down I went.

Barbour, x. 559, MS.

Sometimes the prep. to is joined.

How now, Panthus, quhat thything do ye bring?

In quhat estate is sanctuarie, and haly geir?

To quhilk vthir fortres sall we spere?

Long. Virgil, 49, 55.

Quam prendimus arcem? Virg.

This is very nearly allied to the original sense of the v. A.-S. spyrian, "investigare, — explorare; to search out by the track or trace; Lanc. to spyre," Somner.

In this sense spire is used by R. Brunne, p. 112.

In Huntingtounschire the kyng in that forest

A moneth lay, to spire for wod & wilde beste.

2. To investigate, to make diligent inquiry, to use all means of discovery.

And quhen he hard sa blaw and cry,

He had wondir quhat it mycht be;

And on sic maner spyryt he,

That knew that it wes the king.

Barbour, iii. 436.

In Edit. 1620, spyed. But spyryt is the reading of MS.

"To try, search, and speir out all excommunicates, practisand and uthers Papists quhatsumever within oare boundis and schyre; quhair we keep residence." Band of Maintenance, Collect. of Confessions, ii. 111.

Spire is also used in this sense by R. Brunne, p. 327.

He spired as he gede, who did sulik trespas,
Brak his pes with dede, till he la Scotland was.

It is used by Chaucer also in the same sense, in Sir Thopas, v. 13733, Ury's Edit.

3. To ask, to inquire, S.

My fader exhortis vs to turn again our fludis
To Delos, and Appollois ansuere spere.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 19.

Abp. Hamiltoun uses this word, in a passage in which he finds an easy way of avoiding the force of a pretty strong objection to the invocation of departed saints.

"And quhairto will thou, O christin man, be as curious, as to speir gif the sanctis of heuin kennis our prayars or na? Put away that vaine curiositie, & beleif as the haly catholyk kirk of God beleiffis, quhilk, as S. Paule sais, is the house of God, the fundament and pillar of veritie." Catechisme, Fol. 197. b.

Speir at is commonly used in this sense, S.

Of this progeny gyf yhe will mare,
Yhe spere at othir forthinure.

Wyntown, viii. 7. 96.

It is also used actively.

"Mony ane spears the gate they ken fu' well;" Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 25.

[A piper met her gaun to Fife,
And speir'd her what they ca'd her.

Song, Maggie Lauder.]

A-S. spyr-ian also signifies to inquire; Isl. spyr-ia, id. It has the same form in which our v. is frequently used; Ad spyr-ia han ad, Mark, ix. 32. To speir at him. Dict. Run. Jon. spurrull, avidus quaerendi.

We also say to speir after, S. to inquire for; A-S. spyr-ia after; A. Bor. to sparre, speir, or spurre.

Spyrre aftry occurs in a poem viewed by Sibb. as of Scottish, "or at least of North country, extraction."

And yf he spyrre aftry me,
Say, thou sawe me wyth non eye.

Chron. S. P., i. 147.

To spier for, is used in the same sense, especially as denoting an inquiry concerning one's welfare.

When ye gae hame to my sister,
She'll spier for her brother John:—
Ye'll say, ye left him in Kirland fair,
The green grass growin aboon.

Jameson's Popular Ball., i. 62.

I spier'd for my cousin, fu' couthy and sweet,
Gin she had recover'd her hearin.

Burns, iv. 250.

V. SPURE.

4. To scrutinize any article; as to investigate any legal deed, by applying it in the way of comparison with matters of fact libelled.

"Beccaus thair is mony diuersis statutis, quhilkis hes in the end of thame the pane of dittay, and hes nocht bene in tyme bigane cleirly speirit, at the inditmentis taking as they could haue bene,—that the clerk of the Justiciary tak furth of the kingis statutis all thay statutis that hes pane of dittay in the end, and mak the samin be inquiryit at the dittay taking upoun euerie punct." Acts Ja. IV., 1493, Edit. 1814, p. 234.

Inquiryit is evidently used as explaining the sense of speirit.

5. To speir the price o' a young woman, to ask her in marriage, S.

"My word, but ye're weel aff to be married in your teens. I was past thirty before man speir't my price." The Entail, ii. 268.

This low phrase evidently contains an allusion to pricing at a fair or market.

6. To Speir about, to make inquiry concerning; often as indicating interest, anxiety, or affection, S.

Even Irish Teague, ayont Belfast,

Wadna care to speir about her;

And swears, till he sall breathe his last,

He'll never happy be without her.

Lizzy Liberty, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 159.

"Speryn or askyn after a thyng.—Sciastor. Per-cunctor. Inquiro." Prompt. Parv.

Palsgrave mentions this word. "I spere, I aske. Je demande. This terme is—far northerne, and nat vayd in commyn speche." B. iii. F. 368, b.

Ray expl. A. Bor. to sparre, speir or spurre, "to ask, enquire; cry at the market." Coll., p. 67.

SPEERE, SPEER, SPEIR, s. 1. Inquiry, Ayrs.

—"There was a great assemblage of friends, and a wonderful speer and talk about what we had all seen that day at the coronation." The Steam-Boat, p. 257.

[2. Applied to a person who is continually asking questions, Clydes.]

3. A small hole in the wall of a house. V. SPEERE and SPIRE, s.

SPEIRINGS, SPEIRINS, SPERINS, SPEERINGS, s. pl. 1. Inquiry, interrogation, investigation; used with the addition of different prepositions, as after, at, and of, S.

"But ony other father, but his honour himsel, wad have had speirings made after the poor lad." The Pirate, ii. 266.

This word is used in a singular connexion in Loth. I'll fling a speirins at him, i.e., "I will inquire at him;" It seems, however, to include the idea, that the question is put, only passingly, either in fact, or in appearance.

2. Prying inspection of conduct, Fife.

As down the lang lone I gaed wi' my laddie,
As down by the burn whar blumes the birk tree,
Whan far frae the speirins o' mammie or daddie,
O! how couthy the words he spake unto me.

MS. Poem.

3. Intelligence, tidings, South of S.

"Here's been the puir lass, Caxon's daughter, seeking comfort, and has gotten unco little—there's been nae speerings o' Taffril's gun-brig since the last gale." Antiquary, iii. 185.

"Did Dousterswivel know any thing about the concealment of the chest of bullion?"—"He, the ill-fa'ard loon!" answered Edie; "there wad hae been little speerings c't had Dustansnival ken'd it was there—it wad hae been butter in the black dog's hause." Ibid., iii. 102.

"There is some news," said mine host of the Candlestick,—and if it please my Creator, I will forthwith obtain speerings thereof." Waverley, ii. 119.

"How do ye ken but we may can pick up some speerings of your valise, if ye will be amenable to gude counsel?" Rob Roy, i. 202.

[SPERIT, pret. Enquired, Barbour, iv. 467; spirit at, asked of, v. 39; as part. pa. in x.

559, meaning found out, prob. a var. read, for spyt.]

SPERYNG, s. Information in consequence of inquiry.

Tharfor he thoct to wyrk with slycht;
And lay still in the castell than,
Till he got speryng that a man
Off Carrik, that wes sley and wycht,—
Wes to the King Robert maist priue.

Barbour, v. 490.

Teut. speuringhe, indagatio, investigatio.

SPERE, SPEIR, s. 1. A sphere; [space, region, circle.]

—Jupiter from his hie spere adoun
Blent on the saleryfe seys, and erth tharby.

Lyndsay, The Dreme, l. 386.

According to the system accepted in Lyndsay's day, the stellar world was divided into—I. The Primum Mobile, or first motion. II. The Cristalline Heaven, in which were placed the fixed stars. III. The twelve signs of the Zodiac. IV. The spheres or circles of the planets in the following order, viz., Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sol, Venus, Mercury, and lastly the Moon, which was said to occupy the centre of universal Nature. V. Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry.]

Bellend. also speaks of "the speir of the moon," Descr. Alb., c. 1.

L. B. spaer-a, Lat. sphaer-a.

[SPERE-SILUER, s. A military tax; called also, the tax of spears. Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 312, 324, Dickson.]

Sparth, securis, Prompt. Securi, i. Sparthe, in manu quasi pro baculo bajulant, qua sibi confidentes preoccupant. Otterbourne Chron. Angl., p. 16.

Brompton says, that the Norwegians carried the use of that kind of axe, which in E. is called sparth, into Ireland. Ap. Du Cange.

O. E. "Sparthe. Bipennis." Prompt. Parv.

[SPERYT, pret. Sparred up, fastened, Barbour, iv. 14. V. SPAR.]

SPES, s. Species; synonym. with Kynd.

"Our souerane lord—declaris all sic factis and deidis—to be ane express spes and kynd of dilapidatioun." Acts Ja. VI., 1604, Edit. 1814, p. 324. V. SPACE.

SPETIT, part. pa. "Pierced, as with a spitt," Rudd.

Syne ane Halys vnto the corpis dede
In company he eiket in that stede,
And Phiegeas down brittynnys in the feikl,
Spetit throw out the body and the scheikl.

Doug. Virgil, 305, 39.

Su.-G. spets, any thing sharp-pointed; whence spits, a spear, a lance. Thus spetit properly signifies pierced, with a sharp instrument, without restriction to one of any particular description. Teut. spet-en, fodicare.

SPEUG, s. 1. A tall meagre person, Clydes.; synonym. Spaig.

2. A sparrow, ibid.

Su.-G. spok, spoeke, Germ. spuk, Belg. spook, a spectre. This has probably been formed, (according to the Goth. mode, by prefixing s) from isl. puke, daemon. V. PUCK HARY.

SPEUGLE, s. An object that is extremely slender; a diminutive from the preceding, ibid.

This corresponds with Fris. spoochael, and Sw. spoekelse, id.

SPEWEN, s. Spavin.

This is certainly the meaning of the term in the following verse:—

—Bock-blood, and Benshaw, spewen in the spald.
Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 13.

i.e., Spavin in the shoulder. V. CLEIKS.

[SPIAE, s. Mockery, derision, ridicule, Shetl.]

[SPIALL, s. A tall, slender person, ibid.]

* SPICE, s. 1. This term is appropriated to pepper, S.

The yungest sister to her butrie hyed,
And brocht furth nuts and peis instead of spyce.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 146.

Here, however, it may denote spiceries in general. —"It is now perceived, by the leaves and sheets of that book [the Scots Common-Prayer Book] which are given out athort the shops of Edinburgh, to cover spice and tobacco, one edition at least was destroyed." Baillie's Lett., i. 14.

2. Metaph. applied to pride, S. V. SPEICE.

3. A blow, a thwack, Aberd.

To SPICE, v. a. To beat, to thwack, ibid.

Most probably a figurative use of the E. v., in the same manner in which to Pepper is used.

SPICE-BOX, SPICE-BUST, s. A pepper-box, S.

SPICY, adj. Proud; testy, S.; [neat, tidy, Clydes., Banffs.]

"It wes allegit—at [that] the dosane of siluer sponis, siluer salt-fat & spice bust wer the Abbot of Melross, & laid in wed to the said vmquhile Alex'. be the said abbot for the tyme." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1489, p. 131. V. BUIST.

[SPIEKER, s. A large nail, Shetl. Norse, spikar, id.]

[SPIK, s. Whale's blubber, fat of animals, ibid.]

[SPILE-TREE, s. A small pole on which fishermen hang their lines when cleaning the hooks. The supports are called shears, Banffs.]

SPILGIE, adj. Long and slender, Ang. Also used as a s., a tall meagre person; a lang spilgie. Long limbs are called spilgies.

Allied perhaps to Teut. spil, a spindle, as nearly of the same sense with spindle-shanked; spill en, attenuate; or Su.-G. spial-a, spialk-a, to divide, from spiaell, lamina; q. something which, from its meagreness, seems to be only the half of what it ought to be.

To SPILK, v. a. To shell pease, to take green pease out of the pod, Aberd., Moray.

In Moray at least, Pilk is used as synon. with Spilk.

SPIPKINS, s. pl. Split pease, ibid.

Gael. spealg-am, to split, spealgach, splinters.

[To SPILK, v. a. To beat sharply, Banffs.; synon. spank.]

[SPILK, s. A sharp blow, a slap, ibid.

Allied to E. spill, in the sense to fret or gall.]

[SPILT, adj. Grossly fat, bloated, impure, Shetl.]

SPINK, s. 1. The Maiden pink, S. Dianthus deltoides, Linn.

2. Often used to denote pinks in general, S.

Countless spinks an' daisies springin,
Gaily deckt ilk vale an' hill.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 99.

SPINKIE, s. A dram, a glass of ardent spirits, Fife.

SPINKIE, adj. Slender, and at the same time active, Fife.

Su.-G. spinkog, id. gracilis; Ibra. Some derive the word from spinde, a spider.

[SPINNEL, SPINLE, SPYNLE, s. Spindle; metaph. applied to any thing very slender, or tall and thin, S.]

To SPINLE, v. n. To shoot out. "Grain is said to be spinning, when it is shooting;" Gall. Encycl.

This v. may be a derivative from Teut. spen-en, defflorescere, floribus amissis fructus formam primam producere. Dicitur de arboribus, fruticibus, &c. Fr. espen-ir, espan-ir, aperire florem; Kilian. The root is probably Lat. expand-ere, to spread out. V. SPINLY.

SPINLE, SPINLY, adj. Tall and slender, S.

"Where it is firm it produces good hay; but where it is not so, but continues as quagmire, it is all fog at top, with a short spinly thin grass." Maxwell's Sel. Trans., p. 80. V. SPINLE, v.

Perhaps q. Spindly, from E. Spindle.

SPINNIN-JENNY, SPIN-MARY, s. The long-legged fly which is said to be produced from the grub, Fife. In other places it is called Spinnin Maggie.

Perhaps it is named from its resembling, in the length of its legs, the garden spider, in E. and S. called Spinner.

SPINTIE, adj. Lean, thin, lank, Loth.

This seems originally the same with the preceding.

[SPIOLK, s. A splint, Shetl. V. SPELK.]

[To SPIOLK, v. a. To bind with splints, ibid.]

[SPIOLKIN, s. A piltack roasted with the liver inside of it, ibid.]

* SPIRE, s. 1. A small tapering tree, commonly of the fir kind, of a size fit for paling, Moray.

Norw. spire, a long small tree, Hallager. E. spire is used to denote "any thing growing up taper." It is not improbable that E. spire is originally the same with our spire; as Su.-G. spira denotes a long but thin piece of wood; and the word of the same form in Isl. is rendered, tigillum, ramale.

2. The lower part of a couple or rafter, Roxb.

3. "The spire in a cottage, is properly the stem or leg of an earth-fast couple, reaching from the floor to the top of the wall, partly inserted in, and partly standing out of, the wall." Gl. Jamieson's Popular Ball.

4. A wall between the fire and the door, with a seat on it, S. B.; hallan, synon.

Lancash. "speer, a shelter in a house made between the door and fire, to keep the wind off." T. Bobbins. O.E. "Spere or skue. Ventifuga." Prompt. Parv.

I've no seek near the fire;
Let me but rest my weary banes,
Behind backs at the spire.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 142.

"From the circumstance of the partition beginning at the couple-leg, or spire, the name has been transferr'd from the wooden post—that supports the pillar, and commences the partition, to the partition itself." Gl. Popular Ball., ubi sup.

This is also called the spire wa'. This word in Chesh. signifies, the chimney-post, Ray. C. B. yypyr, id. Chaucer uses spire for a stake.

A different etymon has been given, from Spere, to inquire. V. SPERE, s.

SPIRIE, adj. Slender, slim, Dumf.; synon. Spirley, q.v.

SPIRE, s. Spray, Sea-spire, the spray of the sea, Renfr.

Allied perhaps to Su.-G. spyor, vomitus, q. what the sea casts up, from spy, vomere.

To SPIRE, v. a. To wither, or cause to fade.

Thus heat, or a strong wind, is said to spire the grass, Loth. Hence, SPIREWIND, SPEARWIND, SPELLWIND, s.

Defined, "a violent gust of passion, a gust of rage," Fife.

SPIRY, adj. Warm, parching.

It is said to be a spiry day, when the drought is very strong, Loth.

SPIRITY, adj. Lively, full of life, spirited, S.

"He was of a spirity disposition, and both cydent and eager in whatsoever he undertook." R. Gilhaize, ii. 102.

To SPIRL, v. n. To run about in a light lively way, Ettr. For.

O. Fr. esport-er signifies to acknowledge, as a vassal the services one owes to a superior. This generally included a good deal of "running about," but often without lightness of heart. Allied perhaps to Spirell, adj.

SPIRLIE, SPIRLEY, adj. Slender, slim, (gracilis), S.; Spirie synon.

Tir'd out with many turnings, to the flood
He lays his redden'd side, and gaspin' dies.
Syne round him flock, in troops, the spirley race,
And minnows frisk, now that their foe is dead,
And caper for the kingdom of the pool.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 32.

Teut. spier is sura, the calf of the leg. But it may be q. spir-lik, from Isl. spir, a lath, or Dan. spire, a sprout or slip, "resembling a lath or slip." But see SPIRLE.

SPIRLIE, s. A slender person; often, "a lang spirlie," S.

SPIRLIE-LEGGIT, adj. Having thin legs, Roxb.

SPIRLING, s. 1. A smelt. V. SPARLING.
Roquefort mentions O. Fr. sparallon, sorte de poisson de mer.

2. Expl. as signifying a small burn-trout, Gall. Encycl.

SPIRLING, s. Contention, a broil, Perth. allied perhaps to Germ. sperr-en, to oppose, to resist.

SPIRRAN, s. Expl. "an old female of the nature of a spider;" Gall. Encycl.

Gael. spairm-am, to wrestle; q. of a contentious humour?

To SPIT, v. n. 1. To rain slightly, and not closely, S.

"I think its spitting already."—"A common expression in Scotland to signify slight rain." Marriage, i. 71. N.

[2. To be extremely angry with a person; as, "He was just spittin like a will-cat," Clydes.]

[SPIT, s. 1. A slight shower, S.

2. An angry disputation, Clydes.

3. A person of small stature and hot temper; spitten is also used, Banffs.]

SPITHER, s. Spume, foam, S.

Let poor folk write to ane anither,
The way they learn'd it frae their nither,
Or some auld aunt's loquacious swither,— Wha valu'd not your college spither
A rignarie.

Ruickbie's Way-side Cottager, p. 189.

Isl. spiatr, insolens progressus; Dan. spotte-ord, mocking language.

SPITTER, s. 1. A very slight shower; whence the imp. v. It's spitterin, i.e., a few drops of rain are falling, S. from spit, spuere.

2. In pl. snow in small particles, which are forcibly driven by the wind, S. .

Now harvest done, the painfu' plough
Maun thro' the yird its task renew,
While ploughmen swains, a harly crew,
Ne'er stand aghast,
Tho' winter snell the spitters strew
In angry blast.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 33.

The snell frost-win' made nebs an' een
To rin right sair;
An' snaw in spitters aft was dreen *
Amang the air.

T. Scott's Poems, p. 323.

* Dreen, driven.

SPITTERY, adj. Denoting what spurts or flies out irregularly without connexion of parts, S. A.

The blately rain, or chilling spitt'ry snaws
Are wafted on the gelid angry breeze.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 25.

It is applied also to flame, expressive of the spurring action of the heat, according to the nature of the fuel, ibid.

Yet patient still, I'll brook auld age,
And do the best I dow,
To raise your ingle's friendly rage,
And cheer the spitterie low.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 146.

* To SPIT. [1. To spit at a bargain, to confirm it.]

It is a common practice among children, when a bargain has been made, for each party to spit on the ground. This is accounted a very solemn confirmation of the agreement.

The form is perhaps varied in other parts of the country. The following passage alludes to a similar mode of ratifying a pecuniary bargain, by spitting on the piece of money given as an arles or earnest-penny.

"When the friar had talked some time with that man, he took out a small piece of money, and spit upon it, and then gave it to the skipper, by which Ralph Hanslap guessed they had made a bargain; the delivery of the money, and the ceremony with which it was accompanied, indicating that it was the cement of a compact, and a token of the friar's hope and ejaculation that it might prove prosperous to them both." Rothelan, i. 92.

Although Pliny does not appear to have been acquainted with this use of saliva, he was no stranger to its virtue in giving efficacy to a medicine.

"To fortifie the operation of any medicines," he says, "the manner is to pronounce withall a charm or exorcisme three times over, and to spit upon the ground as often; and so we doubt not but it will doe the cure and not faile." Nat. Hist., B. xxviii. c. 4.

In some parts of S. when a bargain has been made, each of the parties spits upon his hand, saying, that this is "for luck."

Brand has given an account of a similar custom.

"The boys in the north of E. have a custom amongst themselves, of spitting their faith, (or as they call it in the northern dialect 'their saul,' i.e., soul,) when required to make asseverations in matters which they think of consequence. In combinations of the colliers, &c., about Newcastle upon Tyne, for the purpose of raising their wages, they are said to spit upon a stone together by way of cementing their confederacy. Hence the popular saying, when persons are of the same party, or agree in sentiments, that 'they spit upon the same stone.' Fish-women generally spit upon their hansom, i.e., the first money they take, for good luck. Grose mentions this as a common practice among the lower class of hucksters, pedlars," &c. Pop. Antiq., ii. 571.

It was an ancient and generally received idea among the heathen, that spittle was a specific against every species of fascination. Hence the language of Theocritus—

Thrice on my breast I spit to guard me safe
From fascinating charms. —

Idyll, xx. v. 11.

It was probably in deference to this deeply-rooted superstition, that the church of Rome introduced the use of spittle in baptism. This has indeed been expressly asserted. "This custom of nurses lustrating the children by spittle, was one of the ceremonies used on the Dies Nominalis, the day the child was named: so that there can be no doubt of the Papists deriving this custom from the heathen nurses and grand-mothers." Seward, Conform. between Popery and Paganism, p. 54, Brand, ii. 570.

[2. To spit on one's buttons, to proclaim him a coward and poltroon.]

Among boys, in the west of Scotland, he who has given another what is called the Coucher's blow, follows it up by spitting in his own hand, and then rubbing his spittle on the buttons of his antagonist's coat. This is understood as a complete placarding of him for a coward and poltroon.

The act of "spitting in the face" of another, or as some render the expression, "on the ground before him," was in a very early period, meant to intimate the greatest contempt imaginable, Deut. xxv. 9. Why this act of contumely was transferred to the buttons, is not easy to say. Shall we suppose that it was viewed as equivalent to disgracing one's armorial bearings; as the crest might be engraved on the buttons of those who had a right to bear arms?

[3. To spit and gie ouer, to own defeat.

"Man, jist spit and gie ouer," is a vulgar mode of expressing that all one's efforts to accomplish an object will prove inadequate.]

"If the reader—feels he has enough of the subject, he has nothing to do but shut the book, and (to use a very expressive juvenile term) spit and gie ouer." Blackw. Mag., Aug., 1821, p. 25.

Perhaps the following verse conveys the same idea—

Spit in your hand, and to your other proofes.

The Troublesome Raigne of King John.

SPITTEN, SPITTIN, s. [1. A spittle, West of S.]

2. A puny mischievous creature, Aberd.

SPITAILL, Barbour, ii. 420. Leg. pitall, as in MS. V. PETTAIL.

SPITTIE, s. A designation for a horse, Clydes.

L.B. spad-a, spad-o, equus castratus; spad-are, castrare. The root may be traced in C.B. dispaht-u, to castrate, (dis being the privative prefix), Ir. Gael. spoth-am, id., spat, an eunuch. Hence spad-an, castrare, Leg. Salic. Tit. 41. V. SPAVE, v.

SPITTINGS, s. pl. Spittle, S. B. Dan. spitten, a spitting.

To SPLAE, SPLAY, v. a. After two pieces of cloth have been run up in a seam, to sew down the edges somewhat in the form of a hem, S.

"I declare," said she to her cronic, Matty Marshall, "if I'm no driven doited with back-stitching, splaying, fause hems, and cross gores." Petticoat Tales, i. 291.

SPLAE, SPLAY, s. The hem thus made, S.

SPLAE-SEAM, DUTCH-SPLAY, s. What in E. is called a hem-seam, one side only being sewed down, S.

Prob., corr. from Fr. esploy-er, to spread out; or espaul-er, to support, to strengthen, to form a buttress; as the operation is meant, not merely for ornament, but for strengthening what is sewed.

To SPLAIRGE, v. a. 1. To bespatter, to bedaub, Fife, Ettr. For., Clydes.; the same with Spairge; also to besprinkle, Clydes.

SPLASH-FLUKE, s. The plaice, a fish, Pleuronectes Platessa, Linn., Banffs. This seems to be merely a corr. of the common name.

To SPLATCH, v. a. To bedaub, to splash, S. corr. from the E. word, or from Teut. plets-en, manu quater.

SPLATCH, s. 1. A splatch o' dirt, a clot of mud thrown up in walking or otherwise, S.

Splatchin is used as well as splatch, in this sense, Aberd.

2. Any thing so broad or full as to exhibit an awkward or clumsy appearance; as, "What a great splatch of a seal there's on that letter!"

To SPLATTER, v. n. To make a noise among water, S.; [to walk or run noisily, Banffs.]

[SPLATTER, s. The act of making such a noise; also, the noise so made, S. Used also as an adv.]

SPLATTER-DASH, s. An uproar, a splutter, Ettr. For.

SPLAY, s. 1. A squabble; as, "There was a great splay in the fair;" Roxb. Gael. spleadh, exploit.

[2. A splay-up, a great display of any kind, Banffs.]

SPLAY, SPLAE, s. A stroke; as, "She hat [did hit] him a splae o'er the fingers for his behaviour," Roxb.

Su.-G. plagy-a, percutere, Lat. plaga, ictus.

To SPLAY, v. a. To flay; as, "He has splayed the skin off his leg," Selkirk.

Perhaps from Isl. flaa, Su.-G. flaga, whence the E. term.

SPLECHRIE, s. Furniture of any kind; but most generally used to denote the clothes and furniture provided by a woman, in her single state, or brought by her to the house of her husband, when married, S.

It is also used for the executory of a defunct person, or the movable goods in his house left by him to his heirs, S.

This is perhaps merely a corr. of Lat. supellex, or supellectilis, the terms used by civilians to denote all the household-goods which are daily used by a family. V. Alexand. ab Alexand. Genial. Dies, Lib. i. c. 19.

To SPLEET, v. a. and n. To split. This is the general pronunciation in [Banffs., Orkn., and Shetl. Spleeter, one who splits fish.]

"At all times it is highly dangerous, for any not experienced in these seas, to pass through between the isles, tho' with small boats, because of the many blind rocks lying there, upon which sometimes the inhabitants do spleet, what through some mistake, inadvertency, darkness of the night, or otherwise." Brand's Orkney, p. 25.

SPLENDIS, s. pl. Armour for the legs. "Ane pair of splendis, sellat, gorget," &c. Aberd. Reg., V. 16. V. SPLETTIS.

SPLENDRIS, s. pl. Splinters.

Thair speris in splendis spreit,
On scheldis schonkit and schent.

Gawan and Gal., ii. 74.

Speris fall sone all into splendrys sprang.

Wallace, ix. 918, MS.

Belg. splinters, Dan. splinde, Su.-G. splinta, id. splint-a, Dan. splint-er, to splinter; from Isl. splít-a, to tear.

To SPLENNER, v. n. To stride, Gall.; softened perhaps from Teut. splinter-en, secare in assulas; or from the same origin with Splendis.

SPLENTS, SPLENTIS, s. pl. [1. Splints, armour or plate for arms or legs.] Leg-splents, a sort of inferior greaves, or armour for the legs; so called from their being applied as splints.

"—Vthers simpillar of x pund of rent, or fyftie pundis in gudis, haue hat. gorget,—breist plate, pans, and leg splentis at the leist, or gif him lykis better." Acts Ja. I., 1429, c. 134, Edit. 1566.

These were in like manner used for the arms.

"A defence for the arms, called splints, constituted part of the suit denominated an alnaine ryvett."

VOL. IV.

Grose's Milit. Antiq., ii. 252, 253. Expt. "harness or armour for the arms;" Phillips's New World of Words.

2. As applied to a gown, loose or hanging sleeves, or loose cloth used instead of sleeves, sometimes called tags.

"Ane uthir schapin unmaid lang taillit gowne of reid armosie taffetie, with tua splentis wantand bodices and slevis." Inventories, A. 1578, p. 222.

SPLEUCHAN, SPEOCHAN, s. "Gael. a tobacco-pouch;" Gl. Sibb. S.; also, a ludicrous name for a fob.

"But I was saying there's some siller in this spleuchan that's like the Captain's ain, for we've aye counted it such, baith Ailie and me." Guy Mannering, iii. 223.

Ilk chiel screw'd up his dogskin spleuchan,
An' aff did rin.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 36.

"Below my bed—you will find the pouch of the late Lord Charles, this present man's uncle, which I made into a spleuchan to hold tobacco, and there you will get ten gold pieces, besides crowns and Saxon shillings." Saxon and Gael, ii. 2.

"He hastened, not without a curse upon the intricacies of a Saxon breeches pocket, or spleuchan, as he called it, to deposit the treasure in his fob." Waverley, ii. 105.

[To SPLEUT, v. n. 1. To gush, dash, or fall suddenly or intermittently, or with a spluttering noise, Banffs., Clydes.

2. To fall flat into any liquid; also, to walk in a plashing manner, ibid.]

[SPLEUT, s. 1. A gush, dash, or fall of any liquid; the liquid so shed; also the noise made by it, ibid.

2. The act of shedding any liquid in a sudden or careless manner, ibid.

3. Weak, watery drink of any kind, ibid.]

[SPLEUTER, s. and v. Same with E. splutter, ibid.]

[SPLIET, SPLINDER. Spliet-new, splinder-new, bran-new, never used, Shetl.]

To SPLINDER, SPLINNER, v. n. To be shivered, to splinter, S.B.; [hence, splinner, a fragment.]

—Thrawn trees do always splinder,
Beat with a wedge of their own timber.

Meston's Poems, p. 217.

V. SPLENDRIS.

SPLINKEY, adj. Tall and lank, Ayrs.

Perhaps corrupted from Spinkie, q. v.

"His strides—were as stiff and as long as a splinky laddie's stalking on stilts." Sir A. Wythe, iii. 82.

[SPLINNER, s. Speed, force; used also as an adj., Banffs.]

Y 2

SPLIT, s. A term used by weavers, equivalent to E. Dent, and properly denoting one thread in plain linen work, S.

"What the Scotch weavers term a Split, the English term a Dent." Peddle's Weaver and Warper's Assistant, p. 152.

SPLIT-NEW, adj. A term applied to what has never been used or worn, S. span-new, spick and span, E.

"In a word, they had, as it were, a split-new system of government, to temper and establish." Account Persecution of the [Episcopalian] Church in Scotland, p. 32.

Germ. splitter-neu, id. q. as new as a splinter or chip from the block. The Germ. term, of the composition of which there can be no reasonable doubt, although not observed by the learned Ihre, affords a strong collateral confirmation of the etymon which he has given of E. span-new, and its Su.-G. synonym. sping spaangande ny, Isl. spanosa, span ny-r. He deduces them all from Su.-G. spinga, assula, segmentum ligni tenuius, from spaan, id. V. Spon. Thus split, and span, equally denote a splinter or chip.

Lye (Addit. to Jun. Etym.) traces spick to spike, a nail. Johnson adopts the idea. But it rests on the correlative idea, that span is from Germ. spann-en, to extend; both being supposed to refer to the work of a fuller, in stretching cloth on the tenter-hooks. Perhaps spick and span may be a corr. of the Su.-G. reduplication, sping spaangande.

To SPOIT, v. n. To spout, to squirt; also, to splash, Gall. [V. SPLENT.]

—Right o'er the steep he leans,
When his well-plenish'd king-hood voiding needs,
And, sploiting, strikes the stane his grany hit,
Wi' pistol screed, shot frae his gorlin doup.

Davidson's Seasons, p. 3, 4.

Perhaps from Lat. explod-ere, to drive out violently.

SPOIT, s. "A little liquid filth;" Gall. Enc.

SPLORE, s. "A frolic, a noise, a riot;" Gl. Burns; also, a quarrel ending in blows, S.

Lament him, a' ye rantin core,
Wha dearly like a random-splore,
Nae mair he'll join the merry roar.

Burns, iii. 215.

"He's a camsteary chield, and fasheous about marches, and we've had some bits of splores thegither." Guy Mannering, iii. 224.

"Quarrels ending in fisty-cuffs;" Gl. Antiquary.

Perhaps from Ital. esplor-are, to explore, q. the act of exploring, or a party engaged in searching out something for sport. It seems nearly synonym. with Ploy, q. v.

To SPLORE, v. n. To show off, to make a great show, Upp. Clydes.

SPLOY, s. A frolic, Renfr.; synonym. Ploy.

Nae mair we meet aneath the hill,—
The harmless funnie joke to tell,
Or the queer sploys,
That night's mirk blanket doth conceal
Frae ither boys.

T. Scott's Poems, p. 316.

Whatever may be viewed as the origin of Ploy, the word in this form seems to claim affinity to O. Fr. exploits, an exploit; employe, displayed.

To SPLUNG, v. a. 1. To carry off any thing clandestinely, to filch, Upp. Clydes.

This seems merely a variety of Spung, v.

[2. To stride along with a swinging, stealthy gait, Banffs.]

[SPLUNG, s. A person of mean, disagreeable disposition, ibid.]

To SPLUNT, v. n. "To court," S. A.; to court, or make love, under night. "To go a-spluntin," id., Roxb.

The lovers comin there to splunt.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 9.

SPLUNTING, s. "Running after girls under-night;" Gall. Enc.

To SPLUTE, v. n. To exaggerate in narration; synonym. to Flaw, Clydes.

O. Fr. exploit-er, to execute, to perform; q. to boast of one's exploits.

To SPO, SPOE, v. n. To foretell, Shetl.

The same with Spae, q. v. The term as used in Shetl. preserves the Su.-G. sound of spo, vaticinari.

To SPOATCH, SPOACH, SPOTCH, v. n. To poach; also, to lounge or sponge about for a meal, a glass of spirits, &c., S.

Their names were Mavis, Snap, an' Garrow,
For spoatching tricks had few their marrow.

The Dogs, A. Scott's Poems, p. 52.

Allied perhaps to Teut. spijse, cibus, epulum; or rather from E. Poach, with s prefixed.

SPOACHER, s. A poacher; also, one who sponges about for food, &c. [Synon., sorer.]

SPODLIN, s. A child learning to walk, Dumfr. V. SPEDLIN.

SPOIG, s. A paw; ludicrously for the hand.

Gael. spag, a paw; spogach, having paws, or clumsy feet and legs.

O see you not her ponny progues,—
Her twa short hose, and her twa spoigs,
And a shoulder-pelt apen, Mattam?

Herd's Coll., ii. 161.

To SPOILYIE, v. a. To plunder, to despoil.

"The barons resolving to go to Durris, and spoilie what was left, rendered the keys back to the town of Aberdeen, and upon Monday the 20th of May they rode out about the number foresaid." Spalding's Troubles, i. 153, 154. V. SPULYE.

SPON, s. Shavings of wood.

Tristrem was in toun;
In boure Ysonde was don;
Bi water he sent adoun
Light linden spon.

Sir Tristram, p. 115.

i.e., chips or shavings of the linden tree.

A.-S. spon, assula, "a chip or splinter of wood;" Somner. Teut. spaen, Germ. span, Su.-G. spaan, (pron. spon), Isl. spann, id.

[To SPONG, v. n. To stride or take long steps, Shetl. V. SPANG.]

SPONK, s. Spark of fire, &c. V. SPUNK.

SPONNYS, pl. Spoons; Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

SPONSEFU', adj. The same with Sponsible.

"Could ye no fin' anither gate tae the Ill Pairt nor harlin awa' a sponsefu' man frae his hame and haudin'?" Saint Patrick, ii. 190.

[SPONSHIES, s. pl.] The nostrils and the passage from them to the throat, Shetl.]

SPONSIBLE, adj. 1. Capable of being admitted as a surety, or of discharging an obligation, S. like E. responsible.

"Mr. Archer, his wife, and five small children, the eldest not ten years of age, were carried to Kirkcaldy prison. Next day, the provost of the town hearing of this severity, liberate the mother and the infants; yet not till caution was found, by two sponsible persons, she should present herself to the sheriff when called, under the penalty of 2000 merks." Wodrow's Hist., ii. 284.

"There will be no question of very pretty damages, —very sweet damages. I dare say the proprietors are very sponsible folk." Reg. Dalton, i. 200.

2. Respectable, becoming one's station, S.

"For the honour of the family it's but natural I should wish to keep up a sponsible appearance." Saxon and Gael, ii. 193.

Lat. spond-eo, spons-um, to undertake, to be surety, for another; whence spons-or, a surety.

SPOONGE, s. 1. A low sneaking fellow; one who employs any means, however despicable, for getting his belly filled, Roxb.; synon. Slounge.

2. A wandering dog is often called a spoonge, because he prowls about for his food, ibid.

3. This term is also applied to a person who is disposed to filch, ibid.

To SPOONGE, v. n. To go about in a sneaking or prowling way, so as to excite suspicion; as, "There he's gauin spoongin' about;" ibid.

This may be viewed as the same with the E. v. to Spunge, "to hang on others for maintenance." There can be no doubt that this is from the idea of a sponge licking up every liquid to which it is applied.

[To SPOOT, v. a. and n.] To spout, squirt, &c.; E. spout.]

[SPOOT, s.] A spout, a flow, &c.; same as E. spout; also, a squirt, a syringe; in last sense spooter is also used, West of S.]

[SPOOT, s.] Bad drink; ill-cooked liquid food, Banffs.]

SPOOTRAGH, s. Drink of any kind, Loth.

Gael. sput, a word of contempt for bad drink.

SPORDERINE, s.

"Yow shall deayre that—sufficient store of poulder, spades, showles, pick axes, &c., be sent to Cariect fergus: and that a reserve of sporderines be layed up in store." Acts Cha. I., Ed. 1814, VI. 16.

SPORNE, part. pa. V. to Spare. Spared, wanted, Moray.

Spoern, or spoernun, is used as a derivative from the cognate Isl. v. spær-a, parcere, in the sense of parcimonis.

To SPORNE, v. n. To stumble.

Off in Romans I reid,
"Airly sporne, lait speid."

Gawain and Gol., iii. 18.

Chaucer uses the term, as signifying to strike the foot against any thing—

The miller sporned at a ston,
And down he fell backward.—

Reves T., v. 4279.

A.-S. sporn-an, primarily to kick, to wince, whence E. spurn; and secondarily, to stumble at, or hit against. Su.-G. spiern-a, Isl. spirn-a, to kick. Thre gives sporre, a spur, as the root.

SPORRAN, s. The leathern pouch, or large purse worn by Highlanders in full dress before, S. Gael. sporan, sparon, id.

"I keep neither suaw nor dollars in my sporran." Rob Roy, ii. 207.

"Bring me my sporran."—The person he addressed—brought—a large leathern pouch, such as Highlanders of rank wear before them, when in full dress, made of the skin of the sea otter, richly garnished with silver ornaments and studs." Ibid. iii. 209.

SPOURLIT, part. pa. Speckled, spotted. V. SPRUTILLIT.

To SPOUSE, v. a. Expl. as signifying, "to put out one's fortune to nurse."

"Your old companion, Charlie—perished the pack, and they hae sponsed his fortune and gone to Ind'y." Sir A. Wylie, iii. 193.

SPOUSING, part. adj. Of or belonging to a bride; [espousing, bridal.]

"Cestus—cingulum sponsae nubentis, a sponsing girdle." Despaut. Gram. D. 5, b.

SPOUT, SPOOT, s. The Sheath, or Razor-fish, S.; Solen vagina, Linn.

"Solen, the sheath, or razor-fish; our fishers call them spouts." Sibb. Fife, p. 135.

"The razor, (solen, Lin. Syst.), or, as we call it, the spout-fish, is also found in sandy places." Barry's Orkney, p.

* SPOUT, s. A sort of boggy spring in ground, S.

"The land abounds with bogs and springs, or what husbandmen call spouts." P. Lunan, Forfara. Statist. Acc., i. 443.

SPOUTY, s. Springy, marshy, S.

"Where the soil was spouty, at the skirts of the hills, covered drains have been made; but in the clay land drains are all open." P. Lecropt, Perth. Stirl. Statist. Acc., xvii. 48.

"As the rebels—were coming along westwards under a spouty bank, that run along the field, one of the squadrons were posted below in order to stop them." Lord Loudon's Acc. of the Battle of Preston, Sir John Cope's Trial, p. 130.

SPOUTINESS, s. State of having many boggy springs; applied to land, S.

"This sputiness, independent [r. independently] of every other consideration, demonstrates the great extent of till in the county of Inverness." Agr. Surv. Inverness, p. 26.

SPOUTIE, adj. Vain, foppish, Clydes.

Apparently from E. sput; q. one who squirts forth his folly. Isl. sput-ra, however, signifies, insolenter progress.

SPOUTROCH, s. Weak, thin drink, Gall; a derivative from Gael. sput, "hog wash, a word of contempt for bad drink," Shaw. In Ir., sputrach signifies "bad beer," O'Reilly.

SPOUT-WHALE, s. A name given to the porpoise.

"There are likewise a great number of little whales, which swim through these isles, which they call Sput-whales or Pellacks," &c. Brand's Orkney, p. 48. The name has evidently originated from their ejecting water from their heads. V. PELLACK.

[SPOWNGE, s. A brush, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 360, Dickson.]

SPOYN, SPOYNE, s. A spoon.

His fostyr modyr lowed him our the laiff,
Did mylk to warme, his lif gif scho mycht saiff;
And with a spon gret kyndnes to him kyth.
Wallace, ii. 271, MS.

Spays erroneously, Perth Edit.

[SPRACHLE, s. and v. Sprawl. V. SPRATTLE.]

SPRACK, adj. Lively, animated, S.A.

"The lad can sometimes be as dowf as a sexagenary like myself. If your Royal Highness had seen him dreaming and dozing about the banks of Tully-Veolan like an hypochondriac person,—you would wonder where he hath so suddenly acquired all this fine sprack festivity and jocularity." Waverley, ii. 314, 315.

Isl. sprack-r, fortis, strenuus, whence sprakaleggr, levipes, light of foot; Haldorson.

Sprag is put in the mouth of a Welsh parson by Shakespeare:

"He is a better scholar than I thought he was." EVA. "He is a good sprag memory." Merry Wives of Windsor, A. iv. S. 1.

On this term Steevens observes:

"I am told that this word is still used by the common people in the neighbourhood of Bath, where it signifies ready, alert, sprightly, and is pronounced as if it was written—sprack."

A. Bor. "sprag, lively, active;" Grose.

To SPRACKLE, v. n. To clamber, S. V. SPRATTLE.

[To SPRAG, v. n. To boast, brag, swagger, Shet. Sw. sprätta, to strut.]

[SPRAGO, s. A boaster, braggart, ibid.]

SPRAICH, SPRACH, SPREICH, s. 1. A cry, a shriek; the noise made by a child, when weeping, S.B.

Before him cachand ane gret flicht or oist
Of foulis, that did haue endlang the coist,
Quhillis on thare wyngis soru, dredand his wraik,
Skrymmis here and thare with money spreich and craik.
Doug. Virgil, 417, 1.

Anone thay hard sere vocis lamentabill,
Gret walyng, quhimpering, and sprachis miserabill.
Ibid. 178, 41.

A.-S. spracc, Belg. spraeck, speech, discourse, Germ. sprech-en, Su.-G. spraak-a, to speak, to converse.

2. A collection, a multitude; the term being used obliquely, from the idea of the noise made.

A sprach of bairns, a great number of children, Aug.

To SPRACH, v. n. To cry, [scream, wail], lament, S.

[SPRAICHIN, s. Screaming, a continual shriek, Clydes., Banffs.]

To SPRACKLE, v. n. To clamber, S.

"Wad ye have naeboddy sprackle up the brae but yoursell, Geordie?" Nigel, ii. 213.

Isl. sprakt-a, membra concutere; sprikt, concussio membrorum. V. SPRATTLE.

SPRAIGHIERIE, SPREAGHERIE, SPRECHERY, s. Moveables of rather an inferior kind, such, especially, as may have been collected in the way of depredation, S.

"They lay bye quiet eneugh, saving some spreagherie in the Lowlands, whilk is their use and wont, and some cutting o' thrapples among themselves, that nae civilized body kens or cares ony thing anent." Rob Roy, ii. 290.

"I grant most of your folks left the Highlands, expedited as it were, and free from the incumbrance of baggage, but it is unspeakable the quantity of useless sprechery which they had collected on their march. I saw one fellow of yours—with a pier-glass on his back." Waverley, ii. 283.

"Spreagherie, cattle-lifting; prey-driving;" Gl. Antiq. V. SPREITH.

SPRAIN, SPRAING, SPRAYNG, s. 1. A long stripe or streak, used in relation to streaks of different colours, S.

Up has scho pullit Dictam, the herbe swete,
Of leuis rank, rypit, and wounder sare,
Wyth sproutis, spraingis, and vanys ouer al quhare.
Doug. Virgil, 424, 28.

The twynkling stremouris of the orient
Sched purpoure sprayngis with gold and asure ment.
Ibid., Prol. 399, 27.

"There was seen in Scotland, a great blazing star, representing the shape of a crab or cancer, having long spraings spreading from it." Spalding's Troubles, i. 41. In Gl. expl. "rays." But this does not exactly express the meaning.

2. Expl. as denoting a tint; "Spraings, tints, shades of colour;" Gl. Picken.

I hesitate, however, whether this be not rather an imaginary sense, suggested by the application of this term to the variegations of colour.

A.-S. spraeng-an, to sprinkle, Teut. spreng-en, id.; also, variare, variegare; Su.-G. spreng-a, conspergere, whence Ithre derives sprengd, variegatus, maculis conspersus. Aleni. kispranel, aspersus, variegatus. Hence also O.E. sprene, spreyne, conspergere! sprant, sprent, spreyned, conspersus. V. Lye, Addit. Jun. Etym. vo. Sprene. Also vo. Sprinkle, it is observed that Belg. sprekel-en signifies variegare; and Dan. sprinkled, guttatus, variegatus.

[To SPRAING, v. a. To streak, tint, Banffs.]

SPRAING'D, SPRAINGIT, part. adj. Striped, streaked, S. V. the s.

"I had nae mair claise but a spraing'd faikie." Journal from London, p. 8.

"From the said Evir Campbell, out of the lands of Bellochchyle, in Dunoon parochie,—2 pair blankets, 1 pair sheets, 2 pair spraing'd playds, 26 lib." Acct. of the Depredations committed on the Clan Campbell, p. 40.

"One of the Ministers told me, that one bird frequented his house about that time [before the late dearth] for a quarter of an year, which was of a black, white, red, and green colour: as also he saw another, all striped or spraing'd on the back, which birds were beautiful to behold." Brand's Orkney, p. 54, 55.

"A claithe of estait of claithe of gold, damaskit, spraingit with reid equalie in breadis of claithe of gold and cramosin satine, furnisshit with ruif and tail, three pandis all freneyit with threidis of gold, and reid silk." Inventories, A. 1561, p. 123.

Dan. sprengt, variegated; a secondary sense of the verb as signifying to sprinkle; sprengt colour, a mixt colour.

To SPRAINT, v. n. Expl. "to run forward," Gl. Tarras; perhaps rather, to spring forward, or move with elasticity, Buchan.

I'm blythe to see a rantin spree,
And fain wad thro' ye totter;
But I'm content to see ye spraint,
Right free o' dool an' care ay.

Tarras's Poems, p. 73.

Formed from Sprent, the old pret. or part. pa. of the v. to Spring.

SPRAITH, s. 1. Spoil, booty, Barbour, v. 118. Herd's Edit.

2. A large number, a quantity, Banffs. V. SPRAIGHERIE.]

[To SPRALLICH, v. n. To sprawl; also, to shriek; part. pr. sprallichin, Banffs. V. SPRAUCHLE.]

[SPRALLICH, s. A sprawl; a shriek; also, the act of sprawling, ibid.]

To SPRANGLE, v. n. To struggle; including the idea of making a spring to get away, Roxb.

A dimin. from Dan. spraeng-er, Isl. spreng-a, Su.-G. sprung-a, &c. salire, dirumpere.

SPRAT, SPREAT, SPRETT, SPRIT, SPROT, s. A coarse kind of reedy grass, that grows on marshy ground, S.; jointed-leaved rush.

"Juncus articulatus.—Sprett. Scot. Aust." Lightfoot, p. 1131. This name is common in S.

"That species of grass, which grows on marshy ground, commonly called sprat, is much used for fodder. It is somewhat remarkable, that the land where it grows, though not subject to be overflowed with water, bears annual cropping, without being manured or pastured, except in the latter end of the year." P. Kirkpatrick-Juxta, Dumfr. Statist. Acc., iv. 518.

"On part of it grows a coarse kind of grass called sprett, which is cut by the farmers for hay." P. New Luce, Wigtons. ibid. xiii. 583.

"The flors [were] laid with green scharets and spreats, medwarts and flowers, that no man knew whereon he yeid, but as he had been in a garden." Pitscottie, p. 146.

They are called sprotes, Ang. Shirr. writes sprit.

Perhaps from A.-S. spranta, sprote, surculus, virgultum, a twig; or rather, Isl. sproti, a reed, which occurs in the comp. term gunn-sproti, arundo bellica, Gl. Gunnlaug. S.

Isl. reirsproti, arundo, given by Verel. as synonym. with Raus.

SPRITTY, adj. Full of sprats or sprits, S.

—Spritty knowes wad raif'd and risket.

Burns, iii. 143.

To SPRATTLE, v. n. To scramble, to sprawl, S.

There ye may creep, and sprawl, and sprattle,
Wi' ither kindred, jumpin cattle.

Burns, iii. 229.

—Why soud they then attempt to sprattle,
In doggrel rhyme!

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 190.

Sprackle is used in the same sense.

Sae far I sprackled up the brae.

I dinner'd wi' a lord.

Burns, i. 138.

Sw. sprattl-a, to sprawl; Seren. Teut. sperdel-en, agitare sive motare manus pedesque, seems to have had a common origin; in Belg. sperdel-en.

SPRATTLE, s. A scramble, a struggle, a sprawl, S.

"We will suppose that any friend like yourself were in the deepest hole of the North, and making a sprattle for your life." Redgauntlet, ii. 273.

SPRAUCH, s. A sparrow, Loth. V. SPRUG.

To SPRAUCHLE, SPRAUGHLE (gutt.), v. n.

1. To climb with difficulty, Renfr. The same with Sprackle.

"Wi that I spraughled up amang the rokes wi' a the birr I had." Saint Patrick, i. 168.

2. To force one's way through underwood, or any similar obstruction, Ayrs.

3. To sprawl, S.; synonym. Spreul, Upp. Clydes.

"Sometimes when they wad spraughle away, then I stick firm and fast myself, an' the mair I fight to get out, I gang ay the deeper." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 312.

Ane bawdrons wha had kitlins under a bed,

Whan she heard Robbin's sang,

Came sprauchlin in a hurry out,

And at a Willie Wagtail did spang.

Gall. Encycl., p. 413.

Isl. sprinkl-a, membra concutere.

To SPREAD bread. To make bread and butter, S.

SPRECHERIE, s. V. SPRAIGHERIE.

[To SPRECKLE, v. a. and n. To speckle, to become speckled, S.]

[SPRECKLE, s. A speckle.]

SPRECKL'D, SPECKLY, adj. Speckled, S.

Alas! it's no thy neebor sweet,
The bonnie lark, companion meet!
Bending thee 'mang the dewy weat!
Wi' speckl'd breast.

Burns, lil. 201.

The blackbird, now, with golden bill,
Symphonious plies his wood-note sweet;
The speckly mavis, lilting shrill,
To glad the groves her strains repeat.

A. Scot's Poems, p. 135.

V. SPRECKL'D.

The speckl'd mavis greets your ear.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 92.

Su.-G. specklot, id.

SPREE, s. 1. Innocent merriment, S.

"Spree, sport, merriment, a frolic;" GL. Brocket.

"John Blower, honest man, as sailors are aye for some spree or another, wad take me ance to see ane Mrs. Siddons—I thought we should hae been crushed to death before we gat in." St. Roman, ii. 164.

Tho' age now gars me hotter,
I'm blyth to see a rantin' spree,
And fain wad thro' ye totter.

Tarras's Poems, p. 73.

2. Disorderly or riotous mirth, an uproar; [a drunken frolic], S.

"He was in no spirit to enjoy her jocosity about Bailie Pollock's spree, as he told her that he had come far, and had far to go." R. Gilhaize, i. 134.

Confusion boils—no getting out,
But as a spree
In country fairs we're knuck't about,
An' box our way.

D. Anderson's Poems, p. 118.

—A laud ay gien to ramblin';
In kicking up some worthless spree,
O' dancin', drinkin', gamblin'.

Ibid., p. 121.

Ir. and Gael. spre denotes "a spark, flash of fire; animation, spirit;" O'Reilly.

Fr. esprit, spirit, vivacity, smartness of humour.

[To SPREE, v. n. To frolic, to join in noisy or drunken mirth, Clydes.]

SPREE, adj. Trim, gaudy, S.B.; a term exactly corresponding to E. spruce. Sprey, id. Exm.

Syne hame they gang fu' hearty,
To bask themsels fu' trig an' spree;
For raggit they're and dirty.—

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 144.

Twa lads at Clanchendoly hile,
Wha I loe weel, they're baith sae spree.

Galk. Encycl., p. 411.

It may be deduced from the origin given by Seren. to E. spruce, and with more verisimilitude. Sw. spræg, formosus. Spraekt et spræg, clarus et splendens (de pennia).

Junius derives spruce from A.-S. sprytt-an, Belg. spruyt-en, germinare, pullulare, q. bene pasti ac validi, spruze and lustie young fellows. But this is a deviation from the dress, to the bodily habit of the wearer.

[To SPREIT, v. n. To scamper, to run rapidly, Shetl. Sw. spritta, to start, startle.]

SPREITH, SPRETH, SPRAITH, SPREATH, SPREICH, s. Prey, booty, plunder.

—Stude tho
Phenix and dour Vlixes, warlanis tway,
For to obserus and keip the spreith or pray.
Togildir in ane hepe was gadlerit precius gere,
Riches of Troy, and vthir jowellis sere,
Rest from all partis.

Doug. Virgil, 64, 12.

—Swne eftir thai
Held downwart in-to the town thare way,
And tuke thare spreth and presoneris.
—Of that spreth mony war richyd thare.

Wyntoun, viii. 42. 51. 57.

"A party of the Camerons had come down to carry a spreath of cattle, as it was called, from Moray." P. Abernethy, Moray, Statist. Acc., xiii. 149. N. Sprraith occurs, Barbour, v. 118, Edlit. 1629, instead of ress, in MS.

We come not hidder with drawin swerde in handis,
To spulve tempris, or richis of Libia,
Nor by the coist na spreich to drive away.

Doug. Virgil, 29, 38.

Rudd. gives spreith, as S., observing, that it is probably the same originally with E. prey, Fr. proye, Arm. preith, all from Lat. praeda, with the sibilant prefixed. Perhaps immediately from Ir. and Gael. spre, spreidh, cattle. V. SPLECHRIE.

To SPREITH, SPRETH, v. a. To take a prey, to plunder.

Thai folk ware all that mycht sprethand;
Thai made all thairis that thai fand.

Wyntoun, viii. 42. 55.

To SPREND, SPRENT, v. n. To dart forward with a spring, or sudden motion, S.

Sprent is probably the pret. and part. pa. of this verb, which seems to have been formed from a part of the A.-S. v., or from its Su.-G. form, in the pret., Sprang'd.

Dan. sprængt, or sprengt, is the part. pa. of spreng-er, to spring. V. SPRINT, v.

SPRENT, pret. 1. Did spring, leaped, started.

As quha vnwar tred on ane ouch serpent
Ligand in the bus, and for fere bakwart spreit;
Seand hir reddy to stang.

Doug. Virgil, 51, 47.

2. Did run, darted forth.

Sprent thai samyn in till a ling.

Barbour, xii. 49, MS.

And netheles fast eftir hir furth spreit
Enee, perplexit of hir sory case.

Doug. Virgil, 180, 29.

3. To rise up, to ascend.

Redolent odour vp from the rutis spreit.

Ibid., ProL. 401. 37.

A.-S. spring-an, Teut. spreng-en, to spring.

Thair speris in splendris spreit.

Gawan and Gol., ii. 24.

SPRENT, s. 1. A spring, a leap.

Bot the serpent woundit and all to schent
Ylowpit thrawis and writhis with mony ane spreit.

Doug. Virgil, 392, 7.

2. "Scot. we use the word sprent, for the spring, or elastic force of any thing;" Rudd.; also, any elastic body.

The buck spreit of a claspin knife, is that spring which rises up in the back part of the knife when it is opened, S. Hence,

3. Metaph. The back-bone is called the back-sprent, as producing the elastic motion of the body, S.

4. The clasp of iron that fastens down the lid of a chest or trunk, entering an aperture through which the lock passes, S.

"In December this year a key and sprent band were added to the Locksmith's essay." Transact. Antiq. Soc. Edin., p. 174. V. STENT, s. 2.

This is evidently the same with Su.-G. sprint, a bolt, bar, or any thing that shuts in, to prevent separation. Ibre mentions sprint as the same; and expl. it as properly denoting the nail which joins the axle of a carriage to the beam.

SPRENT, part. pa. Sprinkled.

Annas, I grant to the, sen the diceis
Of my sory husband Sycheus, but leis,
Quhare that our hous with broderis deil was sprent;
Onle this man has mouded mine entent.

Doug. Virgil, 100, 3.

Chaucer, spreint, id. from A.-S. spreng-an, Teut. spraeng-en, spargere.

A. Bor. "sprent, bespattered, splashed with dirt;" Gl. Brocket.

SPRENT, s. An opening.

"For Loaf-Bread. Take half a peck of good fresh flour, and lay it on a table, make a sprent or hole in the middle to hold the water," &c. Collection of Receipts, &c. p. 1.

It seems allied to Su.-G. spraeng-a, diffindere, pret. spraengd. V. SPRENT, pret.

SPRET, SPRETT, s. Jointed-leaved rush. V. SPRIIT.

[To SPRET-UP, v. a. To unstitch, untwist, Shetl. V. SPREIT.]

SPRETE, s. Spirit.

—Him bereft was in the place richt thare
Bayth voce and sprete of lyffe.

Doug. Virgil, 328, 6.

SPRETTIT, SPRETY, adj. Spirited, inspired, sprightly, S.

"This victorie was sa plesand to all the army of Scottis, that every man was spretit with new curage." Bellend. Cron., B. xiv., c. 10.

Ful eith it is for til assale and se,
Quhat may our sprety force in the mellé.

Doug. Virgil, 376, 23.

To SPREUL, SPREWL, v. n. To sprawl, scramble, struggle, Roxb.

Doun duschit the beist dede on the land can ly,
Spreuland and flychterand in the dede thrawis.

Doug. Virgil, 143, 51.

SPREUL, SPREWL, s. 1. A struggle, ibid.

2. One, who is not to be overcome with difficulties, who makes a hard struggle, is in Clydes said to be "an unco sprawl of a body." It also implies the idea that the person is of a diminutive size.

To SPRIKKLE, v. n. To flounce, to flounder about, Shetl.

This is nearly allied to Sprauchle; and obviously the same with Isl. spríkt-a, membra concutere; whence spríkt, concussio membrorum.

* SPRING, SPRYNG, s. 1. A quick and cheerful tune on a musical instrument, S.

—Orpheus mycht reduce agane, I gess,
From hell his spousis goist with his suet stringis,
Playand on his harp of Trace sa plesand springis.

Doug. Virgil, 167, 6.

Than playit I twenty springis perqueir.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 263.

Hence the proverb, "Auld springis gie nae price;" Ramsay's S. Prov., p. 17.

Thus denominated, either from its exhilarating influence, or because it is customary to dance to a tune of this description; Germ. spring-en, salire, saltare.

Spring is used in the same sense by Beaumont and Fletcher.

"What new songs and what geers?"—

"Enough; I'll tell ye, —

—We will meet him,

And strike him such new springis, and

Such free welcomes,

Shall make him scorn an empire."—

The Prophetess, p. 2098.

2. The music of birds.

—Frae the sprigs the sylvan quire

War lifan up their early spring;

Picken's Poems, 1783, p. 17.

SPRINGALD, SPRINGEL, s. A youth or stripling.

Seis thou yone lusty springald or yonkere,
That lenys hym apoun his hedeles spere.

Doug. Virgil, 192, 30.

"We should have a care ever to grow in this lyfe: for so long as we lue, we are either children, or at the farthest we are springels (to vse that word)." Rollock on 2 Thes., p. 6.

By this time it would seem the term was becoming obsolete. Springle, however, is still used by some old people in Angus, in the same sense; also springlin or springling, obviously a dimin. from the other.

SPRINGALL, adj. Belonging to the state of adolescence.

"At that time it was a pitie to sic sa weill a brought vp prince, till his bernhead was past, to be sa miserable corrupted in the entress of his springall age." J. Melville's Diary, Life of A. Melville, i. 263.

Chaucer, springold, Spenser, springal; from spring, germinare, q. virii germen vel sarculus; Lye Addit. Jun. Etym.

SPRINGALD, SPRYNGALD, s. 1. An ancient warlike engine, supposed to have resembled the cross-bow in its construction, used for shooting long arrows, pieces of iron, &c.

He gert engynys, and cranys, ma,
And purwayit gret fyr alsua;
Spryngaldis, and schot, on ser maneris,
That to defend castell afferis,
He purwayit in till full gret wane.

Barbour, xvii. 247.

This, in Edit. 1620, is altered to fyre-galdea.

Hence spryngald gaynyhe, the shot of a large cross-bow.

Willame of Dowglas thare wes syne

Wyth a spryngald gaynyhe the thè.

Wyntown, viii. 37, 59.

This, in Scotichron. ii. 331, is telo albalatri. Godscroft, when giving an account of the same fact, says: "He returned to the siege of Saint Johnstoun, where (as he was ever forward) he was hurt in the leg with the shot of a crossbow going to the Scalade." Hist. Dougl., p. 72.

2. Improperly used, as denoting the materials thrown from this engine.

Stans and springaldis thai cast out so fast,
And gaddys of irne, maid mony goym agast.

Wallace, viii. 776, MS.

In Edit. 1748, it is changed to, "Stones of sprink-holds."

Fr. espringalle, "an ancient engin of warre, whereout stones, pieces of iron, and great arrowes were shot at the walls of a beleagured towne, and the defenders thereof;" Cotgr. — Froisart, Vol. i., cap. 144. Et fit le chastel assieoir droit sur le ville, du costé de la mer, et le fit bien pourvoir de Pringalles, de bombarbes, d'arcs et d'autres instrumens. Ubi legendum Espringalles, ut cap. seq. et 191. Du Cange. L. B. springald-us. Charta Edw. II., Reg. An. 1325, ap. Rymer. Tom. iv., p. 140. Victualium, ingeniorum, springaldorum, et aliarum rerum nostrarum, &c. P. 142. Springaldos, balistas, arcus, sagittas, ingenia, et alias hujusmodi armaturas, pro munitione castrorum et villarum.

Springolds is used in the same sense by Chaucer, Rom. Rose, v. 4191.

The origin is uncertain. It seems to have been written, in a more early period, springardus, springarda. V. Du Cange, vo. Springarda. This learned writer, in explaining the word Muschetta, says: Ut a falconibus venaticis machinas tormentarias Falcones et Falconia appellarunt; ita et muschetas, quo nomine dicuntur sparvarii masculi, vulgo, mouchets: Germanis vero Sprintz, unde Springullen, et Espringalen, ejusmodi machinae, quibus emitti muschetas, innuit Guinevilla. Grose has observed, to the same purpose, that "the espringal was calculated for throwing large darts, called muschettes; sometimes, instead of feathers, winged with brass; these darts were also called virtons, from their whirling about in the air." Milit. Antiq., i. 332.

The idea mentioned by Du Cange, is at least highly probable; that, as some kinds of artillery were called Falcones, from the birds of prey of this name, that of Muschetta was borrowed from the Fr. designation of the Sparrow-hawk; and here perhaps we have the origin of the E. term musket, as denoting one species of fire arms. At first it denoted what was thrown from an engine; and by a common metonymy, the term may have been transferred from the effect to the cause. We have a similar change in the use of the very term under consideration: for we have seen that springalds is sometimes used to denote the materials thrown from the engine of this name.

It seems most probable, that the springald was named from its elastic force, as throwing out missile weapons with a spring; especially as Germ. spring-en, a v. formed from spring-en, saltare, is used in relation to military operations, signifying, to spring a mine, to blow up, pulvere pyrio evertere.

[SPRINGERS, s. pl. Trouts; so called from their leaping, Shetl.]

To SPRINKIL, SPRYNKIL, v. n. To move with velocity and unsteadiness, or in an undulatory way.

Al thoct scho wreil and sprynkil, bend and skip,
Euer the sarer this Erne strenis his grip.

Doug. Virgil, 392, 10.

This refers to the motions of a serpent.

For to behald it was ane glore to se,
—The siluer scallit fyschis on the grete,
Ouer thowrt clere streames sprinkilland for the hete.
Ibid., 400, 6.

Rudd. expl. sprinkilland, "gliding swiftly with a tremulous motion of their tails; Scot. Bor. call it sprartling."

Deriv. from Teut. sprengthen, salire.

SPRIT, SPRET, s. Joint-leaved rush, S.

"The ground is, for the most part, covered with sprit, of the smaller sort of which they make what they call bog hay." Essays Highl. Soc., iii. 469.

"Sprit, a tough-rooted plant, something like rushes;" Gl. Shirr. V. SPERAT, SPREAT, &c.

SPRITHY, SPRITTY, adj. Full of sprats or sprits, spritty, S.

"The poor affectionate creature went straight to his dead master; who was lying in a little green sprithy hollow, not above a musket-shot from the peat stack." Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1823, p. 319. V. SPERAT.

SPRIT-NEW, adj. Entirely new, S. span-new, E.

Perhaps corr. from Split-new, q. v.

[To SPRIT, SPRITT, v. n. To leap, to run off quickly, Shetl. V. SPREITH.]

SPRONE, SPROAN, s. Dung, Shetl. Isl. spraen-a, scaturire?

[To SPRONE, v. n. To eject liquid excrement; applied to birds, ibid.]

[SPRONINS, s. pl. The excrement of birds, ibid.]

SPROO, s. A disease affecting the mouths of very young children, Loth.

Teut. sprouwe, aphthae. The Teut. word also denotes the pip in hens.

To SPROOZLE, v. n. "To struggle; sometimes Stroozle;" Gall. Enc.

Germ. spreiss-en, niti, resistere cum nisu, Wachter; sprutzel-n, to splutter. Stroozle might seem allied to strotz-en, turgere, struss-en, efferre se, or stret-en, Su.-G. strid-a, certare.

To SPROSE, v. n. 1. To make a great shew, to have an ostentatious appearance, S.

This is evidently allied to E. spruce. V. SPREE.

2. To commend one's self ostentatiously, and at the expense of truth; also used as a reflective v. To sprose one's self, Ayrs., Fife.

3. Hence, it signifies to magnify in narration, to lie from ostentation, Fife.

SPROSE, s. 1. Ostentatious appearance, S. O.

"So without making any sprose about enticing him to Paisley,—let as many of us as can bear the cost gang intil Embro', and join the welcome in a national manner." Blackw. Mag., Sept. 1822, p. 313.

2. A bravado, a brag, ibid.

SPROSIE, adj. Ostentatious in language; much given to self-commendation, Loth.

SPROT, s. 1. A kind of grass. V. SPRATT.

2. Refuse of plants gathered for fuel, S.

The word, as thus used, agrees more closely with the northern term, mentioned under Sprat, than Sprot itself does.

[3. Bits of branches blown from trees during high winds are called sprots, S.]

4. A chip of wood, flying from the tool of a carpenter, ibid.

A.-S. sprote, a sprig or sprout; Isl. sproti, virga, baculus.

SPROTTEN, adj. Made of sprots, Aberd.

SPRUCE, s. The name given to Prussia, by our old writers.

"The first dutie discharged in the Sweden's service of our expedition by water from Pillo in Spruce vnto the coast of Pomerne [Pomerania] at Rougenvalde." Monro's Exped., P. II., p. 3.

SPRUSSE, adj. Of or belonging to Prussia.

Sprunny denotes "a male sweetheart, Gloucester." Gross.

SPRUSH, adj. Spruce, S.

He is sae nice, and ay maun be sae sprush.

That he ran hame to gi'e his claes a brush.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 162.

[SPRUSH, s. A decking, a setting in order, Clydes.]

[To SPRUSH, SPRUSH up, v. a. To deck, to set in order; part. pr. sprushin, used also as a s., ibid.]

SPRUTILL, s. A speckle; used by Spenser in the same sense.

Of flekkit sprutillis all hir bak schone.

Doug. Virgil, 138, 19.

SPRUTILLIT, SPOURLIT, part. pa. Speckled, S. sprittillit.

Bot thay about him lowpit in wympillis threw,

[SPULE-THAK, s. Shingle roofing, Accts. L. H. Treas., i. 307.]

SPULE-BANE, s. The shoulder-bone, S. V. SPALD.

[To SPULP, v. n. To collect and retail scandal, Teviot.]

SPULPER, SPULPIR, s. One who acts as a busy-body, an eavesdropper, Teviotd.

SPULPIN, adj. Habituated to this practice; as, "He's a spulpin rascal," ibid.

This term has most probably been imported from Ireland, as being the same with spalpeen, a term of contempt often put in the mouths of the natives. Ir. spailpin, a mean fellow, a rascal; also, a common labourer; O'Reilly. It is apparently from spailp, notable, also signifying pride, self-conceit.

SPULT, s. "Ane spult of leyd" [prob. a bar or cast of lead], Aberd. Reg., Cent. 16.

To SPULYE, SPULYIE, v. a. To spoil, to lay waste; to carry off a prey, S.

Bot euer in ane yit still persewis sche
The dede banis, and could assis to spulye
Of silly Troy, quhillk is to rewyne brocht.
Doug. Virgil, 154, 26.

"That Malcolme Dungalsone sall—pay—xxxij oxin & ky, &c. spulyeit & takin be the said Malcome & his complices." Act. Audit., or Dom. Conc.
Fr. spol-ir, Lat. spoliare.

SPULYE, SPULYIE, SPULYIE, s. 1. Spoil, booty, S.

And huge honour and land ye sall of this Report, and richt large spulye bere away.
Doug. Virgil, 102, 55.

2. "The taking away or intermeddling with moveable goods in the possession of another, without either the consent of that other, or the order of Law;" Ersk. Instit., B. iii., T. 7, § 17. A forensic term, S.

"In actiounis of spulyie, the defendar sould not be heard, alledgeand, be way of exceptioun, that the persewar spulyeit the samin gudis fra him befor the time of committing of the alledgit spulyie done be him aganis the persewar." A. 1542, Balfour's Pract., p. 476.

SPULYEAR, s. A depredator, spoiler.

—"Quhether gif the persoun spulyeit and hereit, hes just actioun to persew sic Scottismen spulyearis, for restorance of thair gudis agane, and satisfacioun for the dampnages done to thame, or not?" Acc. Mar. 1551, c. 13, Ed. 1566.

SPULYEMENT, s. Spoil.

"Muckle need have we to hasten—else small, small will our share of the spulyement be." Blackw. Mag., Aug., 1820, p. 508.

[To SPUND, SPUNDG, v. n. To run quickly, Shetl.]

To SPUNDER, v. n. To gallop, Orkn.

Radically the same with S. spynner, q. v. Dan. spænd-e, signifies to strain, to exert to the utmost.

SPUNE, s. A spoon, S.

"He'll either mak a spune, or spoil a horn," a S. Prov., applied to an enterprising person, to intimate that he will either have a signal measure of success, or completely ruin himself.

"Mr. Osbaldistone is a good honest gentleman; but I aye said he was ane o' them wad make a spune or spoil a horn." Rob Roy, ii. 195.

A phrase borrowed from the honourable profession of the horners or tinkers.

SPUNE-HALE, adj. In such health as to be quite able to take one's usual diet, Fife; synon. Parritch-hale, Cutty-free.

SPUNE-DRIFT, s. V. SPEEN-DRIFT.

SPUNG, s. 1. A purse; properly, one which closes with a spring, S.

In this sense Lord Hailes is inclined to understand the word as used, Bannatyne Poems, p. 160.

Ane pepper-polk maid of a pedell,
Ane spounge, ane spindill wantand ane nok.

V. Note, p. 294.

—Wickedly they bid us draw
Our sillar spungs.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 307.

2. A fob or breeches' pocket, S.

This man may beet the poet bare and clung,
That rarely has a shilling in his spung.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 353.

"In Scotland the word spung is still used for a fob." Bannatyne Poems, Note, p. 294.

This is radically a very ancient word; being evidently from Moes-G. pugg, apparently pron. like A.-S. Su.-G. pung, a purse, a pouch. Purses of old were generally worn before; as the watch-pocket is in our time.

To SPUNG, v. a. To pick one's pocket, S.

Another set of deeper dye,
Will try your purse to catch;
And, if you be not very sly,
They'll spung you o' your watch.

R. Gallowsay's Poems, p. 94.

SPUNGE, s. The putrid moisture, resembling saliva, which issues from the mouth, nostrils, eyes, ears, &c. after death, South of S.; synon. Dive, S. B.

What is in India called Mummy, an article of trade, is composed of this substance, combined with frankincense, spikenard, &c. and used as a perfume. V. Raffles' Hist. of Java.

To this Shakspeare seems to allude in a passage quoted by Dr. Johns., but not understood by him.

—This work
Was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful
Conserv'd of maidens' hearts.

Othello.

It occurs in another passage;

What a mountain of mummy I will become.

Merry Wives of Windsor.

To SPUNGE, v. n. To emit this moisture, ibid.

[SPUNGIT, adj. Mottled; as, "a spungit cow," Shetl. Goth. spang, Isl. spoung, a spangle.]

SPUNK, SPUNKE, SPONK, s. 1. A spark of fire, or small portion of ignited matter, S.

Of the false fire of purgatorie,
Is nocht left in aye spunk.

Spec. Godly Songs, p. 17.

"The coolness of the good old General, and diligence of the preachers, did shortly cast water on this spunk, beginning most untimely to smoke." Baillie's Lett., i. 210.

Sibb. derives it from Sw. spinga, segmentum ligni tenuis. But its origin is undoubtedly Teut. vonck, id. scintilla, strictura; Kilian. Germ. funck, funck, scintilla, igniculus, Wachter; from Moes.-G. fon, fire.

Ir. and Gael. spone signify tinder or touch-wood; O'Reilly; M'Donald; Shaw.

2. A very small fire is called a spunk of fire, S. Gl. Sibb.

—We'll light a spunk, and, ev'ry skin,
We'll rin them aff in fusion
Like oil, some day.

Burns, iii. 67.

I see thee shiverin, wrinklet, auld,
Cour owre a spunk that dies wi' cauld.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 18.

Funke had the same meaning in O. E. "Funke or lytell fyre. Igniculus." Prompt. Parv. A. Bor. "spunk, a spark, a small fire;" Gl. Brockel.

3. A match, a bit of wood, the ends of which are dipt in sulphur, S. Gl. Sibb. Tinder, Gl. Shirr.

The spunks tipt with brimstone he gropt for,
In order to light him a candle.
He imagin'd his fish was the fire,
But yet not a spunk could be kindle.

G. Wilson's Coll. of Songs, p. 52.

"Spunk, a word in Edinburgh which denotes a match, or any thing dipt in sulphur that takes fire: as, Any spunks will ye buy?" Johns.

This is the only sense in which it is allied to the E. term spunk, expl. "rotten wood, touch-wood;" Johns.

Teut. voncke, any thing which easily catches fire; voncke-hout, a match, q. spark-wood.

4. Life, spirit, vivacity. One is said to have a great deal of spunk, who possesses much liveliness, S., A. Bor. id.

"He shewed muckle mair spunk, too, than I thought had been in him—I thought he wad hae sent cauld iron through the vagabond." Antiquary, ii. 169.

The term is used indeed in a variety of senses, the same as those in which E. spirit occurs. It denotes activity, mettle; sometimes, laudable elevation of spirit, as opposed to meanness; also, quickness of temper, that sort of irritability which will not brook an insult, S.

5. A mere spunk, a lively creature; applied to one who has more spirit than bodily strength, or appearance of it, S.

6. A small portion, like a spark hid among ashes. Thus we say of a dying person, "He has the spunk of life, and that is all," S.

And loe, while ev'n his lifes last spunk is spent,
The temples vaile is to the bottom rent,

Morr's True Crucifixe, p. 56.

And gif this Sait of Senetours gang doun,
The spunk of justice in this region,
I wait not how this realm sall rewit be.

Maitland Poems, p. 336.

"That sworne enemy of Christ Jesus, and unto all in quhome any spunk of knowlege appeirit, had about that same tyme in prisoun divers." Knox's Hist., p. 40.

"If wee haue na other knowlege, but the knowlege quhilk we haue by nature, & be the light and spoonkes that are left in nature, our conscience will answer na farther, but to that knowlege." Bruce's Sermon on the Sacr., 1590, Sign. N. 8, a.

"As there are some spunkes of light left in nature, sa there is an conscience left in it." Ibid. N. 8, b.

"I dare not say, but all this time Peter caried a good heart towards his Lord, & a spunk of faith & a spunk of loue in the heart, albeit his faith and loue were chokol:—& this little spunk of loue in the man was smothered." Rollock on the Passion, p. 41.

7. A very slender ground or occasion.

"Be this slaughter thir two pepyll that was so lang confiderat togidder fra the tyme of Fergus the first kyng of Scottis to thir dayis ay rising vnder ane blude, amite and kyndnes, grew in maist hatrent, aganis otheris for ane spunk of small occasioun of vnkindnes, throw quhilk nane of thame aperit to ceis fra vter exterminiou of other." Bellemi. Cron. B. vi. c. 6.

Nulla, aut levi admodum occasione; Boeth.

- To SPUNK out, v. n. To be gradually brought to light, S.

"By and by it spunkit out that the king had been shot at, with a treasonable gun, that went off without powther." The Steam-boat, p. 218.

"Ye'll oblige me by keeping your finger on your mouth, for it might be detrimental if any thing were to spunk out." Sir A. Wylie, ii. 52.

This phrase is used as to any thing kept secret for a time, which at length comes to be known, as it were insensibly, by whispers or insinuations. It contains an obvious allusion to a spark, at first hid among ashes which, being fanned by the air, begins to shew itself. Teut. conck-en, scintillare.

- SPUNKIE, s. 1. A small fire, S.

But by the social cantie hearth,
The cottage spunkie bleezing forth,
Where bairnies chant wi' glee and mirth

About the fire,
I've gi'en these ora verses birth,
At your desire.

A. Scott's Poems, p. 41.

2. The name vulgarly given to Will i' the wisp, or an ignis fatuus, S., evidently from its luminous appearance.

That bards are second-sighted is nae joke,
And ken the lingo of the spiritual folk;
Fays, Spunkies, Kelpies, a', they can explain them.

Burns, iii. 53.

An' aft your moss-traversing Spunkies,
Decoy the wight that late an' drunk is.

Ibid., p. 73.

3. Metaph. an erroneous teacher, who misleads souls by false doctrine.

—"And of late, some Willies with the Wisps, or Spunkies of Wildfire, seem mostly in bogsuish myrsh ground, in loursing, foulson, unwholsom weather, viz. An unhappy woful Professor Simpson, striking at the doctrine or foundation of our christian religion, reviving old condemned errors," &c. Walker's Remark. Passages, p. 94.

4. A lively young fellow, S.

An' frae his bow, the shafts, fu' snack,
Pierc'd monie a spunkie's liver.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 148.

5. One of an irritable temper, Ayrs.

"I didna think your Lordship was sic a spunkie,—ye'll no mend your broken nest, my Lord, by dabbing at it." Sir. A. Wylie, i. 258.

SPUNKIE, adj. 1. Applied to a place supposed to be haunted, from the frequent appearance of the ignis fatuus, Renfrews.

I looked by the whinny knowe,
I looked by the firs sae green;
I looked owre the spunkie-howe,
An' ay I thought ye would ha'e been.
Tannahill's Poems, p. 161, 162.

2. Mettlesome, possessing spirit and activity, S. A. Bor. "spunky, spirited."

3. Fiery, irritable, Ayrs.

"He sometimes was seen, being of a spunky temper, grinding the teeth of vexation." Annals of the Parish, p. 342.

"The spunky nature of Mr. Hirple was certainly very disagreeable often to most of the council;—but then it was only a sort of flash." The Provost, p. 192.

—Erskine, a spunkie Norland billie.
Burns, iii. 23.

SPURIS, s. pl. Errat. for speris, spears, [Barbour, iii. 315, Jamieson's Ed.]

SPURKLE, s. A sort of spattle. "Scutching spurkle, a stick to beat flax." "Thacking spurkle, a broad-mouth'd stick for thatching with;" Gall. Enc., p. 424, 445.

Isl. sprek signifies ramentum ligni, and Su.-G. spraec-a, diffindere. But perhaps Spurkle is merely a variety of Spurtle, q. v.

To SPURL, v. n. To sprawl, Ettr. For.

This seems a transposition from the E. v., or Sw. sprall-a, apparently misprinted Srralla, Seren. vo. Sprawl.

SPURMUICK, s. A particle, an atom, Aberd.

The first syllable may be allied to Isl. spor, vestigium, q. a trace.

SPURTILL, SPURTLE, s. 1. A wooden or iron spattle, for turning bread, is called a spirtle, Ang. a bread spaad, i.e., spade, Aberd.

—Ane spurtill braid, and ane elwand.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 159.

"Flat iron for turning cakes," Lord Hailes, Note, p. 292. The epithet braul confirms this definition.

Perhaps it is used in the same sense in the following passage—

"For the priest, said he, whose dewtie and office it is to pray for the pepill, standis up one Sunday, and crys, 'Ane hes tint a spurtill; thair is a faill stoun beyond the burne; the Gudwyif of the uther syid of the gait hes tint a horne sponc; Godis malesoun and myne I give to thame that knawis of this geir, and restoiris it not.'" Knox's Hist., p. 14.

The Eng. Editor, not understanding the term, has substituted spindle, Ed. 1644, p. 17.

2. A cylindrical stick with which pottage, broth, &c. are stirred, when boiling, S. a theevil, S.B.

It's but a partridge spurtle,
My minnie sent to me.

Ritson's S. Songs, l. 234.

Apparently from A.-S. sprytle, assula, a splinter or slice of wood. This properly applies to the term in sense 1, which seems the original one. Sibb., however, refers to Teut. spatel, spatula.

SPURTLIT, part. adj. Speckled, of various colours, Roxb.; the same with Sprutillit, q. v.

SPUR-WIANG, s. The strap or thong with which a spur is fastened, Ettr. For.

"What think ye of yourself in spoiling the country of horse and arms, sir? Sir, I had not the worth of a spur-whang of ony man's, but was mounted of horse and arms of my own." Exam. Ja. Nicol, Cloud of witnesses.

SPY-ANN, s. The "game of Hide-and-Seek," Gall.

"When those are found who are hid, the finder cries Spyann; and if the one discovered can catch the discoverer, he has a ride upon his back to the dools." Gall. Encycl.

C. B. yspi-o, speculari, yspienddyn, speculator. Spy-ann nearly resembles Fr. espion, a spy, q. the person employed in this game to find out those who are concealed. V. Ho-SPY.

[SPYAR, SPYOUR, s. A spy or scout, Accts. L. H. Treas. I. 173, 305, Dickson.]

SPYLE, s. A stake, a palisade.

Eschame ye not, Phrigianis, that twyis tak is,
To be inclusit amynd ane fald of stakis?
And be assegeit agane sa oft syis,
Wyth akin spylis and dykis on sic wys?

Doug. Virgil, 298, 53.

Sibb. views this as a variation of pile. But it seems to be the same with Spale, spail, q. v. From Su.-G. spiale, lamina lignea, Ihre deduces L. B. spalliera, Fr. espallier, the lath to which a vine is fixed.

[SPYLE-TREE, s. V. SPILE-TREE.]

To SPYN, v. n. To run, to glide, S.

Vnder thy gard to schip we vs address,
Ouer spynnand many swellant seyis salt.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 46.

"By a metaphor taken from spinning, as sweepit & raik," Rudd. Spin, E. and S., is indeed used with respect to velocity of motion. But it denotes that which is of a rotatory kind.

To SPYNNER, v. n. "To run or fly swiftly, S." Rudd.

Ane vthir part syne younder mycht thou se
The heirdys of hartis wyth thare hedis hie
Ouer spynnerand wyth swift cours the plane vale.

Doug. Virgil, 105, 14.

The term, as commonly used, signifies to ascend in a spiral form, S. B. It therefore seems formed from spin, the idea being borrowed from the motion of the distaff.

SPYNDILL, adj. Thin, slender.

And to the rude scho maid ane vow,
"For I sall hit thy spyndill schyn."

Maitland Poems, p. 201.

q. resembling a spindle, like E. spindle-shanked.

SPYNDLE, SPINDLE, s. A certain quantity of yarn, including four hanks; each hank consisting of six heers, each heer of two cuts, each cut of 120 threads, the legal length of the thread being the circumference of the reel, S. pron. q. spynle.

"The spinners are paid at the rate of 1s. per spynle, and the agents or factors employed to give out the flax, and take in the yarn, have 2d. per spynle for their trouble." P. Thurso, Caithn. Statist. Acc., xx. 517.

"It is a common and an easy task, for one of these two-handed females, to spin three spindles in the week; which, at the rate of 1s. 3d. the spindle, comes to 3s. 9d." P. Ecclesgreig, Kincard. Ibid., xi. 114.

Arthur Young uses the term spangle apparently in the same sense; as including four hanks, which is the quantity contained in the Scottish spynle.

"The 8 lb. will spin into 20 dozen of yarn, or 20 hanks or 5 spangles fit for a ten hundred cloth." Tour in Ireland, i. 135.

This is most frequently spelled, as if it were the same with spindle. But although both are formed from the v. Spin, they seem quite different. Spynle is perhaps q. spin-del, from A.-S. spinn-an, and del, pars, portio, q. a certain portion of labour in spinning.

SPYNIST, part. pa. [Expanded, blown.]

Off ferliful fyne favour war thair faces meik,
All full of flurist fairheid, as flouris in June,—
New upsprad upon spray as new spynist rose.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 45.

"Spynist (rose), prickly. Fr. spineux," Gl. Sibb. But it seems to signify, fully spread, q. spansyd. V. SPANYS.

[SPYOG, s. A hand, a foot, a limb, Banffs.]

[SPYRIT, pret. Enquired, Barbour, iii. 486.]

[SPYUNG, s. and v. Same with SPLUNG, q. v., ibid.]

SQUABASII, s. A splutter, S.O.

"As for a squabash when he does kick, wha's to mak it?" The Steam-boat, p. 293.

SQUACH, SQUAGH, (gutt.), s. Expl. "the noise a hare makes when a killing;" Gall. Enc.

—Gi'eng the hearty sraigh and squagh
While the funart hang by him fu' stout.

Ibid., p. 176.

Corr. perhaps from E. squeak; Su.-G. squeak-a, in-coudite vociferare. V. SQUAIGH, v.

* SQUAD, s. "A company of armed men," E. Besides this sense, it is used in S. with greater latitude, as denoting a band, or company of any description.

Abuse o' magistrates might weel be spar'd!
To liken them to your auld-world squad,
I must needs say, comparisons are odd.

Burns, iii. 58.

"Squad, a crew, a party;" Gl. ibid. Fr. escouade, "the trainee, or followers of a captain, or leader;" Cotgr.

SQUAD, SQUADE, s. 1. A squadron of armed men, S.

"The same day, July 31st, the council order out a squade of the guards to bring in Mr. William Weir, indulged Minister at West-caldor, Prisoner, to the Tolbooth of Edinburgh." Wodrow's Hist., i. 360.

2. A party, a considerable number of men convened for whatever purpose, S.

Text. ghe-swaide, cohorts, turma, agmen; Kilian.

To SQUAIGH, (gutt.), v. n. 1. To scream, used ironically, Ettr. For.

2. To cry as a duck or hen, Upp. Clydes.

Elsewhere, as in E. quack. Perhaps the term thus appears most in its primitive form, as allied to C. B. gwich-iaw, to squeak.

SQUAICH, SQUAIGH, s. A scream, ibid. V. SQUACH.

[SQUAICHIN, SQUAGHIN, s. Screaming; a loud or continual scream, Clydes.]

To SQUALLOCH (gutt.), v. n. To scream, Buchan, merely a variety of Skelloch, q. v.

Ye witches, warlocks, fairies, fiens,
That squalloch owe the murky greens,—
Sing out yir hellish unkent teens;
Yir en my's dead.

Tarras's Poems, p. 142.

[SQUALLOCH, s. A loud cry; also, a noisy, loud-voiced person, Banffs.]

[SQUALLOCHIN. 1. As a s., screaming; the act of screaming, ibid.

2. As an adj., noisy, loud-voiced, ibid.]

SQUARE-MAN, s. A carpenter, Dumfr.

"By the municipal constitution of Dumfries, the craftsmen—are divided into seven corporations; namely, the hammer-men, or blacksmiths, the square-men, or carpenters," &c. Mayne's Siller Gun, p. 106.

The squaremen follow'd i' the raw,
And syne the weavers.

Ibid., p. 22.

SQUARE-WRIGHT, s. A joiner who works in the finer kinds of furniture, Lanarks.

Perhaps one who does every thing by square and rule, as contrasted with one whose coarser work does not require such accuracy. V. WRIGHT, s.

SQUARTE, adj. "Those that are squarte or brused by falling from above," &c. MS. Book of Surgery. Communicated by C. Kirkpatrick Sharpe.

It seems to signify, thrown out, or thrown to some distance; O. Fr. esquart-er, escart-er, to scatter. Escarte, "thrown abroad;" Cotgr.

To SQUASH, v. n. To plash, to dash as water, Lanarks.

SQUASH, s. 1. The act of plashing, ibid.

2. A dash of water, ibid.

Probably the same with E. Swash; from O. Fr. esquach-er, ecraser, briser, casser, &c. Roquef. Cotgr. renders ecraser, "squash downe," and casser, "quash asunder."

To SQUAT, v. a. To strike with the open hand, especially on the breech, Upp. Clydes.; synon. Skelp.

SQUATS, s. pl. Strokes of this description, ibid. Scots, Mearns.

Ital. scut-ere, to shake, toss, or jolt; or perhaps rather from the flatness of the stroke.

To SQUATTER, v. n. To squander, to act with profusion, Renfr.; Su.-G. squaettr-a, dissipare.

To SQUATTER, v. n. To flutter in water, as a wild duck, &c., S. V. SWATTER.

To SQUATTLE, v. n. "To sprawl," Gl. Burns.

Swith, in some beggar's haffet squattle;
There ye may creep, and sprawl, and sprattle,
Wi' ither kindred, jumpin cattle.

Burns, iii. 229.

Perhaps it rather signifies, to lie squat, as formed from the E. adj.

Su.-G. squaett-a, liquida effundere.

SQUAW-HOLE, s. A broad shallow pond, generally implying the idea of dirtiness, Upp. Clydes. V. QUAW.

SQUEEF, s. A mean, disreputable fellow, one who is shabby in appearance, and worthless in conduct, Dumfr., Roxb.; Skype synon.

The same perhaps with E. Squab, adj. "awkwardly bulky," Johns. Sw. squab, corpus molle, et pingue, squabba, obesula, a fat clumsy woman; from Isl. quappa, id., with the sibilant prefixed. Or shall we trace it to Fr. esquive, shunned, eschewed, q. one whose company is avoided?

Squeef, is expl. "a blackguard; one who rails against women, and yet is fain to seduce them." Gall. Enc.

SQUEEL, s. School, Aberd.

But there was ae buck o' a chiel,
I think, had been at dancing squeel.

W. Beattie's Tales, p. 10.

2. A great number of people, ibid. V. SKULE.

[To SQUEEL, v. a. To school, educate, Banffs.; part. pr. squeelin, as a s., schooling, education, ibid.]

SQUEEM, s. The motion of a fish as observed by its effect on the surface of the water, including the idea of the shadow made by the fish, Ayrs.

This, I apprehend, is merely a provincial variety of Skime (Lanarks.), the gleam of reflected light; especially as the shadow is produced by reflection from the water.

[To SQUEETER, v. a. and n. To scatter; to work in a slovenly, unskilful manner, Banffs.; part. pr. squeeterin, used also as an adj., ibid.]

[SQUEETER, SQUEETEREN, s. A confused, mixed-up mass ; also, a careless or unskilful worker, ibid.]

[SQUARE, SQWEAR, s. An esquire, Mearns, Aberd.]

SQUESHON, s. A scutcheon. Fr. escusson, id.

Greit squeechonis on licht,
Anamalit and weil dicht,
Reulit at all richt
Endlang the hall.

Rauf Coilyear, C. ij. b.

To SQUIBE, v. n. A top is said to squibe, when it runs off to the side, when it ceases to spin, Upp. Clydes.; Isl. skeif-r, obliquus, curvus.

To SQUILE, v. n. The same with the E. v. to Squeal, which is so pron. in Aberd., Banffs., &c. "Squile, to screech," Gl. Tarr.

SQUILE, s. The act of squealing, S. B.

These phantoms, imps, an' spectres wil'
That pest our ha's wi' frightfu' squile,—
Thou see'st an' hear'st their unkent style
And waukrife tricks.

Tarras's Poems, p. 41.

SQUINACIE, s. The quincey.

"These he will set down as squinacie, crowels, or boils." Z. Boyd's Balme of Gilead, p. 70.

O. E. squinancy, squynsey; Fr. esquinance, id.

SQUINTIE, s. A kind of cap worn by women, Upp. Clydes.; synon. Cresie, q. v.

SQUIRBILE, SQUIRBUILE, adj. Ingenious.

Seven foot of ground, clay-flour, clay-wall,
Serve both for chamber, and for hall
To Master Mill, whose squirbuile brain
Could ten Escurialls well containe.

"A French word adopted into the old Scottish language, and used in the northern counties to signify an ingenious artist who understands every science." Cant's Hist. Perth, i. 138, N.

I know not what term is referred to, if it be not escarbilla, fantastical, humorous.

To SQUIRR, v. a. "To skim a thin stone along the water;" Gall. Enc.; synon. Skiff.

Prob. a corr. of the v. to Whir.

To SQUISHE, v. a. To keep down.

Suppois I war ane ald yaid aver,
Schott furth our cleuchis to squishe the clevir,—
I wald at Youl be housit and stald.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 114.

This seems synon. with E. squash, q. to keep down the clover by cropping it. Squash is from the same fountain with quash; A.-S. cways-an, to press.

To SQUISS, v. a. To beat up. A squissed egg, apparently, one that is beaten up, as for a pudding.

"My heart within me is so tossed to and fro, that it is come like a squissed egge, whose yolke is mingled with its white." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 701.

Fr. escouaite, shaken, escousse, a shaking, from escourre, to beat, to shake. Or, according to last part of the preceding etymon.

[SQUYARIS, s. pl. Squires, Barbour, xvi. 80; squyary, a company of esquires, xx. 320.]

SRAL, s. Perhaps an error in copying.

Stones of sral they strenkel-and strewe.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal, ii. 20.

STA', pret. Stole; for stall.

A villain cam when I was sleeping,
Sta' my ewie, horn an' a'.

Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 145.

V. STAW.

[STAA, s. and v. V. STAW.]

[STAAD, part. pa. Surfeited, Clydes., Shetl.]

[STAAD-WI. To be averse to anything, chiefly food, ibid.]

STAB, s. 1. A palisade, a stake, S. V. STOB.

Whyles 'gainst the footpath stabs he thumped,
Whyles o'er the coots in holes he plumped.

Tannahill's Poems, p. 128.

[2. A stool, a small bench, Shetl.]

[To STAB, v. a. To fix stakes in the ground; hence, to enclose with stakes, Clydes.]

STAB AND STOW, adv. Completely, entirely; synon. stick and stow, S.

The hostler then, without further delay,
Directed Wallace where the Southron lay;
Who set their lodgings all in a fair low
About their ears, and burnt them stab and stow.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 259.

Stab is used in the sense of stake, as expl. above. Stow may be synon. with Isl. stoo, Su.-G. stoa, A.-S. stow, a place, a mansion; from Su.-G. staa, stare. Thus, the phrase stab and stow may signify, not merely the burning of the stakes used in erecting a house, but the total destruction of the mansion or place itself.

STAB-CALLANT, s. A short thick fellow, Roxb.

STAB-GAUD, s. A set line, a line for catching fish, fixed to a small stake of wood, pushed into the bank to preserve the line from being carried off, Lanarks.

From stab, a stake, and gad, pron. gaud, a fishing-rod; q. a stake-rod.

[STABLIN, adj. Half-grown, stout for one's age, Shetl.; hence, stablin-cod, a thick, fat cod-fish, ibid.]

[To STABILL, v. a. To establish, secure, Barbour, xix. 138.]

[STABILLY, adv. Stably, firmly, ibid., xiii. 635.]

[STABLIST, pret. Secured, ibid., x. 303.]

*STABLE, s. 1. "That part of a marsh, in which, if a horse is foundered, he is said to be stabled for the night;" Gl. Antiquary, South of S.

2. "Seems station, where the hunters placed themselves, to kill the animals, which were driven in by the attendants;" Gl. Wynt.

The stable, and the setis sete,
Hym-self wyth bow, and wyth werslete,
Fra alak til hyll, oure holme and hycht,
He trawlayd all day.

Wyntown, vi. 16, 15.

Stablestand, i.e., stabilis statio, vel potius stans in stabulo; hoc est, in loco ad stationem composito. Spelm. Gl. in vo.

"Stable stande is, when a man is found in any Forrest at his standing, with a crosse bowe bent, ready to shoote at any deere, or, with a long bow, or els, standing close by a tree with greyhounds in his lease, ready to let slip, this is called by the ancient Forresters Stable stand." Manwood's Forrest Laws, ch. 18, s. 9.

STABLER, s. A stable-keeper, S.

L.B. stabular-ius, qui stabularum vel equorum—curam habet; idem qui caupo, Gal. hôtellier. Du Cange.

[STACK, s. [An insulated rock of a columnar shape, Shetl., Orkn., Caithn. Sw. stack, Dan. stak, id.]

"Near Freswick castle the cliffs are very lofty. The strata that compose them lie quite horizontally in such thin and regular layers, and so often intersected by fissures, as to appear like masonry. Beneath are great insulated columns, called here Stacks, composed of the same sort of natural masonry as the cliffs." Pennant's Tour in S., 1769, p. 196.

"Near Wick is the creek of Staxigoe, deriving its name from a pyramidal rock, commonly called here a stack, formed in the mouth of a creek." P. Wick, Statist. Acc., x. 5.

In Shetl. stack is Exp. "a high rock detached." Also, "a precipitous rock rising out of the sea." The Pirate, ii. 142.

This word is used in the same sense, Orkn.

"At a little distance from Papa Stour, lies a rock encompassed with the sea called Frau-a-Stack, which is a Danish word, and signifieth, our Lady's Rock." Brand's Orkn., p. 109.

Tent. staek, columna. Isl. staksteinar, prominentes lapides; G. Andr. Gael. stuaic, seems used nearly in the same sense; "a little hill or round promontory," Shaw.

To STACKER, STAKKER, STACHER, v. n.
To stagger. It is now pron. in the last mode, S.

Thair stedis stakkerit in the stour, and stude stummerand.

Gawan and Gol., ii. 25.

Quhat stakren stait was this to me,
To be in sic obscuritie!

Burel's Pilg., Watson's Coll., ii. 34.

Then cam in the maister Almaser,
Ane homely-jomelly juffler,
Lyke a stirk stackarand in the ry.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 94.

It is also written stockar.

He stockerit lyke ane strummal aver.

Ibid.

—Thus this drunken wight
Among his drunkards tippled till midnight:
Then each of them, with stackring steps out-went,
And groping hands, retyring to his tent.

Hudson's Judith, p. 78.

I stacher'd whyles, but yet took tent ay
To free the ditches.

Burns, iii. 41.

It appears from Palsgrave, that the same orthography was occasionally used in O.E. "I stakker, Je chancelle,—declared in I stagger." B. iii. F. 371, b.

STACKET, s. A term used to denote the palisades which sometimes surround a town.

—"He quit the skonse and retired to the towne, and enters the port before us, shutting us out;—we brake downe the stacket, and the towne not walled, we entered the broad side, and follow the enemy to the market-place." Monro's Exped., P. 1, p. 51.

Dan. stakket, a palisade.—Hence,

To STACKET, v. a. To palisade.

—"We did worke all of us night and day, till we had stacketed the wall, about the height of a man above the parapet." Ibid., P. II. p. 8.

[STAD, part. pa. Beset, hard pressed, placed in peril, Barbour, iii. 363.]

STADDLE, s. A frame on which a stack is built, Berwicks.

"Placing the ricks on staddles, or frames, with feet which cannot be scaled, would be an excellent defence, [against the depredations of rats and mice,] and would probably be fully compensated for, with profit, in the course of a lease of 19 years." Agr. Surv. Berw., p. 498. STASSEL, STATHELL, id.

STADGE, s. A pet, a fit of ill-humour, Clydes.

Isl. styggr, iratus, styggr-ia, offendere, irritare, stygð, offensa.

[STAEN-LOPPEN, part. adj. Bruised, crushed, as between stones, Shetl.]

STAFF. To Set up one's Staff, to take up one's residence in a place, Roxb.

This phrase may have some relation to the A.-S. term, edulf- or ethel-staf, familiæ sustentaculum.

The term also denotes a crozier. Hence the Isl. phrase, staf oc stolt, pedum et cathedra episcopi, quibus officium ejus designatur; Verel.

STAFF AND BATON. A symbol of the resignation of property or feudal right into the hands of another, according to the laws of S.

"The proper symbols of resignation are staff and baton; but a pen has, by immemorial custom, been made use of to represent that symbol in the act of resignation.—By an act of sederunt [11th Feb., 1708], the use of any symbol in resignation other than staff and baton, is prohibited under the sanction of nullity." Erskine's Inst., p. 237.

This custom anciently prevailed in England. Si autem nullum sit ibi ædificium, fiat ei seysina secundum quod vulgariter dicitur, per fustim et per baculum, et sufficit sola pedis positio cum possedendi affectu ex voluntate donatoris. Bracton. lib. ii. c. 18. num. 2.

The same custom was in force with the ancient Swedes. Emissionem autem præviis solemnibus lege requisitis excipiebatur traditio rei mobilis de manu in manum, aut translatio rei immobilis ejusve possessionis per festucam aut tactum baculorum, dum duodecim in judicio territoriali, apprehendendo scipionem et dimittendo firmabant rei venditae alienationem. Loccen. Antiq., Sueo-Goth. Lib. ii. c. 16.

This deed was expressed by a variety of phrases in the language of the country; as, koþa með fastum, i.e., to buy with confirmation. Fasta dictitur illis actus, forensis, quo emtori plenariae rei venditae possessio adjudicatur, postquam certo, et in Lege definito, tempore contractus hic publice annuntiatus est; Ihre. The term seems derived from fast, firm; though Ihre, viewing the word as exotic, seems to prefer festuca, because the seller put a rod into the bosom of the purchaser. In the same sense it was said, Gisfa vppo godz och gorda staff och skiael; "to give up goods (moerables) and landed property by staff and judgment:" also, Saelia með staff och skioell, "to deliver with staff and judgment." The signification seems to be, to deliver in a judicial manner by means of a staff. They also said, Skipa með lut och kasta, "to divide by the lot and rod," as in the laws of Upland. V. Loccen. ubi sup. Ihre, vo. Kaste, expl. this phrase: Tactu bacilli et sortitione hereditatem dividere.

The Icelanders used the same phrase, Mel tutt oc kasta, sorte et bacillo. It is to be observed, however, that this phrase, as employed both by the Swedes and by the Icelanders, as conjoined with the lot, rather respected the division of an inheritance among coheirs, than the confirmation of a judicial disposition. The people last mentioned had another expression, which is more nearly allied to the act of resignation by staff and baton,—Kasta eg þarfyr laga kuesti; In hujus rei fidem hic in judicio baculum projicio. The custom was used, as Verelius informs us, when a proprietor wished to prohibit any invasion of his goods or other possessions. After pronouncing the formula of interdiction, in the place of judgment, he threw down a rod as a symbol of this prohibition. V. Ind. vo. Kaste.

In Fr. this is denominated Lierement de Fust et Terre. The use of the baton or rod appears in the Annal. Francor. A. 787: Reddidit ei cum baculo ipsum patrum. This was frequently of oak. Reinvestierunt baculo quercino; Tabul. Causar. A. 1140.

In Law Latin, Investitura per Baculum; also, Per Fustum offerre, tradere, investire;—Per Festucam;—Per Virgam, &c. V. Du Cange, vo. Investitura.

This custom undoubtedly claims great antiquity. In every age, and among every people, as the very learned Spelman observes, according to the testimony of the most ancient writers, the rod has been the symbol of authority and dominion; and the delivery of this was an acknowledgement of the transference of this power along with the property. Among the ancient Romans the Praetor was wont to manumit by laying a rod across the head of the slave whom he emancipated. V. Spelm. vo. Fistuca, and Du Cange, ut sup. col. 1521.

STAFF AND BURDON. To be at the Staff and the Burdon with one, to quarrel, or come to an open rupture, with one; Roxb.

This phrase is supposed to include the idea, that one fights with a common staff, and the other with a burdon. V. BURDON.

STAFF AND STING. V. under STING, STEING, a pole, &c.

[STAFFING, s. Thrusting, Barbour, xvii. 785, Skeat's Ed.]

[STAFF-SLYNG, s. A sling furnished with a stout staff, Barbour, xvii. 344.]

STAFF-SUERD, s. A sword more proper for thrusting, than for cutting down.

VOL. IV.

Wyth a staff suerd Boyd stekit him that tyde.

Wallace, iii. 178. MS.

Schir Jhone the Grayme, with a staff suerd of steill
His brycht byrneis he persyt euirilk deill.

Ibid., vi. 734, MS.

In Perth and other edit. in both places stiff suerd. To this the MS. corresponds in the following passage:
With a stiff suerd to dede he has him dycht.

Ibid. ix. 1646.

Teut. staf-sweerd, sica, dolon; perhaps from O. Teut. slav-en, to stab.

STAFFY-NEVEL, s. "Staff in hand," GL cudgelling, S.B.

His cousin was a bierdly swank,

A derf young man, hecht Rob;

To mell wi' twa he wad na mank

At staffy-nevel job.

Christmas Bunting, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 128.

Here it is used as if an adj.

As nevel signifies a blow with the fist, staffy-nevel seems properly to denote a blow, or the act of striking, with a staff or cudgel. V. Nevel under NEIVE.

STAFFAGE, STAFFISH, STAFFISCH, adj. 1. Obdurate, obstinate; applied to a horse that throws his rider.

—Thymetes, ane man of full grete fors,

Casting from his staffage, skeich, and hede strang hora.
Doug. Virgil, 422, 18.

Equus sternax, Virg.

Rudd. derives it from Ital. staffeg-iare, to be dismounted, or lose the stirrup, from staffu, a stirrup; Sibb. from Teut. stief, rigidus, durus, stief-hals, obstinatus.

It seems the same with S. B. Stivage, q. v.

2. Dry in the mouth, or not easily swallowed, like pease-meal bannocks; GL Sibb.

STAG, s. A young horse; the same with Staig, q. v.

*To STAGE, v. a. To accuse, although there be no formal trial; the prep. with being subjoined.

"Kepperminshoo accused him of perjury. He was also staged with bribery, for taking 14,000 merks fra the taxmen of the excise of Lowthen, in procuring them the tack, August 1682." Fontainh. Diary, MS. Law's Memor., p. 234. 236, N.

"Not only is the propinquity of blood fully proven, —but the Lords have found it so, and to quarrel it is to stage the Lords with iniquity in finding that proven which was not proven." Fount. Dec. Suppl. iv. 876.

To STAGE about, v. n. To saunter, to walk about, rather in a stately or prancing manner, Fife; perhaps q. to walk on the stage. V. DOCK, v. n.

STAGE, s. A step; especially applied to the corbels at the gable-ends of old houses.

Towris, turettis, kirknalis, and pynnakillis hic

Of kirkis, castellis, and ilk faire ciété

Stude paynit, euery fane, phioll and stage

Apoun the plane ground, by thare awin vmbrage.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 400, 21.

Rudd. derives it from Fr. estage, a storey of a house. But perhaps we ought to refer to Germ. steg, Isl. stigi, gradus, scala; steig-en, ascendere.

A 3

STAGGERIN' BOB. The veal of a newly dropt calf, or the animal in whole, Teviotd. When cut out of the mother, it is called slunk, ibid. V. SLINK.

"Staggering Bob, with his yellow pumps. A calf just dropped, and unable to stand, killed for veal in Scotland; the hoofs of a young calf are yellow." Class. Dict.

STAGGIE, adj. A term applied to grain when it grows thin, Gall. V. STOG, s., and STUGGY.

STAGGRELL, s. "A person who staggers in walking;" Gall. Enc.; formed like Gangrel.

To STAGHER (gutt.), v. n. To stagger, S. V. STACKER.

STAIID, STADE, s. A furlong.

The quene ane sepulture scho maki,
Quhair scho king Ninus bodie laid:
Of curious craftie wark and wicht,
The quhilk had staidis nine of hicht.—
For aucht staidis ane myle thow tak.
Lyndesay's Warkis, 1592, p. 81.

Stade, Edit. 1670.

Fr. stade, Lat. stadium.

Stage is synon. in the description of Nineveh, when it is said that the walls were,

Four hundredth staiis and four scoir,
In circuite but myn or moir.

Ibid., p. 77.

This is staidis, p. 82.

STAIG, STAG, s. 1. A horse of one, two, or three years old. The term is more generally applied to one that has not been broken for riding, nor employed in working, S.

"Gif horses are found in the forest, after inhibition; it is lesom to the Forester, for the first time, to tak ane fole of ane year auld; for the second time, ane stai of twa years auld; for the third time, ane stai of three years auld." Forrest Lawes, c. 8. Pullum, Lat. copy.

And undernicht quhyles thou stall *stai*s and stirks.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 70.

"There are few horses bred in these parishes, or in any part of Orkney, most of them being brought from Caithness and Strathnaver, when a year old, and are then called *stai*s." P. St. Andrews. Orkn. Statist. Acc., xx. 264.

"The lordis—assignis to Schir Andro Drommond vicar of Muthil—to pruf that James of M'ray spulyet and tak fra him of his avne propre gudis xij stokit meis and a stag of a yere auld w' thar profitis of xij yeris bigane." Act. Audit. A. 1478, p. 74.

We learn from Halderson, that Isl. stagg-r denotes a male fox, and indeed the male of almost all wild beasts; Vulpes mas; item, mas plurim ferarum.

We have another proof of the ancient application of this term, perhaps in a general sense, to the male of animals. A. Bor. stey denotes a gander; Grose.

"A. Bor. stag, a colt or filly;" Gl. Grose.

2. A stallion; a riding horse. S.

And ilka bull has got its cow,
And staggis all their meiris.

Jamieson's Popular Ball., i. 286.

For taking, as the custome was, a stai
At Midsummer, said Gall, Mousier, you vaig.

Muses Threnodie, p. 83.

Some backward rail on brodsows, and some black-bitches,
Some instead of a stai, over a stark monk straid.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll., iii. 17.

3. Metaph. applied to young courtiers.

There some old horse turn'd out of stable,
When young dames are at Council Table.
The fate of some were once dandillies,
Might teach the younger *stai*s and filies,
Not for to trample poor cart-horse.

Cleland's Poems, p. 76.

As S. stai always denotes the male, in distinction from a filly, Isl. steyge, signifies the male of birds, as of geese and ducks. V. G. Andr., p. 223, 224.

To STAIG, STAUG, STAIK, v. n. 1. To stalk where one should not be found.

[2. To walk with a slow, stately step, ibid., Banffs.]

Isl. stagg-a, tendere, extendere; also, saepius iterare; Halderson.

[STAIG, STAIK, STAIKIN, s. A slow, stately step; also the act of walking with such step, ibid.]

To STAIK, v. a. To accommodate, to supply with, or be sufficient for, in whatever way, S. sometimes, to settle, to fix.

For thai will waist mair under-hand,
Nor us weil *stai*k may.

Maitland Poems, p. 189.

"That thay that ar appointit, or to be appointit to serue and minister at ony kirk within this realme, haue the principall mans of the Persoun or Vicar, or samekill thair of as salbe fundin sufficient for *stai*king of thame." Acts Mar. 1563, c. 7, Edit. 1566.

"That will stake us, i.e., be sufficient for us," Rudd.

He's well *stai*kit there-hen,
That will neither borrow nor len.

Ferguson's S. Prov., p. 16.

When he that sermone celebrat,
He had a worde accoustomat;
"The prophete meinis this, gif ye mark it."
Auld Captane Kirkburne to him harkit;
Perceaving weil St. Androis vai kit:
And syne how sone the knave was *stai*kit,
To all men levand he compleinis;
"I watt now what the prophete meinis."

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 314.

"Settled." Gl.

Teut. steck-en, figere.

It is sometimes used as a v. n. with the prep. for.

To Londoun Lourie tuke the geat,
With traine mycht *stai*k for his estait,
His wantone vicare on a meir,
Twa vther fellowis to turse his geir.

Leg. Bp. St. Androis, Poems Sixteenth Cent., p. 329.

STAILL, s. V. STALE.

STAINYELL, s. The wagtail.

The Stainyell, and the Schakerstane,
Behind the laue wer left alane
With waiting on thair marows.

Burd's Pilg., Watson's Coll., ii. 28.

This name seems formed from A.-S. stan-gillan, the pelican. But how is it classed with the Stone-chatter? V. STANCHELL.

Dan. stengilp, id. Motacilla, aenanthe vitiflora; Halderson. Wolff, however, renders stengilp, stone-plover.

To STAIRGE doun, or away, v. n. To walk very magisterially, to prance, Roxb.

STAIT, s. Obeisance, acknowledgment. To gif stait, to make obeisance; by a transition, as Mr. Pinkerton observes, from the passive to the active sense.

— And ay the freyr couth lout,
Quben that he came ocht neir the almerie.—
Sche saw him gif the almerie sic ane stait;
Ontill herself scho said, "Full weill I wait,
"He knows full weill that I have in my thocht."
Dunbar, Mailand Poeme, p. 78.

STAIT and SESING. [Charter and possessions.]

"In the acciounne—persewit be Richard Qubite law—aganis Johne lord Hay of Yester for to infest the said Richard heretabably be charter and sesing in due forme in als mekle of the landis of Morehame—as the ferd parte of the quarter of the landis of Lynplun extendis to, becaus the said Johne has gevin stait & sesing of the saidis landis of Linplun to William Hay of Tallo." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1490, p. 153.

"The vassal, by himself, or his attorney, takes instrument in the hand of the notary, before witnesses, that he hath received state and seisin of the lands in due form." Ersk. Inst., B. ii., T. 3, § 25.

It is sometimes otherwise expressed—"Baith clomit to haf state & possessioun of the saidis landis." Act. Dom. Conc., A. 1490, p. 184.

These three terms are sometimes conjoined.

"In the acciounne—aganis George lord Dirltoun for the wrangwis deferring & halding fra the said Elene of the state, sesing, & possessioun in lifrent of the landis & barony of Halyburtounne," &c. Ibid. p. 193.

The term state is in some instances used singly.

"The said Schir James oblis him to kepe that thai sall nocht be vit to the profit of the said Christiane, na sall na state be gevin to hir be the said lettre of bailiery—of the franktennement of the saidis landis," &c. Ibid. p. 194.

To STAIVE, STAIVER, STAVER, v. n. 1. To go about with an unstable and tottering motion; to stagger; to walk as one in a reverie, S.

To ilka kirk he takes his rout.
And gangs just staving about
In quest o' prey. Farmer's Ha', st. 32.

"So out I stavers, for rest I couldna within." Blackw. Mag. Nov. 1820, p. 203.

"I was lying taavin an' wamlin—like—a stirkie that had staver'd into a well-eye." Journal from London, p. 4.

[2. To saunter or idle about, Clydes., Banffs.]

Stavell is used in the same sense, Loth.

Germ. staub-ern, is used to denote the ranging of a dog through the fields.

STAIVELT, s. A stupid person, Roxb.

Perhaps one who goes about staggering, from the v. to Stavel, q. v.

[STAIVER, s. A saunter; a person of a sauntering, easy-going disposition, ibid.]

[STAIVERAL, s. A sauntering or stupid person, ibid.]

[STAIVERIN, s. The act of sauntering or loitering, ibid.]

To STAIVE, v. a. 1. To sprain; as, "to staive the thoum," i. e., thumb, Clydes.

Perhaps q. to render stiff; Teut. stijv-en, rigere, rigescere.

2. To consolidate iron instruments, by striking them perpendicularly upon the anvil, when they are half cooled, ibid.

STAIVE, s. A sprain, [a severe blow], ibid.

STAKE and RISE. V. RISE.

STAKIT-AND-STED. Staked out and built. "Or [i. e., before] the towne was stakit & sted," Aberd. Reg. V. 16, 551, 573.

Su.-G. stak-a ut, determinare. Sted may be from O. Teut. sted-en, sistere; stabilire, constituere.

To STAKKER, v. n. V. STACKER.

STALE, STAILL, STALL, STEIL, STELL, s. [1. Position; a fixed position; a station.]

—And orlaynt that the maist party
Off thair men suld gang sarraly
With thair lordis, and hald stale;
And the remanand suld all hale
Skail throw the town, and tak or sla
The men that thai mycht our ta.

Barbour, xvii. 97, MS.

Hald a stail, Edit. 1620.

2. The foundation on which a rick or stack is placed; the under part of a stack, S.

3. A place of confinement, a prison.

—Thou hast fund in stale
This mony day withoutin verdis wele,
And wantis now thy veray hertis hole.

King's Quair, v. 18.

4. A body of armed men stationed in a particular place, or in ambush.

Thom Halyday in wer was full besye;
A buschenent saw that cruell was to ken,
Twa hundreth baill off weill gerit Inglissmen.
Wncle, he said, our power is to smaw,
Off this playne feild I consaill yow to draw:
To few we ar agayne yon fellone stail.

Wallace, v. 809, MS.

Bot quha sa list toward that stede to draw,
It is ane stolling place, and sobir herbry.
Quhare oft in stail or enbuschment may ly,
Qubidder men list the bargane to abyde,
Owthir on the richt hand or on the left side;
Or on the hicht debate thame for the nanys.

Doug. Virgil, 382, 37.

5. Any ward or division of an army, in battle array; [also, a band of hunters.]

To seik Wallace thai went all furth in feyr;
A thousand men weill garnest for the wer,
Toward the woode rycht awfull in affer,
To Schortwode Schaw, and set it all about,
Wyth v stailis that stalwart was and stout;
The sext thai maid a fellone range to leid.

Wallace, iv. 530, MS.

Dvring this quhile the Troyane power all
Approchis fast toward the ciety wall;
The Tuskane dukis and hors men routis alhale
Arrayit in battal, euery warde and stale.

Doug. Virgil, 385, 32.

Off his best men liil thousand thar was dede,
Or he couth fynd to fle and leiff that stede; xx thousand with him fled in a stail.
The Scottis gnt hors, and followit that battail.
—Wallace, vi. 596, MS.

"At last quhen he [David I.] was cumyn throw the vail that lyes to the greit eist fra the said castell, quhare now lyes the cannongait, the stail past throw the wod with sic noyis & din of rachis and bugillis, that all the beastis wer rasis fra thair dennys." Bellend. Cron. B.
xii. c. 16.

6. The centre, or main body, of an army, as distinguished from the wings.

"Our Scottish men placed themselves very craftily.
For George Earl of Ormond was in the stail himself, and the Laird of Craigie Wallace, a noble knight of sovereign manhood, was upon the right wing; the Lord Maxwell and the Laird of Johustoun on the left wing."
Pittcottie, p. 30.

"The Scottish army assembled upon the west side of Esk, above Musselburgh, and were mustered to the number of forty thousand men, whercof ten thousand were in the vanguard under the Earl of Angus; other ten thousand were in the rear with the Earl of Huntly. The Governor himself commanded the Steil or Battle, wherein were twenty thousand men." Ibid.
p. 193.

"Against them a number went out of Maxwell's army, who, encountering with a great company, were beaten and chased back to the stail or main host, which by their breaking in was wholly disordered." Spotswood, p. 401.

Hence,

7. In stale, in battle array.

—Kynge Pentheus, in his wod rage dotand,
Thocht he beheld grete routis stand in stale
Of the Eumenides, furies infernale.

Doug. Virgil, 116, 21.

The chiftanis all joned with hale poweris,
And hendmest wardis swarmed all yferis;
So thik in stale all merriit wox the rout,
Vneis mycht ony turne his hand about.

Ibid. 331, 63.

STALE FISHING, s. The act of fishing by means of what is called a stell-net, S.

"The herrings are the only fish caught in this coast, except a few salmon caught at Stale fishing, and some caddies, of a very small size, in the summer months."
P. Kilmuir, W. Ross, Statist. Acc. xii. 270. V.
STELL-NET.

STALE-SHEAF, s. A sheaf which has been employed in the bottom of a stack, S.

To STALE a stack. To set the sheaves forming the bottom or foundation, in their proper order, S.

"The stacks are generally staled (founded) on a layer of furze, thorns," &c. Agr. Surv. M. Loth., p. 94.
[A.-S. steal, Fr. estal, E. stall; Su.-G. staella, to plant, to station.]

STALE-HIRDIT, part. pa. Applied to a flock or herd under the care of a shepherd; q. herded by a staff.

"Gif it sall happin the cattel or scheip of the ane realme to be stale-hirdit, or to remane depasturing upon the ground of the opposite realme, be the space of sax hoors in ane day, it sall be lauchful to the awner of the ground sa depasturit,—for to tak and apprehend the said cattel or scheip, as foirfaltit and lost, to his awin use." Bordour Matteris, Balfour's Pract., p. 612.

The term staff-herding is used in the E. law. It "is a right to follow cattle within a forest: and where persons claim common in any forest, it must be inquired by the ministers whether they use staff-herding, for it is not allowable of common right; because by that means the deer, which would otherwise come and feed with the cattle, are frightened away, and the keeper or follower will drive the cattle into the best grounds, so that the deer shall only have their leavings." Jacob's Law Dict. in vo.

STALKAR, STALKER, s. 1. A huntsman.

Ouer all the ciety enrageit scho here and thare
Wandris, as ane stirkin hynd, quham the stalkar,
Or scho persais, from fer betis with his flaine
Amyd the woddis of Crete.

Doug. Virgil, 102, 6.

2. More commonly, one who ranges, illegally killing deer.

"The Justice Clerk sall inquire of Stalkaris, that slayis deer.—And alsone as ony stalkar may be convict of slaughter of deer, he sall pay to the king xl. s. And the halders and mantenaris of thame sall pay ten
